Students await a book-signing and perhaps a few words from Mitch Albom. Albom has gained fame from "Tuesdays with Morrie," written about his college professor.

Jack Aubrey ... the next James Bond?

By MIKE NIEBAUER
Senior Writer

MOVIE REVIEW

"Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World" was released in theaters nationwide this weekend. The film features actor Russell Crowe in a starring role as Captain Jack "Lucky" Aubrey.

In some ways this seafaring film is better than Crowe's previous film, "Gladiator," because it doesn't rely as heavily on computer-generated special effects. Crowe plays the captain of the HMS Surprise, who has served with Lord Nelson.

The film is set during the war between France and England in 1805, waged while Napoleon was ruler of France. During this time, France ruled the European landmass, and the oceans became battle zones. Both world powers tested the courage and abilities of their stressed-out crews and the seafaring technology of the time to prove their supremacy. The film portrays this brilliantly.

In a radio interview, Crowe said that this film has no scenes designed to spoon feed emotional connections with characters.

you feel like you were the first student he ever taught. I ended up minoring in sociology not because I loved the subject, but because I loved listening to Morrie."

On graduation day, Albom said farewell to his mentor.

"I gave him a briefcase with his initials on it and you would have thought that I gave him a slab of gold. I said goodbye to my favorite professor and promised to stay in touch," Albom said.

As he walked away, Albom had every intention of staying in touch with Morrie. Unfortunately, work, money and fame would interfere with his promise.

"I'm not proud that I broke my promise to Morrie. I think that we don't intend to lose touch with our teachers but we get caught up in trivial things. We forget the people who help shape us into whom we want to be. We forget the people who enable us to be successful," Albom said.

Author and journalist Mitch Albom addresses an audience at Rooke Chapel Tuesday night. Albom's book "Tuesdays With Morrie" was a four year New York Times Bestseller. He spoke on this and his most recent book, "The Five People You Meet in Heaven."

Sixteen years after his graduation day, Albom was flipping through the television channels when he saw Morrie talking about his battle with Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS), a fatal disease also known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

"I didn't hesitate, I called my old professor and decided to go visit him," Albom said.

What Albom planned on being a one-time visit turned into a weekly affair.

"Every Tuesday I sat across from Morrie and had a lesson in living. Each week the topic would be different," Albom said. "I learned from Morrie that aging should not be feared. Aging is simply gaining interest in your principle. Morrie taught me to forgive everyone of everything. Morrie would tell me, through his sobs, to let your loved ones know that you care. Everyone who you love and care about, if you are fighting, let it go."

Albom continued to explore "lessons in living" in his book "The Five People You Meet in Heaven." "After Tuesdays with Morrie," I wanted to wait to write a book until something inspired me. It took seven years," Albom said.

"I don't think it's possible to waste love. I would rather believe that love waits for you on the other side."

—Mitch Albom, author of "Tuesdays with Morrie"

Albom's inspiration for "The Five people you Meet in Heaven" came from his relationship with his Uncle Eddie.

"He died before I had the chance to tell him that I loved him and thought he was a great guy, just for being him. I wanted to write a book that gave Eddie all the happiness he lacked in life," Albom said.

Albom read a segment from "The Five People you Meet in Heaven" to the audience. When he finished, there was hardly a dry eye in Rooke Chapel. The audience sat wide-eyed, anxiously awaiting his next word.

"I don't think it's possible to waste love," Albom said. "I would rather believe that love waits for you on the other side. One shouldn't be made to feel guilty for loving someone who isn't around anymore. Everyone matters. Look around. Look how large Morrie's classroom has grown. Look at all the lives he has touched"

As people rose out of their seats and waited patiently to have their books signed, Albom made one final request.

"Please honor the older citizens and allow them to come to the front of the line. We must assist our elders for they certainly guide us all."

Russell Crowe is Captain Jack "Lucky" Aubrey in the new movie "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World." The movie presents a realistic view of naval battle.

cate and sometimes brutal reality. This is one of the most fascinating aspects of the film, as it provides the viewer with a sense of participation.

Naval battles were close range affairs in those days because of the poor accuracy of the deck guns and cannons of the era. Close hand-to-hand combat with swords and muskets was normal strategy, making

"We will see if the movie-going audience is ready for a film such as this," casualties bloody and high. For the moviegoer, this again adds to the belief that he/she is there. There are two main battles in the beginning of the film and one towards the end of the film. The French crew is portrayed by French actors, which again adds to the realism in this crowdpleaser.

—Russell Crowe

Patrick O'Brian has written over twenty books featuring Captain Jack Aubrey. Hopefully, we can look forward to other installments of this captain and crew in the years ahead. With the "007" series weakening, this could provide a worthy substitute.

Leisure Tours

"Act Now! Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Visit the official website for spring break '04. The Best deals to the Hottest destinations. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

St. George Student Rentals

2004-2005 School Year & Second Semester '03-'04 2&3 BedRoom Units

Includes: Off Campus Parking Stove, Refrigerator, Dish Washer, Refuse Removal, Water Sewer

Call Brad or Wanda 922-1205 or 898-8530

Arts & Entertainment

University Orchestra presents an evening of music and culture

By CATHERINE HEVERLING
A&E Editor

CONCERT REVIEW

The University Orchestra delighted listeners with an hour-long concert consisting of three pieces during its fall concert on Saturday. While short, the concert filled its quota for diverse and contrasting styles as well as unforgettable melodies.

The evening began with an address by Associate Professor of Music Christopher Para, the orchestra's conductor. Before initiating the first piece, he supplied the audience with a solid background on the work's composer and structure.

"I liked the way he explained the pieces. It really helped in my enjoyment and understanding of the concert," Jennifer Graham '07 said.

"Second Essay for Orchestra" by Samuel Barber consists of three main melodic phrases, or themes.

"Like a thread, it helps Barber sew the piece together," Para said.

Once the piece began, this idea was evident as the same familiar phrase was passed through the sections. The song featured a series of woodwind solos that began a conversational exchange of a theme among the entire orchestra. The string section balanced this delicate exchange with striking notes, the force of which was apparent both visually and audibly. The piece had a bit of a fugue feel to it with conflicting parts among the various sections. It ended with a victoriously strong note and bows raised in the air.

The University Orchestra's fall concert was held last Saturday at the Weis Center. The orchestra performed in a variety of tempos and styles with pieces by Barber, Saint-Saens and Moncayo.

The second piece, Camille Saint-Saens' "Symphony No. 2," consisted of four distinct movements varying in tempo and style, which Para said displayed the composer's often unrecognized "musical wit."

The symphony began with an allegro movement that presented a round of the main theme and syncopated notes against a romantic string melody. The second movement was a bit slower, an elegant minuet, and was followed by a divergent scherzo, featuring spiraling scales reminiscent of "Flight of the Bumble Bee." The final movement seemed technically challenging for the string players with their constantly flailing fingers and fidgeting bows. The whole orchestra was in a furious uproar, concluding the piece with three powerful, accented notes.

Para introduced the final selection, "Huanpango" for Orchestra, as the most well-known work of Mexican composer, Moncayo. This piece, written in 1941, serves as a kind of second national anthem for Mexico. It consists of alternating time signatures, an often difficult obstacle for musicians, but the piece's structure allowed every section to shine and contribute to the overall sound. Latin flavor was flared with the addition of the harpist, the use of the xylophone in the percussion section and orchestra members bringing out their sombreros.

"Huanpango" was definitely a crowd-pleaser, controlled yet improvised, with impulsive brass solos and asymmetrical tempos. The ensemble's ability to hurdle these rhythmic difficulties with ease and mastery proved their talent.

"I liked the 'Huanpango' because of the tempo changes. It caused this sporadic effect that kept me aware and actively involved in the song and its movements," Amanda Hart '07 said.

The concert was an overall success and provided the audience with culture in every sense of the word. The performance was a clear reflection of the orchestra's hard work and dedication to the music. It was a reward for performers and audience alike.

Coldplay's "Live 2003" is a must-see

Coldplay's DVD and album "Live 2003" features a documentary about the 2003 tour and 12 live tracks. The set provides a closer look at the band for both fans and first-time listeners.

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

Having spent a semester in England last year, it was impossible to ignore the hundreds of white posters advertising the release of Coldplay's album, "A Rush of Blood to the Head." Unfortunately, it took me until the very end of my stay there to sit live setting always enhances a band's music, and "Live 2003" is no exception. The track list and sound are both great, and being able to check out concert recordings of some of the best songs in Coldplay's repertoire is just another added bonus that most fans should definitely enjoy.

My only problem with the disc is its length (there definitely could be more than 12 tracks), and the noticeable omission of a few personal favorites, like "Spies" and "Trouble." This is forgivable considering that this is more of a DVD than a live record.

I had reservations about the video aspect of the set, mainly because I had seen many bands totally miss the mark when capturing anything close to the actual feel of a live set. Overproduction, poor editing and weak cinematography can easily cause a concert to feel like a Hollywood film or even worse, an MTV special. Seeing Coldplay twice in the past year didn't help matters as the two stellar shows contributed to my very high expectations.

Having watched the whole show through, I must admit that I was very impressed. The DVD leaves little about the true feel of Coldplay's live show, from the close-ups of each band member to capturing the incredible light show that accents each note beautifully.

In addition, the DVD offers several nice bonus features, including a documentary about the 2003 tour, interviews, multi-angle options, lyrics and surround sound for those who have the equipment to support it.

"Live 2003" is one of the best concert DVDs I've seen in a long time. For fans of Coldplay, this set is a must have. Those who aren't familiar with the band's work will be impressed with the amazing progression they have already made through just two albums and only a few years of touring.

University Opera Company laments on facing love

By DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

The Bucknell Opera Company will present their fall performance, "Faces of Love: The Music of Jake Heggie," 8 p.m., Saturday in the Weis Center. The program consists of stand-alone works composed by Heggie, as well as an aria taken from one of his operas.

Each work explores an aspect of love, connecting an otherwise varied program.

"The theme is faces of love," said Emily Serotta '06, "love person to person, love in nature, untainted love, unrequited love."

Associate Professor of Music and Director of the Opera Company, Catherine Payn says that Heggie's works are written to be performed as dramatic singing.

"The singers will be moving around and interacting with one another and with the audience," Payn said.

Heggie's compositions reflect the different types of music he listened to when he was growing up. The influences of jazz, rock, musical theater, folk, classical and pop music are visible in his works.

"There's a great range in his songs ... he's very inventive and technically difficult to sing," Serotta said.

Heggie served as a composer-in-residence at the University in October. During this time, he and several professional singers conducted master classes in his music, coaching Company members in its performance and instructing them in "what it means to be a performer."

Heggie's compositions reflect the different types of music he listened to when he was growing up. The influences of jazz, rock, musical theater, folk, classical and pop styles are visible in his works.

Several of the singers who worked with the Company during his residency will be performing in the premiere of his next opera, "The End of the Affair," to be performed with the Houston Grand Opera in March 2004.

Daniels' music inspires students to reflect

By TYLER MILLS
Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

The melodious voice of singer songwriter, Jennifer Daniels, accompanied the usual sounds of spoons clinking against coffee cups and students' conversations at 7th Street Café last Friday night. Jennifer Daniels and guitarist and mandolinist, Jeff Neal, were brought to the University through the Late Night Music Series. Daniels' rich, earthy sound supported a landscape of lyrics depicting images of nature and the passage of time. As a source of inspiration for her songs, Daniels cited Susan Vega.

"I like to take abstract lyrics apart layer by layer and figure them out," Daniels said.

Daniels was the opening act for the Indigo Girls in April 2002 and was co-billed with John Mayer in December 2001. She has also won numerous awards, including FM Odyssey's Best New Female Artist of 2001. Daniels and Neal wove layers of voice and mandolin into a single fluid sound. On Friday this energy provided an aural backdrop to powerful lyrics such as Daniels', "I will not fight under a widening sky."

Laura Bender '06, coordinator of the Late Night Music Series, explained that the Late Night Committee selects musicians to expand students' perceptions about what kinds of music are often associated with cafes.

"We're trying to move away from one-person acts," Bender said.

She believes this is a way to move beyond the popular café image of a lone singer accompanied by an acoustic guitar. Whether students gathered chairs around Daniels or listened from more secluded booths, there was a positive response following Friday's performance.

"She had a great vocal range," Vicki Seak '07 said.

"I thought she had a really strong voice and that it was easy to listen to," Alison Slater '07 said.

Daniels had earned both her undergraduate and graduate degrees in psychology as a college student. She believes that studying psychology has taught her to ask better questions of people that have evolved into stories that often emerge in her narrative songs.

"Listening to their stories inspired me," Daniels said of people she has met in school and as a touring musician. On Friday, these stories caused students to lean back in their chairs and to reflect upon their own questions. Bender agrees that Daniels' performance was well received by students and hopes they will continue to attend Late Night Music Series events in the future.

"Come this Friday night to the student band night. Andrew Burr '04 is playing and he will be selling his CD," Bender said.

ASHI'S DAY

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Music Composition major Ashi Day '04 presented a recital of her works Sunday night.

The program included a six-song cycle inspired by the artwork of Edward Munch, musical cues used in the University's recent production of Tennessee William's, "The Glass Menagerie" and seven pieces from "The Good Woman of Setzuan," by Bertold Brecht.

"A Warm Night" is taken from Heggie's first opera, "Dead Man Walking." Kyle McGee '04 will be performing this aria. During Heggie's residency, McGee worked with John Packard, who first sang the role at the opera's world premiere in October 2000.

"It was a pleasure and privilege to work with John and Jake. Working with John on this piece gave me great insight to the character," McGee said.

"I Shall Not Live in Vain," performed by Ashley Hall '06, is the program's most classically styled song. "Snake," sung by Lauren Catherwood '06, is written in a jazz style.

Sandra Maro '06 and Catherwood perform the program's only duet, a musical setting of the 16th-century poem "My True-Love Hath My Heart" by Sir Phillip Sydney.

Payn says that the program includes several humorous pieces, including one about "a haughty snail ... and God as a little boy."

Other members of the Company that will be performing are Emily Serotta '06, Sarah Houck '06, Brianne Wright '05, Lee Cromwell '05 and Ben Guise '07. The accompanist for the performance is Lou Ann Potter.

The performance will be accented by lighting effects designed by Weis Center technical director, Dale Hourland.

Market Street PHOTO

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543

M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box 120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

Elizabeth's

An American Bistro

412 Market St. Lewisburg 570-523-8088

Come see what's new and exciting. Celebrating six years of great food & fabulous service.

Wine Spectator and Elite Dining Awards

Sunday Brunch starts

August 24th 11:00 AM to 2:00 PM

Wednesday-Saturday Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2, Dinner 5-9 www.elizabethsbistro.com

FEATURES

Post-graduation journey out of the box

Dan Blair '03 experiences vast cultural differences while teaching in Quito, Ecuador

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

The journey following graduation is different for all students. Some will proceed to higher levels of education, whether it is medical, law or graduate school. Others will embrace their newly earned diplomas and plunge head first into the icy waters of the work force, racing to the alternate universe known as the "real world." Then, there are those who opt for an alternative route, deviating from societal norms to embark on an adventure all its own. Such is the case for Dan Blair '03.

Blair graduated from the University last spring with a Bachelor of Arts in English. As commencement approached, he realized that he was eager to face challenges atypical to the normal college graduate. Following this desire, he signed up for a program called WorldTeach, a non-profit organization based at Harvard's Center for International Development. He is now living in Quito, Ecuador, teaching English to Spanish- and Quechua-speaking children.

"Besides [improving my] Spanish, I'm motivated by my interest in the development and spread of what is termed 'Western society' and all the baggage that travels along with [it]. I'm motivated to trace the roots of our society back to where it began," Blair said. "In the jungles, in the deserts, in the far-out places of the world that in the Americas, began artificially evolving to modern standard culturally and socially almost 600 years after cultures in Europe and Asia."

Blair arrived at the home of Alberto, his host father, on Sept. 4 via a canoe. Immediately, he was plunged into a world devoid of heavy Western influence and he could not imagine a more perfect environment to discover what life was like before society was morphed by industry, technology and popular culture. The differences were evident as Blair set down his things in his new home, a grass-roofed hut on stilts held together by a 1" by 10" board, without electric lights and with chickens, dogs and parrots running throughout.

The trip has been a learning experience for not only his students, but also for Blair. The language barrier has been interesting to overcome, with even the most common phrases leaving Blair embarrassed, and his students laughing.

"Instead of tomato, which is Spanish for tomato, I've said temato, which if you write it: te mato, literally means 'I kill you.' It makes [my students] laugh," Blair said.

Everyday life is much different as well. Living with Alberto and his family, Blair quickly realized how spoiled he had been growing up in Connecticut suburbia.

In Ecuador, when you want something, you get it from the jungle. There is no strolling up and down aisles, deciding what you're hungry for that particular week. You eat whatever fruit is in season. The berries that are abundant are the ones that will be on your table, and when the rice shipments come in, you'll have rice.

In addition to the majority of food, medicinal treatments are found hidden beneath the rainforest canopy. Having arrived in Ecuador with a headache

Courtesy of Dan Blair
Blair quickly realized that in Ecuador, everything you need can be found in the forest. Alberto and his family made daily trips to collect fruits, berries, and edible plants.

caused by dehydration, Blair was shown the native way of curing it. The leaves of a small bush are used to relieve headaches by smashing them against the head to release their oil.

"It stings, but smacking myself in the head with a plant to get rid of a headache can only make sense in a few places in the world, so I figured I'd give it a shot. Rome wasn't built in a day, and much of modern medicine came from places like Alberto's backyard," Blair said.

The major differences between life in Ecuador and life in United States were summed up for Blair in one experience. Upon first meeting Alberto, Blair questioned him as to how many kilometers they lived from Tena, the closest city. To his surprise, Alberto had no knowledge of what a kilometer was or any major concept of distances. Terms such as "some distance" and "far" are the only common adjectives used to describe such concepts. Initially, Blair was taken aback and very fearful of what he was getting himself into if his host didn't even know what a kilometer was. Instead of trying to enlighten Alberto with the English system of measurement, Blair chose to accept this as one of the many beauties of Ecuador.

"Wherever I am in the world makes sense, even if it's only describable as some distance away from somewhere else," Blair said.

Courtesy of Dan Blair
(Left) One of the many natural remedies found in the canopy, the thorns of these berries, are said to relieve headaches when smashed against the forehead. (Right) Alberto, Blair's host father, enjoying the afternoon outside the family's thatched-roof home.

Your Dream: "I want to become a doctor."

Your Reality:

"I don't have the required courses for medical school."

The Johns Hopkins Post-Baccalaureate Premedical Program prepares college graduates with strong academic records to apply to the best medical schools by giving them the personal attention, the necessary science and math courses, and one-to-one academic advising.

If you or someone you know wants to pursue a career as a doctor, apply by March 1.

For more information, visit www.jhu.edu/postbac or call 410-516-7748.

JOHNS HOPKINS
UNIVERSITY
Post-Baccalaureate
Premedical Program

Buck Post Bac 04

FEATURES

Students apply to Teach for America

By AMY WAGNER
Writer

While there are many education majors at the University, some students want to take their teaching aspirations on the road with Teach for America.

Corps members teach for two years in low-income areas, tor and recruit students to work for the non-profit organization after graduation. Tarca plans special recruitment events for high-potential seniors and coordinates visits of University alumni who are corps members.

Current corps member Lori Adamczyk '02, who teaches high school math in rural North Carolina, visited the University in October. She ran an information session about Teach for America and met with students.

"My visit was a huge success," Adamczyk said. "When I wanted to apply to Teach for America, I had to fight to get my hands on a brochure. Now there's a presence on campus. We're reaching out and helping people find information and apply. It's great!"

The University has responded to these recruitment efforts. Twenty University students applied for this year's first deadline on Oct. 24, and according to Tarca, at least 10 more applications are expected for the second deadline in February.

"Katie contacted me and told me about Teach for America. I had been unsure about my plans after graduation, and this sounded like a great opportunity, so I'm going to apply," Jillian Standish '04 said.

Standish wants to teach high school mathematics in Washington, D.C. if accepted into the program. Jakitia Price '04 said that she applied to be a part of Teach for America because she can have a huge impact on schools in Philadelphia, where she grew up, without working toward the traditional teaching certification.

Katy Timer '04 applied to Teach for America because she says that two years working for the program will allow her to experience something she would never do otherwise with her biology major. If accepted to Teach for America, Timer wants to teach high school science in Houston.

"Teach for America would give me the chance to experience the challenges of under-resourced schools first-hand and hopefully have an impact in improving students' education," Timer said.

According to Tarca, At least 17 of the University's 20 applicants passed the application review and were offered first interviews.

Out of all the applicants in 2003, approximately 13 percent were admitted to the program and are currently teaching around the country. Almost 16,000 people applied to be a part of Teach for America in 2003, a dramatic increase from the 4,000 that applied in 2001.

"Many corps alumni attend the best graduate schools in the country to study medicine, law, education and business," said Tarca.

Tarca herself is interested in joining the program after graduation from the University. "I am applying, and it's my top choice of things to do after graduation. Working so closely with such an amazing program has made me want to be a part of the corps. I think it's an amazing opportunity," Tarca said.

Tarca said that she thinks campus recruitment has been so successful "because my team and I are so passionate about the program."

The Teach for America corps members, according to the organization's Web site, are the most highly sought-after college graduates of all academic majors, career interests and backgrounds from leading colleges and universities.

Courtesy of Katie Tarca
Teach for America currently provides teachers for 18 needy districts across the nation.

"We then select corps members who demonstrate records of achievement, leadership qualities, and a commitment to expanding opportunity for children in low income areas," according to the Web site.

Over the last 13 years, Teach for America has placed 10,000 corps members in schools around the country and 63 percent of those individuals have remained in education beyond their two year commitment.

receiving training and support from Teach for America. Today, approximately 3,300 corps members work in 20 rural and urban regions across the United States.

Students from the University

that we wanted to tap into," said Amy Christie, Teach for America's National Campaign Director.

Teach for America hired Katie Tarca '04 to be the University's campaign coordinator and recruit students to work for the non-profit organization after graduation. Tarca plans special recruitment events for high-potential seniors and coordinates visits of University alumni who are corps members.

Current corps member Lori Adamczyk '02, who teaches high school math in rural North Carolina, visited the University in October. She ran an information session about Teach for America and met with students.

"My visit was a huge success," Adamczyk said. "When I wanted to apply to Teach for America, I had to fight to get my hands on a brochure. Now there's a presence on campus. We're reaching out and helping people find information and apply. It's great!"

The University has responded to these recruitment efforts. Twenty University students applied for this year's first deadline on Oct. 24, and according to Tarca, at least 10 more applications are expected for the second deadline in February.

"Katie contacted me and told me about Teach for America. I had been unsure about my plans after graduation, and this sounded like a great opportunity, so I'm going to apply," Jillian Standish '04 said.

Standish wants to teach high school mathematics in Washington, D.C. if accepted into the program. Jakitia Price '04 said that she applied to be a part of Teach for America because she can have a huge impact on schools in Philadelphia, where she grew up, without working toward the traditional teaching certification.

Katy Timer '04 applied to Teach for America because she says that two years working for the program will allow her to experience something she would never do otherwise with her biology major. If accepted to Teach for America, Timer wants to teach high school science in Houston.

"Teach for America would give me the chance to experience the challenges of under-resourced schools first-hand and hopefully have an impact in improving students' education," Timer said.

According to Tarca, At least 17 of the University's 20 applicants passed the application review and were offered first interviews.

Out of all the applicants in 2003, approximately 13 percent were admitted to the program and are currently teaching around the country. Almost 16,000 people applied to be a part of Teach for America in 2003, a dramatic increase from the 4,000 that applied in 2001.

"Many corps alumni attend the best graduate schools in the country to study medicine, law, education and business," said Tarca.

Tarca herself is interested in joining the program after graduation from the University. "I am applying, and it's my top choice of things to do after graduation. Working so closely with such an amazing program has made me want to be a part of the corps. I think it's an amazing opportunity," Tarca said.

Tarca said that she thinks campus recruitment has been so successful "because my team and I are so passionate about the program."

The Teach for America corps members, according to the organization's Web site, are the most highly sought-after college graduates of all academic majors, career interests and backgrounds from leading colleges and universities.

"We then select corps members who demonstrate records of achievement, leadership qualities, and a commitment to expanding opportunity for children in low income areas," according to the Web site.

Over the last 13 years, Teach for America has placed 10,000 corps members in schools around the country and 63 percent of those individuals have remained in education beyond their two year commitment.

receiving training and support from Teach for America. Today, approximately 3,300 corps members work in 20 rural and urban regions across the United States.

Students from the University

that we wanted to tap into," said Amy Christie, Teach for America's National Campaign Director.

Teach for America hired Katie Tarca '04 to be the University's campaign coordinator and recruit students to work for the non-profit organization after graduation. Tarca plans special recruitment events for high-potential seniors and coordinates visits of University alumni who are corps members.

Current corps member Lori Adamczyk '02, who teaches high school math in rural North Carolina, visited the University in October. She ran an information session about Teach for America and met with students.

"My visit was a huge success," Adamczyk said. "When I wanted to apply to Teach for America, I had to fight to get my hands on a brochure. Now there's a presence on campus. We're reaching out and helping people find information and apply. It's great!"

The University has responded to these recruitment efforts. Twenty University students applied for this year's first deadline on Oct. 24, and according to Tarca, at least 10 more applications are expected for the second deadline in February.

"Katie contacted me and told me about Teach for America. I had been unsure about my plans after graduation, and this sounded like a great opportunity, so I'm going to apply," Jillian Standish '04 said.

Standish wants to teach high school mathematics in Washington, D.C. if accepted into the program. Jakitia Price '04 said that she applied to be a part of Teach for America because she can have a huge impact on schools in Philadelphia, where she grew up, without working toward the traditional teaching certification.

Katy Timer '04 applied to Teach for America because she says that two years working for the program will allow her to experience something she would never do otherwise with her biology major. If accepted to Teach for America, Timer wants to teach high school science in Houston.

"Teach for America would give me the chance to experience the challenges of under-resourced schools first-hand and hopefully have an impact in improving students' education," Timer said.

According to Tarca, At least 17 of the University's 20 applicants passed the application review and were offered first interviews.

Out of all the applicants in 2003, approximately 13 percent were admitted to the program and are currently teaching around the country. Almost 16,000 people applied to be a part of Teach for America in 2003, a dramatic increase from the 4,000 that applied in 2001.

"Many corps alumni attend the best graduate schools in the country to study medicine, law, education and business," said Tarca.

Tarca herself is interested in joining the program after graduation from the University. "I am applying, and it's my top choice of things to do after graduation. Working so closely with such an amazing program has made me want to be a part of the corps. I think it's an amazing opportunity," Tarca said.

Tarca said that she thinks campus recruitment has been so successful "because my team and I are so passionate about the program."

The Teach for America corps members, according to the organization's Web site, are the most highly sought-after college graduates of all academic majors, career interests and backgrounds from leading colleges and universities.

"We then select corps members who demonstrate records of achievement, leadership qualities, and a commitment to expanding opportunity for children in low income areas," according to the Web site.

Over the last 13 years, Teach for America has placed 10,000 corps members in schools around the country and 63 percent of those individuals have remained in education beyond their two year commitment.

Buffalo Bill's
TEX-MEX GRILLE & SALOON
Monday 5-9
Jumbo Hamburger & Fries
& Large Soda--$3.99
Tuesday 5-9
12 Jumbo Wings & Fries
& Soda--$3.99
Wednesday 5-9
Vegetarian Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price
Thursday 5-9
Mexican Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price
Lewisburg • 523-8900

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 pm
Mondays - Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs
$5 All You Can Eat Wings!
Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm
8 pm Trivia Contest! Win $30 gift cert.!!
Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings - $5!!!
10 pm-2 am - Live band in The Vault
Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak -- $12.99!!!
9 pm - 2 am - Karaoke Night!!
Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99
Hip Hop DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am
Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm
All Request DJ 10 p.m. - 2 am
Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!
Now Hiring**
Wait Staff and Bartenders**
Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

STORAGE BOX
LOCATED ON ROUTE 45
WEST OF MIFFLINBURG PA
570-716-1203
5' x 10' $29.00 mo.
10' x 10' $39.00 mo.
10' x 20' $59.00 mo.
10' x 40' $115.00 mo.
OTHER SIZES AVAILABLE. CALL US TODAY FOR ALL YOUR STORAGE NEEDS

NOW OFFERING
ONE MONTH'S FREE RENT
FOR ALL REMAINING
'04-'05 UNITS!

BISON PROPERTIES

- Professionally Managed and Maintained
- High Speed Internet Available
- Two to Eight Bedrooms
- Now Accepting Applications for '05-'06

Call or E-mail Scott Bank '91
for more information

610-506-6676

bison.properties@comcast.net

CALL NOW TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF
LIMITED REMAINING INVENTORY

YOUR PARENTS WILL THANK YOU!

FEATURES

Rory Kennedy visits University

Kennedy promotes her eye-opening documentary on AIDS awareness

BY ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Last week, Rory Kennedy visited the University in order to sign her latest book and to promote her newest documentary. Kennedy has directed and produced a line of successful documentaries over the past years through her self-started production company, Moxie Firecracker, Inc., many of which have gone on to win critical acclaim. She credits the inspiration for her newest multi-part series, "Pandemic: Facing AIDS," to experiences had during her college years.

A student at Brown during the late 1980s, Kennedy was witness to AIDS becoming more than the "gay man's" disease, as the numbers were beginning to rise and people she knew were beginning to get sick. And amidst the obviously increasing problem, awareness still remained low. Now, over 10 years later, Kennedy observed the same problem of naivete and ignorance still existing in an even more educated society, and she decided it was finally time to undertake this project detailing the AIDS pandemic.

"The tone is sober, without a lot of bells and whistles. Phillip Glass contributes one of his minimalist scores, to urgent yet almost subliminal effect. Elton John narrates, barely."

"Pandemic: Facing AIDS" is a triumph of respectful tones and sober vision," said indiewire.com of Kennedy's documentary.

Kennedy's earlier films about the AIDS crisis stemmed from her position in the White House. "Four years ago, I had been asked to join a White House delegation under the Clinton administration to go to Africa and make a short film about the AIDS crisis there," Kennedy said. "I was profoundly affected by what I saw. As I learned more about the AIDS crisis, I realized that it was beginning to spread at an alarming rate in other places around the world: Asia, Eastern Europe, the Caribbean, South America. And so I felt compelled, after coming home from that trip, to make a larger project about the global pandemic."

Rory Kennedy speaks at the Campus Theatre about her newest documentary, "Pandemic: Facing AIDS." This documentary is the newest in Kennedy's series of films to increase social awareness.

I had the opportunity to sit down with Kennedy over dinner, along with other University students, faculty members and community health staff, and discuss not only her work in documentary film making but also world issues, life at the University and her journeys. Her life has been both a wonderful adventure, and a series of eye-opening and often heartbreaking experiences, as she's traveled around the world capturing lives on film.

When discussing her most recent documentary, Kennedy expressed her hopes that through her work others will become more aware of the crisis that is bearing down upon the world as a whole.

"After making this series, I felt firmly that the AIDS crisis can be contained if there was the political will and there was enough awareness and resources devoted to the task," Kennedy said.

University students, faculty and the local community were given the opportunity to watch portions of the documentary at the Campus Theatre while Kennedy provided commentary about her work in producing the film and the crisis being examined. Student's opinions were generally high.

"After making this series, I felt firmly that the AIDS crisis can be contained if there was the political will and there was enough awareness and resources devoted to the task."

—Rory Kennedy, director of "Pandemic: Facing AIDS"

Kennedy's visit to the University, in correlation with World's AIDS Day (Dec. 1) and the arrival of the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial quilt to campus, are all combined efforts to enlighten the campus to the plight that hundreds of thousands of people are living with everyday. AIDS is not a problem that exists outside our "bubble," and Kennedy would certainly agree that it is time to open our eyes and realize the next generation of prevention is lying at our fingertips.

Kennedy has traveled around the world, capturing individuals' lives on film.

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Sex and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I need help! I am a senior and have been dating my boyfriend for two years. Before I say anything else, I want to preface my story by telling you that things are great between us. He makes me really happy and our relationship is amazing. I think that he just might be the perfect guy for me. OK, so now to my problem. The other night I was in his room hanging out and when he got up to go to the bathroom I went over to his desk to look at some pictures. Imagine my surprise when I saw a little black box! I couldn't help it ... I peeked, and it was an engagement ring! I know that I should be excited and thrilled at the thought of him proposing to me, but I'm not. I am freaked out! Marriage is not something that I am ready for! I am only 21! He hasn't asked me yet, but I have a feeling it's coming soon! What do I say?! Please tell me what you think I should do.

—M

Dear 'M'

First, I want you to take three nice, big, deep breaths. Relax. This situation is completely in your control. Just because someone asks you to marry him does not mean you have to say yes. This is your life and you should only do what feels right for you. In fact, you can feel proud of yourself because it is better for you to realize now that you are not ready for marriage than for you to say yes, start planning a wedding, actually get married and then realize that you made a mistake. You have already done the hardest part. You realized that marriage is not something you want right now.

Now that you have had this realization, I would recommend that you sit down with your boyfriend sometime very soon and have a talk. I think you need to come clean about finding the ring. Tell him that you accidentally came across it, and it really made you start thinking about the future. You need to be honest. Tell him that you love him and that you think your relationship is wonderful. Then tell him that although you may want to marry him someday, the timing just isn't right at this particular moment in time. I would also advise you to make sure that you are not guilty into feeling like you have to say yes. It is to be expected that your boyfriend may be a little hurt and upset at first, but continue to assure him that just because you don't want to get married right now does not mean that you don't love him and that you won't consider marrying him someday. Remain strong in your original belief that marriage is not right for you at this point in your life, and always remember to listen to your instincts. If your instincts are telling you that something is not right, you should pay attention to that feeling.

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to email her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question in the form of a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What is the best line you have ever used to get out of going out with someone?

Kennedy works to increase awareness about AIDS through her documentaries.

Thrill-seeking students can take the plunge

BY JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Exhilarating, breathtaking, invigorating, a rush—the thrill of skydiving may be unmatched, and unmatched, it can be found even in "the middle of nowhere."

The Pennsylvania Skydiving University (PSU) has been open for two years and claims to be the only drop zone in central Pennsylvania.

"There hasn't really ever been a long term facility here," owner Bill Williams said. "All the drop zones are located near the periphery of the state."

The school is certified by the United States Parachute Association—the only association officially recognized by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA).

"We have two USPA certified jumpmasters," Williams said.

Williams and the other jumpmaster, J.D., accompany divers in tandem jumps, where instructors are connected to the same parachute and help control the fall.

According to the USPA, during a tandem jump, "both the student and the instructor are attached to the same parachute system. They free fall together for 30 to 50 seconds, depending on jump altitude, typically 10,000 to 13,000 feet. They descend together under a single large parachute with dual controls."

For added control and safety, PSU uses what Williams calls "wings" that allow the instructor to steer and land more efficiently.

At the school, falls typically take place at the lower end of the altitude range, in a Barret Geise '05 straps on a parachute before skydiving. Geise took his first jump through the Pennsylvania Skydiving University in August.

further attempt to ensure safety. "Jumps take place at 10,000-11,000 feet AGL, or above ground level at the airport," Williams said. "You free fall for 5,000 feet, which usually takes about 35 seconds."

According to students who have participated in skydiving, the height is not a problem.

"You don't really think you're that high," Barret Geise '05 said, who had his first jump through PSU in August. "I don't think it would be a problem for people who are afraid of heights ... it's not like being on a ladder, or being up three stories ... it just looks like a painting."

Divers can appreciate the picturesque view during the gliding section of the jump, after the 35-second free fall.

"When the chute opens, it's really peaceful and quiet," Geise said.

Divers are encouraged to make reservations before a drop, but they are not required. After arriving at PSU, students view a mandatory 20-minute video. They then sign a waiver and undergo another 20-minute training session. The flight to jumping altitude also takes 20 minutes.

Once the diver reaches this height, they are ready to take the plunge.

"They have you step out on this ledge," Geise said. "You don't really jump, you get pushed out by the instructor."

Both student and instructor then fall 5,000 feet before gliding the rest of the way to the ground with the help of the wings.

The adrenaline rush experienced during this fall is enough to make many divers repeat the performance.

"Most of the people that do it want to come back ... everyone wants to go back up," Williams said.

According to Geise, he would "definitely" do it again.

Williams himself has been skydiving since 1995 and has completed about 2,500 jumps. The other jumpmaster, J.D., has done 3,400.

"It's a sport activity you could do for over 20 years," Williams said.

If skydiving sounds like an activity you would like to take up, PSU can be found in Reedsville, Pa. To reach the facility, take Route 45 West until you reach Route 104 outside of Millburg. Turn left onto 104 and travel until you find Route 522, which will take you into Reedsville. PSU is located at the Millin County Airport.

What to do in the middle of NOWHERE

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

December 5, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 12
Sports:
Bison football beats Georgetown 49-16 and ends its season with 6-6 record overall and a 4-3 record in the Patriot League.
See page B1

TWO GREEK CHAPTERS DISBANDED

Tri-Delta loses national charter

BY ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

The national chapter of Delta Delta Delta (Tri-Delta) sorority withdrew the University chapter's charter Tuesday. The chapter will be eligible for recolonization in the fall of 2006, if the national chapter gives approval.

The national board of Tri-Delta informed the University administration of the three general reasons why the sorority's local charter was revoked. According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, who sent an email to faculty and students to inform them of Tri-Delta's status, more specific details were not provided by the national chapter.

The national chapter informed the administration that Tri-Delta's charter was revoked because they were placed on probation several times in recent years, numerous risk-management violations occurred the semester and during an investigation by the national chapter, University Tri-Delta members were not cooperative.

"People have asked me why Tri-Delta cannot stay local, but when you are part of a national organization, you cannot just be local," Ferraro said.

Tri-Delta sisters will be permitted to live for the remainder of the semester in their suite in Hunt Hall, the residential hall that houses members of the University's sororities. Next semes-

See TRI-DELTA page A2

"It's too bad that this group of guys will miss out on the Greek experience."

—Herb Lohmann '04, DU president

"When these things happen, people don't realize the sadness the administration looks at them with."

—Richard Ferraro, dean of students

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

DU suspended by University

BY ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

Delta Upsilon (DU) fraternity has been suspended until August 2006 by Chief Judicial Officer and Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford.

A stayed suspension was imposed on DU in April 2002 by the Community Judicial Board (CJB) due to the fraternity's history of alcohol-related infractions.

"They were suspended, but it wasn't enforced," Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said. "This would have given [DU] an opportunity to turn things around."

DU did not clear stayed suspension due to more alcohol-related infractions, so in September 2003, it was put on continued stayed suspension and social suspension, which would have lasted until May 20, 2004.

"Under this social suspension, no underage drinking was allowed in the DU house," Ferraro said. "Then there was the Pop/Son Night incident that essentially triggered this action."

In early November, an underage DU pledge was brought to the hospital during Pop/Son Night for "an extremely serious case of alcohol poisoning," Ferraro said in a campus-wide email, which informed the campus community of DU's current status.

This incident violates both the fraternity's prohibition of serving underage students alco-

See DU page A2

University purchases 50 acres of farmland

BY KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

The University will purchase a 49.9-acre piece region bordering the campus for $2.9 million over winter break. The administration is still planning what to do with the land in the future, and nothing has been decided definitively.

"Acquiring the farmland represents a rare and exciting future opportunity for the University, and we are grateful to the owners of the land for making this opportunity possible," said Susan Crawford, chair of the University Board of Trustees.

The University has been considering this investment for much longer than four years.

"This is land that Bucknell has been seeking for about 50 years," Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock said. On Dec. 31, the sale of the land closes and a wide area of farmland behind Bertrand Library will be added. Part of the purchase is already familiar to students, as a section of the land is currently leased as a parking lot across Behind Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity. The University sought more of the area to enrich the campus and

See LAND page A5

Alcohol policy clarified, amended after forum

BY ELISABETH SALEMME
News Editor

The administration has amended its emergency alcohol policy in response to the disapproval with certain aspects of the policy, expressed by students at a forum on Nov. 19.

Dean of Students Richard Ferraro sent an email to all students that detailed these amendments to the policy, which was implemented by the administration on Nov. 18. The email also clarified aspects of the policy that were unclear to students.

"The two issues that quickly rose to the surface were having financial aid withheld if re-admitted and applying the policy to off-age students," University President Steffen Rogers said.

Under the original policy, a student suspended for an alcohol-related infraction would lose eligibility for his or her University scholarship upon readmission. The amended policy states that students who are suspended for alcohol-related infractions will continue to be eligible for University scholarship when readmitted.

"President Rogers, upon further reflection, came to the conclusion that the person who served a full year suspension had already received a very substantial personal punishment and should not be sanctioned financially as well," Ferraro wrote in his email.

Another issue students were concerned with at the forum was the ban on hard alcohol. Students said they feel it is unfair to ban hard alcohol for responsible off-age students. The ban on hard alcohol will now be reviewed at the end of January 2004.

Under the new policy, point allocations will double if the infraction involves hard alcohol. However, the amended policy states that off-age students will not be fined double, they will be given two, rather than four points for the possession or consumption of hard alcohol.

"Naturally, if after February 1, the right to have hard alcohol on campus for students of age is

See ALCOHOL page A3

ATARIS AND MRAZ ROCK SOJKA PAVILION

The Ataris (left) and Jason Mraz (right) performed the fall concert on Nov. 21 in the Sojka Pavilion. See page B10 for a concert review.

From the Editor's Desk

Editor-in-Chief Peter Hackeman '04 reflects on his experiences at The Bucknellian.

See page A6

Punk gets political

Punk bands, including Boy Sets Fire, are inspiring college students to become politically involved through their song lyrics.

See page B6

Dynamic Dancing

The University dance company will present its annual production tonight and tomorrow night in the Harvey Powers Theatre.

See page B10

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Nov. 22

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed her Nikon digital camera from a cardboard box located at the entrance to the Sojka Pavilion. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC URINATION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety Dispatch reported to Public Safety that two males were seen urinating inside the Rt. 15 tunnel. Upon arrival to the area, Public Safety made a pedestrian stop and identified two males, one a student and one a non-University student. The visitor admitted that both males did urinate in the tunnel. Both were cited for public drunkenness. The student was cited for underage consumption and public urination.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—A student reported to Public Safety that an unknown male entered her unlocked room at Larison Hall and urinated on the floor. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Dana Engineering building for a fire alarm activation. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that unknown person(s) lit and burnt a card from a bulletin board. The incident is under investigation.

Monday, Nov. 23

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A

student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of an allergic reaction. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual who later returned to campus.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation at Swartz Hall caused by unknown person(s) discharging a fire extinguisher. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the building. The incident is under investigation.

ASSIST POLICE / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to the Bucknell West Mids to assist East Buffalo Township Police Department with a non-University student who was passed out near Rt. 15. The visitor was cited for Public Drunkenness and returned to his student host.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DISORDERLY CONDUCT / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the report of an abandoned bicycle. The bicycle was returned to Public Safety storage until it is claimed.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—A student reported to Public Safety that a fire extinguisher had been discharged in the basement of Harris Hall. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Bertrand Library for the report of a student who was bleeding from the nose. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment. The student later returned to campus.

Tuesday, Nov. 24

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed a laptop computer, digital camera and a ring of keys from an office in Olin Science. The incident is under investigation.

FOUND PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to the outside of the Craft Center for the report of an abandoned bicycle. The bicycle was returned to Public Safety storage until it is claimed.

Wednesday, Nov. 25

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / ASSIST POLICE / CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to the corner of Malcolm and Brown Streets to assist Lewisburg Police Department with four intoxicated students who were being difficult. One student admitted to damaging street signs and was charged with criminal mischief and obstructing a University official from performing his/her duties. Two other students were cited for underage consumption and obstructing a University official from performing his/her duties. All were charged with disorderly conduct.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to a Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a computer printer in Taylor Hall. The incident is under investigation.

ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—A student reported to a Public Safety that he discovered drug paraphernalia in a bathroom garbage can in Swartz Hall. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. The incident is under investigation.

Thursday, Nov. 26

FOUND PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a shopping cart found during room inspections. CVS store was notified and criminal charges are pending.

Saturday, Nov. 28

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a Coca Cola vending machine behind the Golf Course. The East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

DU suspended through fall 2006

DU From page A1

hol in the fraternity house as well as Student Code of Conduct, Category I, Item 13, which relates to improper treatment of a new fraternity member.

DU President Herb Lohmann '04 said he does not think the suspension is fair to the sophomore pledges.

"The violations that we've had over the last couple of years were certainly not the fault of the sophomores," Lohmann said. "Nevertheless, Bucknell has made it clear that they want every class in DU to graduate before the chapter is reauthorized. It's too bad that this group of guys will miss out on the Greek experience."

Those brothers directly involved with the incident will face the CJB and charges will be filed against them.

"The house will plead not guilty to this charge and we are confident that the CJB will find the house not responsible for this isolated incident," Lohmann said. All DU brothers and officers contacted declined to comment.

DU brothers will not be permitted to live in their house, which is located on Fraternity Road, after the conclusion of this semester. On-campus University housing will be provided for the brothers.

The DU house is located on University property, but is owned by DU.

"Right now, we don't know what will happen with the house. If a chapter is suspended, it can't continue to live on a suite or in a house," Ferraro said.

Ferraro said DU has appeal possibilities and "they are certainly welcome to appeal."

"It is a shame that two of the strongest Greek organizations on this campus are being wiped out. The suspensions of DU and Tridel will have a significantly adverse effect on the Greek system here at Bucknell," Lohmann said.

Ferraro said he suggests that DU brothers should deal with the suspension in a responsible and mature manner.

"When a fraternity is re-established, you have a place to come back to after you graduate. Several fraternities on campus died and were reformed and have been very successful," Ferraro said.

TRI-DELTA From page A1

ter, Tri-Delta sisters will no longer be allowed to live in their suite and will move to other on-campus housing locations.

"I presume what will happen is that other chapters will live on [Tri-Delta's] suite. With study abroad, there is a fair amount of space available for the sisters to live," Ferraro said.

Tri-Delta sisters will be given a preference as to where they would like to live given the circumstance, according to Ferraro.

"When these things happen, people don't realize the sadness the administration looks at them with," Ferraro said.

Tri-Delta can appeal the decision to its national chapter.

Tri-Delta sisters who were contacted declined to comment.

University administration does not consider illegal drug use a serious problem on campus

By BRIANNA EVENS
Staff Writer

According to University officials, there have been no significant incidents of drug use on campus which would lead the administration to think drug use is a problem, or will become one, on campus.

"We do not have a lot of informa-

Drug use has not reached the same crisis state that the administration believes alcohol usage has reached.

tion about hard drugs on campus," Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said. "In my time here [almost four years] we have not had a conviction for hard drugs."

At the University, there is not a standard method for punishing those who use illegal drugs. According to Ferraro, the lack of a standard punitive policy is based on the fact that illegal drugs are illegal for everyone.

Ferraro also said drug use has not reached the same crisis state that the administration believes alcohol usage has reached.

"We have a zero-tolerance policy for illegal drugs on campus," Ferraro said. "When a person is caught with drugs, the police are called immediately."

While there has not been a recent conviction for hard drugs on campus, hard drugs are considered to be any illegal drug other than marijuana—administration and students said they are aware that there is a possibility of hard drug usage on campus.

"Am I aware that people have problems with drugs? Yes, I am," said Director of Student Health Services Donald Stechschulte. "But people don't come in here with their drug problems. They tend to keep overt drug problems to themselves."

When drug use is encountered on campus, the type of drug used affects how the authorities deal with it. According to Ferraro, drugs are classified in two categories: marijuana and other illegal drugs. The University distinguishes between drugs on campus in this way because there is this distinction in the legal system.

"If you are caught with a small amount of marijuana it is a much smaller offense than if you are caught with any other illegal drugs, which can be considered a felony," Ferraro said. "However, if you are caught dealing marijuana, or any drug, it becomes a very serious offense."

The only way for administration to acquire evidence about what kind of drug use takes place on campus is for users to be caught by Public Safety or the police.

According to Public Safety records, from Aug. 15, 2003 to Dec. 1, 2003 there were 10 marijuana-related incidents. Marijuana-related incidents include possession or use of marijuana or possession of marijuana drug paraphernalia. From the same period of time last year, there were six marijuana-related incidents. Although reports were received of other possible drug use, there were no such proven incidents during those periods of time.

Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCerio said there has been a slight increase in the number of drug incidents on campus involving marijuana from last year to this year, although he said the increase is not significant. "Although we have received informal information from time to time that there are other types of drug use on campus—and there probably are—there were no incidents of such this semester," DeCerio said. "The use of drugs seems to be below the surface on campus and does not manifest itself as prominently in inappropriate

"People don't come in here with their drug problems. They tend to keep overt drug problems to themselves."

—Director of Student Health Services
Donald Stechschulte

behavior or disorderly incidents as does the abuse of alcohol. Nevertheless, we consider any possession or use of illegal drugs on campus to be dangerous and unacceptable, as well as illegal."

Ferraro said it is possible drug usage exists on campus.

"I'm not saying that it doesn't exist because you can't prove that something doesn't exist," Ferraro said. "There are rumors about hard drug use on campus, but we have no clinical data to prove it. However, the rumors encourage caution because there is generally truth behind rumors, so we have to be vigilant about that."

Students said they have heard the rumors about hard drug use on campus as well.

"From what I have heard downtown and around campus, there is some hard drug use," Stuart Cubbon '07 said. "I know that people use drugs but I don't necessarily think it is as big of a problem as the recent alcohol problem."

Megan Purdy '07 said she agrees with Cubbon.

"I think that because of the nature of our school—because a lot of people have disposable income—this is more hard drug use than at other schools, but I don't see it," Purdy said.

While there may be drug use on campus, University officials said it is not likely that use will increase due to the emergency alcohol policy, because the people that do not already do drugs will likely not start doing drugs simply because there are strict consequences for drinking alcohol.

"I don't think the change in the alcohol policy will change the amount

"We do not have a lot of information about hard drugs on campus."

—Dean of Students
Richard Ferraro

of drug use. Personally, just because I can't drink hard alcohol doesn't mean I will start using drugs," Cubbon said.

CHRISTMAS
Beautiful Pottery by Mike Yoder
Pottery by Adrian

AT RUTH'S SHOP
Gift Certificates Free Layaway

RT 45 West
Lewisburg, PA 17837
BASKETS JEWELRY HOME DECOR
[570] 523-0655 Hrs: Mon-Thr 10-5; Fri & Sat 10-4

THE LITTLE RED HEN™ EATERY
Famous for its All-Purpose Dipping Mustard and Gourmet Foods
Lewisburg Roller Mills • 400 Antique Shops
Market Place Eatery, 517 Saint Marys St.
Lewisburg, PA Phone: (570) 523-0009
11AM - 3PM 7 DAYS A WEEK
DAVID W. REED (OWNER)
HOME (570) 966-0457
The Little Red Hen™, c/o Hen House Gourmet Foods
642 Walnut Street, Millburg, PA 17844

$15.00 OFF YOUR Therapeutic Massage
by
Norm Showers
Certified Massage Therapist
Gift Certificates Available
78 Jones Road
Milton, PA 17847
By Appointment
Phone: (570) 742-9189
FIRST MASSAGE

News

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Elisabeth Salemme

Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Twelve Ohio shootings linked

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Twelve shootings along a 5-mile stretch of interstate this year are connected, police said Tuesday.

U.S. denies Saddam deputy caught

KIRKUK, Iraq—The U.S. military said Izzat Ibrahim, the most-wanted man in Iraq after Saddam Hussein, had not been captured in a raid near Kirkuk on Tuesday—despite reports to the contrary from Iraq's Governing Council. Meanwhile, a U.S. soldier was killed by a roadside bomb explosion in the tense town of Samarra.

Plans for N. Korea nuke talks falter

WASHINGTON—Planning for six-party talks on North Korea's nuclear weapons program has hit a snag and the talks may not take place until January or February, instead of December as expected, U.S. officials said Tuesday.

U.S.-born terrorist suspect to get access to lawyer

WASHINGTON—Reversing course, Pentagon officials have decided to allow a U.S.-born terrorism suspect access to a lawyer, the Defense Department announced Tuesday.

Ivory Coast verges on new civil war

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast—Growing pro-government mobs armed with everything from assault rifles to rocks demanded a return Tuesday to all-out war against Ivory Coast's rebels—and threatened attacks on the 16,000 French civilians here if French peacekeepers refuse to clear the way.

Court date for N.D. kidnap suspect

CROOKSTON, Minn.—Authorities on Tuesday vowed not to rest until they find a missing North Dakota college student, despite the arrest of a man described by authorities as a predatory sex offender who is expected to be charged in connection with her disappearance.

Colorado woman killed by pack of dogs

DENVER—A woman was killed in a gruesome attack by a pack of pit bull dogs that residents say had been a roaming menace for months. Two men were injured, one of whom escaped only after his son shot at the dogs.

Cholera kills 12 in Zimbabwe

HARARE—A cholera outbreak in one of Zimbabwe's prime tourist districts has killed 12 people but the government said the disease was under control, state media reported on Tuesday.

Stomach stapling poses a double risk

CHICAGO—Severely obese people who undergo stomach stapling are at high risk for complications from the surgery itself and because their weight makes them poor surgical candidates, a doctor warned.

Genetically altered fish face scrutiny

SACRAMENTO, Calif.—The nation's first genetically altered household pet—a fish that glows in the dark—is set to begin appearing in stores next month everywhere except perhaps California, the only state with a ban on lab-engineered species. On Wednesday, the California Fish and Game Commission is scheduled to take up an application from Yorktown Technologies of Austin, Texas, to market the GloFish in California.

Japan's new space agency struggling

TOKYO—Japan's Mars probe is in trouble. Its weather satellites are breaking down. And its latest attempt to put a pair of spy satellites into orbit ended last weekend in a $92 million fireball. While rival China is basking in the glory of its first manned space flight, Japan's new space agency is off to a decidedly inauspicious start.

Students' questions and protests prompt alcohol policy reforms restored, the reduced penalty would disappear as well," Ferraro wrote in his e-mail.

ALCOHOL From page A1

Ferraro also addressed questions and complaints that arose at the forum, including students' concern that no students were asked to provide input concerning the emergency policy.

"With the unusually large number of very dangerous alcohol events taking place this fall (and there was a DUI and an alcohol poisoning even on Trustees Weekend), the Trustees and the President felt that this was an emergency situation and that immediate action was required," Ferraro wrote in the e-mail.

On Tuesday, the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA) met to discuss its proposal for a new alcohol points system. If the policy is passed, it will take effect next school year when the emergency alcohol policy will no longer be in effect.

As compared to the current policy, CCA's proposed policy will decrease penalties for lesser offenses, increase penalties for more significant offenses, will be based on 10 allowed points rather than eight and will allow for five forgiveness points rather than two. The policy will also emphasize moderation and education.

"Once we have this policy down, we will hold open forums with different student groups," Ferraro said. "But right now the policy looks really good."

In response to complaints that students were not asked for input with regard to the emergency policy, the Bucknell Conservatives Club (BUCC) held a "root beer pong" protest at the uphill Langone Center on Nov. 28.

"I think it was an interesting way for students to peacefully show their disapproval of certain portions of the new policy and how the whole thing was devised, and I think that the vast majority of students had principled, extremely valid reasons as to why they were upset," BUCC President Charles Mitchell '05 said. "Just in terms of BUCC members, many of us do not drink, but are upset based on the principle that students should've had input and think certain parts of the policy will decrease, not increase, safety."

At the forum, students also questioned the ban on hard alcohol is a step toward making the University a dry campus. Ferraro said it is not a step in that direction, and that hard alcohol was banned because the majority of serious alcohol infractions on campus this semester have involved hard alcohol.

Ferraro also clarified that a portable breathalyzer test result of 16 blood alcohol level constitutes a dangerous level of intoxication.

Students who rent housing downtown are responsible for underage guests who consume alcohol; it is not the liability of the landlord.

"This occurs even if the guest has 'preloaded' elsewhere. If one furnishes any alcohol, one can be held legally and financially liable," Ferraro wrote in his e-mail.

The penalty for "dangerous drinking games" under the emergency alcohol policy is suspension or expulsion. Ferraro wrote the penalty for games such as 20-on-20 or 21-on-21 are so serious because these games can put the health of students into serious jeopardy.

Rogers said he does not intend to make any further revisions to the emergency policy immediately.

"I have agreed to review the policy in early February. Any further revisions will depend on the behavioral patterns during the upcoming weekends. So, the ball is squarely in the court of the students," Rogers said.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
BUCC President Charles Mitchell '05 speaks to the crowd of protesting students who were enjoying drinking games involving root beer. The protest illustrated some of the reaction that a portion of the student body had to the new alcohol policy.

A WALK FOR A WISH

Chi Omega sorority sponsored Walk for a Wish to raise money for local children who suffer from terminal or chronic illnesses. University students participated in the walk Nov. 23.

Clinical Psychology Understanding the Mind and Human Behavior

Widener University's Institute for Graduate Clinical Psychology offers a five-year, full-time program that leads to the Doctor of Psychology (PsyD) degree.

- A highly reputed, clinically focused program
- Extensive and varied field experience through integrated clinical internship
- Fully accredited by the American Psychological Association (APA)
- Dual degree programs available with law, business, criminal justice, human sexuality education, and public administration
- Newberry Family Foundation Scholarship available

Thanks to Widener, I was able to start my own student practice, which has been a true learning point in my life.

810-390-1200 • Graduate Psychology 970 W. Main • 1440 VINEYER • www.widener.edu

Institute for Graduate Clinical Psychology
WIDENER UNIVERSITY
School of Human Service Professions

OPEN HOUSE: Thursday, October 16, 9:00-6:00 p.m.
University Center, 10th Street, Chester, PA 19313

News

Flash Back 1954 BEER RIOT

By JULIE LESKO
Staff Writer

The University policy implemented in 1954 that banned alcoholic beverages from fraternity houses on campus caused an uproar among students that led to the expulsion of eight male students.

The Bucknell Alumnus recorded the measure as a "long series of efforts to control student drinking." The policy prompted a significant student response including solutions to the problem.

According to the Bucknell Alumnus, initial reactions suggested the toleration of "drinking, but punish severely and consistently all the groups or individuals who practice indiscriminate drinking."

The following week, discussions between the administration and fraternities were held, and a compromise was proposed. The first protests began with chants at the Gettysburg football game, and more protests quickly escalated.

According to The Grit, a local newspaper, eight University students were expelled, three were suspended and four were given special work details for their part in the October 1954 demonstration protesting the ban against beer and liquor in fraternity houses on campus.

The protests started Oct. 3, 1954, with approximately 300 students parading and chanting for beer. Students marched to the intersection of 2nd and Market Streets where a sit down demonstration was eventually disbanded by two Milton police officers.

The following night, a second and larger demonstration of approximately 500 students chanted "We want beer" for hours into the night.

The ban of alcoholic beverages established a non-discriminatory regulation upholding an existing rule that prohibited beer and liquor from dormitories and other college buildings.

According to University officials at the time, the implementation of the ban on beer was prompted by the recently built fraternity houses on campus. The ban was also implemented to emphasize to all students that no exceptions would be made to those serving alcohol in student housing.

A memorandum from the Office of University Affairs called attention to the eight-column devotion in The Bucknellian to the riots and tion "had little regard for student self-government."

An opinions piece from The Bucknellian written by Ted Groom, called the actions was implemented without consideration of the campus community.

"The important thing is that prohibition was decreed who was present. Almost every student who was at either of these riots is equally as guilty or as innocent as most of the men who were punished."

David Finchbaugh, director of alumni, parents and volunteers, said it is important to remember that the male students who were expelled had lived through World War II and many were 28 years old. Finchbaugh said it was a very different world in 1954 than it is today.

The editor of the local paper, The Union County Standard Journal, published a three-inch aside next to the spread on the demonstrations congratulating the students for their youthful spirit. The article said that through the controversial edict, the Interfraternity Council remained loyal to its dedication to service through building new baseball diamonds at a local park.

"There's a bright and very heartening side to the highly publicized story of the current activities of exuberant youth on the Bucknell University campus," the newspaper's editor said.

Photo from The Grit archives

The ban of alcoholic beverages from fraternity houses in 1954 led students to erupt and protest against the policy for days. Protests included a "beer riot," shown above.

the number of organizations and alumni who expressed their disapproval of the ban through telephone calls, telegrams and letters to University officials.

The editorial in the Oct. 14, 1954 edition of The Bucknellian called the actions taken by the administration wrong, and the editorial said the actions of the administraof the administration hasty and interpreted the actions as unjust.

"If a few individuals out of a large group abuse a privilege, the privilege should be taken away from all, or in other words, all should be responsible for the actions of a few," Groom said in his article.

The ban of alcoholic beverages from fraternity houses without the advice or consent of the students, faculty or parents," Groom said in his article. "Several Bucknell men were either kicked out of school or put on probation because they were in the riot. Two of the men whom I know personally and one who I was with part of the time on Sunday evening did no more than I or any other person

Your Dream: "I want to become a doctor."

The Johns Hopkins Post-Baccalaureate Premedical Program prepares college graduates with strong academic records to apply to the best medical schools by giving them the personal attention, the necessary science and math courses, and one-to-one academic advising.

If you or someone you know wants to pursue a career as a doctor, apply by March 1.

For more information, visit www.jhu.edu/postbac or call 410-516-7748.

Your Reality:

"I don't have the required courses for medical school."

JOHNS HOPKINS
UNIVERSITY
Post-Baccalaureate
Premedical Program

Buck Post Bac 04

News

Fifty acres purchased

LAND From page A1

the education it offers. "It's an extraordinary opportunity to expand the campus if and when expansion is appropriate," Pollock said.

"There can't be more than a handful of universities in the country having the door open to them to create new facilities for students and faculty without crowding the campus."

—Charles Pollock '70, vice president for student affairs

Before the sale can be made, East Buffalo Township, governing that area of the University, must approve the purchase and then present the case before the township board of supervisors. The decision will be made before the sale closes at the end of December.

Former University President William Adams, in accordance with the University's Board of Trustees, agreed to buy a large parcel of land south of Fraternity Road a few decades ago. The University first offered to purchase the 49.9-acre region from farmers Brett and Christy Emlich in 1999 for $2.9 million, but it was not until this year that the University was granted permission to buy the land.

The purchase of the acreage is a solution to an ever-growing problem on campus: more buildings are being erected on campus while the overall area of the University has stayed the same, causing crowding on campus.

"We've been expanding our facilities for students without really growing," Pollock said.

The actual property expansion of the campus is an advantage that not many other universities have.

"There can't be more than a handful of universities in the country having the door open to them to create new facilities for students and faculty without crowding the campus," Pollock said.

"Right now, the only building planned is a new art building that we're trying to raise money for," said Pollock.

Plans may extend beyond new academic facilities, however, as even more changes take place at the University.

"Part of it would be better suited to residential facilities," Pollock said. "If we follow with the 1998 plan to not have students downtown, we'll need to build new facilities."

Actual construction on the newly-attained farmland will not begin for some time, according to University officials, as the administration is still deciding what should be done with the area.

Nothing may be done at all with the land.

"We don't want to eliminate any green space," Pollock said.

The administration said it is enthusiastic for the upcoming purchase, and looks forward to the future.

"The view in that direction is striking, and improvements in that area could be a wonderful addition academically and aesthetically to a campus that is already one of the best and most beautiful in the country," Crawford said.

HUNGER BANQUET

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

University community members participated in the annual Hunger Banquet on Nov. 24. Participants were assigned a social status and given particular type and amount of food, varying from beans to steak based on that status.

December	December	December	December
FRI	SAT	SUN	MON
Candlelight Service of Carols Rooke Chapel Main Sanctuary 7:30 p.m.	Fashion Show Langone Center Bison 7 p.m.	Quaker Services Willard Smith Library Vaughan Lit. 125 10 a.m.	String-Studio Recital Sigfried Weis Music Building Recital Hall 7:30 p.m.
"Latcho Drom" Hilltop Film Series Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 8 p.m.	"Latcho Drom" Hilltop Film Series Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 8 p.m.	Interdenominational Worship Service Rooke Chapel 11 a.m.	December TUE
Fall Dance Performance Coleman Hall Harvey Powers Theatre 8 p.m.	Fall Dance Performance Coleman Hall Harvey Powers Theatre 8 p.m.	Two Past Midnight Langone Center Walls Lounge 1 p.m.	Candlelight Service of Carols Rooke Chapel Main Sanctuary 7:30 p.m.
BU Comedy Improv Langone Center Forum 9 p.m.	Piffaro: The Renaissance Band Weis Center Auditorium 8 p.m.	Catholic Mass Rooke Chapel Main Sanctuary 4 p.m. Hunt Hall Living Room 101 10 p.m.	December WED
Pub Night Uptown 9:30 p.m.	Bingo Langone Center Bostwick Cafeteria 8 p.m.	The 24-Hour Play Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 8 p.m.	Night Before Finals A Capella Concert Langone Center Bison 9 p.m.
Burge Almighty Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 10:15 p.m.	Music Night Uptown 9:30 p.m.	The information for these events is subject to change. Some events are only open to members of an organization.
Eddie Carey 7th Street Cafe 11 p.m.	How To Deal Freas Trout Auditorium Vaughan Lit. 10:30 p.m.

Send calendar submissions to bucknellian@bucknell.edu with "Bucknellian Calendar" as the subject. Edited and compiled by Nick Kupensky.

SPRING BREAK:
Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun,
Jamaica and Acapulco from $489!
Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More!
Organize Small Group: Earn Free Trips plus Commissions!
Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Leisure Tours
Act Now! Book 11 people, get 12th trip free. Visit the official website for spring break '04. The Best deals to the Hottest destinations. Group discounts for 6+ www.springbreakdiscounts.com or 800-838-8202

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 p.m.

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 p.m.

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays—Monday Night Football on 50+ TVs
$5 All You Can Eat Wings!

Tuesdays—All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm
8 p.m. Trivia Contest! Win $30 gift cert.!

Wednesdays—All You Can Eat Wings -- $5!!!
10 p.m.-2 a.m.—Live band in The Vault

Thursdays—All You Can Eat Steak—$12.99!!!
9 p.m.-2 a.m.—Karaoke Night!!

Fridays—All You Can Eat Crab - $18.99
Hip Hop DJ 10 p.m.-2 a.m.

Saturdays—Prime Rib Special 4-10 p.m.
All Request DJ 10 p.m.-2 a.m.

Sundays—Weekly Dinner Special 4-10 p.m.
16+ Dance Club with Hip Hop DJ!

Now Hiring
Wait Staff and Bartenders

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

NOW OFFERING
ONE MONTH'S FREE RENT
FOR ALL REMAINING
'04-'05 UNITS!

BISON PROPERTIES

- Professionally Managed and Maintained
- High Speed Internet Available
- Two to Eight Bedrooms
- Now Accepting Applications for '05-'06

Call or E-mail Scott Bank '91
for more information

610-506-6676

bison.properties@comcast.net

CALL NOW TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF
LIMITED REMAINING INVENTORY.

YOUR PARENTS WILL THANK YOU!

Opinions

The Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 132, Number 12
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Peter Hackman '04

Associate Editor
Michelle Dombek '05

Managing Editor
Alyson Walker '04

Business Manager
Stephen Santulli '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangel '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubenstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04

News Editors
Elisabeth Salemme '06
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Keeley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
Courtney Homan '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Brent Butler '06

Features Editors
Ashley Mahken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editor
Adam Wilcox '06

Featured Layout
Nick Kupenski '07

Chief Copy Editors
Stacey Greenberg '06
Lauren Stanoszek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
Davish Mallotra '06

Marketing Directors
Joseph Giordano '05

Circulation Manager
Jes Trinitis '07

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editors of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

Bucknellian EDITORIAL

New land offers exceptional opportunity

The University's recent purchase of almost 50 acres of land behind Fraternity Road is a very positive development and represents an opportunity for successful and cooperative development at our school.

The $2.9 million price tag is certainly significant, and while there are many other valuable uses of almost $3 million, we believe that this purchase represents a good use of scarce resources. Often, acquiring land is a once in a decade or longer proposition, and the foresight of former University President Bro Adams and the persistence of current University President Steffen Rogers have resulted in this achievement.

Now that we have contracted to buy the land and expect to own it soon after the new year, the process of deciding what exactly to do with the land must become a primary focus of BSG, the current administration, the next administration and the Board of Trustees. Only through an open, inclusive and cooperative process will the University benefit from the land to the greatest degree possible.

A special committee or working group, made up of equal parts students, faculty, staff and administration should be commissioned. There should be numerous open forums and campus discussions. The working group should work and constantly communicate with all constituencies, and leadership organizations on campus during the process. Finally, this group, which would make recommendations to the Trustees, should not feel the need to develop a comprehensive plan to develop all of the land at once. A piecemeal approach, paired with a guiding set of principles and goals, would best fit the fluid nature of a college campus and the continuing need to fund the projects as they occur.

Preliminary ideas for use include a new art building, residence halls and green space. We support the construction of a modern art building to replace the current art building, which is in less than ideal shape despite recent remodeling.

We support the idea of a new residence hall, as long as it is not part of a plan to eliminate off-campus living. According to Vice President of Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70, "If we follow with the 1998 plan to not have students downtown, we'll need to build new facilities."

The idea of bringing all student back onto campus is a fundamentally bad one and is not in keeping with the educational mission of this University. A new dormitory, especially one aimed at seniors, is a good idea by itself. While staying consistent with our brick and Greek-inspired architectural theme, the University should seek to build a modern set of apartment-style housing units. We also believe that a bar or restaurant should be considered as a part of the senior housing complex. While an "Uptown for 21-year-olds" would expose the University to potential liability, a seriously enforced prohibition on excessive drinking would allow off-age students to responsibly enjoy drinks and food close to their homes while providing the University with a source of funds for upkeep of the dorms.

We also believe that the land should not be developed completely, but instead should be planned to include significant amounts of green space. Much of the beauty of our campus is based on the two quads and Rooke lawn.

Additionally, the University should consider using a small part of the land for a parking lot. While we continue to support the concept of a walking campus, we believe there is still a shortage of parking on campus. If there are residence halls built, then there must be parking located nearby. If there aren't additional dorms built, the current parking capacity of the farm lot should be expanded.

Finally, the new land could be used for additional athletic and recreational facilities.

The key to the future success of this purchase lies in the process used to develop the land. The Trustees have an opportunity to illustrate their interest in student opinion and the students have an opportunity to show that we have mature and constructive suggestions for major decisions undertaken at our college.

Letters to the editor

Protest against alcohol plan a disgrace

To the Editor:

Last Friday there was a protest to protect your rights. My opinion might not affect you, but there are some things you should know. In Berlin, people protested because they couldn't see their family that lived on the other side of the wall. In the 1800s and 1900s, women protested because they were not allowed a voice in this country. In the '50s and '60s, African Americans protested years of social, economic and literal murder because they were tired of being denied their civil rights.

And in 2003, University students protested for the right to have hard liquor. I don't know if you protested, but if you did I hope you realized how you insulted movements like these. These heroes fought for liberties we are privileged to have. Maybe you feel like you helped your brothers and sisters by standing up for their rights—well, how about standing up for your brothers and sisters so they don't get hurt?

You are so much more than that person who gets arrested for D.U.I. There is so much more to you than the person who vomits on Saturday night. But maybe you like the person who develops muscle while drinking on Friday night. If you protested Friday or any other day, I hope you know that you represent every infraction associated with drinking: the woman who lost her family at Christmas due to a drunk driver, the woman who was impregnated by a drunk man and the child who is beaten daily by his drunk father.

A friend of mine once told me that the problem with Americans is that our dreams aren't too big, but maybe they're too small. Maybe that is the problem with Bucknellians—maybe we can't delay our gratification. Maybe we know that drinking less might be good for us. Maybe we know that by not drinking we could make the University better. We don't know how the University's becoming a better place could feel better than the brief buzz we get from drinking right now. We don't know how much better a person will feel knowing someone is living healthily versus looking at someone dying. Could it be that you know these things, but you don't have the strength to change because drinking feels good?

This can't be the life God meant for us. You might think it's harmless fun, but "if you don't stand for something, you will fall for anything."

Sincerely,

Tim Johnson '04

Greek system recently becoming less diversified

To the Editor:

I think that the recent developments surrounding Tri-Delta and Delta Upsilon should be looked at closely by the University.

Understanding the University's responsibility to both students and faculty, it seems to me that the rate at which the Greek System is decreasing is cause for concern to the entire community.

Within the past year, Tri-Delta and Kappa Sigma have both lost their charters, as well as Delta Upsilon going on a long suspension. In addition, Sigma Alpha Mu nized and as a result, cheapening the experience that new students are able to have at Bucknell.

Fraternities and sororities often provide a range of social outlets for those who otherwise might be overlooked. But what happens when all the fraternities and sororities are the same? It prevents the dynamic of a diverse Greek system where many students can feel comfortable and belong.

On Wednesday, we lost two great parts of the Greek system.

I would just caution the University as a whole to scrutinize where needed, but also realize the function that each fraternity and sorority plays here at Bucknell. All of them are different and contribute different things, and on Wednesdays, we lost two great parts of the Greek system.

Sincerely,

Kevin Lang '04

What happens when all the fraternities and sororities are the same?

and Chi Phi have lost their houses, but continue to hang on slightly. I think with each additional decrease in the number of fraternities and sororities, the Greek landscape is becoming too homoge-

From the Editor's Desk

In my classes, I've learned that life can be measured by income or assets, by power or representation or by morality or logic. You can reduce a person to his or her grade point average, bank account balance, political party, age or title. And while none of us believe any combination of these would paint an accurate portrait of the person, we rarely think about life beyond the tangible and immediate. Over the past semester, I've been blessed to have a full-time, consistent reminder of what life really is about.

Life is all about people: people who share our triumphs, our disappointments and our stories; people who help us become successful and people we help achieve their goals; people we spend our free time with and people we with whom don't spend enough time.

When I was applying to colleges, I choose to write about the meaning of life in my personal statement. I wrote that life was about the relationships we make with the people around us. I still believe this, but I now have a deeper understanding of life, and I owe that mainly to my time with our staff.

Life is not just about our relationships with the people around us. Life is about actively surrounding yourself with a group of good people, with different life experiences, perspectives and goals. In life, there are times when we have more or less control over who the people are around us.

One great responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief (EIC) is to choose the section editors for the editorial board. Even though this is always done in consultation with the previous leadership and the current editors, the

Adam Wilcox • The Bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief Peter Hackman '04 working in his office. Hackman has served in the position this semester after two and a half years as an Opinions editor.

EIC must decide who should be entrusted with the responsibility that accompanies a position on the editorial board.

Throughout our decisions this semester, I have relied on an important principle: good people make good editors, great people make great editors and bad people can never be good editors. We can teach someone how to use our publishing software and how to research the Associated Press style guides; we can't teach them to be respectful and helpful to their fellow editors and good to their writers. I'm proud to say that the editorial board this semester is completely populated by great people who feel a sense of ownership and responsibility to the paper.

Life is not just about the relationships with the people around us. Life is about what we accomplish with the people around us and how we help one another grow and develop as people. We spend an enormous amount of time together for the purpose of publishing the paper, but we also develop close friendships and personal bonds.

Last semester, our paper was successful by many measurements. While we were honored with two national awards for our work, the larger rewards for us were the pride and accomplishment we felt. The recognition by the national associations and professional journalists pales in comparison to recognition from the campus, our friends and family and, most importantly, each other.

This semester we have continued to improve our content, layout and business operations. We have published new and previously unavailable information on the series of pellet gun shootings, we broke the announcement of Ralph Nader as our Commencement speaker and we broke the news of the winners of BSG's freshman class and executive officer elections. We have raised the bar in collegiate journalism with our fresh and crisp layout, especially in our coverage of the new alcohol policy. We are on pace to shatter our revenue goals through dramatic increases in advertising and continued increases in subscription.

Most of our accomplishments are tangible, but what I'm personally most proud of is the way we've gone about our roles. I have to single out a few people for all they've done for me and for the paper: Jason Rubenstein for all the knowledge and help he has given me in this role; Adam Wilcox, for his management of our photographers and stewardship in our transition to an all-digital camera; inventory; Brent Butler for his innovative layout ideas and extreme dedication; Liz Salemme for raising the expectation of our news section and tirelessly tracking down stories and information that weren't publicly available; and Michelle Dombek for not only leading the paper with me, but for doing anything and everything necessary to help the paper succeed. These people, and the rest of the editorial board, are the reason The Bucknellian is a premier college newspaper.

Keg seen in Athletics and Recreation Center

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

We're having kegs in the lobby of the Langone Athletics and Recreation Center if anyone wants to join. No, I lied. There's only one keg.

In case anyone still thinks I'm joking, I assure you that there was a tapped keg sitting in plain view in the lobby of the Athletics and Recreation Center in the afternoon on Nov. 24. I, as well as several other eyewitnesses, can assure you that it was placed there and picked up a few hours later by a University administrator.

While I cannot claim to be an expert on the University's IRS-tax-code-like assortment of stringent alcohol policies, I think it's safe to say that at least one of them aims to discourage this sort of thing, particularly in the midst of a campus-wide "alcohol crisis."

It is important to note that, in the past, University officials have not been subject to the rules and regulations delineated in the University's Student Handbook specifically for the purpose of regulating student conduct. In light of recent developments, however, University administrators have agreed to abide by "emergency" alcohol regulations. This was indicated in a campus-wide e-mail from Dean of Students Richard Ferraro in which he discussed the reactions and comments from the "emergency alcohol policy" forum.

When one student questioned whether or not University employees on campus would abide by the regulations, the collective administrative decision to make such policies applicable to all members of the University community was affirmed by Ferraro in his e-mail to the campus.

Still, there remains some ambiguity with respect to the implications of Ferraro's statement. Are administrators and University employees merely subject to the new "emergency" regulations, or are they truly standing with the students in solidarity in order to stabilize our collective alcohol "emergency?"

If the former is true, then University administrators' support is trivial at best, considering the fact that hard alcohol and other recently outlawed means of intoxication are not the only contributors to "dangerous levels" of drunkenness and alcohol-related crimes. If the latter is true, then having a keg in the middle of a public, University-owned facility is a major violation.

Specifically, Section III-B, number eight of the University's Student Handbook states that "presence of alcohol in the room of an underage person" is prohibited. While this specific rule would usually apply to a residential room, the same principles apply to this situation. The keg was literally surrounded by underage students walking through the lobby and working out just a few yards away.

In addition to this technical violation, the presence of an "Administrative Keg" in the middle of our athletic facility amid ongoing campus outrage over alcohol consumption is not sending students a very positive message. To the contrary, the University official(s) who were responsible for that keg were essentially telling students who walked past and saw it that University shot-callers could get lit on University-owned property while the rest of us have to tone it down a notch or two.

If the administration knows anything about University students, who typically party as hard as they work, then walking around with a keg on University property is like dangling a carrot in front of a bridled horse. It's only motivating us toward something that we're not supposed to have at the moment.

If off-age University employees want to buy kegs with their own money, transport them on their own time or even drink them on University property in the presence of other off-age people under normal circumstances, they have my full support in doing so. The vast majority of University faculty, administrators and other employees I know are good people; they're the sort of people I would love to have a drink with sometime.

However, we are in a specific situation in which the University is attempting to moderate our alcohol consumption. Because of this, the actions of our University leaders ought to be consistent with their agenda.

While the hard facts of this scenario should be enough to warrant questioning of the actions of at least some University employees, if not the collective University's stance on alcohol in trying times, I am inclined to speculate over where that keg ended up the other day.

If I searched the facility today, would I find it somewhere? If I showed up one night after a basketball game, would I stumble upon a Bison Club social or some sort of administrative soiree? If I were a police officer, or perhaps an oversight committee, I think the keg in plain view would justify some sort of investigation in our current state of alcohol-related distress. Then again, maybe it was only root beer.

Meaning of Christmas has changed drastically

Tainted with unnecessary consumerism, the holiday season has lost its charm

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

Whatever happened to Christmas? You know, those good times as a kid, putting out milk and cookies for Santa Claus, singing Christmas carols and hoping for anything but coal in your stocking?

The best part of it was unwrapping that state-of-the-art Nintendo Entertainment System and playing Super Mario 1 nonstop from 1986 to 1990. Yes, Christmas is no doubt the greatest holiday of the year, showering everyone with everything from socks to video games to jewelry. Christmas kicks butt.

The only problem is the fine tradition of gift giving, and by "tradition" I mean obligation. The obligation to buy everyone everything has gotten somehow popular.

As the Christmas shopping frenzy continues, it just goes on and on. There's always the perennial day after Christmas sale, the extended sale and then by that time it's Christmas has become so stretched out it's hard to tell when it actually starts and ends.

Christmas in July all over again.

The worst part is the economic analysts telling you whether or not it's a good Christmas based on how many dollars the Christmas-time frenzy turned in this quarter.

That's pathetic. How can analysts possibly determine whether or not a Christmas was good or bad based purely on sales and profit margins? Christmas should no longer be associated with consumerism, useless presents and a barrage of soccer moms standing in line at 6 a.m. to get the latest Tickle Me Elmo.

Without a doubt, some presents are fine, especially if they are needed or are given to the poor or needy. Christmas itself is fine—there's always some fine food and good times spent with family and friends.

But the pure ethics of consumption and waste, of giving gifts just for its own sake is a ridiculous waste of time and resources. The tons of wrapping paper, piles of Jello molds, thousands of uneaten Aunt B's fruitcakes and stacks of unwanted underwear alone must occupy 90 percent of all landfills nationwide.

Christmas should no longer be associated with consumerism.

Buying for the sake of buying and waste for the sake of waste is not what Christmas should be about. So instead of frantically shopping for that perfect gift nobody really needs, kick back, relax and spend the holidays taking some time off and actually enjoying the holidays. And please, return anything with the words "phyto-estrogen" on it.

Reading period is too short

By ALYSON WALKER
Managing Editor

Before finals every year, I feel like the University is trying to increase the stress and tension on campus. The cruel irony of the words "reading period" hits me like a slap in the face. Why call it a "period" when it's only one day? A more appropriate name would be "reading second."

One day to prepare for final exams is an insult to the caliber of education being provided at the University. To say that a student can effectively prepare for possibly four finals in one day is ludicrous.

While some might feel that if students are truly dedicated and organized they will begin preparing weeks ahead of time, other factors must be considered.

In the few weeks preceding final exams, classes and activities are in full swing. There are papers to write, problem sets to solve, programs to design and reading to be done—students would have to balance all of these typical academic endeavors while studying for final exams. Possible effects of this juggling act include poor and rushed work or even further getting behind in reading, which would have to be made up before the final—during reading period.

So, a student gets behind because in order to study for exams, he must forego other work—that will have to be made up during the reading period.

But wait—wasn't the student originally trying to work ahead by studying for finals earlier? And wasn't the reasoning behind this that since there's only one day between classes and finals, the student should work ahead because all of the proper studying can't possibly be done in that one day? It appears that the solution to this problem only perpetuates, rather than solves, the problem.

Another problem with the reading period is that it does not take into consideration that professors teach until the last day of classes—rightly so, because the semester does not end until the appointed day arrives, and students are paying for a full semester of classes. Thus, there is still new information to understand or include in prepping for finals.

To tell the faculty not to teach new material after a certain date would be cheating students of a full semester of learning. The semester would end early, and the students would have an extra few days of review and time to prepare for exams—in essence, a reading period. The only exception would be that the classes would continue but would just hold review sessions instead of teaching new information. But the faculty is supposed to keep teaching until the end of the semester, not until a few days before the semester is actually ending.

Why not simply add even one more day into the semester to give a two day reading period? It would give students a chance to complete papers, comprehend information and commence studying.

Instead, students rush to finish papers so that they can get an extra few hours of studying in before that first exam, which is then followed by even more studying for the next exam or more writing for another final paper.

If the University respects the education it is providing, it would give students the opportunity to study for final exams and to write final papers. These tests and papers are not just to determine a final grade; they are evaluations of a semester of work, which cannot be crammed into one day of studying.

Almost every semester, during the few weeks preceding exams, the complaints begin. If the University cares about the students' education, it would provide more than one day for reading period.

What does it say about our University when our peer institutions, such as Lafayette and Lehigh, both end classes today and begin finals on Tuesday, resulting in a reading period of three days? Colgate gets a weekend to prepare for exams, with a reading day in the middle of the exam period.

Are we not as focused on education as these other institutions? I know that cannot be the case. Give us time to show what we've learned, not what we've crammed.

The melodies of music shape our souls

By MARLEE SAYEN
Contributing Writer

You can learn a great deal about people by looking at their music collections. Music helps people relax and enjoy themselves.

Many students at the University appear to have Music is a way to capture a memory or remember a feeling you may have once held.

similar music tastes, shown through the campus-wide knowledge of the lyrics to the latest album of any mainstream band. Yet when taking a deeper look, you begin to realize a wide range of musical tastes is represented at the University.

College is a time when young adults are figuring out who they are, who they want to be, how they feel and what is important to them.

Students learn how to be independent and intellectual, balance academics with social activities, and how to be a friend, among other things. Many of us use music as a personal soundtrack to our own lives.

A wide range of musical liking is represented here at the University.

Whether you connect with the artist through the lyrics of a song or are moved by the melody (or, in rare cases, both), somehow the music affects you and fills your soul with emotions you were unaware you felt or were unable to express.

Music is a way to capture a memory or remember an old feeling. Whether it is the voice of Rockwell Church to remember an old friend, an old Beach Boys tune to recall the smell of summer or Martin Sexton to remind you of the first time you fell in love; Bob Dylan's hypnotic lyrics and voice to bring you back to summers in Maine, Weezer's energy to remind you of your first concert, or Bruce Springsteen's sweet refrain that echo growing up in Jersey, it's this music that keeps these memories alive. Pictures may fade, videos may unravel, but as long as you have the rhythm and the melody pulsing through your veins, you are able to forever bring to mind the events that are molded together through the soundtrack to your "heart and soul."

Bob Dylan's hypnotic lyrics and voice to bring you back to summers in Maine

FEATURES

Get into the spirit of central Pa.

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

For many students, the end of the semester signals long days and nights of finals, papers and endless piles of work. Thanksgiving begins this end-of-semester cram session, not the holiday season that occurs everywhere else.

But you need not wait to go home to get into the spirit of the season. Central Pennsylvania Shops open their doors from 6 p.m. until midnight. Students can enjoy special discounts while they take advantage of these hours to check some items off their Christmas shopping lists.

"There are Christmas sales and promotions," Sterling said.

The University's tuba quartet and Christmas carolers will also set a festive atmosphere by performing holiday music for visitors. Both groups will travel up and down Market Street, which takes place the night before in Hufnagle Park. The tree is accented by the lights that line Market Street and adds to the holiday feel.

"The luminaries are out," parade organizer Grace Mann said. "It's all very pretty and festive."

Victorian Holiday Parade

The following day Market Street hosts a festivity of a different kind. Horse-drawn carriages and Victorian figures fill downtown Lewisburg for the celebration of the 23rd annual Victorian Holiday Parade.

"This annual event features all horse-drawn vehicles and images of a bygone era, all culminating with the arrival of Kris Kringle," according to a press release for the town.

The parade travels through Lewisburg's already Victorian-appearing Market Street, beginning at the corner of North Water Street and ending at the 7th Street intersection. The scene takes viewers back in time through its historical elements.

"We're focused on the Victorian heritage of the community... We try to draw on that heritage and we have a wonderful little town to work with," Mann said. "We try to get as close to the costumes of the era as we can."

To achieve this historical feel, participants not only dress but also travel true to the period. Many of the parade's main attractions arrive by horse, and the others walk down Market Street.

"There are definitely horse-drawn exhibits, but most are on foot," Sterling said.

These figures and exhibits are historical, fictional and symbolic, but all reflect the event's Victorian nature.

"Santa comes in a horse-drawn carriage, Abe Lincoln comes in a horse-drawn carriage, Eli Slifer comes in a carriage," Sterling said. "There are characters from storybooks and historical figures... this year they're even working to have 'The 12 Days of Christmas' played out."

Mann also lists a town crier and Charles Dickens' characters as participants in the event.

According to Mann, this parade is exclusive to Lewisburg. "They wanted it to be unique

An old-fashioned horse and buggy offers passengers a scenic view of downtown Lewisburg. Courtesy of Linda Sterling when we started it 23 years ago," Mann said, "and the people before us really preserved the town very well for this."

The parade usually receives a large turn out of both participants and viewers.

"Most of the street is full along the way," Mann said.

The parade is also a great way to experience the holidays in central Pennsylvania.

"It's a wonderful time just to be in town," Mann said.

Christkindl Market

The weekend following Lewisburg's events, students can enjoy Mifflinburg's Christkindl Market, one of the largest holiday events central Pennsylvania has to offer. This market is a 10-minute drive on Route 45, which becomes Market Street in Mifflinburg.

For three days, Dec. 11-13, Mifflinburg's main street is lined with wooden huts filled with traditional crafts and treats.

The Christkindl Market is heralded as the only authentic outdoor German market in the country and is a celebration of the town's German heritage. According to a pamphlet released for the market, it is "inspired by the 700-year-old traditional German Christkindl Market, or Christ Child Market."

"They have all sorts of different Christmas gifts and crafts. You can find a lot of interesting things you won't find at regular stores—a lot of handmade or hand-painted things—little treasures," Jessica Orsulak '05 said.

Highlights of the market include traditional German figures such as "The Tinsel Angel," the "Christkindl" and St. Nicholas.

The Kurrende Singers also perform Christmas music for the event.

Mifflinburg's Christkindl Market is yet another way to step

Holiday Children's Movie

The final holiday event available to students is the free holiday movie at Lewisburg's Campus Theatre on Dec. 13. The admission fee for this event is not for profit, but for charity. Students and others can gain free admission by bringing a canned good to the theater.

This tradition has been longstanding in the community.

"The town has a 52-year tradition of free movies during the hol-

Adults and children alike enjoy a seasonal visit by "Kris Kringle" as he parades down Market Street. Courtesy of lewisburgpa.com back into the history and heritage of central Pennsylvania and enjoy the holiday season here.

"They have all sorts of different Christmas atmosphere... it gets you in the spirit," Orsulak said.

"It is something that the community is very proud of."

This year's feature will be the recent theatrical release "Freaky Friday." Doors open at 11 a.m.

In keeping with the holiday spirit, Lewisburg decorates its street lamp posts with festive wreaths, bows and bells. Courtesy of Linda Sterling hosts a variety of holiday events that can take students from the familiar stress of finals to the festivities of the holiday season. Many of these celebrations are not only close to campus, but are also free to students and any others in need of some holiday excitement.

Lewisburg Late Shoppers' Night

The Lewisburg Late Shoppers' Night is one of several events that comprise Lewisburg's Victorian Holiday Weekend. This event annually involves much of downtown.

"All retail locations in downtown Lewisburg can be involved. It's been a long-standing tradition," Lewisburg Downtown Manager Linda Sterling said.

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
~State of the Art Body Jewelry~

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
570-743-7830

USA SPRING BREAK.com
Cancun, Bahamas, Acapulco, Jamaica & More!
Don't be fooled! Go with Quality and Experience!
28 years in business!
Largest Student Tour Operator
(Division of USA Student Travel)
Call Toll Free: 1-877-460-6077
Now also hiring Campus Reps
Earn 2 Free Trips for Travelers & $$

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

STORAGE BOX
LOCATED ON ROUTE 45 WEST OF MIFFLINBURG PA 570-716-1203

5' x 10' $29.00 mo. 10' x 20' $59.00 mo.
10' x 10' $39.00 mo. 10' x 40' $115.00 mo.

OTHER SIZES AVAILABLE... CALL ON US TODAY FOR ALL YOUR STORAGE NEEDS

CALL NOW FOR AMAZING HOLIDAY RATES!
PACK AWAY YOUR BELONGINGS NOW FOR AN EARLY BIRD SPECIAL & ENJOY A STRESS FREE HOLIDAY!

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY, THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

How people will ever get out of an office like this. But then, few people have what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidates School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or ocswb@aol.com

www.MarineOfficer.com

-Attend a PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA
-NO OBLIGATION
-Unparalleled LEADERSHIP TRAINING
-TUITION ASSISTANCE is available

FEATURES

AIDS quilt brings out family and friends

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Walking into the Samek Art Gallery on Monday morning, the emotion in the air was almost palpable. Replacing the usual array of paintings, panels from the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt adorned the walls.

The panels of the quilt were brought to the University in honor of World AIDS Day and in an effort to increase awareness across campus.

here at Bucknell where it's most at home," Smoot said.

Child found out he was infected with the HIV virus during his sophomore year at the University. He told very few people, fearing public scorn and ostracism. Even during his weakest times, when he spent weeks in and out of hospitals, Child was eager to continue his education, even taking many exams while feverish and unhealthy.

Following Child's passing, three days after he was supposed to graduate as an engineer, a tree was planted in his memory in front of Dana Engineering. Smoot grew teary-eyed as she recounted a recent visit to the tree.

"I can't believe how tall that tree has grown in the 14 years since Kevin died," Smoot said.

Child's panel, which hangs proudly on the wall of the gallery, is a tribute to his life and his love for the University. Since he was member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, the three Greek letters are stitched into the lower right corner of the panel. The name of the University adorns the opposite corner.

Another member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, Patrick Alfano '04, offered opening remarks at Monday's ceremony.

"AIDS is seen as a shameful mistake of our actions rather than a deadly disease. The quilt is here to remind us that even in this great place, we are not immune," Alfano said.

Although Alfano and Child never met, Alfano said that "Kevin is and always will be my brother."

Other speakers included University President Steffen Rogers, Provost/Vice President of Academic Affairs Stephen H. Bowen and Haley Rosengarten '07.

Rosengarten's speech was wrought with emotion as she spoke of her father's

Mary Smoot '81 and her children read one of the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt panels on display in the Samek Art Gallery. Smoot spoke about her brother, Kevin Child '89, at the opening on Monday. Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

18-year battle with HIV and AIDS that ended in the fall of 2002. Throughout the gallery, those present could be seen wiping their eyes as they listened to her message. In the final words of her speech, she recounted her father's last, painful deaths, leaving not a dry eye in the room. "I'll never forget those 10 minutes when we both fell asleep. I woke up again, and he never will," Rosengarten said.

Each quilt panel on display represents the life of a mother, father, sister, friend, lover or child, and each carries with it a message of loss and remembrance.

AIDS knows no boundaries, evident with each of the panels. The youngest represented was "22-months young." His name was Shade, and his panel read: "My littlest buddy. I will forever hold you in my heart. I love you."

Rick Cooper's panel, stitched after his 1993 death, held a message for all people, whether or not they are battling the virus.

"Hope is a thing with feathers, that perches in the soul and sings the tune without words. And never stops. At all." Panel after panel, such messages are seen, and with every one, the reality of the AIDS pandemic becomes more alive. What used to be referred to as a disease of the "four H's"—heroin addicts, homosexuals, Haitians and hemophiliacs—has infiltrated many lives and shows no signs of going away.

While the quilt spreads its message of remembrance, it is also a reminder that there is much more that needs to be done.

"The quilt is a memorial to those who've perished but also a call to action for those of us still here," Rogers said.

The quilt will remain on campus until Dec. 9, with closing ceremonies at 4 p.m.

(Left) Students and faculty are encouraged to visit the quilt on display through Dec. 9. (Right) President Rogers spoke at the opening on Monday afternoon. Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Tedd's Landing goes overboard with pricey food

Hearty portions and efficient service salvage an expensively mediocre dining experience

By ALYSSA WALKER
Managing Editor

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Where can a seafood aficionado dine happily with a meat lover? Only at a place where surf and turf coexist peacefully—Tedd's Landing.

Nestled right off Route 15, it is easily overlooked when driving to the Susquehanna Valley Mall, but Tedd's Landing is a place to remember for dinner with the family since the prices are a little hard-hitting for the college budget. Entrées range in price from moderate to more expensive, and a dinner for two costs approximately $50, including tax and tip.

What was had for that $50? There were many options for seafood, along with a healthy balance of chicken and steak dinners. For those who didn't want a dinner entrée, there were also several sandwich options.

The salad was made of a variety of lettuces and could be garnished with freshly ground pepper if desired. A basket filled with different breads and crackers was a nice addition to the dinner.

One entrée sampled during this visit was the flounder stuffed with crab, with a side of baked linguine. The flounder was perfectly cooked, and the crab filling was good, but overall, it was too heavy on the butter. The linguine was baked in a garlic wine sauce with parmesan cheese on top. Although it wasn't the best seafood, it was good for the middle of central Pennsylvania.

The other entrée was steak with a double-stuffed baked potato. The steak was cooked to a perfect medium, but it had quite a few fatty pieces. A1 Steak Sauce was used to add additional flavor. The double-stuffed potato had cheese and bacon pieces on top and was an adequate side.

The meal was completed with coffee since there was no room for dessert after the ample portions.

What made this meal interesting was the atmosphere of Tedd's Landing. A wall of stone, chalkboards with specials, lights shaped like barrels and a candle on the table made for a unique dining experience.

"I think the atmosphere is a little tacky, but the food is surprisingly okay," Eric Steinbach '05 said. "I had the grilled pork tenderloin, and it was very good."

Appropriate attire ranged from jeans to casual dresses. The atmosphere was quieter than the average family restaurant, but louder than a finer dining establishment, like Elizabeth's. Light jazz music provided a tasteful and subtle background for conversation.

The service was excellent—not too fast that the meal was rushed and not too slow that there were long waits between ordering and being served. The waitress used a Palm Pilot-like device to take the order instead of paper and pen.

All of the dinner plates were removed before the coffee was served, which was a nice touch, and allowed pleasant talk over just the coffee, and not any of the dirty dishes or miscellaneous extras, like the A1 bottle or bread basket.

Tedd's Landing has great service and an interesting atmosphere, but it is slightly overpriced for the quality of food.

As long as the prices aren't a problem, dinner at Tedd's

Landing can be a fun experience. A return visit is possible, but not likely considering the better quality, less expensive alternatives available.

Tedd's Landing is located on Route 15 toward Selinsgrove. Despite steep cuisine prices, it has a variety of entrées with a pleasant and unique atmosphere. Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

FEATURES

Don't let finals get you down

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

As inevitable as the ticking of a clock, the days will pass until finals are upon us. Though they are dreaded and scorned by college students worldwide, and as eagerly anticipated as a root canal or a colonoscopy, the administration still feels they are a necessary part of academic life; thus, the pain continues. Though fear not, my diligent students; there are ways to avoid the insanity that will undoubtedly result from hours spent locked in the library.

Some students, myself included, find it soothing to have a sound-track accompanying their studies. Though the preferred genres vary, I find that Jemaine Dupree's "Life in 1492" is complementary to chemistry, while biology is better served by The Beatles' "Abbey Road."

Whatever your choice, make sure it keeps your mind awake and your feet tapping but doesn't cause you to sing aloud, lest it disturb the environment of those around you or remove your mental faculties from their intended purpose.

Another sure way to assuage the pains of studying is food. A snack enjoyed while in the throes of studying will alleviate the sugar-low you'll surely be experiencing. May I recommend chocolate as the snack of choice? Think of the endless benefits. As a caffeinated candy, it will give you that extra jolt when the final hours are upon you. More importantly, it's a melt-in-your-mouth tasty treat with an endless number of varieties to satisfy anyone in need of some papillary stimulation.

Despite the dance party you've got going on in the library, if you still find yourself approaching the threshold of insanity, there are a few more options to explore.

A change of scenery can be integral to maintaining mental stability. Get your butt out of that chair, remove yourself from that stuffy cubicle and walk around. Visit friends cramming on Lower Level 2 and help get their minds off Calculus III for a while, venture to the Langone Center for some of the aforementioned chocolate treats or even do a few jumping jacks in the aisle.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Any of these movements will get the blood flowing back to your brain that simply will not work properly without that life-giving liquid. Though you may get a few strange glances from some nearby cubicle inhabitants if you start jazzercising in their vicinity, it will get the job done.

With the blood properly flowing, the sweet tooth satisfied and a beat-box pumping in your ears, studying should come naturally. Yet, there is one key ingredient that many students disregard in the recipe for proper knowledge retention: that crucial element is sleep.

All-night cram sessions and keeping your eyes glued to the paper until moments before an exam are not considered methods for success. Professors aren't kidding when they claim the benefits of studying days in advance and treating yourself to adequate amounts of REM sleep. A well-rested mind will give you the tools to remember names, dates, countries or formulas. Without sleep, they'll all just slip away like dust in the wind.

But while everyone loves to eat and listen to music, proper sleeping habits are not as easy to maintain. How many of us can honestly say we prepare as early in advance as we should for the examinations that loom on the horizon? While it's not exactly a fool-proof method of surviving finals (as it requires some self-discipline), it is a better method than the alternative—ignoring the existence of finals and not studying at all. It's not worth throwing away $268 per day on sheer laziness.

And there it is: the easiest way to survive final exam hell while emerging successfully and still having your wits about you. Theoretically, it all seems easy. A snack, a little ditty about Jack and Diane, a little Tae-bo and a nap and everything will be right with the world. So, good luck and get studying!

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

While in the midst of studying, the brain functions much more efficiently with a little extra blood flow. Stretching, running and jumping will produce the desired effect.

Ms.

A "Spill your Guts, Bucknell" Special Edition

Sex and the Bubble

This week, for the last column of the semester, Ms. O has a little something special for all of her loyal and devoted fans. After receiving tons of responses to my "Spill Your Guts Bucknell" questions that appear every week at the end of each of my columns, I have decided to do a special edition of the best (and funniest) responses I have received. So get ready for some "sex"-tra special holiday fun, Bucknell style!

Ms. O Asked: "What is the sexiest color for undergarments to be?"

You Answered:
74% said black underwear
21% said red underwear
5% said white underwear

One said, "No underwear is the sexiest!"

Ms. O Asked: "Tell me about your date from Hell."

You Answered:
"One guy took me to a Demolition Derby for our first date. It was horrible. I spent the night surrounded by sweaty guys with no teeth!" — M

Ms. O Asked: "Where is the craziest place that you have hooked up?"

You Answered:
"Last year I was chillin' with a crush during House Party Weekend. I proposed we take a walk to the tanning salon because 'he' needed some color. We only caught a few rays in the tanning bed before we were on the ground rolling around. It was quite entertaining. Although I think the manager recognized me upon later tanning sessions (which was quite embarrassing)." — S

"Disney World." — K

"In an elevator at a hospital." — J

"In a theater during a Broadway show." — T

"The Park and Ride." — J

Ms. O Asked: "What is the best line you have ever used to get out of going out with someone?"

You Answered:
"I was at the grocery store and one of the cart boys was hitting on me and asked me out. He was pretty creepy and dorky, so I told him that I was just getting out of a relationship. In reality, I was completely single, and my previous relationship had ended over a year ago! I just couldn't bear to go out with the cart boy." — K

"This girl wanted me to come visit her and I really didn't want to, so I told her that I couldn't because I lost my license in Pennsylvania and I couldn't drive. Worked like a charm!" — M

"This girl in high school asked if I would go out with her, and I said, 'I'll go with you to the cafeteria.'" — R

"I usually just don't answer the phone. Then I don't have to say anything and they get the point." — T

Ms. O Asked: "What is the best music to hook up to?"

You Answered:
"Anything loud." — J

"Something with a good beat." — T

"The Thong Song." — P

"Anything by Dave Matthews." — R

"Anything by Dave Matthews." — N

"Anything by Dave." — C

Ms. O Asked: "What is the biggest mishap that has happened while you were hooking up with someone?"

You Answered:
"He accidentally peed on me!" — H

"My boyfriend was visiting, and we decided to try out some handcuffs. They were a lot of fun until my roommate knocked on the door, and we realized that we had lost the key. She had to wait outside until we were finally able to find the key and unlock ourselves from various pieces of furniture." — T

"Her dad walked in." — X

"We were parked in a dead end of a dirt road, and a cop showed up. He had to wait for us to put our clothes on." — R

Ms. O Asked: "What is the worst line to use when you are breaking up with someone?"

You Answered:
"I think we should just be friends." — K

"It's not you, it's me." I hate that one. You know it has to be you because why else would the person be breaking up with you?" — J

"I just don't have the time to put into this relationship right now." That's the one I always use, but watch out—it really pisses people off." — T

"You are such a great person, but this just isn't working." — L

Ms. O Asked: "What is the worst pet name that you have ever heard?"

You Answered:
"Sweet Pea." — K

"A guy I went out with called me 'His Little Potato Chip' because he said that I was bad for him, but he liked me anyway." — M

"This girl I went out with always called me 'Pookie.' For two years I put up with that crap and then finally I couldn't take it anymore, and we broke up. I hate being talked to like a baby!" — C

Ms. O Asked: "What do you think is the sexiest body part?"

You Answered:
"It's all about the abs!" — K

"A guy's hip lines. Oh Baby!" — T

"I like to look at a girl's eyes." — J

"This is gonna sound weird but I love it when a guy has really strong looking hands." — K

"LEGS!" — R

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

December 5, 2003

inside Volume 132, Number 12

Sports Feature:

Rugby provides a one-of-a-kind athletic and social experience for Bucknell players.

See page B3

Football stomps Georgetown 45-16

With the win over the Hoyas, the Bison finished 6-6 overall and 4-3 in the Patriot League

By JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

The Bucknell football team completed its 2003 season with a 45-16 rout over Georgetown on Nov. 22 at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

With first-year Head Coach Tim Landis at the helm, the Bison finished 6-6 overall and 4-3 in the Patriot League. Earning third place in the league behind Colgate (7-0) and Lehigh (6-1), Bucknell showed significant improvement from last year's 2-9, 0-7 struggles.

The Orange and Blue concluded the season with a 4-1 record at home and an eighth non-winning season in the last nine years.

Bucknell grabbed an early lead on Georgetown by scoring on its first three possessions of the game. Using only three minutes and 39 seconds, Daris Wilson '05 scored from three yards out to open the game. Running back Ed Cortez '07 led the opening drive with 46 rushing yards on three carries.

Georgetown answered the Bison attack with a field goal by Michael Gillman from 24 yards out, but Landis used some trickery to trigger Bucknell's ensuing drive. Wilson threw a lateral pass to running back Michael Cangelosi '06, who hit wide receiver Albert Marquardt '04 for a 38-yard touchdown pass.

Slotback Tim Johnson '04 scored from 13 yards with 13:57 left in the second quarter to make the score 21-3. Place kicker Ryan Korn '07 added a 41-yard field goal with 30 seconds remaining in the half to give Bucknell a 24-3 lead. With his 14 field goals in the season, Korn set a new Bucknell record.

Wilson completed 9 of 17 passes for 159 yards along with 53 rushing yards on 13 carries but was hindered by a nagging ankle injury that has plagued him throughout the season.

Backup quarterback John Henry Jackson '05 replaced the hobbled Wilson in the second half, tossing a nine-yard touchdown pass to Marquardt to make the score 31-3 only four minutes in. Marquardt caught five passes for 84 yards and became the first Bucknell player since 1998 to record two touch-

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

A herd of Bison gang tackle Georgetown quarterback Drew Crawford in Bucknell's 45-16 romp. The Bucknell defense dominated the Hoyas, forcing three turnovers and turning in five sacks.

down catches in a game.

Georgetown charged back with a 21-yard scamper from Hoyas running back Alondzo Turner to cut the lead to 31-10 with 8:25 left in the third quarter. Georgetown was driving again on its next series when Bison defensive tackle Shawn Tidwell '04 tackled Kim Sarin for a loss on fourth-and-one.

The Bison never looked back as running back Antwan Kennedy '06 scored on a 22-yard touchdown run to regain Bucknell's four-touchdown lead.

Georgetown quarterback Drew Crawford then made the score 38-16, finding Walter Bowser in the end zone from ten yards with 9:21 remaining.

Johnson responded with a 13-yard touchdown run with 4:40 left to finish off the game's scoring.

Crawford was the bright spot for the Hoyas, completing 18 of 36 passes for 218 yards and one touchdown. Luke McArdle led all players with nine receptions for 99 yards and Georgetown's ground game was led by running back John Sims, who racked up 81 yards on 17 carries.

Other impressive offensive performances included 122 yards from Bucknell running back Blamah Sarnor '06 and two touchdowns from Johnson, who, along with Marquardt, played his final career game.

The offense racked up over 532 total yards on the day, including 326 yards on the ground. The defense had one of its best performances of the season, forcing three turnovers and five sacks on the day.

Inside linebacker Dorian Petersen '07 earned his first Patriot League Freshman of the Week honor with his game-high 11 tackles against the Hoyas.

The team finished the season just shy of setting the single-season school rushing mark. Its 2,908 yards were one yard short of the 1951 team's mark, set during its perfect 9-0 season.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Bison quarterback Daris Wilson '05 evades a Georgetown rush in Bucknell's season finale at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. Wilson threw for 159 yards on 9 of 17 passing as Bucknell finished third in the Patriot League at 6-6 and 4-3.

Volleyball falls to American in final match of season

Bison finish the season with a best ever 11-3 Patriot League record and 16-13 overall

By TERI SCHLANG
Writer

The Bucknell women's volleyball team fell just short of winning its third Patriot League Conference Championship in the last six years. The Bison were defeated in the final round by top-ranked American 30-27, 30-25, 30-15. The Bison finished their regular season with a program-best 11-3 league record and a 16-13 overall record.

American has never lost a regular season or postseason conference match since it joined the Patriot League in 2001; this will be its third year in a row advancing to the NCAA Tournament.

In the first two games of the final, it looked like anyone could win; the Bison actually held the lead at one point in both games. On three different occasions in the first frame, the Bison held as much as a three-point lead. The Bison were leading 18-17 when American put away three points in a row to take the lead 20-18. The Bison fought back to tie at 25 and again at 27, but American scored three final points to win the first game.

In the second game, Bucknell led 11-8 after a kill from Brandi Trapasso '04. American then scored four points in a row and took the lead for good. Bucknell came close at 23-21 after an ace by Chelsea Robertson '05, but American scored another four points in a row to take control of the game.

"Our team fought hard in the first two games against American, and they really could have gone either way," Breean Trapasso '04 said. "We pulled together as a team and stayed within two points the entire time during the first two games, so I thought we were going to take at least one of them. American had an excellent day. They made very few errors, and their main hitter was on fire so it was tough to defend against her."

Brandi Trapasso led the Bison with 13 kills and hit .375 while Jackie Leahy '05 added 11 kills. Leahy finished the season with 413 kills, just eight kills short of breaking the current single-season record, set by Melissa Wharton in 1996. Breean Trapasso finished the season with 33 assists and four blocks.

On the defensive side, Chelsea Anderson '06 had 11 digs, and Jennie Smith '07 recorded a pair of block assists which gave her a total of 101 for the season and was just four short of breaking a school record, also set by Wharton in 1996.

"I am extremely proud of the way we fought," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said. "I don't know if we played any better all season than we did the first two games. Our kids smelled a championship and fought as hard as they could. The Patriot League Tournament is only an end product of our progress over the last three months. The determination, spirit and passion that these kids brought to the gym every day made me proud to be their coach, and they should be proud of their accomplishments."

In order to qualify for the final championship, the Bison defeated third-ranked Lehigh in a 3-0 sweep, winning 30-22, 30-17, 30-27. Sarah Groman '07 and Leahy both recorded 13 kills to lead Bucknell to its win. Groman's 13 kills marked a career high.

"Overall I have no regrets about the season or the way things turned out in the end, besides the fact that we didn't win," Brandi Trapasso said. "This was by far the most talented team I have played on here at Bucknell."

Leahy and Brandi Trapasso were named to the All-Patriot League First Team. Leahy had one of the best seasons of all-time in Bucknell history in terms of kills. Trapasso was strong both offensively and defensively; she had a total of 329 kills for the season as well as 393 digs. Trapasso set a Bucknell and Patriot League career record with 1570 digs. She earned her third All-League honor after making the second team last year.

Breean Trapasso and Anderson were both named to the Patriot League Second Team. Breean Trapasso had 1,049 assists this season and is the only player in Bucknell history to have two seasons in a row with over 1,000 assists. Anderson led Bucknell in digs this season with 397, her first All-League spot.

Opalski was also announced as the Patriot League Coach of the Year. This was Opalski's third Coach of the Year honor, having won it in 1997 and 2000.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The Bucknell volleyball team gets inspiration from Head Coach Cindy Opalski in a recent home game. The Bison were defeated by American University in three straight games, coming in second in the league.

Powerlifting Club represents Bucknell at competition

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell powerlifting club competed in its first event on Oct. 25, sending three team members to the Central Pennsylvania Open Powerlifting Championships in Clearfield, Pa. Matt Lamparter '06, Jeff Wodlinger '05 and Adam Hersperger '05 represented Bucknell against three other schools in the event, which was sponsored by Anti-Drug Athletics United (ADAU).

Each of the lifters participated in three types of lifts, the squat, bench press and deadlift. Lifters are allowed three attempts to lift as much weight as they can, while their form and completion is evaluated by three judges. The weights lifted by each competitor during the three lifts are combined for a total, and the lifters with the highest totals in each weight class are awarded victory.

Hersperger, competing in the 181-pound class, lifted a total of 1,300 pounds (440 in the squat, 315 in bench press and 545 in deadlift). Wodlinger, lifting in the 198-pound class, finished with a total of 820 pounds (275 in the squat, 225 in bench press and 320 in deadlift). And Lamparter, in the 148-pound class, lifted a total of 915 pounds (330 in the squat, 230 in bench press and 355 in deadlift).

Hersperger, the club's president, was impressed with the performance of his teammates. "For being their first ever powerlifting meet, Jeff and Matt handled themselves very well," Hersperger said. "I could not detect any visible nervousness, and they kept up their intensity the entire day." Lamparter also felt the competition was a great experience for the team.

"All three of us had a good time and met and exceeded personal goals," Lamparter said. "The atmosphere was very supportive and friendly. I look forward to competing again in the spring." All participants in the event were allowed the use of a leather belt; only supportive gear is prohibited by ADAU. This requirement ensures that the meet will consist only of "raw" powerlifting, a term for lifting unaided by any implements beyond the leather belt.

ADAU is an organization that began roughly five years ago with the intent to encourage drug-free, raw powerlifting. In addition to being limited in their gear, all lifters are also subject to drug testing for steroids to keep the competition unsullied by drug use.

The team combined to finish fourth of the four participating teams, but the placing was largely impacted by the fact that Bucknell fielded a smaller team than the other three contending squads. The club hopes to continue growing and send a larger group to the next meet, during spring semester.

Hersperger was pleased with the team's showing. "I thought that we all lifted extremely well at the meet. We represented Bucknell very proudly," Hersperger said. The powerlifting club is a relatively new organization on

See LIFTING, page B5

Sports Feature

ELEGANT VIOLENCE

The Bucknellian takes a look at the Bucknell Rugby Football Clubs, where the rugby lifestyle is contagious

FEATURE BY CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

When most people think of cordiality, they don't often think of wrap tackles, scrums and hookers.

Rugby, to the average outsider, looks more like a bloodsport. The sanguineous gore, the mud-splattered grimaces, the cacophonous thuds and crunches of human beings colliding with one another—the sport is indeed an intense one, to say the least.

But what looks like utter chaos to the uneducated onlooker is, in actuality, anything but. True, rugby is not a game for the faint of heart or the cowardly. But neither is it, by any means, a game for uncultured brutes.

It is in fact quite the opposite—rugby is governed by a standard of etiquette and urbanity. Elegant violence, they call it.

You won't, after all, find many sporting events where the referee is called "the sir" and the players from both teams, after clobbering one another for 80 minutes on the pitch, all gather for one big interclub social fiesta after the match.

While it may not fly under the radar for most members of the University community, all of these marvelous traditions—the grace, the respect and the most fortifying camaraderie one could ever imagine in a sports team—exist quite healthily just across Route 15, every fall and spring.

And yes, the mud and the blood are there, too.

The Bucknell Rugby Football Clubs have been a fixture on campus for almost three decades now. The men's club will celebrate its 30th year this spring, while the women are nearing their 20th season.

For the clubs' participants—or "ruggers," if one wants to employ the more affectionate moniker—being a Bucknell rugby player is more than just being a member in a club. It's a clinical addiction—to the thrill of the game itself and to the unrivaled social environment it provides.

"Rugby," Men's Head Coach P.J. Harte said, "is a social disease."

A disease that, here at Bucknell, hatches itself securely in the bloodstream of young players and tends to prove itself incurable from there on in.

"One of the things that I have noticed about the ruggers on this campus is that once you start playing, it can be addictive." Women's Club member Lauren Paladino '05 said. "So many people get sucked into the game."

Once sucked in, there's no escaping.

"When we get somebody hooked on rugby, they are hooked for life," Harte said.

It isn't very hard to see how it happens, if one listens to Bucknell rugby players talk about their club and their sport. Passion simply pours forth.

"It's hard to find a rugby player who isn't passionate about the sport," Harte said.

Conversely, one doesn't have to look very far to find one—or several—who oozes enthusiasm about his or her exploits on and off the pitch.

"What I can really say about the club is that it's a passion by the players," Dave Porter '06 said. "[It's] something that I have never really experienced before."

Graduate student Justin Neumann has been a member of the club for four years, but has noticed consistency in the spirit of the many teammates he's played with.

"One aspect of the team that has not changed is the feeling of camaraderie," Neumann said. "Intensity is what makes the sport exciting, knowing that everyone is giving it [his] all and never backing down."

Emily Hanchack '04 found herself caught up in ardency for the game as well.

"[Bucknell rugby] introduced me to a great sport and great people," Hanchack said. "After graduation, I may have to move out of the area, but factors of the game is the unity and cohesiveness that it promotes—and often necessitates—among its players. Rugby is a sport that requires a tremendous level of trust among teammates, in part a product of the game's potentially dangerous nature.

Nothing can be done haphazardly on a rugby team, and one player who isn't doing his or her part, or isn't doing it right, has the potential to ignite catastrophe.

"If teammates don't work together right, people get hurt," Harte said.

Harte cited the "Fifth Law of the Navy," a passage he learned during his time at the Naval Academy and passed on to his players:

On the strength of one link in the cable dependeth the chain;

Who knows when thou mayest be tested,

So live that thy bearest thy strain.

Every player possesses a great responsibility to his or her teammates. They do, after all, lean on each other—quite literally. Athletes who lean on each other literally tend to do so figuratively as well.

Porter recalls a passage he once wrote about the sport.

"Yes, we have all failed in life in the past, but when you handle the difficult moments that fall under your control, when your personal link in the chain that is rugby holds up under the pressures of onrushing foes, you earn a type of salvation," Porter said. "We play this game for each other."

"Rugby is an unselfish sport; it has to be, because no one player has every-

Although rugby is a rapidly growing sport in the United States, it still is not by any means widespread among the nation's high school-aged youth. As a result, most first-year players at Bucknell have had little-to-no previous experience in the sport when they join the club.

"Most of us had never even seen rugby played before, let alone playing it ourselves before coming to Bucknell," Erin Depew '06 said of her early team memories. "We learned the game in the first few weeks of practice and were kind of thrown into it our first game."

Porter, who came to Bucknell from South Africa, where rugby is a widespread sport, noted that many of his teammates didn't benefit from the exposure he had had.

"In America rugby is not very well known," Porter said. "In fact in our team there are only six-to-seven out of around 20 guys that have ever played, and maybe about half the team has ever heard of it."

Even for those players like Porter who knew the game prior to joining the squad, the Bucknell team has offered an entirely unique atmosphere and social arena.

Kendra Read '07 played rugby in high school and was pleased with the environment she found upon coming to Bucknell.

"Coming from Oregon, I didn't know anyone at Bucknell, and the ruggers were definitely the most friendly and accepting group of people I met in the beginning of the year," Read said. "I played in high school and was looking forward to playing for Bucknell, but the atmosphere of the team was more than whole new social atmosphere."

Club members, both upperclassmen and newcomers, form long-lasting bonds with each other early in their time as teammates, much of which stems from shared in-game experiences.

"Rugby has given me a group of friends with whom I share a special bond," Justine Grossman '06 said. "After a fellow rugger wipes the blood off your face and congratulates you on your first try, you're friends for life."

Class year isn't really a factor in the formation of friendships among players.

"The dynamics of our team are pretty unique," Porter said. "In general [at Bucknell], you don't find many upperclassmen socializing frequently with freshmen, but on our team, as well as the women's team, it doesn't even come into consideration that a person is a freshman."

Also a factor in the dynamics of both teams is their status as club sports rather than as varsity squads. While some universities and colleges are assigning varsity status to their rugby programs, both Bucknell groups remain clubs, a characteristic that offers both positives and negatives for the players and personnel.

The players maintain what Harte called a sort of "rag-tag" status—washing their own jerseys, car-pooling to matches, storing equipment in the back of someone's truck—a status which, although it brings tribulations, also brings a certain level of pride and self-sufficiency.

"To be a part of the team, you have to hold a responsibility," Harte said.

Neumann noted that despite not benefiting from the luxurious funding that varsity sports enjoy—funding that is greatly needed in order to fund tournament participation and equipment costs—the rugby players make up for it in their resourcefulness.

"We always manage to chip in and work together to come up with the money we need to play, sometimes running fund raisers or soliciting donations from alumni ruggers," Neumann said.

The club status also offers a level of flexibility and freedom unavailable to varsity athletes, as well as a weeding out of players without genuine dedication to the game.

"Since it's a club sport here, we have no rules on practice and things

See RUGBY, page B5

Sports Ops

CECILY CAIRNS CLASSIC CORNER

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Remembering Spahn

Stan Musial, a Hall of Famer and a grand player in his own right, once said that he couldn't imagine Warren Spahn would ever be inducted into Cooperstown.

"He'll never stop pitching," Musial said. If that could be said about any pitcher, Spahn was probably the man. It wasn't just his longevity—although not many have pitched longer than his 21 seasons—so much as his ability to sustain, from start to finish, a remarkable level of prowess.

He was as effective at age 42, an age at which most pitchers are doddering at best, as he was at age 25. And effective, for Spahn, was very effective—as much so as any team could dream of in a starting pitcher.

Spahn's big number, the one on which everyone seems to hang his greatness, is 363. Three-hundred and sixty-three wins, the most ever by a left-handed pitcher, the sixth-most all-time, the most gained entirely in the post-dead-ball era.

But that one number, as impressive as it is, doesn't even begin to speak for what a marvelous individual Spahn, who passed away on Nov. 24 at age 82, was.

Those wins were, of course, quite an achievement. In Spahn's era, guys didn't win 300 games. They just didn't. Those numbers were restricted to nostalgic recollections of the days before the ball became lively, and the home run became baseball's golden attraction.

But Spahn mowed through year after year of National League batters, stacking up wins calmly, methodically, intelligently. He won his 300th for his Milwaukee Braves—the franchise with which he had spent most of his career—in 1961, and added another 63 wins before he left the major leagues.

Spahn's entrance into the 300 club was not just a product of his longevity.

He led the league in wins eight times and ERA three times. He had power, leading the league in strikeouts for four seasons between 1949 and 1952, and just as much durability—he led the league in complete games nine times, including all seven seasons between 1957 and 1963.

And Spahn, deviating from the routine offensive incompetence of most pitchers, could deploy the ball pretty efficiently from the other side of the plate, too. He batted .333 during one season, and over the course of his career, whapped out 35 home runs, the most by any National League hurler.

Impressive, too, is the fact that he did all of this in a career that went on hiatus before it even began.

He had a chance when he was 21—the standard age for pitching legends to burst onto the scene—when he was allowed a stint with the Boston Braves in 1942 after a season of success in the Three-Eye League of the minors. But the whims of a fellow named Casey Stengel would have it otherwise.

Stengel, then manager of the Braves, told Spahn to dispatch his fastball straight at the noggin of Pee Wee Reese during an exhibition game. Spahn didn't do it.

Stengel, infuriated by his young pitcher's anti-truculence, declared Spahn a coward and banished him back to the minors.

The "coward," before he got a chance to work his way back to the Braves, would soon find something more pressing to occupy what should have been the prime years of career. If there were ever any doubts about Spahn's doggedness, he would have dispelled them during the Second World War, where he fought as a lieutenant and earned a Silver Star and a Purple Heart.

By the time his service was complete, by the time he found his way back into the much-less daunting world of baseball, he was 25 years old. It was then, in 1946, that Warren Edward Spahn sent to record the first of his 363 victories.

The missed years never handicapped Spahn—he found plenty of time over the next two decades to emboss his legacy in the annals of pitching history.

In his early years he combined with righty Johnny Sain to produce the game's most formidable one-two, left-right punch.

There was, of course, a rhyme, too: "Spahn and Sain, then pray for rain," was the formula for the Braves en route to their 1948 pennant.

Sain would be shipped off to the Yankees in 1951, but Spahn, who stuck around with the Braves as they relocated to Milwaukee, was no less impressive in the absence of his compadre. The first real Wisconsin superhero, Spahn high-kicked the Braves into two more World Series in 1957 and 1958, the former of which they won.

He didn't slow down as the decade rolled into the 1960s, nor was he hamstrung as the imposing age of 40 bore down upon him. He pitched a no-hitter in 1960 when he was 39, and just in case anyone thought of that as a last hurrah, he spit out another one the next year at age 40.

When he was 42, during his second-to-last full season in the Midwest city that had embraced him so thoroughly, he threw 22 complete games, won 23 games and posted seven shutouts.

Even after his productivity slowed, he kept on pitching, because, as he would say to the critics, he loved doing it.

Musial, whose career bestrode Spahn's in both its timing and respectability, was not entirely right in his light-hearted prediction, it turned out. Spahn of course did retire—he hung on until the age of 47, when he practiced his trade in the Pacific Coast League—and was swiftly elected to baseball's Hall of Fame.

There is no dearth of memories to bring to light in the wake of Spahn's passing. That's evident in the lengthy reminiscences from writers and teammates that have come about over the past week.

Maybe in some ways Musial was right. Though now gone, Spahn, in his own subtle way, just keeps right on pitching. On the front of a tattered baseball card, in the nostalgic verbiage of grown-up kids, on the cover of an old Sports Illustrated, old Spahn is still there, just as he was through three decades on the mound.

It's easy to picture him, with his charming beak of a nose and his prematurely receding hairline, rocking back on the mound, torso parallel to the ground, right foot jutting so far skyward that his spikes might have posed a danger to low-flying birds.

Then the marginally diminutive pitcher would swoop down, his magnificent left arm never tiring, and catapult the ball over the plate, likely wherever the batter least expected it.

That was Spahn in his prime—a prime that lasted nearly two decades, a prime that lingers now as a persistent memory, an icon of everything a pitcher should be.

In that capacity, Spahn will stick around. And that's a good thing.

For baseball, without its Spahn, would be left with nothing else to do but pray for rain.

The NFL's greatest playoff moments

By MIKE ORTA
Writer

As the NFL regular season is coming to an end, we get to see the matchups we are looking for. That's right, it's playoff time.

In the playoffs plays and events are named, like the Music City Miracle, the Immaculate Reception, The Catch and The Drive. This is where professional football gets its lifeblood. Let's look back at some of the more memorable playoff moments.

"The Catch" is probably one of the most defining moments in 49ers history. It has all the key ingredients: big game, star quarterback and a great display of athletic prowess. The Cowboys had no chance; this was destiny.

Trailing by six, Joe Montana had less than two minutes left and he was facing a third and three at about the six yard line. Montana rolls right, keeps scanning the field, keeps rolling towards the sideline. Then it happens.

Montana throws off his back foot across his body; the throw is high and over the end zone, it appeared to be uncatchable. Somehow, Dwight Clark does it. He reaches into the air and brings the ball down for the score.

Watching the replay it looks as though Clark was on a mission from God. Montana and Clark were immortalized the instant the ball was snapped. These are the kind of plays which define an era; this was the beginning of the 49ers' domination of the '80s.

If there is one thing that can be said about Marty Shotteneheimer, it is this: he was never successful in the playoffs because he was a broken man. The man who broke him was Elway, John Elway.

"The Drive" is what playoff dreams are made of. Every quarterback dreams that he is leading "The Drive." Ninety-eight yards. Roughly five minutes. Down by a touchdown. Elway guided his offense down the field like they were the Germans in France. Nothing could stop them from taking their rightful place among football's elite.

The 1999 Rams' playoff run is another series of memorable moments. There was the slugfest NFC Championship game in St. Louis. In a low scoring affair, reminiscent of the football of the '70s, the Rams won on an impressive Ricky Probert touchdown catch in the waning minutes of the game.

Then there was the Super Bowl against the Titans. The entire game Jeff Fisher and Tennessee were doing just enough to keep the Rams high-octane offense from turning the game

Martz and Vermiel were hoping for. They then leaned on their defense to stop the Titans from coming back and win the game.

By scoring so quickly, the Rams shifted all the pressure onto the won on a last second field goal by Adam Vinatieri. The same St. Louis receivers who had propelled the offense to a breathtaking win just two years before were shut down by the vaunted New England defense.

that they should settle for overtime, the Patriots began moving down the field in the final seconds of the game, desperately trying to give their place kicker a chance to win the game.

Adam Vinatieri got his chance, and

Courtesy of Reuters

Kevin Dyson of the Tennessee Titans falls a yard short of the goalline as time runs out in Super Bowl XXXIV. The Rams dramatic victory belongs to a class of NFL playoff moments that includes "The Drive" and "The Catch."

into a track meet. But then Mike Martz, then the offensive coordinator, made the call which would solidify him as an offensive genius.

With plenty of time left on the clock for a methodical drive, Martz goes for the jugular. He calls for Isaac Bruce to go deep and for Kurt Warner to launch his pass downfield. The result was a 73-yard touchdown, and the score changed to 23-16, advantage St. Louis.

The unsuspecting Titans' secondary had been set up perfectly, nobody in his right mind would try to score that quickly and leave time on the clock. But that is exactly what Titans' offense, and off of their defense. The Titans had gotten to the Super bowl by playing excellent defense and grinding it out on offense; surely they couldn't quickly move down the field and score the winning touchdown.

As fate would have it, the Titans would fall roughly two yards short of winning the Super Bowl. A last second tackle in front of the goal line gave Super Bowl XXXIV all the trimmings of an instant classic and would give the Rams their first ever NFL Championship.

Two years later the tables were turned on St. Louis, as the Patriots

New England's secondary battered and bruised the Rams' wide outs, punishing them every time they went to catch the ball. This physical style of football wore on the Rams and put them in a panic, as Mike Martz abandoned running his star tailback Marshall Faulk and instead opted to try and win by passing.

New England proved to be up to the challenge, giving up yards but forcing turnovers, and holding the quick strike Rams' offense to only 17 points. Whereas the Rams appeared to be playing not to lose, the Patriots were playing to win.

Just as John Madden was saying he used it to boot a 48-yard field goal, capping off the improbable championship season that began when the franchise quarterback was injured in the first few weeks of the season.

Now, I'll be honest. There are many other great playoff moments, drives, etc. These are simply the ones which stick out in my mind more than any others. "The Drive" and "The Catch" legitimized their team's status, and the same can be said for these other great moments. Here's to hoping we get a memory somewhere near the magnitude of these others in the upcoming playoff and Championship games.

England wins Rugby World Cup

Teams from around the world participate in the Rugby World Cup once every four years. The first such event was in 1987, and the fifth and most recent installment took place this fall. The tournament, which featured 20 teams and 48 games, culminated in a thrilling final between England and Australia on Aug. 22.

England became the first team from the Northern Hemisphere to win the championship when it upended the host Australian Wallabies 20-17 in extra time.

The event attracted a record crowd of over 82,000 to Telstra Stadium in Sydney. The crowd watched—along with millions of television viewers worldwide—as the teams delivered a stirring battle.

Lote Tuqiri of Australia opened up the game's scoring with a try six minutes into play, but England retaliated when Jonny Wilkinson scored a penalty goal after 12 minutes. Wilkinson then followed up the goal with a penalty in the 20th minute and another in the 27th.

With three minutes remaining, a try from England's Jason Robinson gave his team a 14-5 halftime lead, but Australia was far from defeated.

The Wallabies scraped to within three points on two penalties by Elton Flatley. The drama continued when another Flatley penalty knotted the score at 14-14 with less than a minute remaining in the second half, forcing the match into extra time.

Wilkinson struck again just two minutes into extra time, adding another penalty kick to give England a 17-14 lead. A Flatley penalty tied up the score again, and the teams entered the final two minutes of extra time in a 17-17 stalemate.

It was Wilkinson who proved to be the hero for England with just 30 seconds remaining, as he nailed a drop kick to advance the score to 20-17 and secure his team the championship.

The tournament was rated as the best in history by many critics following the final, and ratings and attendance suggest similar success. The next Rugby World Cup will be hosted by France in 2007.

What's going on out there? A quick guide to the laws

The ultimate goal in a rugby match is to score more points than the other team. Simple, right? As it turns out, that's where the simplicity starts and ends as far as the intricacies of the sport are concerned. Despite its slight resemblance to American football, rugby has a decidedly unique set of rules—which aren't actually "rules," but "laws." Here is quick rundown:

Basics: Two teams of 15 players (although other numbers are sometimes used). Players play both offense and defense, with no substitutions except for injury. The clock runs continuously, with the only break coming at halftime. The field is called a pitch.

Points can be scored as follows: A try is worth five points, with a conversion kick adding two if it is made successfully. A penalty kick or drop goal kick is worth three points. In order to score a try, a player must down the ball in the opponent's tryzone—crossing the goal line with the ball is not sufficient in itself. Rather, the player must apply pressure to the ball on the floor of the in-goal area. A player will likely want to down the ball toward the middle of the tryzone, because the conversion kick is made at the same point horizontally as the ball was downed—thus, if the ball is downed in the far left of the tryzone, the conversion must be kicked from the far left of the field.

A drop kick goal occurs when a player decides that he/she is within good range of the uprights (which are placed on the tryline, in the front of the tryzone) and drop kicks (the ball must hit the ground before it is kicked) the ball through them, securing three points. A player may also score three points on a penalty kick.

Moving the ball downfield: Anyone can handle the ball, as long as he/she isn't offside (that is, ahead of the ball/ballcarrier and involved in the play or within ten yards of the play). A player with the ball can run with it or pass it on to another player. He/she cannot pass it forward, or bat it forward, roll it forward, etc. He/she can pass it backwards or kick it forward. There is no blocking in rugby, so teammates can't just bump aside would-be tacklers. Once a player has been tackled, he/she must relinquish the ball, at which point a teammate can pick it up and try to advance it.

Scrum, rucks, line-outs and other types of joyous chaos: A maul occurs when more than two players pile together and the ball is not on the ground (the players are on their feet). If the ball is on the ground and more than two players bind together, it becomes a ruck. A scrum occurs whenever a player passes the ball forward or knocks-on (bumps forward) the ball, unless the opposing team picks it up. If the referee calls a knock-on, the players link together and form a huddle-like cluster. Nine players from each side participate in the scrum, with three rows of players each. One of those players is a scrum-half, a player that stands outside the formation and throws the ball into the pack along the line between the two teams. Front and center for each team in the scrum is the hooker, who is held up by two props; behind those players are the lockers; in the third row are the flankers and the No. eight. After the ball enters the scrum, the hookers try to kick the ball back out of the scrum and to their No. 8. A line-out occurs when the ball goes out of bounds, or into touch. A column of players from each team lines up on the touchline (sidelines of the pitch), and one player (from the team that didn't send the ball into touch) throws the ball in a straight line between the two columns. Players in the columns jump for the ball, with support from teammates on the line.

Sports

Men's water polo ends its season at Eastern Championships

By KATIE COLGAN
Writer

The men's water polo team, and senior co-captain Scott Afzal '04, competed in its final competition last weekend in Annapolis, Md. The Bison earned themselves seventh place in the Eastern Championship.

The men were victorious in a final game on Sunday against George Washington (G.W.). This was the third time the Bison faced G.W. this season, and they proved their superiority with the 8-6 win over the Colonials.

Seemingly close toward the start, the Orange and Blue took over in the second half, coming from behind to outscore the Colonials 4-1 in the third quarter. With Jay Danforth '05 leading the offense with three goals, the Bison continued to find the net. Elliot Benoist '05 added two key goals, while Bradley Roslyn '06, Aaron Platshon '05, and Brad Unroe '06 scored

"We showed a lot of heart to come back to within one late in the game against a powerful St. Francis team."
—Bradley Roslyn '06

one goal apiece.

Earlier in the tournament, the men played against St. Francis and fell shy of victory, 10-6. The team played up to its potential and came close to a victory when it came within a goal of St. Francis with only three minutes left.

The Bison were unable to score again as St. Francis hit three consecutive goals to end the game. Danforth led the team with three goals, three steals and two ejections drawn, and Platshon added two goals and three assists for a total of five of Bucknell's six points. Roslyn scored the other goal for Bucknell, while goalkeeper Trevor Mullins '06 shut down seven potential goals from the New York team.

Saturday evening the men faced a rowdy Massachusetts Institute of Technology crowd and fell 9-6 to the No. 1 ranked Division III team in the nation. Taking an early lead, Danforth and Afzal scored twice with Benoist and Paul Yerkes '06 also adding points to the scoreboard. MIT came back strong in the third quarter, and the Bison were unable to recover.

Jessica Noonan—The Bucknellian
A goalkeeper leaps for the ball at the Kinney Natatorium. The Bison finished with a 10-20 record.

Danforth's strong performance this past weekend and throughout the entire season revealed his second-team All-Tournament honors. Danforth stepped up and led the team offensively and defensively at the Eastern Championship.

The men left Annapolis on Sunday with a seventh place finish but hope to improve on their success next year.

"It was a disappointing end to a potentially great season, but with only one senior departing we look forward to one of our best seasons ever next year," Mullins said.

"In the first game we showed a lot of heart to come back to within one late in the game against a powerful St. Francis team. To finish off the weekend with a come from behind win against George Washington exemplified the tenacity the team has had to overcome struggles this season," Roslyn said.

With 11 of the team's 20 losses by one or two goals, including three overtime losses, the team played competitively throughout the season.

"While one can look at this and be disappointed with the overall outcome of the season, this team has used it to fuel a fire for next year," Roslyn said. "With what appears to be a large and talented incoming freshmen class, we look forward to returning Bucknell water polo to league championships that we once were."

—Trevor Mullins '06

Jessica Noonan—The Bucknellian
Jay Danforth '05 hurls the ball during a match at Kinney Natatorium earlier this year. The Bison earned seventh place in Eastern Championships on Nov. 15 and 16 in Annapolis, Md. They finished the tournament with an 8-6 victory over George Washington.

Bison capture first preseason win

By CHRISTA SAWKO
Writer

The Women's Basketball team hosted Coppin State in the Sojka Pavilion on Sunday establishing its first victory of the 2003-04 season with a 69-64 win.

The Bison started the game with a 10-6 lead when just seven minutes into the game Brooke Tomovich '05 scored seven-straight points. Coppin State finished the first half with a 37-33 advantage, but could not hold the lead through the second half. The Bison regained the lead when they outscored the visitors 13-2 over a nearly seven minute span.

Bucknell pushed its lead to as many as nine in the final three minutes, and led by eight, 66-58. Coppin State's Antoinette Resse brought this point difference down to three when she scored two three-pointers with just under a minute to play. There was seven-tenths of a second remaining in the game when Laura Hatzsky '05 was fouled, she made both free throws for the final score of 69-64.

Desire Almind '04 established a Sojka Pavilion single-game individual record as she pulled in 18 boards to go with her game-high 23 points. Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 finished the game with her first career double-double with 19 points and 10 rebounds. Tomovich added 15 markers and pulled in eight boards while Lillian Drumgold '05 came off the bench to score five points and grab a career-best eight rebounds for the Bison.

On Wednesday, November 26, the women's basketball team faced Loyola in Sojka Pavilion in its home opener. Last year the team traveled to Loyola MD, and defeated the greyhounds 76-73. This year the Bison suffered a 56-40 loss.

Both teams started the game on their heels. The score was tied 11-11 until the greyhounds marked a 9-0 run with 11:47 left in the half. The Bison retaliated with a jumper by Hollobaugh and a layup by Tomovich. This brought the score to 20-15, but Loyola to finished the half 29-15 with another 9-0 run.

The Bison outscored the Greyhounds in the second half 31-27, but could not overcome the 14 point disadvantage hanging over from the first half. The greyhounds lead by 18 points before Bucknell began to catch up. Hollobaugh jumped-started a 13-4 run by the orange and blue to bring the point difference down to nine, but the game ended with a 10 point deficit nevertheless.

Loyola's Lauren Trope scored a career-high 22 points. Almind struck a notable performance in the second half, scoring all 12 of her points in the frame and pulling in 10 rebounds in the half to finish the game with her first double-double of the year with 12 points and 12 rebounds. Tomovich, Bucknell's transfer from Loyola, scored her career best 15 points while Hollobaugh scored an impressive 10.

On Friday November 21 the team traveled to West Virginia for its first game and first loss of the season. The starting line up included transfer student Lillian Drumgold '05, Tomovich, Hollobaugh, Almind, and last year's starting point-guard Lindsey Geosits. This was the first time in the team's history that the season-opening starting five included three different players that had never before played in Bucknell uniform.

"I like our talent but we just need time to come together and gel... We've got to focus on blending the talent, putting people in the right positions offensively and defensively and finding the right chemistry and rotations," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

Hollobaugh showed everyone why her coaches deem her just need time to come together and gel... We've got to focus on blending the talent, putting people in the right positions offensively and defensively and finding the right chemistry and rotations," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

With the Coppin State victory Bucknell improved to 1-2 overall. A preseason poll of head coaches and sports information directors have predicted that Bucknell will finish seventh in the league, hopefully the team will come together to exceed this expectation.

"My focus with this year's team in the early going is on getting better everyday, establishing roles and plugging new players into the system," Fedorjaka said.

"My focus with this year's team in the early going is on getting better every day, establishing roles and plugging new players into the system."
—Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka

Men suffer three consecutive losses

By PIERRE HERNANDO
Staff Writer

The Men's basketball team is still without a win after losing 90-71 to Niagara University in Rochester, N.Y. The Bison (0-3, 0-0) were led by sharpshooter Kevin Bettencourt '06 but could not overcome the scoring outburst by the hosts.

The Purple Eagles (2-0) had five players hit double figures in scoring, led by guard David Brooks, who had 23 points on 8-11 shooting from the field including 6-9 from three-point land.

The Bison trailed 46-30 at halftime after seeing Niagara dial long-distance several times. Brooks hit five of his three-point field goals during the opening frame and helped his team keep the Bison at bay. The Purple Eagles shot 42 percent from beyond the arc, going 11-27. They also shot well from the field and the foul-line, going 49 percent and 81 percent, respectively.

Bettencourt tied his career-high with 21 points, as he shot 7-12 from the field and 4-8 from long range. Chris McNaughton '07 played very well once again, using his size to amass a career-high 14 points on 5-7 shooting. Chris Niesz '05 scored 11 points and led the squad in rebounds with five. Bettencourt and Antonio Glover '05 led the Orange and Blue in assists with four apiece.

The Bison shot the ball extremely well, going for a season-high 52 percent clip. They were 7-21 from long distance but hit only 64 percent of their free-throws.

The squad, which got close to 12 in the second half, were outscored 44-41 after halftime.

The loss to Niagara came several days after a tough loss to the Yale Bulldogs in front of roughly 1,200 Sojka Pavilion fans. The Bison opened their home schedule with a 63-62 loss after fighting hard to get back into the ballgame. An 11 point halftime deficit did not deter the Bison from outscoring the Bulldogs by ten in the second half, and setting up some exciting last minute action.

The deficit was as big as 14 before a McNaughton basket and a Charles Lee '06 tip-in gave the Bison a 62-59 lead with 44 ticks left on the clock. Yale's Paul Vitelli rebounded a missed three-point attempt and was fouled in the process. He hit the first of a one-and-one before missing the second. The rebound was again grabbed by Yale, and the ball eventually landed into the hands of reserve Scott Gaffield, who then nailed the game-winning three-pointer with 16 seconds remaining.

Bettencourt missed a jump shot before a second chance by the Bison was stopped after Yale stole the long inbound pass.

Yale was led by the 16-point outing of center Dominick Martin. Martin shot 5-10 from the field and contributed five rebounds and three blocked shots. Edwin Draughan had nine rebounds to lead the visitors, and guards Matt Minoff and Alex Gamboa led Yale in assists with four apiece.

The Orange and Blue were led by McNaughton's 12 points. The center was 5-6 from the floor and also grabbed seven boards. Donald Brown '07 came on strong off the bench and scored 11 points. Bettencourt led the Bison in assists with four and in steals with three.

The squad shot 50 percent from the field in the second half and 46 percent overall.

The Bison opened the season by playing Michigan State, a team ranked number three in the entire nation. The Orange and Blue almost pulled off one of the biggest upsets in college basketball before eventually succumbing to the powerhouse Spartans 64-52 in front of nearly 15,000 fans in East Lansing, Mich.

"It was a disappointing end to a potentially great season, but with only one senior departing we look forward to one of our best seasons ever next year."
—Trevor Mullins '06

Cross country finishes season at IC4A/ECAC meet

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Bucknell's harriers finished up their season with a fourth-place showing by the men in the IC4A meet and an eighth-place finish from the women in the Eastern College Athletic Conference (ECAC) meet on Nov. 22. Greg Costello '03 led the Bison with a strong fourth-place showing on the challenging and historic Van Cortland Park course in Bronx, N.Y.

Costello put himself with the leaders early, as the front pack went through the mile in four minutes and 41 seconds. Shortly after the mile, the top three, including eventual race winner Casey Moriarty of Yale, broke away; Costello was left in a large chase pack. By five kilometers the pack had broken up, and Costello began moving his way up through the field again.

"I passed a bunch of people on Cemetery Hill," Costello said. "I caught up to a pack of four guys and out-kicked them in a blazing sprint."

Head Coach Kevin Donner was proud of Costello, who returned from a serious stress fracture, but couldn't help but want more. "It was great to see Greg end his career on such a high note after all his injuries," Donner said. "If only we had a couple more weeks in the season."

On the team as a whole, Donner was proud of the team, which averages 30 to 40 seconds faster over the same eight-kilometer course than in September at the Iona Meet of Champions.

"Our men ran a very nice race," Donner said.

Nevertheless, a couple Bison struggled to rebound from the 10-kilometer race at regionals the week before, which most considered their best team race of the season.

"The team did alright," Costello said. "We could have done better, but we tried our best. Mad props to [Aaron] Hanlon for the All East finish."

Aaron Hanlon '04 was the Bison's second finisher in 20th-place to earn All-East honors. As an 800-meter specialist on the track, this was Hanlon's first legitimate attempt at cross country.

"[Aaron] has really developed into a cross country runner," Costello said.

James Madison took the men's team title with 71 points, followed by Princeton (86 pts) and Penn State (112 pts). Dan Lounsbury '05 (29th), Doug Creveling '05 (43rd) and Sean

Courtesy of Steve Schaefer
Graduate student Greg Costello charges down the stretch during the IC4A meet on Nov. 22. Costello placed fourth in the race.

McCarthy '04 (44th) rounded out the Bison's top five to give Bucknell 123 points to help the team finish fourth in the 16-team field.

The women's team finished eighth out of eight teams, because many of the teams that the Bison normally would have beaten elected to enter the university ECAC race instead of the championship race. In addition to the difficulty in racing an unusually small field, Bucknell had some bad luck going into the meet.

"Sickness really hit our women's team this past week, and although most of our ladies ran through it, I know it made us flat and tired as a team," Donner said.

Proving to be as consistent as ever, Katie Pfeifer '05 led the Bison with a 22nd-place finish. Although happy with the race, Pfeifer noticed the effect of cold season as well.

"Many of the girls were either sick or getting over a cold, but everyone went out there and did their best, and that's all anyone can ask," Pfeifer said.

Jenny Stevens '07 finished a fine first season as Bucknell's second scorer in 38th place. Kayla Halloran '06 (40th), Julie Jakobski '06 (48th) and Allison Cole '06 (50th) finished up the scoring, marking the first race of the season where only one first-year student scored in the top five for the Bison.

"It was not the way we wanted to end the season, however, we are looking forward to resting and getting ready for track," Donner said. "We have some nice young talent that will only get better with experience."

Bucknell's harriers enjoy a short break before joining up with the rest of the track team for the indoor track season. While most will skip the first indoor meet this Saturday at home, a few athletes who saw limited racing action will be competing.

Courtesy of Steve Schaefer
Katie Pfeifer '05 races during the ECAC meet at Van Cortland Park in the Bronx. The women's team placed eighth in the meet.

BU Rugby going strong

RUGBY from page B2

like that. We have set days but we can't force people to come out like in football," Porter said. "But [the rugby players] still come every week. The dedication is amazing by the players."

Neumann also noted the upside. "A benefit of being a club sport is that we get to run our own team, democratically," Neumann said. "We have more freedom this way but are also less structured because of it."

According to Read, the freedom allows the team members to defray a little bit of the intimidation factor that coincides with the sport's intense nature.

"I really think that the laid-back atmosphere and loosely structured practices allowed us to become a close team; we were able to joke around and have fun without scaring anyone away," Read said. "Rugby has the potential to do that; it can be a scary sport."

The club status does mean extra responsibility and work for Harte, who not only coaches the men's team, but also handles all of the administrative work. Being a coach in itself bears a heavy accountability, especially in rugby, where safety hangs in such a precarious balance, and teaching players the right skills is paramount to their well-being.

"If you put the wrong person in the wrong spot in soccer, they lose; if you put the wrong person in the wrong spot in rugby, they could get killed," Harte said.

Harte not only has to teach the team members and help them grow as players; he also has to run the team as a business, scheduling matches and managing the team's reasonable but tight finances.

"It's quite a lot for someone who isn't even paid," Neumann said. "Running a club sport as a non-paid volunteer takes improvisation, adaptation and a little grace from God Himself," Harte said of his role with the team.

While it doesn't pay in cash, the experience has paid off in plenty of other ways for Harte, his team and the women's team.

Most players have found in the Bucknell rugby club a niche that is unrivaled by anything else on campus. "Some people might call us ruggers crazy because we go into the game knowing there's a possibility that we might get seriously hurt, but I say that it's just part of playing any sport," Paladino said. "It's the love of the game that keeps people coming back."

Crazy. Violent. Unorthodox. Call them what you will. But anyone who's spent as much as a few minutes around Bucknell ruggers ought to know that even beginning to capture the entity of their club, you'd have to throw in a delightfully oxymoronic mix of other descriptors: elegant and brusque, cohesive and diverse, chaotic and graceful.

Whatever adjectives you chose to describe Bucknell rugby, one thing is for sure: you'll never find anything else quite like it.

Powerlifting completes first event

LIFTING from page B1

the Bucknell campus, as it was started during the 2003 spring semester. Members of the team work with the University's Head Strength Coach Jerry Shreck, training together in the varsity weight room two nights per week.

The lifters work to increase their overall strength during workouts, while focusing on the squat, bench press and deadlift. The lifts are done to failure, the point at which the lifter cannot complete another rep, and recovery time between workouts is a crucial part of the team's training. After a successful effort at their first meet, the lifters are looking forward to returning to competition in the spring, armed with the same determination they showed last month and this time also bolstered by larger numbers.

"This was only the first meet for the Powerlifting Club," Hersperger said. "Next time we will have a bigger team and will surely be a lot more competitive. Our competition should beware."

Bucknell's Predictions
By JOHN HENNING & ASHWIN RAMAKRISHNA
Contributing Writers

Since this is the last paper before next semester, Schwin and I have decided to let you know our thoughts on who will be playing in the Super Bowl at the end of the NFL season. More playoff insight will follow next semester.

AFC Predictions:

Papa: The AFC looks like the dominant conference so far this season with teams such as the Chiefs, Patriots, Colts and Titans. At this point in the season, I'm still not sold on Kansas City. Yes, I know they're 11-1, but they haven't been impressive doing it. They should have lost to the Broncos the first time if the referees had called the three blocking-in-the-back fouls that occurred on Dante Hall's game-winning punt return, and this past week, they weren't impressive in defeating the hapless San Diego Chargers. Looking at the other teams, the Colts will not be able to continue winning the shootouts they've been getting into, and injuries have to catch up to the Patriots at some point, don't they? That leaves me with the Titans and McVey winning the AFC Championship over the Chiefs.

Schwin: I'll keep it simple... Titans, Patriots, Colts, Chiefs, Bengals and Broncos make the playoffs. Unfortunately either the Colts or the Titans will have to play in a first-round matchup and then travel on the road for the second round. The Patriots have a lot of playoff experience on the road and at home. The Chiefs have always faltered in the playoffs and look for it to happen again. The Broncos may prove to be a surprise team making it to the AFC Championship game if they can stay healthy. I see the Titans and Patriots gunning it out with the Titans advancing to the BIG SHOW.

Courtesy of Adam Hersperger
Adam Hersperger '05, Jeff Wodlinger '05 and Matt Lamparter '06 represented the Powerlifting Club at its first competition.

NFC Predictions:

Papa: Each contender in the NFC has had a roller coaster of a trip this season. The Eagles started off slowly but have come on strong as of late. St. Louis had its problems when Warner stunk the place up, and Faulk was out for a couple of weeks, but it seems to have righted its ship with Bulger at the helm. The Panthers just don't have enough to keep in it against the big boys and Dallas made a nice run that will end in the playoffs. As painful as this is for me, I see the Eagles squeaking past everyone and making it to the Super Bowl this year. If I'm right, at least I know which team I'll be picking in the Super Bowl match up between the Eagles and Tennessee... Go Tennessee!

Schwin: Once again... Eagles, Panthers, St. Louis, Dallas, Green Bay and Seattle make the playoff picture. Easily I can see two teams that I would not want to face in the first round... Seattle and Carolina. Seattle has scary explosiveness, and Carolina is very underrated by many teams in the league. Green Bay would have a huge advantage if it had just a single game at Lambeau Field. The Rams and Cowboys are both dome teams, and if they can gain the home field advantage, they would likely benefit the most. I see the Eagles as a strong contender, but like previous years, falling one step short. I'm looking forward to the Eagles and Rams facing off in the NFC Championship Game. Even more so, I'll look forward to the rematch between Tennessee and the Rams.

Cinema Center
Sollersgrove - Susquehanna Valley Mall - 214-2048
Play Dates: December 5-12, 2003

Elf (PG)	Master & Commander (PG-13)
1:30, 3:45, 8:45	1:47, 9:40
Elf (PG)	Looney Tunes (PG)
12:15, 2:30, 4:50, 7, 9:15	12:45, 3:5, 5, 7, 9
Run Away Jury (R)	Scary Movie 3 (PG-13)
1:15, 6:45	1:30, 3:50, 7:30, 9:40
Brother Bear (G)	School of Rock (PG-13)
12, 2:15, 4:30, 6:40, 8:45	4, 9:30
Matrix Revolutions (R)	Texas Chainsaw Massacre (R)
1:4, 7, 9:40	12:40, 2:40, 5, 7:20, 9:30
Love Actually (G)	Matrix Revolutions (R)
12:50, 3:45, 6:30, 9:10	12:30, 3:30, 6:30, 9:20
Radio (PG)
1:15, 3:30, 6:20, 8:40
Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro
412 Market Street, Lewisburg

New Five Course Tasting menu from around the world

Wednesday-Saturday
Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2, Dinner 5-9

523-8088

Market Street PHOTO

We like picky people!

We're picky too. We hand-inspect every photo we print to ensure the best quality.

523-1543
M-F 9-5:30, Sat 9-5; 24 hour drop box
120 Market St (near the hotel), Lewisburg

Dignified Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
Fine Gift
Unique Occasions
450 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-7930

Addressers wanted immediately!

No Experience necessary.
Work at home.
Call 405-447-6397

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Visions for 2004

By MATT HINSON
Senior Writer

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) recently elected a new slate of executives for the 2004-05 school year. The winners were John Siwicki '05 as president, Richard Lee Karcher '05 as vice president of finance, Duff Weber '05 as vice president of operations and Lily Williamson '06 as vice president of administration.

Below is a short background of each newly elected officer and also what each would like to see happen in the next year.

John Siwicki: President

John Siwicki is a junior management and political science major. He belongs to Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity and has been involved in BSG since he was a first-year student. He was vice president of the first-year students and was class president his sophomore and junior years. Additionally, Siwicki has served on the Student Affairs Committee of BSG.

"I enjoy serving the students. I believe the first role of government is to serve the students' interests. I plan to adhere to this philosophy in the coming year," Siwicki said.

He hopes that BSG will tackle such issues as cable in students' dorm rooms as well as revising the alcohol policy. More important to Siwicki is better publicizing BSG's efforts so that students will know just what BSG does on their behalf.

Richard Lee Karcher: Vice President of Finance

Rich Karcher is a junior economics major and is widely involved in campus affairs. He belongs to Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity, is on the University Concert Committee and has been involved in BSG since his first year at the University. He previously served as chair of internal affairs and chair of fiscal affairs, as well as on the BSG Appropriations Committee.

"I would love to see more money put into various forms of student life... I feel that students have a right to know why tuition goes up and where their money is going to after the check has been sent to Bucknell," Karcher said.

Karcher also takes issue with the University's recent changes to the alcohol policy, saying that the student body should be included in any discussion about alcohol policy and that issues might be solved in more diplomatic fashion.

Duff Weber: Vice President of Operations

Duff Weber is a junior accounting major. He has served on BSG's Concert, Community Affairs and the 2010 Steering Committees.

Weber's major concern for the coming year is revising the University's alcohol policy.

"The front runner on my agenda for next year is to implement a new alcohol policy, to eliminate the emergency plan and replace it with an alcohol policy that focuses on safeguarding students' health," Weber said.

However, he does not want the focus of the executive board to simply be on alcohol. Weber also has hopes that the executives and BSG will be able to improve the new online-scheduling process, ensure that students will continue to have an option to live downtown and attempt to implement the use of declining balance at stores in the local area.

Lily Williamson: Vice President of Administration

Lily Williamson is a sophomore French and International Relations major. She is also a reunion student ambassador. Williamson hopes that the student body will become more cognizant of and involved with BSG. "I would like to see more students involved in the organization. I don't think students understand that we are really a resource to be used by any individual student, club or organization," Williamson said.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

University students react to music by a touring artist. Politically charged musicians use their concerts as a platform to inform their fans of important issues which affect their future. Bands want students to mobilize to express their views and push for change.

Punks' patriotic protest

By COURTNEY HOMAN
B&P Editor

Protest is patriotism. Punk music has taken this slogan to heart and has swept up a countless number of kids in its revival of political activism. Bands from the Jersey shore to the beaches of Southern California have taken the torch from their brethren of the '70s and passed it on to a new generation of unsettled youth.

This movement has been growing and organizing to become a legitimate source of political and social change.

"Punk is historically protest music, not just about politics, but protest against society as well," said Mike Burkett, frontman of NOFX, according to CNN.com.

Burkett has recognized the immense power the U.S. youth has to inspire sociopolitical change and has taken measures to see that change is realized. Burkett's Web site, Punkvoter.com, has been garnering greater attention as politicians increasingly focus campaign dollars on younger voters. The manifesto of this new punk generation is a clear one.

"Our goal is to educate, register and mobilize over 500,000 of today's youth as one voice. We plan to use this election as a way to get our fans engaged in politics and evolve our movement into becoming involved locally to affect real change nationally," according to the Web site.

Bands are currently focusing on the college-student population by planning tours that will travel from campus to campus raising political awareness.

Some students see political music as a promising method for an attitude change on college campuses.

"The music is a way to increase awareness. Students can identify with the music and call it their own. Also, its message is pro-Americans that they have the power to exact the change they want to see in their country," according to Punksfordean.com. "His campaign is about restoring our American communities, reenergizing people to participate in the political process and reestablishing the United States as an inspirational beacon for the world."

The power the U.S. youth

"Punk music has always been about standing up for what you believe in and fighting for your rights to freedom."

—Jason Tate, founder of absolutepunk.net gressive enough to prevent this political apathy," Erin Lion '05 said.

Bands such as Anti-Flag, NOFX, Bouncing Souls and Boy Set Fire are seeing an increase in their fan bases as political tensions rise and more students choose to become active in politics during this time of war.

"Bush getting elected was good for punk music. Now people have something to get pissed off about," Burkett said, according to CNN.com.

Currently, former Governor of Vermont Howard Dean is the front-runner for the punk vote. "What makes Governor Dean's campaign powerful and appealing is that he offers an actual message. He is telling his fellow holds is widely recognized and respected while its methods and ideals are less so.

"It amazes me that our troops are killing people all over the world, and people are worried about us swearing," said Justin Sane, frontman of Anti-Flag, according to Alternative Press. "What a lot of people don't know about Anti-Flag is that we have our own principles and our beliefs, but that doesn't mean that you have to agree with us. We put our message out there, and then it's up to you to decide if it makes sense or not."

This message can often get lost in the delivery, and political punk music has found difficulty in moving past stereotypes. Ideas of anarchy, nihilism and senseless violence are often associated with the punk genre, but students believe that this is a misrepresentation.

"Parents, adults and politicians can't get past the hard-hitting beats and fast, anathematic screams to hear the real message. They are listening without really listening," said Jason Tate, founder of absolutepunk.net.

Punks feel their message should be taken seriously. They do not just stand for a casual fashion or an unconventional hairstyle. Their movement contains elements of social awareness, political activism and a determined vision.

"It's a very political type of entertainment. It's not mindless fun. You can't be detached and be punk rock. We're a minority scene because we're too ugly and too real for people," said Ali Moosavi, drummer for Death In Custody, according to The Detroit News.

The movement is real. "Punk music has always been about standing up for what you believe in and fighting for your rights to freedom," Tate said.

Punk music has always been about standing up for what you believe in and fighting for your rights to freedom. Tate said.

According to the movement political punk isn't hype, it's a message. When votes are taken and voices are united through music, stereotypes will fade, and distinct sociopolitical change will be left in their wake.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

University students take an afternoon to participate in a silent protest in front of Freas Hall. Statistics show that student involvement in political controversies is rare. However, students do have the opportunity to inspire significant political change.

Finding a new political voice

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Writer

During the Vietnam War, college campuses were hotbeds of political activism and protest. While the current presidential administration's war on terrorism is a different type of military conflict, support for U.S. involvement has declined over the past several months.

If you add to that the various other political issues facing the nation today like the economy, same sex unions, the ongoing controversies concerning how much religion should overlap with government and whether the government should or should not regulate matters such as abortion, then it becomes easy to see that this is a time highly conducive to political activism and involvement.

But where are the protests? Where are the voter registration drives? Where is the membership in politically focused groups and organizations? Why aren't college students leading the way as they did in previous decades?

Granted, the recent ban on hard alcohol at the University spurred some political activism. Several hundred students attended the alcohol forum held by the administration.

In response to the ban, the Bucknell University Conservatives Club (BUCC) sponsored a root beer keg party, and some students sat outside of Freas Hall in protest of the new policy.

Some groups hold events throughout the year to spread their messages. Friends of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered (FLAG & BT) students wear chalk talk around campus; the Bucknell Caucus for Economic Justice actively supports the living wage; groups, such as Politics and Current Events, sponsor politically oriented lectures; and organizations produce publications like "The Catalyst" or The Counterweight.

As a whole, college students have become much less likely to become politically involved in recent years. A recent article on CNN.com tracked a decline in political activism at Kent State University. Kent State received major publicity in the early 1970s when four students died and nine others were wounded during a demonstration against the war in Vietnam when the Ohio National Guard fired on them.

Students have been relatively quiet concerning the war on Iraq. A general apathy seems to have descended on college students. According to a Gallup poll, roughly one-third of college students "doesn't follow politics."

Hannah Daniels '03 would like to see that change, especially here on campus.

"Bucknell has a large number of young, intelligent people from different backgrounds, and we have all been in classrooms or dorm lounges where ideas, political values or human ethics have been passionately debated. The next logical step is to turn this discussion into action, which is where Bucknell and our generation in general has fallen short," said Daniels, the legal administrator for the Fund for Public Interest Research (FPIR).

FPIR works to further education, research and advocacy in the area of social welfare issues. State Public Interest Research Groups and the National Environmental Law Center are supported by the FPIR, which provides financial and organizational support to these groups and others like them.

Daniels speaks of her experience in growing terms.

"We try to coordinate all of our special events such as The Counterweight, speakers and protests in a way that makes an effective total package. The first step for any other organization would be to have a solid infrastructure and leadership. Once you have that, if you don't shy away from issues that you care about and work hard, you will probably be pretty successful," Kasic said.

Daniels thinks coalition-building is another key.

"In my work, I see how often different organizations work together toward a common end goal. Each group brings its own knowledge base and influence to create a stronger, more powerful group that is more likely to achieve results," Daniels said.

Daniels also cites lack of communication among campus organizations as a problem.

"Many groups and individuals are fighting for the same or very similar results," Daniels said. "To be honest, I don't think most students are aware of all the advocacy efforts on campus."

To overcome this, Daniels feels it is beneficial to use strategically chosen mediums that will reach University students and Lewisburg residents most effectively.

College Democrats' Public Relations Officer Matt Wirick '04 recognizes these problems within many organizations on campus as well. He says that the 2004 presidential election will provide an opportunity to encourage and expand political activism on campus.

"The College Democrats will be using the upcoming election as a focal point since it will create an ideal setting for discussions of the current administration and any hopes students may have for a change. We also hope to be able to bring a big-name speaker to campus next semester to generate more political interest," Wirick said.

What if students feel that their interests aren't represented on campus? Then they should start a club that will allow their voice to be heard, according to Kasic.

"It is pretty easy to start a club here—that is what the BUCC had to do two years ago," Kasic said.

For individuals who wish to be involved on a larger-than-campus scale, Daniels says the Internet offers numerous opportunities for students to become involved.

"There are so many Web sites of different groups out there; anyone can find something they want to change and a way to do it," Daniels said.

DeCerio addresses student parking issues

By COURTNEY HOMAN & DAVID LAROSS
B&P Editor and Senior Writer

Parking is frequently an issue of concern at the University. This concern seems to be heightened during the winter months when students are reluctant to walk to class in the cold weather.

Director of Public Safety Vincent DeCerio thinks the issue can be easily explained. "People don't wish to walk. There's plenty of parking on the outskirts of campus, but no one wishes to walk 2-3 blocks so they park illegally close to their building and hope not to get caught," DeCerio said. "There are 15-minute spaces all around campus for those wishing to make short pickups and deliveries."

Students often request additional parking to be included in the University's construction plans; however, DeCerio feels the parking concerns are not as problematic as suggested.

"There's plenty of student parking by the stadium. Check there any time," DeCerio said.

The University student community currently receives approximately 125 parking tickets per week, according to DeCerio. This statistic suggests a significant problem.

"Remember we don't have a parking problem on campus; we have a walking problem," DeCerio said.

Students do have the option to make their opinions known and the ability to have their problems addressed. There is a University Parking Committee that considers student opinions.

"Students may be able to provide some valuable input on their parking needs," DeCerio said.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

The farm lot, a popular parking area for students, is often crowded as students prefer to park close to academic buildings.

Buffalo Bill's
TEX-MEX GRILLE & SALOON

Monday 5-9
Jumbo Hamburger & Fries
& Large Soda---$3.99

Tuesday 5-9
12 Jumbo Wings & Fries
& Soda---$3.99

Wednesday 5-9
Vegetarian Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Thursday 5-9
Mexican Night
Buy 1 Get 2nd Half Price

Lewisburg • 523-8900

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL

ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH

CHRISTMAS

"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior who is Christ the Lord."

Celebrate His birth at the
MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH
Sunday Services at 10:30am and 7pm - Christmas
Eve Candlelight Service at 6:30pm Located 1 mile north of Rt. 45 off Forest Hill Road in Mifflinburg.

For more information call the Church at 966-4899

FOR RENT

Available for 2004/05 & 2005/06

619 St. Catherine's
4/5 Bedrooms
Large entrance area,
Living room, Dining room with an enclosed room off the Dining room, Kitchen, Powder room
2 stories with Full Bath on second floor

Call (610) 525-5511
I want to hear your suggestions
when I remodel this summer

Earn $250-$350 a week
Working Part-time
Evenings and weekends.
B&D DELPHIN
742-1642

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Vennari's
Large Cheese
Pizza only
$5.50!
Dine in Only
Monday-
Thursday

Vennari's Pizza
610 Market St.
524-0444

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Zoom!
whiter brighter faster

whiten your teeth in one hour or one weekend!

Take your first step to feeling good, looking great and making a memorable impression everytime you smile. You owe it to yourself! Find out more about Zoom! Professional Teeth Whitening. Call today!

523-3207
David R. Robinson, DMD, P.C.
339 Market St.
Lewisburg, Pa.
(Downtown)

Bring this ad in & receive 15% off any whitening procedure

Falling Leaves bring Falling Prices

During the month of November and December, take 10% off our low retail prices of our in-stock Bertch items.

We don't have what you need? No problem!
Take 5% OFF of our Special Order items.

Lewisburg Builders Supply, Co.
Rt. 15 & Hafer Rd • Lewisburg • 523-1248
Monday - Friday
7am - 6:30pm
Saturday 8am - 3pm

Serving over 60 years in the Susquehanna Valley!

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211

*Parties
*Open Bowling
*Mixers
*Fundraisers

ROCK-N-BOWL

Arts & Entertainment

Candlelighting sparks holiday spirit

University Christmas celebration to be televised nationally on PBS

Courtesy of Emily Thede

The University Bell Choir and Chapel Choir will perform at the Candlelighting service. This year's service will be broadcast throughout Pennsylvania this Christmas season.

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The University Chapel Choir and Bell Choir will perform a program of Christmas music at their annual Candlelighting service tonight, Sunday and Tuesday at 7 p.m. The performance in Rooke Chapel features music from both choirs and is conducted by Professor of Music William Payn.

The evening includes Christmas readings by University faculty, staff and students which are interspersed with musical selections. Both ensembles will be performing approximately 10 selections. While there are many pieces in the program, most stay within the traditional range of familiar Christmas music.

"Most follow that traditional tone," Payn said. "The chapel choir is singing 'We Three Kings,' and the ringers are performing a version of 'Rise Up, Shepherd, and Follow.'"

Candlelighting has become a holiday tradition at the University, setting the mood of the season for some.

"It's nice to take a few hours to go listen to Christmas music," said

Chapel Choir member Meghann Peace '04. "You remember that [Christmas] is the season that we're really in right now."

This year's performance will be recorded at a special service on Thursday night and televised nationally for PBS. The Candlelighting service is recorded on a four year rotation to include all members of the choir at some point during their time at the University.

Each service opens with a solo by a Chapel Choir member, with a different soloist highlighted each night. Elizabeth Decker '06 performs the solo on Thursday and Friday, Allison Davies '04 on Sunday night and Sarah Houck '06 on Tuesday.

Throughout the performance, there are several notable pieces. The first is "There is no Rose of Such Virtue," by Robert Young, Lee Cromwell '05 is the student conductor for this piece, which is sung by the Chapel Choir.

"That one is one of my favorites," Peace said. "I think it is very beautiful."

The choir will also be performing a selection by composer Eric Whitacre, "Lux Aurumque."

"This is one of my favorites to do with the choir," Payn said.

"Arise and Shine, Jerusalem," another Chapel Choir piece, is accompanied by organ making it both unique and difficult for choir members.

"Once we put it together and put the organ with it, I liked this one very much," Peace said.

The Chapel Choir and Bell Choir will be performing one selection, "Ring Out Ye Crystal Spheres," together.

"I very much enjoy the harmonies and the words the text," Peace said.

The Bell Choir will be performing a Candlelighting favorite on their own, "March of the Kings."

"That one is always popular with the audience," Payn said. The piece is popular with performers as well.

"March of the Kings" has become the Ringers' signature piece and I look forward to playing it again this year," said Ringer Manager Emily Thede '04.

The Bell Choir will also be performing a unique and lively version of "Farandole," by Georges Bizet.

This adaptation of Georges Bizet's "Farandole" is marked with mallets, martalatos, shaking, and other special bell effects. It is so full of energy and pizzazz that by the end of the piece the usually reserved and reverent congregation can't help breaking into applause," Thede said.

The service ends with a solo performance of "Silent Night." Katie Palumbo '04 will sing this solo on Thursday and Friday night, Thede on Sunday night and Lara Hanson '04 on Tuesday night.

The performance will be broadcast throughout Pennsylvania this Christmas season, and will be shown nationally beginning next year.

Doors open for each night's service at 6:45 p.m., and the performance should last until about 9 p.m. Tickets are no longer available, but Payn encourages students to come anyway.

"If you arrive after 7 p.m. and there are seats available, you can be seated," Payn said. "There are usually empty seats, especially Tuesday night."

Courtesy of Emily Thede

The University Chapel Choir will perform pieces such as "We Three Kings" and "There is no Rose of Such Virtue." Each service will open with a solo by a Chapel Choir member.

Students perform at band night

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

Despite the hype-filled Fall Concert that was blowing out speakers in the Pavilion next door, the Seventh Street Cafe provided an equally entertaining musical atmosphere for those less interested in moshing the night away. Student Band Night managed to garner a large number of supporters for its two-hour concert on Friday, Nov. 21.

The evening's performance, composed of Andrew Burr '04, Luke Morris '03, Matt Talbot '06 and Associate Professor of English Glyne Griffith provided a unique show for the gathered crowd to enjoy.

"Student Band Nights are a really great time to unwind after a stressful week. There's nothing like sitting back, having a cappuccino and listening to talented friends sing and play guitar," Monica McMurrer '06 said.

One of the most ambitious numbers, an acoustic version of Blackstreet's "No Diggity," had the audience exercising its toe-tapping reflexes.

As Burr sang "getting played is a forte," it was clear that the variety of instruments being played definitely added a new twist to the typical Late Night Music events at the Cafe. Flute, harmonica, Conga drums and the ubiquitous acoustic guitar were all represented during the performance. All of these instruments were layered on top of the gritty vocals of Burr, Talbot and Morris as they shared singing duties throughout the evening.

Joining the group for the first half of the performance, Griffith broke from the exclusivity of the "student" performances by thoroughly impressing the audience with his flute-playing prowess. His trills and arpeggios perfectly complemented the acoustic sounds of the rest of the performers, and the audience responding enthusiastically.

The other musicians also proved to be especially talented, as Morris wailed on his harmonica, Burr played acoustic guitar and percussion and Talbot picked away prodigiously at his six-string.

The band performed a variety of styles. Some songs were written by Burr and are from his current album "Kalmia" and "The Day for All Believers," which is scheduled to be released this month. Other songs included "Quarter Tank," written by Talbot as well as songs by friends of the musicians. Several popular songs were covered as well.

During the concert, a very relaxed, improvisational mood was projected, as members of the band left the performance mid-song, only to reconvene with the group during the climax of the next one. An innocent bystander, Sara Close '05, also joined the band for an impromptu collaboration.

The band played almost nonstop, taking only a short break midway through its set. Even a broken string on Talbot's guitar could not halt the music for long. Tuning the guitar quickly turned into a jam session between Burr and Talbot, as they improvised their way through a series of duets to close the performance.

Throughout the show listeners were entertained by the unique combination, style and talent of all three performers.

Rage Against the Machine releases new live album

Courtesy of www.rageagainstthemachine.com

Rage Against the Machine's CD "Live at the Grand Olympic Auditorium" will be released on Dec. 9.

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

Rock 'n' roll has always been based on controversy. From Robert Plant telling fans that he wanted to give them "every inch of my love" to Ozzy Osbourne biting the head off a real bat to Marilyn Manson sparking more animosity from various Christian organizations nationwide; if it weren't for an attraction to rebellion, many of these influential acts may have never made it into the spotlight.

Rage Against the Machine is no different. This band has openly supported a retrial for convicted Philadelphia cop-killer Mumia Abu Jamal, blared lyrics such as "F you, I won't do what you tell me" and regularly sported an upside-down U.S. flag on its bass rig.

Unfortunately for those of us who loved Rage's music, the band ended its tenure together after a Sep. 12 and 13, 2000 concert at the Grand Olympic Auditorium in Los Angeles. Luckily, the two nights were captured on video and audio tape, which will be released as "Live at the Grand Olympic Auditorium" on Dec. 9.

While it would be difficult for a band like Rage to ever release a greatest hits album (the majority of its best songs were rarely played on the radio), this record comes as close as possible. It includes tracks from every album the band released, allowing an uninformed fan to easily gain a sense of what Rage is all about.

The album opens with the blistering "Bulls on Parade" from its critically acclaimed disc "Evil Empire." The barrage of vocalist Zach de la Rocha's raps and screams and guitarist Tom Morello's unbelievable guitar riffs and solos doesn't end until the final track, "Freedom."

The album's highlights include fan favorite "Killing in the Name," the closest thing to a sing-along the band has "Testify" from "The Battle of Los Angeles," and a cover of hip-hop group EPMD's "I'm Housin'."

The best track, and most surprising for me to find on the album, is the group's unreleased studio gem "No Shelter," which made an appearance on the "Godzilla" soundtrack. The melodic assault with which the band attacks the audience is nothing short of intense, and hearing it on disc brought me back to the two times I was fortunate enough to catch Rage live before its members decided to part ways.

From the start of its fiery career to the very end, Rage was never a band to back away from the spotlight, regardless of how they were portrayed. "Live at the Grand Olympic Auditorium" captures everything the band represented and more, offering longtime fans finality and new listeners a taste of the brilliance that was Rage.

While fans can now catch three-quarters of the band performing as Audioslave with ex-Soundgarden frontman Chris Cornell, the passion, intensity and thought-provoking messages the members represent will always be summed up in four words: Rage Against the Machine.

you accidentally knock
your roommate's
toothbrush into the toilet.
he's not home. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others.
explore what matters
at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available
2004/05 1-6 bedrooms

Spring '04
Semester Units
Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

T BRYNWOOD

Rentals

CASH FOR BOOKS

Bucknell University Bookstore

Wednesday
December
10 thru

Friday
December
19

Wed-Fri, Dec. 10-12 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
Mon-Thurs, Dec. 15-18 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
Friday, Dec. 19 9:00 a.m. to 11:30 p.m.

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN

1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for
2004/2005 and 2005/2006

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

Arts & Entertainment

Fall Concert spotlights eclectic performers

By DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

California-based punk band The Ataris and singer-songwriter Jason Mraz headlined for the University's Fall Concert Friday, Nov. 21 in the Sojka Pavilion.

The arena floor was almost completely filled, spanning from the front of the stage nearly all the way back to the rear seats. The seats themselves were dotted with concertgoers, far from being completely full.

There were two opening acts to get the crowd warmed up for the headliners. Tristan Prettyman was the first artist. She performed solo with an acoustic guitar, playing folk and blues-style music. Her music was well received, but seemed better suited for performance at the 7th Street Café or another more intimate setting.

The second opening act was the band Hopesfall. Also a relatively unknown band, Hopesfall played loud heavy-metal music with a lot of screaming by its lead singer. The lyrics of its songs were completely inaudible due to the loud, overdriven guitars, bass and hammering drums. The style of music did not fit very well with that of the other performers. No one in the audience knew quite how to react to its music other than with polite applause when the group left the stage.

The Ataris then took the stage, greeted by much cheering and applause. After two obscure artists performing unfamiliar music, the audience seemed eager to hear something they recognized.

The Ataris responded with energy and intensity, performing many songs from its latest album "So Long Astoria," as well as a few numbers from its earlier albums, well-known to the group's long-time fans.

The band's radio hits, "In This Diary" and a cover version of Don Henley's "The Boys of Summer," produced massive sing-alongs from the crowd, and nearly all of the songs from the newest album produced a positive reaction on the concert floor.

Between songs, lead singer Kris Roe expressed thanks to members of the audience and delivered several strange, rambling monologues about the inspiration for writing several of the band's songs.

Before the band performed "All You Can Ever Learn is What You Already Know," Roe handed his guitar off to one of the band's roadies. In one of the evening's most amusing moments, he grabbed the microphone stand with such force that the microphone flew off and into the crowd.

Roe performed "The Saddest Song" as a solo accompanying himself on guitar. This moving song from "So Long Astoria" is about growing up in a single-parent household.

When the rest of the band rejoined him onstage, The Ataris rocked straight-ahead through the end of its set, closing with the fan-favorite "San Dimas High School Football Rules" from the album "Blues Skies, Broken Hearts... Next 12 Exits." Several energetic mosh-pits opened up in the crowd during the closing segment of this Ataris' set.

Sean Bradley '06, a frequent concertgoer, was right in the middle of the action on the floor during The Ataris' performance.

Mraz performed songs from his album, including the well-known hit "The Remedy" as well as some of his older material.

"I was right up front the whole time, they were really great," Bradley said.

After the Ataris' act, Mraz performed with a large back up band, featuring a bassist, second guitarist, keyboardist, drummer and another percussionist. In the spirit of playing to the University crowd, he wore a Bucknell sweatshirt.

As a newly established artist, one might have expected Mraz to perform only the twelve songs from his album, "Waiting for My Rocket to Come." Instead, Mraz played a great deal of older material from his early days performing in Virginia,

New York and California.

The first song Mraz performed was not one of his own, but a cover of the Lionel Richie song "Stuck on You." This song exhibited much of the laid-back, jazzy style and harmonizing achieved by Mraz and backup singer Toca Rivera that held throughout the set.

The backdrop for Mraz's performance was an image from the cover of his album, with the bumper of a car visible on one side of the stage. When the lights were lowered, lyrics from Mraz's songs and hidden images appeared.

During the middle of his set, Mraz performed alone on stage with an acoustic guitar. Opening act

Tristan Prettyman joined him onstage for a duet on guitar and vocals.

Mraz exhibited great skill in singing, rapping, guitar playing and jazz-inspired scatting. During the song "The Dream- Life of Rand McNally," he led the audience in a jazz call-and-response, singing one line of scat and encouraging the audience to repeat it. During that song, Mraz sang alternate lyrics with amusing references to the University and to Michael Jackson and his recent legal trouble.

Jean Wells '06 watched Jason Mraz's set from a seat after being on the floor for the other acts.

"I liked his music better, it was more laidback and relaxing," Wells said.

All of the members of Mraz's back-up band performed exciting, skillful solos, including several snaky, complicated synthesizer solos by the keyboardist.

Adam Clark '05 loved the Ataris' performance, but did not have the same enthusiasm for Jason Mraz.

"[The Ataris] really rocked the place. I think that Jason Mraz should have opened for them," Clark said.

Though the energy level of both the performers and the crowd were at their highest for the Ataris, the stage volume remained high throughout.

Daniel Miller '06, attending his first University-sponsored rock concert, thought the high decibel levels took away from the performance.

Tristan Prettyman began the concert and performed later in a duet with Jason Mraz.

"It was so loud it was unpleasant. Since it was inside, the sound echoed everywhere," Miller said.

Overall, the Fall Concert was a wide-ranging, exhausting event. With the doors opening at 7 p.m., four artists performing and break down/set-up time between each performance, many fans on the arena floor were standing for more than five hours. The Sojka Pavilion emptied out fairly quickly after Mraz finished performing, and many attendees bypassed the merchandise tables and headed out for some much-needed rest after an intense concert experience.

The heavy-metal band Hopesfall opened for Mraz.

The Ataris' performance at the concert included well-known songs that inspired crowd surfers and received applause.

CAT IN THE HAT ROCKS THE BOX

Courtesy of Catinthehat.com

"Dr. Seuss' The Cat in the Hat" finished No. 1 at the box office last weekend. The movie, based on the popular children's book, features Mike Myers as its title character.

JAMAICA

Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience

Packages from Philly or BWI starting at:

Call $529
1.800.733.6347

Sell trips, earn cash, travel free!!
Book before Dec. 15 and save!!

Group Discounts
Bucknell...

Live life the Beach Life Way!

www.BeachLifeVacations.com
1.800.733.6347

Call Today!!

University dance program to hold colorful annual concert

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The University Dance Program will present its annual Dance Concert Friday and Saturday night. This show highlights student and faculty performers and choreographers in a collaboration of different dance styles and techniques.

The program contains eight pieces, separated by a brief intermission.

A guest choreographer, Simone Ferro, choreographed the first piece, "Waiting in the Aisles."

"She was my replacement when I was on sabbatical last year. Right now she is teaching at the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee," Dance Program Director Er-Dong Hu said.

This piece works as a narrative according to Dance Company President Sarah Kiser '04. "It unfolds as a story," Kiser said. "The dancers use chairs, and it's light and fun."

Kiser herself choreographs "In the End..." the second piece of the evening.

"This piece is about everything that I've learned at dance. The passion I feel towards the art form I display on stage," Kiser said.

"Women of Will," the third dance in the set, was choreographed by Visiting Professor Kelly Knox.

Knox, who is celebrating her first semester with the dance company, was inspired by female Shakespearean characters for this dance.

"It's Shakespeare from a female point of view," Knox said. "It's a comment on how we as women have learned how to be through literature and history."

The dance features three literary characters: Juliet, Ophelia and Lady MacBeth.

The final performance before intermission uses a Janet Jackson tune, and is choreographed by Kara Lewis '05.

"This is a fun jazz piece... and a nice break before intermission," Kiser said.

The last half of the performance begins with "Concertante" a dance choreographed by guest performer Jessica Lang.

"It's a modern piece to Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata," Kiser said.

Lang hails from Juilliard in New York City, and those involved with the concert seem to cherish the opportunity to work with her.

"It has been a phenomenal experience for all of us," Knox said.

Courtesy of Kelly Knox

Hu choreographs the next two pieces in the evening's performance. The first, "Shall We Dance?" is a tango in which Hu will also be performing.

"One thing that's special to me about this is that I'm going to dance. Professor Kelly and I choreographed a tango piece together, and we will be performing our own piece," Hu said.

"It's a really cool way to welcome Kelly into the company," Kiser said.

Knox adds that this dance is symbolic of her reception into the company.

"It feels like his welcoming me into the program," she said. "We are being a part of - not above or superior to - but a part of the company."

The second done by Hu is "To . . . Illuminate," a piece that combines modern dance techniques with traditional Chinese music. This dance also utilizes candlesticks to light the stage.

"Once Upon a Time," the final piece of the evening was put together by student choreographer Victoria Willers '04. This piece is also modern in nature and also depicts a narrative through dance.

"She uses masks on the backs of the faces. It's very theatrical and a cool modern piece," Kiser said.

Those involved with the performance view it as a culmination of their work, and an opportunity to showcase this work to the campus community.

"The key is to see how to make the program grow and involve the Bucknell community," Hu said.

Furthermore, the concert brings an awareness to campus of this diverse and difficult art form.

"We are making people aware of the art and all the different styles of dance," Knox said. "It's a global perspective of dance - there's a little bit of everything."

Hu enjoys watching not only the development of the program and art form, but of the students involved in the concert as well.

"I'm very pleased to work with the student choreographers," Hu said. "It's wonderful to watch the students grow artistically and become more artistic and more mature."

Doors open for the performance at 8:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday night. The show will be presented in the Harvey Powers Theater.

January 30, 2004

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside

Volume 133, Number 1

Features:

The Little League Museum, located in Williamsport, is this week's pick for "What to do in the middle of nowhere?"

See page B9

Hill garners first Grammy nomination

Courtesy of Bucknell.edu
Professor of Music Jackson Hill's composition is part of a Grammy-nominated CD.

BY ALYSON WALKER
Senior Editor

Professor of Music Jackson Hill's composition, "Voices of Autumn," is part of the Grammy-nominated CD, "Our American Journey" recorded by Chanticleer, a male a cappella vocal ensemble. The album is nominated in the "classical crossover" category.

"Voices of Autumn" is based on a ninth century Japanese poem that Hill translated.

"[The work was] very strongly influenced by Asian music, and Japanese music in particular," Hill said, according to a University news release.

Hill employed Japanese techniques, such as glissandos, static harmonies, and a pentatonic scale, and integrated them with the traditional European classical style. These techniques are part of traditional Asian music, including chant and Japanese imperial court music.

Hill believes the Grammy nomination gives works like "Voices of Autumn" greater visibility and demonstrates the different styles of music that can be appreciated.

"What I see the nomination doing is acknowledging the notion that we are really living in a culturally global world right now," Hill said, according to a University news release. "It shows

See GRAMMY page A2

Campus wireless options increase

BY KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

Several new wireless zones have been added the past two semesters on campus. Students can now access the University network without the use of Ethernet cords anywhere in the Bertrand Library, the Career Development Center, Hunt Formal, several lounges in McDonnell and Vedder halls and on the third floor of Taylor Hall.

In the past, the wireless option was only offered in the Bison, Bostwick Dining Hall and select parts of the library and Dana Engineering.

The University will most likely appropriate $50,000-$100,000 per year for the next five years to broaden and update wireless options. New zoning will require a lot of construction accessibility. Extensive wiring and the installment of 55 new "concentrators," on top of the 33 now used by the University, are needed to make prospective

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian
Lounges in McDonnell hall are now wireless. The University is moving toward an entirely wireless campus.

wireless areas function.

Many students purchase and bring laptops to the University especially for wireless connection capabilities, so more wireless options are a necessary response to the growing

See WIRELESS page A2

Courtesy of Reuters

James Brown to perform at Chrysalis

BY MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

The man who brought you "I Feel Good," the man who brought you "Sex Machine," and the man, James Brown, will bring his soul to the University.

Brown was arrested Wednesday night on charges of battery. According to Associate Dean of Students Karl Conrad, the University is still considering whether or not to allow Brown to perform if he is found guilty.

Bucknell Student Government (BSG), in conjunction with Activities and Campus Events (ACE), have announced that Brown will perform at Chrysalis 2004. He will be cranking out the dance music at the tradition-

See BROWN page A4

Kennedy an accomplice to Carr in shooting

BY SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

The Lewisburg Police Department (LPD) arrested 20-year-old Antwan Terrell Kennedy on Dec. 11, 2003 on charges of being an accomplice to four October, 2003 pellet-gun shootings that targeted four University two of which were injured.

Nineteen-year-old Joshua B. Carr was arrested in October for the assaults and later implicated Kennedy. Carr denied his right to a preliminary judicial hearing shortly before Kennedy's arrest.

Both Carr and Kennedy are temporarily suspended from the

See SHOOTING page A3

Presidential search continues

BY SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

The community welcomed Cornelius M. Kerwin and Elaine P. Maimon, candidates for the 16th presidency of the University, to campus this week. The third and final candidate, Brian Mitchell, will arrive on campus Feb. 1.

"We interviewed a number of candidates, we felt these were the best, and most importantly, any of them could become the next president of Bucknell," Presidential Search Committee Chair Norman E. Garrity '63 said.

The Board of Trustees commissioned the Presidential Search Committee after the retirement announcement of University President Steffen H. Rogers in May 2003. With the help of the Academic Search Consultation Service, the committee narrowed down a pool of over 50 applicants to these three candidates it believes are most qualified and well suited to the University.

Each candidate's campus visit included a host of tours, meetings with different campus constituencies and an open forum, during which members of the community had the opportunity to question the candidates.

"I think the forums have been very effective in enabling the campus to interact with each of the three candidates," Presidential Search Committee Student Representative Katy Timer '04 said.

The open forum is a new and well-received element to the presidential search process. Previously, the campus community was not given the opportunity to meet the candidates.

"It would have been unproductive just to see resumes on e-resumes," Charles Mitchell '05 said. "I felt some things came across at the forums that would not have without seeing the candidate in person."

Students, faculty, administrators and staff met Kerwin in person Monday afternoon at his open forum and Maimon on Wednesday afternoon. Both began the forums by describing their interest in the University and beliefs in a liberal arts education.

"I am here because I believe the presidency of a high-quality liberal arts university is the highest achievement in my profession," Kerwin said. "Liberal arts education provides the best preparation for life."

Maimon is ready to return to

See MLK page A4

Black Panther speaks during MLK celebration

BY JULIE LESKO
News Editor

Bobby Seale, co-founder of the Black Panther Party, claims that to end racism in our culture, society must break down racist feelings as a process of evolution.

Seale, who was the keynote speaker during the University's Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration Tuesday, lectured to a crowd of students the LC Forum.

Seale, inspired by the leaders Martin Luther King Jr., Nelson Mandela and Malcolm X, created the Black Panther Party while attending Merritt College, and he tried to capture the attention of the black community. An integration of culture into the educational process helped to start the African-American studies program at Merritt College.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Bobby Seale spoke to students during the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. celebration.

Seale attempted to unite the people who were previously conducting "weak street rallies" in order to protest effectively and to gain equality for all.

Seale offered a first-hand account of the

See MLK page A4

First-year student deployed to Iraq

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Steve Chronowski '07 will join American troops in Iraq within the next two weeks.

BY BRIANNA EVENS
Staff Writer

Steve Chronowski '07, a member of the National Guard, will be deployed to Iraq within the next two weeks.

Affected by the Sept. 11, 2001 terror attacks, Chronowski joined the National Guard while he was still in high school.

"Joining the National Guard was something he wanted and thought he needed to do for his country," said Ann Chronowski, Steve's mother.

Chronowski, the first and only University student to be deployed to Iraq in this conflict, left the University at the end of fall semester to serve with his unit of the National Guard.

Upon finishing his finals, Chronowski returned to his home in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania to be with his family for the holidays. Chronowski, a chemical engineer, is part of the 1st Battalion, 109th Field Artillery. Nine hundred members of the Pennsylvania National Guard are being deployed; 124 are from his hometown unit.

Chronowski left to begin training at Fort Dixon in New Jersey on Dec. 30, 2003. Since

See IRAQ page A3

PIPES BURST IN CAREY HOUSE

Photos courtesy of Ryan Bower

Sprinkler pipes broke in Carey House Jan. 10, causing flooding and water damages in two rooms. Personal damages have totaled approximately $800.

Study Abroad

Merisa Levine '05 write about the culture she has been experiencing in England.

See page A10

Track and Field

Track pulls through late in Bucknell Octagonal to sweep the event.

See page B1

Presidential Lies?

Writer Jake Palley '04 argues that U.S. President George W. Bush exaggerated information to persuade the American public to support the war in Iraq.

See page A7

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Jan. 18

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Ziegler Health Center for the report of a student having chest pains. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital for treatment. He later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that glass was broken on a vending machine located in Larison Hall. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined the Plexiglas had been broken from the outside and several food items had been removed. The remaining items were removed and turned over to Billing's Vending Service. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Sojka Pavilion for the report of an ill student. The student signed a waiver of medical treatment and was transported to her residence hall.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that two rolls of quarters and a container with approximately ten dollars in change was removed from his secured room in Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity. The incident is under investigation.

ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. No odor could be detected and the incident was determined to be unfounded.

Monday, Jan. 19

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / POSSESSION—Public Safety Officers responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of hard liquor in a room. Upon arrival, Public Safety Officers identified two students who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Public Safety confiscated 10 bottles of liquor, one bottle of wine and 62 cans/bottles of beer. Both students were cited for underage consumption and possession of alcohol.

INFORMATION / MISSING PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of a missing wallet. A student had been at several locations on campus throughout the day and could not locate his wallet. Public Safety advised the individual on reporting bank/credit cards missing.

ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of someone using marijuana. Upon arrival, Public Safety noted a strong smell of marijuana coming from the room. Upon investigation, Public Safety identified four students who admitted to smoking marijuana. Several baggies of marijuana, a marijuana pipe and a marijuana grinder were confiscated. Lewisburg Police Department responded. The students will receive state and University citations.

Tuesday, Jan. 20

INFORMATION / RECOVERED STOLEN PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Gateway Viddinghoff, for the report of a fire alarm activation caused by burning food that had been extinguished with a fire extinguisher. Public Safety observed a Kentucky Fried Chicken picture believed to be taken from the local store. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified and advised they would respond the next day. Charges are pending.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—While on routine patrol, Public Safety Officers observed Lewisburg Police Department with a female by Bucknell Hall. Upon investigation, a Lewisburg Police Department officer reported that he had observed the female having extreme difficulty walking. The individual was identified as a student who was intoxicated and in need of medical attention. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment and cited for public drunkenness. The individual later returned to campus.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male on Seventh Street who was having difficulty walking. Upon investigation, the male was identified as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. The individual was cited for underage consumption.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / VANDALISM / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male break a blue light on an Emergency phone on Seventh Street. Public Safety Officers initiated a pedestrian stop and identified the male as a student. The student admitted to breaking the light and to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. He was cited for public drunkenness, vandalism and underage consumption. The student will be charged for the damages.

ASSIST POLICE / ALCOHOL VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to the Lewisburg Police Department to assist with a student who had been running outside without shoes and screaming. The female was intoxicated and argumentative with police. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus. The female was cited for underage consumption, public drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

INFORMATION / DAMAGED PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that his personal computer in his residence hall was damaged by excessive power outages. Facilities will conduct a power assessment. The Office of Housing and Residential Life was notified.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that a video game machine and various games that he had stored in a friend's unsecured room in Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity over winter break were missing. Another student in the same building reported that his X-Box video game machine and two games were also missing from his secured room. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—A student reported to Public Safety that he wanted to document a request from another student asking him not to contact her in the future in case there would be any problem. A report was filed.

INFORMATION / OFFENSIVE CONDITION—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for the report of a blow-up female sex doll hanging from the flagpole. University officials authorized entry through a locked room to remove the doll.

Wednesday, Jan. 21

INFORMATION / HARASSMENT—A student reported to Public Safety that two students from his residence hall were harassing him by calling his cell phone while he was away from campus, banging on his door and entering his room to wrestle with him. In addition, the student believes they damaged his vehicle while it was parked at an off-campus location. The male was advised to contact the Lewisburg Police Department about the damaged vehicle. The Office of Housing and Residential Life met with the student to consider a change of residence. The incident is still under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of damage to a tree and the porch railing at Cemetery House. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—Public Safety responded to Hunt Hall for the report of a missing Casio keyboard, MP3 player and CD/MP3 player. The room window was not secure. The incident is under investigation.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety Officers responded to Lit Road for the report of a vehicle accident. An employee, driving a University vehicle, backed from a parking space and struck another employee's personal vehicle. No injuries were sustained and the vehicles had minor damage. The drivers exchanged information.

Wednesday, Jan. 21

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed two male students fighting in the snow behind 23 University Avenue. Both students admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21 years. Both were charged with underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male student urinating in the bushes at the rear of Vedder Hall. Upon investigation, Public Safety Officers determined that the student consumed alcohol although under the age of 21. Both students were issued citations for underage consumption and one for disorderly conduct.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) did damage the right rear quarter panel of her vehicle while it was parked in the Bucknell West parking lot. The incident is under investigation.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety Officers responded to South Seventh

Street near Procurement Services for the report of a motor vehicle accident that occurred when one vehicle, operated by a student, attempted to exit a parking space and was struck by a passing vehicle. The occupants of the vehicles did not sustain injuries; however, one vehicle was extensively damaged. Lewisburg Police Department responded. The drivers exchanged information.

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATION—An employee reported to Public Safety that she had received a harassing voice mail at her office phone. The incident is under investigation.

ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Upon arrival, Public Safety noted a strong smell of marijuana coming from a room. Upon investigation, Public Safety identified one male student who admitted to smoking marijuana. A glass jar with marijuana, three baggies with marijuana residue inside and two bottles of liquor were confiscated. Lewisburg Police Department responded. The student will be cited for alcohol and drug violations.

Thursday, Jan. 22

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke an exterior door window at Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety Officers responded to Lit Road for the report of a vehicle accident. An employee, driving a University vehicle, backed from a parking space and struck another employee's personal vehicle. No injuries were sustained and the vehicles had minor damage. The drivers exchanged information.

MISSING PROPERTY—An employee reported to Public Safety that she could not locate a key ring with six University keys. She stated that she last saw the keys in her Marts Hall Office. The incident is under investigation.

Friday, Jan. 23

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety stopped a student at the rear of Vedder Hall. Upon investigation, it was determined that the student was intoxicated. The individual was cited for public drunkenness.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety Officers responded to a fire alarm activation at Swartz Hall. Upon arrival, Public Safety Officers determined that the resident of the room fell asleep while making popcorn. Student cited for disorderly conduct and failure to vacate the room during a fire alarm.

INFORMATION / PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety Officers responded to Harris Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by a broken sprinkler head that caused water damage in the building. Upon investigation, Public Safety Officers determined that a student was throwing darts and accidentally hit the sprinkler head. Facilities will assess the water damage. A citation was issued for disorderly conduct. The student will be charged for the damages.

Professor of music up for Grammy

GRAMMY From page A1

that the amalgam of European and Asian traditions, as in "Voices of Autumn," is really a viable vocabulary."

Associate Professor of Music William Kenny said the nomination not only increases awareness about Hill's composition but also acknowledges the quality of Hill's work.

"Professor Hill is receiving international recognition for his compositions. Even before the nomination, Chanticleer's exceptional recording of Professor Hill's work helped his music reach new audiences," Kenny said. "But the nomination certainly brings even greater recognition—recognition which is greatly deserved."

Performances of "Voices of Autumn" by Chanticleer have received acclaim from critics, including The Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Jackson Hill's Japanese-inspired 'Voices of Autumn' drew some of the evening's longest applause—after the audience sat in silence when the work was finished, perhaps taking it all in. Elegant in its simplicity—the work draws from Japanese traditional music and chant—the result was a gorgeous soundscape. [Chanticleer's] voices fusing together like watercolors," The New York Times also wrote that "Jackson Hill's 'Voices of Autumn' was all glowing harmony."

National Public Radio and the British Broadcasting Channel radio plays the Chanticleer CD and performances of Hill's works, respectively. Hill has received commissions for new works from different ensembles.

"Renowned ensembles are commissioning Professor Hill to compose new works, with the most recent commission coming from The King's Singers," Kenny said.

The Grammy Awards will be held on Feb. 8. "Our American Journey" is one of five CDs nominated in the "classical crossover" category.

Hunt, CDC offer wireless capabilities

WIRELESS From page A1

demand. Professors have also begun to gear more of their curriculum and assignments toward Internet resources, according to Brian Hoyt, director of technology integration at Information Services and Resources.

"The marketplace has changed drastically," Hoyt said. "Laptops are still slightly more expensive [than desktop computers], but not radically more expensive, so students are thinking, 'for a couple of hundred dollars more, I can get a laptop and go anywhere with it.'"

The new concentrators of wiring cause "pockets" of wireless zones to appear in nearby areas beyond the new areas that extend indoors. Students will be able to find access to the Internet outside of the designated areas as the connection begins to leak and expand.

"It's like anything else," Hoyt said. "Every five years or so, we will have to replace the technology."

Many students are in favor of wireless Internet connections, and there is general support for the convenience of wireless access for students who need their computers in several places throughout campus.

"I think it's great for students to have that kind of freedom and comfort and choice in the place where they get to study," said Katie Parker, a graduate student who works at the Bertrand Library reference desk.

For those accustomed to using the wireless option in the past, the new zones offered provide laptop users with more options, students said.

"I think it's good; it just makes things easier because I don't know if some of those places [around campus] have regular hook-ups for your computer. I've used it in the library before, and it can be really convenient," Casey Derbyshire '07 said.

Now Hiring...

ALDI INC.

- ✓ Stocker Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
- ✓ Flexible AM hours
- ✓ $7.50 an hour wage

+ Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.

110 E 8TH AVE

SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trauman associates, inc.
promotional products - fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards - trophies - business gifts

800-538-8009

Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009

www.tapcomopromotions.com

Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!

GOOD ON ANY APPAREL

ORDER

(minimum 36 pieces)

McGuire appointed to school board

Bucknellian archives

Michael McGuire '07 has been elected to the Lewisburg school board after a vacancy opened up soon after the Nov. 4 election. McGuire ran in the last election, but was defeated.

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Staff Writer

After three rounds of voting, Michael McGuire '07 was appointed to the Lewisburg School Board on Dec. 11, 2003, six months after he first began his campaign journey. McGuire, an alumnus of Lewisburg Area High School and former student representative to the school board, fills the opening left by Dr. George Miller and will serve until the end of 2005.

After graduating high school, McGuire tried to continue his involvement with Lewisburg's school district by running for a seat on the board, but was twice defeated. Miller's vacancy provided him a third opportunity.

At a special meeting in December, McGuire and Robert McCormack, CEO and President of Sunbank, met for the vacancy. The board voted twice and the result was a split 4-3 for McGuire. Later, McCormack voluntarily withdrew and chose to support McGuire.

"I was really surprised since [McCormack] was a candidate," McGuire said. "I didn't really expect it, but I was really excited that he chose to support me instead [of running]."

The board members then unanimously elected McGuire, who was immediately sworn in by Board President Michael Derman.

"I know the board's main concern about appointing me was my inexperience with finance and ledger [bookkeeping]," McGuire said. "Mr. McCormack offered to help me understand the budget when we look at that this year."

Budget concerns include the consideration of raising taxes.

"We haven't really gone in depth with the budget yet, but I know that it is hard to maintain the programs we have now with the current budget," McGuire said.

McGuire said financing, managing, personnel and especially the budget are areas he needs to learn the most about. The budget is only one of the many issues McGuire will face with the board in his new position.

"[The board] is looking to update [the schools'] curriculum to match state standards—for example rearranging the order students get instruction in civics, world history and American history to make sure they are prepared for the corresponding tests," McGuire said. "I am more confident about these issues than the budget, but I know I still have a lot more to learn. It will take a while, but I think I can manage it."

McGuire said he is prepared to balance his school work with his duties to the school board.

"I can't neglect my board responsibilities or my school ones—I will make sure I can [do both]," McGuire said. "I will just have to sacrifice some of the things I do for leisure."

Taylor Voeltz '07 commends McGuire on his dedication.

"Good for him that he finally got what he wanted after he worked hard enough," Voeltz said.

Mike Reynolds '06 said he sees the importance of student participation in local civic affairs.

"It is nice to see a Bucknell student taking an active role in the Lewisburg community," Reynolds said.

After attending two meetings already, McGuire has gotten a feeling for his new position.

"It feels different—I am in a totally different role than I was seven months ago," McGuire said. "But I am up for the challenge and look forward to serving."

Pellet Shooting Update

SHOOTING From page A1

University, Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said.

According to Police Chief William R. Neitz Jr., the arrest of Kennedy does not complete the investigation. Neitz expects the LPD to continue gathering information "for some time."

Kennedy allegedly shot one student who was walking through the quad between Hunt Hall, Vedder Hall, Larison Hall and Harris Hall from a room in Larison Hall, lodging the pellet in the student's back, with a gun belonging to Carr.

Carr allegedly fired the other three shots, impaling one student in the back, striking another student's belt and hit-

Bucknellian archives

These holes were left in Larison by stray shots from the pellet gun shootings last fall. Carr was arrested in October for the assaults and has since implicated Kennedy as well.

ting a Larison window frame, narrowly missing the head of a third student.

Both students struck in the back required medical attention, but doctors were unable to remove the pellets because they were lodged too deeply in the muscular tissue.

The victims say they are thankful that the injuries sustained were not life-threatening and did not significantly hinder their educations.

"While this has not affected my experience, it did blur my focus for a while. I can only say that we are all happy that there were no fatalities, which would have had an effect on our University," one victim said.

Carr allegedly purchased the weapon, capable of firing pellets at 1,000 feet per second, from Wal-Mart after Fall break, according to The Daily Item.

The University explicitly prohibits all firearms and projectile weapons, according to the Student Handbook, and violators face penalties ranging from temporary confiscation of the weapon to permanent expulsion.

If either Carr or Kennedy wishes to return to the University, students, faculty and staff sitting on the Community Judicial Board will hear his case and make the decision about their futures at the University. Since this information is subject to subpoena, the Community Judicial Board hearing will not occur until after all legal proceedings are complete, in order to protect the students, Ferraro said.

Lewisburg District Justice Leo Armbruster arraigned Kennedy for two counts of aggravated assault and four counts of criminal conspiracy to commit the assaults. He was committed to Union County Jail on $250,000 bail.

Previously, Armbruster charged Carr with four counts of aggravated assault, four counts of aggravated assault with a weapon, possession alcohol and possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia. Armbruster set Carr's bail at $200,000 for the assault charges and $1,000 for the marijuana and alcohol possession.

Although most University students living in downhill residence halls said they did not feel threatened at the time of the shootings, they are relieved that the arrests of Carr and Kennedy have brought the incidents closer to resolution.

"I do not feel a modicum of increased safety with the ordeal coming to a close," said Vedder Hall resident Michael Piekný '06. "Certainly it's nice to have something like this end, but having never felt threatened in the first place, little has changed."

Chronowski '07 to fight in Iraq

IRAQ From page A1

he has been there, he has been training to be part of the military police and to be a convoy escort. Upon arriving in Iraq, he will be stationed at a base in southern Iraq, 180 miles southeast of Baghdad. Chronowski's main duty will be to guard supply convoys from brought from Kuwait.

Chronowski remains committed to the military, but misses his friends at the University.

"His spirits are good. He can't wait to get to Iraq but he can't wait to get back to Bucknell either. I think that was the hardest thing for him to do because he loves the school and made such good friends," Ann Chronowski said.

Before leaving Bucknell, students and staff held a surprise going-away party for Chronowski. They made banners, letters and cards for him. His mother said the box of cards he received from friends and hallmates meant a lot to him. He brought some of the gifts with him to Fort Dixon.

Chronowski's family has been able to visit him on the weekends since he left at the end of the December.

"He looks good and feels good," Ann

Chronowski said. "He thinks about you [University students] all the time. I joke with him that he probably thinks about his friends more than his mom!"

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Chronowski will be leaving Bucknell for Iraq within the next two weeks. While he is committed to serving, he will miss his friends here at the University and hopes to return soon.

Chronowski is not the only one who misses friends—his friends here at the University are thinking about him constantly. Some of his closest friends have even been able to keep in touch with him since he left.

"Last time I talked to him he was sitting on top of a humvee after driving around the woods of New Jersey, taking a break," Liz Lorson '07 said. "He's definitely not forgotten. It's just like something's missing."

As Chronowski has described to his friends, the fort he is training at feels like a "third-world college" because the food is not great, he sleeps in a bunk and it is a lot of work. He has told them that he feels like he has had enough training and that he would rather go to Iraq and get back instead of waiting around. After deployment, Chronowski expects to remain 9-18 months in Iraq.

"It didn't really kick in until we got back [after break], and he wasn't here," Tom Wagner '07 said.

Chronowski understands his responsibility to the military but eagerly awaits his return to campus. Chronowski plans to graduate with his friends of the Class of '07.

His friends, family and others that know him wish him a safe return. Yellow ribbons line the hallway of Smith 2C in honor of Chronowski and others involved in the war.

If anyone wishes to write Chronowski, please address a letter to either Liz Lorson (C3370) or Tom Wagner (C3746) and it will be forwarded to Chronowski.

Presidential search comes closer to conclusion

PRES From page A1

the liberal arts pedagogy that characterized her early career after sharing many of these ideas at Arizona State University.

"I entered the public sector because I thought I should spend some of my life trying to bring some of this ideal type of education to them," Maimon said.

Maimon currently serves as Provost (Chief Campus Executive Officer) of Arizona State University.

West and Vice President of Arizona State University. Previously Maimon worked at Haverford College, Arcadia (formerly Beaver), Brown University, University of Pennsylvania and Queens College.

Maimon earned her B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in English from American University, his M.A. from the University of Rhode Island and his Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University, all in political science. He is currently the Provost and Professor of Public Administration at American University.

Mitchell currently serves as president of Washington & Jefferson College. He received his B.A. from Merrimack College and his M.A. and Ph.D. from University of Rochester in history, concentrating on ethnic and labor history.

Mitchell will conduct his open forum on Monday at 4 p.m. in the Terrace Room.

In addition to stressing a liberal arts curriculum, both Mainan and Kerwin emphasized the need for diversity to complement liberal arts experience during their forums.

"Diversity is elemental to the educational process," Kerwin said. "If you are unprepared to live and work in a diverse world, you have to be prepared to work in a different world."

Throughout his forum, Kerwin defined the importance of academics in preparing students for their futures as what should be the primary goal of the institution and students.

"You come to Bucknell to be educated first and foremost," Kerwin said.

Maimon focused many of her discussions on what she termed the "Bucknell matrix," the integration of all aspects of University life.

"I sense a real desire for integration of perspectives," Maimon said. "We want to have a sense of connection between class work and home."

Faculty, staff and students stimulated other discussions including the reduction of faculty course loads, new academic programs, athletics, student life and the role of the president in each of these areas.

Throughout the search process, the Presidential Search Committee has encouraged an open dialogue among all members of the community.

"It's been exciting to finally talk to other students about how they are receiving the candidates," Timmer said.

Students are eager to discuss their opinions of characteristics the next University president should possess, but cautiously critical of the candidates.

"I'd like to have someone who understands what is going on in academics and with student life," Mitchell said. "I did not feel Kerwin was as receptive to student concerns as a president should be."

Scott Messinger '06 worries not all pertinent topics were covered.

"I got the feeling Maimon could take the University places," Messinger said. "But she did not present concrete examples of Bucknell's faults."

The search committee also hopes to stimulate campus input by making evaluation forms available for those wishing to offer feedback on the candidate. The search committee members representing each campus constituency will summarize the comments.

"The evaluations from anyone who attended—staff, students, faculty—will be of great value to the committee when determining how each candidate fits in at Bucknell," Timmer said.

"It has been really exciting to have an open search process so that the decision the committee makes is based upon a larger amount of input from campus."

The search team will use this information in its compilation of all of the information gathered from its committee interviews, campus interviews and candidate background checks before its final meeting on Feb. 23. At this meeting the committee will decide which candidates will be presented to the board of trustees.

According to Garrity, the committee expects to present all three candidates to the board of trustees on Feb. 25.</

News

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Julie Lesko
Courtesy of MSNBC.COM

Dean replaces his campaign manager

BURLINGTON, Vt.—Former Vermont Governor Howard Dean shook up his faltering bid for the White House on Wednesday, replacing his campaign manager with a longtime associate of former U.S. Vice President Al Gore.

Probe clears Blair; BBC chairman quits

LONDON—A judge cleared Great Britain's Prime Minister Tony Blair's administration Wednesday of any direct involvement in the suicide of a government expert on Iraqi weapons, but the BBC came under fire for its reporting of the scandal, prompting its chairman, Gavin Davies' to resign. The British Broadcasting Corp.'s board of governors said it accepted Davies' resignation "with great reluctance and regret."

Arms inspector urges probe of prewar intelligence

WASHINGTON, DC—The former top U.S. weapons inspector in Iraq encouraged Congress on Wednesday to examine the "fundamental false analysis" that led to the conclusion that Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction, a primary justification by President Bush for the war in Iraq. But he reiterated that he did not believe intelligence analysts were pressured to draw that conclusion.

Biotech food rules getting USDA review

WASHINGTON—Worried about the inadvertent spread of new bioengineered plants that produce drugs and chemicals, the Agriculture Department said it would revise rules and study whether or not to adopt a risk-based system to protect the environment and food supply.

Exxon told to pay $4.5 billion for Valdez spill

NEW YORK—A federal judge has ordered Exxon Mobil Corp. to pay $4.5 billion in punitive damages—a higher figure than previously awarded—plus $2.25 billion in interest because of the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil tanker spill, the lead plaintiff's attorney said Wednesday.

U.S.A. unveils cyber warning system

WASHINGTON—Aiming to increase Internet security, the government is now offering Americans free cyber alerts and computer advice from the Homeland Security Department.

Challenger memorial on Mars

On the 18th anniversary of the Challenger disaster, NASA confirmed Wednesday that the Opportunity rover's landing site on Mars was being named Challenger Memorial Station in honor of the shuttle's seven fallen astronauts.

Brain lesions found in migraine sufferers

Researchers have identified brain lesions in migraine victims, a finding that could indicate the severe headaches are a progressive brain-damaging disease in some cases, a study said Tuesday.

No more kishka? Mad cow rules hit ethnic delicacies

The discovery in December 2003 of the first case of mad cow disease in the United States prompted USDA this month to put a stop to human consumption of cattle intestines, impacting ethnic foods that use intestines and other cattle organs.

U.S. releases juveniles from Guantanamo prison

Three juveniles have been released from the military prison in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and returned to Afghanistan after more than a year in captivity, the Pentagon announced Thursday.

Father of Jackson accuser seeks custody of son

LOS ANGELES—The father of the boy at the center of the Michael Jackson child molestation case sought joint custody of his son Tuesday, citing in part the charges against the pop star.

CBS defends scrubbing Super Bowl ad

NEW YORK—CBS on Wednesday defended its decision not to air an ad attacking U.S. President George Bush during Sunday's Super Bowl telecast despite objections from some U.S. congressmen who called the move an affront to free speech.

Fed leaves short-term rates unchanged

Faced with mixed signals on growth and fresh evidence the economy is failing to create new jobs, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and his colleagues left a key short-term interest rate unchanged at a 46-year low Wednesday.

Winter storm pulls its punches in Northeast

Snowfall across the Northeast tapered off before the morning commute Wednesday as crews plowed through a crunchy glaze of ice from a storm that closed schools for more than a million youngsters and tied up air travel.

Pentagon plans spring Afghan offensive

WASHINGTON, DC—The Defense Department is planning a new offensive in the two-year-old Afghan campaign to stop remnants of the Taliban regime and the al-Qaida terror network, officials said Wednesday, as a second suicide assault on foreign troops in Kabul in as many days killed a British soldier and injured four others.

University participates in MLK celebration

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Co-founder of the Black Panther Party Bobby Seale spoke during the MLK celebration. Many were excited to hear from someone with personal experiences of dealing with inequality.

MLK From page A1

changes that were made regarding cultural norms of the time.

"It was very interesting hearing from a primary source that was actually there rather than hearing it from a scholar," Michael Piekny '06 said.

Many students said they were inspired by the lecture and the events of the day.

"His class message for change encouraged change but re-established belief in the system if used properly," Piekny said.

Seale is currently trying to engage Pennsylvania youth in efforts to ease racial tension.

"Racism grows out of some dumb, stupid insidious fear. When you put us all together, we are basically only two percent different," Seale said.

The day's activities started at noon with a commemorative march that ended in Rooke Chapel. Director of Multi-Cultural Student Services Amy Merena said she was pleased with the attendance sensation of the "I Have a Dream" speech by University Greek organizations, Kappa Alpha Psi and Zeta Phi Beta was presented.

Many students said they appreciated the culture experienced during the Community Dinner.

"I really liked being able to hear the different cappella groups. They were very talented and offered a great change from the normal dinner in the caf," Gloria Clendaniel '07 said.

An interfaith worship service was held following the dinner in Rooke Chapel.

Rabbi Serena Fujita led the service with comments from Associate Dean of Students Linda Thomas-Buchanan, retired Professor of Religion Doug Sturm and representatives from all classes.

Merena said she was pleased with the end product of the celebration.

"Diversity is such an important part of this university and should be celebrated campus wide as a community. Integrating diversity into the fabric of the University is a primary goal. This program inspired many, and we hope to make it a tradition in years to come," Merena said.

Brown to play at Chrysalis

Courtesy of Reuters
Seventy-year-old soul singer James Brown was booked in Aiken, S.C., Wednesday for assault charges made against his 33-year-old wife. Brown is scheduled to play at Chrysalis in April.

BROWN From page A1

al year-end event on Friday, April 30. The date has been changed from May 1 in order to feature "the hardest working man in show biz."

The evening is made possible by generous contributions from BSG and the planning of the ACE Traditions committee.

"We are pleased to help sponsor such a wonderful event. We think James Brown will rejuvenate Chrysalis and attract a lot of students," BSG President John Siwicki '05 said. "We believe this will help unite the campus, and we encourage all students to attend as it should be a show for the ages."

Cell phones banned for drivers of University-owned vehicles

By JULIE LESKO
News Editor

A new University policy had been implemented banning the use of cell phones while operating any University vehicle.

The new policy, effective immediately, is a proactive measure instituted for insurance purposes according to an e-mail sent by Transportation Services Monday.

According to University General Council Wayne Bromfield, the University's insurance provider recently requested that the administration consider the ban.

"Our workers' compensation insurance carrier asked us to consider the ban because they are experiencing a much higher claim and accident rate involving cell phone distractions and worker injuries," Bromfield said.

The University is also preparing for its annual automobile insurance renewal, which requires demonstration of risk management and safety standards, Bromfield said.

There has been no previous report of a problem due to using cell phones while driving, but the ban will insure safety for students and staff of the University.

Student Driver, Paulo Palugod '04 said he understands the need to ban the use of cell phones in University Vehicles.

"The primary responsibility of the student driver is the safety of all of the students in the vehicle and his or her neighbors on the road. There is nothing that could be as important as their protection, and cell phone usage while driving takes attention away from that focus," Palugod said.

"For driver and passenger safety, and upon the recommendations of our insurers, we imposed the ban on operator usage," Bromfield said.

New Editor.
Same Hotness.
Write for news.
Contact Julie at jalesko@

News

The Bucknellian 2004 staff

By ELISABETH SALEMME
Editor-in-Chief

The staff of The Bucknellian looks forward to an exciting year filled with many changes. The Editorial Board will continue to produce award-winning editions of The Bucknellian with improved content and layout designs.

The Bucknellian will continue to provide the campus with exclusive news articles, including Bucknell Student Government election results and updates on University policy changes.

The Bucknellian Editorial Board has chosen to alter its executive structure for 2004. For the past two years, The Bucknellian has been led by one editor-in-chief, one associate editor and one managing editor. This year, Brent Butler '06 and Elisabeth Salemme '06 will lead The Bucknellian as co-editors-in-chief, succeeding former Editor-in-Chief Peter Hackman '04 and former Associate Editor Michelle Dombek '05. Melinda Kummer '05 returns to the paper after a semester abroad in England as managing editor.

The Bucknellian welcomes four new editors to the staff: Julie Lesko '07 as news editor, David LaRoss '05 as business and politics editor and Josh Herwitt '06 and Teri Schlang '07 as sports editors.

The Bucknellian also welcomes back several veteran editors. Meghan Ball '06 will return as news editor, Aaron Hanlon '04 and Keeley Sidow '07 will return as opinions editors, Cecily Cairns '04 will return as sports editor, Ashley Maliken '06 and Becca Wadlinger '06 will return as Features Editors, Catie Heverling '07 and Juliana Pietak will return as arts & entertainment editors and Chris Styers '05 will return as business & politics editor.

Adam Wilcox '06 will return for his second semester as photography editor and Tyler Kidder '05 will join him after a semester on sabbatical.

Dombek will return to The Bucknellian as chief copy editor.

An important change to the The Bucknellian this semester includes digitizing the copy editing system, which will make production much more efficient. We are also in the process of updating our Web site, and our goal is to have each issue posted online soon after it is published.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Back (L-R): Keeley Sidow '07, Juliana Pietak '04, Cecily Cairns '04, Melinda Kummer '05, Tyler Kidder '05, Chris Styers '05, Elisabeth Salemme '06, Brent Butler '06, Ashley Maliken '06, Becca Wadlinger '06, Aly Walker '04, Michelle Dombek '05, David LaRoss '05, Catherine Heverling '07 and Julie Lesko '07.
Front (L-R): Adam Wilcox '06, Josh Herwitt '06, Meghan Ball '06, Peter Hackman '04, Teri Schlang '07 and Sandi-Jo Galati '04.

Retail

Average price
$76/new*
$50/used*

Half.com

Average price
$43/new*
$22/used*

Natural selection.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more!
Simply use this code:
BUCKNELL

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 50% off retail prices. New or used, all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Then let nature take its course.

half.com
by eBay
Same textbooks.
Smarter prices.

Copyright 2003-2004 Half.com. Half.com, the Half.com logo, eBay and the eBay logo are trademarks of eBay Inc. All rights reserved. *Average Retail Price of a New Textbook based on data from Follett Corp. (as reported by The Associated Press in January 2003). Average Retail Price of a Used Textbook based on data from Monument Information Resources. Average Half.com Price for New and Used Textbooks based on an August/September 2003 analysis of over 500,000 books sold on Half.com. Quantities, pricing and availability are not guaranteed and will vary due to supply and demand. Coupon is for first-time buyers only. Limited time offer; excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 1
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elizabeth Salemme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackeman '04
Alyson Walker '04

New Editors
Julie Lesko '07
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Keeley Skow '07

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRoss '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwitz '06
Teri Schlang '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Julianne Pietak '04
Catherine Hoverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dornbeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Marketing Director
Joseph Giordano '05

Adviser
James F. Lee

OP-ED POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian, Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian

EDITORIAL

Students are not children anymore

Childhood was a time of great innocence and little responsibility. It was a time when we had fun on the playground with our friends and a time when we let our decisions be made for us. We are not children anymore.

Two open forums have recently been held at which the two potential candidates for the University presidency spoke to the campus community. While hundreds of faculty members were in attendance, only a few students were present at the events.

Adults assume their own responsibilities while children have someone do that for them. University students are continuing to allow other people to make decisions that affect every aspect of their lives.

Alcohol policies have been the only affairs with which the students have actively been involved.

Earlier in the year an open forum on alcohol was held by members of the administration at Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity; this forum was well-attended by students. In November more than 500 students attended a forum regarding the emergency alcohol measures during which they expressed their disapproval with the decision made by University President Steffen Rogers to create the policy without student input.

The emergency alcohol measures were primarily determined by Rogers, and his successor will have the power to implement such policies that will greatly affect us. Therefore, the recent forums involving the presidential candidates could have major implications in the future of the University.

The fact that only a handful of University students attended these events proves to the administration that the student body is not capable of making decisions, and the administration will equate the students with children. We can never expect to have a voice in important policies if we show continuous apathy and never demonstrate an interest.

The presidential selection process has historically been kept confidential. By holding open forums, the administration has provided us with a rare and extraordinary opportunity to help in the selection of our next president, and this is something of which we need to take advantage.

All who attended the forums were asked to fill out questionnaires regarding two of the three potential candidates. These questionnaires will likely be taken into serious consideration by the selection committee. The faculty's input makes up an overwhelming majority of the completed questionnaires; therefore, the faculty is essentially choosing the University's future president.

Many students foolishly ignore important campus-wide e-mails. There were numerous e-mails sent by the administration as well as Bucknell Student Government regarding the presidential forum, and e-mails are the most effective way the administration has to contact students. Perhaps if future e-mails were sent by a well-known administrator such as Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, students would be more apt to read them.

While it is not the responsibility of the University administration to encourage active student participation, it should aspire for better relationships among students, faculty and administration. These forums are a chance for everyone to be involved in the future of the University.

Christopher Richard—The Bucknellian

Administration troubled over continued drinking infractions

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

A recent campus-wide e-mail from Dean of Students Richard Ferraro reminded University students that, while still in a "state of emergency," the University has continued to struggle with severe alcohol-related infractions. Among these were one D.U.I. incident, two hospitalizations and "several complicated cases of public drunkenness," resulting in five suspensions. In the wake of these unfortunate incidents, the University is considering returning to the less-strict but equally inadequate point-based system. My advice: Don't hold your breath.

Ferraro's e-mail continues to say that the recently implemented emergency policies were "necessarily strict." Further, he wrote "serious cases of alcohol abuse naturally tend to argue for extending the emergency measures." Evidently, parts of the University are also experiencing a logic emergency, which warrants serious attention (especially for the 21-year-olds who have been suspended lately for doing something entirely within the boundaries of the law).

In spite of supposedly "necessary" emergency policies, alcohol-related infractions have continued into the new semester. This should send a message to those who make the rules around here that tightening the reins is not the way to remedy these problems. Telling a relatively large group of sharp, self-confident, free-thinking college students that it can't do something is only going to provoke hundreds of trained problem-solvers to find ways to continue to do what they want to do.

Naturally, some will fall victim to stupidity, misfortune and certainly injustice; thus, five suspensions already this semester. Generally, however, college students are going to drink if they want to, and some are going to get themselves into trouble. There is no need to continue unnecessarily strict policies when they are clearly not working. Unfortunately, some are always going to compromise their own well-being and, in some cases, the well-being of others around them—the University need not compromise the academic futures of its students with harsh suspensions on top of the bad things that experimenting young people do to themselves in college.

Tightening the reins is not the way to remedy these problems.

Of the five suspensions leveled this semester, three have sent first-year students packing. At least one of these students was suspended after having no prior points on his record. This unwillingness to tolerate mistakes (or even one mistake) from our newest and least-accomplished students is paradigmatic of the University administration's reluctance to consider a logical approach to solving alcohol-related problems. Many students, particularly first-years in this case, are learning that the University would rather set them back academically for the sake of being rigid than educate them on their mistakes and give them the rest of the semester to drink intelligently.

When I first arrived at the University, a legendary coach made me quickly aware of the fact that most first-year students have an awful lot to learn about college. Realistically, learning is doing. All of us already know how to sit at home under the supervision of our parents. Allowing us to stick around is at the very least a valuable lesson in self-discipline.

Ferraro concluded his e-mail by suggesting that "staying true to one's self is important." If University administrators can step back and find a way to be true to its college-selves, they might be able to find solutions to some of these problems that are more effective and simultaneously less detrimental to the academic careers of a generally good and healthy rambunctious group of college students.

growing importance of the Latino vote. The answer is to selectively target two southern states, focus on the Midwest and Southwest, and nominate a populist, charismatic Southerner who hasn't spent his whole life in Washington. Sen. John Edwards (D-S.C.), who believes he can compete with Bush in the South, argues that by contesting Bush's base, especially in the Carolinas, he can force Bush to use resources to defend those states instead of overwhelming other swing states with advertising and volunteers. Edwards is the best choice for the party to be able to compete in all regions, but for a different set of reasons.

His moderate voting record in the Senate is more in line with the values of swing voters in the Midwest and Southwest, and, along with his subtle southern drawl, the fact that he hasn't spent the last few decades in Washington will allow him to complete his argument that election is between a president who favors Washington, D.C.

It also can't win the presidency by focusing on the South to the detriment of the real battles in the Midwest and Southwest.

The answer depends on whom you ask. Many party pollsters and pundits argue for abandoning the South and focusing on the Midwest and Southwest, where almost all the contested retake the chamber. Democratic governors in New Mexico and Arizona trumpet their regions' booming population and the

Opinions

Selling the war on Terrorism

Weapons of Mass Destruction?
Iraqi — al-Qaida Connection?
Lies?
Uranium?

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

Sept. 11, 2001, galvanized the nation and transformed the President. In so many words, U.S. President George W. Bush stated that "dead or alive," terrorists worldwide shall answer to American-style justice, and the "War on Terror" began, starting with Afghanistan. Indeed, no U.S. citizen should regret the war path we took against Afghanistan. Al-Qaida operatives are Afghanistan's most dangerous export, and a U.S. occupation to disrupt the network and to establish law and order is, without a doubt, the cornerstone of the "War on Terror."

Then again, even a chimpanzee in office would have done the same thing—the political fallout, the threat of impeachment and the will of the U.S. citizen people against a do-nothing policy would be an unacceptable political nightmare.

Now, Bush tells us in his State of the Union address not to be fooled—terror networks remain strong. Over 500 U.S. troops have died in Iraq fighting for freedom. Just before Christmas, the Bush administration raised the terror alert to orange and canceled dozens of international flights while the United States stood on guard. And yet, just last May, Saddam Hussein was hiding safely in a bunker while Bush declared an end to major combat in Iraq, standing before a banner on the USS Lincoln blaring "mission accomplished."

The United States is no better off with Hussein ousted from Iraq. The United States is no better off with a president that knowingly, or even unknowingly, lies about the existence of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction. The United States is no better off writing blank checks to finance an open-ended war against Iraq, whose true banner should read "mission impossible."

And there's no getting around it. In last year's State of the Union address, Bush condemned Iraq and Hussein on no uncertain terms—the Iraqi leader allegedly sought uranium from Africa, allegedly possessed chemical and biological weapons and allegedly harbored, protected and even would abet al-Qaida members eager to destroy the United States.

These condemnations against Hussein have all stood on shaky ground. When Bush spoke of Iraq's attempts to obtain African uranium, he quoted British intelligence. This claim was not only unsubstantiated by U.S. intelligence, it turns out the intelligence itself is an utter fabrication. Furthermore, Hussein had chemical and biological agents in the '80s, but the '90s were a different story.

It now appeared that Iraq had abandoned the production of illicit weapons and largely eliminated its stockpiles in the 1990's in large part because of Baghdad's concerns about the United Nations' weapons inspection process," former Chief Weapons Inspector Dr. David Kay told The New York Times.

As for a firm link between al-Qaida and Iraq, there simply was none. Secretary of State Colin Powell admitted "that there is no definitive evidence to back up administration statements and insinuations that Saddam Hussein had ties to al-Qaida," reported The New York Times.

Even if al-Qaida did operate in Iraq, Iraq cannot be assumed to be guilty by association, any more than the German or even U.S. al-Qaida operatives implicate their own respective governments.

But there's no way Bush will stand up and say, "Oh, my bad." And, sure enough, nobody should apologize for removing Hussein from power. He's a horrible, horrible man. But that is not the point. The leaders of China, North Korea, Iran, Libya and countless other countries are no better, yet they are treated with diplomacy, not war. As it turns out, Iraqis were in fact terrified of U.N. weapons inspections, proving the United Nations a relevant, viable and multilateral forum of global diplomacy.

The point here is that Bush lied to the country about Iraq's alleged weapons of mass destruction and lied about Iraq's links to al-Qaida. The CIA was unaware of the United Nations' effectiveness. From events after the war's supposed "conclusion," we can see that the administration's post-war planning was grossly misinformed, totally inadequate and, by extension, hopelessly optimistic.

Now we are mired in conflict, subject to horrific bombings and missile attacks with no end in sight, all at the cost of hundreds of billions of dollars to the taxpayer.

The only politically tenable solution for Bush is to turn the country over under the guise of democracy. The only problem that the CIA estimates is that there are well over 50,000 terrorists who actively oppose U.S. occupation in Iraq.

This calls into question the concept of "free and fair elections," as the insurgents can intimidate, induce chaos, spill innocent blood and, in the process, make a mockery of democracy. Iraq is now a prison, for we cannot simply get up and leave. Instead, we must now stay and occupy, as nothing more than sitting ducks in a very hostile environment.

If Bush can have his "axis of evil," then only an "axis of incompetence" can possibly describe the CIA, Bush and his administration. The CIA failed to prevent the Sept. 11, 2001 tragedies and unambiguously assumed Iraq had weapons of mass destruction, despite having no first-hand intelligence to substantiate such claims.

Bush has told us that the "War on Terror" must continue and that he must have our unwavering support if we are to promote his agenda of peace underwritten by paranoia, limited rights and unsustainable military endeavors.

The Bush administration deceived us, recklessly pursuing a war it arrogantly thought it could win, selling the war on a handful of lies, empty promises, unwarranted accusations and, quoting Bush, a "bring 'em on" attitude.

We cannot turn back time, but it is high time we stop deceiving ourselves. Our credibility depends on it.

National primary would place more value on candidate's issues

By KEVIN BROWN
Staff Writer

If you have ever flown to Iowa, two things will become incredibly clear as you approach the airport. First, the in-flight meal isn't agreeing with you, and second, there will be a lot of room to stretch your arms, breathe, walk around naked or do whatever else you're into, without seeing another human being.

This is a wonderful thing if you are hunkering down to write the great American novel or have a talkative volleyball with you, but the fact that this rural area plays a disproportionately large role in determining who will be the president of the United States remains a strange part of an otherwise standard landscape.

As it stands right now, each state has its own presidential primary election or caucus between January and June of a presidential election year. Voters registered in a particular party can vote or, in the case of the caucus system, move around in groups and approximate a vote for their favorite candidate, deciding who will be nominated at the party convention. In theory, this system seems fair; the candidates move from state to state showing each group of voters what type of candidate they are and why voters should choose them.

The media do not give a critical overview of where candidates stand on issues and what that means for the country.

In reality this is not the case, and the result is that the nominations may not reflect the will of the entire nation.

The first two states that hold their primary contests are Iowa and New Hampshire, and neither represent the United States very well. Both states have fewer people below the poverty line than the national average, and are more than 92 percent white, compared with the national average of 69 percent.

Candidates are forced to spend time campaigning in these small states because poor finishes in both of them will result in virtually no campaign contributions. With no monetary backing, the losers will eventually have to withdraw from the race, leaving voters from other states unable to vote for that candidate or even hear his ideas.

The media amplifies the problems with this primary system by focusing on candidates as though polls mattered. Vast amounts of time and space in televised and print media are devoted to how the candidates are polling in key areas as a way to speculate on the outcome, but the media do not give a critical overview of where candidates stand on issues and what that means for the country. Instead of hearing or reading about the pros and cons of John

A national primary election would encourage the nation to focus on the issues.

Kerry's stance on how to deal with the economy versus Howard Dean's stance, we are told that John Kerry has a one-percentage-point lead over the other Democratic contenders in a poll with a 4.5 percent margin of error.

The best way to get a fair electoral system in this country is a national primary election. Voters in the United States registered as a member of a specific political party would go to the polls on the same day and vote for their favorite candidates. Based on those votes, each party would pick its presidential candidate.

This would allow the vote of a person living in New Jersey (primary on June 8, by when most candidates will have been forced to withdraw) and Iowa (caucus last week) to be worth exactly the same amount.

While this setup would not stop the tendency of the media toward horse-race journalism, it would give voters in all states a level playing field.

The media would look at the entire nation and analyze why different candidates are appealing to different areas and which policies could be successful if implemented nationally.

A national primary election would encourage the nation to focus on the issues as a way of separating candidates and allow voters in every state to participate in meaningful and decisive primary elections.

FEATURES

These 'Bison Chips' definitely don't stink

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Each person who attends this fine university has a talent that separates him or her from the rest of the herd. Whether it's the ability to juggle flaming batons while blind-folded or to play the national anthem on a nose harmonica, none among us are without an ability all our own. Some of those talents seem strange and even mildly disgusting, while others are truly enviable. At the University, there is one group of exceptionally talented individuals that leaves many people both awe-struck and totally envious: The Bison Chips, Two Past Midnight and The Silhouettes.

While all three of these groups are obviously gifted in the art of vocal manipulation, as they throw cover of musical instruments and allow their voices to shine, this weekend a special honor will be given to our all-male group. The Bison Chips will travel to the University of Pennsylvania to compete in the quarterfinals of the eighth annual International Collegiate A Cappella (ICCA).

Through ICCA, collegiate a cappella groups have the chance to go beyond the scope of their respective universities and spread the gift of their talents.

"ICCA has been dedicated to providing top-notch college a cappella groups with the opportunity to showcase their talent for an international adjudicator," the organization's Web site boasts.

The Bison Chips were offered the opportunity to compete at this year's competition by filling out the required application and submitting a sample of their melodious tunes. There are 18 separate quarterfinals held throughout the country, and six groups will perform at each competition. The incentive for such intense competition is not only the obvious recognition from peers and fellow a cappellists, but also the possibility of a chance to compete at the finals in New York City against the top five groups in the nation.

"We're excited as a group to go and showcase our talents in this competition," Michael Stone '06 said. "We, as any group would be, are confident in our chances to move to the next round in the competition. Our charisma will hopefully surpass that of other groups."

The ICCA does not separate its participants into different classes based on composition of the group, so the Chips will find themselves pitted against all-female, all-male, and mixed groups. Despite this stiff competition, most members are confident that they have enough talent to take them to the top.

"I feel that we have an edge when it comes to our stage presence and performance habits, especially because these aspects of our group have been continuously developing over the 29 years that we've existed here at Bucknell," Andrew Cox '05 said.

In addition to having this exciting opportunity, the Chips are looking forward to the release of their newest CD, "Appalling and Ridiculous." For anyone dying to get the first copy available, the CD will be on sale at the ICCA competition, but will not be available to the general University public until the group's CD release concert in Rooke Chapel on Feb. 6. Each track has never been previously recorded by the Chips.

"Some [CDs] will be given away during the performance. Most of the recording was done at our studio in Pittsburgh, although two of the tracks are actually live takes from our Spring 2001 Chipfest performance at the Weis Center," Cox said.

The ICCA competition begins at 8 p.m. tomorrow night in Philadelphia.

Wash Tubs

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Totem Tatoo

Area's Finest Custom Tatoo
and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
-State of the Art Body Jewelry-

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100
Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

Burr '04 releases second album

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

People set goals to accomplish them. Some goals are small and intended to be fulfilled in a day, or even a few hours. Others are more long-standing, and are set to guide us through our lives on a certain path. For some talented and motivated individuals, these goals are realized early in life. Such is the case for Andrew Burr '04.

Although Burr is a political

"The day for all believers, for me, is the day I make it, against all odds—the day my dreams come true."

—Andrew Burr '04

science major by trade, his true passion is music. Be it actually playing, song writing, or recording, Burr has taken what most consider a hobby and nursed it into a dream.

"I bought my first guitar Christmas of my freshman year, but didn't become serious about playing—or good enough to manifest my ideas on a guitar—until the summer after my sophomore year," Burr said.

In the four years since Burr picked up his first guitar, he has accomplished more than many aspiring artists will in a lifetime. His first album, "Kalmia," was released in February 2003, and for the past eight months Burr has been working on his second album, "The Day for All Believers."

"I sing and play in every song on 'The Day for All Believers,' but take the most pride in writing the songs and producing the album," Burr said.

Burr records in the studio of a local musician, Kim Reichley. There he works hard to hone his talent as a singer/songwriter and to create a second album, better in musical and production quality than the first.

"My first album gave me knowledge and experience, enough knowledge and experience to return to the studio and lay down a superb second record," Burr said. "Kalmia" also gave me enough encouragement—through strong sales and a solid audience—to convince me that a second record was already overdue."

Photo courtesy of Andrew Burr
For the release of his second album, Andrew Burr '04 spent eight months writing and producing the collection.

"Fifteen of the 20 musicians who worked with me are current or former students of the University. In this regard, 'The Day for All Believers' may be one of Bucknell's most interesting and unusual manifestations, but truly an accomplishment for both the musicians and the institution," Burr said.

"Without them, the album would be of little consequence. Our collaborations on 'The Day for All Believers' pays tribute to the best eight months of my life, and those whom shared that experience with me." Burr's newest accomplishment, which will be available in the bookstore next week, is certainly not to be missed. The following individuals assisted Burr in his production of "The Day for All Believers": Andrew Berg '03, Amanda Brecker '06, Jarred Butto '02, Jeff Clark '03, Sara Close '05, Allison Davies '04, Ben Fisher '05, Kyle C. Goodwin '04, Evan Jones '04, Sean Kirnan '01, Melissa Milanak '03, Steve Mitchell, Luke Morris '03, Emma Pascarella (Smith College), Chris Phillips, Christopher Rapach '06, Kim Reichley, Matthew Talbot '06, Jenelle Walmer (Susquehanna University) and Maggie Williams '05.

RENTALS for BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE JUNE 1, 2004

Large 2 BR APTS AT:
237 3rd & St. George
40 Brown St.

SOME APTS. AVAILABLE FOR IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY

Remodeled, clean, excellent condition, excellent location

RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO CAMPUS!

(570) 966-1488

Cinema Center

Solisgrove - Susquehanna Valley Mall - 274-7049

Play Dates: January 29-February 6, 2004

Mythic River (PG-13)
2, 5, 8, 10
12:20, 2:45, 5:07, 9:15

Lotus: Return of King (PG-13)
11:40, 3:45, 7:50
12:30, 3:00, 6:00, 9:15

Butterfly Effect (R)
1, 4, 6, 50, 9:25
1:15, 3:20, 5:20, 7:20, 9:20

Cold Mountain (R)
1, 4, 50, 8:30
(PG)
11:30, 1:30, 3:30

Chasing Liberty (PG-13)
5:40, 8:20
12:15, 2:30, 4:45, 7, 9:20

Win a Date w/ Tad (PG-13)
12:15, 2:30, 4:45, 7, 9:20
Chaper by the Dozen (PG)
11:30, 1:45, 4, 6:30, 8:50

Calendar Girls (PG-13)
1:30, 4:20, 6:40, 9

Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Units Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

LBRYNWOOD Rentals

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro
412 Market Street, Lewisburg

2003 Wine Spectator Award

New Five Course Tasting menu from around the world

Wednesday-Saturday
Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2, Dinner 5-9

523-8088

Volunteers Needed for Genetics of Anorexia Study

Have you ever had anorexia?
Do you have a relative who has ever had anorexia?

- Interviews may be conducted in person or by telephone.
- No travel necessary.
- All inquiries and interviews are confidential.
- Eligible participants who complete the study will receive $100.

For more information call Sarah at (215) 662-2394 or email slechner@mail.med.upenn.edu

PENN Behavioral Health
University of Pennsylvania Health System

To learn more or volunteer:
www.uphs.upenn.edu/cnb/anorexia.html

Little league's local home base

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Little League Baseball is home base for Major League Baseball players, actors, surgeons, military personnel and even U.S. Presidents. The heart of this institution is not in a major metropolis or major league city. The center of Little League Baseball is found in the same place it began, right here in Central Pa.

The Peter J. McGovern Little League Museum pays tribute to all aspects of Little League, from its humble beginnings to the worldwide organization it has become. The museum is located next to the Little League headquarters in Williamsport, Pa., about 30 minutes north on Route 15.

The museum's namesake is the first president of Little League after it became a corporation. McGovern was president of U.S. Rubber, one of three businesses to sponsor the first three Little League teams in Williamsport in 1939. When the sport began to grow, the city held the first Little League World Series in 1947.

Originally, this series took place in Bowman Field in the city of Williamsport before it moved to its current location in South Williamsport.

"Baseball has been an important thing here in Williamsport," Assistant Director of the museum Adam Thompson said. "We have a lot of people come through here on their way to the major leagues."

The museum opened in 1982 to celebrate this heritage, and 30,000 visitors travel through the museum each year. The majority of them visit during the summer, when the Little League Baseball is in season.

The museum lobby features a look at the museum's beginnings with what the museum advertises as "one of the largest photographic murals in the world," taken at the 1982 Little League World Series. Maps hang from the ceiling, representing the more than 400 countries now involved in the organization, and a fiber optic wall map tells the tale of how and when the

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian
South Williamsport is home to and founding city of the nation's only Little League Museum. Here, the history of a tradition amongst America's youth comes alive.

league grew to its current status.

"We are now the largest and most organized youth sports program," Thompson said. "We have about 40,000 chartered programs. It's a nice organization to work for, especially if you like baseball a lot ... You get to meet a lot of major league players and go to a lot of baseball games."

Showcases and artifacts organized in a timeline display in the next room details the leagues' growth.

The display for 1974, the year girls were first allowed to play in the league, is especially significant—this year marks the 30th anniversary of this benchmark.

Other Little League innovations, such as the aluminum bat, (developed so children wouldn't break them) and the Challenger program for handicapped children, are also showcased in this room.

Interactive equipment can be found on the downstairs level of the museum. Here children—or college students—can test their pitching and hitting, record their running speed, and view how gloves and baseballs are made. A back room houses more league artifacts and can be used for parties or get-togethers.

Award rooms are featured next on the tour. In the first room, winners of annual awards are displayed. The second room, the Hall of Excellence, features photos and biographies of inductees as varied as actors Kevin Costner and Tom Selleck and U.S. President George W. Bush. Other members include journalist Dave Barry, musician Bruce Springsteen, Principal of the Year Michael Pladus, former New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani and several servicemen who were killed in Iraq.

All members have been found on past Little League rosters. According to a museum program, "Enshrinement in the Hall of Excellence is the highest honor given to a Little League graduate and recognizes role models for today's Little Leaguers."

Bush honored with his own showcase displaying his Little League paraphernalia in the front lobby. Bush visited the museum in 2001 and is the first former Little League to become a U.S. president.

While in office, he has brought attention to the sport by sponsoring and participating in tee-ball games for youth on the south lawn of the White House.

The final room on the tour houses information and archives on the Little League World Series, which also takes place in South Williamsport. "Anytime we have a World Series happening, there's usually several big things going on ... there's always something going on in between games and it's all free," Thompson said.

During the off-season, visitors can view clips and pictures of past championship games and even try out their announcing voices.

The series itself takes place directly behind the museum, also located on Route 15. There are two stadiums for the games: Lamade, named after the "local" who donated the land, and Volunteer, named in honor of the countless volunteers who make Little League possible.

From the past to the present, Williamsport and Little League Baseball have always been inextricably linked. Despite this tradition, many people living in the area, students included, are sometimes ignorant of this past.

"We find that a lot of local people have never been here, and we're trying very hard to get them interested," Thompson said.

Whether it's at the Peter J. McGovern Museum or at a World Series game, the life of Little League may be something to check out in the middle of nowhere.

What to do in the middle of NOWHERE

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian
The Hall of Excellence contains memorabilia chronicling famous players such as Kevin Costner, Bruce Springsteen, Rudolph Giuliani and President George W. Bush.

Mark your calendars to celebrate bizarre holidays

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Writer

Everyone complains that there are not enough holidays each month, especially ones that earn students that coveted day off from class. It may surprise you to know that the calendar you have on your wall shows only a glimpse of all the fun holidays in existence.

There are many more than you think, and they're certainly not your average Christmas and Independence Day. Some are simply strange, while others seriously make a person wonder why their birthday isn't celebrated as a national holiday. These days are celebrated nationally, and in some cases internationally! Here are some of the strangest holidays in upcoming months. Maybe one will give you reason to celebrate.

The entire month of February is known as "Return Shopping Carts to the Supermarket" month, which is important to keep in mind next time you venture down to Wal-Mart or Weis. The week of Feb. 8-14 is "Jell-O" week, while the following week has been denoted, "International Flirtin'" week. Be sure to stock up on Bill Cosby's favorite snack before you get ready to put the vibe out.

Some important days to remember in February include "Dump your Significant Jerk" Day on the third, while the eighth is both "Laugh and Get Rich" Day and "Man" Day. Perhaps those unlucky gentlemen who meet the curb on the third will be able to get back into the game on the eighth by dripping with masculinity. What should become a favorite day to most students is Feb. 17, "My Way" Day. This day is a nationally endorsed get-out-of-being-a-jerk card, which many will unknowingly take advantage of!

If these holidays don't excite you, just wait until March! As national "On-hold" month, it's certain to give you a way to deal with those pesky telemarketers. On the third we can all sit and ponder on "What if Cats and Dogs had Opposable Thumbs" Day, while the superstitious types dread the arrival of the 13th, "National Open an Umbrella Indoors" Day.

The list of seemingly pointless and asinine holidays goes on forever, but if there is something that you're passionate about and would like celebrated, just wait until March 26th. On "Make Up Your Own Holiday" Day, the opportunity for national recognition and celebration is at your fingertips.

So go ahead and mark your calendars. Then again, don't—unless "National Hairball Awareness" day is something you absolutely do not want to forget.

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Sex and the Bubble

Hello, Bucknell! Welcome back to the "bubble!" It is a great pleasure to be back on campus and answer more of your most intimate questions. I am willing to bet that many of you experienced the usual holiday drama over winter break and are now bursting with questions and problems for Ms. O to help you solve! As usual, I will be checking my e-mail regularly and will be happy to answer any letters that you would like to send my way. And now for this week's question, Ms. O will be addressing the ever-popular problem of Valentine's Day anxiety.

Dear Ms. O,

I have been dating my girlfriend for about four months now. I have never had a girlfriend during Valentine's Day before and I'm not really sure about what I should do for her. I don't want to do anything too mushy and serious because we haven't been together that long, but I also want to make the day special for her. Do you have any suggestions for me?

—C

Dear "C,"

First, I would like to commend you for asking this question. You seem like a thoughtful guy, and Ms. O loves that in a man! OK, so here are my suggestions for you: First, can you cook? Do you have access to a kitchen? If so, cook dinner for your lovely lady. Prepare a simple meal such as pasta, with some chocolate-covered strawberries for dessert. If you are nervous about the whole cooking thing, you can always make reservations at a restaurant downtown.

In addition to dinner, get a Valentine card of some sort. This can vary in sappiness and delivery depending on how mushy you want to get. One option is to send a Hallmark e-card Valentine to your girl's e-mail account. These are cute and often interactive. You can also personalize them with your own message. A second option is a bit more traditional: Go to the store and buy a cute card and slip it under your girlfriend's door on the morning of Valentine's Day so that it's there waiting for her when she wakes up. Your third option is a bit more creative: Get together some paper, glitter, ribbon or whatever art supplies you can get your hands on, and make your girlfriend a homemade Valentine. I guarantee she will swoon!

You might want to consider flowers for either before or after dinner, which can also accompany the card. Lots of girls like red roses on Valentine's Day. However, Ms. O likes to live a little bit more on the wild side. Get more creative and buy her a bouquet of daisies or tiger lilies. Pick a flower that suits her personality, or find out through her friends what her favorite flower is. This is much less conventional than giving a girl a dozen red roses.

The three ideas that I have just given you are a part of a very simple and successful formula for Valentine's Day. Feel free to elaborate and add your own touches, such as stuffed animals, a walk downtown, ice-skating, a movie ... try to get creative. I promise your girlfriend will be impressed by the amount of time and effort you are putting into making your first Valentine's Day together a memorable one!

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!
Where is the best place to pick up men/women?

Photo courtesy of jfoodstudies.com
Be sure to stock your cabinets in honor of National "Jell-o" week.

FEATURES

Capturing culture

During her time in Europe, Levine is taking full advantage of the sights. The mysterious Stonehenge (above left), and the majestic London Bridge have been two of her favorite sights thus far.

Perspective from abroad: spring in London

By MERISA LEVINE
Contributing Writer

For the past three weeks I have been spending my days in London, as part of a study-abroad program. I live in a dorm on Kings Road, located in Chelsea, which is considered to be the "posh" sector of London. It has certainly been living up to its reputation thus far.

A bus leaves from outside my door, so whether I use that or "the tube" (aka the metro) for my daily needs, many cultural opportunities are easily accessible to me. Luckily, culture is something for which I have plenty of time, as I only have classes three days a week. The course load is a little heavier than it is at Bucknell, as I am taking five classes this semester through my program in Bloomsbury, but I am able to take advantage of the free time I have by seeing all the sights in London. One class I take is a theatre course, for which I am already scheduled for next week. Truthfully, I can't think of anything I'd rather do for a class!

In Trafalgar Square, London, a Chinese New Year's celebration brought throngs of sightseers to the streets.

My travels have already taken me to Bath and Stonehenge for a weekend, and a trip to Amsterdam is Museum, the Victoria Albert Museum and the National Gallery and British Museum. In addition, I have enjoyed the sights and sounds of the London streets, by exploring Hyde Park and simply savoring the walk down the block by my dorm.

Outside of London, I intend to travel to Paris and to Scotland for my spring break.

The culture here is really not that different from the culture in the United States. There is a Starbucks on every corner and it is easy to find a McDonald's if you would prefer fast food to the food in a pub or restaurant. There is also a Rainforest Cafe, a Hollywood and a Hard Rock Cafe, so at times it feels as if I have never left the States!

Despite the similarities, London is definitely not Lewisburg, and going to school in such a booming city is an experience second to none.

Even from the rear of the building, the Bath Abbey is a magnificent structure certainly deserving of the many tourists who visit every year.

The Bath Abbey, located in the heart of Bath, England, was constructed over twelve and half centuries ago. Only a short "tube" ride from her room in London, the Abbey has been one of Levine's many destinations.

Photos courtesy of Merisa Levine

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

January 30, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 1

Business & Politics:

Sen. John Kerry wins both early primaries, throwing the Dean campaign into chaos.

See page B6

Track sweeps Bucknell Octagonal

Women's team crushes the field while men's team rallies late to pull off win in dramatic fashion

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The Bucknell men's track and field team rallied late on Saturday to pull off a two-point win over St. Francis at the Bucknell Octagonal, while the women crushed their competition at the Gerhard Fieldhouse.

"Our women's team really showed everyone our great depth with a balanced attack by scoring in every event," Head Coach Kevin Donner said.

Competing in their fourth indoor meet of the season, the women racked up 196 points, dominating in nearly every area. Tolu Fayanjola '05 started the day off by taking the 60-meter dash in 7.97 seconds. Amy Calvo '05 picked up wins in the 400 in 59.06 seconds and 200 in 26.58. Monique Boley '05 won the 500 in 1:16.30. Boley and Calvo both teamed up with Danielle Todman '06 and Sarah VandenBroek '07 to win an exciting 4x400m relay.

Boley's win in the 500-meter dash, a personal best, hit the ECAC mark, while in the throws circle Maria Garcia '04, who also hit a personal best to take second in the 20-pound weight with a 16.07-meter throw, came up a mere three centimeters short of the ECAC mark.

Other wins for the women included Lauren Bricker '07 in the triple jump, Jenny Stevens '07 in the 1000-meter run, the team of Bricker, Stevens, Jen Marsh '05 and Christa Sawko '07 in the 4x800m relay and Melanie Buczko '07 in the pole vault.

Buczko's vault of 3.90 meters not only reclaimed the fieldhouse record that she originally set in December and raised her school record, but also brought her within five centimeters of the NCAA provisional height for indoor nationals. Buczko also added a third-place finish in the 55 hurdles.

"The majority of the girls had a strong meet, and I think most of that was due to the energy that we all had on the track," Calvo said. "This weekend, there was more cheering than the past meets, and I think everyone really responded to it."

That energy was also important for the men as their side of the meet was considerably more intense, with St. Francis and the Bison trading blows with each other all day. Bucknell wasn't able to breathe a sigh of relief until the final event of the day, the triple jump, was finished.

"I knew St. Francis had some horses and motivation, so I knew it would be a tough meet to win," Donner said.

Noel Powell '04 led the men with wins in the 200m with a time of 22.19 seconds, the long jump with a leap of 7.24 meters and a second place finish in the 60. Already an IC4A qualifier in the 200m, Powell added a qualification in the long jump in his first appearance on the runway this season.

Graduate student Greg Costello, who qualified for the ICA meet with an 8:18 in the 3000m at Penn State last weekend, dominated the 3000m again with a time of 8:34 after taking third in a very exciting mile. Kevin Fortkiewicz '06 made a hard move late in the 5000m for a convincing eighth second win in 15:18. Jeff Arek '04 gave the Bison the only other win of the day in the pole

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Graduate student Greg Costello finishes the race strong as the men's track team defeated St. Francis in a tight race. Costello came in third in the mile and dominated the field in the 3,000m.

vault, tying his personal best.

"Arek was hurt most of the week, and we knew the pole vaulter's points were valuable," Donner said. "They really came through for us. Greg Costello ran a super double and Drew Folk really stepped up in the high jump. Obviously Noel Powell's points are always valuable."

With only five first-place finishes, Donner was impressed with how the men utilized their depth. "We had a lot of men really step up for those valuable fifth-place and sixth-place finishes," Donner said.

"This was a big meet for both teams to enhance our confidence. We have been working extremely hard and I am confident that it is now

See TRACK, page B2

Men's basketball falls in 81-72 loss to undefeated Lafayette

By PIERRE HERNANDO
Staff Writer

Despite another strong performance from center Chris McNaughton '07, the Bison (6-12) fell to 2-3 in Patriot League competition after dropping an 81-72 decision to Lafayette in Easton, Pa on Sunday afternoon.

McNaughton registered his second double-double of his career as he led all players with 16 points and 10 rebounds. McNaughton, who was ninth in the league in rebounding and first in field goal percentage coming in, shot a blistering eight of 10 from the floor despite being plagued with fouls.

The host Leopards (14-4, 5-0) led 39-32 at the half after hitting three more three-pointers and six more free-throws than the Bison. Sharpshooter Kevin Bettencourt '06 drilled back-to-back threes early to start off the second half to get the Bison within one at 39-38. The Leopards, however, took advantage of some missed shots, fouls and turnovers by the Bison over the next seven minutes of play to take a 53-42 lead with 13:05 left in the game.

The Orange and Blue cut the deficit to 73-69 two minutes, 20 seconds into the second half on a lay-up by Abe Badmus '07. Charles Lee '06 failed to convert on two ensuing free-throw attempts after a Bettencourt steal. Badmus' turnover and missed lay-up in the next minute of play helped Lafayette extend its lead to eight at 77-69 after some free-throws.

Bettencourt, the second leading scorer in the league at 15.4 points per game, also scored 16 points. Lee continued his string of recent strong play as he scored 12 points, grabbed five rebounds, and dished out four assists. Badmus led all players in assists with six.

Marcus Harley had 14 points for the Leopards and Rob Dill chipped in with 13.

The Bucknell squad outshot Lafayette 50 percent to 47 percent from the field but struggled from the foul-line, shooting only 47 percent. The Leopards hit 85 percent of their free-throws.

Prior to the match-up with Lafayette, the Bison turned in one of the best defensive performances in NCAA Division I history after manhandling Army 56-23. The 23 points and seven total field goals allowed by the Bison set league records.

The game improved to 6-11 (2-2) and was led by a strong performance from Badmus, who registered a career-high 13 points and nine rebounds.

Playing in front of their home crowd, the Army Black Knights shot 10 percent from the field in the second half, connecting on only two of 21 shots. They failed to score for 10 minutes as the

Women's basketball dominates 67-48

Squad evens record with solid win over Lafayette Sunday afternoon

By TERI SCHLANG
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's basketball team traveled Sunday afternoon to Easton, Pa. to challenge Lafayette, where the Bison defeated the Leopards 67-48. The win featured Bucknell's largest margin of victory in Patriot League play this season.

During the opening half the Bison and the Leopards exchanged baskets without either team taking an initial lead.

Midway through the half the Orange and Blue took a seven-point lead, bringing the score to 18-11. Five different players assisted in the seven-point run. The Bison maintained at least a four-point lead throughout the half, until the Leopards made a run to get within one. The game was close at 23-22 with just over four minutes to play in the half.

Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 scored four straight points, giving the Bison a five-point lead. But Lafayette fought back scoring four straight points of its own to bring the game within one.

With 43 seconds remaining, the Orange and Blue kicked off their 8-0 run. Brooke Tomovich '05 started it off with a three-pointer. Hollobaugh followed up with a lay-up and Lillian Drumgold '06 finished it off scoring a three-pointer as the buzzer sounded. At the end of the first half, the Bison went on an 8-0 run finished off by a three-pointer from Drumgold's as the buzzer sounded. The squad had a 35-26 at the intermission.

In the second half, the Bison strengthened their lead, to as much as a 20-points and did not have less than a 17-point lead at any point in the second half. Forcing the Leopards to make sloppy mistakes and take risky shots.

The Bison not only out-shot the Leopards but also played better defensively. The Bison capitalized on Lafayette's 24 turnovers, scoring 29 points off the Leopards' mistakes.

Desire Almind '04 led both the Bison and the Leopards with 15 points and 12 rebounds. She also had four assist and five steals, becoming Bucknell's single-season leader in rebounds with 42 in the season. Drumgold and Hollobaugh both had career highs, scoring 14 and 13, respectively.

The Orange and Blue played over the winter vacation, winning five games and losing only two before league play began. The wins followed a close loss to Army on Jan. 23, a win over Navy on Jan. 17, a very close loss to Lehigh 59-58 on Jan. 14 and another close loss to American 50-49 on Jan. 10, making the Orange and Blue 2-3 in league play.

After the win over Lafayette the Bison's overall record improved to 9-9. The women will take on another league opponent tonight when they host Colgate at home.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
Charles Lee '06 fights for the rebound during a home game against Cornell at Sojka Pavilion. The Bison beat Cornell 63-55 as part of a three-game win streak.

See BBALL, page B2

Serving as the residency of the Queen and the home to the ruling British monarchy, Buckingham Palace is one of the most recognizable structures in London. Levine and others from her program made certain to visit this architectural wonder.

Sports

Men's basketball comes up short against Lafayette

BBALL from page B1

Bison built on a 30-16 halftime lead. The lead increased after Donald Brown '07 hit a trey at the 12:44 mark to make it 44-19. Army did not score again until there was only 2:55 remaining in the game, with the Bison ahead 56-21.

Lee also scored 13 points. Forward John Clark '07, scored six of his 12 points from behind the arc.

As a team, the Orange and Blue shot 41 percent from the field. They limited Army to 19 percent from the field and 12 percent on threes.

On Jan. 20, the Bison defeated visiting Cornell 63-55 as Brown turned in a monster game, finishing with 16 points, 10 rebounds and two blocked shots.

Three days prior to the Cornell game, the Orange and Blue set more records in its 87-46 drubbing of visiting Navy. Picking up its first league win of the year after starting out 0-2, the Bison shot a blistering 72 percent from the field—which set a new Patriot League mark. Its 41-point margin of victory was the largest in school annals. McNaughton and Lee scored 15 points apiece. Brown was five for five and finished with 14 points, while Bettencourt scored 11 and dished out seven dimes.

The Bison opened league play with a tough overtime loss to American. Lee's career-high 18 points was not enough to overcome a tough shooting night from the floor as a team. The Bison shot only 32 percent compared to 42 percent from the host.

The squad hung in against the College of Charleston on Dec. 31, who was 8-1 at the time, but eventually lost 76-63. They followed that up by losing to Penn State and Robert Morris on Jan. 3 and 7, respectively.

Sandwiched between a 77-62 win against Ursinus and a 79-36 drubbing of Dickinson was a 58-49 loss to University of Pennsylvania. The Bison also lost road games at St. Francis (Pa.) and Northwestern University.

The Bison now have four home games in the next 10 days starting tonight when they meet Colgate at 7:45 p.m. Holy Cross comes in at 3:15 on Sunday afternoon. They will then play American on Feb. 7 and Lehigh on Feb. 10.

Bison players drive toward the basket against Cornell on Jan. 20 at Sojka Pavilion. The Bison beat Cornell, but fell to Lafayette Sunday, dropping their overall record to 6-12 and falling below .500 against Patriot League competition this season.

Men's and women's track fend off visitors with strong efforts at Gerhard Fieldhouse paying off. Now that classes are back in session, we need to refocus and recommit after a great two-and-a-half weeks of training after the holiday break. We also need to do the little things to prevent injury and sickness," Donner said.

TRACK from page B1

This weekend the Bison will be splitting its squads between the Penn State National Invite and Bucknell's Bison Open. Both meets start tonight and continue tomorrow. Those competing at Penn State will be up against some of the best schools on the East Coast, with most athletes looking to hit or improve their ICA4 and ECAC marks. Although no powerhouse schools are expected at the Bison Open, the competition in every event will be fierce as 33 teams will convene at Gerhard Fieldhouse.

Calvo hopes that Bucknell can "continue to use the energy from the past weekend to get psyched and remain confident" as the Bison head into this weekend.

Doug Creveling '05 runs during the first heat of the mile at the Bucknell Octagonal. Creveling finished seventh in the race. The mile was one of the most anticipated events of the meet.

CARMEN CONSTANTINESCU
Early Childhood Special Education MAJ - 2004

Volunteered in Romanian orphanage.
Produced TV documentary on adoption.
Can safely land a glider.

Achieve More Than a Graduate Degree.

For more information on the Early Childhood Special Education I-A program at the GW Graduate School of Education and Human Development call (202) 994-1509 or email mjarrett@gwu.edu.

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY
WASHINGTON DC

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Want to get on SportsCenter?

Start here.

The Bucknellian.
E-mail ccairns@

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Stable in the pocket, stable in the ... stable.

Two years ago, I couldn't have written a column on Jake Delhomme if the earth's rotation depended on it.

My entire knowledge base regarding Delhomme couldn't have been an overwhelming inhabitant on most Post-It products, let alone the entire north end of a standard-sized newspaper page. Maybe I could have resorted to the time-honored tradition of filling gray space with a gargantuan Reuters photograph featuring the then-New Orleans Saint. And the article, I would imagine, would go something along these lines:

This is Jake Delhomme (the one in the background, sitting on the bench). His name is pronounced Del-OHM. I think. He's a quarterback. A second-stringer, if even that. Cajun kid, kind of a looker. Never seen him play; never heard him talk. Beginning of story; end of story. Right?

Oh, but this is the NFL. And we should all know by now that stories, in the NFL, don't even have ends.

In this league, fortune is subject to bouts of attention-deficit hyperactive disorder. One minute a guy is bagging groceries, scuffling in the AFL or CFL or PAL or God-knows-what league, earning a pittance, eating out of dumpsters—you know the routine—only to be stricken one day with the glorious affections of destiny, which will inevitably carry him all the way to the pinnacle of the sport's existence.

It's as though way back in the early years of the 20th century, the Great Creator accidentally dropped a jar of highly concentrated, super-happy endings over certain patches in the planting grounds of popular culture. Half of the contents were left to infiltrate deeply into the soil of the National Football League, where they would remain dormant until some sort of tectonic shift transpired in the waning years of the century, allowing them all to rise to the surface and spew upon us a steady stream of almost seismically pleasant football fairy tales.

(And the other half of the jar's innards? Well, hell ... how else can you explain Walt Disney Pictures?)

So up from the dirt sprang a Pete Rozelle trophy for Kurt Warner, a guy who'd spent three years in the Arena League, a year in NFL Europe and all the time in between stocking groceries. And then one for Tom Brady, a fellow who went from a sixth-round draftee—a sideline fixture—to the top-tier quarterback and State of the Union guest that he is now.

Throw in a Super Bowl title for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers—the franchise that had spent the bulk of its existence serving as comic relief for the rest of the league—and a few other yards of glory, and the NFL is circulating more sweetness than the Splenda and NutraSweet factories combined.

So who's next? The guy who played backup to Kurt Warner back in his NFL Europe days?

Well, yeah. Meet Mr. Del-OHM. It turns out it isn't very hard to write about Jake Delhomme after all. Isn't very hard to root for him, either.

The Louisiana native did spend a year of his career backing up Warner as a second-stringer for the NFL Europe's Amsterdam Admirals. How's that for obscurity?

After posting a few slick numbers at Southwestern Louisiana, Delhomme didn't appeal to any of the NFL's brass—not even a late-round snag, not even as Mr. Impossible—and slipped away undrafted. So Mr. Beyond Impossible trudged his way onto the Saints roster, where he became acquainted with the bench.

And forget groceries. This guy has spent his off-seasons mucking out stalls—shoveling equine waste products, to put it politely.

Material like that is not difficult to transpose onto the framework of the classic Cinderella story. But to do so would be a rather heady miscalculation.

Because Delhomme's charm doesn't rest on his humble beginnings or his time spent toiling in manure. What makes Delhomme worthy of rooting interest is this: he likes cleaning out stalls. In fact, he does it without pay.

And he'll gladly return to it, even if he struts home with a behemoth Super Bowl ring on his finger.

Home, for the Cajun kid, is Breaux Bridge, La., a town that actually refers to itself as the Crawfish Capital of the World. Growing up on his parents' thoroughbred racing farm, he inherited quite an appreciation for horsemanship—and all the dirty work that goes with it.

And even now that Delhomme has proven to be quite the geldon stud himself, his willingness to do the "dirty work," the drudgery, has not been lost in swagger and pomp and bling-bling like it has for so many other players.

Throughout these past few months—from the Panthers' season opener, when then-backup Delhomme filled in for Rodney Peete and commandeered the squadron downfield three times to overcome a 17-0 deficit, to this week's pregame media frenzy, which finds the horseman in the hotseat as one of the Super Bowl's starting quarterbacks—his down-to-earth demeanor has remained invariant.

He gets it done. That's what they say about Delhomme now. He'll get it done throwing 35 passes; he'll get it done throwing 14.

He doesn't seem to care that half of the media still can't pronounce his name, or that he isn't quite afforded the popularity of his fellow epic-rise-from-obscurity beneficiaries Brady and Warner.

He doesn't seem to care which play is called or who gets credit for the wins. Either way, he bounds in and out of the huddle with wide-eyed exuberance, barking out a few commands in his straight-from-the-bayou accent, which, when he gets really excited, pretty much defies syllabification.

And then he wins. At least that's how it's been in this year's playoffs, where he's guided the big cats through three wins, quietly racking up a postseason quarterback rating of 102.6 in the process.

In two days, he'll be gunning for a fourth win—the big win. He'll be doing opposite none other than Tom Brady, who also has a knack for doing what needs to be done (Brady hasn't lost a game since September).

However he returns to the Crawfish Capital of the World, winner or also-ran, and whether or not he can withstand a voracious New England defense, a column about Jake Delhomme looks a heck of a lot different than it would have a year ago.

There'd be a new Reuters photograph now, showcasing that big Cajun smile, with the snazzy black and blue of Carolina garb draped over his shoulders.

This is Jake Delhomme (the one on the podium, front and center, surrounded by media). Still a quarterback. Still shovels crap in the offseason. Still markedly Cajun; still a looker, especially in that "NFC Champions" hat.

Still pronounced Del-OHM. I think.

NFL welcomes newest coaches

By MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

Instead of writing yet another mundane and redundant article about the upcoming Super Bowl looking to become a slugfest between David Tua and Vitali Klitschko, I propose to write about the most exciting football events of the last few weeks. That's right, it's the postseason head-coaching vacancy bonanza!

You see, every off-season about four head coaches get canned, and we all get to wait around for the owners and front office type to pick their new coaches. The fun doesn't end there though! Once the new guy is hired, we get to debate whether the franchise just propelled itself to playoff contender or set itself back another decade.

This past Black Monday had me as giddy as a school girl. We had the surprise resignation/non-resignation of Steve Spurrier, the scorched-earth campaign of Bill Callahan, the knee-jerk firing of Dan Reeves and the dismissal of other notables such as Gregg Williams, Dick Jauron, Jim Fassel and Dave McGinnis. Talk about variety. The replacements are just as interesting, ranging from blockbuster moves to colossal blunders.

Let's start in Washington, D.C. Spurrier was out, then not quite out, then out for sure. Once it was established that he was out of the Capitol for good, Danny Snyder went to work. All he managed to do was work a miracle: Joe Gibbs. If this name doesn't mean any-keep the ravenous fans of Washington from repossessing the Redskins via a violent coup. Here's to hoping that this coaching sequel is as good as the original.

Joe Gibbs addresses the media from behind a trio of Lombardi trophies. Gibbs will make his return to the NFL next season when he takes over as head coach of the Washington Redskins.

thing to you, then in all likelihood none does Bill Walsh, Don Shula, Chuck Noll, Tom Landry or even Vincent Lombardi. See, these guys happen to be on the same pedestal as Gibbs, maybe with Walsh and Lombardi standing a little taller.

Gibbs was to '80s football what Larry Bird was to '80s basketball in Boston. The men are held in the same regard as Jesus in some circles. Hiring Gibbs as his head coach was the only way Dan Snyder could

In the Meadowlands, Fassel outwore his welcome, which is no surprise considering coaches generally don't last as long as he did, especially in major markets like New York, where everybody has an opinion. Once Jim had left the building, the Giants also did some digging into their past for a coach. They dug up a man named Tom Coughlin—Kaiser Coughlin to some.

Let's get something straight first: I think Tom Coughlin is one of the best coaches to come out of Parcels' assistant ranks. This includes a guy named Belichick. Coughlin brings a hard nose and a big sword to the Giants. Either play hard for the man, or get cut faster than a shrimp at a sushi bar. In the past he has wilted teams with less talent into the playoffs, and now he's looking to get this flailing franchise back on course. Mark my words, Coughlin will be a winner in New York.

Then we have Hotlanta. The Falcons fired a coach with 200 wins to bring in a vibrant young coach to get their electrifying quarterback Mike Vick, to play like a superstar.

Instead they hired a mediocre defensive coordinator whose dad happened to be a great coach. I give you Jim Mora; he dropped the junior, signifying that his dad shall not return to the NFL.

Mora was basically hired for his potential. Here are my problems with this hire: first, if he is such a good coach, why didn't the Niners hire him? I mean, if Bill Walsh had liked him, the Niners would have made him head coach last year. Instead they thought a once-failed NFL sideline boss could do it better. Second, Mora doesn't exactly sell tickets, and defense is his forte. So how is he going to look when he criticizes Mike Vick on the sidelines after a bone-

See NFL, page B4

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

By JOHN HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

Cooperstown doesn't smell so sweet for this Rose

With the recent release of his second autobiography, Pete Rose confessed to betting on baseball after 14 years of speculation.

The interviews were terrifying, sickening, pitiful. His callous words clattered like the sound of jackpot quarters popping out of a Caesar's Palace slot machine. His pokerface was as stiff as a brand new deck of playing cards.

Little had changed since 1987. For 24 seasons, Pete Rose had played the game of baseball with the heart of a champion—scoring runs, hitting doubles, and leading his team to three World Series titles. For 14 more seasons, he has had to live with the fact that he has been banished from major-league baseball for committing its most heinous crime: gambling.

Still, many of us have considered the thought of giving Rose another stab at being reinstated.

Shame on us for thinking Pete Rose deserved a second chance, that this time would be any different from the rest. Shame on us for thinking Pete Rose was a man of integrity, respect and contrition.

Earlier this month, in a last-chance effort to be reinstated into major-league baseball by Commissioner Bud Selig, Rose publicly confessed that he bet on baseball in 1987 and 1988 as the manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

The truth was out. But was anyone actually surprised? Could we have expected anything different? If so, we didn't know Rose like former major-league baseball Commissioner Bart Giamatti, did. Giamatti never had a doubt. If only he were still here to utter the words, "I told you so," after Rose had played him off as a man out to get him.

But that was only the beginning of this confession. What followed was even more despicable than the crime itself.

No press conferences. No apologies. Only money. Only fame. With his new, best-selling autobiography, "Pete Rose: My Prison Without Bars" and recent prime-time interviews on ABC and CBS networks, "ole Charlie Hustle" quickly turned a 14-year-old confession into a winning lottery ticket from one of Cincinnati's local market stores. Rose sees it differently, however.

"I didn't do this book for money. I did the book to explain myself," he said, according to ESPN.com. "The people who don't like it will say, 'You're selling your confession.' I confessed 14 months ago."

Did you hear about it? No, only Selig did 14 months ago. More importantly, where was the apology?

"The No. 1 law here is: you don't go through the motions of saying you're sorry," one baseball official said, according to ESPN.com.

I beg to differ.

Dennis Eckersley and Paul Molitor are great examples. Both had addition problems, publicly admitted them, confronted them and now will rightfully enter Cooperstown in July.

"My involvement and choice to experiment with drugs early in my career is something that I regret," Molitor said to ESPN.com. "To be contrite you first have to acknowledge that what you did was wrong, but I'm not sure that Pete has done that."

A message to Rose, who continues to gamble recreationally at horse races but sees no need for any sort of professional help.

Sounds reminiscent of a rehabilitated alcoholic picking up a 12-pack of Budweiser and chasing it down with a fifth of Jack Daniels.

"During these past few days, I've looked at Pete on television, and he hasn't given any signs of an honest confession," Hall of Famer Hank Aaron said, according to ESPN.com. "Plus, I've seen absolutely no truth whatsoever in what he's saying."

Now with his best-seller filling Borders' and Barnes & Nobles' stores this month, the spotlight has suddenly turned away from Eckersley's and Molitor's accomplishments to Rose's fight to manage a team again and stand along side baseball's greatest in Cooperstown.

"It seems like no matter what I do, it's wrong," Rose said in reference to his book interfering with the recent Hall of Fame elections. "I mean, if I waited 'til March, I'd have been interfering with spring training. If I waited 'til the All-Star game, I'm trying to take away from the All-Star game!"

Why does it take 14 years to write the words "I bet on baseball, and I'm sorry"? But even that seems to be too much of a leap for such a shameless man.

"I'm sure that I'm supposed to act all sorry or sad or guilty now that I've accepted that I've done something wrong," Rose wrote in his second autobiography. "But you see, I'm just not built that way. Sure, there's probably some real emotion buried somewhere deep inside. And maybe I'd be a real person if I let that side of my personality come out. But it just doesn't surface too often. So let's leave it like this: I'm sorry it happened, and I'm sorry for all the people, fans and family that it hurt. Let's move on."

The only place in Cooperstown worthy of Pete Rose's picture is the public jailhouse.

Sports

Editor's Super Bowl Predictions

Cecily Cairns Sports Editor	Adam Wilcox Photo Editor	Josh Herwitt Sports Editor	Peter Hackman Senior Editor	Brent Butler Editor-in-Chief	Michelle Dombeck Chief Copy Editor
 Carolina Panthers Whoever named this team was a zoological simpleton, being as panthers are fast, not black. The dismembered head logo is actually a black leopard. Species outnumber notwithstanding, the inaccurately named big cats are sick. Panthers 27, Patriots 24.	 New England Patriots It's been too long since the Patriots have won a Super Bowl.	 Carolina Panthers If Stephen Davis and Deshaun Foster have big days on the ground against the best run defense in the NFL, look for Jake Delhomme to super up the passing game and lead these cinderella Panthers to their first Super Bowl title. Panthers 17, Patriots 14.	 New England Patriots Even though I'm afraid to pick against the Panthers again, as they've cost me money the last two games, I can't stop myself. Belichick is a genius and come on, these are the Panthers. They can't be that good.	 New England Patriots This Sunday is the day every one has been waiting for. The day office linebicker Terry Tate returns to television. Oh, yeah. A couple of guys from New England and Carolina are playing some football. "You kill the Joe, you make some mo" The Pats are going to Eskimo up and win 35-28.	 New England Patriots Even though I think a panther would be able to maul a rifle-toting colonist, I've gotta go with my home team.

WANTED: LEADERS/PILOTS UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS OFFICER PROGRAMS

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE A LEADER IN OUR COMPANY, THIS COULD BE YOUR OFFICE.

Few people will ever set foot in an office like this. But then, few people love what it takes to be a Marine Officer. Officer Candidate School (OCS) is the first step towards preparing you for a future beyond anything you could imagine.

- Attend a PAID INTERNSHIP during the summer in Quantico, VA
- NO OBLIGATION
- Unparalleled LEADERSHIP TRAINING
- TUITION ASSISTANCE is available

For more information contact us @:
1-800-544-2259
or osowb@aol.com
www.MarineOfficer.com

Your
Dream: "I want to become a doctor."

The Johns Hopkins Post-Baccalaureate Premedical Program prepares college graduates with strong academic records to apply to the best medical schools by giving them the personal attention, the necessary science and math courses, and one-to-one academic advising.

If you or someone you know wants to pursue a career as a doctor, apply by March 1.

For more information, visit www.jhu.edu/postbac or call 410-516-7748.

Your
Reality:
"I don't have the
required courses
for medical school."

JOHNS HOPKINS
UNIVERSITY
Post-Baccalaureate
Premedical Program

NFL coaches on the move

COACHES

from page B3

headed play? On this topic, I'll go out on a limb and say I don't think Mike Vick will ever live up to the hype; I just don't see him staying healthy for 19 games. He seems like a guy who is always going to miss 3-4 games a season, and 3-4 games can be crucial to any team's championship run, but I digress.

In Oakland we have the disaster known as the Raiders. Bill Callahan was made head coach after Gruden because the players thought he was the right choice. This season those same players were talking about what a horrible coach he was. He then promptly got hired as the head coach for the new disaster known as the Cornhuskers and will try to make them a passing football team. After several screw ups, false information leaks and a few snubs, Al Davis managed to find a coach: taddah, I give you Norv. "I'm trying to commit career suicide" Turner.

Norv Turner is a good offensive coordinator. However, one of the knocks on him is that he isn't a "rah-rah" guy and can't motivate as well as some other coaches. Then there is the whole issue of the Raiders being a team in need of a massive overhaul, or better yet, being blown up and having to start from scratch. I hope Turner succeeds in the Black Hole, but like all other matter, I think he'll disappear.

The other head coaching changes aren't as sexy as the ones listed above, and they don't merit two paragraphs. Gregg Williams couldn't get the Bills offense off the ground, even with the help of the Kevin "duck and cover"

Gilbride and a retooled defense. They brought in Mike "you're full of nothing but" Mularkey (that was a lame joke, but I had to tell it). Mularkey made his name in Pittsburgh as an offensive coordinator who could devise schemes that inspired sportswriters to use words like "neato" and "bodacious." Here's to hoping that his name isn't the only thing he gets remembered by.

In the Windy City, Dick Jauron was replaced by Lovie Smith. That's right—the new head coach of the Bears is named Lovie. From Ditka to Lovie, what a transition. Anyways, Lovie is another former Bucs defensive assistant, who spent the last few years as the defensive coordinator for the Rams. This comes after Lovie didn't get the Atlanta job, and the Bears couldn't land Nick Saban. So, it's basically a fit, not a very good one, but worse coaching moves have been made.

Finally we come to Arizona, home to record-setting temperatures and tight-fisted owners. Dave McGinnis managed to prove that he is a good coach by maximizing the Cardinals' potential, but the potential and talent have done nothing but dwindle over the past few years. Seeking to dust off its product and spray on a new image, the Bidwill family hired Denny Green to be the new head coach. Green comes from Minnesota, one of the coldest places in the country, to Arizona, one of the hottest. The main difference is that the seat won't be as hot. Nobody expects Arizona to win anytime soon, whereas every year the Vikings were thought of as contenders. I don't really like this hire, Denny has always been one to seek more power, and I'm not sure how that will work out—he could end up back in the booth sooner than he knows it.

SUSAN E. BELMONT
Elementary Education MEd student

Attorney-at-law.
First-grade teacher intern.
Two-time marathon finisher.
Achieve More Than
a Graduate Degree.

For more information on the Elementary Education MEd program at the GW Graduate School of Education and Human Development, call 202-994-9084, e-mail stebeck@gwu.edu or visit <http://gsedh.gwu.edu>. You can also attend a virtual open house on Wednesday, February 4. To register, go to <http://gsedh.gwu.edu/veh>.

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY
WASHINGTON, DC

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Write
for sports.

E-mail ccairns@

Sports

you come home late at night in need of a snack, you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question, compare your opinions with others, explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP or its member firms, which are separate and independent legal entities. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Kerry comes from behind in early primaries

By PETER HACKEMAN
Senior Editor

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) won the New Hampshire primary Tuesday with 39 percent of the vote, continuing his momentum after winning the Iowa caucus. Former Vermont Governor Howard Dean rebounded from a distant third-place showing in Iowa to claim a comfortable second in New Hampshire with 26 percent. Gen. Wesley Clark, who skipped the Iowa caucuses, and Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.), who surprised pundits with a strong second (33 percent) in Iowa, finished third and were virtually tied at 13 percent each.

Within hours of the New Hampshire vote, all the candidates were out of the state. Kerry stopped in his hometown of Boston before moving on to Missouri, while Dean drove to Burlington, to discuss strategy with his campaign staff. Edwards flew to South Carolina, as did Clark. Sen. Joe Lieberman (D-Conn.), who finished fifth after skipping Iowa and literally living in New Hampshire for the last weeks, went to Delaware.

Tuesday features the first day of multiple-state voting, as Missouri, South Carolina, New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma, Delaware and North Dakota all have primaries or caucuses. Missouri is seen as a bellwether state and is expected to be a battleground in the general election in November.

Tuesday features the first day of multiple-state voting, as Missouri, South Carolina, New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma, Delaware and North Dakota all have primaries or caucuses. Missouri is seen as a bellwether state and is expected to be a battleground in the general election in November.

have primaries or caucuses. Missouri is seen as a bellwether state and is expected to be a battleground in the general election in November. Rep. Dick Gephardt (D-Mo.) was believed to be the favorite, until he dropped out of the race after a fourth place showing in Iowa, leaving the remaining campaigns to race to build an organization and voter support in the state.

South Carolina is the first primary with a sizable African-American population, where up to half of the primary voters are expected to be black. New Mexico and Arizona are the first Western primaries and the first to be held in states with significant Latino populations. Oklahoma, North Dakota and Delaware are not expected to be contested in the general election.

With seven states voting on Tuesday, the five leading candidates, along with

Rep. Dennis Kucinich (D-Ohio) and the Rev. Al Sharpton of New York, all have opportunities to win at least one state. Current polling shows Edwards leading Kerry, Sharpton and Clark by 4-7 percent in South Carolina. Edwards, who was born in South Carolina, has admitted that he needs to win the state to stay in the race. Kerry leads polls in both Missouri, by 16 percent (25 to 9) over Dean and Edwards, and in Arizona, by 3 percent over Clark and 9 percent over Edwards. Polling in Oklahoma shows Clark leading with 23 percent. Edwards with 18 percent, Kerry with 17 percent, and Lieberman and Dean tied with 9 percent.

Sen. John Kerry celebrates with his wife, Teresa, after winning the New Hampshire primary. Kerry unseated former front-runner Howard Dean, winning both the Iowa and New Hampshire primaries.

Each campaign is expected to focus its money and manpower on two or three states. While voters in Iowa and New Hampshire expect to meet the candidates face-to-face at least once before voting and the premium is placed in strong campaign organizations and get-out-the-vote activities, the remaining contests are expected to be dominated by media coverage and TV advertising.

Students interested in voting by mail should contact their home states' secretary of state or county elections office to learn about absentee ballot deadlines and procedures.

Courtesy of Reuters

Mars: the next stop for man?

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

U.S. President George W. Bush vowed on Jan. 14 to extend exploration into space, beginning with a return to the moon within 16 years. The exploration to the moon is primarily to serve as a landing ground for further explorations farther into space.

Bush's election-year plan entails the retiring of the three remaining space shuttles by the year 2010 and proposes that Americans return to the moon between 2015 and 2020, according to Washingtonpost.com.

The White House summary of Bush's statement outlines Bush's primary goals for constant human presence in space. The first goal is to follow through on the U.S. commitment to complete construction on the International Space Station by 2010.

Bush hopes NASA will be able to construct a new manned spacecraft, the Crew Exploration Vehicle, which would be capable of transporting astronauts and scientists to the space station.

An extended stay on the moon will enable astronauts and scientists to develop new technologies and harness the moon's many resources to allow the manned exploration of places farther from the moon, according to Bush. In other words, the experience and knowledge gained on the moon would serve as a launching pad for missions beyond the moon, including a manned mission to Mars.

Bush also mentioned that a presence on the moon could yield valuable resources. The soil and rock of the moon "contains raw materials that might be harvested and processed into rocket fuel or breathable air," CNN.com reported. Such finds could help to make the usually-expensive field of space exploration self-supporting.

Bush hopes that the knowledge gained in space will provide the education to develop new technologies that will contribute to U.S. industries, and thereby improve our overall quality of life as well as contributing to scientific knowledge.

Officials have acknowledged that, since the project requires astronauts to stay in space for long periods of time, it poses a relatively high risk because of the effects of high radiation levels in outer space. Another problem is the possible physiological impact of prolonged weightlessness, which can cause muscle and bone conditions.

In addition to the risk placed on astronauts, NASA will have to

A few in Congress questioned whether or not the allotted funding would be enough to accomplish Bush's goals. Other groups said that the money would be better spent on domestic programs.

Some think that the plans are a sort of knee-jerk reaction to the success of China's space program, which just launched its first astronaut into space in October 2003.

Washingtonpost.com reported that Bush's speech served as a major morale boost for an agency that is still struggling to recover from the political and emotional fallout from the disintegration of the space shuttle Columbia on Feb. 1, 2003.

Bush's advisers said this policy does have a political impetus: his plan comes from the White House with the hope that this bold goal will help unify the nation before Bush's re-election race and help him appear a visionary.

Conservative lawmakers and Republican officials who are likely to have a problem with the costs of the program are thought to be lured in by the opportunity to extend U.S. military dominance into space over China's plans for lunar probes and Russian plans for a mission to Mars.

Bush's speech was one of the first declarations of a major plan for space exploration since 1961, when President John F. Kennedy called for the nation to send a person to the moon by 1970, during the height of the Cold War.

Unlike Kennedy, Bush invited international assistance and contributions, and the government of Russia has already expressed interest.

"Mankind is drawn to the heavens for the same reason we were once drawn into unknown lands and across the open sea. We choose to explore space because doing so improves our lives and lifts our national spirit. So let us continue the journey," Bush said, according to Whitehouse.gov.

Senate files leaked

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

Both parties have confirmed that a seemingly minor computer glitch allowed the staffs of Senate Republicans to monitor Democrats' confidential files and memos since mid-2002 or earlier. According to the L.A. Times, Senate Sergeant-at-Arms William Pickle has nearly completed investigating the incident, and may soon decide whether to bring criminal or ethical charges.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah), who employed the anonymous staffer who found the glitch, told the L.A. Times that he was "mortified that this improper, unethical and simply unacceptable breach of confidential files may have occurred on my watch."

According to The Boston Globe, at least one Republican staffer exploited an error in the Senate computer server, allowing him to read protected, confidential documents without a password. The intrusion dates back to the spring of 2002 and continued at least through April 2003, but was only revealed in November when Senate Democrats noticed material from the files appeared in articles published by the Wall Street Journal and Washington Times.

Most of the memos dealt with the Democratic strategies to block President George W. Bush's nominees for federal court openings. These obstructions, including a number of filibusters, were among the Democrats' most controversial actions of last year.

Some of the documents, which Senate Democrats claim were incomplete and tell only part of the story, link their actions against judicial nominees to special-interest groups.

According to The Boston Globe, one memo, recording what was apparently a meeting between Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) and various civil rights groups, also emphasized the importance of blocking appellate court nominee Miguel Estrada, whose Hispanic ethnicity, it said, might make him difficult to block as an eventual Supreme Court candidate. Estrada withdrew his nomination after months of delays and filibusters aimed at stopping his confirmation.

While the Republican Party has made no public comment on the use of the documents, it claims that they violated no law or ethics code in finding them, and the "Committee for Justice" is circulating a "fact sheet" with arguments to that effect.

"I knew our people had told their people about it," said Manuel Miranda, senior staff aide to Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.). "Once I knew that, I had no further obligation."

Republicans claim that, under the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984, if they informed their counterparts of the security flaw, it would satisfy their legal and ethical obligations; a failure to repair the flaw would be the Democrats' fault. However, according to the The New York Times, Democrats deny that they were told, and many have called for action to be taken even if no rules were technically violated.

"They had an obligation to tell each of the people whose files they were intruding upon—assuming it was an accident—that that was going on so [they] could protect themselves," said a Senate staffer to the Globe. "To keep on getting these files is just beyond the pale."

Sergeant-at-Arms Pickle has interviewed more than 100 people and brought a full forensics team into the Senate to determine exactly how the documents were acquired and who accessed them. If staffers did violate rules or law, they would be fired, and might face up to a year in prison. According to the L.A. Times, the investigation is expected to come to an end "soon," but there is still no indication of whether charges will be filed, or if disciplinary action will be taken.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Bush shows breadth in State of the Union

Bush speaks to Congress in his annual State of the Union address. Of the broad range of issues that he focused on, a large portion of his speech involved national security and the economy.

By MATT HINSON
Senior Writer

U.S. President George W. Bush gave his annual State of the Union address to a divided Congress on Jan. 21. The main issues the President addressed were the war on terror, the economy and healthcare. Also of note was the President's call for a defense of marriage as defined as a union between a man and a woman, by constitutional amendment if necessary. Another part of the speech was an attempt to push Congress into funding a watered-down program of faith-based initiatives.

The President took a strong stand on the war in Iraq and the legislative ramifications of Sept. 11, 2001. Bush lauded the work of coalition forces, emphasizing the word "coalition." According to CNN.com, Bush also re-stated his resolve that the United States would not "seek a permission slip to defend the security of our people." The President discussed democracy in the Middle East as a viable possibility, sending a warning to those in that region who would oppose political change in states such as Saudi Arabia.

Bush then switched tracks and spoke at length about the American economy. He credited his tax cut for the recovering economy, and according to CNN.com, Bush said that "the American people are using their money far better than government would have, and you were right to return it." He then defended his No Child Left Behind education policy, saying that by enacting higher standards and standardized testing for students and teachers, children's math and reading skills will improve greatly.

Bush also defended his trade and Social Security privatization policies. He called on Congress to be fiscally cautious and to create a temporary worker program. Bush said the program would allow foreign workers to take jobs when Americans could not be found to fill them.

Last, the President asked Congress to "address rapidly rising health care costs." Specifically, Bush asked Congress to enact a new refundable tax credit that would allow millions of Americans to purchase basic healthcare. Bush also stated his opposition to a government-run healthcare system, the so-called "single-payer plan" sometimes mentioned by Democrats and others as an alternative to the private system now in place.

According to CNN.com, Bush said that "by keeping costs under control, expanding access and helping more Americans afford coverage, we will preserve the system of private medicine that makes America's health care the best in the world."

The Democratic response mirrored the President's words in many ways. Both Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) and Sen. Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) extolled the efforts of American troops worldwide, and said that security was of the utmost importance. However, he said that the President's methodology was misguided.

Pelosi ripped into the President's foreign policy, saying the insular attitude adopted by Bush's administration had not only isolated the United States, but also taken resources away from healthcare and education. Pelosi later clarified this statement, suggesting that if allies were more involved in our international dealings, there would be more money left in our coffers for things other than defense. In addition, this policy would spur a more multinational approach to foreign affairs than the current administration has favored.

"America must be a light to the world, not just a missile," Pelosi said, according to CNN.com.

The Democrats also called for increased inspection of incoming cargo, the securing of chemical and nuclear facilities, and the securing of all material used for nuclear devices. Pelosi said that these actions would make the United States a safer place, and yet are all being ignored by the current administration.

Daschle called for greater redistribution of wealth in the 1,000 new jobs were added to the payrolls in December. He said the Bush tax cuts have helped to drive states into a budget crunch, forcing them to raise tuitions on higher education, which takes a little of the shine off of Bush's tax and education policies.

Daschle also called upon the administration to support a healthcare policy that would ensure that the 40 million Americans without insurance could be covered. He suggested using the group's strength of numbers to get drug and insurance companies to lower their prices, and to allow the purchase of medicine in Canada, where it is cheaper.

Overall, the State of the Union address was a recapitulation of the issues and positions that the President has iterated and supported throughout the past year. What was surprising was the response of the Democrats. Despite seldom participating in omissions for the President during his speech, the official response was rather tepid, with only the positions on cargo containers and unsecured facilities delineating anything radically different from the President's proposals.

The language used by both Pelosi and Daschle shows that they fervently believe the President is leading America down the wrong path. But unless they can outline a clear and distinctive road of their own, the Democrats are in danger of remaining in the shadows, unrecognized by the American people as a party with which they can identify.

America must be a light to the world, not just a missile.

—Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

ADVERTISEMENT

WOULD YOU LIKE TO...

SNOW TUBE DOWN A MOUNTAIN?
ENJOY THE BEST VALLEY RESTAURANTS?
MEET VALLEY BUSINESS LEADERS?
SEE LOCAL THEATRE?

ALL FOR

FREE!

IF THIS SOUNDS LIKE FUN TO YOU ATTEND AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING ABOUT "COMMUNITY CONNECT"

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2ND WALLS LOUNGE
LANGONE CENTER
8:00 P.M.

ADVERTISEMENT

The Martian landscape, as seen by the recently landed rover Opportunity. With President Bush's new proposal for space exploration, Mars could become a more common sight.

Addressers
wanted immediately!

No Experience necessary.
Work at home.
Call
405-447-6397

Mya's Coffee House
Delicious Hot Chocolate available
with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Dogwood Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
Floral Gifts
Unique Accessories
430 Market Street,
Louisburg
524-7930

NITTANY TRAVEL
201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 1, Shamokin Dam, PA 17876
ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK
Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!
El Pueblito Resort Cancun, Mexico
$925/person - Double-Occupancy
523-3224 800-326-9603

Arts & Entertainment

University Bell Choir rings in the new year with cross-country travels and music

The Rooke Chapel Ringers travelled to Denver, Colo., Guilford, Conn., Bethlehem, Pa. and Hershey, Pa. during their five-day tour Jan. 3. The tour featured songs from the Christmas Candlelight service, including Honore's "Rise up, Shepherd and Follow," Bizet's "Farandole" and a piece composed by bell choir director, William Payn.

BY JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The Rooke Chapel Ringers travel to senior ringers' hometowns each year to present a program of their handbell music for friends, family and congregations. This year, the five-day tour ran from Jan. 3 - 8, and included stops as far as Denver, Colo. and as close as Hershey, Pa.

"Dr. Payn always says that touring is a way to say 'thank you' for the directors that we had who taught us how to play and inspired our love of music," Emily Thede '04 said.

The tour featured tunes familiar to those who attended the Christmas Candlelight service, such as "Rise up, Shepherd and Follow," an African-American spiritual arranged by Jeffrey Honore and George Bizet's "Farandole."

Bell choir Director and University Professor of Music, William Payn also arranged one piece on the program titled "Pinnacle."

"If I had to pick one, [Pinnacle] was probably my favorite," Trisha Bruen '04 said. "I had not played it until this tour ... it was my favorite because it was kind of challenging for me."

To the ringers, the piece was demanding even for those familiar with it.

"It's the hardest level of song that can be written, a level six, so it took a while to get that together," Thede said. "I have always enjoyed playing pieces that our own beloved conductor Dr. Payn has written. They are some of our most moving and impressive pieces and 'Pinnacle' is no exception."

According to program notes for the tour, Payn has published 30 handbell compositions and has been named a "Master Conductor" and "Master Instructor" by the American Guild of English Handbell Ringers.

The tour began at Saint Paul's Lutheran Church in Denver, Colo., near Thede's hometown.

From there, the Ringers moved to Thede's home church in Englewood, Colo.: the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant.

"Many of the ringers had never visited Colorado before so it was fun to introduce them to our beautiful state," Thede said. "I also introduced the ringers to a fun Colorado activity—country line dancing at the Grizzly Rose. Many of the ringers were skeptical of line dancing before we went but everyone really had a great time. We even got Dr. Payn on the dance floor! Not only did I introduce the ringers to Colorado, but I introduced Colorado to the Ringers."

The choir's next stop was on the opposite coast, in Guilford, Conn. at the North Guilford Congregationalist Church, home church of Liisa Britt '04. Bell choir members enjoyed a night by the ocean at this location.

Finally, the group traveled to the home church of Trisha Bruen '04: the Wesley United Methodist Church in Bethlehem, Pa.

"I knew almost everyone at the concert," Bruen said. "I was so excited when I finally got to do it; you don't realize how exciting it is until you're a senior yourself. My mom put so much time into advertising for it, but I was still nervous that no one would come."

Although the choir only spent one day in Bethlehem the members still enjoyed their time there.

The group ended its tour with a performance at the Handbell Exploration Conference at the Hershey Hotel in Hershey, Pa. There, Bell Choir members performed with other choirs and received an opportunity to meet the composers of several pieces on their programs.

"At the Handbell Exploration conference in Hershey, we met the composers of two of our other pieces, 'Song of Peace' and 'Toccata Ritmica.' It is truly a unique experience to play a song under the direction or in the presence of its very composer," Thede said.

The tour marks the seniors' emotional last performance with director Payn, who will be on sabbatical from the University this semester.

"At the last concert, Dr. Payn was saying goodbye to the seniors and I got so teary-eyed I couldn't see my music," Bruen said. "We were all really sad he was going on sabbatical."

Bell choir members said they hold fond memories of the tour.

"Although lugging our equipment around, living out of a suitcase and lots of practice can get tiring, bell tour is always a great experience," Thede said.

Each year, the Rooke Chapel Ringers travel to perform in seniors' hometowns. The group can be heard on campus at their semester concerts and the annual Christmas Candlelight Service.

First-time author releases bestseller

Haddon portrays the life and trials of a child suffering from autism

BY DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

BOOK REVIEW

"The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-Time" is British author Mark Haddon's first novel. It is a daring and intriguing work because its protagonist is autistic.

Fifteen-year-old Christopher John Francis Boone lives in England and delivers the story's events in first-person narration, directly addressing the readers and sharing his disjointed, sometimes confusing thoughts.

The story begins as Christopher ventures into his neighbor's yard and finds her dog, Wellington, murdered. He is initially accused of having killed the dog, but after being cleared of suspicion, begins to investigate the dog's murder.

Chris is an admirer of the Sherlock Holmes mysteries and attempts to use Holmes' deductive reasoning to find the murderer. As a person who does not interact easily with others, Chris manages to uncover a lot of information about his father and the people in his neighborhood.

Despite being admonished repeatedly and told to "mind his own business," Chris discovers who murdered the dog and realizes some long-hidden secrets about his own family.

As he explores his family history further, Chris decides he must venture unsupervised into London to live his own life. By this time, so much has been revealed about Chris and his personality that his Haddon's book features the story of a young autistic boy who uncovers family secrets and the identity of a murderer.

Courtesy of barnesandnoble.com

new and sometimes frightening experiences are equally shocking for the reader.

Chris talks of writing a book about his investigation of the dog's murder, and the novel itself is framed in such a way that it seems to be that Chris writes the book. In addition to being filled with British slang, Chris' narration is often digressive and meandering, reflecting the unsettled mental makeup of people with autism. Pictures, maps and diagrams are interspersed throughout the story, illustrating that although Chris is clearly intelligent, he excels at math and science and is taking an honors exam—he is bewildered by everyday encounters with other people.

Though he has a nearly photographic memory, his life is controlled by superstition and methodical habits. Some of his routines seem bizarre; he determines whether he will have a "good day," a "quite good day" or a "black day" based on the cars he sees on his bus ride to school.

Chris serves as a very literal, matter-of-fact narrator, reporting the events exactly as he sees them without embellishment, because, he often tells others, "I cannot tell a lie." The turmoil within his family seems to have little effect on him because he does not understand the importance of emotions.

The novel as a whole is emotionally wrenching, although Chris' staid retelling of the strain placed upon his parents' marriage muffles some of the emotional weight. His reactions to people crying, yelling and physically confronting him are puzzling and almost alien.

He has an entirely different way of thinking about objects and events, and the author constructs it in such a way that Chris' entire viewpoint is not simply believable, but also interesting and compelling.

As a person who worked with autistic individuals before beginning his career in writing, Haddon provides a unique and specialized insight into the workings of the autistic mind.

I would recommend this book to all sorts of readers, particularly those interested in adolescents, family drama, psychology or mental disorders and, above all, anyone who knows someone with autism.

Haddon captures the nuances, approaches and reactions to the condition with accuracy and honesty. This debut work indicates great promise for his future writings.

Arts & Entertainment

University musical Theatre Club paints a mosaic of musical drama

The Musical Theatre club will be performing this Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. in the Harvey Powers Theatre. Their performance, "Shades of Love" includes selections from several well-known Broadway shows, including "Rent," "Gypsy" and "Guys and Dolls."

BY STEPHANIE MALENICH
Staff Writer

THEATER PREVIEW

I am sure at one point or another we have all thought how much better the world would be if you could spontaneously burst into song and let everyone know just what you were feeling at a particular moment: You got an A on the O-Chem test, you got a date with that hot guy or you're enraged by the price of a burger at the Bison. And even better, everyone around you would know the words to your song and back you up, complete with a snazzy dance number. For a glimpse of what this world would be like, come to the Musical Theatre Club's performance, "Shades of Love," appearing tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m.

in the Harvey Powers Theatre.

The 40 members of the cast will perform selections from "Rent," "Gypsy," "Guys and Dolls," "Baby" and "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown," interspersed with original dialogue. Each of the selections will emphasize the overall theme of the showcase, made obvious by the title, "Shades of Love."

"Next weekend's performance will be a smorgasbord of musical theater. Our goal is to offer a little taste of various kinds of music while making an overall comment on the many forms that love can take," said Kim Klauder '05, the club's president and director of this weekend's show.

The Musical Theatre Club offers a unique experience for those students interested in this type of acting that was lacking in years before its founding.

"The Musical Theatre Club brings students the opportunity to see and perform in musical theatre, which is a form that is not regularly produced at the University," said Sara Bradley '04, the club's vice president.

The club was founded in 2002, largely through the efforts of Klauder and a group.

"There is a large interest in musical theater at Bucknell, but no departmentally-run outlet for this creative energy. I decided that something should be done about this, so myself and several other students got together to brainstorm how best to add musical to the Bucknell community," Klauder said.

The club has held one other performance, a revue of '60s and '70s musicals, since it was created.

From rehearsals, it is obvious that all the students involved have a genuine love for

"Our goal is to offer a little taste of various kinds of music while making an overall comment on the many forms that love can take."
—Kim Klauder '05

performing and singing that shines through in each of the pieces. Just as importantly, each cast member is having fun while on stage, which will translate into a great time for the audience members. And, you never know maybe some won't be able to resist jumping into the aisles and spontaneously joining in.

Hey Mercedes rocks Uptown

BY RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

They came; they saw; they rocked out. The punk band Hey Mercedes, along with opening act Dave Keller, gave a thoroughly entertaining performance for the first Uptown concert of the semester Saturday night.

Dave Keller '03, already known across campus for his contributions to the University's music scene, performed a short acoustic set of self-penned songs, several of which will be featured on his soon-to-be-released extended play. For Keller's guitar-driven pop songs, the audience sat on the floor, giving the performance an intimate, relaxed vibe. The pool sticks were momentarily set aside and the giant floor pillows pushed back, however, when Hey Mercedes took the stage 20 minutes later. With nothing slower than a mid-tempo song in its arsenal, the band showed off its ability to create concise little rock ditties. The modest turnout responded with a warm reception, despite the frigid outdoor temperature.

"It was nice to see how many people actually did show up to support the concert," Christy Langston '06 said. "I thought the band was really talented. Their songs were catchy, melodic and energetic. Overall, it was well worth the freezing walk [to Uptown]."

Despite the moderate student turnout, the band needed little audience participation to get fired up about its own performance. There was plenty of athletic-jumping and guitar-thrashing from the three members of the band not confined behind a drum set. Through its enthusiasm, youthful sense of humor and musicality, the band was ultimately able to win over the typically tough Uptown crowd.

"They exceeded my expectations," Mike DiMaria '06 said.

Hey Mercedes even answered the audience applause with an encore, with two more of its own songs. Despite the encore, the band purposefully ignored several requests to play "Freebird." As is tradition at Uptown concerts, the band made itself available for autographs and pictures after the show.

Formed in April 2000, Hey Mercedes is comprised of members of the defunct band Braid, which was famous on the emo scene until its lead singer left in 1999. The remaining three musicians, Robert Nauna (lead vocalist/guitarist), Todd Bell (bassist) and Damon Atkinson (drummer), added Mark Shumaker (guitarist) to complete their line-up, and began rigorous touring immediately.

They joined the Vagrant Records family in 2001, which is also the home of such well known bands as The Get-Up Kids and Dashboard Confessional. Hey Mercedes have released two LPs since signing with the label, the most recent of which, "Loses Control," was released in 2003.

The band is currently on a 70-show tour of the United States with Wheat, and will later be joined by Early November. In March, Hey Mercedes will share a stage with such internationally renowned and locally respected bands such as Grandaddy and Saves The Day.

BE A PART OF IT.
JOIN THE MOVEMENT TO END EDUCATIONAL INEQUITY.

FIND OUT HOW:
Info Session • Thursday, February 5
6:00 pm • Langone Center 256 with Carla Robertson, '92

TEACHFORAMERICA
www.teachforamerica.org

SUSAN E. BELMONT
Elementary Education MEd student

Attorney-at-law.
First-grade teacher intern.
Two-time marathon finisher.
Achieve More Than a Graduate Degree.

For more information on the Elementary Education MEd program at the GW Graduate School of Education and Human Development, call 202.994.9084, e-mail sbelmont@gwu.edu or visit <http://gsehd.gwu.edu>. You can also attend a virtual open house on Wednesday, February 6. To register, go to <http://gsehd.gwu.edu/voh>.

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY
WASHINGTON, DC

An equal opportunity/affirmative action institution.

Arts & Entertainment

Samek Art Gallery showcases Chinese artistry and culture

Exhibit features contemporary pieces by up and coming Eastern artists

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

By JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

ART REVIEW

The Samek Art Gallery features a new collection of fine arts on campus dedicated to the visual traditions and expressions of the Far East with its newest exhibition, "Regeneration: Contemporary Art

from China and the U.S."

The exhibition includes some of China's most exciting contemporary art. Designed by artists who have devoted much of their work to the international art scene since the late 1980s, they have received international recognition in the last decade for such work. The exhibition will also display work from emerging artists who are being identified throughout the world for their craftsmanship.

"During autumn 2001, artist and Department of Art and Art History Assistant Professor Xiaozhe Xie and I discovered our shared interest in contemporary Chinese art," Dan Mills, curator of the Samek Art Gallery, said. "We realized that while contemporary and avant-garde Chinese artists are being included in major exhibitions internationally in recent years, and

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

"Regeneration: Contemporary Art from China and the U.S." is being exhibited in the Samek Art Gallery until April 4. The collection features contemporary pieces by Eastern artists.

Despite differences within style and media, these artists all express similar thematic concerns in their pieces. While some artists utilize traditional Chinese art forms in more imaginative ways, others demonstrate in their work the significant social and cultural transformations of modern-day China. All these pieces are interconnected through the vital and immediate regeneration of contemporary life and culture in China today.

With a multitude of artists composing the exhibition, a variety of artistic styles, including drawing, installation, painting, photography, prints, sculpture and mixed media, help shape this innovative and creative presentation.

Some of these enlightening pieces include Yu Hong's acrylic painting "1972 Six Years Old at Home in Beijing University of Aeronautics and Astronautics" from 2001, Zhang Huan's color photograph "My America" from 1999 and Li Yongbin's 60-minute video "Face IV" from 1998.

The Samek Art Gallery is located on the third floor of the Langone Center and is open Monday to Friday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday and Sunday from 1-4 p.m. and by appointment. "Regeneration: Contemporary Art from China and the U.S." runs until April 4.

University film student wins national attention at film festival

"One Number 2" details the exploits and effects of a No. 2 pencil

By TYLER CAROLINE MILLS
Staff Writer

The star of Todd Bieber and Juliana Brafa's '05 award-winning short film, "One Number 2," is sharp, enjoys traveling and does not speak a single line. Starting in "One Number 2" is a yellow No. 2 pencil that rolls into the lives of 23 sincerely eclectic characters and a white rabbit named Harmony.

Bieber and Brafa's film production company, Flexible Frame Productions, filmed this mosaic of stories that won first place in the Marco Island Film Festival's student film category in November 2003.

For Bieber, a 2003 graduate of Bloomsburg University, and University student Brafa '05, the award came as a complete surprise. They received the phone call as their return flight from the festival was taking off.

"Are you sure?" Brafa said when she heard the news.

Bieber and Brafa did not expect to even be accepted into the Marco Island preliminary competition when they submitted "One Number 2"—only approximately 20 out of 100 films are accepted into the festival. Bieber and Brafa were competing against submissions from film schools across the United States. Eric Faden, professor of English and film studies at the University, said it was an honor for Bieber and Brafa to win the award.

"Considering that this film competed against student films from the 'best' film schools in the United States, it's obviously a very gratifying win. But on the other hand, it is not unusual because talent lurks everywhere," Faden said. "At the same time, I think Lewisburg and Bucknell provide an exceptional and unique environment for film—an environment that betrays any rural connotation. After all, Lewisburg had the U.S. premiere for the film that won the Cannes Film Festival in 2002. So, when there's an environment where students have the opportunity to learn about different types of cinema and you combine that with natural talent, students winning film festivals is an inevitable outcome."

Bieber and Brafa's movie had only an $800 budget.

"With a low budget, you shoot with what you have access to and what you know," Bieber said.

The "One Number 2" cast includes local actors primarily from Lewisburg and Bloomsburg. University Professor of Theatre Gary Grant makes an appearance as an "old man" in one scene. Most of the scenes were shot within a half-mile of the University. The movie includes glimpses of the Antique Mall, the Magpie and sections of Bertrand Library.

The idea of following a pencil through the course of its life came from Bieber are most often exposed to, which is typically Hollywood cinema. Unfortunately, however, to achieve the look and style of a Hollywood film requires millions of dollars and capital. Most student films inevitably fall short. Bieber and Todd's film aspires to be something different from Hollywood. So, the film matches its ambitions rather than seeming like Hollywood "done badly."

Bieber and Brafa both experienced the extravagance involved with Hollywood cinema as extras in Steven Spielberg's "Catch Me if You Can."

"The thing I noticed the most was that [directors/producers] paid close attention to everything," Brafa said. "They paid me to be an extra, put make-up on me, did my nails, made me even wear underwear from the '60s, and I didn't show up in the movie."

Bieber agreed that attention to detail is important when shooting a scene, but said millions of dollars are not necessary to produce a quality film.

"Catch Me if You Can" was a $40 million movie and "One Number 2" had a budget of $800," Bieber said. "How many more independent film artists could have made movies if the money had been spent differently? We were a prop—we were as important to them [Catch Me if You Can] as a piece of paper. When we [Flexible Frame Productions] work with a cast, we are friends. We have fun and go out for pizza afterward."

Winning the festival has generated interest in future Flexible Frame Productions projects. Bieber and Brafa's work has been accepted into Michigan's Muskegon Film Festival, which takes place in two weeks.

Currently, they are writing another project to be filmed this summer. Anyone interested in participating in a Flexible Frame Productions project this summer can contact Bieber and Brafa at info@flexibleframe.com.

Still curious about what a white rabbit has to do with a No. 2 pencil? "One Number 2" will be playing at 1 p.m. on Feb. 14 at the Lewisburg Campus Theatre.

Todd Bieber and Juliana Brafa '05 cofounded Flexible Frame Productions and then took home first place at the Marco Island Film Festival for their collaborative short film, "One Number 2."

and Brafa's desire to stretch the traditional character-object relationship, which is common to many films.

"Normally movies follow one main character that interacts with lots of objects or other people. I thought about seeing what happens when a main object interacts with an ensemble of people," Brafa said.

"Everybody, despite class, race or age, uses a pencil," Bieber said.

As a main object, the yellow No. 2 pencil brings together many lives, from an artist to a bulimic student. "One Number 2" portrays such different perspectives without becoming unbelievable.

"It's a very different film without being abstract or obtuse. The film has a unique visual look, an unusual structure, and it's poignant," Faden said. "Most student films imitate the type of movies they

And the Golden Globe goes to...

Courtesy of Reuters

"Lost in Translation" star Bill Murray pals around with Renee Zellweger of "Cold Mountain" at last week's Golden Globes.

TELEVISION:

Best Series - Drama

"24," Fox

Best Actress - Drama

Frances Conroy, "Six Feet Under"

Best Actor - Drama

Anthony LaPaglia, "Without a Trace"

Best Series - Musical or Comedy

"The Office," BBC America

Best Actress - Comedy

Sarah Jessica Parker, "Sex and the City"

Best Actor - Comedy

Ricky Gervais, "The Office"

Best Mini-Series or Made for TV Movie

"Angels in America," HBO

Best Actress - Mini-Series or Made for TV Movie

Meryl Streep, "Angels in America"

Best Actor - Mini-Series or Made for TV Movie

Al Pacino, "Angels in America"

MOVIES:

Best Picture - Drama

"The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King"

Best Actress - Drama

Charlize Theron, "Monster"

Best Actor - Drama

Sean Penn, "Mystic River"

Best Picture - Musical or Comedy

"Lost in Translation"

Best Actress - Musical or Comedy

Diane Keaton, "Something's Gotta Give"

Best Actor - Musical or Comedy

Bill Murray, "Lost in Translation"

Best Actor in a Supporting Role

Tim Robbins, "Mystic River"

Best Actress in a Supporting Role

Renee Zellweger, "Cold Mountain"

Best Director

Peter Jackson, "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King"

A LITTLE NIGHT MUSIC

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The soothing lullabies of Nicole McKenna could be heard from the 7th Street Cafe's Late Night Music Series Friday night.

February 6, 2004

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside

Volume 133, Number 2

News:

The University cancels its contract with James Brown, who was scheduled to perform at Chrysalis. Brown was arrested last week and charged with criminal domestic violence.

See page A2

AN IN-DEPTH LOOK AT THE EMERGENCY ALCOHOL POLICY'S EFFECT ON ONE STUDENT

By ELISABETH SALEMME

Editor-in-Chief

Seven University students have been suspended for violating the emergency alcohol policy implemented by University President Steffen Rogers last December.

Two students were suspended due to hospitalization caused by drinking, one student was charged with a DUI and four students were suspended for being "dangerously intoxicated," which are all penalties punishable by suspension as stated in the emergency alcohol policy.

One 21-year-old second semester senior who wished to remain anonymous was suspended from the University this semester because she was "dangerously intoxicated." Under the emergency alcohol policy, any student who becomes "dangerously intoxicated" will be suspended. The student had no prior record and was actively involved in many activities at the University.

The reason the student was asked to leave

See POLICY page A5

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

Students charged since implementation

7 Suspensions

4 "Dangerously intoxicated"

1 D.U.I.

2 Hospitalizations

3 Seniors

3 Freshman

1 Junior

Arts & Entertainment

Samek Art Gallery showcases Chinese artistry and culture

Exhibit features contemporary pieces by up and coming Eastern artists

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

BY JOSH HERWITT
Staff Writer

ART REVIEW

The Samek Art Gallery features a new collection of fine arts on campus dedicated to the visual traditions and expressions of the Far East with its newest exhibition, "Regeneration: Contemporary Art

from China and the U.S."

The exhibition includes some of China's most exciting contemporary art. Designed by artists who have devoted much of their work to the international art scene since the late 1980s, they have received international recognition in the last decade for such work. The exhibition will also display work from emerging artists who are being identified throughout the world for their craftsmanship.

"During autumn 2001, artist and Department of Art and Art History Assistant Professor Xiaozhe Xie and I discovered our shared interest in contemporary Chinese art," Dan Mills, curator of the Samek Art Gallery, said. "We realized that while contemporary and avant-garde Chinese artists are being included in major exhibitions internationally in recent years, and

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

"Regeneration: Contemporary Art from China and the U.S." is being exhibited in the Samek Art Gallery until April 4. The collection features contemporary pieces by Eastern artists.

Despite differences within style and media, these artists all express similar thematic concerns in their pieces. While some artists utilize traditional Chinese art forms in more imaginative ways, others demonstrate in their work the significant social and cultural transformations of modern-day China. All these pieces are interconnected through the vital and immediate regeneration of contemporary life and culture in China today.

With a multitude of artists composing the exhibition, a variety of artistic styles, including drawing, installation, painting, photography, prints, sculpture and mixed media, help shape this innovative and creative presentation.

Some of these enlightening pieces include Yu Hong's acrylic painting "1972 Six Years Old at Home in Beijing University of Aeronautics and Astronautics" from 2001, Zhang Huan's color photograph "My America" from 1999 and Li Yongbin's 60-minute video "Face IV" from 1998.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

University film student wins national attention at film festival

"One Number 2" details the exploits and effects of a No. 2 pencil

BY TYLER CAROLINE MILLS
Staff Writer

The star of Todd Bieber and Juliana Brafa's '05 award-winning short film, "One Number 2," is sharp, enjoys traveling and does not speak a single line. Starring in "One Number 2" is a yellow No. 2 pencil that rolls into the lives of 23 sincerely eclectic characters and a white rabbit named Harmony.

Bieber and Brafa's film production company, Flexible Frame Productions, filmed this mosaic of stories that won first place in the Marco Island Film Festival's student film category in November 2003.

For Bieber, a 2003 graduate of Bloomsburg University, and University student Brafa '05, the award came as a complete surprise. They received the phone call as their return flight from the festival was taking off.

"Are you sure?" Brafa said when she heard the news.

Bieber and Brafa did not expect to even be accepted into the Marco Island preliminary competition when they submitted "One Number 2"—only approximately 20 out of 100 films are accepted into the festival. Bieber and Brafa were competing against submissions from film schools across the United States. Eric Faden, professor of English and film studies at the University, said it was an honor for Bieber and Brafa to win the award.

"Considering that this film competed against student films from the 'best' film schools in the United States, it's obviously a very gratifying win. But on the other hand, it is not unusual because talent lurks everywhere," Faden said. "At the same time, I think Lewisburg and Bucknell provide an exceptional and unique environment for film—an environment that betrays any rural connotation. After all, Lewisburg had the U.S. premiere for the film that won the Cannes Film Festival in 2002. So, when there's an environment where students have the opportunity to learn about different types of cinema and you combine that with natural talent, students winning film festivals is an inevitable outcome."

Bieber and Brafa's movie had only an

$800 budget.

"With a low budget, you shoot with what you have access to and what you know," Bieber said.

The "One Number 2" cast includes local actors primarily from Lewisburg and Bloomsburg. University Professor of Theatre Gary Grant makes an appearance as an "old man" in one scene. Most of the scenes were shot within a half-mile of the University. The movie includes glimpses of the Antique Mall, the Magpie and sections of Bertrand Library.

The idea of following a pencil through the course of its life came from Bieber are most often exposed to, which is typically Hollywood cinema. Unfortunately, however, to achieve the look and style of a Hollywood film requires millions of dollars and capital. Most student films inevitably fall short. Bieber and Brafa's film aspires to be something different from Hollywood. So, the film matches its ambitions rather than seeming like Hollywood done badly."

Bieber and Brafa both experienced the extravagance involved with Hollywood cinema as extras in Steven Spielberg's "Catch Me if You Can."

"The thing I noticed the most was that [directors/producers] paid close attention to everything," Brafa said. "They paid me to be an extra, put make-up on me, did my nails, made me even wear underwear from the '60s, and I didn't show up in the movie."

Bieber agreed that attention to detail is important when shooting a scene, but said millions of dollars are not necessary to produce a quality film.

"Catch Me if You Can" was a $40 million movie and "One Number 2" had a budget of $800," Bieber said. "How many more independent film artists could have made movies if the money had been spent differently? We were a prop—we were as important to them [Catch Me if You Can] as a piece of paper. When we [Flexible Frame Productions] work with a cast, we are friends. We have fun and go out for pizza afterward."

Winning the festival has generated interest in future Flexible Frame Productions projects. Bieber and Brafa's work has been accepted into Michigan's Muskegon Film Festival, which takes place in two weeks.

Currently, they are writing another project to be filmed this summer. Anyone interested in participating in a Flexible Frame Productions project this summer can contact Bieber and Brafa at info@flexibleframe.com.

Still curious about what a white rabbit has to do with a No. 2 pencil? "One Number 2" will be playing at 1 p.m. on Feb. 14 at the Lewisburg Campus Theatre.

Todd Bieber and Juliana Brafa '05 cofounded Flexible Frame Productions and then took home first place at the Marco Island Film Festival for their collaborative short film, "One Number 2."

and Brafa's desire to stretch the traditional character-object relationship, which is common to many films.

"Normally movies follow one main character that interacts with lots of objects or other people. I thought about seeing what happens when a main object interacts with an ensemble of people," Brafa said.

"Everybody, despite class, race or age, uses a pencil," Bieber said.

As a main object, the yellow No. 2 pencil brings together many lives, from an artist to a bulimic student. "One Number 2" portrays such different perspectives without becoming unbelievable.

"It's a very different film without being abstract or obtuse. The film has a unique visual look, an unusual structure, and it's poignant," Faden said. "Most student films imitate the type of movies they

And the Golden Globe goes to...

"Lost in Translation" star Bill Murray pals around with Renee Zellweger of "Cold Mountain" at last week's Golden Globes.

TELEVISION:
Best Series - Drama
"24," Fox

Best Actress - Drama
Frances Conroy,
"Six Feet Under"

Best Actor - Drama
Anthony LaPaglia,
"Without a Trace"

Best Series - Musical or Comedy
"The Office,"
BBC America

Best Actress - Comedy
Sarah Jessica Parker,
"Sex and the City"

Best Actor - Comedy
Ricky Gervais,
"The Office"

Best Mini-Series or Made for TV Movie
"Angels in America,"
HBO

Best Actress - Mini-Series or Made for TV Movie
Meryl Streep,
"Angels in America"

Best Actor - Mini-Series or Made for TV Movie
Al Pacino,
"Angels in America"

MOVIES:
Best Picture - Drama
"The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King"

Best Actress - Drama
Charlize Theron, "Monster"

Best Actor - Drama
Sean Penn,
"Mystic River"

Best Picture - Musical or Comedy
"Lost in Translation"

Best Actress - Musical or Comedy
Diane Keaton,
"Something's Gotta Give"

Best Actor - Musical or Comedy
Bill Murray,
"Lost in Translation"

Best Actor in a Supporting Role
Tim Robbins,
"Mystic River"

Best Actress in a Supporting Role
Renee Zellweger, "Cold Mountain"

Best Director
Peter Jackson,
"The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King"

A LITTLE NIGHT MUSIC

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The soothing lullabies of Nicole McKenna could be heard from the 7th Street Cafe's Late Night Music Series Friday night.

February 6, 2004

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside

Volume 133, Number 2

News:

The University cancels its contract with James Brown, who was scheduled to perform at Chrysalis. Brown was arrested last week and charged with criminal domestic violence.

See page A2

Out of Focus

AN IN-DEPTH LOOK AT THE EMERGENCY ALCOHOL POLICY'S EFFECT ON ONE STUDENT

BY ELISABETH SALEMME

Editor-in-Chief

Seven University students have been suspended for violating the emergency alcohol policy implemented by University President Steffen Rogers last December.

Two students were suspended due to hospitalization caused by drinking, one student was charged with a DUI and four students were suspended for being "dangerously intoxicated," which are all penalties punishable by suspension as stated in the emergency alcohol policy.

One 21-year-old second semester senior who wished to remain anonymous was suspended from the University this semester because she was "dangerously intoxicated." Under the emergency alcohol policy, any student who becomes "dangerously intoxicated" will be suspended. The student had no prior record and was actively involved in many activities at the University.

The reason the student was asked to leave

See POLICY page A5

7 Suspensions

4 "Dangerously intoxicated"

1 D.U.I.

2 Hospitalizations

3 Seniors

3 Freshman

1 Junior

Students charged since implementation

News

WORLD BRIEFS

Compiled by Julie Lesko
Courtesy of BBC.com

Iraqi Kurds see chance for unity

Iraqi Kurdish leaders say the two bombings over the weekend that killed at least 67 people will speed up unity talks. Senior political figures were among the dead and some 200 people were wounded in the Sunday blasts in the town of Irbil. Kurdish Democratic Party leader Massoud Barzani is quoted as saying that his group and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan must work together to end terrorist acts.

Bush orders intelligence review

U.S. President George W. Bush has announced an inquiry into pre-war intelligence that said Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction.

Blast kills Iraqi depot 'looters'

A number of Iraqi looters have been killed by an explosion at a munitions depot in central Iraq, a spokesman for the multinational force said. The blast occurred shortly after midnight on Sunday, about 112 miles southwest of Karbala.

U.N. team to probe Iraq elections

U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan has said he will send a team to Iraq within days to explore the possibility of holding early elections.

Best banned for drunk driving

The former Northern Ireland international footballer George Best has pleaded guilty to a drunk-driving charge at Wimbledon Magistrates Court. On Monday, 57-year-old Best was fined £1,500, banned from driving for 20 months and ordered to pay costs of £55.

The ex-Manchester United and Bournemouth star was stopped by police on the A3 highway in Merton in the early hours last Friday.

France 'considers Pinochet trial'

French Foreign Minister Dominique de Villepin has said France is considering trying Chile's former military ruler, Augusto Pinochet, in his absence.

De Villepin said France could prosecute General Pinochet for human rights violations committed against French nationals during the 1970s.

Microsoft dodges Mydoom onslaught

Microsoft has escaped unscathed from an attack by a variant of the Mydoom virus that struck on Wednesday.

The software giant's technical resources, bugs in Mydoom.B and the limited spread of the virus all helped to cut damage to a minimum.

Japan to display Hitler painting

A painting by Nazi leader Adolf Hitler will be displayed at a Tokyo theater this week. The painting will promote a film loosely based on his life.

FIRST-YEAR STUDENTS BECOME BUCKNELLIAN

First-year students gather in Rooke Chapel Tuesday evening to celebrate their first completed semester as Bucknell students. The new Bucknellians heard from their class president, Flor De Liz Perez, and viewed a slide show of their semester.

Bucknell Brigade humanitarian efforts continue in Nicaragua

The 21 students and four faculty members who traveled to Nicaragua over Winter Break stand in front of the medical facility built during their visit. Members of the group also toured sites around the area, including an active volcano.

By KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

Over Winter Break, many students at the University took vacations to warm, exotic places. The members of this year's Bucknell Brigade were no exception. Instead of lounging on a beach, 21 students and four faculty members were hard at work in Nicaragua, building new medical facilities for impoverished villagers and receiving the education of their lives.

The Bucknell Brigade to Nicaragua, an event undertaken twice a year, is a humanitarian-aid program that concentrates its efforts in the village of Nueva Vida. In the 10 visits since 1999, the Brigade members have developed a medical complex in the village, where healthcare had been rarely accessible.

This winter, students worked for nine days to add a new women's health center to the complex. Living outside of the village, students and staff were bused in daily to complete tasks such as mixing cement by hand and constructing the medical facility. The experience was something that those involved will not soon forget.

"[It] was a very educational experience because we were exposed to a world that is vastly different from the one we are accustomed to," Matt Albrecht '04 said. "Being in Nicaragua gave us that different perspective."

Originally launched by Jamie Cistoldi Lee '99 to help Nicaraguans recover from the extensive damage of Hurricane Mitch in 1998, the Bucknell Brigade trip has blossomed into a semi-annual visit.

"When we were working at the clinic we weren't just working by ourselves. We were working side by side with them [the Nicaraguans]," Albrecht said. "We got a peek into their life, more than you see when you're just driving down the street. They tell you about their families, their friends and what they do. It was one thing to just be doing community service, but I think the best part was being able to work side by side with the people."

Living in the impoverished conditions the villagers face every day, without much water for hygienic use and eating meals of rice and beans, shocked many students.

"It was a very difficult adjustment for almost everyone," Albrecht said. "Kids here [at Bucknell] are used to going to a mall and spending $300, which is about as much as someone in Nicaragua makes in a whole year. It just shows you how materialistic we really are. It definitely makes you think about your life and the decisions you make."

On top of their daily work in Nueva Vida, Brigade members toured several sites around the area, including an active volcano and a lake in the cradle of a dormant one.

"I think we overestimate the impact of our labor. The biggest impact is that these people in Nueva Vida saw all these volunteers come in after the hurricane. Afterwards all those volunteers disappeared, and they felt abandoned. But we came back, so they would know we are still there. They've often been abandoned by their own government and by our government. They always seem amazed that we togetherness from the very start. We definitely grew close really quickly because everyone was going through the same thing and because we were working together, hanging out together and eating together," Albrecht said.

Many students also felt a strong tie to the villagers themselves, after hearing about their lives and helping to construct something that would benefit them for years

University students and faculty worked side-by-side for nine days with locals to construct a new women's health center. The Brigade has made 10 visits since 1999, working to develop a medical facility for the village of Nueva Vida.

Students were also offered the opportunity to listen to several political leaders speak about the country and its often dissatisfactory ties with the United States.

One of the leaders included the mayor of the nearby city, Ciudad Sandino. To many, hearing about the world from the perspective of a Central American was a surprising and disarming experience.

"The biggest shock for me was how much control the American government has over the Nicaraguan government. Hearing from the people who live in a place like that every day and hearing about how the U.S. has a hand in controlling their elections to get what we want... was shocking," Meredith Field '04 said.

Despite the problems plaguing Latin America today, the brigade members did their best to improve things. Although the students and faculty on the brigade can stay in Nicaragua for only eight days, the effects of their contributions extend far beyond what they do during that week.

come back," University Chaplain Ian Oliver said. Despite the good the brigade does for the citizens of Nueva Vida, members said they themselves walked away with something just as valuable.

"Going to a third-world country gives you a whole new perspective on life, on politics, on the U.S., on everything. It makes you appreciate everything you have and it's just extremely educational. I think we gain more from them than they from us," Field said.

Even the faculty brigade members said they came back to the University with a deeper appreciation for everything around them.

"I really love it. It's one of the best experiences I have with Bucknell students. It makes me come back and realize how much I want to be here and puts a whole new perspective on our students," Oliver said.

Living in close quarters and going through such an eye-opening experience creates a lasting bond among the members of the Brigade.

"We got a strong feeling of 21-year-old senior with no record suspended

POLICY From page A1

The University was due to the level of her blood alcohol count (BAC), which was .23. At the end of last semester, Dean of Students Richard Ferraro sent an e-mail to students that said a "dangerous level" of intoxication is considered to be .16 BAC or higher. The student was taken to the hospital, but her stomach was not pumped, she said.

"When Dean Ferraro called me into his office, I had no idea I was going to be suspended. It was a shock to me," the student said.

The student said she believes the University has made an example out of her, so that other students will not repeat the mistake she made. She also said she does not think her punishment is fair.

"I was just walking home with a friend. I was not belligerent. I was not doing anything wrong. I was a really good student. I held two jobs, but nothing mattered because I was in the wrong place at the wrong time," the student said.

"When you're in a relationship with anyone or any institution, you make deposits and withdrawals. I put a lot of deposits into Bucknell, and they took a big withdrawal from me."

Many students said they do not think suspension was the appropriate action that should have been taken for this student.

"I think that by suspending her, Rogers has decreased the chances of her having a successful scholastic career, which in turn decreases the chances of her finding employment... It's a very vicious cycle," Martine Worrall '04 said.

Rogers said he is not happy about the number of students who have committed alcohol violations since the implementation of the emergency alcohol policy.

"When the emergency measures were enacted, I hoped that the severity of the penalties would be taken into account in student behavior. To think that no one would get caught up in the measures would have been naive. However, I am truly

"The very nature of an emergency system means that normal process does not occur."
—Richard Ferraro, dean of students disappointed that so many students have been suspended," Rogers said.

Ferraro agreed with Rogers, and said he does not like to have so many students suspended from the University.

"It makes me feel worse when a senior is suspended," Ferraro said. "The one area I think people go astray [in] is they think to themselves, 'Well, I'm 21, doesn't that mean I can drink as much as drunk as I want?' and the answer is, 'No.' Bucknell has certain standards and certain community needs."

The student said she was told by Ferraro that she would be able to write Rogers a letter in order to plead her case. The student said she wrote a letter to Rogers, informing him that she had a good grade point average and had no prior record of any kind. Two days later, the student met with Ferraro again, and he presented her with a letter from Rogers, informing her that she had 48 hours to leave campus.

"Suspensions are extremely serious punishments and therefore, I believe that each situation should be taken case by case," Panhellenic President Julie Schmidt '05 said.

Students also said they think suspended students should have

The student was given a one-semester suspension rather than a two-semester suspension, presumably, she said, due to her good past with the University.

The process leading up to suspension under the emergency alcohol policy does not include a formal hearing, according to Ferraro. Ferraro calls students who have committed an offense worthy of a suspension into his office, and he also informs the students' parents of the situation.

Ferraro collects information for students to help them present their cases to Rogers. Rogers makes the decision as to whether or not the students will be permitted to remain at the University.

"Not having a formal procedure... is part of the nature of an emergency system. The very nature of an emergency system means that normal process does not occur," Ferraro said.

Rogers said he does not make decisions for suspension on his own.

"Granted, I am the final authority for all emergency measures. However, I do not make these decisions in a vacuum. I rely heavily on our professionals in this field who are well versed in the facts of each case and appropriate members of my staff. Many of the decisions, in fact most, have been tempered by the good counsel of a number of people," Rogers said.

Many students said they believe students should have a trial for alcohol-related matters that can result in suspension from the University.

"Suspensions are extremely serious punishments and therefore, I believe that each situation should be taken case by case," Panhellenic President Julie Schmidt '05 said.

Students also said they think suspended students should have the right to appeal.

"I think that the system of 'checks and balances' that exists in the administration of this school has also been disbanded by the emergency alcohol measures. [The suspended student] should have met with the dean and proceeded with one of three actions as outlined in the Student Handbook: acceptance of responsibility, contestation, or further investigation. Instead, she was given 48 hours to get off campus, without any chance to talk with [Rogers] or appeal," Worrall said. "It is unbelievably dangerous to invest one person with this kind of power."

A friend of the student, Beth Cammarata '04, does not think the student was justly suspended.

"In serious cases like suspension, as a student, you have the right to be put in front of the judicial board—[the student] never spoke to anyone but Dean Ferraro," Cammarata said.

According to Ferraro, one student was taken to the hospital last semester and was considered to be "dangerously intoxicated" under the stipulations of the emergency alcohol policy. She was not suspended because her friends called an ambulance, and under partial amnesty, this "dangerously intoxicated" student received only one point.

"It isn't fair that someone who is in a much more severe situation gets a second chance simply because their friends take them to the hospital where they get their stomach pumped and are violent with friends and hospital staff," Trisha Berner '04 said.

The student said she has been instructed to meet with an alcohol counselor, do community service or get a job, "keep out of trouble" and write a statement regarding what she has learned while home.

"If I accomplish all these things, I could take classes in the summer or return to school in the fall," the student said.

The student said she is trying to deal with the immediate effects of her suspension, and has not considered the potential obstacles she may face regarding a future career.

"Right now I am worrying about my student loans. I am waiting to see what happens to the money, and since I am not enrolled at Bucknell, I will have to start paying off the loans in six months. Right now I am trying to focus on getting a part-time job. The career aspect is the least of my worries right now," the student said.

At this point, the student said she and her family do not plan to pursue legal action against the University.

"There has to be a reason for me to be home," she said. "I truly

"Emergency measures, no matter how badly they might be needed for the moment, always carry with them inherent issues. Therefore, the more rapidly we can move to the new system, the better," Rogers said.

The new system is largely created by the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA), comprised of students, faculty and administrators.

"I am particularly pleased that the points system proposed by the CCA adheres to the principles of strengthening the points system in cases of severe abuse of alcohol and removes or dramatically reduces the penalties for lesser offenses," Rogers said.

According to Ferraro, CCA's points system has already had a lot of student input, from groups such as the Panhellenic Council, the Interfraternity Council and Bucknell Student Government.

The new policy will include some elements of the emergency alcohol system, such as zero points for an "in the presence of alcohol" offense, and eight points for offenses such as a DUI.

"The very nature of emergency systems is that they tend to be fairly strict and they tend to be fairly broad," Ferraro said. "As we move back into the more normative pattern, I think we'll have more of a flexible system, which will be more proportioned and will create nicer, necessary, more sensitive distinctions between different cases."

With the new points system, Ferraro said there will still be offenses that require students to leave, even if it is for a first-time offense.

A provision to the new alcohol policy, according to Ferraro, is that it will also allow off-campus students to have hard alcohol on campus.

News

"The very nature of an emergency system means that normal process does not occur."
—Richard Ferraro, dean of students disappointed that so many students have been suspended," Rogers said.

Ferraro agreed with Rogers, and said he does not like to have so many students suspended from the University.

"It makes me feel worse when a senior is suspended," Ferraro said. "The one area I think people go astray [in] is they think to themselves, 'Well, I'm 21, doesn't that mean I can drink as much as drunk as I want?' and the answer is, 'No.' Bucknell has certain standards and certain community needs."

The student said she was told by Ferraro that she would be able to write Rogers a letter in order to plead her case. The student said she wrote a letter to Rogers, informing him that she had a good grade point average and had no prior record of any kind. Two days later, the student met with Ferraro again, and he presented her with a letter from Rogers, informing her that she had 48 hours to leave campus.

"Suspensions are extremely serious punishments and therefore, I believe that each situation should be taken case by case," Panhellenic President Julie Schmidt '05 said.

Students also said they think suspended students should have

The student was given a one-semester suspension rather than a two-semester suspension, presumably, she said, due to her good past with the University.

The process leading up to suspension under the emergency alcohol policy does not include a formal hearing, according to Ferraro. Ferraro calls students who have committed an offense worthy of a suspension into his office, and he also informs the students' parents of the situation.

Ferraro collects information for students to help them present their cases to Rogers. Rogers makes the decision as to whether or not the students will be permitted to remain at the University.

"Not having a formal procedure... is part of the nature of an emergency system. The very nature of an emergency system means that normal process does not occur," Ferraro said.

Rogers said he does not make decisions for suspension on his own.

"Granted, I am the final authority for all emergency measures. However, I do not make these decisions in a vacuum. I rely heavily on our professionals in this field who are well versed in the facts of each case and appropriate members of my staff. Many of the decisions, in fact most, have been tempered by the good counsel of a number of people," Rogers said.

Many students said they believe students should have a trial for alcohol-related matters that can result in suspension from the University.

"Suspensions are extremely serious punishments and therefore, I believe that each situation should be taken case by case," Panhellenic President Julie Schmidt '05 said.

Students also said they think suspended students should have the right to appeal.

"I think that the system of 'checks and balances' that exists in the administration of this school has also been disbanded by the emergency alcohol measures. [The suspended student] should have met with the dean and proceeded with one of three actions as outlined in the Student Handbook: acceptance of responsibility, contestation, or further investigation. Instead, she was given 48 hours to get off campus, without any chance to talk with [Rogers] or appeal," Worrall said. "It is unbelievably dangerous to invest one person with this kind of power."

A friend of the student, Beth Cammarata '04, does not think the student was justly suspended.

"In serious cases like suspension, as a student, you have the right to be put in front of the judicial board—[the student] never spoke to anyone but Dean Ferraro," Cammarata said.

According to Ferraro, one student was taken to the hospital last semester and was considered to be "dangerously intoxicated" under the stipulations of the emergency alcohol policy. She was not suspended because her friends called an ambulance, and under partial amnesty, this "dangerously intoxicated" student received only one point.

"It isn't fair that someone who is in a much more severe situation gets a second chance simply because their friends take them to the hospital where they get their stomach pumped and are violent with friends and hospital staff," Trisha Berner '04 said.

The student said she has been instructed to meet with an alcohol counselor, do community service or get a job, "keep out of trouble" and write a statement regarding what she has learned while home.

"If I accomplish all these things, I could take classes in the summer or return to school in the fall," the student said.

The student said she is trying to deal with the immediate effects of her suspension, and has not considered the potential obstacles she may face regarding a future career.

"Right now I am worrying about my student loans. I am waiting to see what happens to the money, and since I am not enrolled at Bucknell, I will have to start paying off the loans in six months. Right now I am trying to focus on getting a part-time job. The career aspect is the least of my worries right now," the student said.

At this point, the student said she and her family do not plan to pursue legal action against the University.

"There has to be a reason for me to be home," she said. "I truly

"Emergency measures, no matter how badly they might be needed for the moment, always carry with them inherent issues. Therefore, the more rapidly we can move to the new system, the better," Rogers said.

The new system is largely created by the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA), comprised of students, faculty and administrators.

"I am particularly pleased that the points system proposed by the CCA adheres to the principles of strengthening the points system in cases of severe abuse of alcohol and removes or dramatically reduces the penalties for lesser offenses," Rogers said.

According to Ferraro, CCA's points system has already had a lot of student input, from groups such as the Panhellenic Council, the Interfraternity Council and Bucknell Student Government.

The new policy will include some elements of the emergency alcohol system, such as zero points for an "in the presence of alcohol" offense, and eight points for offenses such as a DUI.

"The very nature of emergency systems is that they tend to be fairly strict and they tend to be fairly broad," Ferraro said. "As we move back into the more normative pattern, I think we'll have more of a flexible system, which will be more proportioned and will create nicer, necessary, more sensitive distinctions between different cases."

With the new points system, Ferraro said there will still be offenses that require students to leave, even if it is for a first-time offense.

A provision to the new alcohol policy, according to Ferraro, is that it will also allow off-campus students to have hard alcohol on campus.

Retail

Average price
$76/$50 new* used*

Half.com

Average price
$43/$22
new* used*

You do the math.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more!
Simply use this code:
BUCKNELL

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 50% off retail prices. New or used, all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Gotta love that new math.

half.com
by eBAY

Same textbooks.
Smarter prices.

Copyright 2003-2004 Half.com. Half.com, the Half.com logo, eBAY and the eBAY logo are trademarks of eBAY Inc. All rights reserved. *Average Retail Price of a New Textbook based on data from Follett Corp (as reported by The Associated Press in January 2003). Average Retail Price of a Used Textbook based on data from Monument Information Resources. Average Half.com Price for New and Used Textbooks based on an August/September 2003 analysis of over 500,000 books sold on Half.com. Quantities, pricing and availability are not guaranteed and will vary due to supply and demand. Coupon is for first-time buyers only. Limited time offer, excludes shipping and handling, offer subject to change or termination without prior notice.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 133, Number 2
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Salemme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sanch-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editors
Julie Lesko '07
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kecley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRoss '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwitz '06
Teri Schlang '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editor
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Adviser
James F. Lee

OP-ED POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print offices.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Student unjustly suspended; changes needed

"Emergency times call for emergency measures." Students have heard the administration repeat this cliché many times in the past few months with reference to the alcohol situation at the University. The administration has taken action, but this action has not and will not be cause for positive change.

Due to the provisions of the emergency alcohol policy implemented in December by University President Steffen Rogers, seven students have been suspended from the University by Rogers. Suspensions are determined solely by Rogers, as under the conditions of the emergency policy students charged are not given a trial.

One suspended student was a 21-year-old second semester senior who was charged with "dangerous intoxication," defined by the policy as a blood alcohol count (BAC) level above .16. The student was an active member of the University; she had a good grade point average and had no prior record. The decision to suspend her was outrageous.

The emergency alcohol policy has fatal flaws; therefore, the policy was doomed before it was instituted. The fact that students have no feasible way of knowing what their BAC is, combined with the fact that students are not allowed a trial, make the policy inherently unjust. The suspension of the 21-year-old senior exemplifies how the policy only hurts students.

When 21-year-old students, such as the suspended senior, are at a bar or a party, it is likely they do not know what their BAC is, and therefore cannot determine if they are inebriated to what the University defines to be a "dangerous" level. The administration should have at least informed students of approximately how many drinks they must have consumed in a certain amount of time, depending on the person's size, in order to reach a .16 BAC.

The University administration continuously emphasizes the importance of education and that when students makes a mistake, it is necessary that they learn from that mistake and will thus contribute to the University. Prior to this new emergency policy the University has always made it a goal to educate first and then to punish. It is ludicrous to punish students so severely without ever properly explaining the terms of such a serious policy.

Anger about the severity of the policy and a general lack of knowledge about the ramifications of their actions have caused students to view the administration with shock. Tolerance and forgiveness are needed in an institution where a goal of the administration is for students to grow as individuals. Zero tolerance policies do not work.

Another significant problem with the emergency alcohol policy is the fact when students commit an offense worthy of suspension, they are not afforded a trial. If the senior who was suspended was given a trial before the Community Judicial Board (CJB), it is likely that considering her past, she would be at the University today.

Those accused of sexual assault are allowed trials before the CJB. Alcohol violations can be just as severe and serious as sexual assault is, and it is wrong that those students accused of serious alcohol violations are automatically suspended without the opportunity to provide a defense. Any student charged with any violation, regardless of an emergency situation, should have the right to a fair trial.

A final point that those who implemented the emergency policy have failed to consider is that the futures of the suspended students will never be the same. Seniors who were suspended could have had potential job offers, but will not be able to accept because they will not be able to graduate on time. This is not an appropriate punishment, especially for someone who is of-age and who never committed an alcohol violation in his or her past.

While the emergency policy only remains in effect for a few more weeks, as a revised points system will be instituted by March, it is essential that Rogers and the administration consider the decency and fairness of the current policy. The current policy does not accurately reflect the educational needs of the University, and those who implement the new policy must learn from its mistakes.

Whether one supports our efforts in Iraq or the federal deficit resulting from expanding budgets, everyone should realize that whenever something goes wrong, people start to blame others instead of working to figure out why a problem occurred.

Our country, aside from being extremely lazy, does not understand the importance of this simple value that should be learned at a young age. Stein mentioned responsibility and hard work, not just in his tips for ruining one's life, but also in other areas of his talk: Spending for education and abortion are sensitive issues, and whether you agree with his beliefs or not, his mention of them played into his belief in the importance of responsibility.

Stein asserted that education is not the responsibility of the taxpayer, and that spending more money will not necessarily solve the problem, although there are many desperate school districts that need of funding to provide the basic materials needed for learning, and increased funding will help.

He did a good job of arguing that learning needs to start with the students themselves and with the parents when the children are younger. Those who do not want to learn will not put forth the effort. The problem remains unsolvable because no one can be forced into learning. Stein was correct by saying that students need to take responsibility for their learning and education because it is the key to success.

Abortion, although not as clear cut an issue in my mind as education can be used by people to avoid responsibility for their actions. Stein was adamantly opposed to abortion, which may have upset more liberal-minded audience members because it did not seem to mesh with the rest of his talk. I can see abortion's connection to the rest of his life lessons—taking responsibility for one's actions has been lost in our country, especially in the past year with the way our country has been run. Whether one supports our efforts in Iraq or the federal deficit resulting from expanding budgets, everyone should realize that whenever something goes wrong, people start to blame others instead of working to figure out why a problem occurred.

I know it would make me feel a little better knowing someone is responsible for the different problems our country is facing.

At the end of the day, knowing that someone is responsible has not created any change and will not stop problems from happening in the future. Stein's emphasis on responsibility and values may seem a little redundant to some, but maybe that is exactly what our country needs. By going back to the basics, we may be able to create change and a more harmonious place in which to live. Stein, in his comic way, was able to help me remember the importance of seemingly trivial and well-known rules for life. If only everyone would have the benefit of hearing them more often.

The pervading warmth of spring is slow but promising, awakening our bodies from winter's spell. No matter how slowly winter evolves into spring, small victories, such as walking to dinner to see the remains of daylight lingering in the sky, help us to keep our optimism.

Perhaps the most titillating aspect of early spring is the emergence of color: ground that was once gray now glows with new greens. Trees that were brown have new accents of yellow, lime and marigold. Lilies, daffodils, daisies and dandelions all help to brighten our days.

There's just something about the atmosphere—the excitement and energy brought on by spring are emotions, that no other season can match. Where stomping through fresh snow, watching your breath appear with every exhale or admiring the icicles which ornament the trees was once fulfilling, we are now antsy and can not help but anticipate what is yet to come.

I eagerly await lying barefoot in the grass, early morning jogs across campus while noticing the warm sun drying the dew and even catching a glimpse of the first lightning bug. I even anxiously await the mosquitoes, sunburns, heat waves and jellyfish, so that I can long once again for the crisp, cold winter.

Looking around, I tried to understand the situation. Inches of snow covered the ground, trees dripped with icicles, and yet, the intense glow of the sun helped warm my body and assured me that spring is on its way.

It's no secret: the five degree mornings, the icy pavement, the soggy sneaker—no one will miss them when we see the snow melting, windows opening, and flip-flops flapping. Students will resume their positions on the Quad, mixing their studies and their attempts to regain a tan after everyone's glow was lost during the long winter months.

The sweet smell of spring slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

The thought of spring helps students brave the cold

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Bundled in my layers, I attempted to enjoy the final moments of warmth before exiting into the outdoors. I dug my hands deep into my pockets after buttoning up my vest so that I would shield myself from the chill as much as possible.

I opened the door and anticipated the worst. The shock of the cold startled my flesh, but it had I stepped out of the shadow of my dorm and into the sunlight, I felt a strange warmth. Then I smelled it—a scent that I would recognize anywhere, but it had been so long since I last experienced it, that it caught me off guard. It was the sweet smell of spring, slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

Looking around, I tried to understand the situation. Inches of snow covered the ground, trees dripped with icicles, and yet, the intense glow of the sun helped warm my body and assured me that spring is on its way.

It's no secret: the five degree mornings, the icy pavement, the soggy sneaker—no one will miss them when we see the snow melting, windows opening, and flip-flops flapping. Students will resume their positions on the Quad, mixing their studies and their attempts to regain a tan after everyone's glow was lost during the long winter months.

The sweet smell of spring slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

The thought of spring helps students brave the cold

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Bundled in my layers, I attempted to enjoy the final moments of warmth before exiting into the outdoors. I dug my hands deep into my pockets after buttoning up my vest so that I would shield myself from the chill as much as possible.

I opened the door and anticipated the worst. The shock of the cold startled my flesh, but it had I stepped out of the shadow of my dorm and into the sunlight, I felt a strange warmth. Then I smelled it—a scent that I would recognize anywhere, but it had been so long since I last experienced it, that it caught me off guard. It was the sweet smell of spring, slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

Looking around, I tried to understand the situation. Inches of snow covered the ground, trees dripped with icicles, and yet, the intense glow of the sun helped warm my body and assured me that spring is on its way.

It's no secret: the five degree mornings, the icy pavement, the soggy sneaker—no one will miss them when we see the snow melting, windows opening, and flip-flops flapping. Students will resume their positions on the Quad, mixing their studies and their attempts to regain a tan after everyone's glow was lost during the long winter months.

The sweet smell of spring slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

The thought of spring helps students brave the cold

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Bundled in my layers, I attempted to enjoy the final moments of warmth before exiting into the outdoors. I dug my hands deep into my pockets after buttoning up my vest so that I would shield myself from the chill as much as possible.

I opened the door and anticipated the worst. The shock of the cold startled my flesh, but it had I stepped out of the shadow of my dorm and into the sunlight, I felt a strange warmth. Then I smelled it—a scent that I would recognize anywhere, but it had been so long since I last experienced it, that it caught me off guard. It was the sweet smell of spring, slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

Looking around, I tried to understand the situation. Inches of snow covered the ground, trees dripped with icicles, and yet, the intense glow of the sun helped warm my body and assured me that spring is on its way.

It's no secret: the five degree mornings, the icy pavement, the soggy sneaker—no one will miss them when we see the snow melting, windows opening, and flip-flops flapping. Students will resume their positions on the Quad, mixing their studies and their attempts to regain a tan after everyone's glow was lost during the long winter months.

The sweet smell of spring slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

The thought of spring helps students brave the cold

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Bundled in my layers, I attempted to enjoy the final moments of warmth before exiting into the outdoors. I dug my hands deep into my pockets after buttoning up my vest so that I would shield myself from the chill as much as possible.

I opened the door and anticipated the worst. The shock of the cold startled my flesh, but it had I stepped out of the shadow of my dorm and into the sunlight, I felt a strange warmth. Then I smelled it—a scent that I would recognize anywhere, but it had been so long since I last experienced it, that it caught me off guard. It was the sweet smell of spring, slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

Looking around, I tried to understand the situation. Inches of snow covered the ground, trees dripped with icicles, and yet, the intense glow of the sun helped warm my body and assured me that spring is on its way.

It's no secret: the five degree mornings, the icy pavement, the soggy sneaker—no one will miss them when we see the snow melting, windows opening, and flip-flops flapping. Students will resume their positions on the Quad, mixing their studies and their attempts to regain a tan after everyone's glow was lost during the long winter months.

The sweet smell of spring slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

The thought of spring helps students brave the cold

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Bundled in my layers, I attempted to enjoy the final moments of warmth before exiting into the outdoors. I dug my hands deep into my pockets after buttoning up my vest so that I would shield myself from the chill as much as possible.

I opened the door and anticipated the worst. The shock of the cold startled my flesh, but it had I stepped out of the shadow of my dorm and into the sunlight, I felt a strange warmth. Then I smelled it—a scent that I would recognize anywhere, but it had been so long since I last experienced it, that it caught me off guard. It was the sweet smell of spring, slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

Looking around, I tried to understand the situation. Inches of snow covered the ground, trees dripped with icicles, and yet, the intense glow of the sun helped warm my body and assured me that spring is on its way.

It's no secret: the five degree mornings, the icy pavement, the soggy sneaker—no one will miss them when we see the snow melting, windows opening, and flip-flops flapping. Students will resume their positions on the Quad, mixing their studies and their attempts to regain a tan after everyone's glow was lost during the long winter months.

The sweet smell of spring slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

The thought of spring helps students brave the cold

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Bundled in my layers, I attempted to enjoy the final moments of warmth before exiting into the outdoors. I dug my hands deep into my pockets after buttoning up my vest so that I would shield myself from the chill as much as possible.

I opened the door and anticipated the worst. The shock of the cold startled my flesh, but it had I stepped out of the shadow of my dorm and into the sunlight, I felt a strange warmth. Then I smelled it—a scent that I would recognize anywhere, but it had been so long since I last experienced it, that it caught me off guard. It was the sweet smell of spring, slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

Looking around, I tried to understand the situation. Inches of snow covered the ground, trees dripped with icicles, and yet, the intense glow of the sun helped warm my body and assured me that spring is on its way.

It's no secret: the five degree mornings, the icy pavement, the soggy sneaker—no one will miss them when we see the snow melting, windows opening, and flip-flops flapping. Students will resume their positions on the Quad, mixing their studies and their attempts to regain a tan after everyone's glow was lost during the long winter months.

The sweet smell of spring slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

The thought of spring helps students brave the cold

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Bundled in my layers, I attempted to enjoy the final moments of warmth before exiting into the outdoors. I dug my hands deep into my pockets after buttoning up my vest so that I would shield myself from the chill as much as possible.

I opened the door and anticipated the worst. The shock of the cold startled my flesh, but it had I stepped out of the shadow of my dorm and into the sunlight, I felt a strange warmth. Then I smelled it—a scent that I would recognize anywhere, but it had been so long since I last experienced it, that it caught me off guard. It was the sweet smell of spring, slightly perched on the cold breath of winter.

For dry, red eyes... read this article

By KATIE PFEIFER
Contributing Writer

The University brings many speakers and programs to campus, yet many seem to have little appeal when it comes to gaining the interest of the entire student body. Monday night in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts proved to be a vastly different case, when Ben Stein spoke in front of a packed house, as other students watched via simulcast in Leanne Freas Trout Auditorium.

Everyone knows Stein from his roles in different movies, most notably "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" and his game show, "Win Ben Stein's Money." However, Stein has done a great deal of work in many other fields, including working for former U.S. presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford. These lesser known, if not even more important accomplishments, were mentioned during his introduction. Many students had no previous knowledge of him, except for the fact that he is a conservative Republican, because he was brought to us through the effort and energy of the Conservatives Club (although the talk was also sponsored by other organizations).

Being a student of a more liberal mind than some on campus, I was a little skeptical of his talk, simply because the title "Win Ben Stein's Insight" did not provide enough details to let us know what the topic would be, and with our country in the midst of the Democratic primaries, it seemed natural to assume that the topic would be politics. Stein's talk proved to be mostly the opposite, with the majority of political discussion coming from the audience's questions.

Stein was an amusing, insightful and captivating speaker, whose main points were a portion of his tips from his book "How to Ruin Your Life." They were entertaining anecdotes about life and the ways in which one can work toward failure as opposed to success, which had the audience laughing at the seemingly obvious ways to keep from getting ahead in this world.

Although we laughed, I hope that people walked away at least thinking about their relationships with others and the ways in which they interact with each other. Stein mentioned that one way to fail in life is to think that you are the center of the world and that everyone wants to cater to you simply because you are special. The audience laughed, since we all know people like that.

However, the majority of college-aged people are not and could not ever be like that, although we are on occasion very demanding and self-centered. That is a point that hit home for me, and I would hope that it was the same for many people on campus.

For whatever reason, we think there will always be people, whether it's our family, friends or even strangers, who will be there to pick up the pieces when something goes wrong simply because many of us have yet to encounter situations where we do have to take responsibility.

possible and, if so, why is it happening? As it turns out, these ideas are as hotly contested as the scorching Sahara desert. Assume for one moment that global warming is real, our carbon dioxide emissions are the cause and we can take measures to counteract it. We could spend billions of dollars to reduce carbon dioxide emissions with greater technological efficiency, cool the earth's temperature by soaking up existing carbon dioxide with trees, or even pay Superman to stop the earth's rotation and save the world. Those ideas are far too costly.

Never mind that the earth's precipitous rise in temperature coincides with the start of the Industrial Revolution, or that the '90s was the hottest decade on record. Never mind that the arctic ice caps are melting away or that we are pouring tons of carbon dioxide into the air. We would rather spend our money on Hummers because they are the closest things we can have to a tank. We can drive to the gym and back, only to work out and set the air conditioning to "freezing" just because we can. That is what defines Americans.

That is also what defines extraordinary wastefulness and disregard for our fellow man and, obviously, for the global environment. The global warming debate has gotten out of hand. If true, global warming is a serious issue that threatens to drown entire seaboards, cause mass extinction, provoke extreme weather patterns and enable mass starvation. Doesn't the mere threat of that justify a radical rethinking of our nation's habits?

Action has been turned into inaction because the economic incentives and the political will simply do not exist.

With this in mind, global warming becomes a rather urgent political and social question. But for better or for worse, politics is all talk and no show. Ford Motor Company declared this the "year of the car," and with gas-guzzling SUVs rolling off the assembly lines, the problem is clear: America's carbon dioxide emissions now account for 25 percent of the world's total.

The Kyoto Accord, an international treaty that limits carbon dioxide emissions to 5 percent below their 1990 totals, was tossed aside and ridiculed by U.S. President George Bush. Action has been turned into inaction because the economic incentives and the political will simply do not exist. Instead, business continues as usual.

Forget about global warming for one second. Whatever

Global warming is a phenomenal excuse to better the environment, the economy and our status as a benevolent superpower.

Is global warming the exact opposite of the last Ice Age and totally unrelated to human activity? Or, alternatively, is global warming the direct product of human activities? Before we gather on the 80 degree South Pole in the year 2050 and bust out our ukuleles, grass skirts and flip-flops, science must definitively answer two very real questions: Is this scenario even possible and, if so, why is it happening? As it turns out, these ideas are as hotly contested as the scorching Sahara desert. Assume for one moment that global warming is real, our carbon dioxide emissions are the cause and we can take measures to counteract it. We could spend billions of dollars to reduce carbon dioxide emissions with greater technological efficiency, cool the earth's temperature by soaking up existing carbon dioxide with trees, or even pay Superman to stop the earth's rotation and save the world. Those ideas are far too costly.

Never mind that the earth's precipitous rise in temperature coincides with the start of the Industrial Revolution, or that the '90s was the hottest decade on record. Never mind that the arctic ice caps are melting away or that we are pouring tons of carbon dioxide into the air. We would rather spend our money on Hummers because they are the closest things we can have to a tank. We can drive to the gym and back, only to work out and set the air conditioning to "freezing" just because we can. That is what defines Americans.

That is also what defines extraordinary wastefulness and disregard for our fellow man and, obviously, for the global environment. The global warming debate has gotten out of hand. If true, global warming is a serious issue that threatens to drown entire seaboards, cause mass extinction, provoke extreme weather patterns and enable mass starvation. Doesn't the mere threat of that justify a radical rethinking of our nation's habits?

Action has been turned into inaction because the economic incentives and the political will simply do not exist. Instead, business continues as usual.

Forget about global warming for one second. Whatever

Global warming is a phenomenal excuse to better the environment, the economy and our status as a benevolent superpower.

Is global warming the exact opposite of the last Ice Age and totally unrelated to human activity? Or, alternatively, is global warming the direct product of human activities? Before we gather on the 80 degree South Pole in the year 2050 and bust out our ukuleles, grass skirts and flip-flops, science must definitively answer two very real questions: Is this scenario even

Opinions

Our country, aside from being extremely lazy, does not understand the importance of this simple value that should be learned at a young age. Stein mentioned responsibility and hard work, not just in his tips for ruining one's life, but also in other areas of his talk: Spending for education and abortion are sensitive issues, and whether you agree with his beliefs or not, his mention of them played into his belief in the importance of responsibility.

Stein asserted that education is not the responsibility of the taxpayer, and that spending more money will not necessarily solve the problem, although there are many desperate school districts that need of funding to provide the basic materials needed for learning, and increased funding will help.

He did a good job of arguing that learning needs to start with the students themselves and with the parents when the children are younger. Those who do not want to learn will not put forth the effort. The problem remains unsolvable because no one can be forced into learning. Stein was correct by saying that students need to take responsibility for their learning and education because it is the key to success.

Abortion, although not as clear cut an issue in my mind as education can be used by people to avoid responsibility for their actions. Stein was adamantly opposed to abortion, which may have upset more liberal-minded audience members because it did not seem to mesh with the rest of his talk. I can see abortion's connection to the rest of his life lessons—taking responsibility for one's actions has been lost in our country, especially in the past year with the way our country has been run. Whether one supports our efforts in Iraq or the federal deficit resulting from expanding budgets, everyone should realize that whenever something goes wrong, people start to blame others instead of working to figure out why a problem occurred.

I know it would make me feel a little better knowing someone is responsible for the different problems our country is facing.

At the end of the day, knowing that someone is responsible has not created any change and will not stop problems from happening in the future. Stein's emphasis on responsibility and values may seem a little redundant to some, but maybe that is exactly what our country needs. By going back to the basics, we may be able to create change and a more harmonious place in which to live. Stein, in his comic way, was able to help me remember the importance of seemingly trivial and well-known rules for life. If only everyone would have the benefit of hearing them more often.

The pervading warmth of spring is slow but promising, awakening our bodies from winter's spell. No matter how slowly winter evolves into spring, small victories, such as walking to dinner to see the remains of daylight lingering in the sky, help us to keep our optimism.

Perhaps the most titillating aspect of early spring is the emergence of color: ground that was once gray now glows with new greens. Trees that were brown have new accents of yellow, lime and marigold. Lilies, daffodils, daisies and dandelions all help to brighten our days.

There's just something about the atmosphere—the excitement and energy brought on by spring are emotions, that no other season can match. Where stomping through fresh snow, watching your breath appear with every exhale or admiring the icicles which ornament the trees was once fulfilling, we are now antsy and can not help but anticipate what is yet to come.

I eagerly await lying barefoot in the grass, early morning jogs across campus while noticing the warm sun drying the dew and even catching a glimpse of the first lightning bug. I even anxiously await the mosquitoes, sunburns, heat waves and jellyfish, so that I can long once again for the crisp, cold winter.

Looking

you are having trouble understanding something your professor is teaching. everyone else in the class seems to get it. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwo.com/lookhere

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

ANTIPERSPIRANT/DEODORANT

roll-on courage

Arts & Entertainment

Kovacik recites at University's "beautiful temple to poetry"

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

POETRY READING

Karen Kovacik, a poet whose work has been published in the nationally renowned publications such as the University's West Branch literary magazine, arrived on campus Thursday, Jan. 29 to read excerpts from her poetry in Bucknell Hall, which she called a "beautiful temple to poetry."

Introduced by Stadler Center Assistant Director and West Branch Editor Paula Closson Buck, Kovacik gave an hour-long reading, including the pieces published in West Branch and a "kinky" translation from a contemporary Polish poem.

"I think that one way poets converse with the world is to translate poetry," Kovacik said.

Kovacik's unique reading style, with enthusiasm infused in every word, was obvious. She made no attempt to conceal her unabridged passion for language as she read her poems and told stories about them during the event.

After preaching this poetry at the pulpit, and encouraging her audience to read the past editions of West Branch that had replaced hymnals in the pews, Kovacik engaged her audience by incorpo-

"poems" to "pigeons." Then Kovacik proceeded to find and read a piece that included that word.

"Her poetry was very provocative," Brett Detrik '06 said.

Throughout the evening, Kovacik's love of words and word-play were also on display, as she told stories about living in Poland and how it felt to reacquaint herself with the English language afterward. She wrote about this experience in her West Branch published poem, "Return to the Mother Tongue (after a Month of Polish)."

This ability to juxtapose the exotic with the everyday is one fascinating aspect of Kovacik's poetry. This juxtaposition allows Kovacik to create a multicultural awareness within her poems, not to mention political enlightenment that would otherwise be lost in the evocative nature of some of her poetry.

After her reading, Kovacik, who is the director of the creative writing program at Indiana University, was available to autograph copies of West Branch and her own books of poetry sold by the bookstore.

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Poet Karen Kovacik visited the University Thursday, Jan. 29th. She has been published by the West Branch literary magazine and other nationally renowned publications.

rating a Persian party game into the second half of her poetry reading.

Audience members shouted out a diverse selection of terms, from "denial" to "magic," to

This improvisational style of poetry reading, popular among troubadours in medieval Persia, gave the reading a more intimate, personalized feeling.

Penn Central Wind Band performs reenactment of historical concert

By DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

CONCERT PREVIEW

The Weis Center for the Performing Arts will host a unique concert event that blends modern musicianship and American musical history tonight. The Penn Central Wind Band, under the direction of Music Department Chair and Associate Professor of Music William Kenny, will perform a concert reenactment of the American Rolling Mill Company Band.

The Rolling Mill Band was a group of musicians affiliated with the Armco Steel Company in Middletown, Oh., a small town outside of Cincinnati. The band started in 1919 and achieved national prominence in the '30s with its widely broadcast radio performances.

Kenny has researched the Rolling Mill Band extensively and even uncovered some unpublished music manuscripts from the era during which the band performed.

The steel mill bands of the time were established to help mill workers establish "esprit de corps" and become happier and more efficient employees. Railroad and coal-mining companies also established bands during this area, but the Armco Steel Company exhibited a remarkable commitment toward creating and sustaining a high-caliber, nationally renowned performing group.

The concert will be performed in the style of the Rolling Mill Band—a mixture of popular band music from the early part of the 20th century, transcriptions of orchestral works and novelty numbers. Among the works that will be featured are William Walton's "Crown Imperial," a stately British march, and a band arrangement of Bedrich Smetana's opera "The Bartered Bride."

Kenny said that some of the pieces he uncovered are rarely or never performed and some of the scores and parts "hadn't seen the light of day in almost 70 years." Despite the relative obscurity of some of the works the band will perform, they represent a wide variety of musical styles and genres.

During the broadcasts of the Rolling Mill Band, a narrator called "The Ironmaster" introduced each piece, and delivered advertisements and testimonials for Armco Steel products. Tonight's concert will feature an on-stage announcer performing in the style of the band's original announcer.

The Wind Band will perform some of the musical scores and parts originally used by the Rolling Mills Band. Also featured in the concert are original acetate recordings of Rolling Mills Band broadcasts from the '30s.

"The concert will be highly entertaining, and historically fascinating as well," said Kenny.

The group consists of about 45 musicians, some from Lewisburg and the surrounding area, and others from as far away as State College. The members include local teachers, professors at the University and other uni-musicians that compose the group and the unique historical background of the staging and program of the performance, the versities, professional musicians and University Symphonic Band members.

Courtesy of David Allen

Music Department Chair and Associate Professor of Music William Kenny will direct a concert reenactment of the American Rolling Mill Company Band tonight at the Weis Center.

Between the highly talented concert promises to be of remarkable artistic and intellectual merit. The concert begins at 8 p.m. and admission is free.

Now Hiring... ALDI INC.

- ✓ Stocker Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
- ✓ Flexible AM hours
- ✓ $7.50 an hour wage

★ Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.
110 E 8TH AVE

Mya's Coffee House
Delicious Hot Chocolate available
with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts

Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

RENTALS

for
BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE JUNE 1, 2004

Large 2 BR APTS AT:
237 3rd & St. George
40 Brown St.

SOME APTS. AVAILABLE FOR IMMEDIATE
OCCUPANCY

Remodeled, clean, excellent condition, excellent location

RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO CAMPUS!
(570) 966-1488

Cinema Center

Sellersville - Susquehanna Valley Mall • 274-2040

Play Dates: February 6-12, 2004

Mythic River (R) 2, 5, 8, 10 (PG-13)	Along Came Polly (PG-13) 12, 2:10, 4:30, 7:15
Lot: Return of King (PG-13) 11:40, 3:45, 7:50	Big Fish (PG-13) 12:30, 3:40, 6:30, 9:15
Butterfly Effect (R) 1, 4, 6:50, 9:25	Torque (PG-13) 1:15, 3:20, 5:20, 7:20, 9:20
Monster (R) 1, 3:20, 6:10, 8:40	Teacher's Pet (PG) 11:30, 1:30, 3:30
Big Bounce (PG-13) 12:45, 2:50, 5:15, 7:30	Perfect Score (PG-13) 12, 3:15, 6:15, 9
Win a Date w/ Tad (PG-13) 12:15, 2:30, 4:45, 7, 9:20	Cheaper by the Dozen (PG) 11:30, 1:45, 4, 6:30, 8:50
Calendar Girls (PG-13) 1:30, 4:20, 6:40, 9
Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

NITTANY TRAVEL

201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 1, Shenandoah, PA 17876

ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK

Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!

El Pueblito Resort Cancun, Mexico
$925/person - Double-Occupancy

523-3224 800-326-9603

Endless Summer Tours

#1 Spring Vacations!
Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas,
& Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels,
Best Prices! Space is limited!
Book Now & Save!
1-800-234-7007
www.endlesssummertours.com

Arts & Entertainment

"Shades of Love"—a show of affection

Theatrical excerpts from several timeless Broadway shows helped to present love in its various forms

By CATHERINE HEVERLING
Arts & Entertainment Editor

THEATER REVIEW

The University Musical Theatre Club presented its musical revue, "Shades of Love," Jan. 30 and 31 at the a slumber party, who discussed each selection's portrayal of love between the scenes.

The program kicked off with a tug-of-war scene between lovers with the song "Take me or Leave me" from "Rent." Both this scene and another "Rent" selection later view of love through a young boy's eyes. These excerpts depicted the unspoken sibling love between Linus and Lucy, Charlie Brown's nervous infatuation with the Little Red-Headed Girl and Linus' inability to part with his beloved Songs such as "I Want it All" and "What Could Be Better?" along with the stories of two expectant mothers, reminded the audience that children "make you see everything you took for granted."

"Guys and Dolls" added

"I really enjoyed the scenes from 'Guys and Dolls' because it showed the stereotypical roles of a man and woman in love. In modern society, it seems that generalizations have changed, so it was interesting to look back on love in a between mother and daughter, and a poignant soliloquy provided all faces of musical theatre.

"Shades of Love" presented a form of love everyone could relate to and a type of musical theater that all could enjoy."

Photos by Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
David Allen '06 and Katie Bohner '06 portray a feuding couple in the contemporary musical "Rent."

Harvey Powers Theatre. The program featured excerpts from "Rent," "Guys and Dolls," "Baby" and "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown."

The program's main focus was to look at the portrayal of love in different relationships and situations. Its narration was provided by young girls at in the program provided a look at love on the rocks. The setting was contemporary, with minimal stage props and modern themes.

The crowd favorites were the selections from "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown." Charlie Brown provided the audience with an innocent different era," Pam Miller '07 said.

Lucy, played by Sarah Gainer '07, looks over Linus (Andy Nogasky '07) as he clutches his blanket in "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown."

Kyle McGee '04 (left) and Raymond Ginn '07 sing about Nathan and Adelaide's relationship in "Guys and Dolls."

Songs from "Gypsy" were also included in the evening's repertoire. "Gypsy" details the life of a mother looking for fame, and a daughter who is going to be famous for her. An energetic performance of "Let Me Entertain You," later countered by heated arguments

Jacqui Magee '07 said. "The show uncovered the different forms of love and the ways people express it even when it isn't so obvious." The night concluded in an ensemble performance of the "Rent" tune "Seasons of Love"—the perfect way to end a show that portrayed love in its many stages.

University playwrights share family memories and heritage

Liisa Britt '04 and Bekah Clark '04 have collected family photographs, letters and memories to create their original one-woman performances

By KRISTEN HABACHT
Staff Writer

THEATER PREVIEW

To know where you are going you must know where you come from.

Liisa Britt '04 and Bekah Clark '04 explore their origins in two theatrical pieces the girls wrote and will perform. The two one-woman shows explore both Britt's and Clark's family roots.

"I find it touching how the two performance works reflect the authors' desires to seek meaningful connection between members of their family, past and present and their present identities."

Associate Professor of Theatre Robert Gainer said.

The two presented the idea to the theater department last spring and began working on the project immediately.

Britt and Clark dug through family photos, letters and other memorabilia and developed their family stories.

"From photographs, letters, poems, taped interviews, home movies, family celebrations and from their own memories, they have fashioned highly personal solo performance pieces that are, at the same time, focused on family experiences that we can all relate to," Associate Professor of Theatre Gary Grant said.

Britt tells her story in chronological order from her grandmother, to her mother, an immigrant from Finland, to herself, a first-generation American. Clark has several vignettes, many of which incorporate a family pageant.

"The cool part about this show is that I incorporate actual family video, audio and slides to tell mine and my family's story," Clark said.

Britt's play incorporates video from Assistant Professor of Art and Art History Tulu Bayar.

"This play is about my family and my connections to the past. Putting it together has been an amazing, if hard, experience," Britt said.

Associate Professor of Theatre Gary Grant worked with both students in the developmental and writing phases.

"Liisa and Bekah have inspired everyone in the department with their deep affection for their families and also with their intense desire to explore and understand the complexity of relationships in these families," Grant said.

"As writers, their takes on the eccentricities of family members are poignantly funny. As performers, they illuminate the deeper needs of these characters brilliantly. It's been a genuine pleasure meeting with Liisa and Bekah each week."

Britt and Clark's explorations are something many people can relate to. Whether it is an awareness of roots, or trying to connect with traditions and cultures that seem foreign, they cover it all from their personal points of view.

"It has been a pleasure working with both Liisa and Bekah," Gainer said. "I, as a faculty director and acting coach, have been at all of their rehearsals to support each of the performer/playwright's quests to explore their autobiographical roots and family histories through the medium of stage language...I feel privileged to be part of these two senior theatre majors' creative projects, and I welcome Bucknell audiences to attend each of their intimate performances."

Britt and Clark have full creative control and have experienced many aspects of production.

"It has been very interesting to be involved in a production as more than an actor. I have had the opportunity to see how the larger picture comes together," Britt said.

Both of these young women are experienced actresses and enjoyed the opportunity to do more in the theatrical world.

"It's such a strange transition to go from rehearsing other people's plays to rehearsing something you wrote yourself. I found myself invested in so many more aspects of the production besides acting," Clark said.

All performances will be in Tustin Studio Theatre. Britt's "Why Don't These Girls Speak Finnish?" will be performed tonight and Sunday; Clark's "Fortuna Facts" will be performed Saturday and Monday at 8p.m.

"They have fashioned highly personal solo performance pieces that are, at the same time, focused on family experiences that we can all relate to."

—Gary Grant, associate professor of theatre

Bekah Clark '04 (left) and Liisa Britt '04 (above) will be performing their original plays this weekend at the Tustin Studio Theatre. The plays detail both students' family histories.

Incubus continues stellar streak with new hit album

Courtesy of Apicatures.com
Incubus released its fifth album "A Crow Left of the Murder" on Tuesday. The album features songs such as "Agoraphobia" and "Here in my Room."

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

One sign that a rock group will stand the test of time is its ability to transcend its music with each subsequent album without compromising the ideals by which it started. Incubus is one of the few bands in popular music that has been able to do that, beginning with its first effort, "Fungus Amongus," and leading up to "2001's" incredibly successful masterpiece, "Morning View."

This week, the band released its fifth full-length album, "A Crow Left of the Murder," and its streak of stellar albums continues to impress.

"Any long-time listener of the band will notice that with the exception of a few tracks, the songs are driven by lighter guitar riffs, coupled with singer Brandon Boyd's intense vocals, instead of the powerful barrage of instrumentals that made Incubus a staple on the underground hard rock scene years ago. A departure from its traditional style works in this case, and the music is simply tighter and more structured."

As an album, the work is full of gems. "A Crow Left of the Murder" opens with one of the heavier tunes, a political outcry in the form of "Megalomaniac," that openly attacks U.S. President George W. Bush and his policies regarding the war in Iraq (check out Enjoyincubus.com to watch the video). "Agoraphobia," the most inviting song on the record, takes a Pearl Jam-esque guitar riff and couples it with a jerky drum beat that compliments the instrumentation nicely. "Sick Sad Little World" will take a lot of listeners back to the days of "Make Yourself" (the band's third album), with its faster-paced rhythm and more passionate vocals from Boyd.

The song that makes the album is "Here in my Room," a piano-driven dedication to love, seemingly in both the physical and emotional sense. Boyd croons, "If the world were to fall apart/In a fiction-worthy wind/I wouldn't change a thing/Now that you're here." Overall, "A Crow Left of the Murder" is by no means Incubus' best album—"Make Yourself" holds that title. However, the band's new album is full of great songs and while different from its usual sound, the album offers listeners a reason to be happy about the future of the band.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

February 6, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 2
Business & Politics: 2005
BSG Election
The Bucknell Student Government elections for the junior class are today. Six students are running for three positions.
See page B10

Track qualifies 5 more for IC4A and ECAC meets

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Heading into last weekend, the Bucknell track team hoped to come away with a few more IC4A and ECAC qualifiers. Not only did the Bison get five qualifiers, but they also set a new school record in the women's weight throw.

The Pennsylvania State National Invitation lived up to its hype by producing many NCAA qualifying performances, aiding the Bison in their quest, while the University's own Bison Open proved to be very competitive as well.

Graduate student Greg Costello set the tone for the weekend by winning the men's 5000-meter run Friday night at State College in 14 minutes, 28 seconds, more than 20 seconds under the IC4A mark.

"His [Costello's] win in the 5K just goes to show that he can compete with anyone at a high level. You can tell he's in great shape and, to the detriment of other Patriot League distance runners, he'll keep getting faster," Aaron Hanlon '04 said.

Hanlon, no slouch on the track himself, qualified for the IC4A meet in the 800 during Saturday's action at Penn State, running 1:54.

"I'm glad that I qualified for IC4As, but the race itself was frustrating because I was too slow off the line, got myself boxed in and wasn't able to get out as quickly as I had planned," Hanlon said.

Head Coach Kevin Donner was impressed with times and the number of athletes improving on a week-to-week basis.

"I was very pleased with the results. We had a lot of people improve on their marks, which will move them up in the Patriot League rankings. Walsh is starting to round into form in the 800m and Corbetta is starting to establish himself as a solid sprinter. McCarthy also had a breakthrough race in the 3k," Donner said, referring to Kevin Walsh '04, Matt Corbetta '06 and Sean McCarthy '04.

Donner was also very impressed with the women, who added three to the list of ECAC qualifiers, including a school record.

Throwing the 20-lb weight at Penn State on Friday night, Maria Garcia '04 threw well, but was almost a foot short of her personal best thrown just a week before. Saturday proved to be the day, as Garcia came back to Lewisburg and launched throw 37cm farther than her previous best. The 16.44m (53'11.75") throw qualified her for the ECAC meet and broke the school record.

The women also got ECAC marks from Angie Hall '07 and Jen Marsh '04. Hall vaulted to first place at the Bison Open

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Megan Frederick '06 leads the pack during the 800-meter run at the Bison Open on Saturday. Several Bison athletes competed in the home meet, while others traveled to Penn State.

See TRACK, page B2

Women's hoops lose at home

By TERI SCHLANG
Sports Editor

The University women's basketball team suffered a tough loss to Holy Cross on Sunday afternoon in the Sojka Pavilion. It looked like it was going to be a close game at the beginning of the first half, but the half ended with Holy Cross leading the Bison 31-22. The Crusaders led the Bison for the rest of the game, beating the Orange and Blue 71-55.

Holy Cross opened the game strongly leading 6-0 in the first three minutes of play until Desire Almind '04 got the Bison on the board for the first time. Lindsey Hollibaugh '07 immediately followed up with a lay-up, and two points from Lindsey Ceositis '06 tied the game at six all.

The Orange and Blue trailed again a few minutes later but tied the game at 11 after Lillian Drungold '05 scored a three-pointer and Hollibaugh followed with another lay-up. With about nine minutes to go in the half Hollibaugh added two free throws, followed by a two-pointer by Almind to give the Bison their only lead of the night, 17-16.

Holy Cross proceeded to outscore the Bison 15-5 over the rest of the half, giving the Crusaders a 31-22 lead going into the second half. Holy Cross' Maggie Fontana scored 13 of her 22 points of the night in the first half of play leading the Crusaders and the Bison in shooting for the evening.

Kevin Bettencourt '06, who finished the game with a team-high 29 points, snatched the lead for the Bison with a three-pointer, which was quickly followed by layups from Antonio Glover '05, Lee and Chris McNaughton '07.

Holy Cross opened the second half with four straight points, giving it a demanding lead over the Orange and Blue. The Crusaders built their lead to as many as 15 points at the 16-minute mark before the Bison responded, with Drungold scoring six points for the Bison.

Drungold followed up by scoring yet another free throw to bring the game within eight with eight and a half minutes of play left.

The Crusaders fought back, taking a 12-point lead again, but the Bison responded with Almind's three-pointer and Hollibaugh's fast breaking layup to bring the game within seven points with six minutes left to play.

That was as close as the Bison would get. The Crusaders scored nine of 10 free throws in the last three minutes to win 71-55.

See WBALL, page B4

Basketball downs Holy Cross

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Kevin Bettencourt '06 shoots the ball as Holy Cross defenders attempt to block it. The Bison won at home against two Patriot League opponents this weekend, beating Colgate 61-53 and last season's league champion Holy Cross 77-67.

Squad completes weekend sweep with 77-67 win over reigning Patriot League champions

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell men's basketball team climbed to 4-3 in the Patriot League after defeating Colgate 61-53 on Friday night and then unseating defending league champion Holy Cross 77-67 on Sunday in Sojka Pavilion.

The victory over Holy Cross marked the Bison's fifth win in their past six contests, as well as their first win over the Crusaders in the past five meetings between the rivals.

Holy Cross closed to a 32-31 lead at halftime, which it briefly opened up to a five-point lead before Charles Lee '06 drilled a three-point shot and launched a scoring burst in which the Bison outgained the Crusaders 15-3.

Kevin Bettencourt '06, who finished the game with a team-high 29 points, snatched the lead for the Bison with a three-pointer, which was quickly followed by layups from Antonio Glover '05, Lee and Chris McNaughton '07.

Holy Cross opened the second half with four straight points, giving it a demanding lead over the Orange and Blue. The Crusaders built their lead to as many as 15 points at the 16-minute mark before the Bison responded, with Drungold scoring six points for the Bison.

Drungold followed up by scoring yet another free throw to bring the game within eight with eight and a half minutes of play left.

The Crusaders fought back, taking a 12-point lead again, but the Bison responded with Almind's three-pointer and Hollibaugh's fast breaking layup to bring the game within seven points with six minutes left to play.

That was as close as the Bison would get. The Crusaders scored nine of 10 free throws in the last three minutes to win 71-55.

"The Hall of Fame induction was a wonderful opportunity for me to have the freedom to reflect back on my many years of playing water polo on the national team."

After posting a 46-39 lead, the Bison saw the margin vanish as Holy Cross tied the score at 53 with less than five minutes remaining in the game.

Bucknell quickly responded, pounding home nine unanswered points starting with a Bettencourt free throw. During the scoring streak, Bettencourt also dunked a rebound and took a pass from Donald Brown '07 to the basket for a layup. Lee added a trey after Bettencourt's free throw.

The Bison held a 62-53 lead with 1 minute, 41 seconds left to play, and the Crusaders failed to threaten that margin for the remainder of the game.

The Bison benefited from three players scoring double-digits points, including Bettencourt with 29, Lee with 14, McNaughton with 12 and Brown with 11.

Bucknell shot 57.5 percent from the field and hit 26 of 35 free throws during the contest, including 14 of 15 free throws from

See MBALL, page B4

Former water polo coach inducted into Hall of Fame

By TERI SCHLANG
Sports Editor

Lynn Kachmarik, a former member of the University community, was inducted into the National Water Polo Hall of Fame on Jan. 17. She was the former University men's and women's water-polo coach and the men's and women's swimming and diving coach. Kachmarik is currently the director of athletics at Saint Mary's College and was honored at the Missouri Athletic Club for her water polo achievements.

Kachmarik was one of a small group of women who were part of the first U.S. Women's National Water Polo team in 1976. Kachmarik was quite embarrassed while receiving this award because she was singled out for being one of the longest standing members of the national team with 12 years of participation. She was a captain for six years and one of only two non-Californians on the original national team.

"The Hall of Fame induction was a wonderful opportunity for me to have the freedom to reflect back on my many years of playing water polo on the national team," Kachmarik said. "Life moves by so fast and I seldom think back to those wonderful days." This was not Kachmarik's first honor for her water polo skills. In April 2003 she was inducted into the Collegiate Water Polo Hall of Fame. She spent her college years as a four-year A.I.A.W. (the women's NCAA of the time) All-American swimmer while playing on the water polo team at Slippery Rock University. She was also inducted into Slippery Rock's Hall of Fame in 1991 for her swimming and water-polo achievements.

"The Hall of Fame induction was a wonderful opportunity for me to have the freedom to reflect back on my many years of playing water polo on the national team."

—Lynn Kachmarik

After college, Kachmarik played in two national championships and was a member of the initial team, which grew from competing in small international tournaments to making history by qualifying to attend the World Aquatic Games in 1980. She followed up by playing on three world aquatic teams and many U.S. teams at the FINA World Cup Championships. Kachmarik was an eight-time U.S. Water Polo Association All-American Player and was named to the All-World Water-Polo Team while on the National Team.

Kachmarik moved on to coaching with the national program as the assistant coach. She helped coach the team that qualified

Women's swimming still unbeaten

By WILL PATTERSON
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell women's swimming and diving team continued to dominate its competition, defeating Patriot League rival Lafayette 191-101. The team has won all five of its dual meets this season.

Approaching the Kinney Natatorium on the afternoon of Jan. 31 to the sounds of the ceremonial ringing of the cow bell followed by the warring chants of the University's women's swimming and diving team, one could clearly see that every athlete on the team was ready to annihilate Lafayette.

Not only was this meet the last dual meet of the season, it was also Senior Day, during which each senior was recognized by the program for her hard work and effort over the years. Each senior came forward as a younger member of the team read a short personal biography.

Once the ceremony was complete, the Bison were ready to compete.

The team started strongly with the 200-yard medley relay, taking first, second and third places. Next was the 1,000-meter freestyle, in which Daniela Faas '04 touched first with a time of 10 minutes, 30 seconds. Faas was followed by Amanda Dunlap '07, Carlyn Donley '07 and Andrea Kern '04 to sweep the race.

Following the 1,000 freestyle, the University dominated the 200-meter freestyle, claiming first through fourth place. Lettie Altman '06 won with a time of 1:58.19.

As the meet progressed, the Bison clinched first through third place in the 100 breaststroke and 100 backstroke. Next the intense preparation from Meghan Freese '04 paid off, as she clinched first-place finishes in the 50 and 100-meter freestyle.

After the sprint freestyle concluded, the divers took over and extended the slaughter. Sarah Petcavage '04 took the one-meter competition with a total score of 227.46, while Lisa Rockwell '06 took third with a score of 201.81, edging out Lafayette by a mere 2.7 points.

The University soon ended all hopes of a Lafayette comeback by claiming first, second and third place in the 200 backstroke and breaststroke events, as Altman claimed her second win in the backstroke, and Jamie Flick '05 won the breaststroke events.

The win was sealed during the 500 freestyle when Jackie

See POLO, page B2

See SWIM, page B2

Sports

Athletes deliver at Nat. Invitational

TRACK from page B1

with a vault of 3.60m (11'9.75") while Marsh was pulled along in the 1000m by a bevy of girls chasing Megan Metcalfe of West Virginia as Metcalfe set a facility record at Penn State.

Donner said the women's team had great efforts that could have been easily overlooked in such deep fields of athletes.

"Todman keeps getting better in the pentathlon, our women [200m and 400m] sprinters looked good at Penn State, Halloran ran a great 3k at home, and Stevens ran a great mile at Penn State," Donner said, referring to Danielle Todman '06, Kayla Halloran '06 and Jenny Stevens '07.

This weekend the University of Rhode Island welcomes eight other teams, including Bucknell, to a scoring meet that will feature Brown, Monmouth, Central Connecticut State University, Quinnipiac, University of Massachusetts, University of New Hampshire and University of New Haven.

"We rarely compete against some of these schools so it should be fun for the team," Donner said. "It's our last major test before the league meet."

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Angie Hall '07 vaults during the Bison Open on Friday night. Hall was the only Bison competitor to win an event during the meet, winning the pole vault competition with a vault of 3.60 meters. The height was also enough to qualify her for the ECAC meet.

Women's swimming off to another solid start

SWIM from page B1

Feintheil '05 placed first with a time of 5:15:48, followed by fellow teammates Robin Gibson '05 and Donley.

Mary Krakowski '06 blazed through the 100 butterfly to win with a time of 59.75.

"It's all in the hips! As long as my hips are moving right with my body in the water, I can just sit back and think taking a nice calm walk on along a shoreline" Krakowski said.

Laura Goeller '07 won the 200 individual medley.

"I always stick to the same routine before a race. Munch on a protein bar, stretch and while in the race swim it as if it's your last race. I'll never wake up one day thinking 'what if?' That's why with the help of my protein bar and routine I know I'll always be OK in this choice of sport," Goeller said.

The last race of the day was the 800 freestyle relay. "Bucknell swimming is so hot right now," Jill Nonemaker '04 said, overjoyed when she saw the first, second and third

"... while in the race, swim it as if it's your last race. I'll never wake up one day thinking 'what if?'"

—Laura Goeller '07

place finishes of her teammates.

With an undefeated record, the Bison now look ahead to battling Lehigh this weekend. With a ton of momentum going into this competition, the team is ready for victory.

New HOFer Kachmarik has ties to Bucknell athletic programs for the World Championships in Perth, Australia while she was still coaching the Bison. In 1986 she was named head coach of the men's water polo team at the University. She was the first female in the history of the NCAA to be named head coach of a men's sport. In her very first season of coaching the Orange and Blue she earned the Eastern Water Polo Coach of the Year award.

POLO from page B1

"I feel like I have really been a pioneer[as an athlete and a coach] for women in athletics," Kachmarik said. "When I coached men's water polo at Bucknell I was the first and only woman to coach any NCAA Division I men's team. Then, I coached men's swimming and was one of only a few women to coach in that sport."

Over the next 12 years at the University she worked as the men's and women's water polo coach as well as the men's and women's swimming and diving coach.

"I was always surrounded by support from my coaching friends, administrators and my own student-athletes at Bucknell," Kachmarik said.

In 1998 she handed over her coaching responsibilities to become the assistant director of athletics and the first women's water-polo coach at Saint Mary's College.

"A day does not go by when Bucknell is not in my mind," Kachmarik said. "I go to the [Bucknell] Web site daily to follow athletics."

Last year when the men's basketball team traveled to Notre Dame, Kachmarik's two daughters had on Bison T-shirts to show their support for the team.

"They took a lot of heat from their [Notre Dame] friends and fans," Kachmarik said, "but they proudly wear Bucknell apparel daily."

Kachmarik is in her fifth year as director of athletics at Saint Mary's College. She has also begun to build a family, which she considers to be one of her greatest accomplishments. Everything that she learned as a player and a coach has helped her to become a successful mom. Her husband, Scott, and three children are all very supportive of everything she has accomplished. Kachmarik said her family "is the best team I have ever been a part of."

Write for the award-winning Bucknellian sports section.

E-mail ccairns@

WOULD YOU LIKE TO....
SNOW TUBE DOWN A MOUNTAIN?
ENJOY THE BEST VALLEY RESTAURANTS?
MEET VALLEY BUSINESS LEADERS?
SEE LOCAL THEATRE?
ALL FOR

FREE

IF THIS SOUNDS LIKE FUN TO YOU ATTEND AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING ABOUT "COMMUNITY CONNECT"

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9TH, 2004
WALLS LOUNGE, LANGONE CENTER
8:00 P.M.

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Hall a fitting denouement for Elway's career

a quarterback—a career which, from beginning to end, never faltered in the drama department.

Elway led the National Football League a steady stream of vivacity, from his audacious manipulation of the 1983 draft to his too-good-to-be-scripted exit from the league as a Super Bowl MVP in 1999. And everything in between.

His entrance to the league in 1983 was received with a great diversity of reactions—on one side he had a legion of sportswriters in Denver scurrying about him, paying homage to his saviorhood with a level of reporting that bordered on absurdity, and on the other, he had the rest of the nation's critics snarling after him with a maliciousness that would have been enough to dissuade a weaker man from ever daring to take a snap in the NFL.

During his rookie season, he was at once the most doted upon and the most reviled man in the league. In the long pull, it was the revile that would fade, as most of the football-loving nation would find reason to admire—or at least respect—Elway.

It would take a great level of immaturity or bitterness, or just plain idiocy, for anyone to defer acknowledgment of his deserved place in the Hall of Fame.

He spent 16 years with the same team, a mark of loyalty and patience rarely embodied by professional athletes (or teams) of the modern era, and in that span won 128 regular season games, more than any other quarterback in history.

He played in six AFC Championship games and led his team to five Super Bowls, shaking off gruesome manhandlings in the first three to hoist the Lombardi Trophy in the last two.

He had the numbers: his 51,475 passing yards, 7,250 attempts and 4,123 completions were second only to Dan Marino's numbers. He launched 300 touchdown passes, a milestone only three other quarterbacks have reached.

He was versatile in an era before versatility was bred into quarterbacks, rushing for 3,407 yards and topping the 200-yard mark in 11 seasons.

Until the twilight of his career, Elway's running backs were unheard of and most of his wide receivers were efficient at their best and patchy the rest of the time. His offensive line rarely constituted anything that resembled a pocket, leaving opposing defenders to descend upon him like rabid hounds on a cornered stag.

Elway, behind Denver's steel sieve line and with no target toward which to deploy the football, had a way of finding himself mired in the most desolate situations imaginable. It goes to follow that he was sacked 516 times, mauled behind the line of scrimmage on more occasions than any other quarterback in NFL history.

The truth is, though, no one else would have lasted long enough to compile a statistic like that.

Elway got knocked down. Frequently. But he got back up a lot, too. Elway made an art out of getting back up.

And an astounding proportion of the time, he never went down in the first place.

It didn't matter if it was fourth-and-16. It didn't matter if his offensive line had been reduced to carnage. It didn't matter if the fundamentals of a 250-lb linebacker were digging into the muddled and turf-stained orange fabric of Elway's jersey, while all of his pass-catchers were thoroughly throttled downfield.

He'd just duck and dart and pop the ball downfield to some startled receiver, then trot to the huddle while defenders abashedly reoriented themselves.

Didn't matter to Elway if his team was down a few points, either. Or a lot of points.

Elway's marquee statistic was his comeback tally: 47 game-winning come-from-behind efforts, also an NFL record. The first came during his rookie year, when he catalyzed the disintegration of what had been a 19-point Baltimore Colts' lead going into the fourth quarter, and the last coming in his final season on a crisp Mile High evening when he rallied his crew past the Kansas City Chiefs, preserving the Broncos' undefeated status.

His knack for last minute valor during games carried over to the general trajectory of his career—whatever he left to be desired in the earlier years, he emphatically vindicated himself from in his final seasons.

Just when it appeared that his tenure in the NFL would wind down without his earning so much as a single ring, there he was in Super Bowl XXXII, hurling his 38-year-old body around the field in an unflagging—and ultimately successful—effort to deliver a long-awaited championship to Denver.

There he was, grinning away, Lombardi trophy in hand while the bright lights of flashbulbs danced around in every curve and crevice of that stately, silvery football.

And a year later, there he was again, with a little less urgency and a lot less suspense, snatching up a second championship and a Super Bowl MVP title to complement it.

That was the closing act of Elway's career. Not many other quarterbacks can boast that they were able to retire amid the euphoria of back-to-back Super Bowl titles. Actually, no others can.

For all the controversy surrounding his early career choices, for all the doubts rained upon him, for all the direness that seemed to materialize at every turn, Elway left little in question about his talent, his tenacity and his appetite for victory.

During his Hall of Fame career, Elway left nothing unanswered.

That is, unless the Yankees are still wondering if he can develop into an effective pull-hitter.

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

BY JOSH HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

Now You See Him, Now You Don't

Courtesy of Reuters

After being arrested on sexual assault charges back in July, Kobe Bryant has played through plenty of criticism this season for the Los Angeles Lakers.

"10 seconds left on the game clock. Bryant takes the ball at the top of the key. He fakes left. He fakes right. 22-foot jumper... It's good! And the Los Angeles Lakers hold on to win again in stunning fashion!" That was the other night at Staples Center in front of a sellout crowd.

"Bryant returned this morning to Eagle County, Colorado to continue to hear the proceedings of his sexual assault case filed back in July."

That was two days later after he left the gaming-winning shot. We thought we knew the real Kobe Bryant.

Foiled again. The same man that was proclaimed "the next Michael Jordan" has us questioning whether we can ever trust our most respected and esteemed athletes.

The same man that claimed to handle his private life with the grace and character of his on-court performances, now has us asking ourselves, "Is this really the first time he's done this?"

We expected this much from Allen Iverson and Anthony Mason, but Kobe?

So what happened to this man once known as the gracious, intelligent and well-mannered Kobe?

We saw his integrity in the locker room, on the court, and in post-game interviews. We eyed him with our deepest respect. We listened to every word with admiration. We thought the world of him.

Then he disappeared. The camera flashed away from his face. We were blinded. No, we were deceived.

Behind that sparkling smile and shining purple-and-gold jersey that we all recognized, lived another man deep below the surface. Seven months ago this alter-ego emerged when Bryant was charged with sexual assault of a 19-year-old girl.

"I'm innocent. I didn't force her to do anything against her will. I'm innocent."

—Kobe Bryant

"I'm innocent," Bryant said, according to the Los Angeles Times.

He may be innocent for now, but truly his innocence was lost for good. Will we ever be able to see him differently?

"I'm a human being; I'm a man just like anybody else," Bryant said, according to the Los Angeles Times.

A man who married against the advice of his teammates and against his father's ill will. A man who put himself above the rest, continuously striving to attain higher moral standards than the rest of the league.

All of this lost in a moment of weakness.

Still, Bryant fights relentlessly.

With his attorneys throwing out the race issue like the trump card in a friendly game of bridge, this case is shaping up to become the next O.J. trial of the 21st century.

"My client stands accused of a very serious crime. There is lots of history about black men being falsely accused of this crime by white women," Attorney Pamela Mackey said, according to the Los Angeles Times.

Surprisingly, Johnny Cochran hasn't shown up in Eagle County to take this one over yet. So, maybe there's still hope for justice this time around.

Even so, the damage has already been done.

He will never quite look the same to us. His reputation is tarnished. His endorsements are cancelled. His fans still live in denial.

Now in the hardest of times, he must fight to find himself again, to restore his image, and earn our trust back.

Most of us will continue to doubt him. Most of us will continue to ridicule him. Most of us will continue to boo him when he visits to play against our hometown team.

But this isn't just about Bryant. Nor is it only about NBA basketball and the players.

Should we continue to believe that athletes are heroes and role models in the midst of their sexual assaults, drunk-driving incidents, and double murder charges?

Perhaps we should not be putting them on pedestals and instead realize that they are merely the products of fortune and fame. Maybe explaining this hero's transgression to our children will only help us remember the flaws common to so many other athletes.

Super Bowl loaded with subplots

MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

Talk about a game filled with subplots! I would have to say that I think this Super Bowl did more than live up to the hype. The game turned out to actually be better than predicted. I kept hoping this would not turn out to be a huge blowout like we have seen so many times before. Luckily, we got the best of both worlds.

The guys in Vegas must have been on the verge of cardiac arrests by the time the final gun sounded. Most people predicted the total score would be in the upper thirties to lower forties, with many projecting the winner to score around 24 points. The defensive struggle lasted for the first twenty minutes, when no points were scored. Then, all of a sudden, both offenses seemed to wake up, and everybody's over/under bet went down the toilet.

Whenever I saw Jake Delhomme drop back to pass, I half expected the ground to open and swallow the Panthers. That is how little faith I had in this guy. I expected a Tony Eason-esque performance, and got the second coming of Kurt Warner.

The "Raging Cajun" managed to make Ty Law & Co. look silly.

He was rolling around in the pocket and buying time on almost every play. He started out by completing only one of his first nine or so passes, and finished with over 300 yards, three touchdowns and no interceptions.

Seriously, we need to do a DNA test on Delhomme to make sure that he didn't steal Warner's mojo. Somewhere, there is a sportswriter locked in a room coming up with these guys, and then by some advanced genetic cloning process, infusing these story lines into them. Then, the NFL creates their "families" and "hometowns" and conjures up fake interviews and high school footage.

At this rate, we are going to have to dig pretty deep to find a quarterback with a more bizarre background than what we have seen from the past few guys to line up under center in the big game.

Basically, we are limited to Doug Flutie, Tommy Maddox, 'Mork (of Mork & Mindy), Alf or the Predator as the next Super Bowl QBs. Can't you just see Al Davis hugging the Predator as the Raiders defeat Alf and the Bears in next year's Super Bowl?

How great of a press conference

See NFL, page B4

Courtesy of Reuters

Panthers quarterback Jake Delhomme celebrates a touchdown pass during Super Bowl XXXVIII. Even though the Panthers lost, Delhomme capped a surprising season with a superb game.

Sports

Women fall to 2-5 in league Men impress over weekend

Desire Almind '04 passes the ball to a tightly guarded teammate on the offensive end. The women's basketball team suffered a 71-55 loss to Holy Cross at Sojka Pavilion Sunday afternoon.

WBBALL from page B1

"I think that we played a really good game, but our shots weren't falling and theirs were and that's what it came down to," Drumgold said.

"Offensively they were more effective at finding weak spots in our zone than we were at taking advantage of our quickness."

Despite outscoring Holy Cross 12-0 on fast break points, the Bison were 0-12 for the night from downtown while the Crusaders hit 6-12 from behind the arc.

Almind led the Bison with 18 points and 14 rebounds, her 14th game with both offensive and defensive plays in the double digits. Hollobaugh and Drumgold scored 13 and 12 points over the evening.

The Crusaders moved to 10-10 overall and 5-2 in Patriot League play. The Bison fell to 9-11 overall and 2-5 in league play. The Bison host American University on Saturday to open the second round of league play.

Chris McNaughton '07 scored 12 points at center to help the Bison move to 8-12 overall and 4-3 in the Patriot League with their convincing 77-67 win over Holy Cross at Sojka Pavilion.

MBBALL from page B1

Bettencourt.

The win followed a victory over Colgate on Friday night at Sojka Pavilion.

The Bison stamped out an early 21-8 lead, but faltered near the half as the Raiders grabbed a brief 32-31 advantage. A free throw from Lee tied the score and the Bison benefited from a Colgate skid that saw the Raiders miss nine of 11 free-throws.

Bucknell then launched a 10-3 run, which was followed by a three-pointer from Jon Clark '07 and a shot from Lee.

After Colgate narrowed the lead to 46-39, Lee tipped in a missed three-pointer, and for the remainder of the game the Bison continued to thwart all of the Raiders' attempts at a comeback.

The Bison look to move upward in the Patriot League standings as they host two more league opponents in the coming week at Sojka Pavilion. The squad faces American today at 3:45 p.m. and Lehigh Tuesday at 7 p.m.

Delhomme and Brady keep things interesting

NFL from page B3

ence would that be? Would Arnold Schwarzenegger show up covered in mud and kill him? Would it be revealed that Alf ate a cat before the game, thus violating a substance abuse policy written into his contract? Would Mike Ditka and the "Super Fans" spontaneously combust upon seeing Alf under center for the Bears? I do not know the answers to these questions, but the prospects of having a QB with a better storyline than what we've seen in the past few seasons is both frightening and entertaining.

On the other side of the QB discussion is Tom "My Status as a Human is Now in Question" Brady, who has only compiled a record of 40-12 as a starter, and remains undefeated in the postseason. On a side note, if at a public event we switched Tom "MSAAHNIQ" Brady with Matt Damon, would we be able to tell the difference? I happen to think that they might be the same person, created by an evil mastermind who has a certain affinity for Boston—a member of the Kennedy family. How good of an actor/screenwriter can Damon be, and how good of a QB can Tom Brady be?

He could not even sub-plant Drew Henson as the starter at Michigan.

Aside from the Super Bowl, there are stranger forces at work in the NFL today. How can Jerry Rice still be playing? How did Snyder lure Gibbs back? Why does Mel Kiper's hair look so weird? On that note, what the heck is wrong with John Madden's eyebrows? Be on the lookout for anything strange on the football field, and if you do not see anything, you are not looking hard enough. Next up, we have the Pro Bowl in Hawaii, and there are sure to be strange occurrences there. Until then, stay tuned.

The Bucknellian needs sportswriters.

Lots of them.

E-mail ccairns@

Your Dream: "I want to become a doctor."

Your Reality:

"I don't have the required courses for medical school."

The Johns Hopkins Post-Baccalaureate Premedical Program prepares college graduates with strong academic records to apply to the best medical schools by giving them the personal attention, the necessary science and math courses, and one-to-one academic advising.

If you or someone you know wants to pursue a career as a doctor, apply by March 1.

For more information, visit www.jhu.edu/postbac or call 410-516-7748.

JOHNS HOPKINS
UNIVERSITY
Post-Baccalaureate
Premedical Program

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NIN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Study In English Abroad

The Swedish Program

STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY

Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies

The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323
(315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

Sports

Bucknell Sports Calendar

Men's Basketball

vs. American
Sat., Feb. 7
3:15 p.m.
and
vs. Lehigh
Tue., Feb. 10
7 p.m.

Women's Basketball

vs. American
Sat., Feb. 7
1 p.m.

Men's and Women's

Track and Field
at Rhode Island Inv.
Sat., Feb. 7
All day

Men's and Women's

Swimming and Diving
at Lehigh
Sat., Feb. 7
12 p.m.

Men's basketball vs. Holy Cross, Feb. 1

		TOT-FG 3-PT			REBOUNDS
##	Player Name	FG-FG	FGA-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
11	Clark, John	f	1-3	1-2	0-0	0	0	3	3	1	1	0	1	20
32	McNaughton, Chris.	c	5-9	0-0	2-3	1	2	3	5	12	3	1	2	25
03	Lee, Charles	g	4-4	1-1	5-5	1	3	4	3	14	1	2	0	27
05	Badmus, Abe	g	0-2	0-0	2-4	0	4	2	2	0	3	0	1	31
12	Bettencourt, Kevin	g	6-11	3-5	14-15	2	0	2	4	29	2	1	0	34
00	Skornik, Davorin	g	0-2	0-0	1-4	0	1	1	0	1	0	0	0	19
04	Brown, Donald		5-5	0-0	1-2	2	2	4	1	11	2	3	0	21
22	Glover, Antonio		1-3	0-0	1-2	1	4	5	1	3	3	1	0	13
25	Quinn, Matt		0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	3
44	Vaier-McClymont, T		1-1	0-0	0-0	0	2	2	1	2	0	1	0	7
Team Totals.....			23-40	5-8	26-35	7	18	25	20	77	12	14	3	9 200

Women's basketball vs. Holy Cross, Feb. 1

#	Player Name	TOT-FG 3-PT			REBOUNDS
		FG	FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
13	Almind, Desire	f	8-15	0-1	2-4	6	8	14	3	18	2	3	0	239
41	Valdner, Kristin	f	1-4	0-1	0-0	2	1	3	2	2	0	1	0	018
15	Geosits, Lindsey	g	3-9	0-4	0-0	1	1	2	2	6	2	2	0	440
20	Hollobaugh, Lindsey	g	5-19	0-4	3-6	4	3	7	3	13	1	3	0	340
33	Drumgold, Lillian	g	3-8	0-0	6-10	1	3	4	2	12	0	3	0	131
11	Hatalsky, Laura		0-2	0-0	0-0	0	1	1	0	0	1	0	0	16
44	Tomovich, Brooke		2-11	0-2	0-0	2	0	2	3	4	1	4	3	026
Team Totals.....			22-68	0-12	11-20	19	21	40	15	55	7	16	3	11	200

Spring sports opening this month

Men's Tennis	Season Opener: Feb. 13 at TCNJ Tourn. Last year: 3-18
Women's Tennis	Season Opener: Feb. 13 at TCNJ Tourn. Last year: 15-5
Baseball	Season Opener: Feb. 21 at JMU (DPH) Last year: 27-16, Patriot League Champions
Women's Lacrosse	Season Opener: Feb. 22 at Loyola Tourn. Last year: 8-8
Men's Lacrosse	Season Opener: Feb. 28 vs. Mt. St. Mary's Last year: 9-4

This is B.U.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

AUSTRALIA
BELIZE
CHINA
ECUADOR
ENGLAND
FRANCE
GERMANY
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
NEW ZEALAND
NIGER
RUSSIA
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.

This could be you.

Come find out how.

INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS
SCIENCE

www.bu.edu/abroad

An equal opportunity affirmative action institution

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

232 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
Fax: 617-353-5402

Financial aid is available

MARYMOUNT COLLEGE OF FORDHAM UNIVERSITY

PAST GUEST SPEAKERS

Perfect your craft with theatre luminaries

"Studying at the London Dramatic Academy was the greatest educational experience I ever had. The environment encourages students to always risk, always try and always be open to the multitude of possibilities. It was where I rediscovered my love of theatre."
— Evan Casey, Catholic University

Working theatre professionals, trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, and distinguished award-winning theatre faculty provide the finest training in London at the Marymount College of Fordham University London Dramatic Academy.

FOR MORE INFORMATION
Call (914) 332-8222 • Email dsantoro@fordham.edu
Visit www.marymt.edu/international/studyab/drama

APPLICATION DUE DATES
Fall Semester • March 15
Full Year • March 15
Spring Semester • October 15

London dramatic academy

For more information, visit www.marymt.edu/international/studyab/drama
Marymount College of Fordham University
London Dramatic Academy

FEATURES

Take a healthy road for the new year

By STUART CUBBON
Contributing Writer

For many University students, the New Year prompted promises of better eating habits and healthy diets. Unfortunately in an environment where most food is all-you-can-eat and where dessert often turns into the main course, maintaining diets and healthy eating plans becomes extremely difficult, and resolutions—like the sparklers we waved around just a month ago—have already fizzled out.

"I think it is hard to maintain a resolution for healthier eating because of the large availability to Bucknell students of foods like hamburgers and cookies that aren't that great for your health," Anna Wakulchik '07 said.

Here are a few hints that may be helpful to anyone trying to begin or stick with a new diet in order to achieve and maintain a healthier and more energized body.

1) Be very cautious of fad diets that claim you eat almost anything that you want or "super supplements" that offer amazing results with minimal effort. "Whenever you are getting information about a new diet, make sure that you know who has a vested interest in how

"I think it is hard to maintain a resolution for healthier eating because of the large availability to Bucknell students of foods like hamburgers and cookies that aren't that great for your health."

—Anna Wakulchik '07

[the public] reacts to the information," said licensed dietitian/nutritionist Karen Buch, the part-time nutritionist in the Student Health Center.

The research behind these claims is often done by the same people who developed the products—those who will also profit most from your purchases. If these diets and supplements worked, would not everyone look like supermodels?

2) Eat well-balanced meals that include servings of protein, carbohydrates and fat, as well as a variety of vitamins and minerals. If you are not sure exactly what foods to eat, it is best to consult a professional nutritionist or health care professional. Another option is referencing Web sites such as Eatright.org, which is run by the American Dietetic Association and offers information on nutrition and dieting.

3) Eat smaller meals more frequently throughout the day. Eating smaller portions more often does two things to help turn your body into a thermogenic fat-burning machine: first, it keeps your metabolism working throughout the day, maximizing your body's ability to burn calories and store less fat. Second, the smaller portions allow the body to use more of the food you consume, which means the body stores less excess as fat.

Though it seems obvious, decreasing the intake of greasy foods can be the first step to a healthier diet.

4) Don't be afraid of fat! About 30 percent of your daily caloric intake should be calories from fat. The American Heart Association stresses that saturated fat should not make up more than 7 percent of the calories you consume daily and that the rest should come from polyunsaturated and monounsaturated fat sources. Foods such as butter and untrimmed cuts of meat and poultry should be eaten sparingly, while peanuts, fish and olive oil should be consumed to provide the body with the fat it needs.

5) Don't forget about carbohydrates. According to John Vanderveen, director of the division of nutrition at the FDA Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition, complex carbohydrates should make up about half of the calories in our daily diet. Foods such as whole grain bread, cereal, beans and fruit are readily available and are excellent sources of complex carbs.

6) Do not, I repeat, DO NOT under-eat. Under-eating is sometimes mistaken as a quick way to lose a few pounds. Under-eating can actually lead to weight gain because it may make a hungry individual overeat later in the day. "Another danger with under-eating is that restricting food intake for long periods of time makes it easier to ignore hunger signals, which in some people can lead to disordered eating," Buch said.

7) Stay hydrated! Drink more water or other fluids such as skim milk. A normal person should consume at least eight, eight-ounce servings of fluids per day, plus any additional fluid lost during strenuous exercise. Good hydration not only makes you feel more energized, but drinking water throughout the day helps the body break down fat more efficiently.

Anyone with questions about eating habits and nutrition can reach Buch by e-mail at healthybites@weismarket.com.

Courtesy of www.tedhouse.com

Increasing roughage in one's diet helps the digestive system and also boosts energy and health.

Courtesy of Agr.state.mt.us

Some like it hot, some like it cold

Whether Spring Break means skiing or surfing, there are ways to keep costs reasonable

By LAUREN DAVIES
Writer

With Spring Break just around the corner, students who plan to travel need to decide what kind of trip they are looking for. For many students, Spring Break equals Cancun: beaches, bikinis and beverages (Dos Equis or Corona to be exact). But Spring Break is also a great time to take advantage of the winter weather and head to the ski slopes. "With JetBlue, Southwest and America West now offering nonstop transcontinental flights, you can expect prices to remain low-low-low throughout the year—as low as $200 round trip in some cases," Cnn.com reported.

Southwest Airlines flies out of Baltimore, Md. and into Reno, Nev. While Reno is located in the Nevada desert, world famous ski resorts in the neighboring Lake Tahoe Mountains, are only 25-60 minutes away.

The Reno Peppermill Hotel/casino has rooms available for the week of Spring Break for as low as $49 a night. With many other casinos nearby, the nightlife certainly is not lacking. The BiBing Lounge (located in the Eldorado Hotel and Casino) Metropolis and the Babylon are all popular nightclubs in town. Mt. Rose Ski Resort is a 25-minute drive from downtown Reno, and is known for being the highest elevation resort in all of Lake Tahoe, with the main lodge located at 8,260 feet. During the week there are lift ticket specials: Tuesday is two for the price of one, Wednesday is student day ($19 for the full day with a student I.D.), and on Thursdays, ladies' tickets are half-price.

For those with more money to spend, South Lake Tahoe is another popular area to visit, and is much closer to the ski resorts, with Heavenly Ski Resort located on the mountain above town. There's even a gondola at street level that skiers can take up to the main lodge. Heavenly's Web site features various ski packages with lodging and lift tickets included.

JetBlue flies out of New York City's JFK airport and into Salt Lake City, Utah for about $150 roundtrip. Salt Lake City Travel has a variety of accommodations available, from ski condos and cabins to hotel rooms. Accent Ski Accommodations offers one- to four-bedroom condos and cabins, accommodating 4-10 people (depending on the number of rooms). Accommodations for four run as low as $120 a night, which when split among four people is only $30 each. Cassidy's in the Valley, the Tavernade and Lumpy's are three of the many popular bars in town.

The Canyons Resort is 32 miles away from downtown Salt Lake City and has 3,500 acres of ski-able terrain.

Solitude Mountain Resort offers lift tickets by the lift ride instead of by the day. A 10-ride ticket costs $47 and a $50-ride ticket costs $225.

There are many reputable Web sites and travel agencies that offer all-inclusive vacation packages. Applevacations.com has many package deals available for ski vacations all over the country. For those more inclined to get to the beach for Spring Break, it also has vacation packages to Cancun and the Caribbean.

Chelsea Anderson '06 and Becky Fisher '06 went to Cancun for Spring Break last year and stayed at the Omni Hotel and Resort. Their package was non-inclusive and they estimated they spent around $1000 each, including airfare.

"A good thing to do on Spring Break is set a budget and don't go over it," Fisher said.

To keep costs low, Anderson said that they "ate at Subway a couple nights and met friends who were at all-inclusive resorts." She also suggested going to night clubs with a cover charge that "gets you in with a wrist-band and free drinks."

Tara Fry '06 went to Aruba with her friends and says that an easy way to save money is to "take advantage of local transportation, like the bus, rather than taxis." The hotel area is somewhat far from the downtown club scene, so transportation is an added cost. The island of Aruba is the most southern of the Caribbean islands and is located just 15 miles off the coast of Venezuela. The downtown area is much more low-key than the Cancun scene, and there are only a handful of nightclubs, but plenty of restaurants and shops.

"When shopping in foreign countries, don't be afraid to ask for a lower price because they'll probably bargain with you," Fry said.

There are many choices available when it comes to finding inexpensive Spring Break trips; it just takes a little research and creatively cutting corners when possible. Be sure that your travel agency is reputable—ask friends which agencies they have used.

Wherever your travels may take you, be weary of deals that seem too good or too cheap. No one wants their spring break dream to turn into a nightmare, so be sure to thoroughly research before you sign anything.

Many students are looking to escape the cold of winter with a tropical vacation over Spring Break. All-inclusive packages make this more possible for students on a budget who are longing for a little sunshine.

Courtesy of Justpacific.com

FEATURES

Who delivers the best slice around?

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Upon arriving at our esteemed University, there are a few sad realities you must come to terms with. You may not like your roommate(s), cable is not in every room for your convenience and Mom's home cooking is a thing of the past. Though the former two are inescapable, there are a few things that can be done about the latter, one of which is to become an avid supporter of the pizza delivery enterprise.

The debate has been raging for ages in the little town of Lewisburg as to which pizza is truly the best option, so I decided to see what the people really want. The varieties in question were Domino's, Vennari's, Italian Terrace (IT) or the University's own Pete's Arena. The method was simple—approach people and ask them which is their favorite pizza place and why.

First, I decided to ask myself this question, as it didn't seem fair to delve so deeply into people's personal affairs without divulging a bit about myself. I find Vennari's to have the highest rate of satisfaction. The crust is of the proper depth and the cheese to sauce ratio is perfect. Hot, tasty and sure to hit the spot. It seems that others out there share my opinion as well. John Lord '06, who is a self-admitted pizza connoisseur, favors Vennari's to the other local selections.

"I prefer Vennari's because it's the closest thing to real New York pizza around here. But it's still not very close," Lord said. A much more commercialized, but still delicious choice, is Domino's. It has a wide selection of accessorizing extras that appeal to the appetites of many students, along with deals that are usually hard to resist. And though I feel like the personal, homemade touch is not quite there, many still remain faithful. "I'm a big fan of Domino's because of their thin crust, and because they are open the latest for delivery," Jeanine Elbaz '06 said.

The last of our contenders to receive any sort of support was IT, which offers its patrons not only a wide variety of pizza-related selections, but also hot and cold foods for delivery. Almost any appetite, provided something of the Italian persuasion will satiate, can find solace at IT. "I've got to say my favorite is Italian Terrace. It's the best I've had while at Bucknell," Adam Gasiewicz '07 said. Regrettably, there was one pizza establishment that failed to earn recognition. Our own Pete's Arena was the favorite of no one. But don't allow this to negate your opinion of Dining Services. Personally, I think the Bison can never truly compete with the excitement of delivery.

Looking to the stars for your future

Psychic Fair captivates students with tarot readings, handwriting analysis and palm reading

By AMY WAGNER
Writer

The L.C. Mall was a crowded place on Saturday from 9 p.m. to midnight. Many students came for the Psychic Fair, and several more students just passing through to escape from the cold, slowed to see what was going on. The Psychic Fair, an annual event sponsored by Activities and Campus Events, featured tarot card readings, handwriting analysis and palm reading.

The Psychic Fair was very well-attended this year—many students who came to see the psychics were turned away after waiting due to a lack of time! Most of the students who did sit with the psychics seemed satisfied with the results, even though each reading was much shorter than a standard private reading.

Despite the name of the event, the people who visited the University are not psychics at all. As I learned, a psychic would not need to consult tarot cards or look at palms to gain insight into someone's life. A true psychic can sense why someone has come to them, without the use of any spiritual devices.

Morgaine, a tarot intuitive, read students' tarot cards. She compared her skill to piano playing.

"It varies by person. Like playing the piano, anyone can learn to play scales if they practice. Some people become good at it, and some people become masters," Morgaine said.

She explained that different people have different gifts, and people choose to use their gifts in various ways.

Morgaine also explained that her skill and accuracy with reading the tarot cards comes with more than practice and "reading the instructions."

"Some readers are very into Kaballah, or Jewish mysticism, and use the Kaballah to interpret the symbols on the tarot cards," Morgaine said. "Other readers see the cards as a window through which they are able to answer people's questions, by allowing outer questions to come into play as well."

Morgaine said the best tarot intuitives use both methods and that practice and time help

"It varies by person. Like playing the piano, anyone can learn to play scales if they practice. Some people become good at it, and some people become masters."

—Morgaine, tarot intuitive the readers' personal intuition.

In Morgaine's experience, most customers, including those from the University, sit down not knowing what to expect, and often leave her table looking somewhat blank and bewildered.

"If I've done my job well, hopefully people will have walked away with some keys to their self-empowerment," Morgaine said.

J.C. Ortiz Calcano '04 debates whether this was the case for him.

"I think that what she told me can help me in what I will need to do in the future, but it's not necessarily dictating my future," Calcano said.

The art of palm reading has been practiced for centuries. Last weekend University students had the opportunity to learn what the future held in the palm of their hands.

Not feeling accomplished lately?

Write for Feats.

amaliken@

"GIFT CERTIFICATES"
A GREAT IDEA FOR HER VALENTINES DAY
From $20.00, $25.00, $35.00, $40.00 & up

A beautiful fresh red rose will be tied to your gift certificate for her

♥Sure to change this => (to this =>) for you♥

Only from "A CUT ABOVE"
Reserve yours today for Saturday, February 14th

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Dogwood Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
Floral Displays
4300 Old Market Street
Lewisburg
624-2850

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included
Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe one way $169
Book Online
www.airtech.com
or 212.219.7000

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent Repair*Bumper Repair*Windshield Chip Repair*Leather & Vinyl Repair*Audio & Video Installation*Auto Customizing*Lockout Service*

"I think it has to be logical. However he did it, it's very logical. My results are very specific to me, about 98 percent accurate. I was very surprised."

—Reuben Quansah '06

proof!" said Scharise Henderson, a visiting student.

Although other students weren't as convinced, they still enjoyed the reading.

"I've had a palm reading before, and I think that it's not really set in stone. I think it's fun to see if any of it comes true," Taylor Harchak '05 said.

I also had my palm read, my handwriting analyzed, and my tarot cards read while at the fair. While I can't say that I've been turned into a believer, I will say that Morgaine, Bergman and Ture all have uncanny intuitions about those around them, and I was definitely impressed. I may not have that special intuitive gift, but I can definitely see another Psychic Fair in the University's future!

Courtesy of Home.vicnet.net

FEATURES

The rich history of Yuengling

Take a tour of the historic museum brewery located in Pottsville

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The Yuengling Brewery heads up its competition in history, heritage and a good brew. While many are familiar with the regional beer, the story behind the brew often goes untold.

The original Yuengling brewery, located just over approximately 60 miles away in Pottsville, Pa., provides hands-on access to this local information. Museum tours run Monday-Friday and most Saturdays at Yuengling headquarters in Pottsville. The tour is free and lasts about an hour.

The story of the Yuengling process begins and ends, appropriately, in a private bar. The bar was built and used by Yuengling employees until it eventually closed due to insurance and Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) precautions.

The tour begins in the bar with a brief summary of Yuengling history. The Yuengling brand began in 1829 when David Gottlieb Yuengling, a 19-year-old German immigrant, settled in Pottsville and began to home brew in the company's original location, where the city's town hall is now located.

"It was the area that looked the most like home to him," tour guide Vickie Lord said. "At that time there weren't that many other homes—there were just the mountains. He was able to dig a cave in the mountains to store the beer and keep it cool before there was refrigeration."

The original name for the brand was Eagle Brewery, and the eagle is still the company's logo to this day.

"The eagle represents cleanliness and purity—that's why you see it used for so many beers of that time," Lord said.

Two years after its founding, the original brewery burnt down. Yuengling then moved

"The eagle represents cleanliness and purity—that's why you see it used for so many beers of that time."

—Vickie Lord, tour guide his endeavor to its current location—Mahantongo Street in Pottsville. From these humble beginnings to the present day, the Yuengling brand has set an unparalleled precedent by passing through five generations of family ownership.

"It's a small, family-owned brewery," tour guide Melanie Dooley said. "It's also the oldest family-run business and the oldest brewery in America."

During its history, the brewery has made it through highs and lows, triumphing as the United States' oldest brewery. During the Prohibition Era, business survived by manufacturing three "near-beer" products—Yuengling special, Yuengling Por-Tor and a unique cereal drink, Juvo. The Yuengling family also opened a dairy, which can still be seen across the street from its brewery. The down the road in Millcreek, Pa. This original plant is still the center of all things Yuengling, and the next step of the tour offers visitors a chance to view the rooms where it all takes place: the brew house.

Within its walls several large stainless steel kettles are located, which is where the various brews are made. Overlooking the largest is a stained glass ceiling surrounded by hand painted murals. Impressive to the eye, the ceiling has a practical use.

"It was installed because the original kettles were made of copper," Lord said. "The glare made it hard to see, so they put in the stained glass."

Yuengling

Courtesy of fuhrerwholesale.com
Though Yuengling is not very well-known to those on the west coast, here in the east the name holds a place in history.

brewery was clearly eager for the act to end, and shipped a truckload of Winner label beer to the White House the day the act was repealed.

During high times, Yuengling was successful enough to sponsor building and development in other undertakings.

"They helped to build and finance the original Roseland dance hall in 1919," Dooley said. The brewery also expanded its own productions, branching out into other regions of the country.

"There were five at one time, when family members decided to branch off and start their own [divisions]," Dooley said. "There was one in New York City, one in Saratoga, N.Y., one in Richmond, Va., and another in British Columbia. Eventually, they all came back to the original plant."

Recently Yuengling has repeated this expansion—a new Florida brewery opened in August 1999, and in 2000 another new brewery was built local artist, detail the brewery's history. The first depicts the cooper shop where the wooden barrels that contain the beer are made. The second shows six bottle washers and the third gives a picture of the first label to leave the brewery after Prohibition.

The next two stops on the tour include the government cellar, where the beer is measured and taxed, and the warehouse, where the aging and fermenting occurs.

The bottle shop is the next, and perhaps most noteworthy, stop on the production tour. In this one room, each stage of the bottling process can be viewed, most from within several feet of the visitor is standing. The bottles are cleaned, then filled along the line.

"The liquid fills from bottom to top so there's no head," Lord said. When the full bottles are

These are the products that have lasted through the centuries to make Yuengling a booming brand of beer.

capped, they are packed into boxes and sent via conveyor belt to the next building, where they are pasteurized, fermented and stored.

"All our beer is pasteurized," Lord said. "They stay at 144-degrees for 12 minutes to pasteurize."

The tour ends with a taste of the end product of all of the processes featured on the tour: returning to the old employee bar, where those over 21 can enjoy a two-beer sample from a variety of Yuengling products. Those who are not of age can enjoy a home-brewed birch beer.

"We still use the same [lager] recipe, and we've always depended on local advertising and word of mouth," Dooley said.

The future of the Yuengling heritage now belongs to Richard Yuengling Jr. and his four daughters, who are expected to take over the family business eventually. Three of these daughters work daily in the brewery's operations, learning the ins and outs of Yuengling beer firsthand. One daughter, Jennifer, is a 1994 University graduate.

This hands-on approach is important, as their eventual takeover will be treated as any other business transaction.

"I don't know how much it will be sold for," Lord said, "but all I can tell you is that the daughters have to buy [Yuengling] at a fair market value."

Experiencing the value of the Yuengling tradition yourself is a bundle for a bargain. "It was a great experience to see the whole process in motion," said first-time Yuengling visitor Mike Parley, who is from Newfane, N.Y. "The whole thing was a great chance to learn about the rich history of a good beer."

Another titillating edition brought to you by...

Sex and the Bubble

This week, Ms. O has decided to answer her first non-letter question: A friend of Ms. O's, who shall be known as Madame 'M,' really liked the tips in last week's column about how to treat a woman on Valentine's Day. She wanted to know if there were specific tips for what a girl should do for a guy on Valentine's Day, or if she should just follow the advice that was given to our male reader last week.

This week I am dedicating my column to my dear friend, Madame 'M,' in hopes that she has a Valentine's Day full of romance and excitement.

Ms. O Proudly Presents... Valentine's Day Tips to Make Guys Swoon

Send Him Flowers—Getting a big bouquet of flowers is one of the most thoughtful and surprising gifts. Unfortunately, there aren't too many situations in which men are sent flowers, especially not big bouquets of them. However, Ms. O is willing to bet that flowers will put a smile on anyone's face, regardless of whether the person is male or female. Although many guys have probably sent dozens and dozens of flowers in their lifetime, chances are that your guy may not have ever received them. In this day and age, it seems silly to restrict flowers to being just a gift for females. So, show him how much you care by sending him a bouquet of fragrant flowers this Valentine's Day. (Try peach roses or some tiger lilies.)

Plan a Low-Key Evening—Plan a nice laid-back evening that will allow you both to relax and enjoy each other's company. My suggestion is to rent a bunch of funny movies and spend Valentine's Day laughing together. It will be much more relaxed than getting dressed up and going out to dinner.

Order In—Give your guy a break. Valentine's Day is often thought of as a very high-pressure situation for men during which they are expected to wine and dine us females. Although there is absolutely nothing wrong with this idea (Ms. O loves a man who knows how to woo a woman), surprise him by taking off the pressure and telling him to let you plan Valentine's Day dinner. Order take-out from his favorite restaurant or have Chinese food delivered to your room. Set up a blanket and eat on the floor. This will be much more comfortable and relaxed than going out to a fancy restaurant. When combined with rented movies, this will be a winning combination you can both enjoy.

I hope that these three simple ideas will help all of you have an enjoyable Valentine's Day. If you have any specific questions or would like further tips, please e-mail me and I will be more than happy to offer my suggestions. Happy Valentine's Day!

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell! What is your biggest fantasy?

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Kerry cements lead with five victories

Edwards and Clark recorded their first successes against a big win for Kerry

By PETER HACKEMAN
Senior Editor

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) won five of seven primaries Tuesday, continuing his electoral surge that began in Iowa and New Hampshire. Kerry won in Missouri, Arizona, New Mexico, North Dakota and Delaware. Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) won the South Carolina primary and narrowly lost to Gen. Wesley Clark in Oklahoma.

Sen. Joe Lieberman (D-Conn.) failed to win any states and decided to end his campaign Wednesday afternoon. Former Vermont Governor Howard Dean finished third or worse in each state. Dean elected to save money by not campaigning for Tuesday's races after his losses in Iowa and New Hampshire.

Oklahoma provided the biggest drama of the night, where Clark won by only 1,200 votes, out of 300,000 votes. Clark had 29.93 percent, compared to Edwards' 29.53 percent and Kerry's 26.81 percent.

Clark had prepared to quit the race if he didn't win Oklahoma, after spending all week and over $4 million in the state. Before the results came in Tuesday night, Clark's son, Wes Clark Jr., criticized the media, complained about being disillusioned by politics and said he hoped his father would withdraw if he did not win any states that night.

Kerry's wins have continued to increase his fund-raising ability, allowing him to compete in all of the upcoming states. Clark's win in Oklahoma and Edwards' win in South Carolina have led to increased internet contributions on their Web sites, some days up to $100,000.

Kerry, who was in Washington state Tuesday evening waiting for the results, is already focusing on his showdown with Dean in the Saturday caucus. Michigan also holds a caucus Saturday, but polls show Kerry with a lead of about 45 percent, constraining Dean to hope for a victory in Washington.

Courtesy of Reuters
Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) at a campaign stop in Washington. Kerry won five states of the seven that held primaries on Tuesday, further solidifying his status as the front-runner.

Edwards and Clark are campaigning in Virginia and Tennessee, preparing for the primaries next Tuesday. Both Southern candidates hope to defeat Kerry in these races and emerge as the alternative to Kerry.

Nevada will vote on Valentine's Day, followed by Wisconsin on Feb. 17, before Super Tuesday (March 2), when California, New York, Ohio, Massachusetts, Georgia, Minnesota, Maryland, Rhode Island and Vermont vote.

The race is expected to be over after Super Tuesday, unless multiple candidates are able to win in the larger states, especially California, New York, Ohio and Georgia.

Disney and Pixar to part ways

Courtesy of Disney.com
Marlin and Dory are the main characters of Pixar's "Finding Nemo." The most recent Disney-Pixar production, "Nemo" is the ninth-highest-grossing movie of all time.

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

A divorce was announced on Jan. 29 that split one of the most powerful relationships in Hollywood. Surprisingly enough, it has nothing to do with movie stars.

After almost 11 years of working side by side, Walt Disney Pictures and Pixar Animation Studios ended negotiations to renew their long-term film and production agreement, which will terminate in 2006.

Laura Holson, a writer for The New York Times, explains that after being left in an unsettling situation, the Walt Disney Company will have to prove it can remain a prominent figure in animation without the help of Pixar Animation Studios. At the same time, Pixar will have to prove the success of their movies was not solely dependent on Disney's superior marketing abilities.

Many people in Hollywood have a difficult time trying to figure out exactly what it was that caused Steven P. Jobs, the chief executive of Pixar, to walk away from partnership with Michael D. Eisner, Disney's chief executive officer. Speculations have been raised as to whether the split was purely professional or extended to a more personal level.

While Jobs has not discussed with the press his personal relationship with Eisner, it has been said that Eisner was a difficult man to do business with and was relatively unwilling to negotiate the possibility of having a more even trade.

In fact, Reuters.com's timeline of their relationship shows that it was not until after "Toy Story" grossed $358 million worldwide that Pixar and Disney were made fully equal partners. According to Nymtimes.com, this equality was not achieved until Jobs threatened to end the partnership with Disney after several months of talks.

Even after being made an equal partner, Pixar still seemed to have issues with the contract it held with Disney.

"Pixar had complained that the terms of the distribution deal were tilted too heavily in Disney's favor. Under the deal, Pixar was responsible for content, while Disney handled distribution and marketing," CNN.com reported.

Upon announcement of the split, Disney's stock fell 45 cents to $24 while Pixar's rose dramatically from $2.19 to $66.39.

However, it is not only the immediate stock price changes that raise a great deal of worry in the eyes of Disney executives and board members.

Before the partnership, Disney had hardly any worthy competitors in the field of animation, with the potential exception of Pixar, who was actually eager to join forces instead of competing.

Now Disney is left with two possible and very powerful foes: Pixar and DreamWorks. Even more unfortunately for Disney, Jobs and DreamWorks' Jeffrey Katzenberg have clashed with Eisner over the authority he is allowed over the companies.

Nymtimes.com also reported that "movies produced by Pixar contribute as much as half of Disney's operating income in filmed entertainment."

Stock analysts speculate that beginning in 2007, after the release of the two Pixar movies Disney still has rights over, Disney's annual profit has the potential to drop by $30 million, to $40 million dollars overall.

In addition, disregarding the recent success of Disney's animated "Lilo and Stitch," Disney has been unable to retain or repeat the success of its animated movies in the early '90s.

When the separation is complete, after Pixar delivers the promised "The Incredibles" and "The Cars" to Disney, analysts wonder if Pixar could possibly join forces with Apple, as both companies are run by Jobs.

That union would have the potential to turn Jobs into one of the foremost leaders in the world of technology. CNN.com reports that while this merger seems highly unlikely due to the outstanding individual successes of both companies, it is not entirely out of the question.

"Just think of the cross-marketing opportunities. Those surf-dude sea turtles from 'Finding Nemo' listening to the Beach Boys on their iPods. Toy Story's Woody using Apple's new GarageBand software to compose a love song for his girlfriend Bo Peep. And how about Sully from 'Monsters Inc.' editing 'How to scare kids' videos with iMovie on his PowerMac G5?"

Even with all these possibilities, it still seems likely that Pixar is going to stand on its own for a while, just to see where it can go.

New worm strikes worldwide; campus spared

By MATT HINSON
Senior Writer

A new virus called "Mydoom" spread quickly around the world last week. It was released on Jan. 26, and replicated itself faster than any other virus has to date, according to British security firm MessageLabs.

Soon after the virus was released, it infected a number of on-campus computers, which began sending e-mails attached with the virus through the network. At the peak of its transmissions, about 90 percent of the e-mails sent to the mail server were been cleaned within a day or so of the virus' first appearance on campus.

According to CNN.com, the virus was designed specifically to mount an attack on the Web site of SCO Group, Inc., a software provider. "Mydoom" used a "denial of service" attack, a popular technique for attacks on systems with otherwise good security. The infected computers sent short messages to the target machines—the messages themselves were no more than the computer equivalent of "hello," but there were so many that they easily overloaded the target systems. The attack and its effect on infected with this virus. Only about 75 machines were ultimately infected by the virus. Technical Support Specialist Keelan Cleary said.

Courtesy of Google.com

Of the infected computers, about 15 were staff or lab computers and 60 belonged to students. The rate of infection was low due to the fact that the antivirus software installed on the University's Web server updates frequently, keeping a virus' window of opportunity to slip through and damage any major on-campus systems fairly small.

While virus-infected e-mail grew to 90 percent of campus traffic, only about 75 computers were contaminated.

Anti-virus software is also available to students through ResNet, allowing private computers to be protected as effectively as the main server, with the same pattern of small, quickly dealt-with windows of vulnerability. Cleary said that he believed most of the infections on campus were caused by students using e-mail programs outside of the University network, which are not protected by its anti-virus software.

Even so, he said, almost all of the infected machines had the company's servers were so dramatic that the company chose to temporarily shut down the site rather than continue expending resources and bandwidth for maintenance.

The virus, a "worm-type" virus, was designed to take over a user's computer and utilize the bandwidth for further attacks. Msnbc.com reports that the virus is activated when users open an attachment to a seemingly innocuous e-mail.

Msnbc.com reports that the attack targeted the SCO Group and Microsoft Corporation. Both are reviled among the Linux community, which prizes free distribution and open development of software.

Microsoft attempted to patent the popular Linux freeware last year and SCO Group, the largest software corporation, is considered a nemesis of Linux and free software exchange.

Both SCO and Microsoft have offered $250,000 for information leading to the apprehension of the virus' author. Msnbc.com reported that despite involvement through ResNet, allowing private computers to be protected as effectively as the main server, with the same pattern of small, quickly dealt-with windows of vulnerability. Cleary said that he believed most of the infections on campus were caused by students using e-mail programs outside of the University network, which are not protected by its anti-virus software.

Even so, he said, almost all of the infected machines had

Totem Tatoo

Area's Finest Custom Tatoo and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
~State of the Art Body Jewelry~

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester/Units Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

Rentals

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570) 524-9839

NITTANY TRAVEL
201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 11, Shamokin Dam, PA 17876

ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK
Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!

El Pueblito Resort Cancun, Mexico

$925/person - Double-Occupancy
523-3224 800-326-9603

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products: fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards: trophies, business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproducts.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL

ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

BUSINESS & POLITICS

BSG special elections held today

Sign-up forms for today's BSG elections hang in the LC lobby. Between January 21 and 28, sign-ups netted two candidates for each of the three executive positions in the class of 2005. In addition to the three board positions, there were five openings for class representatives thanks to a combination of extraordinary circumstances, but no general election was called for these offices.

By DAVID LAROSS & MICHELLE JOHNSON
B&P Editor & Staff Writer

Special elections for the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Class of 2005 Executive Council are today. There are five spots open on the Junior Class Congress, although there will be no elections for these positions. Students can vote online, and votes will be accepted until 11:59 p.m. today. Winners will be announced on Saturday, soon after the voting site closes. Ordinarily, there would be no elections at all until the end of the semester, but many BSG officers were unable to return to their old positions this winter.

John Siwicki, former 2005 Class President, had to leave that office when he was elected president of BSG. Likewise, the three other new BSG executives were members of their class congress until last month.

This reshuffling was only part of the problem. It combined with the departures of two other Congress members and former Class of 2005 Vice President Helen Britz and Secretary/Treasurer Ryan Kaplan for study-abroad programs to create a total of eight open seats in BSG when there would ordinarily be none. That number might rise even higher depending on today's election, since the three remaining Congress members are also candidates for the three open seats on the Executive Council and would have to abandon their seats if they win.

BSG posted sign-up sheets for all the open positions on Jan. 21, and kept them up until Jan. 28.

It found a level of interest unusually high for any BSG contest, much less for off-season elections. Two students volunteered for each of the three executive positions, and there are 10 applicants for seats on the congress.

"Coming out of an executive election where three of the four positions were uncontested, I was really glad to see this many people sign up," said BSG Vice President of Operations Duff Weber '05. Many of the candidates have chosen to focus on the University's new alcohol policy and student input into it as a campaign issue.

"Without a doubt, it's something we want to work with this year," Siwicki said. "It's probably the most pressing issue on campus today."

While the executive offices are being decided by a simple election, applicants for seats in the class congress are interviewed and selected by an "election council" made up of the three remaining members of the body.

While the two alternate positions—ordinarily non-voting members responsible for filling in for absent representatives—are also vacant, BSG bylaws do not allow for any kind of special election for these members, meaning there will be no alternates until the end of the semester. If any representatives have to leave the position, there will be new sign-ups and a new election council to decide whom to admit.

All the new officers will be chosen by Sunday, when BSG will meet for the second time this semester. Although its first meeting had an incomplete council, Weber says that it was still able to function as a group.

"Considering the lack of juniors, we used it mainly as an organizational meeting," Siwicki said. "I'm eager to have a full Congress at hand."

It is important to have all of the officers ready for this Sunday's meeting, during which Dean of Students Richard Ferraro will discuss the University's new alcohol policy. The emergency measures have been hotly debated by practically all of the University community, and both BSG officers and candidates feel that it is important to make sure everyone is represented Sunday.

"We're trying to get it done as quickly as possible so we can have a full congress," Weber said.

Know the candidates: six juniors, three offices

Adam Ahuja

President

David Caribardi

David Laross—The Bucknellian

Ahuja has been involved in Bucknell Student Government (BSG) since his first year at the University and is currently a member of Congress.

"One overall goal is to save and budget money properly so that our class has a big fund for Senior Nights next year," Ahuja said. "I would also like to plan class activities."

Ahuja hopes to organize a senior class event that would take place in the fall of 2005, as well as the sale of a class product.

"I want to start by getting class feedback," Ahuja said. "All it takes is for some junior to write a good idea."

Ahuja was optimistic that BSG could turn proposals into reality and said there's a "good chance we can make it happen."

Ahuja said he thinks being president will be a "fun position" and that he is a good candidate because he has an open mind to new ideas and has been a part of the weekly BSG meetings since his first year.

"I'm familiar with the process, people, possibilities and limitations," Ahuja said.

While Caribardi has never held a BSG office, he has been heavily involved in campus activities throughout his University career. He was one of the eight founding members of Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity's University chapter. In its first year here, TKE earned the Interfraternity Council Recruitment Award and official recognition for a fraternity in good standing—a national record for TKE.

He wants to represent the "opinions and concerns" of his classmates, particularly on issues of specific concern to the Class of 2005. "I assure the Class of 2005 that I will voice their position on a Senior Night," he said, "as well as the contract for a Commencement Speaker who both reflects highly upon the University and captures the appeal of the graduating class."

In addition to his previous accomplishments with TKE, Caribardi is currently working towards forming an aviation club.

"I do not wish to come off as the typical politician because simply, that's not me," he said. "I'm an economics major with a minor in math who only wishes to voice the opinions and concerns I share with my fellow classmates."

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Joseph Pullano

Vice President

Taylor Harchak

Pullano has been a member of Congress for the past two years, and prides himself on working toward a student government that can be more responsive to student needs and can better impress those needs on the University's administration and its policy.

In Congress, he helped provide BSG funding for Susquehanna Women in Transition. His goal as vice president is to improve student/administration communications and "to give students more say on policies implemented by the administration."

Changes he would like to institute would focus particularly on the point system for alcohol violations, which make students "scared to call for medical assistance."

Pullano was also peer advisor for Delta Upsilon Fraternity until it was suspended by the University at the end of last semester, and he hopes to use that experience in his work with BSG.

"I have learned how the administration deals with student problems and concerns," Pullano said, "which is why it is imperative to have student voices heard on rules and regulations [that are] placed upon them without any say."

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Adam Wilson—The Bucknellian

Harchak wants to improve the relationships students have with the administration, the community and BSG.

Harchak said his first goal is to be the "students' link to the administration." He also wants to "solicit more student feedback" and help the administration "understand the students better."

Harchak's second goal is to improve relations between students and the community.

"I want to give the class more opportunities for community service," he said. "I work at the Red Cross and teach classes there so I have a lot of ties to different organizations in the area."

Harchak also wants to improve BSG's relationship with students, saying that "BSG needs to appeal more to broader student interests so that the students will get involved."

Harchak, an independent, said he is in a good position to work with both other independents and the Greek community.

"I have friends who are in a lot of different fraternities and sororities as well as friends who aren't Greek so I feel I can represent a variety of interests," Harchak said.

Jaclyn Piposar

Secretary/Treasurer Courtney Homan

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Piposar is running for the BSG executive council after only a year on Congress, but she has experience not only in student government but in management as a science.

"As a business management major I often look at executives and how they run their companies," she said. "Analyzing the different strategies has made it easier to pick out the negative and positive aspects of our student government, and work to change them."

She hopes to provide a more direct voice for students at BSG meetings, making a point of relaying comments and complaints that she hears to the body at large.

In particular, Piposar wants to help facilitate the end of the current emergency alcohol policy, and replacing it with one that students, faculty and administration all have input into.

"It seems primarily that lately there have been so many problems that students are against, [but] their voices are being neglected."

"In order to do anything, it's important to have organization," Homan said, "and I think the position [of BSG secretary/treasurer] offers an opportunity to accomplish that."

Homan is the personal chair for Chi Omega Sorority and the president of Starting Line, a community service group on campus. She said these roles "are all about people skills, planning and administrative duties."

Some of Homan's goals include making BSG officers more accessible and amending the process clubs and organizations go through in order to acquire BSG funding.

"It is a matter of making the most of the money and resources available, and I want to maximize the use of our money by streamlining the funding process," Homan said.

Homan said she would also like to find ways to get the junior class more involved on the campus and in the community.

Brant Butler—The Bucknellian

February 13, 2004

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside Volume 133, Number 3

Features:

University students suggest their favorite romance movies in a special Valentine's Day section. See pages A8-9

University searches for Chrysalis replacement

Courtesy of Reuters

The University canceled its contract with James Brown, who was scheduled to perform at Chrysalis, because he was arrested on charges of battery. The Chrysalis Committee is trying to find a new performer to replace Brown.

By JULIE LESKO
News Editor

The University's decision to not allow James Brown, 70, to perform at Chrysalis could prevent the University from booking performers represented by Brown's talent agency, according to several University students.

Performers represented by William Morris Agency, the company the University used to book Brown, include G. Love & Special Sauce and Howie Day, who performed at the University last year. Other clients include Simon and Garfunkel, Mandy Moore, Outkast and The Eagles.

Activities and Campus Events (ACE) President Bill Anderson '04 said the University might have difficulty working with performers represented by the agency in the future.

"Unfortunately, because Bucknell canceled its contract with James Brown, the agency which represents him will most likely not be doing any business with Bucknell in the near future," Anderson said.

Chad Flood '04, chair of the Concert Committee, also said that future bookings with the company could be difficult.

"A vast majority of well known bands, some of which repeatedly appear on campus surveys, are represented by this company. A lot of popular 'college bands' are now out of our reach," Flood said. "It really hurts to see the path ahead."

See BROWN, page A3

Ammon contributes $2.5 million to University.

By ALYSSA WALKER
Senior Editor

The University recently acquired $2.5 million, which completes the pledged contribution of the late Ted Ammon '71. Ammon, a former University trustee, started a challenge to raise scholarship money by promising one dollar for every three dollars pledged for scholarship money.

This promise, known as the Ammon Challenge, raised $76,359,000 for University scholarships. Ammon's personal pledge totaled $15 million in matching gifts to be paid by Dec. 31, 2005.

The contribution was approximately $2.7 million from completion when Ammon was found murdered in his East Hampton, Conn., home in October 2002. Since then, the University has been negotiating with the estate to acquire the remaining sum.

Director of Planned Giving Mark Elliott said Stuart Berelson of the board of trustees was the lead negotiator and was vital to obtaining the balance. Berelson, a New York lawyer, arranged for the University to receive $2.5 million two years in advance of the 2005 deadline.

"It was to trustee Stu Berelson's credit that we got the gift when we did. Stu was an outstanding negotiator on behalf of Bucknell students," Elliott said.

Ammon's pledge was made on Nov. 16, 1996, and it was part of the $183 million comprehensive campaign that ended Dec. 31, 2000.

"When the Capital Campaign began, it had to have something for people to get behind—Ted and his commitment to match gifts was that thing," Elliott said.

The effects of the Ammon Challenge are important for University students. According to Elliott, the $76,359,000, if used at a 4.5 percent spending rate, equals $3,436,194 per year in scholarships for students. The average student grant is $11,000, which means the money from the Ammon Challenge could create 312 new grants.

Approximately one out of every 11 students at the University receives a scholarship resulting from the Ammon Challenge—either from the money donated during the campaign or from Ammon's matching gifts.

"That's the human result of what Ted did," Elliott said. "It's the students ... that matter—and Ted agreed. He wanted his money to help the students directly; that was why he was so generous with support for need-based financial aid."

Elliott said this is an incredible growth for the University.

See AMMON, page A3

Admissions applications increase for Class of '08

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Staff Writer

Applicants for the Class of 2008 have the Admissions Department reading and evaluating a record 8,285 essays and transcripts, an almost 8 percent increase from the 7,672 students who applied last year.

"We are having an amazing year," Dean of Admissions Mark Davies said. "It is a little overwhelming for admissions, but we are working hard to keep up."

The target size for the Class of 2008 is 910 students, which is four more than last year's target number.

"Just because there are 600 more applicants than last year does not mean we will enlarge the class," Davies said. "There will just be 600 [more] disappointed people. This is going to be a challenging year—it is now more competitive."

Of the 691 students who applied early decision, 335 were admitted last month. Davies said that the early

See ADMISSIONS, page A2

Administration proposes revised alcohol policy

By BRIANNA EVANS
Staff Writer

A new modified point system will replace the University's emergency alcohol policy. University President Steffen Rogers promised late last semester that he would review the emergency policy in early February.

In the meantime, seven students have been suspended for serious alcohol infractions, and several others have behaved in very problematic ways, according to an e-mail sent to students by Dean of Students Richard Ferraro last week. If this alcohol abuse continues, Rogers could decide to continue the emergency measures for the rest of the academic year, according to Ferraro.

The modified points system will be a 10-point system, with five points of forgiveness at the beginning of a student's senior year, as opposed to two in the old system. The modified points system distinguishes the difference between drinking beer and wine, as opposed to hard alcohol.

The Committee on Complementary Activities (CCA), which is composed of faculty, students and administrators, has been working on creating the new point system since the fall.

"I'm all for anything that gets us out of the current policy, which is completely unfair and ineffective. We need a reasonable policy that will control alcohol abuse but will still keep Bucknell a fun place to be," Ben Cohen '04 said.

Rogers believes a modified points system may better address the University's alcohol concerns for the long term. This modified system continues important elements of the emergency measures, including strong sanc-

See ALCOHOL, page A2

ALPHA PHI OMEGA HOLDS BLOOD DRIVE

Bill Thomson—The Bucknellian

Students participated in Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity's third blood drive of the academic year on Feb. 5.

Cat Coalition to help feed felines

Courtesy of Matt Gahler

A group nicknamed the Cat Coalition is working to find food and homes for the feral cats on campus. The two cats (above) try to find food and shelter in the Smith Quad.

By KIM DUNLAP
Writer

A scraggly, underfed cat darting across the walkway or crying at the doors of the library or Coleman Hall is not an uncommon sight. Some members of the University are working to form a volunteer organization, nicknamed the Cat Coalition, to help the homeless felines.

Several administration and faculty members met on Feb. 5 to discuss the stray cat problem on campus and how a volunteer group could be assembled to solve it. Although unaffiliated with the University, the group is trying to gain momentum and funds to help find homes for the animals. Concern about the growing problem is not new. "I always noticed cats running around near Swartz hall, but I always figured that they were just owned by someone living nearby or something. It's really sad to think that they're outside all winter and need to depend on random people feeding them instead of having a home," Lauren Staph '07 said.

The cat problem on campus is not a recent one. Feral cats have been haunting areas around Coleman Hall, Student Health Services and Bertrand Library for some time.

Although many faculty members and students have been helping the felines with occasional feedings, the number of cats is steadily rising and their efforts are coming up short as more cats appear

See CATS, page A3

SPORTS Spring preview

A brief look at the upcoming season for Bucknell Athletics.

See page B1

POLITICS Primary update

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) continues to win primary elections across the country. Gen. Wesley Clark dropped out of the race for the presidential nomination after losing in the South.

See page A5

NEWS In Memoriam

The University mourns the deaths of two former professors: Louis J. Casimir and Wayne E. Manning.

See page A4

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Feb. 1

INFORMATION / POSSIBLE ALCOHOL VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity for the report of an unknown, intoxicated person who had fled from the building on foot. Officers searched the area with negative results.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Marts Hall for the report of a student who had fallen. The individual was transported by ambulance to the Evangelical Community Hospital Emergency room for treatment of an ankle injury and later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a Coca Cola machine located at the Golf Course Pro Shop. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that a student has been observed on multiple occasions eating food in the Bison although he has not paid for the items. Dining Services will file internal theft charges.

Monday, Feb. 2

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—An employee requested transportation for a student to the Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of an eye injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to O'Leary Building in response to a report of an ill student. Officers transported the individual to Student Health Services for treatment. She later returned to her room.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that three students have reported the theft of one pair of headphones, one pocket knife, and nine DVD movies by unknown person(s) from a men's restroom at Carey House. The incident is under investigation.

Wednesday, Feb. 4

RECOVERED PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a spent .22 caliber casing found by an employee. The casing was brought to Public Safety for disposal. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a student who was injured in a sledding accident. The individual was transported by ambulance to the Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of possible head, neck and spinal injuries. She later returned to campus.

Thursday, Feb. 5

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed a couch from Swartz Hall. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to Edwards House for the report of an unknown male urinating on a resident's room floor. Upon arrival, officers identified the male as a student who admitted to consuming alcohol although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption, public drunkenness and public urination.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed $10 in coins and a plastic cup from his secured room in the Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity during winter break. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to a report of a male student with an injured knee at the Gerhard Fieldhouse. Upon arrival, the student used obscene language toward the officers. He was transported by ambulance to the Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and cited for disorderly conduct.

SMOKING IN A RESIDENCE UNIT—Public Safety responded to Gateway Viddinghoff for a fire alarm activation. Upon arrival, officers found that the alarm was activated by a student smoking cigarettes in the room. A citation was issued for smoking in a residence unit.

Friday, Feb. 6

INFORMATION / TRAFFIC COMPLAINT—Public Safety responded to Moore Avenue to assist the East Buffalo Township Police Department while it was having two student vehicles towed for obstructing the flow of traffic. Traffic citations were issued.

Campus groups work with administration to revise the emergency alcohol policy

POLICY From page A1

tion for serious violations, such as DUIs, and reduced penalties for lesser offenses, such as simple underage possession.

The modified system will still include automatic suspension for a dangerous level of intoxication, as the emergency policy does, but the level of dangerous intoxication will be raised to a .22 blood alcohol content (BAC). If students are found to have a BAC of this level or higher, they will be suspended for one semester.

With the modified points system, the University will focus on making objective decisions when judging individuals' intoxication levels.

"With the new system, we are going to focus on specific measured observations as opposed to subjective observations. [Subjective observations] are not a good way to determine if one's future at the University should be interrupted," said Gerald Commerford, associate dean of students.

In the past, a Public Safety officer could classify a person as intoxicated by visual observation only. This strategy caused many problems because students complained they received points because officers did not like them. With the modified points system, a series of actions will be taken to ensure that students deserve the punishment they receive.

If a student is suspected of being intoxicated while walking, a Public Safety officer can stop the student. Upon stopping the student, the officer must give the student a reason for stopping him or her, such as stumbling excessively. Then, the officer will further judge the student's behavior and if he does not believe the student is intoxicated, the student is free to leave.

If stopped students appear to be intoxicated, they must take a series of field sobriety tests (FST) and, if they fail the tests, students will be required to take a portable breathalyzer test (PBT). If students wish, they can skip the FST and take the PBT.

At a stop, Public Safety will make it known to the students that if they refuse to do take either set of tests, it will automatically be assumed that their level of intoxication is above a .22 and this will automatically lead to a one-semester suspension.

"Early on [with the old system] there was no PBT. ...The system was a based on subjective observation, and students complained," said Gary Taniel, chairperson of CCA. "The PBT is an accurate, scientific way to see if a person is intoxicated. The modified system comes down to how we will measure intoxication. This [using both FST and PBT] is the best way to do it."

Once a person's BAC is measured, the severity of the punishment is based on the level of intoxication. Distinctions will be made among mild, heavy and dangerous levels of intoxication so that sanctions can be more proportional to the degree of abuse. A BAC of .11 to .159 will lead to 6 points, a BAC of .16 to .219 will lead to 8 points, and a BAC over .22 will lead to 10 points, which requires a one-semester leave.

The punishments based on BAC level will be administered regardless of age.

Underage students who do not drink but associate with persons who do drink can ask for a voluntary PBT and can avoid a penalty. There will be a second, one-time partial amnesty feature

"They [the administrators] are being lenient on drunk driving which is a major cause of teen death, while they are having harsher punishment for people that choose to walk instead of drive."

—Adam Weinberg '07

so that an intoxicated person can have access to a "safe ride" with close to full immunity. The administration said this, they hope, will prevent DUIs.

Points will be reduced for underage possession or consumption of lower alcohol products (such as beer and wine) and increased for underage possession of hard alcohol (liquor). Students who can legally consume alcohol will be able to consume and possess either kind of beverage without prejudice, as long as they conform with University rules.

"I feel the new policy is definitely a step in the right direction, especially concerning students who are 21 years old. The revised sanctions seem more realistic for use on a college campus," Jennifer Lesko '04 said.

Cori Hetherington '04 said a benefit of the new system is its increased forgiveness policy.

"The majority of students on campus do act responsibly. However, we all make mistakes and it is nice to see that the university is supporting that fact," Hetherington said.

The modified points system emphasizes the dangerousness of driving while intoxicated. The modified system allows for intoxication levels up to .10, while state law only allows for intoxication levels up to .08. If students have a .10 BAC or higher, they will be automatically suspended, regardless of age.

"If someone was going to be suspended we wanted to be sure that the standard is higher than the state," Commerford said. This discrepancy about the intoxication levels of DUI has worried some students.

"They [the administrators]

VIOLATIONS THAT WILL RESULT IN A 10-POINT PENALTY (AUTOMATIC SUSPENSION)

- .22 BAC or above
- Dangerous hazing
- Using violence while under the influence of alcohol
- DUI WITH .10 BAC

sume alcohol will be able to consume and possess either kind of beverage without prejudice, as long as they conform with University rules.

"I feel the new policy is definitely a step in the right direction, especially concerning students who are 21 years old. The revised sanctions seem more realistic for use on a college campus," Jennifer Lesko '04 said.

Cori Hetherington '04 said a benefit of the new system is its increased forgiveness policy.

"The majority of students on campus do act responsibly. However, we all make mistakes and it is nice to see that the university is supporting that fact," Hetherington said.

The modified points system emphasizes the dangerousness of driving while intoxicated. The modified system allows for intoxication levels up to .10, while state law only allows for intoxication levels up to .08. If students have a .10 BAC or higher, they will be automatically suspended, regardless of age.

"If someone was going to be suspended we wanted to be sure

University receives record number of applications decision applicants are the core of the class. The quality of admitted early decision applicants has increased, and Davies said he thinks the overall quality has increased as well.

ADMISSIONS From page A1

"The number of applicants from the west increased, like in California, where the number rose from 335 to 397," Davies said. "The number of diverse students also increased as 925 students indicated themselves as 'students of color.'"

Associate Director of Admissions Carol Gadd said more people are applying because applicants are the children of the Baby Boom era, the University has an increasing national reputation, and the common application and Internet make applying easier.

Davies said it is important to keep up the University's visibility in the community. Off campus, admissions staff members hold "BU 101" sessions, an introduction to Bucknell. Off-campus interviews are available, and alumni assist with interviews and with college fairs.

"Our on-campus programs are doing well, too," Davies said. "Our tour guides are well trained and do a great job and the on-campus presentation is well articulated. Also, the facilities are amazing with the new engineering building and the academic and athletic facilities."

Katie Keller, who was accepted early decision for the Class of 2008, said knowing there was an increase in applicants made waiting for the admissions notice nerve-wracking.

"I think there is an increase in applications because Bucknell has shown that its graduates land great jobs and students always speak highly of the school," Keller said.

The increase in applicants makes the process more selective, affects national ratings, and, according to Gadd, is good news for the University.

The Sigmund and Claire WEIS CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS PRESENTS an acoustic evening with Béla Heck and Edgar Meyer

bajo, doublebass, and more

8 p.m.
Saturday, February 14, 2004

reservations and tickets required will be from noon till 7 p.m. in the Raskin Hall of the Weis Music Building

COMING EVENTS
Corey Cerone, violin
Pavani Jeyapalan, piano
in a program of Beethoven Violin Sonatas
8 p.m., Friday, February 20, 2004

Seán Curran Dance Company
8 p.m., Friday, February 27, 2004

Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
570-577-1000

WANTED:

Writer for weekly world and Bucknell briefs

Contact Julie at jalesko@

Agency could blacklist University due to breach of contract

BROWN From page A1

The University announced Brown as a Chrysalis performer on Jan. 30. This came on the heels of Brown's Jan. 23 arrest on charges of criminal domestic violence, according to The Washington Post. Brown allegedly pushed his 34-year-old wife, Tomi Rae Brown, during an argument.

"Fortunately, we are already looking into other performers for Chrysalis that we are excited about and hope the student body will equally support."

—Bill Anderson '06, ACE president

Although many members of the University community wanted Brown to play at Chrysalis, the administration announced on Feb. 4 that it had canceled Brown's contract.

Before the decision was announced, Bucknell Student Government decided to conduct a poll, according to Associate Dean of Students Kari Conrad, to measure student opinion about Brown performing at the University.

More than 75 percent of the responding students were in favor of bringing James Brown to campus.

Flood said he and Kelly Holmes '06, chair of the Activities and Campus Events (ACE) Traditions Committee, met with University President Steffen Rogers before the final decision was made. Flood said he said little during the meeting because Rogers was already aware of the opinion of the students. "ACE and the Chrysalis Committee made sure to voice the students' opinions when this decision was being made, and we will continue to do so as we plan Chrysalis," Anderson said.

Brown had been charged with spousal abuse at least three times during his earlier marriage with Adrienne Brown, but all charges were dropped.

Brown was also sentenced to six years in prison for carrying a shotgun into an insurance seminar and has had numerous sexual harassment suits, according to CNN.com.

Molly Dragiewicz, the director of the Women's Resource Center, said the University has a responsibility to uphold the same high standards it expects from students.

"Why would we choose to bring someone to campus who is known for a pattern of self-destructive and violent behavior when there are so many other performers out there who do not have that kind of history?" Dragiewicz said.

Despite Brown's legal record, students were disappointed with the decision.

"It is not new that he is in legal trouble again. The administration should have considered his legal record earlier [before it booked him]. This does not change the fact that he is a legend," JT Dean '07 said.

Anderson said even though Brown has been canceled, Chrysalis has not.

"Fortunately, we are already looking into other performers for Chrysalis that we are excited about and hope the student body will equally support," Anderson said.

According to Conrad, a new performer may be named as early as next week. A date for Chrysalis has not yet been set.

Brown was released on bail on Jan. 29th and faces a maximum penalty of a $500 fine and 20 days in jail.

Group to find homes for wild cats

Courtesy of Matt Gabler

Cat lovers on campus plan to unite to control and reduce the population of feral cats. A committee called Cat Coalition plans to raise funds for the project plans to educate students and to stop future cat problems.

CATS From page A1

and temperatures drop. The network the coalition wishes to establish would include health-care, shelter and placement efforts made by volunteers on campus.

"The goals, I think, are to systematize the feeding of the feral cats by establishing specific feeding locations and times, to systematize the effort to catch cats in the Have-A-Heart traps, take them for veterinary care, and then re-release them on campus or possibly find homes for them," said Associate Professor of Philosophy Gary Steiner, a member of the Cat Coalition.

Some founders of the Cat Coalition have already taken measures to help the feral cat community, such as Christine Fry, the department of theatre and dance's secretary.

Noticing the wayward animals outside her building, this cat lover, who has 23 cats of her own, has been taking action for some time. Fry says she refuses to let the cats die or be taken to the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (ASPCA), so she bought her own trap and catches the stray animals.

Once she has them, she takes them to the vet and either finds a home for them or takes them to her own house. Saying that she refuses to let the cats die or be taken to the ASPCA, she bought her own trap and keeps some of the cats she catches on campus.

"I just recently took in a ... cat who had lived in a barn her whole life, but the minute she came in the house I couldn't get her off of me. She follows me around and wants love ... and she was a feral cat. It might not be a lap cat, but if you get them fixed and litter train them, why not bring them in? They all have different personalities. Some

Selected William Morris Agency member bands:

A Perfect Circle
Aimee Allen
Amen
Nicole & Natalie Appleton
Arthur
Ash
Aterciopelados
Audiovent
Automatic Black
Sebastian Bach
Erykah Badu
Ben Taylor Band
Pat Benatar and Neil Giraldo
Blackstreet
Blues Traveler
Joe Bonamassa
Boomkat
Boy George and Culture Club
Boy Hits Car
Boys Night Out
Boysnites
Michelle Branch
Toni Braxton
Brian Setzer Orchestra
James Brown
Michael Buble
Buffalo Daughter
Bumblebeez
Bush
David Byrne
The Calling
Mariah Carey
Aaron Carter
Benny Cassette
Cato Salsa Experience
Jen Chapin
Charlotte Church
City High
Closure
Coolio
Billy Corgan
Cornelius
Creedence Clearwater
Revisited
Crosby, Stills & Nash
Cross Canadian Ragweed
Christopher Cross
Sheryl Crow
Cut Chemist
Cypress Hill
Holger Czukay
Da Brat

Dakota
Dan Finnerty and the Dan Band
D'Angelo
Alana Davis
Craig David
Howie Day
Desmond Child
The Distillers
DJ Shadow
Dogstar
Durutti Column
The Eagles
Eagles of Death Metal
Echobrain
Elbow
Eminem
Endo
The English Beat
Joy Enriquez
Tiffany Evans
Eve
Marianne Faithfull
Family Values Tour
Ricky Fante
Fantomas
Fear Factory
Fieley's Dreams
Neil Finn
Joe Firstman
The Folk Implosion
Peter Frampton
funky METERS
Fu Manchu
G. Love & Special Sauce
Peter Gabriel
Bob Geldof
General Public
Godsmack
Goo Goo Dolls
Goodie Mob
Al Green
Pat Green
Robin Guthrie
Hanson
Beth Hart
Will Haven
Don Henley
Lauryn Hill
Tyler Hilton
Hot Action Cop
Whitney Houston
Katy Hudson
Billy Idol
Ill Kid

Insane Clown Posse
Jaguars
Jamiroquai
Jethro Tull
Joe Bonamassa
Johnny Winter Band
Journey
Juliette and the Licks
Jurassic 5
Angeliqe Kidjo
The Killers
Killing Joke
Diana King
Mark Knopfler
Korn
Kottonmouth Kings
Lake Trout
Mark Lanegan
Lillix
Lollapalooza Tour
Lo-Pro
Love and Rockets
Loverboy
Ludacris
Mando Diao
Barry Manilow
Patricia Manterola
Marie Sisters
Julian Marley
& Uprising Band
Damian Marley
Ziggy Marley
Charlie Mars
Maxi Priest
Maria McKee
Megadeth
Mellowdrome
Melvins
Luis Miguel Millionaire
Mindy Smith
Mondo Generator
Money Mark
Mandy Moore
Motion City Soundtrack
Moving Units
My Life With The Thrill Kill Kult
Mya
Nappy Roots
Graham Nash
The Neville Brothers
The New Jim Rose Circus
Outkast
Sean Paul

Pepper
Linda Perry
Pigmy Love Circus
The Pixies
Lisa Marie Presley
The Pretenders
Public Enemy
Pulse Ultra
Queen Latifah
Sebastian Rogers
The Roots
Carina Round
Saliva
Jill Scott
Sebadoh
The Sex Pistols
Remy Shand
Kenny Wayne Shepherd
Simon and Garfunkel
Skizell
Skinny Puppy
Lynyrd Skynyrd
Slash's Snake Pit
Slightly Stoopid
Sloth
Mindy Smith
Snoop Dogg
The Special Goodness
Split Shift
Stage
Staind
Starlight Mints
The Starting Line
Steel Pulse
Stone Temple Pilots
Switchfoot
Tantric
Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers
Tomahawk
Tool
Toots and the Maytals
Trust Company
Turbonegro
Tweet
Suzanne Vega
Joe Walsh
Roger Waters
Bob Weir & Ratdog
Paul Weller
Wiscchild
The Working Title
Lizz Wright Allstars
Wynonna

Largest single donation secure

AMMON From page A1

In 1984, the University's total endowment was approximately $45 million and 150 grants were available for scholarship.

"Because of the increase in scholarship money, the University is more accessible to more of the better students who might have gone elsewhere because of financial issues," Elliott said.

Ammon worked with Elliott and former University president Bro Adams on setting up the challenge. Elliott said that Ammon and Adams worked well together because of their shared vision for the University—to have an excellent academic system that was accessible to the best students, regardless of their financial status.

"Ammon and Adams shared a common synergy and a common goal—excellence and access," Elliott said.

The final payment of Ammon's pledge marks the completion of the largest single donation to the University.

"I think Ted had a good time doing the challenge. He was a very modest man who didn't want his name in the spotlight," Elliott said.

Courtesy of Public Relations

Ammon (above) is surrounded by University students and faculty when he was honored at the Scholarship Day Luncheon April 28, 2001. Ammon, who was murdered, has contributed the largest single donation in University history.

ing students on why it's not a good idea to have pets on campus. It would help the problem enormously," Steiner said.

"The goals ... are to systematize the feeding of the feral cats by establishing specific feeding locations and times, to systematize the effort to ... take them for veterinary care, and ... to possibly find homes for them."

—Gary Steiner, associate professor of philosophy

For those students who wish to partake in the volunteering, the work will be informal and greatly appreciated.

"People can volunteer time, resources, money or whatever they can contribute, as little or as much as they'd like," Steiner said.

Students can expect to see advertisements for the Cat Coalition in the near future. The members of the organization urge students to either partake in the volunteer work to benefit the felines or to find them a loving home.

"They're not a lost cause," Fry said.

News

IN MEMORIAM

Louis J. Casimir Jr.

Former University Professor Louis J. Casimir wrote his own obituary.

Long-time friend and colleague Michael Payne, professor of English, said Casimir's self-written obituary signified his sense of humor.

"Lou's typical reaction to ceremonial writing (including obituaries) was to greet them either with disdain or with the bemused mockery of his beloved Mark Twain," Payne said.

Casimir led a committed life to both students and faculty.

"For years after his retirement, he could be met on the porch of Cafe Latte by many of his former students and colleagues who remembered well his daily haunts and who sought him out there. During his final years, when cancer claimed his voice, he communicated, nevertheless, by the warmth of his personality and by what he could write on his clipboard," Payne said.

Casimir's life was full of innovative accomplishments and will be missed by the University.

The following is what Casimir wanted published:

Louis J. Casimir Jr. bought the farm Thursday, Feb. 5, 2004, having lived more than twice as long as he had expected and probably three or four times as long as he deserved.

Although he was born into an impecunious family, in a backward and benighted part of the country at the beginning of the Great Depression, he never in his life suffered any real hardships.

Many of his childhood friends who weren't killed or maimed in various wars became petty criminals, prostitutes, and/or Republicans.

He survived three years overseas in an infantry regiment in excellent health, then university for four years on the GI bill, and never thereafter had to do an honest day's work.

He was loved by good women, had loyal friends, and all his children were healthy, handsome and bright.

For more than six decades, he smoked, drank and ate lots of animal fat, but never had a serious illness or injury.

His last wish was that everyone could be as lucky as he had been, even through his demise was probably iatrogenic.

He was preceded in death by his wife of 43 years, Judy.

He is survived by his brother Jack of Houston, Texas; and his children, Randall Kent of Brunswick, Ga., Louis John III (Trey) of Lewisburg, Thomas Bettis of Lewisburg and Edith Austin Wheat of Austin, Texas.

Lou was a daredevil: his last words were "Watch this!"

A memorial service and barbecue will be held on Labor Day at Lou's place.

Donations may be made in Lou's memory to the Union County Public Library, 205 Reitz Blvd., Lewisburg, PA 17837.

Funeral arrangements were by Shaw Funeral Home, Milton.

Editor's note: This obituary was provided by the family.

Courtesy of Office of Communications

Wayne E. Manning

By JULIE LESKO
News Editor

Wayne E. Manning, University botany professor emeritus, passed away on Sunday at the age of 104.

Manning was born April 12, 1899 in Toledo, Ohio, and according to long-time friend and colleague Professor of Biology Warren Abrahamson, "enjoyed roaming the nearby woodlands to study birds, moths and mushrooms."

Manning's passion for botany was evident at a young age when he and four others formed a nature club. He began his University career in 1945, and up until his retirement in 1968, Manning developed a living plant collection of over 400 species for the University. This collection is housed in the Biology building's greenhouse. During his retirement, Manning served as a guide to visitors at the greenhouse.

Manning and his students developed the Wayne E. Manning Herbarium, the University's preserved plant collection of over 22,000 specimens.

Abrahamson witnessed the personal connection Manning made with students.

"He was known as the professor who took students under his wings and guiding many to careers in the sciences and health professions," Abrahamson said.

The guidance offered by Manning emulated the ideal relationship between educator and student.

"Wayne was one of the Bucknell faculty members whose example became our 'Teacher-Scholar' model," Abrahamson said.

Manning's students were inspired by his dedication to his field.

"I wanted to be just like him 'when I grow up.' He was a vibrant but low-key teacher who was able to instill his love of his subject to his students. As my favorite teacher, there will always be a part of my heart that is just for him," said Julie Smith '47, a professor of women's studies at Gettysburg College.

Smith was the first University student to enter Manning's classroom when he arrived from Smith College in the summer of 1945.

"Wayne's ability to share his love of botany inspired a generation of students. An internationally recognized scholar—his research and over 40 publications on the walnut and hickory family remain as seminal works on the anatomy and taxonomy of this family," Abrahamson said.

Manning's contributions to botany were also honored by a walnut species named in his honor—Alfarao manningii.

"At his 100th birthday dinner given for him at Bucknell, my husband ... and I were able to visit with him, and despite the difficulty of making myself heard above the crowd, I know that I was able to assure him that his inspired teaching helped shape how I see the world," Smith said.

Donations in memory of Manning may be made to the Wayne and Margaret Manning Internship in the Botanical Sciences. Manning and his wife, Peg, established the internship in 1992 for student research in botany. Donations can also be made to Beaver Memorial United Methodist Church or to a charity of your choice.

"He was a remarkable man, and I was privileged to be one of his students. His passing saddens me, but he certainly lived a full life," Smith said.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Kerry sweeps five more primaries

Clark quits contest after disappointing third in Virginia and Tennessee

By PETER HACKEMAN
Senior Editor

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) won the Virginia and Tennessee primaries Tuesday, capping a successful week after winning the Michigan and Washington caucuses Saturday and the Maine caucus Sunday. Gen. Wesley Clark conceded defeat Tuesday night and ended his presidential campaign after third-place showings in both Tuesday primaries.

Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) came in second in Virginia and Tennessee and immediately focused his attention on Wisconsin, which votes on Tuesday. Waiting in Wisconsin is former Vermont Governor Howard Dean, who failed to win over the weekend and skipped the Southern primaries to get an early start in the Badger State.

Kerry won about half the vote in each state, while Edwards received 27 percent of the vote in each state and Clark was in the low 20s in Tennessee and single digits in Virginia.

Kerry savored victory in Virginia on Tuesday night and continued to look beyond the primary season to a match-up with U.S. President George W. Bush.

"People want change in the country. They want to move forward in a new direction, and I think I'm articulating what that new direction can be," Kerry said.

Courtesy of Reuters

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) points to supporters at a rally in Memphis, Tenn. Kerry won primaries in Tennessee and Virginia on Tuesday, and in Washington, Maine and Michigan earlier in the week. He has lost only two elections of the fourteen thus far.

Clark officially withdrew Wednesday afternoon at a press conference in his hometown of Little Rock, Arkansas.

"This is the end of the campaign for the presidency. ... It's not the end of the cause, because the real cause is the campaign for the future of America," Clark said, according to The Washington Post.

Kerry's success can be attributed to the momentum he gained after come-from-behind wins in Iowa and New Hampshire and his ability to project the image of a winner. Kerry won overwhelming majorities Tuesday among voters who listed electability as their most important factor.

Kerry intends to visit Nevada, which along with Washington, D.C., votes tomorrow, before moving on to Wisconsin.

Dean hopes to capitalize on Wisconsin's history of supporting progressive candidates and outsiders. His campaign anointed Wisconsin as a must-win for Dean in a fundraising e-mail last week, but Dean has since said that he intends to stay in the race until at least March 2, when California, New York, and many other states have primaries. On that day, commonly referred to as Super Tuesday, more delegates will be up for grabs than on any other day during the nomination contest.

Dean has a long way to go if he is going to win Wisconsin. The latest poll, conducted by the Market Shares Corporation for a local Wisconsin newspaper, places Dean tied with Clark for second at 13 percent, while Edwards trailed with 9 percent and Kerry with a comfortable lead at 45 percent.

That hill may have become steeper, as Kerry received the endorsements of two prominent members of the Wisconsin congressional delegation, Sen. Herb Kohl and Rep. David Obey, both Democrats.

Harvard student newspaper breaks national news

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) gave an interview to The Harvard Crimson shortly after returning from Vietnam.

"I'd like to see our troops dispersed through the world only at the directive of the United Nations," Kerry said in the interview.

Kerry was running for the Democratic nomination to Congress at the time and was interviewed by Samuel Goldhaber, Harvard Class of 1972.

"We lived, dreamed and breathed Vietnam!" Goldhaber said, according to The Harvard Crimson.

The Harvard Crimson staff writer Zachary Seward covered the interview in the Wednesday edition of the student paper.

"I was researching for a story I was writing about the New Hampshire primary and came across the interviews with Kerry going back to 1970," Seward said.

Seward contacted the Kerry campaign to ask for comment, but the campaign didn't comment for his story. Within hours of publication, the story was dominating the national political media story.

"When it first was recognized, it was by the Drudge Report, which was unsettling. It was the third story in The Crimson, which shows the importance we put on it. Once you put it out there, anyone can give it the significance they attach to it," Seward said.

"My inbox was flooded with emails from conservatives saying 'good job' and liberals saying 'how could you?' Certainly the agenda here wasn't to be anti-Kerry," Seward said.

BSG announces '05 executive council

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

The new Bucknell Student Government (BSG) executive officers for the Class of 2005 were announced on Monday, three days after the special elections held last Friday.

Dave Caribardi was elected president, defeating Adam Ahuja. Joe Pullano won vice president over Taylor Harchak, and Courtney Homan beat Jaclyn Piposar to become secretary/treasurer.

All three new officers have held leadership positions on campus—all in Greek organizations, as well as among other groups—but Caribardi and Homan are newcomers to BSG, while Pullano has served for two years in the 2005 Class Congress.

All three new officers have stated their intentions to make BSG more accessible and responsive to the student body, especially in respect to alcohol policy. Homan also wants to focus on streamlining the club funding process, and Caribardi is determined to ensure high-quality events specifically for the Class of 2005. Issues of interest include Senior Night, Commencement and a class trip, along with fundraising this semester to help support it all.

"Joe has been really good about getting us up to speed on what BSG has been talking about," said Caribardi. "Now we're getting ready to stop talking, stop sitting on our hands, and do something about it."

Along with the three class executive offices, five of the eight positions in the 2005 Class Congress were vacant at the start of the semester. Of these eight offices, three were abandoned by the current BSG executive officers when they won their seats at the end of last year, and another five by juniors who left to study abroad.

Friday's elections did not involve the vacant Congress seats. Instead, the three remaining members of Congress (Pullano, Ahuja and Piposar, all of whom were themselves running for executive office) served as an "election council," which interviewed the 10 applicants for Congress and chose the new representatives among themselves. Since Pullano was the only one to win an executive position on Friday, one more position was opened to the applicants.

David Laross—The Bucknellian

David Caribardi was elected junior class president in last Friday's special election. The new executives began their terms quickly, working on recommendations for the alcohol policy over the past week.

Although the election council chose the six new representatives last weekend, BSG has not released their names yet. Bylaws require that new Congress representatives be confirmed at a full meeting, and discussion was so involved this week that there was no opportunity to hold the vote at Sunday's meeting.

"So much time was spent talking about the alcohol policy that we never got to it," BSG Vice President of Operations Duff Weber said.

The new Congress members are still functioning as BSG officers, even though their positions are still officially empty.

"They were there and they were talking, but they're just not confirmed yet," Weber said.

Commentary: Politics is more than a game

By CHRIS STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

When baseball season comes around we go to our closets and dig out that Cubs jersey from last year, find that old baseball mitt and throw baseballs around. During football season, we paint our faces in our team's colors and order ridiculous amounts of food to get us through each week's big game. Most Americans know how to prepare for their favorite sports seasons, but what exactly do we do when we hit the "political season?"

In Monday's NBC "Meet the Press" interview, U.S. President George W. Bush officially declared this time of year to be the "political season." For those wondering where to begin in preparation for this season, here are some important tips that will help you get into the game.

First, pick a team. Politics.com lists almost sixty different teams to choose from—almost the same number of options in pro baseball and football combined.

With so many options, there really should be a team for everyone to join, but the best bet is to join one of the major teams—the Democrats or Republicans.

Picking either of these teams almost guarantees you will see your team in the championship—the election. If you want to take a chance on another team, it promises to be very exciting, but you have to do more than watch the game if you want your team to win.

Once you have your team, find some memorabilia. In the past, pulling out buttons, flags and bumper stickers was a great way to show your support. You used to be able to find this gear at parades, with bands and parties that heralded the team's arrival. Things have grown much simpler—you can just go to your closet and put on your favorite suit and pick a red, blue, white or green tie to show your support.

For the real die-hards, a pair of elephant print socks or donkey print boxers might be a nice touch, especially for a big fan of one of the main teams. It is important to pay attention to your team colors and mascot—you do not want to send people mixed messages about which team you might support.

Now you are almost set for the pre-season, but no sports season would be good without picking an appropriate snack. For the "political season," pizza or subs just won't cut it. The snack you need for the "political season" is anything that costs $1,000 or more. Big names in this game do not come cheap.

Now that we are all prepared, it is time for training camp. Not everyone can be the MVP, and as "political season" gets underway coaches have to decide who to cut. For the Democrats, this will be a difficult decision. Many players would serve the party well, but what is going to matter most is which candidate has the best chance of beating the team's rival, George W. Bush of the Republicans.

There has been a lot of fighting within the Democrats, and so far four candidates have dropped out, leaving six contending for the main position. Democrats have been doing a lot of mud-slinging, and Former Vt. Governor Howard Dean is nearly covered with it. Kerry has managed to keep himself fairly clean. Kerry has not completely run away with the solo spot, but he has distanced himself well from the rest of the competition.

Once the mud-slinging is almost out of control, the melee is one step away from full swing. Before opening day we see in some preseason matchups how effective all the candidates are. This "political season," a key pre-season matchup is over the issue of U.S. intelligence in Iraq.

Bush set the tone and according to CNN.com tried to justify his move in Iraq.

"I based my decision on the best intelligence possible, intelligence that had been gathered over the years, intelligence that not only our analysts thought was valid but analysts from other countries thought were valid," Bush said.

out, leaving six contending for the main position. Democrats have been doing a lot of mud-slinging, and Former Vt. Governor Howard Dean is nearly covered with it. Kerry has managed to keep himself fairly clean. Kerry has not completely run away with the solo spot, but he has distanced himself well from the rest of the competition.

Once the mud-slinging is almost out of control, the melee is one step away from full swing. Before opening day we see in some preseason matchups how effective all the candidates are. This "political season," a key pre-season matchup is over the issue of U.S. intelligence in Iraq.

Bush set the tone and according to CNN.com tried to justify his move in Iraq.

"I based my decision on the best intelligence possible, intelligence that had been gathered over the years, intelligence that not only our analysts thought was valid but analysts from other countries thought were valid," Bush said.

The snack you need for the "political season" is anything that costs $1,000 or more. Big names in this game do not come cheap.

Kerry told a crowd of his supporters in Virginia, "This morning on 'Meet the Press,' President Bush said that his decision to go to war with Iraq when he did was because Saddam Hussein had, quote, 'the ability to make weapons.' This is a far cry from what the President and his administration told the American people throughout 2004," reported CNN.com.

Kerry's competitor, Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) also weighed in against the President on equal access to intelligence information.

"I'm not certain that is true. I know the president of the United States receives a different set of information than we receive on the Senate Intelligence Committee, and he receives more information, which he should," said Edwards to CNN.com.

Even Gore made a statement supporting his party members in preparation for the big game.

"He [Bush] took America on an ill-conceived foreign adventure, dangerous to our troops, that was preordained and planned before 9-11," Gore said, reported CNN.com.

Despite a vigorous pre-season so far, Bush said in his NBC "Meet the Press" interview that he doesn't plan on losing.

The "political season" is now underway and with team picked, tie chosen, and a $1,000 per plate dinner ticket in hand, it will be interesting to see how the season plays out and who wins this year's November competition. No race would be complete without its supporters and neither team will go very far unless their fans stick together and give their support.

Totem Tatoo

Area's Finest Custom Tatoo and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
—State of the Art Body Jewelry—

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

Mya's Coffee House

Delicious Hot Chocolate available with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included.
Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe one way $169.
Book Online
www.aireach.com
or 212-219-7000

Dugwood Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
For Gifts
Unique Accessories
430 Market Street,
Lewisburg
524-7930

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Monday's - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net
for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-9100 for directions

Opinions

THE Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 3
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Salemme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sanchi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackeman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editors
Julie Lesko '07
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Keeley Sidow '07

Business & Politics Editors
Chris Stevens '05
David LaRosa '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwitz '06
Teri Schlang '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Emory Strother '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Marketing Director
Joseph Giordano '05

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Administration must maintain consistency

In its decision to cancel James Brown's performance at Chrysalis, the University of Bucknell Student Government administration had a difficult choice to make. The administration impulsively reacted to Brown's arrest by canceling its contract with him, but this decision was based solely on the timeliness of Brown's arrest, which took place a few days before Brown's appearance was officially announced to students.

While the administration should not be criticized for making a moral decision, it must be consistent with its actions. Brown had a record of abuse and battery, and the University should have considered his moral character before signing a contract with him. The moral character of many past performers has been questionable, and yet the University still supported their performances. While more than 75 percent of students polled by Bucknell Student Government said they wanted Brown to play at Chrysalis, the administration chose the lesser of two evils by deciding to cancel Brown's contract. The administration must undoubtedly listen to student input more often regarding important policy decisions, and perhaps if a forum was held to discuss the pros and cons of keeping the contract with Brown, students would be able to understand the rationale for the administration's decision.

However, students cannot expect the administration to keep a contract with a person who appears in the news as someone who abuses women.

Many students are concerned that the University could become blacklisted by the William Morris Agency. This agency represents Brown as well as hundreds of other bands such as Howie Day, who has performed at the University several times. While it has not been confirmed that we are indeed blacklisted, many believe it is likely the agency will not want to do business with the University in the future.

If we are blacklisted, it is unfortunate that in our time at the University we may never see certain bands. However, there is an extraordinary number of bands and artists not included on the agency's list that are likely willing to perform here.

While students are upset that Brown will not perform at Chrysalis, the Chrysalis Committee is working on signing a contract with someone just as well-known as Brown.

Rather than worry about the cancellation of Brown's performance, there are more important issues with which students should be concerned, such as the presidential search and the recent 5.8 percent tuition increase. These are the issues that will significantly affect students

Constitution has no right to dictate morality

By JAKE PALLEY
Writer

As with every other aspect of my daily life, I have once again been inspired by "The Simpsons." So please excuse any possible copyright infringements as I recap the show in which Homer takes on prohibition:

Homer manages to outwit prohibition magnate Rex Banner, ducks are legally required to wear pants, and Moe's Tavern converts to a pet shop/speakeasy filled with "rambunctious yahooks and hot jazz music" until 1 a.m.

The minute we use the Constitution as a divisive political weapon to take away an individual's freedoms goes against its very spirit.

At the end of the show, Homer toasts to alcohol, and declares, "To beer! The cause of and solution to all of life's problems."

It is a downright hilarious episode. It is also a great critique of modern America. It even speaks to the University's own alcohol-fueled woes, which proves one thing—the booze will keep on flowing like it is water.

After all, if we base real life on that one "Simpsons" episode, prohibition is not around to stay. That is how it was in the 1920s, too—the 18th Constitutional amendment upheld Prohibition, but it ultimately proved to be far too unpopular to be anything long-lasting and was repealed in 1933 with the 21st Amendment.

As it turns out, the 18th Amendment was a product of its time. The U.S. Progressive movement was at its peak, and "progressives" nationwide pushed an agenda of morality that ultimately resulted in the 18th amendment.

As the 18th Amendment was despised by every beer-loving American in the country, it also serves as a very interesting point—the Constitution of the United States cannot legislate morality.

Our Constitution has set forth a Bill of Rights that all citizens can embrace, and in many ways it underpins and composes the very fabric of this great country, thereby transcending morality.

Even though the Constitution is obviously political in its character, it states fundamental, fair and impartial principles that everyone can abide by.

The fact that the Constitution grants freedoms to individuals speaks to its great strength and character. The minute we use the Constitution as a divisive political weapon to take away an individual's freedoms goes against its very spirit. A Constitution divided against itself cannot stand.

We must adapt to the new reality that no homosexual should be discriminated against in their own pursuit of happiness.

In this very roundabout way, I want to make this point—an amendment that bans gay marriage has no place in our Constitution. How can U.S. Vice President Dick Cheney tell the nation he supports a Constitutional ban on gay marriage when his own daughter is openly gay?

Further, erasing the right to gay marriage is erasing one's right to freedom of religion because marriage is tightly wound up with religion, as well as one's interpretation of it.

U.S. homosexuals of all faiths do exist, and their rights must not be impinged upon because of their beliefs. Surely this would be outright discrimination against a minority group, and this would be no more justified than the Constitution's infamous "3/5 clause," which declared African Americans to be 3/5 of a person.

Even conservative Republican Ben Stein during his recent visit to the University freely admitted that one of his best friends is gay, that he has nothing against gay people and that a constitutional ban on gay marriage would be immoral.

In a recent article, The New York Times reported on a pair of gay penguins who, after given an egg, raised the baby penguin. In fact, this homosexual behavior is anything but abnormal, as scientists found that 10 to 15 percent of species of birds participate in homosexual behavior. Dolphins do it, too, and so do monkeys.

Homosexuality does not seem to be based on deviant, immoral behavior that is pure evil. Homosexuality does not seem to be predicated on a society that has gone totally off its rocker.

Instead, homosexuality seems to be a perfectly natural behavior that should, at the very least, be tolerated by civil society. Legislating morality by eliminating gay marriage is wrong, and can only amount to a gross violation of human rights.

As "The Simpsons" say, "keep on reaching for that rainbow." But as recent events show, gay America is here and queer, and we must adapt to the new reality that no homosexuals should be discriminated against in their pursuit of happiness.

An in-depth look at global warming and its causes

By MARTIN WADE
Contributing Writer

Global temperature change is a big deal. Not many people can effectively argue against this statement. Anyone objectively concerned about global warming will often ask, "Is the sky falling, or isn't it?"

Politics aside, it might be instructive to examine the wealth of scientific data on the subject before forming a strong opinion about global warming.

Over the past century, the world has warmed 0.4 to 0.8 degrees Celsius. It may not sound like a big change, but it is. The question is, why has the earth warmed?

There are several possibilities. Many scientists feel that carbon dioxide emissions from human activity are responsible. Other scientists blame natural phenomena. Both sides have their reasons, and both claim that their conclusions are scientifically grounded. So, what does the science say?

At the forefront of global warming research is the government body, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA). Based on evidence gathered from reconstructing past global climate conditions, NOAA has determined that the earth is now warmer than it has been at any time in the last one thousand years.

Weather patterns also indicate that it was warmer between the 11th and 14th centuries than from the 15th and 19th centuries. In other words, it was warmer during the Middle Ages than between the Renaissance and the Emancipation Proclamation. At the start of the twentieth century, it suddenly warmed up again.

What could have caused the sudden rise in global temperature that began at the start of the last century? A common explanation among writers and scientists is that the earth's swift temperature rise coincided with the onset of the Industrial Revolution. This seems to make perfect sense. Dr. Antonio Busalacchi Jr., chair of the Climate Research Committee of the Board on Atmospheric Science and Climate, pointed out faults in such a connection that would prove otherwise according to the Center for the Study of Carbon Dioxide and Global Change.

He notes that the rapid warming of the Northern Hemisphere during the first part of the 20th century occurred well before the majority of carbon dioxide emission—before the revolution was in full swing.

He also notes that the globe began to cool during the mid-20th century, which was a period of rapid industrial growth. All such phenomena, Busalacchi said, clearly indicate that significant non-greenhouse forces were at work in increasing temperatures.

Since the question regards the effects of greenhouse gases, we should examine these effects. Greenhouse gases affect the layer of air one to five miles above the earth's surface. All human-made emissions rise to the higher greenhouse layer, and should cause it to warm. Warming would then cause a temperature rise on the earth's surface. This is the only way that human-induced global warming could happen.

Scientists have taken extensive atmospheric readings in the lower troposphere. All data models have conclusively shown that this layer of air is not warming. Scientists contend that if this region is not warming, then human-made emissions have had very little effect on the rising global temperature.

Both NASA and the NOAA conclude that the surface temperature must be warming due to other natural effects.

But what natural effects could cause swings in global climate? Data suggest that the solar activity of the sun plays a large role. Examining temperatures across a 1,000-year time scale, scientists have noticed that "warm" periods frequently correspond to periods of increased solar activity. Colder periods correspond to a decrease in solar activity and an increase in volcanic activity. In

Opinions

Happy birthday, Ronald Reagan

Celebrating Reagan's birthday reminds everyone of how much respect he deserves

By PETER HACKEMAN
Senior Editor

This sentiment may come as a surprise to many who have read my writing, heard me speak or engaged me in political discourse. I once said I respected the current President Bush and have yet to hear the end of it from one liberal friend.

I meant that I respected him as the holder of our nation's highest office. It's in opinion that I believe we should all hold in almost all cases and I hope that is one that becomes more common, no matter which party holds the office.

It is with that background I write today, to wish a belated birthday to our 10th President, Ronald Reagan. The effects of Alzheimer's have taken their toll on Reagan and I fear he is not able to fully understand and celebrate the occasion. I know that many members of his family and those he has worked with closely are marking the occasion; I hope to reach both those who revere Reagan and those who feel quite the opposite.

Reagan was only half right in my book. He saw the good in the American people but did too little to help them achieve all they could. He saw opportunity as the chance all Americans deserved, but did too little to make sure that opportunity was available to all members of our society.

He famously told us that government did not solve our problems, it only subsidized them. Reagan thought government was the problem. Sometimes it is, but more often, government can also be part of the solution.

Reagan was right that you cannot just throw money at a problem. But there rarely are problems that can be solved without one of the most fundamental resources.

He was right that freedom is the quintessential American principle. It is at the heart of all that we were, are and forever will be. But Reagan paid far too little attention to equality and fairness, and he supported too many dictators and tyrants who did not value freedom at all.

He criticized student activists. He supported Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Harry Truman before becoming a Republican. He had a temper and once told a heckler, "Aw, shut up," during a campaign stop. He had more in common with Howard Dean than his supporters—or Dean's, for that matter—would ever like to admit.

He was an optimist. We have far too few of them these days, on either side of the political spectrum. This sentiment is so important, I would think it should be a requirement for running for president. Sometimes, the president is the consoler-in-chief, the cheerleader-in-chief, the motivator-in-chief.

He was tough. He threatened the terrorists of his day and demanded the Berlin Wall be removed. He went so far as to make the demand personal and the line still makes me proud to be an American.

He made great mistakes. The Iran-contra affair comes to mind first. He either lied to us or did not "know what was going on in his White House, but regardless, either possibility is disturbing and is a violation of the trust we instill in our leaders.

He fabricated a story about a welfare queen driving an expensive car after scamming the social service systems. It was a simple, symbolic way to illustrate his belief that the safety net, expanded under former Lyndon Johnson, had gone too far.

His economic program was "Voodoo economics," as his vice president said when they were rivals for the Republican nomination. He ran up huge deficits without stimulating the economy.

I honestly believe he made many of his mistakes in misguided, ill-timed and ideologically driven ventures.

In spite of all these faults and flaws, he was and is a respectable man. He saw our country differently than I do: he saw different problems, proscribed different solutions and had different values. But he loved his family and he loved his country and he devoted his life to those two groups of people.

When I am old and my time has passed, I hope that no matter what disagreement people have with his politics or the other details of my life, they can look at my life and say the same thing.

Don't be afraid to live in the moment

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Take college seriously—much of your life depends on it. You might wake up one morning and wonder what on earth you've been doing for the past four years. If you want a job, want a family or want to eat, you will need that degree. You will need that high GPA and that sparkling resume.

If you want to excel in this system, you have to force yourself to function in it. If you want to survive in the clichéd "real world," you must be, on some level, a machine.

But do not get too sucked in. Don't reduce yourself to a monotonous, one-dimensional something who sleeps in Dana Engineering or in Bertrand Library mezzanine.

There is something out there that is better than Harvard, more remunerative than Wall Street and certainly much more fun than biochemistry—it is called living in the moment.

If you do anything on a semi-regular basis apart from the necessities of life, put down the textbooks and do something else. If even for an hour every other night, read a novel that was not assigned to you, shoot hoops at the gym, or blow something off for something else you would rather do right now. Step out of line.

While college students typically carry the weight of responsibility for their own futures on their shoulders, it is likely that we bear the lightest burdens now than we ever will for the rest of our lives.

Ten years down the road, skipping work could cost us a paycheck and possibly a job. We will have spouses and children who will depend on us, and bills and mortgage payments.

If you stay out late Wednesday and force yourself to finish a problem set at lunch the next day, it could affect your grades. Still, it will not be the end of the world.

In short, we will have responsibilities greater than we can even imagine at this stage in our lives. This is not to say that adult life will not be fruitful—surely, we will adjust. But now is a precious time.

Conservative's Club wrongly satirizes "The Vagina Monologues"

By JOSH FISHER
Senior Writer

Mid-February is upon us again, the time of year marked by stinging winds and oppressive cold. But let us not forget Valentine's Day, which will no doubt warm each one of our hearts, and be accompanied by—you got it, "The Penis Monologues."

"The Penis Monologues" is that fatuously disingenuous piece that appears every year in The Counterweight, the newspaper of Bucknell University's Conservatives Club (BUCC).

This piece is a direct reaction to the national V-Day movement, "The Vagina Monologues," a play written by Eve Ensler dedicated to stopping violence against women.

The only thing to which "The Penis Monologues" is dedicated is making sure everyone who comes across the piece understands the club's outrage at the vulgarity contained within "The Vagina Monologues" by getting another big taste of (conservative) vulgarity.

Let us pause here for a moment and notice how I use the words "a direct reaction to" and not the somewhat more direct and potent word "satire." I used that word because many writers for The Counterweight have not yet earned the meaning of satire.

If you argue that "The Penis Monologues" is indeed satire, you must admit that the article in the most recent Catalyst titled, "Why the Right Hates Americans," (which was written as a satire of a BUCC lecture, "Why the Left Hates America") is also satire.

Ironically, The Catalyst, which is the Bucknell Caucus for Economic Justice's newsletter, received a number of angry, vitriolic letters.

The complaints asserted that the article was full of stereotypes of conservatives, that conservatives do not support slavery and that it is ridiculous to say otherwise.

Of course it is ridiculous to say conservatives support slavery. That was the whole point, just as it is ridiculous to say the entirety of the political left hates America.

The Catalyst article was satirizing our collective tendency to create stereotypes of people based on their political orientation, their race, or even on their gender.

"The Penis Monologues" is a result of people not taking the time to think out these cultural categories that we construct and acting on a knee-jerk reaction. It is simply a bland reaction—with some somewhat humorous imagery—to the vulgarity of "The Vagina Monologues."

Why else was V-Day listed under the "Jokes" section on the BUCC Web site until recently if the issue was not considered a joke to the group? (It was taken out of that section in a wise and well thought out decision by Charles Mitchell '05, BUCC president.)

"The Vagina Monologues" is art. It is art because it is sometimes offensive to our tastes, it is sometimes raw and it is sometimes vulgar. But those things are its power.

So what is "The Penis Monologues" satirizing? Man-hating feminism? No, because that is not what "The Vagina Monologues" is about.

Our own political entrenchment such that we cannot see when something is in fact apolitical, a deeper human condition? Perhaps.

Do you know what is vulgar? Homelessness is vulgar. The fact that people are starving in Third World countries is vulgar. Cutting down the rainforest at alarming rates is vulgar. Chemical and nuclear weapons are vulgar. Clubbing baby seals is vulgar. And rape is pretty vulgar.

As long as there are still people who are homeless, starving, cutting down the rainforest, creating nuclear weapons and clubbing baby seals, all I see is a bunch of people sitting back and laughing and doing nothing about it. Now that is vulgarity.

The many faces of kissing

By MARLEE SAYEN
Contributing Writer

With Valentine's Day just hours away, people are scurrying about, planning their special evenings with their sweethearts. But year after year, they fail to direct their attention to the most intimate aspect of the night—the kiss.

A kiss is a kiss ... or is it? What distinguishes one kiss in meaning from the next? Simply put, a lot does.

To even attempt the subject, we must begin with a seemingly simple question: What is in a kiss? Where some are bursts of passion, others are hormonal outbursts. Those types of kisses cannot remain suppressed for too long or else they may result in an explosion of unstrained lust.

Many times, kisses are disregarded and not considered monumental events they should be. Kissing is an art, and the romantic idea surrounding it is a dying one.

I know that I would be taken aback if a gentleman were to greet me, and upon our introduction kiss my hand. This type of chivalry is rarely seen, and it is a large loss for our culture.

Thankfully, there is still a variety of other types of kisses. There is the kiss on the forehead, a sign of affection and respect; the kiss on the cheek, which is exhibited in a variety of ways; and the love and passion of the kiss on the lips.

Kissing is an art, and the romantic idea surrounding it is a dying one.

Many of these kisses cause great confusion upon their execution. Consider a kiss on the cheek: In America, we have a single kiss on the cheek, often followed by a hug. In England, the routine is "kiss, kiss," planting one upon each cheek. In some other European cultures, there are as many as four kisses.

This variety can cause confusion and nose-bumping incidents due to a misunderstanding of one's personal pecking preference.

One main cause of the drain of romance and intimacy involved in a kiss is due to Hollywood. Modern movies and TV shows that contain sexual scenes are almost painful to watch.

Where the soft kiss of Cary Grant once had women woo-

Clearly we need to return to the Cary Grant ways—the old-fashioned die-hard romantic kiss.

ing over his gentlemanly behavior and ability to restrain his desires, we see a different scene today. Kisses in films recently have been dismal and grotesque to watch, filled with fish lips, excessive saliva, swallowing and slurs.

Clearly we need to return to the Cary Grant ways—the old-fashioned die-hard romantic kiss. My personal favorite? The kiss blown across the room, open to a variety of interpretations depending upon its landing.

Regardless of the kind, a kiss is essential to sending those stomach butterflies to flight. After all, who doesn't want to be kissed?

FEATURES

Love, romance,

Girls

Looking for the perfect movie to watch with that "special someone" on Valentine's Day? A romantic comedy, a tear-jerker, or even a Disney love story? The following are movies from several genres that will make great Valentine's Day flicks, suggested by both male and female University students. The synopses of each movie were courtesy of rottentomatoes.com, in order to make it easier to decide which film is right for you and that special guy or girl!

Guys

1. "Lady and the Tramp"

Starring the voices of Larry Roberts, Barbara Luddy and Peggy Lee

Lady, a young cocker spaniel from a respectable home, falls in love with Tramp, a mutt who lives in the railroad yards. They enjoy several outings together, including a memorable spaghetti dinner by moonlight at Tony's. Their relationship is strained not only by Lady's loyalty to her human family and their newborn baby, but by Tramp's devil-may-care attitude that at one point gets Lady thrown in the dog pound.

—Suggested by Dan Maio '07

Courtesy of disney.com

2. "Harold and Maude"

Starring Ruth Gordon and Bud Cort

Harold is a depressed, death-obsessed 20-year-old man-child who spends his free time attending funerals and staging fake suicides in front of his mother. At a funeral, Harold befriends Maude, a 79-year-old woman who has a zest for life. She and Harold spend much time together during which she exposes him to the wonders and possibilities of life. After rejecting his mother's three attempts to set him up with a potential wife, and committing fake suicide in front of all of them, Harold announces that he is to be married to Maude. However, Maude has a surprise for Harold that is to change his life forever.

—Suggested by Louis McLane '06

Courtesy of Paramount

3. "Armageddon"

Starring Bruce Willis, Billy Bob Thornton, Ben Affleck and Liv Tyler

An asteroid the size of Texas is heading directly toward earth, and NASA's executive director, Dan Truman, has only one option—to send up a crew to destroy the asteroid. He enlists the help of Harry S. Stamper—the world's foremost deep core oil driller—and Stamper's roughneck team of drillers to save the world from Armageddon. On this heroic journey, they face the most physically and emotionally challenging conditions they will encounter.

—Suggested by Kevin Walsh '04

Courtesy of village.ignoweb.com

4. "How to Lose a Guy in 10 Days"

Starring Kate Hudson and Matthew McConaughey

Benjamin Barry is an advertising executive and ladies' man who, to win a big campaign, bets that he can make a woman fall in love with him in 10 days. Andie Anderson covers the "How To" beat for "Composure" magazine and is assigned to write an article on "How to Lose a Guy in 10 Days." They meet in a bar shortly after the bet is made, and the relationship is a wild ride for both.

—Suggested by Aaron Hanlon '04

5. "Serendipity"

Starring John Cusack and Kate Beckinsale

Jonathan Trager and Sara Thomas met while shopping for gloves in New York. Though buying the gloves for their respective lovers, the magic was right and a night of Christmas shopping turned into romance. Jon wanted to explore things further but Sara wasn't sure their love was meant to be. They decided to test fate by splitting up and seeing if destiny brought them back together. Many years after having lost each other that night, both are engaged to be married. Still, neither can shake the need to give fate one last chance to reunite them.

—Suggested by Adam Gasiewicz '07

6. "Down with Love"

Starring Rene Zellweger and Ewan McGregor

Aaaaah... it's New York City in 1963, and love is blooming between a journalist, Catcher Block and a feminist advice author Barbara Novak, who is falling head over heels despite her beat's playboy lifestyle. He blows her off at every opportunity to cuddle with flight attendants; however, when Novak's book is a complete success, Catcher finds himself being blown off by her! So he starts to write an expose and disguises himself as a naive astronaut named Zip Martin. But he can't imagine what happens next!

—Suggested by Nathaniel Hoover '07

1. "Gone With the Wind"

Starring Clark Gable, Vivian Leigh and Olivia de Havilland

Hot-tempered, self-centered part-Irish Southern beauty Scarlett O'Hara, played to the teeth by Vivian Leigh, loves the gentlemanly Ashley Wilkes. Smug, rebellious, honest blockade-running profiteer Rhett Butler, portrayed gracefully and naturally by Clark Gable, loves Scarlett. Ashley, who is also in love with Scarlett, marries his genteel cousin Melanie because he believes that their quiet similarities will create a better marriage than Scarlett's passion. Meanwhile, sparks fly between Rhett and Scarlett at their first encounter and continue throughout Scarlett's first two marriages. Scarlett and Rhett finally wed, but Scarlett continues to pine for her beloved Ashley. Set against the backdrop of the Civil War and Southern Reconstruction, this tragic love quadrangle offers the burning of Atlanta and fields of wounded Confederates as part of its lush scenery.

—Suggested by Catherine Trentacoste '07

Courtesy of filmsite.org

2. "The Princess Bride"

Starring Cary Elwes, Robin Wright, Andre the Giant, Mandy Patinkin, and Billy Crystal

The lovely Buttercup learns that "As you wish" really means "I love you" when she falls for her charming farmhand, Westley. While trying to seek his fortune, however, Westley disappears at sea, an apparent victim of the Dread Pirate Roberts, who takes no prisoners. A few years later, Buttercup, engaged to the oily Prince Humperdinck, is kidnapped by an oddball trio of rogues—brains, Vizzini; brawn, Fezzik; and sword, Inigo Montoya. As they sail away toward the Cliffs of Insanity, they notice the pursuit of a man in black... and the adventure begins. A clever fairy tale for all ages, "The Princess Bride" is arguably one of the funniest and most entertaining films of all time.

—Suggested by Katy Simison '07

Courtesy of mgm.com

3. "Romeo and Juliet"

Starring Leonardo DiCaprio, Claire Danes, Miriam Margulies and Paul Rudd

This ambitious undertaking places William Shakespeare's classic tale of star-cross'd lovers in modern day (1996) Florida with a glossy music video style. Leonardo DiCaprio and Claire Danes play the eponymous lovers kept apart by rival industrialist families. Bookended by newscasters reciting Shakespeare's prose as their copy, this clever glam updating of Romeo and Juliet is one of the most unusual adaptations of the Bard's work in the history of cinema.

—Suggested by Lauren Saville '07

Courtesy of romeojuliet.com

4. "Love Actually"

Starring Hugh Grant, Liam Neeson, Colin Firth, Laura Linney and Emma Thompson

Love Actually follows the lives of eight very different couples in dealing with their love lives in various loosely and interrelated tales all set during a frantic week before Christmas in London, England. The characters are falling in love, falling out of love, some are with right people, some are with the wrong people, some are looking to have an affair, some are in the period of mourning, a capsule summary of reality. Love begins and love ends. They flirt a lot; they are all flirting with love. At all ages and social levels, love is the theme. Romantic love and brotherly love is the hotchpotch through out the movie.

—Suggested by Katie Morrell '04

5. "Pretty Woman"

Starring Julia Roberts, Richard Gere, Jason Alexander and Hector Elizondo

While driving back to his Beverly Hills hotel, millionaire corporate raider Edward Lewis takes a wrong turn and ends up on Hollywood Boulevard, where he meets prostitute Vivian Ward. She steers him back to his hotel, charming him along the way, and he decides to hire her for the rest of the evening. In the morning, Edward realizes that he could use an escort for the week, so he hands Vivian $3000 to stay — and sends her on a fantasy shopping spree. What begins as purely a business transaction develops into something more, but can a poor prostitute and a rich businessman really live happily ever after?

—Suggested by Sarah Groman '07

6. "When Harry Met Sally"

Starring Billy Crystal, Meg Ryan and Carrie Fisher

"When Harry Met Sally" tracks a star-crossed pair as they repeatedly drift apart and meet again over a span of 13 years and gradually fall madly, deeply, passionately into friendship, a friendship ever teetering on the edge of love. Harry meets Sally when they share a car ride to New York City upon graduation from the University of Chicago. A few minutes into the trip, the conversation between womanizing, neurotic Harry and driven, equally neurotic Sally becomes heatedly contentious. The question arises: Can a man and a woman be just friends? Harry contends this proposition is impossible, that sex will always come along to screw up the friendship. Sally is aghast and disagrees, proclaiming the idea a distinct possibility. The two part ways rather acrimoniously in New York but before long meet again and eventually decide to indeed be friends. As life's mysterious coincidences pull Harry and Sally closer together, they share mystical and tender moments, confess secrets to each other, console each other, attend major holidays together and do all the other things couples traditionally do. The question then reemerges: Can Harry and Sally remain mere friends, or will they—must they—fall in love?

—Suggested by Katherine St. Onge '07

—Compiled by Amy Wagner
Reviews courtesy of rottentomatoes.com

FEATURES

... and cheap dates Valentine's Day—a historical mystery

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Writer

Feb. 14, St. Valentine's Day, has always been the day of exchanging candy, flowers, cards and other gifts between loved ones. But have you ever given a thought to why it is called St. Valentine's Day, or how and why this day of love and romance began in the first place?

Although now this day is celebrated with hearts and gifts, the original St. Valentine's Day was completely different.

There are several different stories as to how it all started. One version begins during the time of the Roman Empire, as early as the fourth century B.C. The history of St. Valentine originates from Christian and Ancient Roman tradition.

St. Valentine was a priest who served the Roman Emperor Claudius II during the third century B.C. During that time, the Emperor outlawed engagement and marriage for young men, believing that single men made better soldiers for war.

Valentine, believing this was unjust and unfair, secretly continued to perform marriages for young lovers. Valentine's actions were discovered and he was arrested and sentenced to death by the Emperor.

Another story states that Valentine was killed for his attempts to help Christians escape the Roman prisons, where they were being tortured. Valentine was executed and martyred on Feb. 14, 270.

The legend states that Valentine sent the first "valentine" greeting himself. It is believed that he fell in love with a young girl who visited him often while he was in prison. Many stories indicate that she was the blind daughter of the jailor. The jailor requested for Valentine to cure his daughter's sight. Miraculously, Valentine was able to restore her vision.

Before his death, Valentine wrote a letter to this young girl, signing it, "From your Valentine," which explains the expression used on cards and gifts today. After Valentine's death, many men began to sign their greetings to admired maidens with "From your Valentine." The Valentine's Day card thrived with Christianity and has continued since Valentine's death until now, where it is recognized as part of our modern tradition.

During the time of the Roman Empire, the lives of boys and girls had different roles and places in society. A certain custom was celebrated every year joining Roman girls and boys. Feb. 14, was a holiday to honor Juno, the queen of the Roman gods and goddesses, before it was renamed to honor St.

Valentine.

On this day, girls' names were written on slips of paper and placed in jars. Each young man would draw a girl's name, and she became his date for the evening. Such a pairing would often lead to long-lasting romance and, in many cases, marriage. Believe it or not, choosing your valentine is not just a random custom that was created in modern times!

As you can see, the history behind the legend of St. Valentine's Day is quite mysterious and slightly dark, but it does emphasize the power of love. Valentine risked his life to help young lovers join together and even had a love of his own. Now that you have an understanding of the history of St. Valentine's Day, ask that special someone to be your "Valentine," and celebrate this day of love and romance.

Courtesy of ibiblio.org

Though no one is sure of the exact history of Valentine's Day, the true purpose is to honor the life of St. Valentine.

Another romantic edition brought to you by...

Ms.

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I went through a bad breakup last year. My ex-boyfriend really hurt me and it took me a long time to get over him. It has been a while since we split up, and I recently met someone new. I like this new guy a lot, but I am so scared of getting hurt again. I want to give him a chance, but I just don't know if I can handle another situation I might get hurt. What do you think I should do?

—S'

Dear 'S',

I understand exactly how you feel. I think that most people have experienced, at one time or another, a situation that has left them hurt, confused and afraid to love again. Even Ms. O has been hurt in her time. The emotions you are experiencing now are completely normal. Learning how to love and trust again are two of the hardest and scariest things to do once you have been hurt.

However, you can't live the rest of your life always holding yourself back and being afraid to love someone. You may get hurt sometimes, but you need to use those situations to learn about yourself and what you want out of your relationships. Each relationship will teach you something new and will help you to make better choices in the future.

As scary as this may sound, I would advise you to try putting yourself out there again. If you have found someone new you like, you should try to be excited and let go of the past. This new guy is not your old boyfriend. He is a different person and you should try not to compare him to your ex. Just because your ex hurt you does not mean that every boy you date will do the same. There is a wonderful guy who likes you. Be excited about that instead of afraid. Approach this new relationship with energy and optimism. Don't look for it to fall before it has even begun. Give this new guy a chance, and more importantly, give yourself a chance. Have courage! Be brave! Be strong! And dare to love again!

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What is the cheesiest gift you have ever received for Valentine's Day?

Photo courtesy of romantic.finalesimpsons.de

A special dinner is a nice, inexpensive way to treat your Valentine to an intimate night out. Although Marge and Homer Simpson enjoy expensive champagne and lobster, superfluous food pales in comparison to good company and engaging conversation.

FEATURES

Postcards from down under

By JOCELYN DAUTEL
Contributing Writer

Today, as I tramped through the snow to Bucknell's library to finish the mountain of reading that has accumulated over the past week, I was thinking about what I would be doing on a typical school day in Perth, Australia.

Would I be sitting on the beach, balancing a textbook and a "stubby" (an Australian bottle of beer)? Watching a "footy game" (Australian Rules Football, a rough combination of rugby and soccer) with my mates Benny, Scotty and Chucky? That was my college life half a world away that began last July when I flew into the Sydney International Airport.

After meeting my orientation group, I began my first Australian experience: a five-day trip into the immense Australian outback. Our plane flew into Alice Springs Airport, a paved strip and a small hut surrounded by a vast expanse of red sand. We took a bus to our campsite where we were taught how to avoid the thousands of deadly animals, including the Red Back spider and the King Brown snake, which are prominent in these areas.

We were told we would be sleeping on the ground, under the stars in "swags," (canvas bags that you climb in with your sleeping bag to keep the moisture out at night) but there should be "no worries" because it was winter and the deadly snakes would be hibernating underneath us.

Needless to say, none of us slept well that night. The rest of the trip went by quickly with many hot days of hiking, learning about Aboriginal culture and finally a stop at the largest rock in the world, Ayers Rock.

While this time in the outback was definitely a memorable experience, I was ready to fly to Perth where I could take a shower, unpack and settle in for the next five months.

Five months was so little time to explore the great lands "down under," but it was enough to create memories of good times and good mates.

Perth is a beautiful city located between the Swan River and the Indian Ocean. It is the only city on the west coast, separated from the rest of the country by the uninhabitable desert of the outback, which makes it the most isolated city in the world.

Because of its location, many tourists do not see the untouched beaches and natural reefs of this area, making it all the more exciting for me to have the opportunity to see them.

After a week of exciting adventures exploring my new home, classes began at the University of Western Australia. I took three classes that met for 45 minutes each, twice a week. Classes were large lectures and all the notes and lectures were recorded online so students were not required to be in class. They are not nearly as challenging as Bucknell classes, but the grading and testing systems are much harsher. In the short-term I could spend most of my days studying on the beach!

In my spare time I worked as a bartender in the local college pub. I quickly learned the motto, "no worries," from the locals, who pride themselves on three key features of their culture: sport, alcohol and leisure time.

My Australian peers began each day with an early morning surf while the waves were best, and ended each night at midnight when the pubs closed. In between, footy, rugby and cricket were the most popular activities unless, of course, it was too hot—then an afternoon swim in the ocean was in order.

I also was lucky to have vacation time to travel around Australia. I snorkeled at the Great Barrier Reef and less touristy Ningaloo Reef on the west coast, went white water rafting in the rain forest of the northeast, chased "roos" in a "ute" (short for utility vehicle, or truck) during a farm visit, climbed the Sydney bridge to look down on the Sydney Opera House, swam with dolphins and sharks in the Indian Ocean, rode camels down Cable Beach in the northwest, surfed in the southwest and also hiked the snowy peaks of the Southern Alps in New Zealand.

Five months was so little time to explore the great lands "down under," but it was enough to create memories of good times and good mates to keep me warm as I tramp through the snow to the Bucknell library!

Cottesloe Beach

Ningaloo Reef

Jocelyn Dautel and Amanda Funk '05 with the locals

While in Australia, Jocelyn Dautel '05 enjoyed reef-diving, swimming and socializing with kangaroos. Dautel is pictured (above) at Ayers Rock, one of the many natural wonders she encountered in the Outback.

Slip and slide your way to Eagles Mere

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Break the ice of winter's cold drums with a trip to Eagles Mere's historic toboggan slide. The slide is a winter attraction to be missed "in the middle of nowhere."

"Tobogganing was a great way to spend a Saturday having fun outside and taking a

What to do in the middle of nowhere break from work," Sarah Gudenkauf '04 said. "It is definitely an adventure worth having before leaving central Pa."

Visitors begin by renting a custom-built toboggan. These sleds seat six to nine people depending on their size, and can be rented for one, two or three hours. Prices start at $10 for a six-person toboggan for an hour.

From the high altitude high-speed fun begins. A trip down the ice slide takes visitors 1,200 feet down an icy track onto a frozen lake. Toboggans reach speeds of 40-50 mph as they hurtle down the frozen slope.

"It was so fun flying down that hill and out on to the frozen lake," Katie Kleissas '04 said. "I liked riding on the toboggan backwards because you could see the people at the top of the hill get smaller and smaller."

Eagles Mere offers a very unique opportunity. "We're the only one [toboggan place] around," said Craig Fowler, volunteer firefighter and director of public relations for the slide. "In fact, I believe we're the only one in the country. ... It's just a great way to break up the monotony of the winter."

This seasonal attraction pulls in visitors from throughout the region. "One year, we put 30,000 to 40,000 people down the slide," Fowler said.

The appeal and operation of the slide depends heavily on Mother Nature.

"We need to have at least 12 inches of ice on the lake," Fowler said. "We'll probably run, depending on weather, until March. ... You reach a certain point though, when the number of people coming drops off once people start thinking about spring."

Likewise the construction of the slide also relies heavily on the weather, as well as on the dedication of volunteers. Once the ice has reached the 12-inch mark, assembly of the slide can begin.

"We start on a Friday," Fowler said. "We take the ice from an icefield about 300 yards down the lake."

According to a publication from the Eagles Mere Slide Association, blocks are cut from this field that are 15-and-a-half inches wide by 44 inches long. An ice conveyor belt takes blocks from a channel built in the ice to a trailer that unloads them in their final track formation on the hill. Snow or water fills in the cracks, grooves for toboggan runners are cut and the slide is left to freeze before operation. After 380 hours of labor, nine pickup trucks, 1,000 ice blocks weighing 120 tons, and a total distance of 250 miles, the toboggan run is ready for use by Sunday afternoon.

For safety-minded students, don't be concerned—the attraction is carefully maintained and monitored, and the slide is incident-free.

Members of local volunteer fire companies run the whole procedure from constructing the track to maintaining its everyday operations. As such, all monetary proceeds are dedicated to these volunteers.

"All proceeds go to the Eagles Mere Volunteer Fire Company, as well as Laporte and Muncy Valley," Fowler said.

The town of Eagles Mere is also involved and devoted to its historic slide.

"The town always comes out and helps," Fowler said. "The civic club runs the food booth."

This commitment has kept the slide running for over a century.

"The slide started in 1902," Fowler said. "Captain Chase started it, I believe he's now in the Pennsylvania Winter Museum."

Chase, who was instrumental in Eagles Mere's development, built the slide for his grandchildren. The amusement has existed under the same general design to entertain Eagles Mere residents and visitors ever since.

Those wishing to brave the cold, the height and the lake for a matchless experience can find Eagles Mere by taking Route 15 North to Route 80 East toward Milton. Immediately exit to Route 180 West toward Williamsport, and remain on this road for about 13 miles until the Muncy/Hughesville Exit. After exiting, turn right onto PA Route 405, which you follow until it becomes PA Route 220 about 10 miles later. Watch for signs that read, "PA Route 42," then turn left on this road, which will take you to Eagles Mere.

Eagles Mere may seem hard to find, but perhaps this is only because it is a hidden treasure of Central Pa. "Eagles Mere is a quaint little town nestled in the mountains that not many people can find," Lauren Scott '04 said. "I would have never gone there if I had never heard about tobogganing but I am glad that we found it, and it really was a great time."

At Eagles Mere toboggans are available for parties of six or nine at an extremely reasonable price.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

February 13, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 3
Arts & Entertainment:

University students display their talents through self-produced plays and musical performances.

See pages B8-9

Women's basketball devours American 51-39

By TERI SCHLANG
Sports Editor

After a two-game losing streak, the women's basketball team came back to win 51-39 over American on Saturday afternoon in the Sojka Pavilion. The game featured a more defensive battle than an offensive one.

In the first six minutes of play only seven points had been scored as the Bison led American 4-3. The Orange and Blue held a 6-5 lead with 13 minutes left in the half before American scored five of its next seven shots, building the largest lead of the game 17-9. After that, Bucknell's defense was relentless.

After a time-out the Bison put together a 12-0 run, keeping American off the scoreboard for nearly eight minutes and jumping to a 21-17 lead over the Eagles.

Both teams struggled to score during the first half. The Orange and Blue shot 29 percent while American was only 26 percent from the field. The Bison defense continually forced American deep into the shot clock, pushing it out of an offensive rhythm. At halftime Bucknell led 23-19.

American did not give up easily going into the second half. It quickly scored two points bringing the game within two and the game was tied at 28 with about 15 minutes left to play.

The Orange and Blue went back to work again, outscoring the Eagles 10-0 in the following six minutes to take a 38-28 advantage. Lillian Drumgold '05 scored five points during the run including her second three-pointer of the season.

Bucknell scored only two points on free throws over the next four minutes, allowing American to creep within four points, 40-36. That was the closest the visitors would get. Over the final four minutes the Bison made seven of 10 free throws, giving them a final lead of 51-39 over the Eagles. Head Coach Kathy Federjaka was pleased with the performance.

"I was extremely proud of our player's defensive effort on Saturday versus American University," Federjaka said. "We worked extremely hard on the defensive end and did a great job at taking them out of their comfort zone on the offensive end of the floor."

The Orange and Blue have not kept an opponent's score under 40 since a game against Army, 51-37, in the 1992-93 season. The 39 points scored by the Eagles is the fourth-lowest in their school's history.

Drumgold led all scorers with 14 points and Lindsey Geosits '06 was the only other player in the double digits with 11 points.

"Drumgold and Geosits stepped up big on the offensive

Desire Almind '04 maneuvers the ball around an American player during Saturday's game at Sojka Pavilion. Almind and the Bison got back on track with a 51-39 victory over the Eagles.

Men's basketball wins again

By PIERRE HERNANDO
Staff Writer

The Bison (9-12, 5-3) overcame a lackluster second half to edge visiting American (11-11, 5-3) 67-62 Sunday afternoon in front of roughly 1,900 fans in Sojka Pavilion. The win was the squad's sixth in seven games, and it put it into a third-place tie with the Eagles in the Patriot League standings.

After racing out to a 15-point halftime lead, the Bison committed turnover after turnover under American's full-court trap defense.

Kevin Bettencourt '06 scored 15 of his game-high 20 points in the first stanza, as the squad hit 13 of 23 field goal attempts en route to a 36-21 halftime advantage. The lead was cut to 10 at 38-28 at the 15:48 mark of the second half after a three-pointer by American's Andre Ingram and two free throws by Jernavis Draughn.

The Bison increased the lead to 42-28 after a layup by Abe Badmus '07. The visitors slowly chipped away and found themselves only down by seven points after a steal and layup by Linas Lekavicius with 11:46 left in the game made it 46-39.

American got to within a point at 58-57 after Lekavicius hit two foul shots with just over two minutes remaining in the game.

Charles Lee '06 clinched the game for the Bison by hitting six free throws in the last 3:04 of the game. With the score 65-62, American's Matej Gresnik missed a jump shot, which gave the Orange and Blue a chance to seal the win.

Bettencourt hit two free throws, helping him hit the 20-point mark in a game for the seventh time this season, to provide the final margin.

Bettencourt hit three three-pointers and seven free throws and came up with three steals. He finished off another solid ballgame, finishing with 16 points on four of five shooting from the field and seven of eight shooting from the charity stripe. He also added six rebounds, four assists, and three steals. Chris McNaughton '07 hit all three of his field goal attempts and finished with eight points and six boards. Badmus, who ran the offense and was one of February and March bring the start of the season for many Bucknell spring sports. The defending Patriot League champion baseball and men's lacrosse teams look to make 2004 a reflection of last spring, while many other programs are aiming to avenge last year's losses or rebuild toward success.

For team capsules of all spring sports, see page B2

Women's swimming wins 16th straight dual meet

By BRENT BUTLER
Editor-in-Chief

The Bucknell women's swimming team completed its second straight season without a loss in a dual meet with their most recent win over Lehigh on Nov. 7. The Bison easily defeated the Mountain Hawks, 196-104.

"Last weekend we really came together as a program. The guys and girls came together at the Lehigh meet," Jackie Feinthal '05 said. "We were not two separate teams but one group acting together."

The women have won 16 straight dual meets and have not lost a dual meet since Nov. 17, 2001.

Led by Lectie Altman '06, Jamie Flick '05, Daniela Faas '04 and Meghan Freese '04, the Orange and Blue captured 14 of the 16 events.

Altman was able to break three Lehigh pool records with impressive wins in the 100-meter backstroke, 200 backstroke and the 200-meter medley relay. Altman grabbed first-place wins in the 100 backstroke with a time of 59.49 seconds and the 200 backstroke with a time of 2:06.40.

"We have been working really hard all year, and doing well in these dual meets just proves how hard we have been working," Altman said. "We are looking forward to Patriots and hope that these wins will keep us on track to win again."

The Bison won 14 out of the 16 events throughout the meet, only losing the 200 free and 200 fly.

The judges promulgated 214.75 points to Sarah Petcavage '04 in the one-meter diving competition to start the day with a Bison win. The 200 relay team of Flick, Freese, Altman and Lauren Reed '06 finished with a winning time of 1:49.86.

"We had a little trouble in this event and fell behind, but we were able to come back from behind and win," Altman said.

Later in the day Faas took first place in the 1000 freestyle, followed by Flick's first win of the day with a

Track and field gears up for leagues

Men's and women's teams perform well at Rhode Island Invitational

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The University track team left its last major competition before the Patriot League Championships—the Rhode Island Invitational—feeling confident and healthy. Only the host school was able to best the men out of nine teams on Saturday, while the women finished third in a 12-team field behind the Universities of Connecticut and Rhode Island.

Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased with the results.

"Our men are starting to gel at the right time," Donner said. "All the event areas are looking good."

The men competed as hard as they have all season, picking up four first-, four second- and five third-place finishes. Noel Powell '04 won the long jump and finished third in the 55-meter dash. Jeff Arek '04 equaled his season best, vaulting 4.65 meters (15'3") for the win in the pole vault. Sean McCarthy '04 ran his personal best to finish less than a second behind winner Greg Costello '03 in the mile.

Dan Lounsbury '05 and Wes Reinhardt

Sean McCarthy '04 (front) and Wes Reinhardt '04 (left) run during a home meet last year. McCarthy's and Reinhardt's performances in the mile and 3000m, respectively, were among several personal-record efforts from Bison runners on Saturday.

See MBALL, page B6

See TRACK, page B6

See SWIM, page B6

Spring Sports Preview

BASEBALL

HEAD COACH: GENE DEPEW
ASSISTANT COACHES: R.J. GRANT, BRIAN HOYT, BOB CURTIS
CAPTAINS: SAM MOSS '04, BEN STOLL '04, PETE WOLF '04
2003 HIGHLIGHTS: 15-5 IN LEAGUE; FINISHED FIRST IN PL STANDINGS; WON PL TOURNAMENT OVER NAVY; EARNED BID IN NCAA REGIONAL TOURNAMENT
RETURNING ALL-LEAGUERS: KEVIN MILLER '04 (PL PITCHER OF THE YEAR), PHIL FUTRICK '06 (PL ROOKIE OF THE YEAR), BEN STOLL '04, SAM MOSS '04, PHIL BUNTING '05, BRIAN HIRSCHBERG '04, KYLE WALTER '06
COACH'S COMMENTS: "WE ARE ENTERING THE NEW SEASON WITH HIGH EXPECTATIONS. WE RETURN SEVEN STARTERS FROM LAST YEAR'S CHAMPIONSHIP TEAM AND HAVE A SOLID NUCLEUS OF STARTING PITCHERS. OUR CHALLENGE WILL BE TO DEVELOP A DEPENDABLE BULLPEN, WHICH WAS A STRENGTH OF LAST YEAR'S TEAM. IT IS ALSO A CHALLENGE TO REPEAT AS PATRIOT LEAGUE CHAMPS, AS IT HAS ONLY HAPPENED TWICE SINCE THE LEAGUE HAS BEEN IN EXISTENCE. WE ALSO NEED SOME HELP FROM THE WEATHER TO GET STARTED ON A POSITIVE NOTE." —HEAD COACH GENE DEPEW
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: FEB. 21, AT JMU

MEN'S CREW

HEAD COACH: DEREK UDEGRAFF
CAPTAIN: GARRETT SAMUELS '06
PRESIDENT & VICE PRESIDENT: DAN SCHENK '06 & BRENT BUTLER '06
2003 HIGHLIGHTS: TWO GOLD METALS IN THE MID-ATLANTIC COLLEGIATE CREW CHAMPIONSHIP, PATRIOT LEAGUE CHALLENGE CHAMPIONSHIP IN THE LIGHTWEIGHT EIGHT
COACH'S COMMENTS: "THIS YEAR'S HEAVYWEIGHT EIGHT WILL LOOK VERY SIMILAR TO LAST YEAR'S SUCCESSFUL NOVICE HEAVYWEIGHT EIGHT. SEVEN OF LAST YEAR'S NOVICE EIGHT RETURN AND ARE ANXIOUS TO SEE HOW THEY CAN PERFORM ON THE VARSITY STAGE. THE POWER OF GARRETT SAMUELS, MATT FORNATARO AND BRENT BUTLER WILL LEAD THE WAY FOR THIS YOUNG YET TALENTED GROUP INCLUDING STEVE IGNATOSKY, MIKE ORTA, KEVIN POWERS AND DAN SCHENK." —HEAD COACH DEREK UDEGRAFF
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: FEB. 29, ERG ARMAGEDDON, DAVIS GYM

WOMEN'S CREW

HEAD COACH: STEVE KISH
ASSISTANT COACHES: KATIE DAVIS, MICHAEL BROOKS-WILLIAMS
2003 HIGHLIGHTS: FINISHED SECOND AT DAD VAIL REGATTA, VARSITY LIGHTWEIGHT FINISHED WITH FOURTH-PLACE USROWING AND COLLEGIATE ROWING COACHES ASSOCIATION
COACH'S COMMENTS: "AFTER FOUR MEDAL WINNING YEARS IN THE VARSITY PAIR AND VARSITY FOUR, OUR OPENWEIGHT WOMEN ARE SETTING THEIR SIGHTS ON THE MOST COMPETITIVE EVENT OF ALL, THE VARSITY EIGHT. WITH FOUR RETURNING MEMBERS OF LAST YEAR'S DAD VAIL GOLD MEDAL EIGHT, THE LIGHTWEIGHT WOMEN HAVE BEEN WORKING DILIGENTLY AND WITH MORE CONFIDENCE." —HEAD COACH STEVE KISH
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: FEB. 29, ERG ARMAGEDDON, DAVIS GYM

MEN'S GOLF

HEAD COACH: JIM COTNER
CAPTAINS: ARDIE VALENTE '04
2003 SPRING HIGHLIGHTS: THIRD AT ST. PETER'S INVITATIONAL, FIFTH IN PL TOURNAMENT
2003 FALL HIGHLIGHTS: WON BUCKNELL INVITATIONAL
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: MARCH 27 AND 28, DREW UPTON CLASSIC TOURNAMENT

WOMEN'S GOLF

HEAD COACH: KEVIN JAMIESON
CAPTAINS: JAIME HAYS '05
2003 SPRING HIGHLIGHTS: PLACED SIXTH IN FIRST BIG SOUTH CHAMPIONSHIP APPEARANCE, FIFTH IN BU SPRING CLASSIC
COACH'S COMMENTS: "I AM VERY EXCITED ABOUT THIS SPRING SEASON. [THIS FALL] WE'VE ALREADY BEEN ABLE TO CHALLENGE A FEW OF OUR SCHOOL RECORDS. WE WERE ABLE TO TIE OUR SINGLE ROUND SCORING RECORD AND JUST MISSED OUR TWO DAY RECORD BY A SHOT THIS FALL AT THE RUTGERS INVITATIONAL. BECAUSE OF THAT AWESOME PERFORMANCE, WE WERE INVITED TO PARTICIPATE IN THE HIGHLY COMPETITIVE XAVIER INVITATIONAL THIS SPRING HELD IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS. WE WILL BE FACING SIX OF THE TOP FIFTY TEAMS IN THE COUNTRY. WE WORKED EXTREMELY HARD THIS FALL TO EARN OUR SPRING INVITATIONS. AS ALWAYS, WE WILL DO OUR VERY BEST IN REPRESENTING BUCKNELL AND ITS GREAT TRADITION OF EXCELLENCE EVERY STEP OF THE WAY." —HEAD COACH KEVIN JAMIESON
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: MARCH 11, XAVIER INVITATIONAL, VIRGIN ISLANDS

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

HEAD COACH: RANDALL FLYNN
ASSISTANT COACH: PAM LOWIE
CAPTAINS: AMY HAFETS '04, AMY HASLER '04, ELIZABETH SCHUSTER '04
2003 HIGHLIGHTS: 3-3 IN LEAGUE; FINISHED THIRD IN LEAGUE AND QUALIFIED FOR PL TOURNAMENT; LOST PL TITLE GAME TO AMERICAN
RETURNING ALL-LEAGUERS: AMY HASSLER '04
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: FEB. 22 AT LOYOLA

MEN'S LACROSSE

HEAD COACH: SID JAMIESON
ASSISTANT COACH: FRANK FEDORJANKA
CAPTAINS: BLAISE FLETCHER '04, BRENDAN FITZGIBBONS '04
2003 SEASON HIGHLIGHTS: 5-1 IN LEAGUE, TIED WITH ARMY FOR LEAGUE LEAD AND PL TITLE; MISSED NCAA TOURNAMENT BID
RETURNING ALL-LEAGUERS: BLAISE FLETCHER '04, CHRIS CARA '05
COACH'S COMMENTS: "WE ARE WORKING VERY HARD TO MEET THE CHALLENGES OF A FIFTH CONSECUTIVE PATRIOT LEAGUE TITLE AND AN NCAA TOURNAMENT AUTOMATIC BID. THE AUTOMATIC BID WILL GO TO THE WINNER OF THE LEAGUE'S TOURNAMENT ON THE LAST WEEKEND IN APRIL AT THE SITE OF THE HIGHEST SEEDED TEAM. THE NAVAL ACADEMY BRINGS A STORIED HISTORY OF SUCCESS AS THEY BEGIN MEN'S LACROSSE COMPETITION IN THE PATRIOT LEAGUE THIS SPRING." —ASSISTANT COACH FRANK FEDORJANKA
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: FEB. 28, VS. MOUNT ST. MARY'S

SOFTBALL

HEAD COACH: JANELLE BREHMAN
ASSISTANT COACHES: THERESA DITLOW, STACEY SCHRAMM
CAPTAINS: ANGIE STACKHOUSE '04, JENNA FITCH '04, LAUREN WIBLE '06
2003 HIGHLIGHTS: 6-14 IN LEAGUE
RETURNING ALL-LEAGUERS: KRIS DEVORE '06, LAUREN WIBLE '06
COACH'S COMMENTS: "I AM GREATLY ANTICIPATING THIS SEASON; WE HAVE TALENT, DEPTH AND GREAT TEAM CHEMISTRY. WE HAVE GREAT LEADERSHIP IN OUR RETURNING PLAYERS AND WE WELCOME A GREAT GROUP OF FRESHMAN. THIS YEAR'S TEAM SHOWS A LOT OF HEART AND PASSION. WE HAVE WHAT IT TAKES TO WIN. WE WILL WORK TOGETHER TO ACHIEVE OUR TEAM OBJECTIVES AND GOALS." —HEAD COACH JANELLE BREHMAN
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: MAY 6, AT DELAWARE

MEN'S TENNIS

HEAD COACH: REBECCA HOLT
ASSISTANT COACH: MICHAEL VANN
CAPTAIN: NICK DENEVRO '05
2003 HIGHLIGHTS: 3-10 RECORD IN SPRING '03; 3-1 RECORD IN FALL '03
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: FEB. 13, 14 AND 15, AT TCNJ TOURNAMENT

WOMEN'S TENNIS

HEAD COACH: REBECCA HOLT
ASSISTANT COACH: MICHAEL VANN
CAPTAIN: SAMANTHA BERTHOUD '04
2003 SPRING HIGHLIGHTS: 15-6 RECORD, FOURTH IN PL STANDINGS, LOST TO ARMY IN FIRST ROUND OF PL TOURNAMENT
RETURNING ALL-LEAGUERS: VERONICA BROWN '06 (CO-PL ROOKIE OF THE YEAR)
NEXT ON THE SCHEDULE: FEB. 13, 14 AND 15, AT TCNJ TOURNAMENT

MEN'S TRACK & FIELD

HEAD COACH: KEVIN DONNER
ASSOCIATE HEAD COACH: JOE KLIM
ASSISTANT COACHES: MARIO WILSON, BOB SCHANBACHER, ROB GUSSANIE, JIM KNIGHT, RACHELLE SMITH
CAPTAINS: GRADUATE STUDENT GREG COSTELLO, CHRIS EDWARDS '04, MIKE MELLAS '05, JUSTIN MCKNIGHT '04, NOEL POWELL '04, KEVIN WALSH '04
2003 SEASON HIGHLIGHTS: FINISHED SECOND IN PL CHAMPIONSHIPS
RETURNING ALL-LEAGUERS: NOEL POWELL '04
COACH'S COMMENTS: "OUR GOAL IS TO CLOSE THE GAP ON ARMY AND COME CLOSER TO WINNING THE PATRIOT LEAGUE." —HEAD COACH KEVIN DONNER

WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD

HEAD COACH: KEVIN DONNER
ASSOCIATE HEAD COACH: JOE KLIM
ASSISTANT COACHES: MARIO WILSON, BOB SCHANBACHER, ROB GUSSANIE, JIM KNIGHT, RACHELLE SMITH
CAPTAINS: JEN MALCOLM '04, KATIE PFEIFER '05, JEN MARSH '05, ABBY BOUZAN-KALOUSHTAN '04, LAURA SCHAFER '04
2003 SEASON HIGHLIGHTS: FINISHED THIRD IN PL CHAMPIONSHIPS
RETURNING ALL-LEAGUERS: MARIA GARCIA '04, AMY CALVO '05, MONIQUE BOLEY '05, RENANA LANEVALA '05
COACH'S COMMENTS: "OUR GOAL IS TO GET BACK ON THE PODIUM FOR THE OUTDOOR LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIPS. WE HAVE A GOOD, STRONG, FULL-DIMENSIONAL TEAM AND OUR LADIES LOOK TO CONTEND FOR BOTH [INDOOR AND OUTDOOR] TITLES." —HEAD COACH KEVIN DONNER

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

It's never too early for baseball ramblings

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

February might be the most godawful month of the year.

The first count against it is that it houses the most invidious holiday on the calendar. And if the cutesy contrivances of Valentine's Day don't reduce you to an unalterable state of petulance, the Weather Channel's perpetual screening of irritatingly plucky clip art clouds regurgitating little animated snowflakes is enough to flatten anyone's demeanor.

Oh, sure, there's a sense of valor in trying to extricate your car from perilous entrapment in the icy fortress of snowdrifts that flank its every dimension, but once you resign yourself to the fact that none of the three points on the Mercedes-Benz star is intended to denote great performance in the snow, the whole endeavor reduces to abject futility.

And then there's the matter of leap year. How can anyone trust a month that doesn't even commit to an annually consistent number of days?

The spelling is grotesque, too—that first "r" is the bane of far too many a kindergartner's efforts at word constitution.

But despite all this, February does radiate a sparkling silver lining—and no, it's not just the retinally caustic ultraviolet rays reflecting off the sprawling glaze of ice that lines the pavement.

It's the last two weeks of the month, when—finally—pitchers and catchers descend upon Florida and Arizona, and Spring Training delivers glorious salvation to baseball addicts everywhere.

Maybe that's a little overdramatic. Off-season isn't really that bad. That is, with the steady effusion of news and gossip rained upon us by the sports media all winter, there's a lot to keep the imagination occupied.

And just in case off-season wheelings are too mentally taxing, there's always the sweet, anodyne digital bliss of MLB.TV archives.

For the paltry sum of $4.95 a month, anyone with broadband can turn a computer screen into multimedia baseball paradise for hours at a time, with just about every regular and postseason major-league game from last season available for full download.

During the season, the powers of MLB.TV become deviner yet. In the past we had to withstand the utterly depriving conditions of simple cable broadcast, getting by on one, maybe two baseball games a day. Sometimes even none.

Well, the suffering has not gone unamended—thanks to MLB.TV, anyone so inclined can watch all of the games, every day (save a few blackouts).

It's genius. It probably even belongs on a list with the all-time most fan-accommodating innovations ever to grace the sport.

In the interest of generating historical context—and, of course, rambling about trivia, a great behavioral staple for most baseball fans—here's a run-through of some of the other great conveniences and entertainment-enhancers in the annals of the sport, from the fans' perspective:

The Box Score

Without box scores, the newspaper is nothing more than low-grade sheet of pulp that besmears all it touches with inky residue. With box scores, it's an informational playground of vital numbers and data.

These little statistical matrices have been a part of the game just about as long as the diamond itself.

Journalist Henry "Father" Chadwick, who wrote the book on baseball—literally—was responsible not only for the creation of box scores, but also the advent of batting average and ERA as evaluative tools. His box scores first appeared in the New York Clipper circa 1863 and have been appreciated and amassed by fans and historians ever since.

And the best thing to happen to the box score since Chadwick?—Retrosheet.org, a digital depository of enough box score meriment to quell even the most insatiable appetite for statistical pleasantries.

The Night Game

For those enslaved by day-jobs or for individuals dissuaded by the prospect of attending a game in 102-degree mid-summer weather, artificial illumination was a godsend.

The majors didn't implement lighted contests until 1935, but the minors turned to after-dusk entertainment as early as May of 1930, when the DeMoines Demons played the Wichita Aviators under manmade moonlight into the waning hours of the night.

While one set of Illinoisans started it all, another set became the last stubborn traditionalists to balk at the idea of night games, as the Chicago Cubs didn't cave to the newfangled appeal of electricity on the diamond until 1988.

The case for night games as a pivotal advancement in the world of spectatorship is pretty straightforward. Prime-time accessibility. Tolerable temperatures. And let's face it—flash-bulbs are just plain sexier at nighttime.

The Uniform Number

Codifying players was a concept that cropped up a few times early in the 20th century, until it was introduced to the majors in 1916 by the Cleveland Indians—not the Yankees, as ever-delusional New York legend has it. It was a short-lived experiment, and the number system went back in the closet until 1929, when the Indians brought it back for good.

All right, so real fans are supposed to be able to identify everyone on the 40-man based solely on the subtle nuances of batting stance and self-carriage, even from a vantage-point in upper deck left field.

But for those of us who aren't obsessive-compulsive osprey, the assignment of uniform numbers is somewhat useful for purposes of mental organization.

The Baseball Card

One of the most underrated knowledge sources on the market.

Want to know who has the biggest ears in major-league baseball? The 1998 UD Collector's Choice base set has your answer (Fernando Tatís).

How about Mark Prior's nickname during his West Tennessee Diamond Jaxx years? Just crack open a box of 2002 Fleer Tradition. It's in there.

Of course, baseball cards used to just consist of a painfully boring portrait, labeled with something so mundane as "Wagner, Pittsburgh," and backed with an ad for whatever tobacco product they accompanied.

The Topps company was effective in spicing things up with its timeless 1952 set, most of which, if all lament-riddled anecdotes are true, ended up shoved in bike spokes or accidentally disposed of by absent-minded grandparents.

ESPN

In addition to being responsible for the assimilation of the term "boo yah" into the English sport-going language, the Worldwide Leader in Sports is a minefield of joy for the baseball junkie.

There was a time when fans had only mental imagery to draw upon for repetition of a dazzling play or game-breaking moment.

Not since ESPN barged into the cable network scene in 1979.

Now we can recapture the glory on "Baseball Tonight" right after the game's completion, at 11 p.m. on "SportsCenter," then again at 8, 9, 10 and 11 the next day. And then a couple more times on the back-to-back afternoon installments of "Baseball Tonight."

Spring Training

The origins of the springball tradition are a little seedy—rumor has it that some teams in the late 19th century implemented pre-season training sessions as a chance to sober up their booze-smitten players before the start of the regular season.

In the early 20th century, several teams sought warm locales to gear up for the season, landing them sprinkled across the country's toaster regions. Eventually the teams organized themselves into the two leagues that comprise Spring Training currently—Florida's Grapefruit League materialized in 1914 and Arizona's Cactus League cropped up around 1945.

Whether down south or out west, Spring Training annually gives fans something to look forward to during the toils of late February.

Just when the hollow winter months of off-season start to become soul-devouringly monotonous, sweet, sweet Spring Training rolls in and delivers us from the throes of chronic baseball withdrawal.

The Shovel

Shovels actually have nothing to do with baseball. Or its fans.

But spend a half-hour trying to dig a car out of its snow-cavern using only a bucket and your hands, and you'll want to include the shovel on every list you ever make, too.

NFL off-season filled with twists and turns

By MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

The Pro Bowl is over, the Super Bowl grows smaller in the rearview mirror, and the draft isn't until April, and so the long, cold off-season begins.

There is hope, however, that even though we're in the off season the fun and madness doesn't have to end. Just in the past few days we've had some great stories and incidents regarding the cloak and dagger ways of the NFL. I'll just go ahead and fill you in on what's going on around the league.

The Joe Gibbs Reunion tour seems to have hit a snag. While meeting with Jaguars QB Mark Brunell to gauge his interest in joining the team via trade, Gibbs had a health emergency related to his diabetes and had to be driven to the hospital by Brunell. The meeting progressed once Gibbs was healthy again.

If Gibbs can get ill while meeting with a QB in a low pressure atmosphere over dinner, how is he going to handle a whole season of living in his office drawing up game plans? I look forward to Joe Gibbs back on the sidelines as much as the next guy, but do we really want to kill the man? What will happen if he gets ill on the sideline?

I'll tell you what will happen: Dan Snyder will build an intricate system of wires and digitally recorded sound bytes and manipulate Gibbs' corpse so that he still appears to be alive. It will be like a third installment in the "Weekend at Bernie's" franchise, except live every Sunday!

Snyder can't afford to have

Joe Gibbs' return not pan out, plain and simple. Fans will riot outside the stadium with pitchforks and torches if this thing fails. If this train gets derailed

What would it be like if George Bush owned the Redskins? Would the terror alert level be raised to magenta when the Skins lost? Would Bill

ly out of the question, after all Bush did own the Rangers, and if re-elected he could run the franchise from the White House and use Air Force One for team would never commit a penalty and would play for league minimum? How would this affect the salary cap and the collective bargaining agreement?

huge implications, which are not truly done justice by the reporting done by other news sources. Now that we've covered some of the vast possibilities of what could happen with Joe Gibbs, let's talk about everyone's favorite young ne'er-do-well amateur football player who accepts benefits, Maurice Clarett!

Clarett was just cleared to play in the league, but that doesn't mean he is going to enter the draft. After all, he might want to actually go to class and get an education at OSU. Yeah, right. He's having second thoughts about going pro because he knows that Al Davis might be crazy enough to select him with the number two pick in the draft.

Maurice's friendship with Lebron might have convinced him that he too can play in Cleveland.

Problem is, Cleveland doesn't have a pick high enough to get him. At least that's what Maurice thinks. Little does he know that he has a snowball's chance in hell at being a high draft pick, and has an even more remote chance at actually playing in for a team that will pay him as well the alumni at Ohio State. Or maybe he does

... If he doesn't get selected in the first round, would he file a lawsuit claiming that not being a first round pick is a violation of his right to a $10 million signing bonus?

If he got the same judge he could win the lawsuit, and thus destroy the collective bargaining agreement, allowing Bill Gates and his army of football playing androids to dominate the league for centuries to come.

Would androids become subject to the NFL draft, and if so, how would Mel Kiper rate them?
 The Joe Gibbs story has

Maurice Clarett runs for a touchdown during his 2002 season at Ohio State. Clarett was recently cleared to play in the NFL.

early on, Snyder will be up the creek, and will probably have to sell the team to someone like the Bush family, or maybe even Bill Gates.

Parcells be placed on the most wanted list? Would Jerry Jones be discovered to be the true mastermind behind al-Qaeda? These prospects are not entire-travel.

What if Bill Gates bought the franchise? Would he replace the whole team with highly advanced androids who

Sports

Medalist speaks on campus

Hogshead-Makar shares perspective on women's athletics

By TERI SCHLANG
Sports Editor

Olympic gold medalist Nancy Hogshead-Makar commended the University for its 30 years of dedication to women's athletics.

Hogshead-Makar, who spoke at the University's Women in Sports banquet on Jan. 5, gave women athletes and their coaches a preview of her speech, "Winning Strategies for Achieving Equity Together Under Title IX: Lessons Learned from the Commission on Opportunities in Athletics."

Hogshead-Makar spoke about her experiences as a collegiate athlete and as an Olympian, as well as her experiences as a Title IX advocate since retiring from swimming. Hogshead-Makar was undefeated through high school and college dual meets. In the 1984 summer Olympics in Los Angeles she took home four medals in swimming—three gold and one silver. She brought one of her Olympic gold medals to the University and passed it around the audience.

The first medal Hogshead-Makar won at the 1984 Olympics, the first U.S. gold of the games, was actually a tie for first with Carrie Steinseifer, a fellow U.S. swimmer. Their tie marked the first time in Olympic history that two athletes tied to the hundredth of a second for first place.

The two swimmers received endorsement offers and commercial opportunities, but Steinseifer turned them down, knowing she would receive better opportunities taking part in collegiate sports from Title IX laws. This was evidence of the changing times in women's sports. Before the 1984 Olympics, Hogshead-Makar had been one of the first to receive a college scholarship through Title IX.

Hogshead-Makar explained that after she had qualified for the 1980 Olympics, she received college opportunities that female athletes would not have received two years earlier. She attended Duke University on a full scholarship, something not previously available to female athletes.

When Hogshead-Makar was 22, her team hosted guest speaker Donna DeVerona, Olympic gold medalist and Title IV activist. She told the team that there were three ways Title IX could progress in women's athletics: to increase female participation in collegiate sports, to make scholarships available to female athletes and to improve the treatment of female athletes. It was not enough that women were allowed to play sports in college; they also needed fair treatment once they arrived.

After DeVerona's speech, Hogshead-Makar continued her collegiate and Olympic swimming careers, later becoming one of the foremost advocates of Title IX and making appearances in Congress and on television. She was also the president of the Women's Sports Foundation.

"Sports were a privilege for girls, but a right for boys," Hogshead-Makar said during one of her speeches to Congress supporting Title IX.

Title IX received support and attack whenever it was brought to Congress. The positive and negative press both helped Title IX demand and receive equity for women playing collegiate level sports.

"The tougher the opponent, the more it brings out the best," said Hogshead-Makar, talking about fighting for Title IX in Congress and being denied at times.

Hogshead-Makar is also the founding director of a legal advocacy center for women in sports. The center focuses on legal issues surrounding athletic end of the floor and hit some big shots when we needed them," Fedorjaka said.

See MEDALIST, page B6

Bball back on winning path

WBALL from page B1

One of the leading scorers of the season Desire Almind '04 scored five points, but had a game-high 12 rebounds, becoming the Bison single-season rebound leader with 291; she also had four blocks, one steal and one assist.

"Desire Almind continued her dominance on the glass and had some tremendous rebounds at critical stretches of the game," Fedorjaka said.

American dropped from first place in the conference after its loss. It is now 5-3 in the league play and 11-10 overall for the season.

The Orange and Blue improved to 10-11 overall and 3-5 in Patriot League play.

Fedorjaka hopes that the Bison can take advantage of the momentum.

"We played with a lot of emotion and are now looking to build off this season into the entire second round of play," Fedorjaka said.

The Bison hosted their final of four home games in a row against Lehigh on Wednesday night. They will travel to Annapolis, M.D. to play the Naval Academy tomorrow.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Desire Almind '04 takes a shot during the Bison's win over American on Saturday at Sojka Pavilion. Almind became Bucknell's single-season rebound leader during the game.

Men's swimming falls to Lehigh in close meet

By JILL NONEMAKER
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell's men's swimming team traveled Saturday to Bethlehem, Pa., to compete against Lehigh University in the last dual meet of the season. The Lehigh and Bucknell swimming teams have been rivals for many years. This meet was extremely intense and came down to the final few races, with Lehigh edging out the Bison 157-143.

The first Bison win of the meet was captured by Ian Rawhauser '07 in the 200-meter freestyle with a time of 1:44.63.

"It was an real exciting meet. That was the first time since coming to college that I've had to swim in an environment like that. The energy was amazing—I'm really looking forward to what's to come," Rawhauser said.

The Bucknell men put up a fight the entire meet and gained a first-place in the 200 breaststroke by Will Schilling '06 with a time of 2 minutes, 9.23 seconds. Peter Garvin '04 continued the victories by taking the 50 and 100 freestyle events. Todd Bauer '06 took the 500 freestyle with a time of 4:49.65.

The Bison captured their only lead of the meet after Jake Thompson '06 picked up a win in 1-meter diving with a score of 227.25. After Thompson's win, Lehigh answered back, claiming five of the next six events.

Bucknell finished off the meet by taking the 400 freestyle relay. The team of Garvin, Bauer, John Hoffman '05 and Rawhauser made the win with a time of 3:12.34.

"It was a very painful loss, the only thing we can do now is remember how it felt and use it as fuel for Patriots," captain Michael Willits '04 said.

The Bucknell men have shown great talent this year and are preparing for a victory at the Patriot League Championships.

Bucknell kept the meet close throughout the day; however, Lehigh came out on top 157-143.

Bucknell's men and women will host five Patriot League schools Feb. 21 in the Bison Invitational before heading to Annapolis, Md., for the Patriot League Championships on Feb. 26-28.

NITTANY TRAVEL
201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 1, Shamokin Dam, PA 17876

ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK
Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!

El Pueblito Resort Cancun, Mexico
$925/person - Double-Occupancy
523-3224 800-326-9603

"GIFT CERTIFICATES"
A GREAT IDEA FOR HER VALENTINES DAY
From $20.00, $25.00, $35.00, $40.00 & UP

A Beautiful fresh red rose will be tied to your gift certificate for her

♥ Sure to change this = (to this =) for you ♥

Only from "A CUT ABOVE"
Reserve yours today for Saturday, February 14th

THERE'S NOT ENOUGH ART IN OUR SCHOOLS.

NO WONDER PEOPLE THINK CARAVAGGIO IS A GUY ON THE SOPRANOS.

It's hard to believe. Here's a 17th-century Baroque master whose bold naturalistic perspective & free and a sensation, that a movement. A guy whose life was filled with the turbulence and excess of more than a dozen Mafia Boss novels. The guy who, while not that charmingly handsome, and somewhat of an loner, but does the average kid on the street even know who Caravaggio is?

Too bad. Especially when you consider how much our children can learn from the conflicted life of a great artist like Michelangelo Caravaggio. He grew up in less than ideal circumstances. Most of his family died in the plague. Much of his youth was spent on the mean streets of Rome. And as a young artist he struggled for years to make a living. He was angry. Yet the angry contrast between light and darkness in his work is the very reason why you're now having an opinion on me around the world.

If nothing else, it's a case study of the importance of having art as an outlet. Unfortunately, one we're far removing from our kids' lives.

If the arts are indeed a vital part of your child's education (and studies show you believe they are), then you should demand for our kids share. To find out how to help, or for more information about the benefits of arts education, please visit us at AmericansForTheArts.org. Because, as Caravaggio would tell you, life without an artistic education is just a piece of your mind.

ART. ASK FOR MORE.

For more information about the importance of arts education, please contact www.AmericansForTheArts.org.

Bucknell Sports Calendar

Men's Basketball
at Navy
Sat., Feb. 14
3:30 p.m.

Women's Basketball
at Navy
Sat., Feb. 14
1 p.m.

Men's and Women's Track and Field
Bucknell Winter Classic
Sat., Feb. 14
10 p.m.

Men's and Women's Swimming and Diving
Bucknell Inv.
Sat., Feb. 14
12 p.m.

Men's and Women's Tennis
at TCNJ Tournament
Ewing, NJ
Feb. 13-15

Women's Water Polo
at Princeton Harvard Inv., Wagner Princeton Inv., and Marist Princeton Inv.
Princeton, NJ
Feb. 13-14
All Day

Bucknell Men vs. American, Feb. 7

##	Player Name	FG-FGA	3-PT	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	BLK	S	MIN
11	Clark, John	f	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	2	2	1	0	1	3	0 0 14
32	McNaughton, Chris	c	3-3	0-0	2-5	2	4	6	5	8	0	2	0 1 23
03	Lee, Charles	g	4-5	0-1	8-8	0	6	6	3	16	4	6	0 3 31
05	Badmus, Abe	g	3-5	0-0	2-5	1	2	3	3	8	3	5	0 0 30
12	Bettencourt, Kevin	g	5-13	3-7	7-8	0	3	3	1	20	2	5	0 3 37
00	Skornik, Davorion	g	3-5	0-0	0-0	1	1	2	3	6	2	0	1 1 16
04	Brown, Donald	g	2-3	0-0	3-6	1	1	2	1	7	0	2	1 2 27
22	Glover, Antonio	g	1-1	0-0	0-0	1	3	4	0	2	0	3	0 2 14
25	Quinn, Matt	g	0-2	0-2	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0 0 3
44	Viaer-McClumont, T	g	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	1	1	0	0	1	0	0 0 5
Team Totals			21-37	3-10	22-32	9	24	33	18	67	13	27	2 12 200

Bucknell Women vs. American

##	Player Name	FG-FGA	3-PT	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	BLK	S	MIN
13	Almind, Desire	f	0-5	0-0	5-10	2	10	12	2	5	1	3	4 1 36
41	Valdner, Kristin	f	1-4	0-1	0-0	0	1	1	3	2	1	2	1 1 13
15	Geosits, Lindsey	g	3-5	3-4	2-2	0	4	4	3	11	4	5	0 1 40
20	Hollobaugh, Lindsey	g	2-13	1-6	4-4	0	6	6	0	9	2	4	0 0 38
33	Drumgold, Lillian	g	4-6	1-2	5-8	0	4	4	2	14	0	2	0 0 27
31	Ketcham, Amy	g	0-0	0-0	0-0	1	0	1	0	0	0	0	0 0 3
42	Fleming, Amanda	g	1-4	1-4	0-0	3	0	3	1	3	2	1	0 2 15
44	Tomovich, Brooke	g	3-6	0-1	1-2	0	3	3	3	7	0	0	0 1 28
Teams Totals			14-43	6-18	17-26	8	32	40	14	51	10	17	5 6 200

Collegebaseballinsider.com's Northeast Regional Poll

Institution (2003 Record)	Points	Institution (2003 Record)	Points
1. Notre Dame (45-18)	220 (10)	13. Pittsburgh (36-20)	42
2. Richmond (48-15)	204 (2)	14. Princeton (27-23)	39
3. Rutgers (37-22)	192	15. George Mason (31-20)	38
4. Va. Commonwealth (46-13)	182 (4)
5. N. Carolina-Wilm. (40-23)	141
6. West Virginia (36-19)	118
7. Boston College (33-21)	116
8. George Washington (37-18)	101
9. Le Moyne (33-17)	87
10. Virginia Tech (34-23)	81
11. William and Mary (31-20)	77
12. Maine (38-18)	74

Receiving Votes: Central Connecticut State (34), Marist (33), Vermont (24), Bucknell (23), James Madison (18), Saint John's (17), Northeastern (10), Stony Brook (8), Seton Hall (7), Manhattan (6), Delaware (4), Massachusetts (3), Connecticut (2), Rhode Island (2), Columbia (1)

This is B.U.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

This could be you.

Come find out how.

AUSTRALIA
BELIZE
CHINA
ECUADOR
ENGLAND
FRANCE
GERMANY
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
NEW ZEALAND
RUSSIA
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.

INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS
SCIENCE

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

232 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
Fax: 617-353-5402

www.bu.edu/abroad

Any and every opportunity offers a new horizon.

Financial aid is available.

Your Dream: "I want to become a doctor."

Your Reality:

"I don't have the required courses for medical school."

The Johns Hopkins Post-Baccalaureate Premedical Program prepares college graduates with strong academic records to apply to the best medical schools by giving them the personal attention, the necessary science and math courses, and one-to-one academic advising.

If you or someone you know wants to pursue a career as a doctor, apply by March 1.

For more information, visit www.jhu.edu/postbac or call 410-516-7748.

JOHNS HOPKINS
UNIVERSITY
Post-Baccalaureate
Premedical Program

Buck Post Sec 04

Sports

Men's bball wins sixth in seven games

MBALL from page B1

the few Bison able to beat American's full-court press, also finished with eight points and dished out three assists. Donald Brown '07 finished with a modest seven points but came off the bench to provide a couple of crowd pleasing plays.

The visitors were led by Draughn's 17 points and Ingram's 16 points. Lekavicius scored eight points and recorded nine steals, which is a new Sojka Pavilion record.

The squad shot 57 percent from the field compared to 37 percent from American.

The Orange and Blue's continued struggles from the line had them hitting only 69 percent from the foul line, which enabled American to slowly creep back into the game.

The visitors shot 94 percent from the line.

The Bison defeated Lehigh on Tuesday 64-63 and travel to Annapolis, Md. tomorrow as they take on Navy at 3:30 p.m.

Kevin Bettencourt '06 drives downcourt with the ball during an earlier game against Holy Cross. The Bison defeated American on Saturday, registering their sixth win in their last seven games.

Track ready for leagues

TRACK from page B1

"I saw a lot of people truly compete this weekend. I think we are finally starting to gain confidence as a team and it shows," Marsh said. "Everyone was really supporting each other, and that can be the difference between winning and losing."

Two weeks out from the league meet, Donner is optimistic.

"Both teams are very close to being ready both mentally and physically," Donner said.

"I think that the team will be ready for leagues," Marsh said. "It is not a question. If the job needs to get done, it will. We are prepared to have to lay it on the line and run multiple events. We're so excited."

At Rhode Island, the Bison limited their event entries in order to improve seed times, heights and distances in selected events for the Patriot League Championships, which ultimately reduced the overall team score for both the men and women.

Tomorrow, the University hosts the Bucknell Winter Classic, with over 20 schools competing.

"The game plan is a little different for everybody," Donner said. "Some people will use the weekend to rest up. Others will compete in their secondary events and a few others will compete in their primary events to try to move up the Patriot League list and sharpen up."

"I saw a lot of people truly compete this weekend. I think we are finally starting to gain confidence as a team and it shows."

—Jen Marsh '05

"The general plan seems to be to get some faster seed times," Marsh said. "Coach doesn't want to kill anyone this weekend, just get fast times, have fun and feel good."

Swimmers continue to dominate

SWIM from page B1

1:07.75 time in the 100 breaststroke.

Freese captured the next two victories with a 23.78 victory in the 50 free and a 52.79 victory in the 100 freestyle. Lisa Rockwell '06 added to the Bison victory with 215 points in the three-meter dive competition.

"The Bison Invitational is our last meet before Patriots and we really just want to get through the invite and prepare ourselves mentally and physically for Patriots," Altman said. "After two undefeated seasons we are really looking forward to cleaning up at Patriots."

The women will host five Patriot League schools on Feb. 21 in the Bison Invitational before heading to Annapolis, Md. for the Patriot League Championships on Feb. 26-28.

Lectie Altman '06 propels herself from the blocks Saturday during a dual meet at Lehigh. Altman set three pool records during the competition, helping the Bison win their 16th straight dual meet.

Women's athletics celebrated on campus opportunities at high schools and colleges, equal pay for female coaches and sexual harassment within athletic departments. Hogshead-Makar is also a professor at Florida Coastal School of Law where she teaches sports and sports law.

MEDALIST from page B4

Hogshead-Makar was recognized nationally by Sports Illustrated in 2000 and was ranked 13th in Florida's 20 Greatest Athletes of the Century. She was inducted into the Hall of Fame for the National Association for Sports and Physical Education in 1993 and the International Scholar-Athlete Hall of Fame in 2001.

She has been inducted into seven different hall of fames including the International Swimming Hall of Fame.

Half of the athletes in college are female, and universities all over the country allow men and women to receive equal treatment.

"These opportunities should not only be available to the elite, but should be available to boys and girls of all levels in all sports," Hogshead-Makar said.

Extreme Auto Works

49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.
Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

DO YOU SEE THE POWER OF COMMUNITY COALITIONS?
They help build strong groups - like the PFC - your choice is to, now you will have a stronger voice and more power to make change. They help you to keep both sides of the story. If you're in a community group, ask if you can be there by building up with a coalition. We really believe that you can make change in your community. If you're not in a coalition, you're not in a position to make change. They'll tell you exactly how you can help. You'll be supported in what you have to offer. Just from this, you can see the power of community coalitions.

With all National City Credit Policy

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Units Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

LBRYNWOOD Rentals

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

Endless Summer Tours

#1 Spring Vacations!
Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited!
Book Now & Save!
1-800-234-7007
www.endlesssummertours.com

Now Hiring... ALDI INC.

- ✓ Stocker Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
- ✓ Flexible AM hours
- ✓ $7.50 an hour wage

+ Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.
110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

you were out late with your friends. you sleep through your alarm. your boss asks why you are late. what do you say? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters. pwc.com/lookhere

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

DO YOU SEE THE POWER OF COMMUNITY COALITIONS?
They help build strong groups - like the PFC - your choice is to, now you will have a stronger voice and more power to make change. They help you to keep both sides of the story. If you're in a community group, ask if you can be there by building up with a coalition. We really believe that you can make change in your community. If you're not in a coalition, you're not in a position to make change. They'll tell you exactly how you can help. You'll be supported in what you have to offer. Just from this, you can see the power of community coalitions.

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP in Delaware, a limited liability partnership, or its direct or indirect wholly owned subsidiaries, or any combination thereof, which are separate and independent legal entities. Member firms do not share information and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Arts & Entertainment

Student talent

University students outdo themselves at Open Mic Night

By KATE TANITA
Writer

Open Mic Night at the 7th Street Café is always a good chance to see an eclectic group of people, but on Feb. 6, University students may have outdone themselves. Musicians performed songs dealing with a wide variety of topics such as social commentary, love and one student even performed a song by "Outkast."

At least six of the 10 performers at Open Mic Night wrote and performed their own songs. Students played on a variety of musical instruments such as congo drums, a keyboard, a harmonica, electric and acoustic guitars.

As always, the café was jam-packed. People were rooting for their friends, and the café blenders churned, making drinks while the crowd applauded the acts. Laura Bender '06 coordinated the event and was an amiable emcee.

All of the students who participated in Open Mic Night were talented musicians, but there were certainly some highlights of the evening. One act was so incredible that almost the entire café fell silent during it. Amanda Brecker '06, Norrey Yebuah '05 and Adam Ahuja '05, who rocked the electric guitar, definitely had everyone listening.

"I think the highlight of the night was Amanda, Adam, and Norrey. Their sweet, smooth tune had the whole place in rapt silence," Ben Sykora '05 said.

Mike Rice-Shesh '06 had a friend play congo drums, and he also had a bit of social commentary about being Asian. His funny lyrics pointed out that people think he is intelligent because he is Asian and that, consequently, everyone wants to be his friend.

Dro Zanelli '07 had an interesting act, marked by one of his guitarists who had creative facial expressions while he played. This might have been due to his friends cheering him on and his being very absorbed in what he was playing.

Brad Dorrance '07 gave a unique performance by playing the guitar and harmonica at the same time.

Ian Rawhauser '07 finished the night with Outkast's song "Hey Ya." The audience had dwindled significantly since the beginning, but those that remained left with this song stuck in their heads.

Other student performers included Kaley Keener '07, Robbie Guempel '06 and Sean Conlon '06, Aubrey Grosser '06 and Craig Tully '06, Mandy Hart '07, Ryan Newberger '05, and Ian Rawhauser '07. A few of these performers, such as Guempel and Conlon, have perhaps earned the title, "regular" for these events.

Britt knits family history

By CATHERINE HAY
Writer

Lisa Britt '04 performed an original work entitled "Why Don't These Girls Speak Finnish?", and other questions my mother had to answer," this past Friday and Sunday evenings. As part of her THEA 319 senior project. With the guidance of Professor Gary Grant, Britt authored and enacted this portrayal of her Finnish heritage individually. The result was a very touching and memorable performance by a talented, capable and dedicated actress.

Britt opened the play as her grandmother, splitting and hauling wood while discussing her 13 children. Britt gave effective insight into her grandmother's Finnish lifestyle through examples of chores and costume evocative of the era, which helped Britt date the scene. However, Britt emphasized her grandmother's progressive spirit when she confided that she was content when her husband was not home.

The next woman portrayed was Britt's mother, Leena. The scene was of Leena dressed in stereotypical '60's attire, lamenting the fact that her mother would not allow her to wear pants to school. This scene was a classic representation of contemporary conflict between mothers and daughters and served as a contrast to the conventional and traditional life led by Leena's own mother. Her ultimate conflict presented was the choice between American men and their fancy cars and Finnish men and their endearing shyness.

The final woman portrayed in the performance was Britt herself. Britt brought a basket on stage with her and proceeded to give three members of the audience needles and yarn. She then patiently showed each of them how to knit through the example of her own scarf. Britt compellingly proceeded to bind the narrative together with an allegory about knitting.

Knitting is such a great gift, Britt said, because you touch every inch of yarn as you make your project. As it went through your fingers, you "load it up with everything you think and feel for that person."

Knitting was a tradition passed on from her grandmother to her mother and then to Britt, who says she will be sure to pass on the tradition to her own children. This historical tradition, Britt says, connects her heritage like the knitting loops. The family is connected and depends on ancestral loops.

Additionally, the hard part about knitting is that if you drop a stitch, the whole project could unravel.

Britt feels the self-titled conflict between "American-ness" and "Finnish-ness" could be the dropped stitch in her life, and she wants to use a metaphorical crochet hook to bring it all together. The research into personal family history that went into making this performance could be the experience needed to fulfill her present life.

Britt concludes by describing that her final goal in knitting is to knit a circle. This circular form of knitting, Britt says, also represents life. We are all connected in a circle and have to let the history of everyone else sink into us. We must remember the past and keep it with us, for if a part of history is dropped, the present will unravel.

The final tie-in for the whole play was Britt's comment that although she knits, she does not know how to finish a work by casting off. So she had her mother teach her. Britt essentially knit the loops of her play together as she stood and picked up her yarn and said it was ok if she did not know where her life was going to take her—her mother could teach her.

Courtesy of Rachel Schuldenfrei

WON NUMBER TWO

Courtesy of Tod Bieber and Juliana Brafa

Juliana Brafa '05 and her film-making partner, Tod Bieber, captured second place at the Muskegon Film Festival in Michigan with their short film "One Number Two." This marks the second win for the film, which will be shown at the Campus Theatre tomorrow at 1:00 p.m..

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products - fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards - trophies - business gifts

800-538-8009

Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromopromotions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

RENTALS

for
BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE JUNE 1, 2004

Large 2 BR APTS AT:
237 3rd & St. George
40 Brown St.

SOME APTS. AVAILABLE
FOR IMMEDIATE
OCCUPANCY

Remodeled, clean, excellent condition, excellent location

RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO CAMPUS!
(570) 966-1488

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.

Milton, PA

570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30

College Night

$5-3 Games & Shoe Rental

Arts & Entertainment

bursts the bubble

Clark's pageants of the past

By DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

"Fortuni Facts," the one-woman show written by and starring Bekah Clark '04, combined photos, sound clips and reenactments of her family's history in a way that was nostalgic, humorous and very personal. The play had a direct, revelatory style, with Clark speaking directly to the audience.

The play's namesake is a trivia game Clark made for her family several years ago, which included categories about vacations, sports and other family trivia. The play took shape as a final project for Clark's Individual Projects in a Theater course.

On stage, Clark explored her relationships with her siblings, parents and grandparents, framing them within the setting of her family's yearly Christmas pageant. The theme of the pageant ran through the entire play, connecting Clark's early love for theater with her experience as a theater major.

The play opened with video footage from one of these pageants, and original costumes from it were used as props.

In the play, the audience saw Clark begin as an angel in the pageant, then step up to the lead role of the Virgin Mary. Later she assumed her grandmother's role as director and then closed the show as "executive producer" of the Christmas pageant.

Clark connected the audience to her family by incorporating home movies and sound clips of members of her family.

The films were projected onto three screens suspended behind and above the Tustin Studio Theatre's three-tiered stage.

Dave Meilleur '04 thought the inclusion of family films provided excellent insight.

"It's such a personal work, so seeing the faces and hearing the voices of these people is important," Meilleur said.

Notable scenes included a comic scene with Clark as a private investigator assigned to her own brother.

More serious elements entered the play in the form of her grandmother's conversion to Judaism, a dramatic interpretation of a poem written by Clark's mother and a story of her younger brother going to the hospital for alcohol.

Both anecdotes entered the story as secrets about the family that younger brother Ben never learned.

Pete Kelly '07 found the play to be a good look into everyday family life.

"It was really all-encompassing, and very well done," Kelly said.

Between reminiscing about the childhood artwork and reflecting on trying on her sister's clothes, Clark showed her strong feeling for all her family experiences. The intimate details of her past were on display in every scene, and she shared them with generosity and honesty.

Clark brought the play to a silent, strong conclusion. She stated that "Fortuni Facts," the play itself, was a chance to show "the love, respect and dedication that goes into a project like mine, or into my grandma's pageant."

As both a writer and an actress, Clark presented a lot of personal material for the audience to see and experience. This artistically daring move, combined with a great deal of hard work and creative inspiration, resulted in a fine dramatic production.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Elizabeth's

An American Bistro

412 Market Street, Lewisburg

Best Lunch deal in Town

10% off lunch entrees with valid BU Student ID

New Winter Lunch Menu

Huge Chopped Cobb Salad

Romaine with Egg-free Caesar

Parmesan, croutons and shaved pecorino 7.00

Po Boy

Crispy oysters, bacon, slaw in a rustic roll 9.00

Grilled Pizza

Sun-dried tomato, mozzarella & Prosciutto 8.00

Wednesday-Saturday

Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2,

Dinner 5-9

Wine Spectator
Award

570-523-8088

Cinema Center

Sollersgrove - Susquehanna Valley Mall - 374-2949

Play Dates: February 6-12, 2004

Along Came Polly

(PG-13)

1:50, 5:15, 8:15

12:20, 2:45, 5:20

Big Fish

(PG-13)

11:40, 1:40, 7:50

12:30, 2:40, 5:30, 9:15

Butterfly Effect

(R)

1:40, 6:50, 9:25

11:50, 3:15, 9:10

Monster (R)

11:30, 2:40, 6:45

11:30, 2:40, 6:45

Barber Shop 2

(PG-13)

1:30, 4:15, 6:40, 9:10

50 First Dates

(PG-13)

11:45, 2:10, 4:30, 6:50, 9:10

Catch That Kid

(PG)

11:50, 2:45, 6:20, 8:30

50 First Dates

(PG-13)

12:15, 2:30, 5:15, 9:30

Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday-Friday,

Saturday and Sunday

The BISON BUNKHOUSE

"A Great Place to Stay when visiting Bucknell!"

The Bison Bunkhouse is a 4 bedroom, 2 bath family house, fully appointed for your stay and your enjoyment.

Call 570-522-0443 for reservations

www.bisonbunkhouse.com

Arts & Entertainment

And the Grammy goes to...

Courtesy of Reuters

Beyoncé Knowles won five Grammy Awards, including Best R&B Song "Crazy in Love" at Sunday's ceremony.

- | | |
|---|--|
| Album of the year
"Speakerboxxx/The Love Below," OutKast Record of the year
"Clocks," Coldplay Song of the year
"Dance With My Father," Richard Marx and Luther Vandross (Luther Vandross) Best new artist
Evanescence Female pop vocal performance
"Beautiful," Christina Aguilera Male pop vocal performance
"Cry Me a River," Justin Timberlake Dance recording
"Come Into My World," Kylie Minogue Pop Vocal Album
"Justified," Justin Timberlake R&B song
"Crazy in Love," Shawn Carter, Rich Harrison, Beyoncé Knowles and Eugene Record (Beyoncé featuring Jay-Z) R&B album
"Dance With My Father," Luther Vandross Contemporary R&B album
"Dangerously in Love," Beyoncé Knowles Female rap solo performance
"Work It," Missy Elliott Male rap solo performance
"Lose Yourself," Eminem | Rap album
"Speakerboxxx/The Love Below," OutKast Rap song
"Lose Yourself," J. Bass, M. Mathers and L. Resto (Eminem) Urban/alternative performance
"Hey Ya!" OutKast Female rock vocal performance
"Trouble," Pink Male rock vocal performance
"Gravedigger," Dave Matthews Rock album
"One by One," Foo Fighters Rock song
"Seven Nation Army," The White Stripes Hard rock performance
"Bring Me to Life," Evanescence featuring Paul McCoy Best alternative music album
"Elephant," The White Stripes Country album
"Livin', Lovin', Losin': Songs of the Louvin Brothers," Various Artists Country song
"It's Five O'Clock Somewhere," Jim "Moos" Brown and Don Rollins (Alan Jackson and Jimmy Buffett) |
|---|--|

MONOLOGUES RETURN

Tyler Kilder - The Bucknellian

V-Day Bucknell will host their annual production of "The Vagina Monologues" tonight at 8 p.m. and Saturday at 5 p.m. in the Harvey Powers Theatre. Proceeds from the student run production benefit the Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition and Juarez, Mexico as part of their International Spotlight.

Ragtime Orchestra presents a paragon of classic entertainment

The Campus Theatre hosts a showing of the silent film "The General" and a live performance of its full score by the Paragon Ragtime Orchestra

By DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

Sunday's screening of the 1927 silent film "The General" at the Campus Theatre featured both a classic comedy starring Buster Keaton and a historic and vibrant performance by the remarkable Paragon Ragtime Orchestra.

This group, led by Lewisburg resident and University tuba instructor Rick Benjamin, is based in New York City and is composed of many professional musicians featured in the orchestras of Broadway musical productions. The group specializes in performing the music of early theater and dance orchestras.

A film score was composed for "The General" in 1927. It was performed live at the movie's premiere, but had not been played again until Benjamin uncovered the score several years ago and restored it.

The score has been played only three times since its creation: at the film's premiere, two years ago at a Philadelphia arts festival by the Paragon Ragtime Orchestra and Sunday by the same group.

The entire presentation mirrored movies from the early age of U.S. cinema in the 1910s and '20s, with live orchestra accompaniment for both features as well as an interlude in between.

The theater was sold out for this unique musical film feature. University Assistant Professor of English and Campus Theatre proprietor Eric Faden remarked upon the above-capacity audience and the allure of the unique presentation.

"This was the most successful performance we've ever had [at the Campus Theatre]," he said.

"The General" will indeed provide all the members of the audience with bragging material. The screening of this film was nearly perfect, featuring a world-renowned vintage performing group accompanying a wonderfully restored and comically brilliant work from the early years of American cinema.

Faden introduced the film recalling a conversation with a French moviegoer in Paris after a seeing a silent film.

"Whenever I see a silent film, I always have an orchestra," he said jokingly.

When the other moviegoer asked where this was, Faden replied, "Lewisburg. It's where things are happening."

The showing at the Campus Theatre also included a short madcap comedy called "The Weak-End Driver." This film featured several high-speed chases, numerous pratfalls and vehicular mishaps played to uproarious comic effect.

Larry, the film's hapless main character who is described as "a big deal behind the wheel," wrecks several vehicles and precariously boards an airplane in flight as he pursues thieves who have stolen from his wealthy father-in-law.

The featured performer in the orchestra during both films was the percussionist and sound effects artist Kerry Meads. Switching rapidly from playing drums, playing other percussion instruments and making sound effects, Meads' spot-on cues for slide whistles, crashes and bird calls provided hilarious punctuation to the orchestra's quick-paced and carefully scored playing. He performed cannonball explosions, car crashes and collapsing bridges.

Lauren Popoli '06 said she was amazed at the show.

"It was incredible—he was a one-man percussion section," Popoli said.

The break between features showed off a different style of performance by the orchestra. It performed a laid-back classic blues number from 1917, "Beale Street Blues," by W.C. Handy. The song featured each section of the 12-member ensemble. The easygoing pace of the interlude provided excellent contrast to the fast-paced tempos of the accompaniment for both features.

"The General," the full-length feature, began showing as the orchestra played a military cadence on the drums. The piccolo soon

Johnny alternately avoids and perpetuates misfortune, crawling from one end of the steam engine to the other, detaching cars from the train and fumbling with firewood. Johnny's locomotive gymnastics come to a halt when the trail derails, leaving him out in the rain and leading him to stumble into a meeting of Union officers as he tries to find shelter.

After a 10-minute intermission, during which the orchestra took a break from the lengthy music scores that contained hundreds of cues for on-screen action, the film resumed.

Johnny and Annabelle make their dramatic and bumbling escape at the beginning of "Act II," running afoul of a bear, a bear-trap and lightning during a rainstorm. Upon regaining control of his engine, they make haste to tell the Rebel troops about the Union battle joined in, playing the Confederate anthem, "Dixie." This famous U.S. tune appeared throughout the film score in many different forms.

Courtesy of movieforum.com

Buster Keaton's 1927 silent film "The General" was shown Sunday at the Campus Theatre. The Paragon Ragtime Orchestra accompanied the showing with a live performance of the full score.

The film takes place at the outset of the Civil War in Marietta, Ga., as Johnny Grey (Buster Keaton), an engineer for the Western and Atlantic Railroad, attempts to enlist. He is refused entry in to the military because he is too valuable to the South as an engineer.

His dejection and subsequent abandonment by his fiancée, Annabelle Lee (Marion Mack), and her family immediately establish Johnny as a sympathetic character and the underdog hero of the film. When the military recruiter sends him away, the screen flashes, "If you lose this war—don't blame me."

Johnny's inept daring propels him into great adventure and incredible danger. Ominous chords from the orchestra accompanied the theft of Johnny's steam engine, whose name gives the movie its title, and the kidnapping of Annabelle by Union spies.

As the train starts back in motion, a flurry of rapid string and woodwind notes accompanied the on-screen action. Dramatic and rhythmic playing accented the ensuing chase, with stern militaristic drumming propelling the music.

The Union troops begin to fall victim to the same unfortunate mishaps that had befallen Keaton's character during the whole movie, as obstacles are hurled in their path and Johnny tears up the trail tracks behind him as he goes.

As "The General" gains speed and establishes a lead on the Union troops, the orchestra began to play more rapidly and in a happier, more major manner.

After a bridge collapses beneath the luckless Northern pursuers, the Confederate troops launch an attack on their vulnerable opponents and are led by Johnny, who delivers orders on behalf of the general. Here Keaton grapples comically with a sword that falling apart, often throwing the blade wildly when giving orders.

The Rebels go on to victory as Johnny unwittingly destroys a dam and takes out a deadly Union sniper. Johnny wins back the affection of Annabelle and the approval of her family and is named a Lieutenant in the Confederate army, all after being turned down at the movie's outset.

A brisk march concluded the Paragon Orchestra's presentation and the audience "march[ed] to the Egress," as indicated in the program.

Kutchins brings musical poetry to Bucknell Hall

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

For a brief moment in early February, spring was in the air... at least at Bucknell Hall. Laurie Kutchins read poetry inspired by the growing season at the second annual Drew Darrow Memorial Reading on Sunday evening.

After a brief introduction from Dierdre O'Connor, associate director of the Stadler Center for Poetry, Kutchins assumed her position on the podium in front of an eager, respectfully silent audience.

Kutchins, who has taught creative writing at the University in the past, teaches poetry and creative writing at James Madison University. She has had two books of poetry published, although none since "The Night Path" in 1997.

"I've really been in the underworld of the creative process for a number of years," Kutchins said before her reading, which included both recent poetry and some older poems she had not previously recited.

Despite her commute to the underworld, her musical style brought vitality to her poems, with themes such as growth and renewal.

Her musical style brought vitality to her poems, with themes such as growth and renewal reflected in both their natural and personal aspects.

al reflected in both their natural and personal aspects.

"My garden is the blank page, and the weeding I do is really the work I do with [the page]," Kutchins said, addressing the recurring garden imagery.

The link between Kutchins' words and the environment was apparent to listeners as well.

"I really like the way she personifies nature in her work. She actually reminds me a little of Willa Cather," Stacey Greenberg '06 said.

Kutchins even incorporated a poem about moonflowers, a popular subject for poets in the Lewisburg area, into her repertoire. This inclusion gave the reading an even more personal and intimate quality, as Kutchins seemed quite comfortable reading in front of old friends and colleagues.

Her vitality was also present in the second major theme of the evening—music. The lyrical element was emphasized in a selection of songs she wrote for a currently unpublished manuscript.

"I think I'm... jealous of musicians," Kutchins said before reading several pieces of song-format poetry.

Despite her lack of backing instrumentalists, Kutchins performed all her songs with grace and confidence. The final piece Kutchins read, "Wind Ensemble," aptly emphasized her musical, rhythmic style.

"I write with my ear—my ear is the primary instrument... for me," Kutchins said.

After the reading, she held a brief question-and-answer session, followed by a reception in Bucknell Hall.

Kutchins completed her visit Monday by attending a creative writing class and holding a more informal reading and question session at the Writing Center.

The Drew Darrow Memorial Reading was established to honor Andrew Darrow '87, who served as a computer assistant for the Writing Center. After Darrow died in 1997 his parents made significant donations to the Stadler Center for Poetry in their son's honor. In recognition of these gifts, the center established an annual reading to honor Andrew and his parents, Carl and Mini, both of whom attended Kutchins' reading.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

February 20, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 4

Features:

A special feature on the many types of winter and spring scarves.

See pages B10

ACE ANNOUNCES SPRING CONCERT

Photos courtesy of Reuters

Activities and Campus Events (ACE) announced that reggae artist Ziggy Marley (left) and jam band Robert Randolph and the Family Band (right) will co-headline to perform the spring concert on Sunday, March 7. Associate Dean of Students Kari Conrad said the ACE Concert Committee chose the bands because students have been requesting bands that are not part of pop-culture.

Patriot League changes the basketball schedule

By JOSH HERWITT
Sports Editor

The Patriot League, of which the University is a part, has made two significant changes for the 2004-2005 men's and women's basketball season.

Changes will include opposite sites for regular season games and a return of the league's postseason tournament to campus facilities.

Executive Director Carolyn Schlie Femovich said she hopes the new changes will benefit fans.

"The Patriot League administrators and coaches have undertaken a broad review of men's and women's basketball to include regular season competition and postseason tournament format," Femovich said. "The change to opposite sites beginning with the 2005 regular season will allow both men's and women's games to be scheduled as the premiere event. Games will be scheduled at times most conducive to fan support."

The most noticeable change that will take place in the regular season will be the elimination of doubleheaders.

Additionally, next year's schedule will feature men's and women's teams playing at opposing sites. This change will allow institutions to accommodate both the men's and women's teams equally for game times and practice schedules.

The revised schedule will play as an advantage to fans in giving them a home game, men's or women's, on every League playing date.

The current regular schedule format—four "travel partner" weekends (Friday/Sunday) and 12 of 14 League games on the weekends—will continue through the 2004-2005 with some slight modifications. The Patriot League's Council of Presidents said it believes that this format minimizes the amount of class-time student athletes miss and is most cost-effective.

See LEAGUE page B4

FORMER GOV. DICK THORNBURGH TO HOLD BOOK SIGNING

Courtesy of Public Relations

Former Pennsylvania Governor and former U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh will speak to the campus Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the LC Forum. He will also sign copies of his autobiography Tuesday in the Bookstore.

O'Leary houses Mars exhibit

By KIM DUNLAP
Writer

Courtesy of Reuters

A Mars exhibit is currently being held in O'Leary. The Mars Opportunity took its first color shot of Mars on Jan. 25.

LGBT holds gay marriage debate

By DAVID MERIN
Contributing Writer

San Francisco's allowance of same-sex couples to marry has stirred up a national debate. This debate made its way to the University's LC Forum on Feb. 12, National Freedom to Marry Day, as a forum on gay marriage was held.

Stacey Greenberg '06, Chad Freilino '06, Alyssa Schneebaum '06, Alex Dozier '07 and Stephanie Wright '06, all of whom said they supported gay marriage, presented arguments for and against gay marriage.

"Human rights are just that, human rights, and we should all be entitled to them," Wright said.

Wright said that to deny gays the right to marry is to discriminate against them, denying them the basic human rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution.

A discussion arbitrated by the panel's moderator, Professor of Political Science John Peeler, was held after the student presentations, during which members of the audience could offer their views and ask questions of the panelists.

Several issues were raised at the panel, including the issue of separate but equal rights and the importance of the word "marriage."

One discussion participant pointed out that while three of four Americans are against gay marriage, nearly three of four Americans support civil unions. Civil unions, which are allowed in a few states, provide all the legal benefits of marriage—same-sex couples, without actually marrying them.

Most panel members agreed that in their view the solution had to be "gay marriage," or else homosexual people would still feel that their unions were not considered the same as those of heterosexuals.

See MARRIAGE page A2

SPORTS Basketball

Men's basketball sinks Navy 54-52 in a close game.

See page B1

BUSINESS Walt Disney Co.

The Walt Disney Company acquires the rights to the Muppets.

See page B6

Dave's picks

Senior Writer David Allen reviews the recently released singles played by the University's radio station WVBU.

See page A9

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Feb. 8

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Gerhard Fieldhouse for the report of a student with an ankle injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. The student later returned to campus.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Larison Hall for the report of an unresponsive female student. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that she was in need of medical treatment due to an extreme level of intoxication. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and was cited for public drunkenness and underage consumption. The individual later returned to campus.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to assist the Lewisburg Police Department with a male individual stopped in front of Smith Hall. Upon investigation, a Lewisburg Police Officer responded that he had observed the individual having extreme trouble walking. The individual was identified as a student who was intoxicated and in need of medical attention. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and was cited for public drunkenness and underage consumption.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Swartz Hall caused by unknown person(s) discharging a fire extinguisher. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of a severe headache. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window in an exterior door of 64 University Avenue House. No suspects or witnesses were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student visited Public Safety to request transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of a possible dislocated shoulder. A Student Health Services driver was unavailable. Public Safety transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

Monday, Feb. 9

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium for the report of an employee who had fallen on the ice and injured his ankle. The employee was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to his home.

DISTURBANCE—Public Safety responded to the Trax parking lot for the report of a vehicle alarm sounding for an extended period of time. Upon investigation, Public Safety located the vehicle, which was not registered at the University. Lewisburg Police Department responded and provided the owner's name. The owner was a visitor who could not be located. The vehicle was towed from University property.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that there was a water leak in the Computer Center. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined the cause to be a toilet clogged with paper and with the flushing mechanism tied together, preventing the water from shutting off. Several rooms received extensive water damage. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, Feb. 10

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of an ill student. Public Safety transported the individual to Student Health Services for treatment and she later returned to her residence.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Recreation and Athletics Center for the report of a student with a finger injury. Public Safety transported the individual to Student Health Services for treatment and she later returned to her residence.

INFORMATION / MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that he had lost a set of four keys to University buildings. The keys were reported missing to the proper University officials.

INFORMATION / ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a report of the odor of marijuana. Public Safety was unable to determine from which room the odor was emanating.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a door in the Gerhard Fieldhouse. The incident is under investigation.

Thursday, Feb. 12

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Sojka Pavilion for the report of a student experiencing shortness of breath, possibly due to asthma. The individual was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON / APPROPRIATE USE VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Bertrand Library for the report of a male who was viewing on a computer information that violates the University's acceptable use policy. Upon investigation, Public Safety identified the male as a visitor. Public Safety explained the acceptable use policy and requested the person to leave campus. He left without further incident.

Friday, Feb. 13

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an employee feeling dizzy and having difficulty breathing. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to her home.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of an employee who was experiencing severe abdominal pain and bleeding. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to her home.

INFORMATION—A student reported to Public Safety that a visitor to the Langone Center requested a directory while behaving in a suspicious manner. Upon investigation, the visitor was identified as a Milton Police Officer and the employee was notified.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) set off firecrackers in Smith Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, Feb. 14

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a smoker station and broke a window at the Craft Center. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window pane in an exterior door of Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a restroom partition in McDonnell Hall. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—An employee reported to Public Safety that there were intoxicated persons at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts and that one was sick in the bathroom. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that there were two visitors who had consumed alcohol while under the age of 21. The East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness to one and a citation for underage consumption was given to the other person.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—While on a routine party check, Public Safety observed a visitor drinking beer at Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity. It was determined that the individual was under the age of 21 and served by the fraternity. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. A citation was issued for underage consumption. Charges are pending against the fraternity.

Campus discusses gay marriages

MARRIAGE From page A1

As the upcoming presidential election nears, this issue will continue to be in the public eye—U.S. President George W. Bush has publicly stated his opposition to gay marriage, and several state legislatures are rushing to ban gay marriage after the recent action in San Francisco and the debate in the Massachusetts Legislature.

The open discussion was sponsored by the Office of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgendered Awareness and Friends of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered.

Mars exhibit tracks two rover's activities

Courtesy of Reuters

The two Mars rovers, Spirit and Opportunity, are being tracked by Professor of Geology Craig Kochel. Images such as the one above can be found in an exhibit in O'Leary.

MARS From page A1

to see what it is, what the scientists are looking at... you can look at a hard copy image and anyone is welcome to talk to us about what they're seeing. The students can actually see how science works, how discovery works; it's not abstract," Kochel said.

As a former Solar System Ambassador to NASA for his expertise in geomorphology, Kochel said he is still amazed by the technology and advancements of the Spirit and Opportunity.

"They're doing the kinds of geology that we can do here in the laboratory but they're doing it on another planet. I think it's totally awesome; they're expanding their horizons and seeing what's out there," said Kochel.

The information derived from the voyages of the Spirit and Opportunity may yield data for not only a future on Mars but also our future on Earth.

"One of the goals of the Solar System Exploration division of NASA is to look for evidence of past life outside of the Earth, and life as we know it can't exist without some association with water. One thing that intrigues them about Mars is that Mars is very similar to Earth in many ways... it shows signs of having water at one point in its history," Kochel said.

Kochel said he urges students to take a look at the images offered by the exhibit, as they may offer a new perspective on the subject and the study of geology.

"It's a chance for our students

Now Hiring...

ALDI INC.

- ✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
- ✓ Flexible AM hours
- ✓ $9.51 an hour wage
- + Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.

110 E 8TH AVE

SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

Write for News

jalesko@

The BISON BUNKHOUSE

"A Great Place to Stay when visiting Bucknell!"

The Bison Bunkhouse is a 4 Bedroom, 2 bath family house, fully appointed for your stay and your enjoyment.

Call 570-522-0443 for reservations
www.bisonbunkhouse.com

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.

Milton, PA

570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30

College Night

$5-3 Games & Shoe Rental

EVERY 14 SECONDS AIDS TURNS A CHILD INTO AN ORPHAN.

AIDS HAS CREATED 14 MILLION ORPHANS WORLDWIDE. TO HELP, CALL 866-AIDS-FUND OR GO TO APATHYISLETHAL.ORG. AIDS IS PREVENTABLE. APATHY IS LETHAL.

UNITED NATIONS FOUNDATION

News

Alumni reflect on Brown v. Board of Ed. and urban public school reform

Ethan Cancell '87 (left), special assistant to the Pennsylvania secretary of education and former whole school improvement coach for the Boston public schools and Jim Nevels '74 (right), chair of the Philadelphia School Reform Commission spoke on urban education Tuesday. The Philadelphia School Reform Commission has been running the Philadelphia public schools since late 2001.

By DREW CALVERT
Writer

This year marks the 50th anniversary of the historic U.S. Supreme Court decision to desegregate schools and its assertion that "separate but equal" is not equality. In the 50 years since Brown v. Board of Education, urban education has never been worse, a panel of University alumni told an audience in the L.C. Forum on Tuesday.

"It has taken 50 years to dismantle what took 400 years to build," Chair of the Hartford, Conn., School Board Reverend Wayne Carter '79 said.

The other two members of the panel, Ethan Cancell '87, special assistant to the Pennsylvania Secretary of Education and Jim Nevels '74, chair of Philadelphia School Reform Commission, shared this sentiment.

All three were upset by the nationwide abandonment of urban education, citing problems as varied as poor busing, to lack of teachers' certificates, to state governments ignoring their responsibility. But for them, the biggest issue was money.

Nevels blamed the depression of city schools on economic stratification and budget impasses and said that as citizens, it is in our best interest to look at the realities of our cities.

Cancell spoke about the pitfalls of the desegregation that followed the Brown case. In his presentation, Cancell explained how desegregation might have been better implemented.

While the court decision is recognized as a relic of Civil Rights progress, he pointed out that as schools desegregated, white families with money fled to the suburbs, leaving behind hopeless school districts funded on per capita income. As a school improvement coach for Boston public schools, Cancell said he has witnessed the effects of such a movement.

"If you are a student of color in Boston without a lot of money, you are in trouble," Cancell said.

The panel members also proposed practical solutions, and have been deeply involved in the revival of urban education.

"This [situation] sounds very bleak, and you are far too young to be pessimistic," Cancell said.

Cancell also talked about the influential people and groups working toward achievement.

The panelists answered students' questions about how to get money and teachers for inner-city schools.

"I'm glad they were actively trying to do something, rather than just presenting a problem," Betsy Blumenthal '06 said.

"They presented solutions as well."

The discussion had even more relevance, as it took place during the ongoing primary Democratic elections. The Bush Administration's No Child Left Behind Act was as unpopular among the panelists as it is with most of the primary candidates.

"No Child Left Behind was the worst piece of legislation ever crafted," Carter said.

Carter said that if the situation continues with the increasing divide in educational opportunity, there will be an economic segregation within 15 years in the United States.

"The fight has only begun in treating students as they should be treated," Nevels said.

NEWS BRIEFS

By Julie Lesko

South Seventh Street apartment collapses

Part of South Seventh Street apartment that housed university students collapsed overnight Saturday. The building was evacuated after an interior floor in an apartment over a garage buckled. No major injuries were reported.

The building is owned by Kevin Gardner. Officials are unsure of the actual cause of collapse, but they speculate that too many people in the building was the cause. No criminal charges are expected to be filed, but an official report will be made after the cause of the accident is determined.

Antibiotics may raise risk of breast cancer

A new study has found the use of antibiotics can be associated with an increased risk for breast cancer.

According to CNN.com, the study of over 10,000 women concluded that women who used the most antibiotics doubled their chances of developing breast cancer. The study found that all types of antibiotics led to an increased risk of cancer.

Experts warn that the findings should not discourage women from taking drugs needed to treat infections and emphasize the necessity of more research on the matter.

Archdiocese of Los Angeles releases report of child abuse

America's largest Roman Catholic Archdiocese, located in Los Angeles, released a report Tuesday concerning sex abuse of minors.

The study, representing minors since 1930, reports the highest number of claims against a diocese to date, numbering allegations from 656 people who claimed to be molested by 244 priests, deacons, religious brothers and seminarians, according to MSNBC.com.

Many of the of accusers are males who were allegedly abused during the 1960s, '70s, and '80s. Many of these claims were not filed until the latest wave of scandals.

Haiti's president requests aid after Hincbe overrun by rebels

Haiti's president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, pleads for international assistance to end an 11-day uprising.

According to MSNBC.com, the uprising was led by rebels, who now control most of the roads leading to the Artibonite district, which will disconnect the northern part of the country from the "breadbasket" and home to nearly 1 million people.

Discontent has grown in Haiti since flawed legislative elections in 2000. Opposition politicians refuse new elections unless Aristide steps down. Aristide plans to serve his term as president until the end in February 2006.

FAA orders fuel tank changes

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) will now require airlines to install a system to reduce risk of fuel tank explosions.

According to MSNBC.com, an FAA official who spoke at a Tuesday news conference said the existing plans will be "retrofitted with the device and new plans that will have them as standard equipment."

FAA plans for a speedy process after cost-benefit analysis has been conducted.

The order will affect nearly 3,800 large passenger jets.

Two Detroit police officers killed at traffic stop

Allegedly motorist at a routine traffic stop exited his vehicle and shot to death two police officers, according to the Detroit Police Department.

According to MSNBC.com, "officers Jennifer Fetting, 26, and Matthew Bowns, 21, were shot around 2 a.m. Monday, becoming the 18th and 19th Detroit officers killed in the line of duty since 1990."

The suspect was later identified by his driver's license left at the scene and arrested.

Cingular Wireless wins bidding war

Cingular Wireless laid the groundwork for the largest cellular phone company in the nation with a $41 billion cash offer to acquire AT&T Wireless, according to The Washington Post.

The company will now have over 46 million customers across the nation, making it the nation's largest wireless provider. The deal came shortly after Vodafone Group, a British competitor, dropped out of the bidding, ensuring Cingular's $15 per share offer.

A joint statement released by the group said possible completion of the merger could occur as early as late 2004. Anti-trust regulators will now have to determine if markets controlled by the group are too concentrated.

Lewisburg area residents allegedly assault Dept. of Athletics employee

BROWN From page A1

"They [the attackers] started walking away down by the parking lot. We started to run after them to get them to stop so that the police could come," Wolf said.

"Mike, who was obviously distraught, started yelling at the kids, who ... [tried] to attack him again. We held the kids back and called Public Safety," Retzlaff said.

Snyder said the juvenile presented a knife and threatened to "cut" the employee.

"Some words were exchanged and one of the kids pulled a razor blade out from his bag, but nothing really happened," Wolf said.

The students and coach waited until Public Safety arrived at the scene, which then contacted other police stations to make official arrests.

Director of Public Safety Vince DeCercio said it is likely that the individuals were coming to the University to play basketball.

"What may have occurred is that these trespassers were admitted by someone who opened the side doors for them or by someone who was exiting," DeCercio said.

According to police, Jolin had a bleeding head wound, bleeding cuts on his hands and chest pains.

Pavlechko said Jolin was transported to Evangelical Hospital via ambulance and was released Tuesday evening.

"He felt more comfortable going to work than staying home and reflecting on his thoughts," Director of Athletics and Recreation John Hardt said.

According to Snyder, the juvenile was charged with aggravated assault, simple assault, two counts of conspiracy and terroristic threats. He was turned over to the Union County Juvenile Probation department and incarcerated at a juvenile facility in Bellefonte, Pa.

Haines was charged with aggravated assault, simple assault, and two counts of conspiracy. An arrest warrant was obtained and he was taken into custody. He is in the Union County Jail in lieu of $10,000 bail.

Jordan was charged with Aggravated Assault, Simple Assault, two counts of Conspiracy, Possession of a Small Amount of marijuana, and two counts of Possession of Drug Paraphernalia.

Wolf said the group never thought twice about coming to the aid of Jolin.

"There was never really a decision to make about whether or not to help Mike. The entire equipment staff has been working with the baseball program a long time, and we consider them a part of our team. We would always come to the aid of one of our teammates," Wolf said.

University officials are proud of the men who aided Jolin.

"I am extremely proud of our staff and our administrative team and coaches are certainly proud of our student-athletes and staff member for coming to Mike's aid. It is certainly refreshing to be associated with an athletics program and student-athletes of the caliber and reputation that we have here at Bucknell, especially in light of the handful of current national stories where specific athletes are noted for poor behavior and bad decision making," Pavlechko said.

Hardt said events like the assault remind him that the Bucknell "bubble" can be penetrated.

"There are safety issues and concerns that we need to watch out for. I am very proud of our staff for mobilizing on the issue. I feel badly for Barb and Mike, but I am proud that they were so diligent in their duties," Hardt said.

DeCercio said this incident is a classic example of why unauthorized people should not be allowed to enter University facilities.

"There was never really a decision to make about whether or not to help Mike."

The entire equipment staff has been working with the baseball program a long time, and we consider them a part of our team. We would always come to the aid of one of our teammates"

—Pete Wolf '04

"I would encourage staff and students to not admit anyone into the recreation area through unauthorized entrances," DeCercio said.

you accidentally knock
your roommate's
toothbrush into the toilet.
he's not home. what do
you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others.
explore what matters
at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Opinions

THE Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 4
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Saleme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackeman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editors
Julie Lesko '07
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRoss '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '06
Josh Herwitt '04
Keeley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaiash Malhotra '06

Marketing Director
Joseph Giordano '05

Adviser
James F. Lee

OP-ED POLICY

The Bucknellian reflects the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal, or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570)

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Community and University should be a team

The University was forced to face a harsh new reality this week; the once pristine Bucknell "bubble" has been violated.

Allegedly, three male Lewisburg residents illegally attempted to gain entrance into the Gerhard Fieldhouse on Tuesday. Two University employees, Mike Jolin and Barb Duggan, confronted the males and asked for proper identification or passes into the facility. When the individuals could not produce valid IDs, Jolin asked the Lewisburg residents to leave.

After a short argument, an altercation ensued during which Jolin was allegedly thrown to the ground and kicked repeatedly. The intervention by players from the baseball team ensured that the fight between the Jolin and the males came to an end.

Jolin had a bleeding head wound, cuts on his hands, and chest pains. He was taken to Evangelical Community Hospital and released later in the evening.

The University and the town will always have a degree of tension in their relationship, but this event must not cause a shift in thinking in the University's view of the town.

Tuesday's event was not about a Lewisburg resident who was angry with the University; it was about a kid who got mad because someone would not let him in a gym.

To think the relationship that has been built upon over the years between the University and town residents could be jeopardized due to one ignorant act is just as nonsensical as the violent act on Tuesday.

This incident should be a stepping-stone for a better understanding between the community and the University.

Unfortunately for both sides, there are a few individuals who damage the overall positive relations that the town and the University share. The majority of the student body and town residents peacefully coexist.

A number of University employees are local residents, and the connection between some of these employees and students is quite strong. The baseball players who came to assist Jolin show the bond between students and University employees.

A New reality?

"There was never really a decision to make about whether or not to help Mike ... we consider [him] a part of our team. We would always come to the aid of one of our teammates," Pete Wolf '04 said.

It should be our goal to extend this concept of teamwork to the entire community. Nearly every weekend the University fraternities, clubs and other groups perform philanthropic activities within the community. This type of service is important and helpful in building the connection between the University and the people of Lewisburg.

The interaction between the town and the University has been strained at times, but the humanitarian acts should be done for more than just service hours. The University students and town people should be working together as a team.

Lewisburg is both home to students and residents, and the Bucknell "bubble" should extend past where the last Bucknell students' downtown house lies.

Letters to the editor

Foster learning, not fear

To the Editor,

Bucknell University, a respected institution of higher learning, has forgotten its reason for existence—student learning. Will the University graduate of 2005 still be the free-thinking, independent, self-assured, productive adult his predecessors are?

Do "emergency" measures require students to be suspended without a hearing?

Many a time I have been asked to adopt "emergency" measures. I served for 12 years as a member of the La Canada Unified School District's Governing Board, a K-12 District in Southern California. Professionally, I am an attorney serving over 250 public school and community college districts throughout California.

Perhaps more importantly, I am the mother of three children, and my middle child is attending the University.

In the United States of America the individual is painstakingly protected by the Constitution, the law and the courts from abuses by the state. We demand fundamental fairness for even the most despicable of criminals. Yet University students are being denied their Constitutional rights. What happened to due process? What happened to fundamental fairness for our kids?

The law aside, does any parent really think the University's "emergency" policy will make a difference, a difference that will last past its ending date? The University policy can be likened to a frustrated parent's "grounding" of the errant child.

We parents know why we ground our kids. We do not think it will make them stop doing whatever they are doing. We just need a break from "the war," a week of not waiting up for our teen to arrive home late, or perhaps a week of no arguing.

I ask that the leaders of the University step back and reconsider their reason for existence. I ask that the leaders of the University think hard, think creatively and work to devise a broader plan, that will help its students learn not only the dangers of alcohol abuse, but also alternative ways to socialize, unwind and have fun.

If such a plan were obvious, every college in the United States would already have it. This is a job that will take students, administrators, faculty, staff, parents and communities working together for the right answer, not the easy answer. I volunteer!

Sincerely,

Meredith Reynolds
Attorney at Law
Miller Brown & Dannis

Frat party themes degrading to women

To the Editor:

Recently a party was held on campus with the theme "CEOs and Office Hos." As the name implies, men were supposed to dress up like CEOs, a position considered successful and valued in society, while women were supposed to dress up in a manner that society considers "trashy."

The theme of the party should not have been so shocking to me after years of seeing how women are often treated on this campus. For example, events last fall, such as the "Sketchy Professors and Slutty School Girls" parties and the handcuffing together of new pledges until they drank a certain amount of alcohol, foreshadowed what was to come.

However, the fact that women continue to attend these events is shocking.

Women, more often than not, participate in these extremely degrading events, rather than speak out against them.

What is it that silences women on this campus? Is it that in order to be accepted, one will accept being called a "ho," and even dress the part? Is that who you want to be? As long as this dangerously contagious silence continues to stifle discussion of these frequent events in the Greek system, nothing will change.

Speaking up can sometimes seem unpopular, but more than likely you are not alone in your concerns.

As Marianne Williamson wrote, "As we are liberated from our own fear, our presence automatically liberates others."

It was once told that sororities are about empowering women. However, on a campus where eating disorders, depression and self-esteem issues run rampant, what role is the Greek system playing in combating these problems by organizing and attending such demeaning events, in which the women are treated like "trash"?

No one can tell the difference between a supportive silence and an outraged silence until you own your beliefs and speak up. Many come to college to find their voice and to make a difference in the world. Silence can only kill those dreams and compromise your integrity.

Sincerely,

Shannon Gigliotti '05

Parents' concern with the alcohol policy

To the Editor:

I was troubled to read in The Bucknellian that an intoxicated student over 21 who was off campus and making no disturbance was suspended.

I took a random survey of codes of conduct at other schools, including many of Bucknell's peers, and concluded that Bucknell may be the only university in the country that would discipline, and certainly is the only school that would suspend, such a student.

There appear to be four different disciplinary approaches to off-campus alcohol use (and abuse):

1. No discipline for off-campus activities.
2. Discipline imposed for activities on campus and off-campus if they are controlled or sponsored by the university or a university organization. Other off-campus activities appear to be dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

The University of Pennsylvania, Middlebury, the Five College Consortium (U. Mass, Smith, Amherst, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke), American, Swarthmore, Harvard, Dartmouth, Hamilton, MIT and

Williams appear to follow this approach.

3. Off-campus activity subject to discipline if it meets a broad general standard or "imperils the integrity and values of the University community" (Yale University).

"poses a direct or indirect threat to the campus community" (Duke University) or is "of such a serious nature as to indicate danger to members of the University community and others" (Princeton University).

4. Off-campus activities subject to discipline if activity meets specific criteria.

At Wellesley College, this is "an activity which violates state and federal laws, threatens or endangers themselves or others, causes damage or loss of property, or disrupts the campus community environment."

At Princeton University, it is "behavior that (a) intimidates, threatens or injures others; or (b) leads to the destruction of property; or (c) infringes on the peace and privacy of others."

The Bucknell student suspended would not be disciplined under any of these standards or codes of conduct. Bucknell's draconian approach to the student stands alone.

It also was interesting to note that Princeton, Lafayette, Wellesley and Penn deemed a student's well-being more important than discipline and had a "Good Samaritan" policy. Under this policy, dangerously intoxicated students who seek medical assistance or other students who assist in securing medical assistance will not be disciplined for being intoxicated.

It is unfortunate that while Bucknell may establish a more reasonable policy in the near future, this will not be soon enough for the poor student upon whom such unreasonable discipline was imposed.

Sincerely,

Marcia and Bruce Butler

McDonald's profits increase despite mad cow outbreak, Mad humans responsible

By JAKE PALLEY
Staff Writer

Has the world gone mad? When I order a cheeseburger, do I have to say, "hold the mayo and the mad cow?" What is wrong with a little madness now and then?

Instead of just relying on public opinion and calling it fact, I decided to do some research to see what mad cow disease really is and how it can form. And so now, just to clear up the craziness, comes a superficially in-depth look at mad cow disease and the industrial killing fields that have created it.

First came the domestication of the cow—let's call her Bessie. Then came the slaughterhouses and the Industrial Revolution, and Bessie was defouled by hundreds of men as she was ruthlessly sledge-hammered to death, quartered, disemboweled, beheaded, deep-fried, packaged and then served as yesterday's lunch.

Next came Upton Sinclair, whose muckraking genius produced "The Jungle," a turn-of-the-century look at Chicago's slaughterhouses. In the book he described how human labor turned 10,000 cows a day into steaks, soups, fats, sausage casings and Durham's Pure Leaf Lard.

He also documented the unsavory side of the beef industry—how the rivers of spilled blood stood in pools one-half inch high on the killing floor. He described how horses and "downer" cows—cows that were diseased, had broken bones or were already dead—found their way into Durham's Pure Leaf Lard.

Sinclair also showed how humans sometimes fell into the boiling vats of meat below and how they also found their way into Durham's "Pure" Leaf Lard. Bacterial-infested, putrefied meat was simply reprocessed with some glycerin and then injected into boneless hams. With sausages, the only thing differentiating "select" sausage from normal sausage was the label. And the list goes on.

Fast forward 100 years: There's been a lot of change in the slaughtering/meatpacking industry. First, Upton Sinclair is dead. Second, the scale of the entire operation has skyrocketed. The United States now "harvests" 35,737,000 cows annually, according to The New York Times.

As for the disemboweling, we seem stuck in the stone age—Eric Schlosser, author of "Fast Food Nation," describes a migrant worker pulling out cow kidneys with his bare hands, over and over and over again, eight hours a day, seven days a week.

Worker safety also seems little improved—accident rates are roughly three times higher than in other manufacturing jobs. The risks are very clear—workers' heads and arms have been crushed by pork loin processing machines. And all this is made possible by expendable labor, since it seems that most slaughterhouses depend upon illegal migrants to work in what has to be the most revolting job in the United States.

What is also revolting is the way cows like Bessie grow up. We are all used to the pictures of dewy pastures with some cows munching casually on some hay. Well, you may find that cute, but you are also dead wrong. A la "The Matrix," where the dead are fed intravenously to the living, today's cows are fed cow parts. Baby cows are fed cow blood (we are the ones drinking the cows' milk). Little bits of chicken feathers, chicken feed (made of cow) and chicken droppings are fed directly to the cow. And if that is not satisfying enough, a cow can top off its main meal with rendered pig and chicken parts.

It has come to my attention that cows are supposed to be herbivores. Unless I am taking crazy pills, and cows really do cannibalize one another, we are really messing around with Mother Nature.

And here is the upshot: With all the junk we force-feed these cows, it is very likely that eating another cow's parts in cow feed provokes the formation of prions, infectious particles that seem to be the root cause of mad cow disease. Mad cow can be transferred to humans if we eat the cow's brain, as those Brits have been known to do.

But even if you do not indulge in that specialty item, you may still be eating it nonetheless. The buzz saw that separates the cow's vertebrae and lower portion of the head has the potential to spray thousands of mad-cow laden particles all over your $20 porterhouse steak.

In the face of clear danger, Japan has taken action. Over one million cows are slaughtered in Japan annually, but 100 percent of those animals are tested for mad cow disease. Out of those 1,300,000 cows, two cows did have mad cow disease. In the United States, nearly 36 million cows were slaughtered in 2002, but only 0.056 percent of them were tested for the disease. Yet no cases of mad cow were ever reported.

To say that mad cow disease doesn't exist in U.S. beef just doesn't add up. For the beef industry, there is madness all to its own. After all, why would the cattle industry ever want to look for an industry-crippling disease that would destroy its profit margins? It is much easier to test a handful of animals and declare the other 37 million of them disease-free. When I think of a cow today, I think of a shrink-wrapped piece of beef sitting in a plastic foam container at the local supermarket. There is a very real disconnect between the natural world and our own, and as we come to mechanize nature and make cows eat cows, we must be ready to pay the horrific consequences of "progress."

Cecily Cairns—The Bucknellian

And as delicious as mad cow may be, I would rather "steer" clear of the whole mess.

Kerry and Bush: should military records matter?

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

With Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) beginning to solidify his position as the eventual Democratic nominee for president, the media have begun to delve into Kerry's past and compare his record to U.S. President George Bush's.

Specifically, the media have been scrutinizing the differences and discrepancies of both men's military service during the Vietnam War. The media usually tell the same story and depict their lives as contrasts.

Kerry, after graduating from Yale University, enlisted in the Navy, went to Vietnam, commanded a small patrol boat like his hero JFK did, returned home a disgruntled veteran, joined the Vietnam Veterans Against the War and eventually began his political career.

Bush graduated from Yale two years after Kerry, was bumped up a long waiting list to get into the Texas Air National Guard (probably through his father's political connections), did not go to Vietnam and lately has had trouble locating documents that prove that he completed his service to the country.

While the above comparison between two different sons of privilege in the face of adversity is a compelling story, the media have spent so much time concentrating on this that they have lost their perspective on what this story's place is in the political debate.

The frame that the media

University should not promote smoking in places campus-wide

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Truth: the anti-smoking ads you see on television are trashy propaganda. If a corporation is wise enough to sell poison to millions of people, fund advertising campaigns against itself and still make a profit, it deserves a round of applause.

The tobacco corporations' only underhanded business practice is using their own impure product as a scapegoat for the physically self-destructive, albeit conscious, choices of people who buy cigarettes.

Nicotine is nothing compared to the venom flowing through the minds of those who decided at some point during their lives that they stood to gain something by smoking cigarettes. Nonetheless, smoking is merely imprudent; it is not morally wrong. If you want to smoke, then smoke.

The sad truth is that smoking has negative consequences. This is not to say that there is any truth to the paranoid diatribes of the political crusaders against the tobacco industry, who say that we will all succumb to secondhand smoke in some apocalyptic bar scene. Rather, cigarette smoke is simply annoying at worst.

Truth: the anti-smoking ads you see on television are trashy propaganda. If a corporation is wise enough to sell poison to millions of people, fund advertising campaigns against itself and still make a profit, it deserves a round of applause.

For non-smokers, many buildings both on and off campus are logistical nightmares. Every entrance to every building has some kind of trash-can-ash-tray thing in front of it, luring smokers to entrances like bees to honey. I do not want to be in the business of telling smokers where they can and cannot smoke as if I, a non-smoker, have any sort of moral authority in the matter (I certainly do not).

There are some places some of us absolutely have to go, as opposed to avoiding, say, a bar because of the cigarette smoke—there are the academic buildings in which we have classes, the Bertrand Library, the Gerhard Field House/Recreation and Athletic Fitness Center, and the dorms where many of us live.

The media's insistence on focusing almost exclusively on what happened 35 years ago at the sake of excluding the current relevant differences in the policy plans of Kerry and Bush is misguided and leaves everyone worse off.

For non-smokers, many buildings both on and off campus are logistical nightmares. Every entrance to every building has some kind of trash-can-ash-tray thing in front of it, luring smokers to entrances like bees to honey. I do not want to be in the business of telling smokers where they can and cannot smoke as if I, a non-smoker, have any sort of moral authority in the matter (I certainly do not).

There are some places some of us absolutely have to go, as opposed to avoiding, say, a bar because of the cigarette smoke—there are the academic buildings in which we have classes, the Bertrand Library, the Gerhard Field House/Recreation and Athletic Fitness Center, and the dorms where many of us live.

The media's insistence on focusing almost exclusively on what happened 35 years ago at the sake of excluding the current relevant differences in the policy plans of Kerry and Bush is misguided and leaves everyone worse off.

For non-smokers, many buildings both on and off campus are logistical nightmares. Every entrance to every building has some kind of trash-can-ash-tray thing in front of it, luring smokers to entrances like bees to honey. I do not want to be in the business of telling smokers where they can and cannot smoke as if I, a non-smoker, have any sort of moral authority in the matter (I certainly do not).

There are some places some of us absolutely have to go, as opposed to avoiding, say, a bar because of the cigarette smoke—there are the academic buildings in which we have classes, the Bertrand Library, the Gerhard Field House/Recreation and Athletic Fitness Center, and the dorms where many of us live.

The media's insistence on focusing almost exclusively on what happened 35 years ago at the sake of excluding the current relevant differences in the policy plans of Kerry and Bush is misguided and leaves every-

Write a letter to the editor

bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Arts & Entertainment

The Fitzwilliam Quartet performs centuries of musical styles in its last concert of the year

By TYLER MILLS
Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

Britain's renowned Fitzwilliam Quartet closed its 10-day residency at the University with a final concert that spanned centuries of challenging repertoire on Sunday night. The Fitzwilliam Quartet was joined by University music faculty members Martha Gibbs Hill (mezzo-soprano), Associate Professor of Music William Kenney (horn) and Professor of Music Jackson Hill (viola) as guest artists during the third concert of the Quartet's residency.

From Mozart's "Quintet in E-flat major" for horn, two violins and cello, to Hill's "Long Hidden Deep in Winter's Keeping" for string quartet and mezzo-soprano, Sunday's concert transported the audience through a 250-year evolution of music for the string quartet.

Gavin MacInnes '07 commented favorably on the diversity of the quartet's final concert.

"I think it's interesting you don't hear one kind of piece for the whole concert," MacInnes said.

The Fitzwilliam Quartet is known for its interest in performing and recording contemporary music. The quartet was founded in 1968 by undergraduates at Cambridge University in England. It became close with Russian composer Dmitri Shostakovich, and was the first ensemble to record all 15 of his string quartets. The Fitzwilliam Quartet continues to premiere contemporary works in its concerts across the globe.

The Fitzwilliam Quartet first came to the University in 1978. Supported by funds from the Kuschell Endowment, the Fitzwilliam Quartet returns

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

The Fitzwilliam Quartet performed the last concert of its annual residency Sunday. The concert included pieces spanning 250 years of music history, such as Dvorak's "Drobnosti" and Professor of Music Jackson Hill's "Long Hidden Deep in Winter's Keeping."

annually to the University campus for a series of concerts and classes.

Pianist and Professor of Music Barry Hannigan said he remembers when the Fitzwilliam Quartet first came to Lewisburg, because it was both his and the quartet's first concert at Bucknell. On Feb. 10, Hannigan performed Schumann's "Piano Quintet" with the Fitzwilliam Quartet, the same piece they played together for the first time 26 years ago.

"It was a real coming home for us. It was a 26-year anniversary," Hannigan said. Hannigan, who has performed with many professional groups over the years, always looks forward to playing with the Fitzwilliam Quartet.

"They are wonderful to play with. It is a real treat for me," he said. In addition to performing on Feb. 5, 10 and 15, the Fitzwilliam Quartet interacted with University students in management, music education, conducting, music theory and master (performance) classes.

University music student Stephen Young '05 had the opportunity to conduct the Fitzwilliam Quartet for a class.

"They are great to work with," Young said. "They don't need to be conducted, so it was intimidating but it was a great educational experience to get feedback from such great musicians."

The Fitzwilliam Quartet began Sunday's concert with "Intricate Web," a contemporary piece by Liz Johnson. "Intricate Web" is a single movement work that weaves together a spiraling web of aural textures. The members of the quartet drew their bows slowly across the strings to produce a glassy sound.

"Intricate Web" was at times dissonant, but more atmospheric than disturbing. Throughout the piece, members of the quartet used their instruments in unusual ways.

At one moment, the violinist smacked his bow across the strings to achieve a percussive sound, rather than the smooth sound produced when the bow is drawn across the strings.

Following "Intricate Web" was Dvorak's "Drobnosti," a piece for two violins and viola. A violinist himself, Dvorak originally composed this piece so he could play a chamber work with two violinist friends. In Drobnosti, a lyrical first-violin melody was woven over the supporting second violin and viola instruments. It was both gentle and expressive, revealing the high level of communication occurring between members of the Fitzwilliam Quartet.

Kenny and Hill joined the Fitzwilliam Quartet for Mozart's "Quintet in E-flat major" for horn, violin, two violas and cello. It is unusual for there to be twice as many violas as violins in a chamber ensemble. This composition, combined with the mellow timbre of the horn, gave Mozart's "Quintet in E-flat major" a rich, warm tone. The Fitzwilliam Quartet and guest artists tossed Mozart's gentle melodies into the Rooke Recital Hall with seamless clarity.

After an intermission, the Fitzwilliam Quartet was joined by Martha Gibbs Hill, mezzo-soprano, for "Long Hidden Deep in Winter's Keeping." Hill specifically wrote this piece for the Fitzwilliam Quartet to perform with its guest singer, Martha Gibbs Hill.

The text of this piece comes from a seventh century Japanese poem about the seasons. Martha Gibbs Hill's full voice sang in dialogue with the quartet. At one point in the piece, the quartet erupted into fluttering birdlike trills after the word "song" was sung.

The Fitzwilliam Quartet concluded its program with Shostakovich's "Quartet No. 12 in D flat major." The quartet's performance of this dark piece was intense, but not surprising regarding its history of studying with Shostakovich himself. Members of the quartet moved in their chairs during the performance to build enough energy to rip sound out of the strings with their bows. The audience received this chilling performance with enthusiastic applause.

Anyone who missed Sunday's performance can listen to the Fitzwilliam Quartet's numerous recordings. It has recorded Shostakovich's 15 string quartets with the Decca label.

Arts & Entertainment

Dave's Double Take

A closer look at this week's hottest singles

By DAVID ALLEN
Senior Writer

WVBU, the University's radio station, broadcasts 24 hours a day from its antenna on top of Dana Engineering. Its studio is located in the basement of Roberts Hall, and its playlist features the best in rock music, from classic and alternative, independent and mainstream, to the newest songs released.

The following five songs have recently been added to WVBU's song rotation. Tune into 90.5 on your FM radio, listen up for these tracks, and decide for yourself.

The Darkness—I Believe in a Thing Called Love

This song from an up-and-coming English band resurrects the free-wheeling guitar style and wild falsetto vocals of the late '70s and '80s. The lyrics are corny, almost amateur ("Can't explain all the feelings that you're making me feel / My heart's in overdrive and you're behind the steering wheel"), but singer Justin Hawkins delivers them with intensity and style as he sends croons and wails like Mike Patton, lead singer for Faith No More, a United States funk-metal band popular during the late '80s and early '90s. After a short blast of distorted guitars

Courtesy of
http://lostprophets.intheuk.com/

and another swing through the chorus, the song fades out into understated piano (reminiscent of Faith No More's "Epic") and overdubbed vocals ("To never fall in love again ...").

Tempering their aggression with musicianship and fondness for their musical predecessors has served Lostprophets well; "Last Train Home" is looming large on mainstream radio and MTV2.

The Bens—Just Pretend

The Bens are a one-name super group featuring singer-songwriters Ben Folds, Ben Kewler and Ben Lee. The only thing I know about Ben Lee is that he is married to Claire Danes, but as a fan of Folds and Kewler's disarming blend of country and rock, I looked forward to hearing the results of this collaboration.

"Just Pretend" features only acoustic guitar, piano and tuneful three-part harmonies.

his vocals into the stratosphere. He hits notes not heard in rock music since the days of the late, great Freddie Mercury and his band, Queen.

This song and the band itself strut a fine line between artistry and buffoonery, but the blend of fast-paced guitar solos, howling, high-pitched vocals and harmonized choruses in this song are fun, catchy and, above all else, they rock. Also check out the flamboyant, outer space video for this song, featuring guitars falling from the ceiling on cue and lightning shooting out during shots.

Lostprophets—Last Train Home

Lostprophets are another U.K. act, this time hailing from Wales. Their first album fit right in with the rap-rock style of bands like Linkin Park, featuring heavy guitars, turntables and anxious, overwrought vocals.

The first single from the band's new album, "Start Something," has a much different feel. Subtly chiming guitars open the song before the first heavy riffs enter, and reappear during the body of the song, driven by tricky, syncopated drumming.

There is no rapping or screaming on the single; instead, singer Ian Watkins

The song is reminiscent of the music of folk legends Crosby, Stills and Nash. Simple lyrics sung by all three Bens mesh together into a laid-back, folk-pop concoction, with verses sung by each member leading into the neatly harmonized chorus: "After all, in the end, just pretend." Those looking forward to new albums from any of these three artists should listen up for the single and look into The Bens' EP.

Courtney Love—Mono

Even fans of Courtney Love's work with the band Hole and its album "Celebrity Skin" might be disappointed with this effort. Love's voice has not improved with time; she still sounds like she gargles broken glass and chases it with scotch.

The lyrics of the song are typical for Love and focus on sex, drugs and rock-and-roll.

The wounded feminine anger of her earlier work is indistinct and misdirected here, as she howls about "ecstasy, hard drugs and bad luck."

She asks an unidentified musician, "Are you... the one with the spark to bring my punk rock back?" Her harsh, strident voice seethes in the choruses backed by driving electric guitars: "Oh God, you owe me one last song / so I can prove to you / that I'm so much better than him."

As with many of Love's songs, it is easy to see how the lyrics might refer to her late husband, the legendary Kurt

Courtesy of www.amazon.com

No Doubt—Everything in Time

This slow, steady ballad is a departure from the new wave/dancehall style of No Doubt's most recent work, and does not contain a trace of the ska/reggae sound from the band's '90s music. Light guitars bounce along at the beginning of the song over a thumping tom-tom rhythm. Gwen Stefani delivers the vocals in her standard nasal, swooning style.

As the track progresses, the guitar sound turns to a steadier strum as the drums hit harder and the bass playing becomes heavier and more active. Stefani adds double-tracked vocals, singing in harmony with herself as the sound grows more dense, but no faster and never approaching aggressive.

I was not a fan of No Doubt in either of its previous incarnations, but between this song and another radio favorite, "It's My Life," I'm beginning to see the winning nature of the band's crafting of catchy pop hooks.

World class banjo player Bela Fleck (left) and highly respected double bassist Edgar Meyer (right) visited the University Saturday. The duo played songs spanning from bluegrass to classical.

Fleck and Meyer reveal true talents at University concert

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

Few people think of acoustic banjo as an instrument that they would willingly choose to listen to. Combine that with an upright acoustic bass, and you have a duo few would even recognize, let alone pay to see. I feel bad for all of those people, because they probably missed out on this past weekend's Bela Fleck and Edgar Meyer nearly sold-out performance at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

Fleck eats, sleeps and breathes the banjo. He has performed with the likes of Phish, Dave Matthews Band and, of course, with his own group, The Flecktones.

Over the past several years, Fleck continues to reassert himself as the premier banjo player in music today, and his wide range of influences and styles illustrate his phenomenal musical talent. Meyer, similarly, is one of the most highly respected double bassists in the world.

The duo has worked together several times in the past, performing many shows and collaborating on Fleck's Grammy-winning album "Perpetual Motion."

During the course of the nearly two-hour show, Fleck and Meyer showed their true talents, spanning genres from bluegrass to classical, and they always maintained a sense of the avant-garde.

The duo worked its way into the evening slowly, playing the intricate piece "Green Slime" and progressing into several symphonic arrangements. The first set stand-out was a moving version of Miles Davis' "Solare," followed by a funky solo by Meyer.

The two seemed to wait for the second set to explore their true ability, performing a barrage of circular, flowing tunes and complementing each other brilliantly.

They started the second half with the relaxing "Blue Spruce," and quickly moved on to perform a Bach piece that stunned the audience to the point where the hall was silent for almost three seconds before it erupted in applause.

The two key moments of the show occurred during the second set in the forms of "The Bee Song" and "Woolly Mammoth." The former, a fan favorite that appeared on the "Bonnaroo 2003 collection" (released after the annual jam-band festival held in Mansfield, Tenn.), showed that Fleck can not only play well on a technical level, but that he has the ability to dance along the fret board of his banjo with such dexterity that one would have to believe it was a part of him.

"Mammoth," which closed the set, was a melee by both parties, Fleck attacking the strings with a ferocity not previously seen throughout the night, while Meyer moved up and down the neck of his bass without missing a beat, switching off between finger-plucked melodies and traditional bow playing.

While quite a transition from the more eclectic tunes Fleck is used to playing with the Flecktones, his chemistry with Meyer allowed for a night unmatched with regard to improvisation and technical genius.

The Flecktones will perform in York, Pa. on April 21. Meyers returns to the Weis Center on March 26 with the orchestra Orpheus.

WEIS CENTER
FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS
PRESENTS

Corey Cerovsek, violin
Paavali Jumppanen, piano in a program of Beethoven's "Violin Sonatas"

8 p.m.
Friday, February 20, 2004

reserved seating, tickets required

ALSO:
7 p.m., Thursday, February 19, 2004
a free, meet-the-artist lecture-demonstration in the Weis Center

CO-SHOWING EVENTS
Seán Curran Dance Company
8 p.m., Friday, February 27, 2004
International Sejong Soloists with Chul Shikhan, piano
8 p.m., Saturday, March 6, 2004

Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets used before a date 570-577-1000

Get in touch with your creative side...

A&E
E-Mail JPIetak@bucknell.edu

Houses & Apartments
All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Units Available

Call: 570-524-2121 x3
Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

BRYNWOOD Rentals

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All you can eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

SONGS FOR A SWEET TOOTH

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

The University Opera Company performed and produced a Valentine's Day dessert cabaret. Songs in the program included standards of jazz, blues and musical theatre.

Arts & Entertainment

The Juliana Theory attracts full house

The Juliana Theory's performance attracted a full house Saturday night at Uptown. The band had full attention of the crowd during their show, which included music from all its albums.

By DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

Uptown was at near-capacity for an outstanding performance by The Juliana Theory Saturday night. The punk band hails from Latrobe, Pa., and is an established member of the independent music scene. The band played an energetic set that included material from all of its albums and kept the crowd, comprised of about half devoted fans and half new listeners, in motion and singing along throughout.

Opening for The Juliana Theory was Last Page First, a punk band from Rochester, N.Y., signed to play only a few days before the concert. Although its music was entirely new to everyone in attendance, it played with energy and precision and served as a strong warm-up to fast, driving punk-rock music.

The singer stood on the right of the stage from the audience, which is different from most rock bands. The guitarist and bassist executed 360-degree spins while playing their instruments. Their fast, bright sound reminded some in attendance of Simple Plan, a Canadian punk band that came to Uptown last spring, while the heavier instruments and shouted vocals of several songs sounded more like the band Finch.

The most interesting part of its show was a cover of the theme song from the cartoon

The connection between performer and audience was greater at this concert than any at the University in the last year-and-a-half.

"Gummi Bears." After playing this song, the band tossed bags of Gummi Bears candy into the audience. "Some Sweet Story" and "Hard to Swallow" were the group's best songs and made its three-song extended play a worthy post-show purchase.

Concert-goers pushed toward the front as soon as The Juliana Theory began playing and sang along with intensity throughout the set. Though no mosh pits opened in the crowd, people were jumping up and down and pressing toward the barrier, propelled by their enjoyment of the driving instrument-but the other band members took a few songs to get into motion, and rarely left the part of the stage from where they started.

Detar began the set wearing a suit jacket over a long-sleeved shirt with a t-shirt underneath. As the stage lights and bodies in the audience began to warm up, he quickly shed his clothes.

The band played a new song, "My Heart is a Soldier," which is not found on any of its recordings. Detar emphasized how new the song was by saying that he had the lyrics to it taped to the floor near his microphone. The song's steady rhythmic pulse and impassioned singing kept their attention and moved many to nod their heads or sway along with the music.

The band followed with two slower-tempo songs from its newest album, "Love." "Jewel to Sparkle" and "White Days" also prompted sing-alongs from the audience. The energy of the crowd never waned, even during the songs less infused with adrenaline.

Detar was a charismatic and engaging front man for the band. After picking up a guitar for the hard-charging anthem "To the Tune of 5000 Screaming Children" and bringing the band to its full, roaring three-guitar sound, he frequently held it aloft and extended it from his body while playing. When not playing guitar, he walked from end to end of the stage, raising himself above the crowd barrier to look out over the roiling crowd up front and see the rest of the audience.

The other band members, apart from stepping up to their microphones to sing harmonies, focused on playing their instruments, frequently strumming and slashing at their guitars with great flourishes. The greatest instrumental feature of the night was the pinging, echoing guitar part in "Constellation," played by guitarist Joshua Kosker. By the song's end, Detar and guitarist Joshua Fiedler joined in playing with a tremendous swell of sound.

John Witmer '07 has been to other University concerts, but thought this was the best.

"Just in terms of the energy of the band and the crowd, it was the best," he said. "Brett [the lead singer] was great, getting into the crowd. He really seemed like he was enjoying himself."

Everyone in attendance at the concert also appeared to enjoy it. The concert was tremendous for established fans of The Juliana Theory and served as a great introduction to those unfamiliar with the band's music. The strong connection between the performers and the crowd extended after the bands left the stage, as members of both Last Page First and The Juliana Theory were signing autographs and taking pictures with concertgoers. All of the bands members I met were friendly and approachable, and very grateful to have performed for such a responsive and enthusiastic crowd.

The large contingent of The Juliana Theory's devoted followers present on Saturday night indicates that appreciation for live rock outside the mainstream music scene is still alive and singing along at the University.

Last Page First opened for The Juliana Theory at Saturday's concert. The punk band, which hails from Rochester, N.Y., provided an exhilarating start to the night's entertainment.

Vagina Monologues provides candid and entertaining look at women's issues

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

THEATRE REVIEW

Don't be uncomfortable. It's not like you haven't been around them before. After all, there are more than 1,800 of them on campus. As the "Vagina Monologues" would call it, Happy Vagina Fact Number 468: students and faculty alike support the estrogen-oriented half of our campus, even if it means braving their discomfort for an evening to watch the acclaimed "Vagina Monologues" presented last past weekend.

There were more than a few people squirming in their seats, both those with and lacking said body part, as the annual Monologues performance once again brought attention to women's issues with immediacy and intimacy. It remained fresh and brazen enough for any audience member to say, "That takes ovaries."

This year's performance was decidedly intimate, as some of the actresses wore satin chemises and others wore similarly comfortable pink and black attire. All the performers stayed onstage for the entirety of the show, sitting on tufted-up cushions to lend their support for the performers as each one spoke candidly to the audience on normally taboo subjects.

A variety of skits ran the gamut from outright comedy to intensely serious and thought-provoking social issues such as domestic abuse and rape—subjects that needed to be addressed so they can be given the urgent attention they deserve.

Many of this year's pieces have become annual traditions, such as "The Woman Who Loved to Make Vaginas Happy" and "The Flood," which were performed by Meredith Davis '06 and Flory De Liz Perez '07 respectively. There were also a few new skits in the show to add current political relevance to the piece.

"The Memory of Her Face," a collaborative skit performed by Tricia Bushnell '04, Emily Park '04, Mary Pancoast '06 and Katie Behrnt '06, was introduced to the Monologues to raise awareness about the suffering faced by women in the Middle East.

The event was sponsored by several on-campus organizations, including the Women's Resource Center and the Office of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered (LGBT) Awareness, as well as the relatives of several of the students involved in the production. The Friday evening and Saturday afternoon performances brought in many supporters, who packed the Harvey Purvis Theatre. V-Day President Jen Mellon '04 hosted the event, which was directed by Brittany Bohn '04, and both of these women were key components of the success the show enjoyed this year.

Following the Monologues performance on Friday night, three ladies were deemed honorary "Vagina Warriors" according to this year's national V-Day theme, and were honored accordingly: Coordinator to LGBT Students Frances McDaniel, Residential Life Coordinator and Sexual Assault Survivor Advocate Jennifer Donnagall and Sarah Wilson '04. Each of these women have made the campus community through her involvement in women's issues.

After Saturday's performance, all of the people involved in the Monologues production were available to answer any questions from the audience concerning the subject matter of the show.

Each year the V-Day at Bucknell sponsors a national campaign to promote women's rights. This year's spotlight group, the women of Juarez, Mexico, over 300 of whom have been murdered or have gone missing, will benefit from the sale of tickets and merchandise for each of the performances.

While there were more than a few uncomfortable audience members, many had a sense of connection and relevance in knowing what each person's vagina would wear, say and even smell like.

Eve Ensler, the creator of "The Vagina Monologues," would certainly be proud of this University's performances. With any luck, the annual performance of these monologues will promote the acceptance of a more open dialogue about the violence faced by countless women every day worldwide.

The yearly performance of the Vagina Monologues, featuring skits about women's issues, was held last weekend.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

February 20, 2004

inside
Opinions:

Volume 133, Number 4

Staff Writer Jake Pailey
blames humans for mad cow disease.

See pages A7

Men's basketball sinks Navy 54-52

By PIERRE HERNANDO
Staff Writer

The Bison (11-12, 7-3) recorded their fifth consecutive victory by outscoring Navy (3-20, 0-10) 54-52 in Annapolis, Md. The win was the squad's eighth in nine games, and has vaulted it into sole possession of third place in the Patriot League standings.

"Coach Flan continues to stress taking steps forward instead of backward. He says to focus on the task at hand rather than the tasks in the future. He is hard on us in practice when we make mistakes, because those mistakes can and have caused us to lose games. His key points are for us to be players and make plays, want it more than the opponent, and to believe in ourselves by playing with confidence," Antonio Glover '05 said.

After losing to the Bison 87-46 last month, Navy made sure this would be a defensive-oriented game. The score was tied at halftime, as both teams struggled to put up 26 points and shoot a shade over 40 percent from the field. Navy built a six-point advantage in the first 13 minutes of the second half.

Down 44-38 with just under seven minutes left in regulation, the Bison turned on the defensive pressure, and went on a 10-0 run that gave them a 48-44 lead with three minutes left.

Abe Badmus '07 used his speed and quickness to record a steal and a block on two consecutive Navy possessions and turned the forced turnovers into two layups. Badmus finished with seven points and a game-high five steals.

"As the point guard of this team, my job is to set the tone defensively by making it as difficult as possible for the opposing point guard to run their offense, and on the offensive end I must facilitate the offense, making sure the right people get the ball at the right spots on the court. I must also take care of the ball and be an offensive threat so that the defense stays honest," Badmus said.

With just under two minutes to play and the Bison up 50-49, Kevin Bettencourt '06 drilled a big three-pointer, his fourth of the game, to stretch the lead once more. Bettencourt tallied a game-high 17 points. The Midshipmen had a chance to tie but turned the ball over in the waning seconds.

John Clark '07 and Chris McNaughton '07 continued to progress, scoring eight points apiece. Charles Lee '06 struggled with shooting the basketball but turned in a very solid performance nonetheless, tallying nine points, 10 rebounds, five assists and two steals. Donald Brown '07 had four steals to contribute to the defensive effort.

Badmus said the team's first-year students were extremely strong.

"We have a great athlete and scorer in Donald Brown, the solid inside presence of Chris McNaughton, and then a very pure shooter and prolific passer in John Clark. These three alone as a recruiting class would make any coach happy," Badmus said.

Mike Higgins led Navy with 14 points. Chika Onyekanne scored 12 points.

Prior to the victory against Navy, the Bison (10-12, 6-3) pulled out another tight win against co-league leader Lehigh (14-8, 7-2). With the 64-63 margin of victory at Sojka Pavilion, the squad recorded its fourth straight win and its seventh win in the past eight games.

The game was tight early on, with the lead going back and forth during the first 14 minutes of play. The Bison increased their lead to 22-17 after a layup by McNaughton with roughly six minutes left in the first half. The lead ballooned to 32-20 after Glover scored on a jumper. Lehigh was able to cut its deficit to nine at the half, as Ra Tiah hit a three-point basket with 22 seconds remaining, setting up the 34-25 Bison lead at halftime.

Lehigh stayed within eight points during the first seven minutes of action in the second half, before cutting the deficit to 43-38 on a three-pointer by Kyle Neptune. Lehigh got to within 43-40 on free throws before the Orange and Blue built themselves some breathing room by going up 50-41, thanks to two buckets by Glover and three points from Bettencourt.

The visitors kept chipping away and eventually tied the game at 56 after a dunk by Earl Nurse. Lehigh took a 62-59 lead with 1:11 left. The Bison got to within one point after a McNaughton layup with 51 seconds left, before eventually tying it at 63 on two foul shots from Lee with nine seconds left to play. Bettencourt was fouled on the ensuing inbound pass and was able to convert on one of two foul-line attempts. Lehigh's last second shot was off center as McNaughton was there to challenge and grab the board.

Center Davorin Skornik '04 overpowers his opponent and takes the ball to the hoop in one of the Bison's five consecutive victories against Holy Cross at Sojka Pavilion.

Lee turned in a spectacular performance while scoring a game-

See MBALL, page B2

Track primed for league championships

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The excitement has been building all season toward this weekend's Patriot League Indoor Track and Field Championships at Gerhard Fieldhouse. After Saturday's Bucknell Winter Classic, the Bison look poised and ready.

The women want to keep their title while the men look to be a dark horse.

Abby Bouzan-Kaloustian '04 has contributed to two indoor championships while pole-vaulting for the University, and wants to be a part of a third.

"I thought that [Saturday's] performance was encouraging," Bouzan-Kaloustian said. "As a team I think we are all in tip-top shape... we are ready to compete. I have so much confidence in our abilities as a team."

Head Coach Kevin Donner could not agree more, saying he thinks that the women are "very hungry" and that their third-place finish at the Patriot League Outdoor championships last spring is the reason why.

"We should definitely be in the hunt," Donner said.

"Those of us that were on the team last year are definitely seeking revenge from outdoor leagues. We want to win."

Bouzan-Kaloustian said.

The women will go into the meet with the added confidence of a number of strong performances from the Bucknell Winter Classic.

"Christa's first appearance in the 1000 was awesome, a lot of our throwers had a great weekend, including Angie McFarland who [achieved a personal record] by a foot, and of course Maria's new record," Bouzan-Kaloustian said, referring to Christa Sawko '07, Angie McFarland '05 and Maria Garcia '04.

Garcia broke her own record in the weight throw by a little more than an inch, indicating that she will definitely be a factor this coming weekend.

The outlook for the men is not as encouraging. Navy and Army being the clear favorites. Navy appears to have the advantage after beating Army in a one-on-one meet, during which, an inside source from West Point reported, Army held nothing back.

"Army and Navy are the favorites on the men's side. American, Lehigh, Lafayette and Bucknell are the dark horses," Donner said.

Even though a third-place finish is the most realistic outcome, the men are still fired up and ready to compete.

"I am very excited for the races this weekend," graduate student Greg Costello said. "Leagues has been in my mind since the season started, and I am ready to put all my thoughts into action."

Costello holds the league's top performance in the 5000-meter run and looks to be a factor in the 3000m. The 3000 is at the end of the last day of competition when the points are coveted and most of the athletes competing are tired.

This year, the men's 3000 and mile look to be especially exciting, as the top 10 times in the 3000 and the top seven

See TRACK, page B4

Women's water polo wins opener at Princeton Invitational

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's water polo team kicked off its 2004 season with wins on Sunday over Wagner and Marist. After dropping the first of their three games in the Princeton Invitational, the Bison rebounded to snag a 9-7 win over Wagner and a 12-1 routing of Marist.

In Sunday afternoon's contest against Marist, the Orange and Blue strangled the Red Foxes' scoring efforts while eight different Bison players contributed goals in the effort.

Most of the scoring onslaught took place in the first half, during which the Bison outscored Marist 6-0 in the first quarter and 4-0 in the second. After a quiet third quarter and a solo goal from Marist, Bucknell added two more goals in the fourth to push the final score to 12-1.

Among the scorers there were four Bison with multiple goals, as Ashley Aiken '05, Katie Hartigan '05, Christina Behrens '06 and Sadie Abuhuff '07 each tallied a pair of scores. Cody Keffer '04, Amanda Nogic '06, Elizabeth Jensen '07 and Caitlin O'Meara '07 all scored one goal apiece for the squad.

Strong performances in the goal from Mandy Bynum '07 and Meg Fulop '06 were also key in the Bison's domination of the Red Foxes. Bynum had four saves while allowing no goals, and Fulop allowed only one goal and tallied three saves.

Earlier in the morning, the Bison picked up their first win of the season with a victory over Wagner, highlighted by Keffer's 100th career goal. Keffer became just the seventh

See TENNIS, page B2

See POLO, page B4

BREAKING LACES

The Breaking Laces brought their punk / pop blend of music to the Seventh St. Café Feb. 13 as part of the Late Night music series.

Sports

Sichko '05 sets new record at season opener

TENNIS from page B1

(5) (12-10) and then over Ken Tsui 7-5, 6-3. Matt Pikus '07 also recorded two wins over the weekend and Brian Cohen '07 had two wins.

"I was very impressed with the team's performance against TCNJ," Deneff said. "We matched up very well with our opponents in both singles and doubles."

The only Bison losses on the men's side Saturday went to Joseph Menezes '05, who lost to Justin Cook 7-6 (3) and 6-4, and Wes Madara '07 who lost to Zunic 6-4, 6-3 and Ehrlich 7-5, 6-3.

On Sunday during doubles matches the Bison played well. Sichko pulled even closer to breaking yet another Bison record, tying with Lutter and Kim Register '85 with 41 career doubles wins.

Sichko and Brown won their first match 8-0 and moved on to beat two other competitors 8-0. Gaskin and Berthod won their matches as well, 9-8 (2) and 8-1.

"Sam and I played very well together," Gaskin said. "We were able to come back from a 6-3 deficit to win in a tie-break. I think we really were able to keep each other in the match and pull through together as a team."

In Flight B, Curcio and Mills won 8-4 and 8-5. Clinton and Porter did not fare as well as the rest of the team, falling 8-1 and 8-4.

The men's team played well Sunday, winning five of eight matches. Deneff and Pikus defeated two TCNJ duos 8-5 and 8-5. Salam and Menezes let one team slip by 9-7 but won their other match 8-4.

In Flight B, DiChiara and Saperstein lost their first match 8-3 but rebounded to win their second match 8-2. Madara and Cohen lost 9-8 (3) but won 8-3.

"This is the best team I've been on here at Bucknell," Deneff said. "I'm looking forward to a strong season from the guys."

"I'm pleased with the results from the weekend," Helt said. "But we still have a lot of improvements to make prior to the Patriot League segment of our season."

The women return to compete Saturday in Olean, N.Y., for two dual matches against St. Bonaventure and then Niagara. The men's team has the weekend off but then travels to St. Bonaventure on Feb. 27 to take on St. Bonaventure and Buffalo in a dual match.

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included.
Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe one way $169.
Book Online
www.airtech.com
or 212.219.7000

Donate used sporting goods to the youth of Santa Domingo. Items can be brought to the front office in the fieldhouse.

Men's basketball wins fifth straight high 19 points, pulling down 10 rebounds and handing out five assists. He also had three steals.

MBALL from page B1

Lee has been one of the Bison's most-improved players this season. "I am pretty pleased with my game as of right now," Lee said. "I still think that there are some things I could work on. I think that when I can stay consistent then I will reach my full potential."

Bennett hit 10 free throws, en route to 15 points, and McNaughton continued his strong play by tallying 14 points, seven rebounds and two blocks.

"Chris's [McNaughton's] progress is steadily increasing, and it is needed in order for us to be a good team. I think he, along with his fellow classmates, have contributed greatly to this team's success. On a more individual basis, Chris is a good player right now that is very key to our success. Depending on how much he works, he has a very good chance of being a great player. I believe that he will be very successful in this program and this league," Glover said.

Lee also noted the contributions that McNaughton has made to the team this year.

"He has worked extremely hard to better his game. I am glad to see it paying off for him," Lee said. "He comes out and plays hard every game and plays like he has been in the program for four years. He has really matured through out the season."

Glover turned in a great game as well, coming off the bench and connecting on all six of his field goal attempts. The guard finished with 12 points and contributed significantly to the Bison's one-point win.

"I expect to do whatever it takes for my team to win. If that means I have to be more aggressive on offense and score points, then I will do that. If it means that I have to focus mainly on my defensive assignment, then I will do that. I put my team before myself, and I think all of my teammates do as well," Glover said.

After a rough start, the Bison have turned it around and are experiencing a high in the basketball season.

"I think with us being so young, we were primed for a rough start. You've got to take your baby steps in order to walk without falling down. The first half, our season was definitely a learning experience. We played teams that had winning records and had experience, and we took a lot from them in those games after watching some tapes. Now that we've played practically three quarters of a whole season together, we're starting to get the hang of playing with one another and we've built a lot of team camaraderie. Our confidence is sky high now, and that is another major reason why we're winning," Badmus said.

The Bison host league leader Lafayette (18-5, 9-1) tonight at 7:45 at Sojka Pavilion. The team plays its final home game of the season tomorrow, hosting Army at 3:15 p.m. The Orange and Blue will play two more road games at Holy Cross and Colgate before participating in the Patriot League Tournament on March 6.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Antorio Glover '05 shoots a free throw in an earlier win against Holy Cross. The Bison slipped by with a 54-52 win at Navy last weekend, making them 11-12 overall and 7-3 in the Patriot League.

Antorio Glover '05 shoots a free throw in an earlier win against Holy Cross. The Bison slipped by with a 54-52 win at Navy last weekend, making them 11-12 overall and 7-3 in the Patriot League.

Write for The Bucknellian. It's where the action really is.

Email ccairns@ or jherwitt@

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns

Sports Editor

Do you believe in ... mundane encores?

Well, Disney's done it again.

They've churned out another superbly casted, gracefully scripted and historically coordinated piece on a classic underdog tale borrowed from the pages of sports history.

The fact that Disney, a studio generally regarded as a perennial plot-mangler, has managed to lean on accuracy as a film's impetus is nothing short of, well ... a miracle.

Granted, the historical basis of Miracle wasn't a particularly hard one with which to work. Heck, they could have played a loop of Al Michaels' elation-strained vocal cords belting out the words "do you believe in miracles?" for 135 minutes and it would have been effective in kicking up impassioned sentiments from moviegoing sports fans.

Ease of project notwithstanding, the consensus seems to be that the filmmakers have done a marvelous job in letting a timeless story speak for itself, a tactic they may have cemented back in 2002 when they implemented a similar approach to the Jim Morris story in The Rookie.

That said, there is nothing—not even the mystical magic of Disney—that can quite parallel or recreate the emotional enchantment of the moment itself.

Of course, everyone will try anyway.

Sunday marks the annual anniversary of the U.S. hockey team's "miracle on ice," and chances are—especially in the wake of the feature film's release—no one is going to forget that.

What they will forget is the anniversary marked two days later on Tuesday—that of the gold medal game between the United States and Finland. Despite the fact that the Finland game was the contest that actually secured the gold for the Americans, it seems to fall by the wayside when it comes to celebratory reminiscence.

The Finland game was not exactly lacking in its own drama—a U.S. loss would have dropped the gold medal into the hands of the Soviets, giving the national enemy the last laugh. And when the third period rolled around, it appeared that the miracle serum had run dry, as our once-conquering heroes were in a 2-1 hole.

In the end, of course, the U.S. kids planted three goals in the final frame of the game and skated home with the whole shebang.

Still, the game ended up as a denouement.

ment, a "by the way," to the dauntingly improbable upset—and the symbolic upending of the entire Soviet empire—that had occurred two days before it.

It happens that way now and then—sometimes the penultimate just outgins the ultimate when it comes to profundity. Here are a few other cases in which the finale, by virtue of a jaw-dropping prelude, was doomed to an inevitable state of anticlimax.

It's 1951. Bobby Thomson is cavorting around the basepaths in jubilation after having hit what will generally be regarded as the greatest home run ever thunked out of a ballpark.

Mel Hodges' now-immortal radio call streams through the airwaves, "the Giants win the pennant!" New York players await Thomson at his return to home plate and Dodgers stand scattered about the field, defeated and disenchanted.

It is, and will remain, incomparably moving.

But the Giants had just won, as Hodges so emphatically stated, the pennant. Not the World Series. And there was, of course, a 1951 World Series.

Even with its own claim to appeal, the series—which the Giants dropped to the Yankees four games to two—was destined to pale in comparison to the battle royal staged during the National League pennant chase.

Sometimes it's single games that suffer at the whim of chronological misfortune and are destined to be shelved into the shadows of historical afterthought.

For example, if you're a baseball game, the drama of Oct. 21, 1975 is not the act you want to have to follow. Such was the plight of game seven of the 1975 World Series.

In game six, the Cincinnati Reds and the Boston Red Sox battled along in a deadlock that held up until the 12th inning, when gritty Sox catcher Carlton Fisk employed his air-traffic direction skills in aiming his long line drive into the left foul pole.

The desperately fair home run gave the Red Sox the win, keeping their Series hopes alive for another night. Another night was as far as it went.

Game seven turned out to be another step toward inurement for Boston fans, as the futilely intrepid Red Sox dropped an early 3-0 lead and allowed the Big Red Machine to roll on to championship status.

Fortunately for the Boston faithful, though, historians were so mired in the wonderment of game six that game seven may just as well have never happened.

Add to that list of forgotten finales game seven of the 1986 World Series, games six and seven of the 1986 ALCS and pretty much every angle of the 2003 World Series.

Even the Super Bowl, venerable media sponge of the sports world, has been out-spectacled from time to time.

Super Bowl II, for example, will never possess the historic clout boasted by its playoff predecessor, the 1967 NFL Championship game.

After the winning the NFL Championship—better known as the Ice Bowl—in -13-degree temperatures with a daring one-shot-deal quarterback sneak from Bart Starr, the Packers trouncing of the Oakland Raiders in the leisurely soft sunbeams of the Floridian-based Super Bowl was almost lethally mundane.

Just as the Ice Bowl ensured a predestination of inadequacy for Super Bowl II, so to did the 1981 AFC Divisional playoff game obscure the two championship rounds that followed it.

Searing heat gave the divisional game a point of environmental sensationalism, and was further boosted in the domain of memorability by the epic dogfight that persisted into overtime and through three missed field goals.

The image of heat-stricken Kellen Winslow being torched off the field by team mates was instantly embossed in the pages of history.

Such was not the case for the images associated with the AFC Championship game, when San Diego was easily expelled by the Bengals in a 27-7 rout.

And in the grand tradition of the obligatory horse racing reference, the 1978 Travers Stakes is worth mentioning in this string of thought.

Affirmed and Alydar put on a show in the 1978 Belmont that was sure to muffle the impact of anything that would occur during the later trajectory of the season.

The Travers was to be their rematch, a hopeful reenactment of their Triple Crown battles, but instead contributed to history no more than an asterisk. Affirmed was disqualified after an uneventful stretch run and the rivalrous duo's legend ended in irresolution.

It would be nice, of course, if all of the most monumental moments could be orchestrated to fall on the last moment of the last day of the last round.

Or better yet, if the events that unfold in their wake were so dramatic themselves as to avoid obstruction, timing wouldn't be so much of concern.

Then again, there's only so many miracles one can ask for.

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

BY JOE HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

America's pastime?

Alex Rodriguez became the newest New York Yankee earlier this week when the Texas Rangers traded him for Alfonso Soriano. Rodriguez has agreed to move from shortstop to third base to play along side team captain, Derek Jeter.

Babe Ruth was baseball. With his .342 lifetime batting average, 714 towering home runs and 2,211 RBIs, he revolutionized the game with his miraculous power at the plate. His grace on the field made baseball America's pastime.

He was loved. He was cheered. He was everyone's Babe. Everyone's Babe, except for Boston and its Red Sox fans. The year was 1919. It was one of sports' most controversial trades. Owner Harry Frazee sold "The Babe" to the Yankees for four payments of $25,000 plus interest and $300,000. Since then, the Red Sox, who won the World Series in 1916 and 1918 behind Ruth's magnificent pitching, have not won another title.

Eighty-four years of frustration, disappointment and distress. Can you say the "Curse of the Bambino?" Unfortunately for Red Sox fans, it might just be happening again.

In the last few days, the "Curse of the Bambino" may have quickly become the curse of Alex Rodriguez.

Is it no coincidence that baseball's greatest player today wears the infamous No. 3? Is it no coincidence that the reigning American League MVP will be standing in pinstripes in "the house that Ruth built" on opening day?

Scary, right? Wait, it gets worse. With other off-season additions, including superstars Gary Sheffield, Kenny Lofton and Kevin Brown, the Yankees' $186 million payroll might feature one of baseball's most dominant and dangerous lineups in the history of the game.

So where is the salary cap? Oh, George Steinbrenner and friends in the Bronx still haven't heard of such a thing.

"Baseball doesn't have an answer for the Yankees," Red Sox Owner John Henry said, according to ESPN.com. "Revenue sharing can only accomplish so much. At some point it becomes confiscation. It has not and it will not solve what is a very obvious problem."

With other owners noticing the Yankees' domination of the market, a call for a salary cap may be on its way. That is, if the player's union ever agrees.

"There must be a way to cap what a team can spend without hurting player compensation ... without taking away from the players what they have rightfully earned in the past through negotiation and in creating tremendous value. There is a simple mechanism that could right a system woefully out of whack," Henry said, according to ESPN.com.

Even with an all-star lineup and the best player in the game, the Yankees might have trouble living up to the hype.

Look at the Los Angeles Lakers this season. A team of four Hall-of-Famers—Gary Payton, Karl Malone, Kobe Bryant and Shaquille O'Neal—that was expected to run away with the NBA title has not exactly lived up to the fuss, falling six games behind the league's best, the Sacramento Kings, and ranking fourth overall in the Western Conference.

Injuries hurt, but who is to say that the same can't happen to Rodriguez, Sheffield or Brown in a 162-game season? Furthermore, whatever happened to the idea of team chemistry?

Steinbrenner, who plans to fatten this disgusting payroll to $195 million, has created an all-star lineup with two shortstops, two center fielders, two first basemen and two closers.

The real question is if Yankee skipper Joe Torre can possibly manage all this talent into a World Series team. Will Rodriguez be able to adjust to the hot corner of third base? Will Bernie Williams be able to take on the position of designated hitter?

The potential for a 1,000-run offense has been put in Torre's hands, but anything can happen this season.

Let's just hope Steinbrenner's greasy wallet doesn't have any room left for Barry Bonds or Albert Pujols.

NFL rookies look promising for 2004

By MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

It's official—Maurice Clarret has an agent. He should have hired a videographer to put together some tape of him actually playing, seeing as he didn't even play a full college season, and not many NFL teams are going to place much stock in his high school accomplishments.

There's something that really bothers me about Clarret's draft chances. Could it be that he doesn't have talent? No, that's not it—he had enough talent to play for OSU. Could it be that he's had a catastrophic knee injury? Well, no—he's in pretty good shape and has less wear and tear than most backs. Oh, wait! I know what it is! Maurice Clarret isn't a student of the game!

Actually Maurice Clarret isn't a student of anything really, considering he had trouble passing nearly remedial level classes at a state university. Well, that's not entirely true—he knows how to make contacts with gamblers and get free stuff from people. I guess that would make him the Pete Rose of football. Low blow—Charlie Hustle doesn't exactly merit comparison to the next Marques Dupree.

"Who is Marques Dupree?" you may ask. Marques Dupree was a highly touted young running back who had a successful freshman year, but couldn't handle playing for Barry Switzer at Oklahoma. He decided to transfer schools, then promptly bolted to the USFL for the big bucks. Dupree was a big

He was bursting with talent in high school and in his Fiesta Bowl MVP performance as a freshman, but he got beat up in the big leagues, and USC wide receiver Mike Williams helped lead the Trojans to a Rose Bowl win and a national championship in 2003.

name who had a fairly short resume. Ring any bells?

Well Dupree's pro career never got off the ground, and he never got to make as much money as he could have, had he simply finished college.

despite popular sentiments, the USFL wasn't exactly at the NFL's level.

Let's get this straight—I hope Maurice does well. Nobody wants to see a talented young running back out of the game before he can fulfill his potential. It's just plain sad to see an athlete who's washed up, especially when he never accomplished his goals. Maurice wants to go pro, so let's just hope that history treats him better than his forebears.

On this note of super duper early entries, we've got Larry Fitzgerald entering the draft.

The difference between Maurice and Larry is that Larry transferred to a military school to learn discipline and become a better student, and to avoid going to junior college, which would shorten his possible college career.

Larry played two seasons at Pitt, and came very close to winning the Heisman this year.

He should have won instead of Josh "I'm a Gino Torretta clone" White. Larry excelled in both seasons, and set the record for most consecutive games with a receiving touchdown, a record previously held by a certain Randy Moss.

Listen to the next Larry Fitzgerald interview you see on television, and you'll understand why he has a solid chance of becoming one of the game's greatest receivers before he turns 27. Then listen to a Maurice Clarret interview, and read any press release you see his name in.

Another young guy I thought should have considered

See NFL, page B4

Sports

Women's basketball suffers disappointing loss against Navy

By Teri Schlang
Staff Writer

With one member of the Navy women's basketball team scoring 16 points in the second half alone, the Orange and Blue suffered one of their most upsetting losses of the season. Navy won 65-42 over the Bison on Saturday at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md. The loss marks the first time in the last 14 meetings that the Bison have not defeated Navy.

"I have confidence in our kids and believe that they will respond and come back strong and ready to battle this weekend," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

Navy's Courtney Davidson opened the game with a three-pointer less than a minute into the game. Navy kept the Bison from scoring in the first five minutes of play. It built a lead of 8-2 less than six minutes into the half. It was not until Lillian Drumgold '05 scored the Bison's first six points and started an 8-0 run that the team gained the lead at 10-8 with about 13 minutes left to play in the half.

Navy scored two more points taking a 12-10 lead. Desire Almind '04 ended a four-minute drought for the Bison by converting on two foul shots. She put up two more points that gave the Bison a 16-12 advantage. Navy and the Bison battled back and forth until Navy took a 17-16 lead.

Brooke Tomovich '05 made two free throws that put the Bison ahead 18-17, but it was the last time the Bison would hold the lead. Navy outscored the University 11-3 in the final five minutes of play in the first half, finishing the half with a 28-21 lead.

The Orange and Blue struggled in the first half, making just six field goals out of 20 attempts, shooting a .30 accuracy.

"Every player struggled on the offensive end of the floor on the same night and the results were therefore not positive," Fedorjaka said.

Navy opened the second half strong, scoring the first five points. Navy's Davidson hit three consecutive three-pointers and scored 11 of the first 13 points of the second half. She led her team to a 16-point lead with about 14 minutes left to play.

The first four Bison points scored in the second half were free throws by Tomovich. The women did not convert a field goal until Almind made one with 12:21 to play. At this point Navy led the Bison 46-27. Almind scored another two points bringing the Bison within 17, but it was the closest the Bison would be during the final 10 minutes of the game.

"As bad as the loss was, I definitely do not feel that this performance should affect the rest of our regular season and tournament play," Fedorjaka said. "We need to regroup this week and get prepared for two big conference home games this upcoming weekend. The positive of our schedule in this second round is that we do get the chance to get right back home in Sojka for two games after that tough loss."

Navy built its lead to as much as 30 with seven minutes to play. Navy's lead of 30 was the largest deficit the Bison have been at yet this year.

The Bison made just four out of 23 shots in the second half, and converted on only 13-20 chances at the line. The Bison have not had such a low-scoring game since 1998, when Bucknell was defeated by Navy, scoring only 42 points. Almind led the Bison with 12 points, and Drumgold was the only other Bison in double-digits with 11. Navy's Davidson led all scorers with 23 points.

Bucknell fell to 11-12 overall and 4-6 in the Patriot League. The Orange and Blue are home tonight and Sunday afternoon as they host Lafayette and Army for their last two home games of the season.

Katie Hettler '04 shoots a jumpshot over a defender in a recent Patriot League game held at Sojka Pavilion. The Bison fell at Navy 65-42, dropping to 11-12 overall and 4-6 in the Patriot League.

Track to host indoor championships PL schedule changed for 2004-2005 season times in the mile are all under the IC4A mark. To add to that, Eric Schmidt of Navy hit the NCAA provisional time in the mile last week at Iowa State with 4 minutes, 3 seconds.

TRACK from page B1

"The mile is going to be a very competitive race," Costello said. "Within the past few years, the Patriot League mile has been just as competitive as other major conferences. This year should be no exception."

"It will be important to stay level-headed throughout the weekend," Bouzan-Kaloustian said. "A lot can happen in the three-day span, good and bad, but if we keep working hard like we have done all season, things will fall into place."

Costello stressed the importance of taking one race at a time and not worrying too much about the past.

"Now it is time to forget about times and focus on racing," Costello said.

"The fact that leagues is at home this year makes it even better," Bouzan-Kaloustian said. "I know a lot of family and friends will be there watching and we are definitely ready to give them all something to cheer about."

Cindy Carlson '04 competes in the 3000m run during a recent meet at Gerhard Fieldhouse.

NFL youth will shine during 2004 season

NFL from page B3

ered going pro early was Mike Williams of USC. The guy looks like a tight end, grips the ball like he's trying to crush and orange, and runs like a gazelle.

Any DB who sees tape of this guy, then hears he's got to cover him, is inevitably going to end up on a couch telling a therapist that he needs help to make the bad man go away.

This is not to compare Mike Williams to a villain—actually, if you play on defense, that's exactly what he is. He is the boogie man, Frankenstein and Jason Voorhees all rolled into one. He is immaculately constructed to be of dominating form. He will never stop, and he's like the boogie man.

By the time you find someone to look at what you're pointing to, poof he's gone. OK, so the boogie man parallel was weak.

But alas, as of now Williams has decided to stay in college and settle for another few shots at the Heisman and a couple more National Championships, but I guess life is filled with instances of sacrifice.

But let's wrap it up with a last point or two talking about Larry and Maurice.

There is a stark contrast between these two young men in terms of personality, and eventually it will translate into a contrast of bank account sizes and historical comparisons.

So which one is going to be Marques Dupree, and which one is going to be Joe Montana? I couldn't say Jerry Rice because that would've clued you in on my own opinion, which happens to have Maurice being a joke in a few years, and Larry laughing all the way to the bank, then to Canton.

LEAGUE from page A1

campus sites. The new split tournament format will reward the top two teams from the regular season by hosting a four-team "tournament" for a chance to advance to the League championship game.

"We believe the League Tournament at the Show Place Arena has been successful in many ways the past two years and anticipate another excellent tournament again this year," Femovich said. "However, the coaches and administrators of the League feel strongly that returning to campus sites for tour-

"We believe the League Tournament at the Show Place Arena has been successful in many ways the past two years and anticipate another excellent tournament again this year."

—Caroline Schlie Femovich, Patriot League executive director

nament play will reward a strong regular-season performance. It will also allow more students and fans to have easy access in supporting their teams in post-season play. The excitement of playing in front of large supportive crowds will create the kind of tournament atmosphere that our teams deserve."

The women's quarterfinal and semifinal games will be played on Thursday and Saturday and the men will square off on Friday and Sunday.

The championship game will continue to be played on the home court of the highest-remaining seeded team on the following Wednesday for the women and Sunday for the men.

Water polo starts off season with a win

POLO from page B1

player in the program's history to reach that milestone.

After leading the Eagles 3-2 after the first quarter, the Bison left the second half in a 4-4 tie with their opponents.

Bucknell then outscored Wagner 3-2 in the third quarter and 2-1 in the fourth quarter to complete the 9-7 victory.

Both Keffer and Meg Blitzer '05 contributed three goals to the final tally, while Hartigan, Jessica Trimis '07 and Mallory Sullivan '07 also added goals.

Bynum held strong in the goal throughout the game, recording eight saves in the effort.

"Sunday we played real Bucknell water polo and, especially against Wagner," Behrens said. "We played the whole four quarters and did not stop playing until the end of the game."

The two wins bumped the Bison's record up to 2-1 after the team opened its season with a 9-7 loss to Harvard on Saturday night.

The game featured the first of two three-goal efforts from Blitzer during the weekend, and also showcased two goals from Taylor Voeltz '07, as well as a goal each from Hartigan and Jensen.

Bynum had ten saves in her first game as goalkeeper for the Bison.

"Harvard was our first game of the season and we played very inconsistent," head coach John Zeigler said. "Despite that inconsistency we were able to tie the game late in the fourth quarter before Harvard sealed the game with two quick goals."

The Bison hope to maintain the momentum they developed on Sunday when they host Michigan State, Princeton, Harvard, Hartwick and Siena in the Bucknell Invitational on Feb. 28 and 29 in Kinney Natatorium.

Statistics

Bucknell Sports Calendar

Men's Basketball

Lafayette

Fri., Feb. 20

7:30 p.m.

Women's Basketball

Lafayette

Fri., Feb. 20

5:45 p.m.

Men's and Women's Track and Field

Patriot League

Championships

Feb. 28-29

10 p.m.

Men's and Women's Swimming and Diving

Patriot League

Championships

Annapolis, Md.

Thurs., Feb. 26

Women's Tennis

at St. Bonaventure

Olean, NY

10:00 a.m.

and vs. Niagara 12 p.m.

Sat., Feb. 21

2:00 p.m.

Baseball

at James Madison

Harrisonburg, VA

Sat., Feb. 21

2:00 p.m.

Women's Lacrosse

at Loyola Tournament

Baltimore, Md.

Sat., Feb. 21

Bucknell Men 54, Navy 52

##	Player Name	TOT-FG 3-PT			REBOUNDS											MIN
		FG-FGA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S
11	Clark, John	f	3-7	0-2	2-4	0	3	3	4	8	3	4	0	1	22
32	McNaughton, Chris	c	3-4	0-0	2-2	1	1	2	2	8	0	2	0	1	24
03	Lee, Charles	g	3-12	0-4	3-7	2	8	10	0	9	5	3	0	2	35
05	Badmus, Abe	g	3-4	0-0	1-2	0	1	1	3	7	2	0	1	5	27
12	Bettencourt, Kevin	g	5-14	4-10	3-3	1	4	5	1	17	2	3	0	1	35
00	Skornik, Davorin		1-3	0-0	1-2	2	1	3	2	3	0	1	0	0	17
04	Brown, Donald		1-3	0-1	0-0	0	0	0	1	2	0	0	0	4	13
22	Glover, Antonio		0-1	0-0	0-0	3	1	4	0	0	0	0	0	0	18
31	Niesz, Chris		0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	2	0	0	0	0	0	15
44	Viaer-McClymont, T..		0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	4
Team Totals			19-48	4-17	12-20	10	21	31	15	54	12	14	1	15	200

Bucknell Women 42, Navy 65

#	Player Name	TOT-FG 3-PT			REBOUNDS
		FG-FA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
13	Almind, Desire	f 4-12	0-0	4-4	0	5	5	4	12	0	3	1	2	34
41	Valdner, Kristin	f 0-2	0-0	0-2	1	4	5	2	0	3	1	0	12
15	Geosits, Lindsey	g 0-3	0-2	1-2	0	4	4	2	1	2	3	0	1	32
20	Hollobaugh, Lindsey	g 1-11	0-2	1-2	1	3	4	3	0	1	0	2	25
33	Drumgold, Lillian	g 3-10	0-1	5-7	1	0	1	2	11	1	4	0	2	33
11	Hatalsky, Laura	0-2	0-1	0-0	0	0	0	3	0	0	0	0	0	6
12	Barruet, Emilie	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	2
21	Hettler, Katie	0-0	0-0	3-4	0	0	0	1	3	1	2	0	1	6
31	Ketcham, Amy	1-3	0-0	0-0	0	3	3	3	2	0	0	0	0	16
32	Hudock, Kathryn	0-1	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	1
42	Fleming, Amanda	1-3	0-2	2-4	1	2	3	0	4	1	2	0	0	12
44	Tomovich, Brooke	0-6	0-0	6-6	2	3	5	0	6	0	1	0	0	21
Team Totals		10-53	0-8	22-31	9	27	36	21	42	5	19	2	9	200
(home team in bold)

(home team in bold)

2004 Bucknell Football Schedule

Day	Date	Opponent	Location	Time	2003 Record
Thu.	Sept. 2	at Villanova	Villanova, Pa.	7 p.m.	7-4
Sat.	Sept. 18	CORNELL	Lewistown, Pa.	7 p.m.	1-9
Sat.	Sept. 25	COLUMBIA	Lewistown, Pa.	7 p.m.	4-6
Sat.	Oct. 2	at Georgetown*	Washington, D.C.	1 p.m.	4-8
Sat.	Oct. 9	PENN	Lewistown, Pa.	1 p.m.	10-0
Sat.	Oct. 16	LAFAYETTE*	Lewistown, Pa.	1 p.m.	5-6
Sat.	Oct. 23	at Lehigh*	Bethlehem, Pa.	1 p.m.	8-3
Sat.	Oct. 30	at Holy Cross*	Worcester, Mass.	1 p.m.	1-11
Sat.	Nov. 6	FORDHAM*	Lewistown, Pa.	1 p.m.	9-3
Sat.	Nov. 13	COLGATE*	Lewistown, Pa.	1 p.m.	15-1
Sat.	Nov. 20	at Duquesne	Pittsburgh, Pa.	12:30 p.m.	8-3

*Signifies Patriot League opponent

—Compiled by David Seal

Your Dream: "I want to become a doctor."

Your Reality:

"I don't have the required courses for medical school."

The Johns Hopkins Post-Baccalaureate Premedical Program prepares college graduates with strong academic records to apply to the best medical schools by giving them the personal attention, the necessary science and math courses, and one-to-one academic advising.

If you or someone you know wants to pursue a career as a doctor, apply by March 1.

For more information, visit www.jhu.edu/postbac or call 410-516-7748.

JOHNS HOPKINS
UNIVERSITY
Post-Baccalaureate
Premedical Program

Buck Post Bac 04

This is B.U.

BOSTON
UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

AUSTRALIA
BELIZE
CHINA
ECUADOR
ENGLAND
FRANCE
GERMANY
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
NEW ZEALAND
NIGER
RUSSIA
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.

This could be you.

Come find out how.

INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS
SCIENCE

BOSTON
UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

232 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
Fax: 617-353-5402

www.bu.edu/abroad

We could pay
A-Rod $112 million to write for us ...

But we'd rather pay nothing and have you do it.

Support the small market ... write for
The Bucknellian.

E-mail ccairns@

BUSINESS & POLITICS

San Francisco mayor legalizes same-sex marriages

Couples from across nation flock to California; challenges to the declaration will be heard today in state courts

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

Political analysts have been trying to determine what will be a key issue in the presidential election, but after this week's events in Massachusetts and San Francisco concerning same-sex marriages, there is little doubt that the right to marry will be a top concern in November.

During his State of the Union address, U.S. President George W. Bush made a strong statement to the United States concerning marriage.

"A strong America must also value the institution of marriage. I believe we should respect individuals as we take a principled stand for one of the most fundamental, enduring institutions of our civilization. Congress has already taken a stand on this issue by passing the Defense of Marriage Act... That statute protects marriage under federal law as the union of a man and a woman, and declares that one state may not redefine marriage for other states," Bush said in the address.

On Thursday, San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom opened city hall to grant marriages to same-sex couples. According to CNN.com, 2,500 couples had walked out of City Hall with a marriage license by Tuesday.

CNN.com reported that Newsom made it possible for same-sex couples to get marriage licenses because he believed that same-sex marriage was "inevitable" and denying the privileges of marriage was "fundamentally wrong."

"There's also a constitution in the state of California that I swore to uphold just 39 days ago. The bottom line is I took an oath of office and read that constitution and nowhere in there did it say I should discriminate," Newsom said on CNN's "American Morning," according to CNN.com.

Couples came from all over the country and even from around the world to get married in San Francisco. The San Francisco Chronicle reported that couples came from as far away as the Netherlands, Switzerland, Thailand and New Zealand.

Despite their long trips and the uncertainty of the future of their marriage license, many couples were just happy to be officially married, even if only for short period of time.

"They can't ever take this day away from us," said Nancy Faria, who had traveled with her partner from Massachusetts, according to the San Francisco Chronicle.

"It doesn't matter what the

The bottom line is I took an oath of office and read that constitution and nowhere in there did it say that I should discriminate."

—Gavin Newsom, mayor of San Francisco courts do—I was married for a day in San Francisco," Maylene Kuahiwini told the Chronicle.

Many couples share Kuahiwini's sentiments, but groups in Calif. and in other states across the country are anxiously waiting to hear what exactly the courts decide to do.

In states such as Massachusetts, issues of same-sex marriage have been heard before state Supreme Courts.

According to CNN.com, the Massachusetts Supreme Court's 4-3 ruling that the state's constitution does not ban same-sex marriages forces Massachusetts legislatures to redesign the state's marriage laws in order to give gay and lesbian couples the same rights and privileges that are granted to married couples.

"Marriage is a sacred institution between a man and a woman... I will work with congressional leaders and others to do what is legally necessary to defend the sanctity of marriage," Bush said in response to the Massachusetts ruling, CNN.com reported.

Although the president has not committed himself to supporting a Republican initiative in Congress to see an amendment made to the Constitution, it is clear that Bush did not share Newsom's plans.

Thousands of couples are now awaiting the decision of California courts to see if their marriage licenses will be officially recognized. Legal challenges to the decision have already been brought to two judges in San Francisco Superior Court, both of whom delayed hearings until today at the earliest. One ruling declared that opponents of the marriages have not shown that they are illegal, while the other is requiring both sides to make stronger arguments for their case—which gives everyone a chance to claim a small victory, according to the New York Times.

These court decisions will determine if San Francisco must stop issuing marriage licenses. It also reports that once the licenses are sent to Sacramento to be officially registered, it is possible that state will return the marriage forms because they have been modified.

Many groups have stood up to oppose Newsom, claiming it was not within the city mayor's authority to make such a decision without consulting with or using the power of the courts or legislature.

J.T. Francis (left) and Josie Fuller (center) are married at City Hall in San Francisco on Sunday. More than 2,500 same-sex couples have married there since Feb. 12.

"The mayor can't decide what is constitutional or what is unconstitutional," said Terry L. Thompson, an attorney for the Alliance Defense Fund, according to the San Francisco Chronicle.

According to CNN.com, Newsom argues that the state constitution prohibits discrimination against same-sex couples, and that gay and lesbian couples should not be denied the same rights and privileges of married couples.

Organizations such as the Campaign for California Families (CCF) strongly disagree. According to the San Francisco Chronicle, CCF was a strong supporter of Proposition 22, an initiative that passed in 2000 and banned same-sex marriages in California.

"Marriage is only for a man and a woman. You need an egg and a sperm to create a child. You need a man and a woman to create a marriage," CCF's president Randy Thomasson said, according to BBC.com.

"The renegade mayor of San Francisco is violating the state law. He's pretending to be a dictator. He's imposing his own values upon the citizenry, and he is really out of order," Thomasson said, according to CNN.com.

"The long lines of couples outside of San Francisco city hall on Tuesday, and the couples already celebrating, would certainly disagree with Thomasson."

Many of the gay and lesbian couples that were present said marriage was not only about being happy but also about protecting children. According to the Los Angeles Times, baby carriages and children were a common sight in the three-block line that ended at the steps of the courthouse.

"You have to do a lot of planning and spend quite a bit of money to protect your children."

You have to have a trust and set it up because she and I are legal strangers until we get to the front of the line," Carole Kohler-Crowe said of the legal difficulties she and her partner faced, according to the Los Angeles Times.

Regardless of what the court decides in San Francisco, the same-sex marriage debate has been thoroughly invigorated and will undoubtedly continue to be a major point of emphasis in the presidential election.

"I, personally, believe that marriage is between a man and a woman. But I also believe that we ought to be able to not let marriage and the concept get in the way of respecting the rights of people to be able to visit a partner in a hospital, to be able to pass on property, to be able to live under the equal protection clause of the United States," Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) said, according to CNN.com.

Disney rejects takeover, buys Muppets

Muppet stars Kermit the Frog and Miss Piggy arrive at the premiere of the 1999 "Muppets in Space." The characters will be revived for new shows and features under Disney's ownership.

By EMMA POST
Writer

This week, the Walt Disney Company finalized a deal to acquire the rights to the Muppets and turned down Comcast's $54 billion bid to purchase Disney.

Disney's Chairman and Chief Executive Michael Eisner concluded decades-long negotiations Tuesday with the estate of puppeteer Jim Henson, purchasing the rights to his Muppet characters and franchise. According to Reuters, no specific price was announced, but two sources claimed that Disney agreed to a payment which included $40 million to $60 million in addition to a share of the franchise's future profits.

The Henson deal will give Disney the rights to produce new programs, movies and merchandise featuring the famous Muppet characters, MSNBC.com reported. The Henson heirs, who regained control of their father's old company from the German firm EM.TV last year, will retain ownership of the "Creature Shop," which designs and builds the Muppets, and all films and designs in the franchise to date, including "The Muppet Show" and "Fraggle Rock." Disney will own the new program "Bear in the Big Blue House." According to the Los Angeles Times, Disney is already planning a new TV show featuring the Muppets, although details are unknown.

Eisner denies that the deal with Jim Henson Co. was timed to emphasize the company's Monday rejection of Comcast's bid. However, the sudden resurgence of the deal after more than 14 years of on-again, off-again talks with Jim Henson Co. and almost a year after negotiations dropped out of the public eye, is convenient at best.

Even so, there has been no immediate effect on Disney's stock—it finished down two cents on Tuesday, after it climbed 18 percent when the Comcast offer was announced, according to Reuters.

Comcast, which specializes in distributing TV shows and networks, made its surprise offer in an effort "to get its hands on Disney's vast portfolio, which includes ABC television, ESPN and other cable stations and the Disney and Miramax movie studios," BBC News reported.

Comcast also agreed to undertake Disney's $11.9 billion debt, according to CNN.com. Disney's board of directors denied the proposal because the offer would have underestimated the value of Disney's holdings, offering $3.60 per share less than the actual value of the company's stock on the open market.

"We are committed to creating shareholder value now and in the future and will carefully consider any legitimate proposal that would accomplish that objective," the Disney board said in an official statement, according to CNN.com.

Eisner has recently been under public scrutiny for closing Disney's dealings with Pixar, the computer animation company that collaborated with Disney to create the box-office hits "Toy Story," "A Bug's Life," "Monsters, Inc.," and "Finding Nemo." The films produced a $2.5 billion total profit for Disney and Pixar, but agreements could not be reached as to how to split future revenues between the two companies, resulting in the breakup between the companies, reported BBC.com.

Business failures such as the Pixar negotiations may have made Disney seem weak enough to prompt Comcast executives to make the offer in the first place.

"What Comcast is saying is that Disney has let a number of their businesses fall away, and that they could do it better," BBC's Kate Noble said.

Comcast, the largest cable company in the United States, employs 59,000 people and serves more than 21 million customers nationwide.

Had a deal been reached to combine the companies, it would have created the world's biggest media company, beating out current title holder AOL Time Warner. Comcast's offer, and the continuing potential for its success, raises some interesting issues as to the future of the media industry.

"Companies are back to growth and M&A [mergers and acquisition] strategy as opposed to bad news and divestitures. When you consider Comcast-Disney and Vodafone's interest in AT&T Wireless, these are big growth deals, which we haven't had for a few years," said Ben Tompkins, managing director of Broadway International investment bank in London, according to CNN.com.

"This has never been about Mr. Eisner," an anonymous source in Comcast told Reuters. "It has been about maximizing value for the shareholders for both companies."

BBC.com reported that Comcast would probably make a higher bid in the near future. The possible merger between the media super-giants, combining Disney's content with Comcast's home markets, could create what Jessica Cohen, an analyst at Merrill Lynch called a "perfect, brilliant combination."

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Strong performance from Edwards in Wis. election

Kerry won a close race after leading polls by double digits, and Dean's third-place loss ended his campaign

By PETER HACKEMAN
Senior Editor

Sen. John F. Kerry (D-Mass.) won the Wisconsin primary Tuesday with 40 percent of the vote, holding off a surprising late surge by Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.), who finished with 34 percent. Former Vt. Governor Howard Dean finished a disappointing third, with only 18 percent.

Dean ended his campaign Wednesday afternoon, saying "I am no longer actively pursuing the presidency. We will, however, continue to build a new organization using our enormous grass-roots network to continue the effort to transform the Democratic Party and to change our country... The bottom line is that we must beat George W. Bush in November, whatever it takes."

Dean suffered the resignation of his campaign chairman, Steve Grossman, the day before the vote in Wisconsin. Grossman said he thought Dean should drop out of the race if he failed to win. Numerous news organizations have reported that, in the days leading up to Tuesday, Dean staffers had openly discussed their "post campaign" plans, including vacations and going to work for other campaigns.

Edwards had only 9 percent support in a poll one week ago, a distant fourth to Kerry's 45 percent. He gained 25 percent, and won voters who made their decision in the last days of the campaign.

"Today the voters of Wisconsin sent a clear message. And the message was this: Objects in your mirror may be closer than they appear," Edwards said. Edwards' message might also be working with Republican voters. According to the Associated Press exit poll, "an unusually heavy Republican turnout and a late surge in support from independents helped Sen. John Edwards battle Sen. John Kerry to a close finish in Wisconsin's Democratic primary."

Kerry sought to focus more on the fact that he won and less on the unexpected closeness of the election.

"The motto of the state of Wisconsin is forward—and I want to thank the state of Wisconsin for moving this cause and this campaign forward tonight," Kerry said at this victory rally.

Former Gen. Wesley Clark, who left the race and endorsed Kerry last week, received over 12,000 votes, barely losing to the Rev. Al Sharpton, who is still actively campaigning.

Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) speaks to supporters at Grand Chute, Wis. After polls showed him placing third in Tuesday's primary last week, Edwards' support climbed nearly 20 percentage points, and he finished just 6 percent behind Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.).

Kerry plans to compete in every March 2 state, focusing on delegate-rich California, New York, Ohio, Georgia and his home state of Massachusetts. Edwards intends to target Ohio and Georgia, with some ads in upstate New York.

Democrats also won the special election in Kentucky for a U.S. House seat. Former Attorney General Ben Chandler, son of former Kentucky Governor A.B. Chandler for the governorship "Happy" Chandler, won by 10 percent, 55 to 45 percent, over state senator Alice Forgy Kerr. The seat opened up after Earnie Fletcher defeated Chandler for the governorship November.

Wal-Mart plans sale of local site; new "super" store possible

By MATT HINSON
Senior Writer

before the sale of the current Wal-Mart property.

Many students have had mixed reactions to the possibility of building a Super Wal-Mart to replace the old Wal-Mart. Although they recognize the positive benefits of convenience shopping, students are concerned with the impact that the proposed complex may have on the local community.

Gwen Sout '05 is concerned about the possible implications a Super Wal-Mart could have on preserving the Lewisburg community.

"A Super Wal-Mart could take away from the beauty of Lewisburg," Sout said.

James Petcovic '05 said he worried that downtown businesses as well as businesses like Weis Markets will suffer. Super Wal-Marts offer a full grocery store and expanded inventory in addition to the goods that are sold at a regular Wal-Mart, allowing them to compete with more of the local businesses.

"The Daily Item" reported that one of the proposed sites for the new Wal-Mart would be a short drive up Route 15. According to the article, the stretch of land is set between Haefler Road and the Silver Moon Flea Market.

"They're already located in a shopping center, positioned next to a supermarket. This may be the only way they can expand," said Associate Professor of Economics Nancy White. "Such a strategy is not uncommon for the company."

She noted that Wal-Mart's typical practice follows the principle of "agglomeration"—integrating the store with other businesses that will not directly compete with the new outlet, but will instead turn the complex into a "one-stop" center, where consumers can find as many services and products as possible. Simply replacing the current building would place a Super Wal-Mart next to Weis, putting the two in direct competition.

The owner of the possible site is Art Keister Jr. of West Milton. The Kelly Township Planning Commission looked over development plans for the site on Feb. 9. The Daily Item reported that Keister has asked the Kelly Township Planning Commission to allow him to subdivide the property, such that it might be purchased by a number of retailers.

Potential newcomers to the site include Applebee's, a convenience store and a bank, among other merchants; however, no deals have been sealed as of yet.

"We have not received any

The Wal-Mart store in Lewisburg is a major employer in the area. Although the store is scheduled to close, a replacement could generate more than 1,000 jobs for the area.

applications for any of the proposed lots that would identify a grocery store, a food store or any other store," said Ralph Hess, township director of planning. To the Daily Item, "It's all speculation right now. There's no confirmed public information as far as who is going where."

France bans religious symbols in schools

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

The French National Assembly voted Tuesday to pass a law banning all "ostensibly" religious symbols from public schools. The law was approved by a large majority of the Assembly, with 494 votes in favor of the proposal, 36 votes against, and 31 abstentions, according to The New York Times. The ban prohibits symbols such as large crucifixes, Jewish skullcaps, Sikh turbans and Muslim headscarves.

Five million Muslims live in France, and some see the ban as an attack on their religious freedom. Many are the children of immigrants, who feel they are both French and Muslim. They feel that as French citizens they have the right to question the state.

"I'm very angry. It's not just, it's a law, it's segregation," a Muslim woman said, according to BBC.com.

Some think the ban will intensify fundamentalism and militant activities, while other Muslims feel that the law was made for their own protection.

"Personally, I am living in France because it is a secular space," said Venus Kavousian, an Iranian-born writer living in France.

Muslim officials are divided on the subject. Dalil Boubakeur, chairman of the French Council of the Muslim Faith, opposes the protests Muslims have held to show their disapproval of the ban.

"We have to respect the law. Muslims cannot be above the law," Boubakeur said at the Paris Grand Mosque, according to CNN.com.

Another Muslim group, the Union of Islamic Organizations of France (UIOF), is calling for peaceful protests. The UIOF Web site calls on French Muslims to "demonstrate calmly, peacefully and responsibly in a citizen-like way and without provocation that risks betraying our noble cause: the defense of fundamental liberties, in particular, religious freedom," according to BBC.com.

BBC.com also reported that Mohammed Sayed Tantawi, the Grand Sheikh of the al-Azhar mosque in Egypt, said that while wearing the veil is a divine obligation of Muslim women, this rule does not apply to Muslim women living in non-Muslim countries like France. Tantawi has to be diplomatic because he is one of the highest authorities in Sunni Islam, but he must also maintain Egypt's friendly relationship with France.

There have been numerous protests in France and in other European countries, as well as in the Middle East. In London, 2,400 protesters rallied against the ban, and many Muslim women and girls have protested at the French embassies in countries such as Beirut and Amman. Brussels, Lille, Marseille and Mulhouse are a few of the French cities that have been sites of major protests, ranging from 1,000 to 3,500 participants.

The ban will now be sent on to the French Senate, which is also expected to pass the legislation by a large margin on March 2, according to the New York Times.

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro
412 Market Street, Lewisburg
Best Lunch deal in Town
10% off lunch entrees with valid BU Student ID
New Winter Lunch Menu
Huge Chopped Cobb Salad
Chicken, potato, tomato, bacon and romaine 9.00
Romaine with Egg-free Caesar
Parmesan, croutons and shaved pecorino 7.00
Po Boy
Crispy oysters, bacon, slaw in a rustic roll 9.00
Grilled Pizza
sun-dried tomato, mozzarella & Prosciutto 8.00
Wednesday-Saturday
Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2,
Dinner 5-9
570-523-8088

Wine Spectator
Award

Wash Tubs Laundry
-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

DOR-DAY'S
GREAT SUBS!
Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Mya's Coffee House
Delicious Hot Chocolate available
with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Totem Tatoo
Area's Finest Custom Tatoo
and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
-State of the Art Body Jewelry-
-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trauman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience
Jamaica • Acapulco • Cancun • Florida • Bahamas
up to $100 Off
Beach Front Special - $499
All-Inclusive Special - $999
Per Room 1-800-733-6347
Bucknell U... Live Life the Beach Life Way!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

FEATURES

Local museums offer a view of history

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Life does not happen in a bubble, even at Bucknell. Rather, places and people are shaped by the history that formed and defined them. This history is one of the most evident aspects of life in Central Pa.

Several regional museums are dedicated to these people, places and the past—proving that history can be appealing, even in the middle of nowhere.

Slifer House Museum

Eli Slifer was an orphan, hat-maker, manufacturer and Pennsylvania State Secretary, but perhaps his most lasting legacy is his house. The Slifer House Museum is found in Lewisburg, nestled between two of the town's most prominent features—the Susquehanna River and Route 15.

Slifer commissioned Samuel Sloan to build the house in 1860 for $8,000. The home was constructed in an elegant Tuscan style that was as remarkable for its period as it is now.

"Even during the period people came just to look at the house," Director Gary Parks said. "It was pictured in Godey's Lady's Book, a popular magazine of the time and Victorian Homes recently in August 1999."

The attraction of the house and the museum still lies in the rare combination of ingenuity combined with historical presence.

A visit to the house begins as it would 150 years ago, with a stop at the calling card table. From there, the visitor steps into the formal living room, where guests were properly received. This plush room features many objects indicative of the Victorian period such as a needlework tapestry of George Washington dated 1876 and stuffed and framed birds.

Elegant Italian marble fireplaces and ceiling medallions in the parlor are original to the house and reflect the Tuscan influence. However, while the details of the home stick true to the period, past events kept all artifacts from being original.

"The daughter sold most of the original items after Slifer's death," Parks said.

However, with the refurbishing of the home as museum, many of these items began to trickle back in, and one can now view many of Slifer's original items. These include several machines from this local manufacturing company.

"He made hats for three years and he hated it," Parks said. "Then he formed a boat building company with Frick [business partner and brother-in-law] for canal boats."

This company later expanded its merchandise to farm equipment and machinery under the name Slifer, Walls and Shiner. At the museum, one can still view a corn sheller and clover separator from this period.

The next room, the kitchen, offers a peek at the local past through a collection of artifacts originating from Lewisburg and the surrounding area. Plank bottom chairs from New Berlin surround the authentic table and a stove from Lewisburg rests against the wall. A Pennsylvania long rifle hangs on the wall and is decorated with crescents unique to Peter Rowe, a Union County gunsmith. Perhaps most significant is a table in the corner originally from the house.

"It was a wedding gift to his [Slifer's] daughter-in-law in 1870," Parks said. "We had a Slifer Family Reunion here in 1994 and it came back then."

The tour moves to a new family, history and room in its next step. In 1908 Slifer's daughter sold the home to doctor Lamont Ross. The office still houses many of his medical instruments and texts.

Medicine remained a theme for the house after it was sold to the Evangelical Association in 1915.

"It became an old folk's home. People moved in in 1916," Parks said.

One wing of the house became the original Evangelical Community Hospital, which continued business there until 1957. According to Parks, many visitors now return to see the house where they were born.

In this and the next room, music lovers can enjoy an authentic Vitrola record machine as well as a Regina music box with 12 interchangeable discs dated 1894. Sounds and sights combine for an exclusive atmosphere of nostalgia.

The upstairs of the house features more period artifacts and decorations in the various bedrooms. The children's room, guest room, seamstress room, dressing room, and master bedroom accentuate artifacts of the age such as fainting couches, wedding dresses, butler's desks and era-appropriate quilts.

The artwork upstairs is particularly varied and striking. Five portraits of local personalities from the period hang in the rooms and hallway—two by John Frances (a traveling artist) and three others by Abraham Rocky. A less prominent, but equally valuable piece is a small drawing done by Slifer's son on the attic wall. Parks found the sketch and it has since been preserved and displayed.

The Slifer House Museum is open for tours Tuesday-Friday from 1-4 p.m.

Packwood House Museum

Eclectic, distinctive, elite—The Packwood House Museum and its collections are as rare as they are historic. Those who take a tour of the uncommon attraction become familiar with the diversity of its appeal, both in the past and present.

Despite the museum's name, there was no Mr. or Mrs. Packwood. The unique museum was the property and product of Edith Fetherston.

The building's past does not start with this remarkable woman, however. The now complex museum was built for and by commercial travel on the Susquehanna river. This early history is visible in the tavern room that contains many early area artifacts, including a lantern believed to belong to Ludwig Derr, Lewisburg's founder.

Most of the other rooms house Fetherston's memories and collections. Fetherston was a Lewisburg native. She earned her high school, undergraduate and masters degrees in languages.

Fetherston was a world traveler and language aficionado, and many of

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian
In the Artist Studio at the Packwood House, a dentist's chair was installed for Edith Fetherston's convenience.

the museum's collections reflect this taste. The museum is currently housing a display labeled, "the road taken," detailing Fetherston's visits. The exhibit features souvenirs, postcards and maps, as well as a traditional tray from Japan and brazier belonging to Field Marshall Allenby, a U.S. General in Egypt.

Fetherston's international tastes are also echoed in many of the items presented in the house. The main parlor showcases richly embroidered chairs from China and elephants indicative of her taste for the exotic.

Art is another theme in the house. Fetherston herself was an amateur painter, and her work is showcased prominently throughout her home. Specifically, one room labeled the Gallery holds four walls of her unique style featuring orchids, wildlife, landscapes and abstract scenes. Fetherston held shows at the University, as well as in several of the cities that she made her home, including Pittsburgh and New York.

Another room houses the designs of fellow artist and friend Bruce Mitchell, an artist in residence at the university. Many of his paintings depict familiar scenes of life in Lewisburg and at the university.

Most eminent, however, are several signed Tiffany works, including a bowl in the dining room and a lamp in one of the upstairs rooms.

Perhaps the most exceptional features in the museum are the items reflecting Fetherston's idiosyncratic personality. Her art studio also houses an antique dentist's chair for house calls, one of the top collections of Pa., quilts and numerous items on loan from the Smithsonian Museum, to which Fetherston donated many of her eclectic effects.

The many features of the museum are tied together in the history of the area and life and interests of its eccentric but remarkable owner. Tours run Tuesday-Saturday from 1-5 p.m. at its Market St. location in Lewisburg.

What to do
in the middle of NOWHERE

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian
The Slifer House is located only a short walk from campus.

Brigade campaign reaches for a magic number

By STUART CUBBON
Contributing Writer

Hurricane Mitch struck Central America, resulting in flooding and mudslides that killed thousands of people. To add to the tragedy, hundreds more died in October 1998 in areas such as Nueva Vida, Nicaragua—a city hit especially hard by the storm—from the ensuing lack of food and medical treatment.

The Bucknell Brigade has come to this area's aid. The Brigade is a group of University students, faculty and staff members that is committed to helping the poverty-stricken residents of Nueva Vida.

After Hurricane Mitch struck, the Brigade began collecting food, money, medical and school supplies to take to Nicaragua on semi-annual trips. In March 2000, the Bucknell Brigade began work constructing a permanent medical clinic to aid the 15,000 residents of the developing community in Nueva Vida.

Much of the money for the clinic has been raised by the University and Lewisburg community volunteers, and the Bucknell Brigade has committed to raising $30,000 per academic year to help buy supplies and pay the clinic workers' salaries.

Almost six years and 11 trips later, the Bucknell Brigade is still passionately involved with the residents of Nueva Vida and is beginning a new campaign to collect supplies for its upcoming trip over spring break.

The "Campaign of 1826" is the idea of Brigade member Alexander Suarez-Sanchez '04, and is inspired by the past five years, or 1826 days, that the Bucknell Brigade members have been working with the residents of the Nicaraguan community.

The campaign is asking students, families and organizations to collect 1826 items to donate to the Nueva Vida clinic. Items should be medical supplies such as aspirin, bandages or vitamins or school supplies such as notebooks or pencils. These items will be taken to the clinic by members of the Bucknell Brigade and distributed to the community.

The brigade members said not to be discouraged if you cannot collect 1826 items.

"We would like any group or individual to set [his or her] own goal, whether it is 1826 backpacks or five bottles of aspirin. This campaign is an effort to raise the awareness of the Nicaraguan community's needs and try to get people and organizations to contribute whatever they are capable of contributing," said Janice Butler, director of service learning and the Brigade's trip coordinator.

The campaign, which began Feb. 13, will continue through March 12 when the Brigade will leave for its 12th trip to Nueva Vida. Groups and organizations are encouraged to collect items and bring them to Butler's office, located at 121 Taylor Hall.

Photo courtesy of Tyler Kidder
At its site for the 2002 spring break trip to Nicaragua, the Bucknell Brigade team worked closely with the citizens of Nueva Vida. Another team will be leaving next month to continue the tradition of community service that began 1826 days as of the spring break trip.

THE BUCKNELLIAN

STYLE AND SUBSTANCE ...

OUR READERS ON
THE OTHER HAND ...

Go ahead and grab a slab

BJ's Steak and Rib house will make sure you don't leave hungry

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

RESTAURANT REVIEW

There is a place not too far from here where steak is a way of life. Extending beyond a simple meal, it becomes an experience for the entire body and mind. For those of us out there who find the slices of overdone meat from the Caf just not sufficient anymore, it is time to take a journey to BJ's Steak and Rib House.

With two locations in the tri-county area, Danville and Selingsgrove, BJ's is an excellent experience in dining.

In addition to steaks, it offers a wide range of deliciously prepared main courses, which can be complemented perfectly by a selection from their list of side dishes. The atmosphere is worthy of both casual attire and fancier garb, making it excellent selection. Cooked to medium-rare perfection, I complemented it with garlic mashed potatoes and a tossed salad. After braving my way through most of the food I found myself full to the point where I almost had to loosen my belt a notch, but it was certainly worth it.

On my second outing to BJ's, I decided to switch it up and went for the hearty Barbecue Sampler. Offering shrimp, ribs and a chicken breast all doused with its delicious barbecue sauce, it completely filling. Unable to resist, I opted once more for the garlic mashed potatoes and a side salad, which again proved to be the ultimate accessories to any meal.

My latest BJ's adventure, taken only a week ago, posed a challenge. I enjoyed my two previous meals so much, I found it hard to deviate from the aforementioned selections. I knew it must be done, however, and scoured the menu for another meal that would measure up. I have always been a big fan of pork barbecue, so when my eye caught the Southern Applewood Pork Barbecue, I had to give it a try.

The cornbread at BJ's simply blows the competition away. In both flavor and consistency, I have never experienced anything quite like it.

This was the largest portion of pork barbecue I have ever seen. Slicing atop a corn fritter, the monstrous portion was a little overwhelming at first. I did my best to conquer the meal, but after overindulging on the fantastic cornbread yet again, I was hardly able to make a dent.

Despite my poor performance, this meal rivaled each of my previous meals in its taste, and certainly put other variations of pork barbecue to shame.

All in all I give BJ's two enthusiastic thumbs up. It is worth the drive in either direction, and will leave you so full that another meal in the same day will be unlikely. BJ's has something to satisfy every taste bud, and is a must-visit destination for those in Lewisburg.

Now onward to the meal itself. For my first adventure to BJ's, I decided to be a traditionalist and order its famous steak. The 12-ounce prime rib cut, more meat than I was able to handle, was an

Photos courtesy of bjsrbs.com

At BJ's Steaks and Rib House, one can sample a variety of main courses (top) including its famous Chicago steak. (pictured directly above). No meal is complete without cornbread to start and any of the delicious sides.

Another romantic edition brought to you by ...

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I have more of a complaint than a question for you. For Valentine's Day my boyfriend flunked big-time in attitude and effort. There were no flowers, no chocolates, nothing—just a card. I was pretty disappointed, considering that this was our first Valentine's Day together. I was really looking forward to this day and that makes his crummy gift even more of a let down for me. Should I give him the old "heave ho" for not putting more effort into this special day?

—Angry

Dear Angry,

I can understand that you are hurt and frustrated by this situation. However, before you make any rash decisions, take some time to reflect on some other issues.

First of all, just because your guy did not get you flowers and candy for Valentine's Day does not mean that he does not care about you. Perhaps he was low on cash or did not think you would like flowers or candy. I cannot tell you what he was thinking or why he chose to give you a card, but I do know that effort is not something that can be measured by what someone gives or by how much you get; it is what is behind the giving of those gifts that is important in relationships.

My point here is that your boyfriend may have put a lot of effort into finding the perfect card for you and writing you a message inside that he felt would be meaningful. Don't be so quick to dismiss his card as thoughtless. Holidays are notoriously stressful for both men and women, especially Valentine's Day. There is a lot of buildup and a lot of pressure related to this one little day on the calendar.

Meanwhile, think about how your boyfriend treats you every other day on the ordinary, regular days. If your boyfriend is putting in effort on days when no one is "expecting" him to, then I would say that you still have yourself a keeper.

I would advise you to try not to build things up in your head so much. Do not just expect to get clichéd and overdone presents you believe you should get on holidays. It puts pressure and strain on your relationship when you are always "expecting" something.

I would also advise you not to say any of this to your boyfriend unless you really and genuinely feel that he is not putting any time and effort into your relationship. You will risk sounding spoiled and ungrateful if you complain about your gift. This might discourage your guy from wanting to do other nice things for you if he feels that you are always going to trivialize his efforts and put him down. Please take some time to think about what Ms. O has said before you decide to take any action.

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

If you could be stranded on a deserted island with anyone, who would it be?

Extreme Auto Works

49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Cinema Center

Selingsgrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 330-2849

Play Dates: February 20-27, 2004

Mystic River (R)	Along Came Polly (PG-13)
1:30, 5:15, 8:15	12:20, 10:30, 9:20
Loft/Return of King (PG-13)	Big Fish (PG-13)
11:40, 3:40, 7:50	12:30, 3:40, 6:30, 9:15
Butterfly Effect (R)	Miracle (PG)
1:40, 6:50, 9:25	11:50, 3:15, 9:10
Monster (R)	Cheaper by the Dozen (PG)
11:30, 2:40, 6:45	11:30, 2:40, 6:30, 8:45
Barber Shop 2 (PG-13)	Perfect Score (PG-13)
1:30, 4:15, 6:40, 9	9:00
50 First Dates (PG-13)	Catch That Kid (PG)
11:45, 2:10, 4:30, 6:50, 9:10	11:50, 2:45, 6:20, 8:30

50 First Dates (PG-13)

12:15, 2:30, 5:15, 9:30

Mainstays before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

Welcome to

"A Cut Above Hairdressers" A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys
WALK INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

RENTALS

for BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE JUNE 1, 2004

Large 2 BR APTS AT:
237 3rd & St. George
40 Brown St.

SOME APTS. AVAILABLE FOR IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY

Remodeled, clean, excellent condition, excellent location

RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO CAMPUS!
(570) 966-1488

NITTANY TRAVEL

201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 1, Shamokin Dam, PA 17876

ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK

Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!

El Pueblo Resort Cancun, Mexico

$925/person - Double-Occupancy

523-3224 800-326-9603

Endless Summer Tours

#1 Spring Vacations!
Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited!
Book Now & Save!
1-800-234-7007
www.endlesssummertours.com

Feats...

we're shocking.

amalien@

Dogwood Hill

Distinctive Floral Design
Fine Gifts
Unique Accessories
430 Market Street,
Lewisburg
524-7950

Bull Run Inn

Celebrates Seniors Night

Thurs., Feb. 26
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.

All 21 and over are welcome!

DJ & Dancing

Food & Beverage Features

Check it out at: www.bullruninn.com

FEATURES

$carves wrapped around campus

By MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

Bluster, chill and winter blues—a scarf can fight all of these. A scarf adds funk, simultaneously wrapping the wearer's neck in warmth. The epitome of style and practicality, scarves dominate the fashion scene each winter.

Whether flannel or knit, cotton or fleece, scarves go a long way in everyday accessorizing. With the wide range of textures, colors and lengths, even the pickiest shopper can find a scarf to work with their look. Inexpensive, scarves lend themselves to style experimentation and quick wardrobe updates.

Try these five looks in your quest for scarf perfection:

Besides buying ready-made scarves, another option is to make them. Knitting offers the maker choices on specific colors and patterns. The handmade quality endears the scarf to its wearer and gives the knitter a sense of pride in the accomplishment. Knitting itself is not hard to learn, and knitting books can help beginners. Materials can also be bought inexpensively at Wal-Mart. If knitting does not appeal, long, straight cuts and a few fringes can turn flannel and fleece into scarves almost instantly. Puffy paint quickly personalizes them to keep or give as gifts.

Draping around or tied up tight, the scarf is the accessory for winter. Beyond the winter season, scarves make festive accessories for spring and summer. Sassily tied around the waist, a bright colored scarf only encourages smiles and sunshine.

Lilly Pulitzer joined Ford Motor Co. in creating a scarf to benefit breast cancer research. The scarf is available at Bloomingdale's for $30, though there may be a waiting list as its popularity increases. Not only does the scarf complete an outfit, it plays a more important role in society by helping women in their fight against cancer.

PASHMINAS GRACED EUROPEAN HEADS, THROATS AND SHOULDERS AS THE SILKY FABRIC BROUGHT SOPHISTICATION TO THE STREETS OF LONDON AND PARIS. THE LOOK, BORROWED FROM INDIA AND ITS MODESTY, CONVERTS AND TRANSFORMS TO ACCOMMODATE JEANS AND EVEN DRESSES. SOLID, BRIGHT COLORS ADD SPLASH TO NEUTRAL OR BLACK COATS. A PASHMINA WORN AS A SHAWL LENDS ELEGANCE TO FORMAL WEAR. CHIC IN EUROPE, PASHMINAS BECOME SUPER CHIC IN THE UNITED STATES.

Sequins or appliques can be glued or ironed on to a plain scarf for a little pizzazz. Beads or sequins sewed on the ends of a solid colored scarf can take shape as stripes or even initials. Creativity can make an average scarf a special scarf.

Magic scarves

stretch and condense to produce a variety of looks. The circular construction allows the scarf to be stretched horizontally and vertically, changing from a long scarf to a round scarf. A magic scarf, true to its name, not only is magic, but works magic by snazzing up simple cardigan sets or T-shirts.

How to: Tie a scarf the British Way

Photos by Tyler Kidder and Adam Wilcox

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

February 27, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 5

Sports:

Men's basketball moves into second place in the Patriot League.

See page B1

GEORGE CLINTON AT CHRYSALIS

George Clinton and Parliament Funkadelic will perform in place of James Brown at this year's Chrysalis Ball on April 23 in the Gerhard Fieldhouse. A yet-to-be-named pop '80s-'90s cover band will follow Clinton's performance.

Mitchell '05 on television

By BRIANNA EVANS
Writer

Charles Mitchell '05, president of the Bucknell Conservatives Club (BUCC), appeared on television Tuesday night. Mitchell spoke on Y*Vote '04 as part of a panel that discussed equal access opportunities for education.

Mitchell's appearance on Y*Vote '04 was part of its two-day TV broadcast by Link TV, a non-profit non-commercial TV channel. Y*Vote '04 wants to raise political awareness in 18- to 30-years-olds and encourage them to vote in the 2004 election.

The topic of panel discussion focused on how students are paying for college today. Mitchell was broadcast onto the show by a Web cam from his dorm room at the University. There were two other student panelists that were broadcast via the Web as well. The show aired at 11 p.m. on Tuesday on Direct TV and over the Internet through the Y*Vote '04 Web site.

One question was whether students would join the military in order to pay for college.

BUCC President Charles Mitchell spoke Tuesday evening on the Direct TV special Y*Vote '04. Mitchell discussed topics important to people ages 18-30.

Mitchell commented that he thinks it is a "fantastic thing to serve your country," but continued that he would probably never join the military to pay for college.

When asked how he does pay for his education, if not with assistance from the military, he admitted that some financial aid is necessary for him to attend the University. He followed up by explaining that he receives help from the University, as well as help from outside scholarships that he received.

"Obviously, I think access to education is essential and it is a tremendous gift for me to

See MITCH page A4

University holds Jewish conference

By KIM DUNLAP
Writer

Students and faculty gathered at the L.C. Forum for a Jewish studies conference featuring various experts in fields of Rabbinic Judaism on Sunday. The conference, which consisted of several talks during the day, was intended to boost awareness about Judaism as a religion and Jewish studies at the University.

The Jewish studies conference, which was arranged by Associate Professor of Religion Rivka Ulmer, is part of an effort to build up a strong University curriculum on Jewish studies. The talks focused on the early formation of Judaism and its application to the modern religion. One goal of the conference was to educate students and faculty about the different denominations of Judaism.

"Most of everything happening in Judaism today is an outcome of the ancient texts or a reaction to them. This is why we have experts in all these fields," Ulmer said.

Topics included "Egyptian Cultural Icons in Homiletic Midrash" and "What is New in Rabbinic Prayer." Students and faculty were also able to ask questions after lectures and speak with the guests during refreshment breaks.

Ulmer, who gave a lecture

See JEWISH page A3

Floor of student-occupied house collapses

Community discusses downtown plans if students are moved back to campus

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Staff Writer

The floor above the garage at 19 South 7th Street, a house occupied by students, buckled Feb. 14 during a party. The collapse may have fueled fears that the University will move all students back to campus by 2013.

Four days after the collapse, Lewisburg's Neighborhood Task Force held a meeting with the community to present several ideas for the revitalization of the predominantly student-occupied area between 5th and 7th Streets.

The collapse caused hot water pipes to burst and sent the guests and residents out of the house in a state of panic, according to one eyewitness. Although the cause of the collapse is still unknown, it may have been caused by too many people being in the apartment. The house's owner, Kevin Gardner, said the construction of the house could have been a factor.

Gardner owns more than 20 other student-rented houses. He has not previously had problems with buildings collapsing, fires or other safety issues, but according to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, there have been fires in other houses in this area in the past.

In order to keep housing safe, Gardner and five other landlords formed the Bucknell

See HOUSE page A2

A floor of this South 7th Street apartment collapsed Feb. 14. The cause of the accident has yet to be determined, but most repairs to the house are complete.

Nader announces candidacy

By JULIE LESKO
News Editor

Ralph Nader, who is slated to speak at this year's commencement ceremony, announced Sunday that he will run for president in 2004. University officials said Nader, a well-known consumer advocate who ran for president as a member of the Green Party in 2000, will still speak to graduating seniors in May.

Although the University has a policy that does not allow campaigning politicians to speak about politics at the University, the policy should not affect Nader's commencement speech, which will be about civic engagement.

While Nader is at the University, he is not allowed to solicit contributions or workers for

See NADER page A4

Courtesy of Reuters

WOMEN'S TRACK WINS TITLE

This past weekend's Patriot League indoor track and field championships, held in Gerhard Fieldhouse, were dominated by the Bison women. The women finished first with 198 points. The victory marked the third consecutive Patriot League indoor crown.

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

Following Dreams

Contributing writer Brandon Risser contemplates the future.

See page A7

Alumni Profile

The Career Development Center led Pete Griffin '00 to a job at MTV in sunny California.

See page A10

Modern Dance

The Sean Curran Company brings its modern dance show to the Weis Center

See page A6

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Feb. 15

INFORMATION / DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of loud noise. The disturbance was caused by a student and his visitor who were engaged in a loud discussion. Both parties agreed to resolve the issue quietly.

Monday, Feb. 16

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of a student with chest pains. The student, who was not in obvious distress, was transported by Student Health Services to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. The student later returned to campus.

INFORMATION / POSSIBLE ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—An employee reported to Public Safety that a student suspected she may have been given a date rape drug at an off-campus location. No sexual assault occurred but the individual became ill after drinking a small quantity of alcohol. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, Feb. 17

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Chi Phi Fraternity for the report of an open window. The room in which the window was located was locked. House officials were notified and closed the window.

SIMPLE ASSAULT—Public Safety responded to the Gerhard Fieldhouse for the report of an employee being assaulted by four males trespassing at that location. Upon arrival, Public Safety apprehended the males in the car pool parking lot. East Buffalo Township Police and Lewisburg Police responded. The males were identified as visitors whom the employee was escorting from the building. The victim was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to his home. Suspects were transported by East Buffalo

Police to their office for processing. Charges are pending. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION)—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of the odor of marijuana. Upon arrival, Public Safety detected the odor but could not locate the source.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A resident assistant reported to Public Safety that a student was ill and needed medical treatment for a fever. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. The student later returned to campus.

Wednesday, Feb. 18

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Taylor Hall for the report that an unknown person(s) put a gray liquid glue-like substance on the key holes of the exterior doors and door locks in several academic buildings. The incident is under investigation.

Thursday, Feb. 19

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—While on routine patrol by Vedder Hall, Public Safety observed a female unable to walk without assistance. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined the female was a student who was highly intoxicated and in need of medical treatment. The individual was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. She was cited for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ASSIST POLICE/UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to the corner of South 6th and St. Catherine Streets for the report of an intoxicated student whom Lewisburg Police had observed urinating in public. The individual refused to allow Lewisburg Police to administer the portable breathalyzer test for intoxication and also refused to allow Public Safety to administer the test when he was returned to his Vedder Hall room. Citations were issued for underage consumption, public drunkenness, public urination and refusal to submit to field sobriety testing.

THEFT—Public Safety responded to the Biology Building for the report of a missing balance. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / ODOR OF SMOKE—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall for the report of the odor of smoke. Physical Plant responded and assisted in a search of the building. The odor was determined to be caused by incense burning. A citation was issued for burning incense in a residence hall.

Friday, Feb. 20

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed his room key from his unattended jacket in the Sojka Pavilion. The incident is under investigation.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / TRESPASSING—A student reported to Public Safety that a female refused to leave his room at Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the female as a student who had consumed alcohol although under the age of 21. The individual was transported back to her residence and cited for disorderly conduct and trespassing.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety, working a special assignment at Sojka Pavilion, observed a student walking with a staggered gait. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the individual was a student who had consumed alcohol. A citation was issued for public drunkenness.

Saturday, Feb. 21

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a student with a facial laceration that he received at an off-campus location. A Student Health Services driver responded and transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. He later returned to campus.

Arthurian scholars lecture at the University

By JACLYN CARR
Photography Editor

Top Arthurian scholars Norris Lacy of Pennsylvania State University and E. Jane Burns of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill offered their expertise on Arthurian literature Feb. 19.

Lacy's lecture, titled "The Face and Fortune and Arthur," discussed the ambiguous nature of the character of King Arthur.

In medieval writings, such as the 13th century French "Vulgate Cycle," Arthur is presented as both the honorable king and as an impassive, petulant man; there is an ever-present conflict between the ideal and real, between Arthur as a human with flaws and Arthur as the exalted king.

Lacy said the texts mute Arthur's passions and motives so as to not draw away from the vivid portrayals of the other characters in the stories.

Following Lacy's lecture was Burns' "What's in a Chemise: Reading Arthurian Identities in Sartorial Bodies." During this lecture, Burns examined the role of clothing in determining the identity of characters in Arthurian romances.

According to Burns, the description and depiction of clothing in medieval texts should be critically examined. In the Middle Ages, clothes were viewed as an extension of the body and a representation of the self. They were considered to be a part of the "sartorial" body, a combination of the physical body and clothing. Burns' cutting-edge theories can offer scholars of Arthurian literature clues about the issues of gender and class in medieval romance.

"I thought the lecturers were interesting and engaging," Christina Phillips '05 said. "The lectures were a valuable supplement to my classes."

The lectures followed an earlier discussion of medieval themes in movies led by Kevin Harty of LaSalle University. University Assistant Professor of English Alfred Siewers and University graduate student Suzanne Flinchbaugh organized the lectures to provide an in-depth look at Arthurian identities and themes.

"Based on the amount of undergraduate enthusiasm for 'things Arthurian,' we thought it would be interesting to invite Arthurian scholars to campus and to discuss why every generation invents its own Arthur," Flinchbaugh said.

The tales of Arthur and his knights are continually being reinterpreted and portrayed in a variety of genres. Authors such as John Steinbeck, T.H. White, and Marion Zimmer Bradley and movies such as "Camelot" and "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" have added their own interpretative twists to the Arthurian legends.

"One of the great things about Arthurian literature is how it appeals to so many people across the centuries and how readers are continually able to reshape it in new ways," Siewers said.

A continued interest in Arthurian studies by faculty and students may lead to more lectures and discussions of King Arthur in the future.

"Having a conference with a small number of speakers allowed students to interact with the visiting professors either after the lectures or in prior classroom discussions," Siewers said. "They can get a better idea of how their interests in a medieval field like this may relate to professional scholarship and graduate school work in the future—how to draw on a deeper understanding of this tradition to be smarter readers of texts or in their own creative work."

Lacy earned his Ph.D. from Indiana University and is a professor of French and medieval studies. He has written many acclaimed works on Arthurian literature and medieval narrative, including "The Arthurian Handbook," which he co-wrote with Geoffrey Ashe, a British Arthurian scholar.

Burns has a Ph.D. in French and medieval studies from the University of California in Berkeley. Flinchbaugh has been referring to Burns' research for her graduate thesis in Arthurian studies.

Religion department hosts Jewish studies conference

University Associate Professor of Religion Rivka Ulmer delivered the lecture "Egyptian Cultural Icons in Humiletic Midrash" in the L.C. Forum Sunday afternoon.

JEWISH From page A1

The speakers, who are top professors on the formation of Judaism, arrived for the conference at the expense of their own universities, coming from some of the country's most prestigious schools and even from other nations.

Students from several other surrounding universities, such as Susquehanna University, also attended the conference to hear the renowned scholars. Ulmer said the speakers wrote papers specifically for this conference and that the speakers will probably publish the conference proceedings. When that happens, the University will gain national recognition, Ulmer said.

"Students are very elated here, so we need to bring people off campus to interact with the world," Ulmer said.

Harvard and Yeshiva University Professor Yaakov Elman spoke on "The Regulation of Sex in the Babylonian Talmud in the Light of Zoroastrianism" at the Jewish Studies Conference.

Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs Stephen Bowen, who delivered the concluding remarks at the conference, called the conference a "significant scholarly event" that has engaged faculty and students in "work of the highest intellectual standard as they act on shared values in learning and scholarship."

Students are very elated here, so we need to bring people off campus to interact with the world," Ulmer said. Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs Stephen Bowen, who delivered the concluding remarks at the conference, called the conference a "significant scholarly event" that has engaged faculty and students in "work of the highest intellectual standard as they act on shared values in learning and scholarship."

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The University Presidential Search Committee, headed by Norman Garrity '63, met Monday to make its final recommendation to the board of trustees. Trustees plan to announce the new University president on March 15. Candidates are as pictured above from left to right: Cornelius Kerwin, current provost and professor of public administration, American University; Elaine Maimon, current provost, Arizona State University West; and Brian Mitchell, current president, Washington & Jefferson College.

NADER From page A1

his campaign or attack campaign opponents.

"I would expect that it will raise interest in his speaking at Bucknell. Given the significance of Mr. Nader's role in the outcome of the 2000 presidential election in Florida, there may be quite a few people interested in the knowing his purpose in becoming a candidate for 2004," Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs Stephen Bowen said.

Senior Class President Jessica Briski served on the Commencement Speaker Selection committee. She said people who support Nader's beliefs will be more excited about him speaking at commencement, but those who do not will also be pleased with the speaker.

"Those who do not support his ideas may be a bit perturbed, but they should feel at ease because Nader is not coming to promote his candidacy; he will speak about civic engagement. Going into the process [of speaker selection], I knew that the students wanted someone who was well known, very intelligent and had an air of prestige," Briski said.

Nader's announcement was widely watched by Democrats, many of whom blame him for former Vice President Al Gore's defeat in the 2000 presidential election. Some Democrats believe that Nader's running for president could allow another Bush victory in 2004.

For a national discussion on Nader's candidacy, turn to B10.

Holly Shapiro '07, a member of the College Democrats, agreed with many Democrats in saying Nader's votes would ensure a Bush victory. "Splitting the non-Republican votes like that will hand Bush the election. It is not worth it for people to vote for Nader to prove a point when he is not going to be successful in the election anyway," Shapiro said.

Matt Wirick '04, president of College Democrats, does not foresee a Nader impact on the election. "I don't like it, but I do not see it as the threat it was in 2000. The Democratic party, and particularly the far left, has an 'anybody but President Bush' mentality," Wirick said. "Nader isn't on a party ticket—not even the minor Green Party ticket. I think he is only in the race to make sure his issues get some discussion, and since he doesn't need to worry about that 5 percent come Election Day he probably won't stick around long enough to cost the Democrats the election again."

Wirick said he is pleased with the choice of Nader as commencement speaker.

"Ralph Nader is a great choice for commencement speaker. My sister graduated last year so I had to sit through the Deborah speech, so this is certainly better," Wirick said.

Community members discuss the potential deterioration of downtown

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Off-campus housing is regulated by the Bucknell Student Landlord Association. The group meets periodically to draft and establish arbitration conditions in cases of disputes.

HOUSE From page A1

Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock said that the University is concerned about off-campus living because of safety issues, housing conditions and community relations.

The idea of housing all students on campus was developed in March 1998, with the goal of having all University students back on campus within 15 years.

According to a report issued by SEDA-Council of Governments and published in The Daily Item, 161 of the 205 housing units in the three-block area of St. George to Market Street and from Hawn to Strawberry Alley area are occupied by students. The paper also mentions the concern that property values in that area might fall if all students were pulled back to campus.

"If [all the students move back on campus] it will create a large void in the neighborhood and soften the whole rental area," said Gardner, a member of the task force. "Landlords will be scrambling to fill those units with anybody and people will no longer have the money to maintain the property. There are not enough new people moving into town. I see a deterioration."

The Feb. 18 meeting addressed three progressive visions for the area if students return to the campus. According to The Daily Item, there were a variety of ideas, from plans that require relatively little change to those that would dramatically change the neighborhood. The plans include connecting the University and downtown more effectively, aesthetic changes, improving parking, more plans with the park and several other visions of improvement.

"This is the beginning, we hope, of a serious process to change this neighborhood," Tom Grbenick of SEDA-Council of Governments said to The Daily Item. "It's the beginning of the exploration process."

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Approximately 10 percent of University students live off campus. Recent debates have again raised the question of downtown living and the University goal of returning students to campus.

According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, the University is traditionally a residential college, but there has been a gradual increase in student renters since the 1970s.

"My main concerns with the off-campus housing are that the houses are in a flood plain, the density question—how many people are in the house, encouraging the upkeep of housing maintenance and, though I don't like to bring in the issue of alcohol, it is very important to not abuse

"I don't think I'll live downtown since the on-campus housing seems good enough for me," Haley Kerr '07 said. "I've been to downtown for big parties and therefore they are kind of gross and dirty, but I've never felt unsafe. The house collapsing was a shocker."

The overall impression was that the buckling floor in the house was a "freak accident" and will not keep the option of off-campus housing from students' plans.

The University's intention to eliminate off-campus housing is a long-term plan and, according to Ferraro, is subject to possible change.

All of these factors directly affect both the Lewisburg community and the university.

"Something I think most people do not see is that the campus and downtown is one coherent neighborhood—we must accommodate both," Ferraro said.

Despite the University's concerns and the recent collapse on 7th Street, off-campus housing remains a popular option for students.

"I really do not have any concerns about things collapsing because I am from a college town where students rent

News

NEWS BRIEFS

—Julie Lesko

Local power failure affects 6,600 people

A broken support beam for high voltage wires caused a six-hour electricity outage Saturday at 3 p.m.

The power failure affected households in the Lewisburg borough, East Buffalo and Buffalo townships and nearby areas.

The University used its own power plant to generate electricity during much of the blackout. The Patriot League indoor track and field championships, held in Gerhard Fieldhouse, were forced to delay events.

According to The Daily Item, Elizabeth's was the only business that remained open during the period. The restaurant was powered by a generator until power was restored.

John Kelchler, senior director of engineering and operations for Citizens' Electric, said the interruption was caused by a cross-arm that broke on the Pennsylvania Power and Light transmission structure. The cross-arm is a support beam for the high voltage wires, but the electric lines were not affected by the incident.

United States Army cancels Comanche program

The United States Army has decided to cancel the multi-billion dollar Comanche stealth helicopter program.

The program aimed at building a new-generation of helicopters for armed reconnaissance missions was contracted to the Boeing Company and Sikorsky Aircraft Corporation.

Nicole Dombek '03 had been working on the software for the Comanche at Sikorsky for the last seven months. She says she and her colleagues are not sure what will happen to their jobs.

According to CBSNews.com, approximately $8 billion has already been invested into the program. The production line, which has not been started, marks the largest cancellation in Army history.

The decision follows the 2002 Pentagon action to cancel the Crusader artillery program.

The Comanche program was started in 1983 and had survived many reviews. Under the restructuring of 2002, the decision of continual progress with initial low-rate production was set for 2007 and planned for first Army delivery in 2009.

Contagious bird flu strain found in Texas

A strain of avian influenza was found in a Texas chicken farm Monday.

According to MSNBC.com, the strain, which is far more dangerous to poultry than originally thought, has spread to the live bird markets in Houston.

Dr. Rot DeHaven of the U.S. Department of Agriculture said the flu is not the same strain that has killed at least 22 people in Asia.

The farm's flock was destroyed during the weekend, but some of the flock had already been sent to Houston live bird markets.

Two other strains of bird flu have been discovered in recent weeks. One was found on a farm in central Pennsylvania and the other found at two Delaware farms. Neither of these strains resembles the H5N1 virus that has affected humans in Asia.

West Bank Wall hearings draw demonstrators

The International Court of Justice opened hearings Monday on the Israeli-made barrier being built through and around the West Bank where pro-Palestinian demonstrators voiced encouragement in front of worried supporters of Israel.

In the presentation, the Palestinian Authority argued the partially built barrier of ditches, watch posts and concrete walls violated international law and was an attempt to annex Palestinian land.

According to NYTimes.com, during the legal proceedings, Palestinian and Israeli organizations carried out silent marches and noisy demonstrations to gain public opinion.

Pro-Israeli organizations staged a silent march highlighted by photographs of nearly 1,000 victims of terrorism-related acts.

The United Nations General Assembly has asked the court for a nonbinding, advisory opinion on the legal consequences of the barrier's construction.

Israel has filed a written brief, but will not appear before the court.

DOR-DAY'S

49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Extreme Auto Works

49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Welcome to

"A Cut Above Hairdressers"
A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendy's
WALK-INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

LANAIKA

Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience

Package starting at:
Group Discount
1.800.733.6347 (Select Cities)

Free Spring Break T-Shirt and Beach Towel

Beach Fun nt - $499
Cute - Martini Inn - $469
Near Beach - Chuckles - $689
Faster - Standard - $689
T-shirt - All-inclusive - $999
Beach Life Vacation Party HQ
Negotiable Beach Club - $679
Live Life the Beach Life Way!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

News

STUDENT PULSE

"Taking the downtown experience away is like taking away part of the Bucknell experience."
—Adam Dusenbery '04

"People should have the option where they want to live."
—Ann Rosko '05

"Students should be able to live where they want to live, but must be respectable."
—Dan Weaver '03

"It is a nice option, but I think it would help the community if students were moved on-campus."
—Dana Lukens '04

"Quality of downtown houses is what I expect for what we pay."
—Eric Heikkila '04

"With all the rules and regulations, it seems like more of a hassle than living in a dorm."
—Fids Irani '05

"It's a way to let us let go of some tension, a way to let us party without Steffen Rogers getting in the way."
—Jeff Montagna '05

"It adds an aspect of responsibility that you don't have to deal with on campus."
—Jen O'Connor '06

"Fraternities do clean up the downtown area, so it's not like people aren't helping."
—Kaan Karakasli '05

"We could do a better job in reality with community relations."
—Phillip North '06

What do you think about off-campus housing?

Debate concerning off-campus living arose after a South 7th Street apartment floor collapsed Feb. 14. Officials have not yet determined the cause of the accident.

Compiled by Julie Lesko and Tyler Kidder

Mitchell speaks on importance of the youth vote

MITCH From page A1
be here," Mitchell said before the show. "It is because of help that I am here."

Prior to the show, Mitchell discussed a few topics concerning access to education as a major issue for many students nationwide. College tuition is increasing rapidly, forcing more and more students to look for aid. Mitchell said that when it comes to equal access to a good education, the government cannot always be blamed for not offering students all the financial aid that they need.

"I think the private entity is more helpful in giving aid to its students than the government," Mitchell said. "Bucknell knows who to give their money to better than the government because they know who they want to attend their University. They are closer to the body of people at the school."

Mitchell said while it is fine for the government to play a role in both public and private financial aid, by definition private institutions are limited to access from governmental aid because they are private. Mitchell did not get to cover these issues in any depth on the show because of the time concerns.

Even though Mitchell did not talk about those issues, one of the main reasons Mitchell agreed to be on the show in the first place was to do his part to encourage young people to vote.

"When the producers asked me to be on the show they asked me two things: one, if I wanted more exposure and two, if I wanted to encourage young people to vote. I answered 'yes' to both of them," Mitchell said.

Bucc President Charles Mitchell spoke on FoxNews last semester on private university speech codes.

Mitchell and the BUCC gained publicity last year when they appeared on the cover of The New York Times Magazine, and it is because of that publicity that the producers of Y*Vote '04 were aware of Mitchell's active role in the BUCC and at the University.

"Charles will be a great representative of the BUCC and ology is," said Dawn Meling '06, vice president of BUCC. This TV appearance is not the first time Mitchell has been involved in voicing his opinion. As president of BUCC, he is very active on campus and has been instrumental in getting the BUCC national recognition.

"He has worked tirelessly to promote students' rights and encourage conservative views on the campus. Charles is incredibly motivated and committed," BUCC member Dominic Rupprecht '07 said. "He will organize protests, send letters to students, work to bring in speakers and even go on TV programs to promote the conservative cause."

One of the largest activities Mitchell has been involved in within the last year has been to help create, publish, edit and promote The Counterweight, BUCC's newspaper. "Because of his work early on with The Counterweight as editor, it has grown into an incredibly successful publication that has sparked debate on campus regarding issues that would otherwise go unmentioned, such as the speech code and intellectual diversity," Rupprecht said.

BUCC President Charles Mitchell spoke on FoxNews last semester on private university speech codes.

Bucknell on Y*Vote. Charles wants to encourage everyone to get involved in the political process and exercise their rights as American citizens no matter what their political ideology is," said Dawn Meling '06, vice president of BUCC. This TV appearance is not the first time Mitchell has been involved in voicing his opinion. As president of BUCC, he is very active on campus and has been instrumental in getting the BUCC national recognition.

"He has worked tirelessly to promote students' rights and encourage conservative views on the campus. Charles is incredibly motivated and committed," BUCC member Dominic Rupprecht '07 said. "He will organize protests, send letters to students, work to bring in speakers and even go on TV programs to promote the conservative cause."

One of the largest activities Mitchell has been involved in within the last year has been to help create, publish, edit and promote The Counterweight, BUCC's newspaper. "Because of his work early on with The Counterweight as editor, it has grown into an incredibly successful publication that has sparked debate on campus regarding issues that would otherwise go unmentioned, such as the speech code and intellectual diversity," Rupprecht said.

SAAB SPONSORS SUSHI-MAKING WORKSHOP

Brad Thompson—The Bucknellian

Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell kicked off its Asian Awareness week Monday with sushi making in the Terrace room. Other activities included a brush painting workshop, forum on adopted Asian students and the Asian Gala tonight.

Bucknellian Correction:

The spring concert of Robert Randolph & the Family Band and Ziggy Marley was brought to us by the Concert Committee, not Activities and Campus Events (ACE).

Spring Break 2004 The Ultimate Experience

Jamaica • Acapulco • Cancun • Florida • Bahamas
Up to $100 Off
Group Discounts!!
Beach Front Special - $495
All-Inclusive Special - $599
Per Room 1-800-733-6347
Bucknell U... Live Life the Beach Life Way!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

NITTANY TRAVEL

201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 1, Shamokin Dam, PA 17876
ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK
Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!
El Pueblo Resort Cancun, Mexico
$925/person - Double-Occupancy
523-3224 800-326-9603

Now Hiring...
ALDI INC.
✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
✓ Flexible AM hours
✓ $9.51 an hour wage
+ Please fill out applications at the store
ALDI INC.
110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

Endless Summer Tours
#1 Spring Vacations!
Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited!
Book Now & Save!
1-800-234-7007
www.endlesssummertours.com

Mya's Coffee House
Delicious Hot Chocolate available with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Totem Tattoo
Area's Finest Custom Tatoo and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
~State of the Art Body Jewelry~
-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-
VISA

while everyone worried about corporate scandals, these students were busy learning how to help stop them.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

xACT 2003

Last fall, 900 students from 28 colleges and universities were given a difficult task: determine how a country's accounting standards and regulations may have contributed to an alleged accounting scandal and propose changes to ensure accurate and complete financial reporting. Their ideas were evaluated by a panel of PricewaterhouseCoopers professionals, who named five National Winning Teams.

Join us in congratulating all the students who participated and the team from Bucknell University that was named a National Winning Team:

Edward Cywinski
Jesselyn Greiner
Leslie Niswander
Chris Rock
Thomas Swanson

Mark Bettner, Faculty Advisor
Michael Coyne, Faculty Advisor
David Jensen, Faculty Advisor
Stephen Willits, Faculty Advisor

pwc.com/xTreme

Opinions

THE Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 5
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Saleme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Kullenstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editors
Julie Lesko '07
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRosa '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwitz '06
Keeley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davisha Malhotra '06

Marketing Director
Joseph Giordano '05

Adviser
James F. Lee

OP-ED POLICY

The editors of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2003 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Off-campus collapse is not a disaster

A portion of floor on a South 7th Street apartment collapsed Feb. 14. While this was an unfortunate accident that needs to be investigated, it should be used only as minor ammunition in the dispute between the administration and students about off-campus housing. The University has had concerns regarding downtown safety and housing conditions for years. Last year as part of Vision 2010 the administration proclaimed its intention to move all students back to campus. This recent collapse event could ignite new debates on the validity of the students right to live off campus.

Students occupy 161 of the 205 housing units in the three-block area of St. George to Market Street and from Hawn to Strawberry Alley. This is a substantial portion of the housing in Lewisburg, and a complete removal of a downtown student presence will cause more damage to Lewisburg residents than good.

Without residents in the homes and without a large influx of new residents there will be many vacant homes in the area. Property values in the area would most likely plummet, and the University would be to blame.

While having the option for off-campus housing has not always been a part of our institution, it should be welcomed as a sign of progress rather than a mistake that should never have happened.

The University has traditionally been a residential college, but since the 1970s there has been a gradual increase in off-campus student renters. Now it seems as though the University regrets its decision to allow students the freedom to live off campus.

Living in a house downtown gives students the chance rely solely on themselves. One of the goals of the University has always been to prepare students for their life ahead of them.

College is the last step before the "real world," and one of the ways students can learn responsibility is to live off campus and learn about life through their experiences rather than being told what to do and how to live.

The floor collapsing should not be overlooked; it was a regrettable accident that could have been avoided. However, the University should not use this incident to force students to come back to campus.

Events like this should be looked at as a stepping-stone to better relations between Lewisburg and downtown University residents. The sooner the University and town become a cohesive unit in regards to downtown living, the better off the overall community will be.

Off-campus housing should be welcomed as a sign of progress rather than a mistake that should never have happened.

Letters to the editor

Student criticizes Rogers

To the Editor:

Today you, President Rogers, made a decision that will prove detrimental to the University's future. You chose to suspend a dear friend of mine. In my opinion, you have suspended someone who embodies everything that all Bucknellians should aspire to achieve. He is a good student, displays school spirit and goes out of his way to help others. I am confident that, due to his strong character, my friend will rebound from this unfortunate situation.

My opinion of the University, however, has permanently been tarnished. For three years, I could not rave enough about this university. In the last six months, my views have changed completely. I no longer encourage high school students to apply. I regret that I worked as a student caller, trying to solicit funds for the school. Finally, I have promised myself that I will never donate a cent to the University.

The administrators and trustees of the University feel it is their privilege to impose moral standards on the student body. I understand that this is a private institution that reserves the right to formulate its own policies for student conduct. When private institutions place themselves above the law and make publicly legal acts illegal, they are overstepping their limits.

I realize that the intention of the Emergency Alcohol Policy is to protect students, but how effective has it been? The policy will only worsen the problem. As a student, I appreciate your concern, but I am not going to stop drinking when I am legally permitted to do so. I will resort to socializing off-campus where I will retain all my rights.

President Rogers, I am saddened that I wish for the final three months of my University career to pass quickly. I had hoped that I would savor this time with my friends and the distinguished academic resources provided for us. Unfortunately, that wish has been rendered impossible because my friend, a central part of my University experience, has been unfairly sanctioned.

I sincerely hope you do not believe his suspension is for his own or the University's benefit because in reality, it is the opposite. The University is only as valuable as the sum of the persons who compose it. Today, that value has been greatly diminished. As a member of the graduating class, my only wish for the University is that drastic change occur before my diploma loses its value.

Sincerely,

Sara D. Carlson '04

The main purpose of the administration has always been to protect the safety and health of students.

The Parents Board is an active and positive resource for all University parents, our students and the administration. We make our contributions of time and effort behind the scenes and happily serve.

The alcohol situation was no exception. Our board was asked for comment by the administration on the old policy, the emergency policy and the revised policy.

As a board, we became an advocate for fairness relative to specific elements of the policy and to the procedures and internal reviews that form the basis of implementation of the policy. We helped to soften the penalties for low-end infractions and were also successful in helping to guarantee equitable application of punishments associated with the more dangerous infractions of the policy.

It is important for students and parents to fully understand, from my personal observations and from those of others on our board who have been involved, that the main purpose of the administration has always been to protect the safety and health of students.

Lost in the controversy about the policy is that alcohol abuse leads to modified behavior that could result in dangerous actions (e.g., driving under the influence or suffocating in one's own vomit).

It is easy to argue for the rights of students to participate in the culinary and social aspects of responsible alcohol consumption and forget that alcohol abuse can have unintended, tragic consequences.

I can personally attest to the fact that President Rogers and his staff have principally focused on the how to prevent the tragic results of unchecked alcohol abuse.

While I offer no new solutions with this letter, I can offer complete access to any of us on the board to share your concerns or help with any misunderstandings.

Our contact information is available on the University Web site (click on "Parents"). I look forward to listening to your concerns and toward our board's continued efforts to be of help on this important issue.

Sincerely,

Robert A. Bonelli
P'03 and '07

Employee appreciates student appreciation

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the article written by Kevin Welsh ("Staff underappreciated," Feb. 6). I would like to thank Kevin for his public recognition of the effort and kindness of staff members here at the University.

There have always been students who go out of their way to thank a few particular staff members, but as Kevin implied, there is so much that happens behind the scenes to make the University operate smoothly. You may never meet all the individuals who work together to make it all happen.

Particularly at this time of year when people have been braving sub-zero temperatures, ice and snow to come to work and ensure few disruptions to students' lives on campus, the thanks and recognition are greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Pat Ringkamp
Chair, Support Staff Personnel Committee
Scheduling Coordinator
Reservations, Information and Conference Services

Students should follow their dreams

BY BRANDON RISSE
Contributing Writer

As a little kid I was often asked the age-old question, "What do you want to be when you grow up?" This was certainly an easy question to answer in my younger years, as I spouted off answers such as the "Phillie Phanatic," the president of the United States and, of course, Batman.

As I became aware of the "real" world around me, I was forced to reconsider my future. In high school, I knew I was going to be a lawyer, doctor or CEO because I cared about being in a financially lucrative profession. My reasoning was simple: I wanted to live in a big city, drive a big car and live the lavish lifestyle that stems from having a big bank account.

As I arrived on this campus back in August 2000, my plans were made and I was ready to conquer the world. Unfortunately for my grandiose plans, I altered my priorities and my outlook on life at some point during my college years.

After asking myself what I was looking for in a profession, I realized that my motives revolved around the pursuit of financial status. For all of high school and the beginning of college, I had been blinded by my selfish desires.

Through my little awakening, I realized that I had absolutely no desire to be a doctor, lawyer or CEO. Thus, I arrived at a point in See Nader run. Run, Nader, run.

BY JESSE GRAYTOCK
Contributing Writer

Where is the love for Ralph Nader? Almost immediately following a weekend announcement that he would be running for president of the United States, a torrential downpour of backlash began.

Coming from every conceivable corner of the political ring, poor Ralphie was dealt a barrage of attacks, ranging from tepid to outright vitriol. The Web site Ralphdontrun.com calmly reminds us that Nader "stole" votes in the 2000 election that belonged to former Vice President Gore.

Former funnyman turned Bush publicist Dennis Miller called Nader an egomaniac for deciding to run. Seattle Weekly writer Knute Berger dubbed Ralph "the Jerry Fallwell of the left." Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean chimed in, urging his former supporters not to vote for poor Ralphie.

Even The Nation, long a bastion of the progressive ideas held closely to Nader, wrote an open letter to the man begging him not to run. With the negative attention he has been given by the press this week, you would think the man was recently implicated in a wardrobe malfunction scandal.

Alas, Nader is being blasted simply because he wishes to run for public office. This is a man who has the audacity to turn a presidential election in a nation of roughly 300 million people into a three-man race.

Let us first be honest with ourselves: this race will still be a two-person race. The Democrats will have their guy (my money's on Senator John Kerry) and the Republican's theirs (Karl Rove). One of the two will win more electoral votes and will be our president.

(BCEJ), the Bucknell University Conservatives Club (BUCC) and the College Democrats have been principally responsible for catalyzing public debate on campus.

While Friends of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgendered (FLAG & BT) and the Women's Resource Center have also contributed significantly, these two organizations' programming is done in part by University professionals. Thus, they fall under a category other than "student-run" in my view.

All other student organizations, such as V-Day Bucknell, seem to be doing a great job promoting their issues and raising dialogue. Still, it has not been enough.

The College Democrats are the easiest to diagnose, simply because they do not do anything. How could you spark discourse if you barely even exist? The problems with the BUCC and BCEJ are more elusive, however.

The principle weapons of muckraking and debate for the BUCC and BCEJ are in their publications: The Counterweight and The Catalyst, respectively. These are the agents that elicit written responses, emotional reactions, my life where I had no idea what I wanted to do.

During this time of uncertainty, I decided I was going to actually act on advice. I was going to find a field of study I loved and a job I was passionate about. I combined my interest in history and government with my desire to make a positive contribution to our world by impacting the lives of adolescents—I wanted to become a social studies teacher.

The great thing about being certified to teach is that you need to complete a semester of student teaching. Whether I liked it or not, I was going to receive real-world teaching experience and discover if it was the profession for me.

During student teaching I typically went on four or five hours of sleep a night. I was on the go from Monday to Friday, only to crash on the weekends, and most of my free time was used for lesson-planning and grading.

During all of this, I absolutely loved student teaching. It was the most rewarding experience of my life.

As I complete my final semester at the University, there are still many uncertainties that weigh on my mind. I am quite confident that after I grab my diploma and flash two thumbs up to the crowd at commencement, I will absolutely love what I'll be doing after I leave this place.

My fellow students: it is my hope and prayer that you will find fulfillment in your future endeavors. Examine the motives behind what you plan to do with your future and challenge yourself to pursue goals that fill you with passion. Then, put your thoughts into action and realize your aspirations.

Nader, and any other third-party hopeful, will be brushed off like a fly, not only by the media but by the U.S. public as well.

The truth is we live in a nation dominated by centrist ideals. Most people do not stray further left than Kerry or further right than President Bush. Accordingly, the Democrats and Republicans receive most of the votes. With that said, I wholeheartedly believe Nader should run.

Third-party candidates are important for a number of reasons. They frequently push issues that are ignored by the Democrats and Republicans, forcing the major parties to consider, perhaps even embrace, causes that were once thought to be dismissible. Additionally, candidates who represent parties outside of the established duopoly bring out voters who would likely have not made a trip to the polls. This results in greater civic activism by the populace, something that can only be good for a country.

Perhaps most importantly, candidates from third parties allow voters with views outside of the mainstream to vote for someone with whom they truly see eye-to-eye. Instead of having to choose which of the two major-party candidates she loathes least, a voter can vote from the heart and choose the Libertarian, the Green, the Socialist or even Pat Buchanan. Just kidding. No one in their right mind would vote for Pat Buchanan.

The point is, for a democracy to truly thrive and act as a voice of the people, the views of every sect of the population must be represented. If a third-party candidate never wins, so be it. His presence will have at the very least given a nation of millions more than two sets of philosophy to choose from.

With that said, Vote Nader! Or Perot! Or Harry Brown! Or Eugene Debs! Or Pat Buchanan! Just kidding.

Bias of the news and American discourse

BY JAKE PALLEY
Staff Writer

Everything in the United States is biased. And if you think I'm biased for writing that, then you are biased.

That is quite a dilemma. The news media, at least according to Republicans, take on a liberal slant. According to liberals, the Bush administration represents fear, loathing and an axis of incompetence. To the Bush administration, the evidences are Iran, North Korea, Osama bin Laden and possibly Martha Stewart.

The Counterweight cooks with all the "ingredients necessary for a balanced educational experience" in order to counteract the University's liberal binge. I maintain a liberal University is the very counterweight to a conservative United States. So when it comes to television broadcasting, it is impossible to simply report the news as it is. Instead, it should always be considered to be damaged goods.

What can serve to be only a thorn in the side of the Bush administration is the Arabic equivalent of CNN—Al-Jazeera. The administration accuses it of a heavy-handed and one-sided approach when it comes to reporting. Al-Jazeera's central focus is on the perpetually bloody Israeli/Palestinian conflict. There certainly is no lack of material on that topic, as Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon continues to press an all too familiar policy of unilateralism upon bitter and resentful Palestinians.

Concurrently, the United States is seen as the great Satan. The cheering crowds celebrating the Sept. 11 attacks, the unwarranted attack on Iraq and our unwavering support of Israel for the past 50 years certainly did us no favors with the Arab world at large.

With so much press coverage, the United States has no choice but to fight back in this dirty war of words and images. The United States' own counterweight costs $62 million and is beamed directly into 22 Arabic-speaking countries. And no, it is not some magical laser beam that brainwashes Muslims and converts them into Bush-loving Republicans. This is something much better than brainwashing—it is television.

With Bush's blessing, Al Hurra, "the Free One," started its daily, "unbiased" pro-United States drizzle last week. It was beamed into the homes of satellite-owning Muslims. While government officials openly and ardently deny any bias in its reporting, Al Hurra is packed with U.S.-style symbolism.

"Between programs, Al Hurra presents unsuitable promotional spots. Heavy orchestral music surges behind images of horses running free, or men walking against the crowd, or eye after eye opening wide," The New York Times reported. Even with eyes wide shut, it is easy to see why Al Hurra will not soon be tripping over its success: Al Hurra is hypocritical.

In a world where sons are named Osama, the Palestinian uprising is overwhelmingly popular and President Bush is enthusiastically burned in effigy, a mere $62 million in satellite television programming is just a drop in the bucket. A New York Times article details our country's popularity: only 15 percent of Indonesians, 7 percent of Saudis and 15 percent of Turks have a favorable view of the United States. Further, officials tell the Bush administration it will take years of hard, determined work to rework our image as anything other than relentlessly evil.

As Arabs will be sure to point out, it is the United States' policies that enrage them. For example, the difficulty of explaining why the United States supports free democracies in the Middle East while the Israeli "apartheid" wall is going up around the West Bank at the same time is no walk in the park. Regardless of what Al Hurra says, it is what the U.S. government does that counts far more.

In the 2003 State of the Union Address Bush said, "Yet for many people, medical care costs too much—and many have no coverage at all." Well, exactly how many is many?

To The Denver Post, "many" signifies 43.6 million people. In the same speech, Bush outlined the extent of Hussein's weapons of mass destruction programs, and today we are still searching for them. In 2001, Bush said the United States would get bin Laden "dead or alive."

Today, Bush is not sure we can even catch the man, despite conducting the largest manhunt in our nation's history to find him. On Bush's Web site it says "Re-elect Bush/Cheney." Last time I checked, how could he be re-elected if he was never elected to the office in the first place?

Undoubtedly, news bias is all around us, political slants are taken and cheap political blows are dealt without a second thought. But that is what news is, because nothing can ever be truly objective. Al Hurra serves to counter propaganda with more propaganda, and maybe that's the closest we can ever get to the real truth. Want my advice? Never trust what you read... well, except for this.

Political debate in need of revitalization on campus

BY AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Every once in a while the news seems to run dry. It is not because Fox and CNN are lazy organizations—the important stories simply are not developed yet. Still the media have to give you something, even if it is Michael Jackson. The world never stops spinning.

Lately, it is disturbingly difficult to find public discourse around campus. The issues of race, gender, socioeconomic, sexual orientation and diversity (among a long laundry list of important topics) seem to have all imploded into whether and how often we should be able to consume alcohol.

The college campus is the last place that should be devoid of intellectual debate, yet the University is noticeably dry in this regard compared to past years. Willing writers are scarce; forum attendance is sparse. The student organizations that previously sustained much of the University's out-of-class, public discourse are failing all of us.

Over the past several years, the Bucknell Caucus for Economic Justice campus-wide forums, press releases and ultimately discourse in abundance. Why are they not working anymore?

After much criticism and unjust treatment from the administration and much of the student body, the folks behind The Counterweight have modified their presentation. While some modification that lends itself toward civility has been beneficial, other changes have resulted in a dull edge. More specifically, subject matter and stylistic decisions are being made not purely on principle—as they ought to be—but on whether the editors think people will read it, understand it, find it funny and will not be too put off by such ideas or language.

On the surface these are factors that all editors must consider. It is the weight that is placed on such things relative to the spirit of the ideas and the noble purpose of the paper—to fill the gaping hole in academia in the absence of classical liberal and conservative ideas—that is problematic.

Further, The Counterweight has been "dumbed-down" to the extent that many students cannot take it seriously. The assumption that most students will not sort through a text-heavy page containing college-level language is an erroneous one, provided that the subject matter is interesting. These modifications have alienated a student body that believe it or not, thirsts for intellectual debate. Take a principled, philosophical position more often. Write less about your genitalia.

The Catalyst seems to have suffered from circumstances opposite those of The Counterweight. The Catalyst has justified its sophomoric humor and Bush-bashing with a "have some of your own medicine, Counterweight" attitude, and gotten away with it relatively unscathed. The Catalyst has plenty of edge and virtually zero substance.

It is the epitome of the shock value accusation it once launched rightward with its willingness to compare anything right-of-center to Hitler and anything corporate to fascism. Students can get a chuckle or two out of their pseudo-satires, but will then find themselves with little to ponder.

Where The Counterweight lost its edge with its compromised substance, The Catalyst lost its substance with a compromising edge. This occurred precisely when the College Democrats began contributing to its production. Coincidence? I think not.

This newsletter needs to focus more on the issues and less on the perpetual, rhetorical gun-slinging among "liberals" and "conservatives." This is the pitfall that plagued The Counterweight in the past, and perhaps, still does at times. It is not worth most students' time to respond to a juvenile cheap shot at their worldview. A well-reasoned, articulate attack, however, is much more prone to promote discourse. A solid argument is far more jarring than an out-of-place Nazi metaphor or a penis joke.

The success of our college education is partly contingent upon that of the student organizations and student-run publications that give us something to think about. As we progress further into the spring semester, let us rejuvenate our passions for the issues that fuel intellectual debate.

Let the groups that facilitate such debate evaluate their effectiveness in a productive way. Let us become real college students again, discuss the issues that matter, save abusive language for the TV pundits and alcohol for drinking.

FEATURES

University successfully hosts 30 Hour Famine

By KATE TANITA
Contributing Writer

When I and the 12 others who decided to participate in a fast that lasted from lunch on Feb. 21 through dinner on Feb. 22, the days were not defined by the fact that we were not eating.

The famine was sponsored by the worldwide organization "World Vision," which sends proceeds to battle hunger in Peru, Ethiopia, Albania, Chile, Malawi and Zimbabwe. More than one million people in 21 countries participated in this year's fast. On campus, the Rooke Chapel Congregation sponsored the event as part of its community service responsibilities.

For University participants, hunger pangs came and went, but throughout the fast we talked, prayed and read, attempting to understand human reality on a deeper level and find in themselves the seeds of change for future improvements. Fasting gave us the ability to see clearly and sympathize with the many people around the world who go without nourishment, and do not have the chance to break their fast.

Laura Holmes '06 and Dusty Schroeder '06 organized the event, which began after lunch on Friday. We went to the Forest D. Brown Conference Center in Cowan, Pa., and experienced one of the hardest parts of the famine, the first skipped meal, as the time for dinner came and went.

Activities during the rest of the evening, including rock 'n' bowling, Bible study and a lesson in fire starting by the resident Eagle Scouts, helped to keep our minds off of hunger.

One of the most memorable experiences of the fast was talking to Schroeder like mealtimes in a large Italian family to the significance of sharing Christian communion. For Schroeder, communion summons up the image of his grandfather, who was a large man, busy with food, family and friends. He always seemed to find time to take Schroeder on his knee, however, and hand him a not-so-tasty candy with a slap on the cheek that said, "I love you—you remember that!"

A meal in a large Italian family, Schroeder said, is not just a place to gather and eat, but is an occasion for joy, sorrow, trust and life to be shared among people who love one another. Communion becomes such a meal, only, as children in Schroeder's family are told, "at God's table, with God's friends, eating the food that God made for you."

For Matt Dawson '06, the fast helped him to keep in mind those less fortunate, while reflecting on the quality of his own life.

"No matter how much food we deprive ourselves of, it is our choice to go hungry. Most of the people in this world don't have that luxury. It reminds me how blessed I am and how much responsibility I have to those less fortunate," Dawson said.

We traveled to Haven Ministries on Saturday morning to do some organizational afternoon, Ben Reiter '06 led a Bible study on a loving community as a type of food, in which our social, emotional and spiritual needs are met, noting that people have other ways in which they need to be "fed." He also remarked on the difficulties of the fast for its participants.

"The 30 Hour Famine this year set up one of the most challenging weekends of my entire life, during which I learned about world hunger, myself and God," Reiter said.

As 6:30 p.m. rolled around, we debriefed and broke our fast with communion in a room lit by candlelight in the house of University Chaplain Ian Oliver, who also participated in the fast. The darkness caused by the power outage served as another medium in which we could connect with the world's disenfranchised.

Throughout the fast, we found poignant ways in which we ourselves were hungry for something—fasting is only for those who seek change and for those brave enough to start with themselves.

"No matter how much food we deprive ourselves of, it is our choice to go hungry. Most of the people in this world don't have that luxury. It reminds me how blessed I am and how much responsibility I have to those less fortunate."

—Matt Dawson '06

In addition to promoting the 30 Hour Famine on college campuses across the United States, World Vision has also compiled a CD to raise money for the cause.

LE FESTIVAL DU CINÉMA FRANÇAIS 2004

THE FILMS

AREA PREMIERE!
Oscar Nominee for Best Animated Feature!
The Triplets of Belleville
Les Triplettes de Belleville
(2003, Sylvain Chomet, PG-13, 78 min)

When her grandson is kidnapped during the Tour de France, Madame Souza and her beloved pooch Bruno team up with the Belleville Sisters—an aged song-and-dance unit from the days of Fred Astaire—to rescue him. The look is unique: a hand-drawn, digital combination of "Betsy Boop," "Felix the Cat," and "Return of the King." The jazz score delivers the right tone of hip and banter. The style is more "South Park" than "Toy Story." This film may well be the most imaginative leap of 21st-century animation.

Le Cercle Rouge—RESTORED 35mm Print!
(1970, Jean-Pierre Melville, Not rated, 140 min)

Jean-Pierre Melville, father of the French New Wave, inspiration for Godard and Truffaut, and later Jarmusch, Tarantino and John Woo, was at his best in 1970 with Le Cercle Rouge, a cool, elegant masterpiece of film noir featuring taciturn, professional criminals with codes of honor harking back to the days of the Samurais. Deliberately paced, with every action, every gesture given its full weight, the film generates suspense through the very inevitability of its evolved plot.

Man on the Train
L'Homme du Train
(2002, Patrice Leconte, R, 90 min)

Late autumn in a sleepy town in the French Alps. Milan, a taciturn tough-guy, arrives with a mission to rob a bank in three days' time. Manesquier, a retired schoolteacher and teacher who has spent his life in the comfort of the day, the two strangers meet by chance in a pharmacy. So begins an unlikely friendship between two opposites, each who sees in the other the vestigial aspects of himself.

On Guard!
Le Bossu
(1996, Philippe de Broca, Not rated, 128 min)

In this infectious charming swashbuckler, prepared with rotating sword fights, romance, mistaken identities, court intrigue and a deliciously detestable villain, de Broca brings Fava's serialized novel to life with convincing period atmosphere and picturesque locations.

"On Guard restores some of the bygone delights of childhood moviegoing."

SPONSORED BY

FACSEA
Bucknell University French & Francophone Studies Program & French Club
Bucknell University English Department
Bucknell University Association for the Arts
Lycoming College Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures
Susquehanna University Department of Modern Languages

This program was made possible with the support of the Cultural Services of the French Embassy and the French Ministry of Culture (CNC). Also, special thanks to The Library of Congress Motion Picture Division.

PHILIPPE DUBOIS, ERIC FADEN

THE SCHEDULE

6 pm Opening Reception - All are welcome!
7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
9 pm The Campus Theatre

2 pm Le Cercle Rouge
7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
9 pm The Campus Theatre

3 pm L'Homme du Train
5 pm Le Bossu
Location: Vaughan Auditorium (Room 100)

5 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
Location: The Campus Theatre

7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
9 pm Inch'Allah Dimanche
Location: Vaughan Auditorium (Room 100)

6:45 pm Le Bossu
Location: Vaughan Auditorium (Room 100)

7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
Location: The Campus Theatre

9 pm Inch'Allah Dimanche
Location: Vaughan Auditorium (Room 100)

7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
Location: The Campus Theatre

7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
Location: The Campus Theatre

7 pm Je Rentre à la Maison
Location: Vaughan Auditorium (Room 100)

7 pm Les Triplettes de Belleville
Location: The Campus Theatre

PRICES
All films are FREE to the university and community except Triplets of Belleville

Triplets of Belleville is free to the Bucknell community with a valid university ID. For all others, prices are $7 for adults, $5 for seniors/students, $4 for children 12 & under

INFORMATION
The Campus Theatre is located at 413 Market Street. Vaughan Literature Auditorium is located on the main quad of the Bucknell campus. For a map please go to: www.bucknell.edu/map

Bucknell The Campus Theatre
Showing movies since 1941

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Cinema Center

Susquehanna Valley Mall • 374-2048
Play Dates: February 27-March 4, 2004

Mythic River (R) 1:50, 5:15, 8:15

Along Came Polly (PG-13) 12:20, 3:40, 6:30, 9:15

La Strada (PG-13) 11:40, 3:40, 7:50

Big Fish (PG-13) 12:30, 3:40, 6:30, 9:15

Batman Returns (R) 1:40, 4:50, 9:25

Miracle (PG) 11:50, 3:15, 6:15, 9:10

Monster (R) 11:30, 2:40, 5:40

Chasing the Dream (PG) 11:30, 2:40, 5:40, 8:45

Barber Shop 2 (PG-13) 1:30, 4:15, 6:40, 9:00

Perfect Score (PG-13) 11:45, 2:10, 4:30, 6:50, 9:10

50 First Dates (PG-13) 11:45, 2:10, 4:30, 6:50, 9:10

Catch That Kid (PG) 11:50, 2:45, 5:20, 8:30

50 First Dates (PG-13) 12:15, 2:30, 5:15, 9:30

Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

RENTALS
for BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE JUNE 1, 2004

Large 2 BR APTS AT: 237 3rd & St. George 40 Brown St.

SOME APTS. AVAILABLE FOR IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY

Remodeled, clean, excellent condition, excellent location

RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO CAMPUS! (570) 966-1488

FEATURES

Contribute your hair to show you care

National, non-profit organization 'Locks of Love' holds hair drive on March 1st

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Writer

Sometimes giving to charities is as easy as getting a hair cut. Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority and the Office of the Deans of Students are giving students a chance to lend a helping hand, or rather hair, by sponsoring a hair drive to support Locks for Love. The drive will be Monday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the L.C. Cave. Free hair cuts will be provided by Greek Isles Salon. The minimum length for a hairpiece is 10 inches, but smaller donations will be accepted as well. Shorter-length donations will be sold to help offset the at-cost manufacturing of hairpieces for children.

Locks of Love is a national, non-profit organization that provides hairpieces for financially disadvantaged children who suffer from long-term medical hair loss, such as those with cancer or burns. The donations made by the University on Monday will go to girls suffering from hair loss due to alopecia areata, a disease that causes hair loss.

and most of them don't even know about Locks of Love," Clarke said.

It already seems like the drive is going to be an overwhelming success, with 15

"Even though it may seem like a big deal to cut off ten inches of hair, realize that you are doing this to help young girls who don't have any hair. When you donate, you are giving so much more than just your hair—you are restoring their self-esteem and their confidence."

—Liz Digani '05

Kappa Kappa Gamma sisters Liz Digani '05 and Maureen Clarke '05 donated their hair last year.

"We thought about how much we could do in a campus environment when there are so many girls here at Bucknell women signed up to donate their locks.

The organizers of the drive are not limiting who they allow to participate, and will accept donations from anyone willing to face the scissors. Depending on its success this year, Locks of Love may become an annual event at the University.

"Our plan is to see how successful this year is, and then start planning on ways to make it even bigger in the years to come," Clarke said.

Students can still sign up to donate hair in the L.C. Mall. Getting your hair cut will not only help young girls gain their confidence, but it will also give you a great new look for the spring, so don't hesitate to donate your hair. There are many who need it, and a small sacrifice makes a huge difference in these children's lives.

"Even though it may seem like a big deal to cut off ten inches of hair, realize that you are doing this to help young girls who don't have any hair," Digani said. "When you donate, you are giving so much more than just your hair—you are restoring their self-esteem and their confidence."

Photo courtesy of Tyler Kidder
Bucknellian editor Tyler Kidder '05 donated her hair to Locks for Love last year. Though losing over ten inches was a change, her contribution went to a worthy cause.

Room with a view promotes healthy body image

By LAUREN DAVIS
Contributing Writer

Intense body image problems and eating disorders have incredible power over the afflicted. For afflicted students, nearly every daily activity is distorted. Class time is spent counting the day's calorie consumption. Gym time is spent looking longingly through countless glossy magazines at models for the inspiration to keep exercising. Social activities are devoted to comparing and analyzing peers, perhaps focusing on that one person with the enviously perfect body.

For those suffering from eating disorders or body image problems, life is no longer lived day-to-day, but rather in the future: when that weight goal is reached or those jeans fit.

This week was the University's Celebrate Every Body Week. Activities were aimed at helping afflicted students feel better about their bodies and teach about eating disorders, body image problems and the detrimental physical and mental effects of these issues.

Throughout the week the exhibit "A Room with a View" was on display in Arches Lounge in the Langone Center.

The Women's Resource Center (WRC) created "A Room with a View" and asked for submissions from the University community. This is an annual exhibit, but this year the WRC decided to update the quotes to reflect current University sentiment.

"It's a major issue on this campus. Many are going through it, but nobody is talking about it. [The exhibit] is a good place to vent," said Jen Mellon '04, a WRC employee who helped put the exhibit together.

The exhibit was divided into four rooms. The first room, "Images," contained pictures of the ideal body portrayed in the media, as well as advertisements about how to achieve this body.

"Distortion" was the second and most emotion-evoking room, with student quotes and disturbing statistics such as the fact that 42 percent of girls surveyed between first and third grade want to be thinner and 80 percent of fourth-grade girls are on a diet, according to NationalEatingDisorders.org.

"There are times when I feel so ugly in my body that I can't bear to have anyone look at me. The feelings spring up on me like a tidal wave and wash away all the coping strategies I've been taught, leaving me helpless. I'll sit in my room, as far away from the mirror as possible, with my eyes looking anywhere but down at myself," said a woman from the class of 2006 in an exhibit quote.

Members of the University juggling club showed off their talents at the Love Your Body Fair on Monday night. In addition to Room with a view, many other events were planned all week.

Some of the student quotes convey the belief that the University community has its own unrealistic body image that is comparable to the images found in magazines.

A female from the class of 2004 wrote, "I know that I am a healthy woman who is in shape, yet looking around me [on campus] I question everything I love about my body."

The "Despair" room was the third room in the exhibit and was styled like a typical dorm room. However, upon further investigation, one notices that the inhabitant of this room has an obsessive gym schedule that appears to dominate her life, as well as a large collection of diet products.

"I thought the student quotes were disturbing, with their days planned around the gym and what they are going to eat," Katie Bohnert '06 said as she passed thought the "Despair" room.

"It's a major issue on this campus. Many are going through it, but nobody is talking about it. [The exhibit] is a good place to vent."

—Jen Mellon '04

"Hope" is the final room. A list of "10 Things You Can Do to Love Your Body" hung on this room's walls, as well as more uplifting and positive quotes from students, including one recovering student who wrote a haunting letter to her anorexia.

While strange eating behaviors can be traced through history, it seems that it has become a much more publicized problem in the last few decades. Karen Carpenter in 1983 became the first celebrity to die of issues related to an eating disorder.

There are so many contributing factors to eating disorders, culture specific factors. We have the power to change the media images and the social norms," WRC Director Molly Dragiewicz said.

With an astounding 80 percent of women in the United States dissatisfied with their appearance, according to NationalEatingDisorders.org, one has to wonder if the end is near. Will there come a time when eating disorders and body dissatisfaction can be cured?

"It's sad that girls can be manipulated by the media. In reality, everybody just wants a pizza," Tara Fry '06 said after touring the "Room with a View" exhibit.

DISCOVER NEW LEARNING OPPORTUNITIES... REGISTER FOR SUMMER CLASSES NOW AT THE UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

Our summer classes match your lifestyle and goals:

- Choose from 4-week, 6-week, 12-week, or full-term sessions.
- Register in advance your studies with smaller classes in a variety of subject areas.
- Summer classes are usually small, providing a personal and intimate atmosphere in which to begin or advance your studies.

We welcome:

- Currently enrolled students
- Students home for the summer from other colleges or universities
- Adults continuing their education

FOURTH FLOOR, CATHEDRAL OF LEARNING • 412-524-6600 • WWW.PITT.EDU/SUMMER

University of Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH
BRADFORD
GREENSBURG
JOHNS TOWN
TITUSVILLE

FEATURES

Alumni profile: Pete Griffin '00 Career Development Center lead student toward MTV

By LAUREN DAVIS
Contributing Writer

With the working world just a few years or months away for some students, choosing a career path may seem daunting. Movies such as "Office Space," while humorous, depict the daily corporate environment as a dry, boring place, spiced up only by the occasional Hawaiian Shirt Day.

University students fortunately have a great resource in the Career Development Center (CDC). Its staff is dedicated to working with alumni and parents, and it helps place students in interesting and promising jobs.

Pete Griffin '00 was a business management major who used to have no idea what he wanted to do after graduation. Today he lives in Manhattan Beach, Calif. and works for MTV in Santa Monica, Calif., and all it took was a little help from the CDC.

"I literally sat down and asked myself, 'What do you really enjoy in life?' The answer at the time was music, so I went to Laura Denbow," Griffin said.

Denbow, the director of the CDC, put him in contact with Yvonne Ericson, the vice president of advertising for Sony Music. At the time, Sony did not have any job openings, but Ericson offered him an internship at a software company in the meantime.

"Because of this incredible opportunity, I am where I am now," Griffin said.

In July 2000, Griffin started working at the software company near his hometown, Mahopac, N.Y. Although Griffin said it was a good company, he quit after a few months because he knew it was not the right fit for him.

After finding himself on a career path he was not happy with, Pete Griffin '00 got a call from MTV that changed his life. He now lives in California hobnobbing with the stars.

Unemployed, Griffin sent out his resume and continued to pursue job openings at Sony.

"Then, out of nowhere, as I'm watching SportsCenter one afternoon, sitting in a Lazy Boy at home, I get a call from MTV," Griffin said.

MTV had been looking for an advertising assistant, and Ericson had recommended Griffin. The rest, as they say, is history—Griffin has been working for MTV ever since.

Griffin worked at the Times Square MTV location for three years and then was promoted to Santa Monica.

A typical day starts at 7:30 a.m. and often continues until 7 p.m. with after-work business with clients at a bar, restaurant or concert.

"I work in a very intense work environment, but they truly live by the motto 'work hard, play hard,'" Griffin said.

Griffin, who played basketball at the University and was a member of Sigma Chi Fraternity, stressed the importance of involvement in the campus community. Being involved allows students to create a relationship with a future employers who may share their extracurricular activities.

"I think the greatest skill you can have when interviewing is not your GPA or major, but your ability to communicate. ... [Employers] want someone that they are going to feel comfortable working with each day ... not some bookworm who is a genius but can't talk to you," Griffin said.

Griffin said students need to figure out what makes them happy and take advantage of any available opportunity.

"It doesn't have to be ideal, but get the ball rolling and start walking down the path that makes you happy. What happens along the way is what will help you decide what you truly want to do," Griffin said.

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Ms.

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I have an unusual problem to ask you about. I am seeing this amazing guy right now, but we are having a disagreement about sex. He is a virgin, but I'm not. To me, sex seems like the next logical step in our relationship. However, he says he's not ready. Is there anything that I can do to speed up the process and make him feel more comfortable about sex?

—C

Dear 'C'

First of all, I do not think your problem is all that rare now. Many people are still virgins by the time they reach college. It is extremely normal, and not at all "unusual," as you called it in your letter.

In fact, it seems as though more and more people are choosing to remain virgins instead of having sex. Your guy is certainly not alone in his choice. This is a safe and completely respectable decision, and while we may have been cultured to think of a virgin as a female, many males are also choosing abstinence.

No matter what a person's gender is, you cannot force someone to be ready for something before he or she actually is. There is nothing you can do to speed up the process and make your guy want to have sex sooner.

You must respect what he has told you and wait until he is ready for the next step. You must give him as much time as he needs, and if you feel that you are unable to wait for him then perhaps you should move on. However, since you said that your guy is so amazing, I would hope that you would be willing to stick it out and give him some time.

Remember, relationships are about much more than just the physical aspects. Take this time to really get to know each other. This will make sex between the two of you even better if and when you are both ready.

Stop worrying so much about what you think the next step should be and just enjoy each other and what you have together. Sex is not something that should be trivialized and rushed into, and bravo to you both for taking time to discuss this issue and for not making any rash decisions.

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send a letter to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell:
What is the perfect age to get married?

MUSIC TELEVISION®

Old Cloverleaf Village offers food, crafts, and history

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Old Cloverleaf Village is a local jigsaw puzzle of crafts, buildings and history melded for a uniquely diverse experience. The complex, located a step off Route 90 in Danville, contains shops, restaurants, a bed and breakfast, galleries and historically refurbished buildings.

"We have over 14 shops and 24 buildings," said employee Betty Deaner, who has worked for the village for seven years.

Many of the structures now inside the village have been transported from other areas within a 100-mile radius.

According to a pamphlet published by the village, "Concerned with the loss of our nation's historic resources and disenchanted with the 'cookie cutter' mentality of today's malls and restaurants, owners Bob and Debra Cameron designed a master plan to convert a historic farm ... into a Victorian hamlet filled with unique shops, eateries and lodging."

Relocation and restoration are obvious from the village's appearance—one's first impression is of the whimsical collage-like exterior of the complex. A church altar, mill and 200-year-old log cabin, all moved to Cloverleaf Village, from their original homes where, are located inside the main shop buildings.

The altar is from St. Ignace Church in Centuria, a town which no longer exists. Deaner said, "We've had people come in and say they were married in front of this altar." The log cabin was brought here from the Carolinas.

Connected to this same complex is a one-room schoolhouse and Methodist Church.

The one-room schoolhouse came from a town near Washingtonville. I believe it was named Strawberry Ridge," Deaner said. "The church came from Lewistown. It was originally a Methodist church out there, the wainscoting, woodwork and ceiling are all original to the building.

It now acts as our art gallery."

According to Deaner, several couples held their weddings in this small chapel.

The historic nature of the shop medley is supplemented by the variety of merchandise found within, including clothing, crafts, candles, educational toys, Bavarian crystal and an old World Christmas store. Across the complex, customers can browse and sample wines and specialty foods as well as shop for antiques in the largest antique barn on Route 90.

There is also a dining establishment on the grounds, offering a variety of food, from a simple snack or a more substantial meal. The Stables Eatery provides a casual restaurant atmosphere, and the village also houses the Village Gov. and Cloverleaf Cafe for relaxed dining.

For something a little more formal, the complex offers a treat not to be missed. Once a month, Old Cloverleaf Village hosts an authentic British tea in its cozy Victorian Manor Inn. During the village's regular schedule, the inn also has a historic bed and breakfast for travelers.

Guests to the monthly tea are served pastries and finger foods with authentic British style in a comfortable atmosphere. The seemingly genuine Victorian furnishings and Classical music in the background only add to the peaceful ambience. Food is placed in the center of the table on a three-tiered tray that recalls the British decor. Diners work their way up the foods on the tray, sampling from several different palates.

The Antique Barn, shown above, is also home to the Cloverleaf Cafe and the Wine Shoppe.

"Tea is filled and refilled during the course of the afternoon, and customers get the chance to relax and spend time with family."

"It's a great chance to get together and have a relaxing afternoon," Tracee Gotshall of Hummelstown, Pa., said. "The atmosphere is much more relax-

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian
At the Victorian Manor Inn, formal British teas are served. Above, the clientele enjoy a tasty chocolate tea.

THE Bucknellian SECTION B

February 27, 2004

Women's track and field delivers

Women's team annihilates Army, Navy by record margin for third straight PL title; men pick up third place

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The Bucknell women's track and field team trounced the competition, setting a meet record for biggest margin of victory in the Patriot League indoor track and field championships last weekend in front of a home crowd.

The men finished a distant third, as Navy beat Army in a thrilling 4x400 meter relay to win the meet by two points.

"We are so incredibly psyched," said Melanie Buzcko '07, winner of both the 55m hurdles and the pole vault. "We ended up winning by 94 points. We're just very proud of how well everyone competed and really rose to the occasion."

The women were in first place after the second day of competition, but it was not until midway through the final day that Head Coach Kevin Donner believed victory was certain.

"In a matter of an hour Melanie Buzcko won the 55m hurdles with Lillian finishing third, Tolu won the 60m, Calvo, Boley and Lanewala swept the 400m and Sawko, Bricker, and Marsh swept the 800m," Donner said, referring to the efforts of Jamie Lillian '04, Tolu Fayanjula '05, Amy Calvo '05, Monique Boley '05, Rehana Lanewala '05, Christa Sawko '07, Lauren Bricker '07 and Jen Marsh '05.

"Confidence was definitely the key to winning," Buzcko said. "We knew we could beat Army and Navy so we just went out there with a positive attitude and it just became contagious. The girls started the meet off well for us on Friday in the pentathlon and everyone else just took over from there."

Huge performances from a number of athletes helped as well. In the throws circle Marjorie Grap '07 launched a huge personal best in the weight throw to break the school record of Maria Garcia '04.

While on the track, besides the second place finish in the 800m, Bricker helped the 4x800m to a third-place finish, and took second in the triple jump to teammate Ann Doty '07, who won with an ECAC qualifying leap.

Fayanjula proved to be the big winner for the team, bringing in 24 points.

"She won long jump and qualified for ECACs, won the 60m dash, and got fourth place in high jump and she hasn't even high jumped all year," Buzcko said. "She's amazing."

Fayanjula said she fed off of her teammates' performances.

"When I saw Mel beat out the Navy athlete by only hundreds of a second and the mystified look of the girl who could not believe she had just been upset, I was inspired and determined to do the same in the 60m," Fayanjula said after

inside Volume 133, Number 5
Business & Politics:
Director of Student Health Services Dr. Donald Stechschulte prepares for his congressional campaign.
See page B10

Jen Marsh '05 runs during the 800m on Sunday at the Patriot League championship meet. Marsh was a strong contributor in the Bison's trouncing of Army and Navy over the weekend.

Baseball opens up season at JMU

Bison lose two of three, but earn first win over Dukes in series history

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The defending Patriot League champion Bucknell baseball team opened its season last weekend at James Madison University, splitting a doubleheader with the Dukes on Saturday and wrapping up the series with a 16-6 loss Sunday.

The Dukes outgunned the Bison 16-10 in an offense-heavy series opener on Saturday, while Bucknell recovered to edge out James Madison 6-5 in the second half of the doubleheader. The victory marked the first time that the Bison have defeated James Madison in the 16-game history of competition between the two programs.

Because of winter conditions, the Bison have been restricted to practices in the fieldhouse rather than on the diamond, a factor that placed their pitching and defense at a disadvantage against James Madison.

"It was a typical opening weekend without having any field practice opportunities," Head Coach Gene Depew said. "We played very well at times and not as well as we need to at other times. Our pitchers had to adjust to throwing off a real mound for the first time and some did it better than others."

A productive performance from the team's offense provided a bright spot for the weekend.

"The strongest part of the weekend was our hitting and that is an encouraging sign," Depew said.

Tri-captain Ben Stoll '04 observed both strengths and weaknesses in the team's efforts over the weekend, both of which can be applied toward future success.

"We can take both positives and negatives from our first weekend at JMU," Stoll said. "We as a team will focus on the positives while understanding our negatives can be remedied fairly easily."

The Bison were the first to jump on the scoreboard in the first game, as Kyle Walter '06 launched a two-out solo home run to right field in the first inning. It was the first of six hits over the weekend for Walter, who finished the series with 11 total bases.

Ben Stoll '04 slides home safely to score the first run in the Bison's 6-5 win over James Madison in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader. The Bison compiled a total of 22 runs over the three-game weekend series, sandwiching 16-10 and 16-6 losses around the game-two victory.

The Dukes quickly retaliated with three runs in their half of the frame, including a two-run home run by first baseman Mitchell Moses, the first of five home runs knocked out by James Madison in the game.

The Bison trimmed the lead to 4-3 when Pete Wolf '04 led off the second inning with a double and scored on a single by Brian Hirschberg '04, who later scored on a wild pitch.

James Madison roughed up Bison starter Kevin Miller '04 with a six-run third inning, breaking open the game with two three-run home runs.

Duke's power bats, augmented by a strong outward-bound wind, continued to plague Bucknell pitchers in the fourth inning, as James Madison tacked on a pair of runs against Miller and another three runs against Cory Nadler '04, who relieved Miller with one out in the inning and pitched the remainder of the game.

The Bison chipped away at the Dukes' 15-3 lead in the sixth inning when Chris Grandizio '06 singled home Hirschberg and Phil Bunting '04, but James Madison added an extra run in the bottom of the inning to make it 16-5.

Bucknell's offense continued its liveliness in the eighth inning, adding five runs courtesy of an RBI single by Sam Moss '04 and a grand slam from Brian Day '05.

The offensive surge would only narrow the gap to 16-10, as the Dukes shut down the Bison in the ninth to make that the final score.

"Our hitting was superb and we battled all game," Bucknell pitching coach R.J. Grant said. "When you score 10 runs, you expect to win the game, but JMU did a great job capitalizing on our errors and pitches left up in the zone."

Matt Daley '04 also pointed out the importance of the Bison's solid hitting.

"The bright spot of the team [during the series] was definitely our offense," Daley said. "Last year we struggled offensively, so it was nice to see us get off to a good start and score a bunch of runs right away."

Nadler also made note of the offense's effort.

"The offense showed great promise this weekend and put up a lot of runs against some pretty good pitching," Nadler said.

The Bison maintained their momentum at the plate in game two of the twinbill, slapping four runs on the scoreboard in the first inning.

A single by Stoll, an error on a fielder's choice by the Dukes' catcher and a bunt single by Walter loaded up the bases for the Bison. Wolf sent home Stoll with a sacrifice fly and then Hirschberg cleaned the bases with a three-run dinger off the scoreboard in right field. Hirschberg finished the day with four hits and four RBIs in the doubleheader.

Bison starter Daley was effective on the mound, holding the James Madison offense at bay and pitching a complete seven-inning game for the Orange and Blue.

The Dukes threatened the lead in the third inning when they rightfielder Brian Hirschberg '04 runs down a fly ball during the first of the Bison's two Saturday games at JMU. Hirschberg went four-for-eight with four RBIs during the doubleheader.

See TRACK, page B2

See BASEBALL, page B2

See MBBALL, page B5

Men's basketball moves into second

By PIERRE HERNANDO
Staff Writer

The Bison (13-12, 9-3) went over the .500 mark for the first time this year after demolishing the visiting Army Black Knights (6-18, 3-9) 75-25 Sunday at Sojka Pavilion. Prior to their game against Army, the Bison took care of then-Patriot League leader Lafayette (18-6, 9-2) with a convincing 79-61 defeat in front of a raucous home crowd Friday.

The 50-point margin of victory against Army was the largest in school history, surpassing the previous record of 49 set in 1969. The victory was also the squad's seventh in a row, and 10th in 11 games.

Playing their last regular season home game, the Bison started all five of their seniors. Army only managed four points through the first 13 minutes of play, as the Orange and Blue held a commanding 24-4 lead after Donald Brown '07 hit a jumper. Quinn and Chris McNaughton '07 added six points each in the final six minutes of the first half, as the Bison led 41-9 at intermission.

Army shot 18 percent in the first half, as it managed to only hit three of 17 shots. It was zero for seven from deep and hit three of its seven free throw attempts. In the first half, the Bison shot 71 percent from the field, 50 percent from three-point range and 67 percent from the foul line.

The squad increased its lead to 37 as it went up 50-13 on a John Clark '07 layup. Army continued to struggle and the Bison kept on with the onslaught, going ahead 60-17 on a Weber layup.

The Orange and Blue led 75-19 with 1:08 remaining in the contest, after Namvou connected on two free throws.

Army had a chance to set an NCAA record for fewest points in a game since the shot clock was introduced in 1986. The Black Knights stayed out of the record books thanks only to two three-pointers by Travis Owsley in the last 1:06 of the game.

Bennett tied his career-high of nine points. He also snatched three boards and blocked three shots.

Abe Badmus '07 was pleased to see Bennett and Quinn finish with strong games.

"Matt Quinn and Jeremiah Bennet are two of the most stand-up guys I have ever met," Badmus said. "They come to practice every day with their hard hat on, and to see them perform the way that they did this past Sunday was a joy."

Namvou scored four and dished out two assists. Skornik finished with six points and five rebounds, while Weber added five points and two rebounds. McNaughton scored eight points off the bench, while Charles Lee '07 chipped in with seven of his own.

The Orange and Blue shot a blistering 60 percent from the field. They hit five threes and 12 free throws.

Army finished the game shooting eight for 45 (18 percent) from the field. They connected on two of 20 from downtown, and only seven of 17 from the charity stripe. Owsley led Army with eight points.

The victory enabled the Bison to finish undefeated at home (7-0) for the first time since the 1994-1995 season. It was a satisfying home finale for the Orange and Blue players.

"Playing a turnover-free game was a good feeling, and I'm glad that I had a part to play in the victory as did all the 15 guys on our team," Badmus said. "It was fun to win in front of such a jovial crowd that has been with us since the beginning."

The jovial crowd was present when the Bison took down Lafayette on Friday. More than 3,300 fans, the second-largest attendance in Sojka Pavilion's short history, witnessed the Bison run-and-gun their way to an exciting win. Four Bison players scored in double figures, led by McNaughton, who tallied a game-high 20 points.

"It was certainly one of the best games we had so far and with the crowd being just great, it made it a lot easier for us to play that well. Lafayette is definitely one of the top teams of this league but I think that after our performance this weekend, everybody has an eye on us," McNaughton said.

The game started as a seesaw battle. The squad went ahead 8-2 after Lee hit a jumper. Lafayette caught up and led 19-16 after a free throw by Winston Davis. Just after the Bison took the lead, 22-21, on another Lee jumper with 5:06 remaining in the first half, Kevin Bettencourt '06 went off on a personal shooting spree. The talented guard hit three three-pointers over the next two minutes as

Sports

Baseball splits doubleheader

Bison take 6-5 win from JMU in game two; fall in games one and three picked up two runs with a passed ball followed by a pair of RBI singles, narrowing the score to 4-3. The threat was halted when Steve Stutzman '04 made a dazzling play, snaring a line drive from Dan Santobianco and flipping it to Moss to double up the runner at second.

BASEBALL from page B1

The Bison added an insurance run in the fourth when Bunting walked, advanced to second on a sacrifice by Stutzman and scored on Stoll's single to centerfield.

James Madison again rallied in the fifth inning, this time tying the score with a two-run homer from Santobianco, the ninth homer hit out of Mauck Stadium on the day between the two teams.

Daley buckled down and held the Dukes scoreless for the remainder of the game, allowing the offense to scratch out a victory in the final inning with timely hitting and opportunistic baserunning, as Moss singled, advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt from Walter and then scored on an error to give the Bison the lead and the victory.

Daley picked up the win after going the distance for the Bison, giving up five runs and striking out four in the effort.

Grant was impressed with his team's ability to rally for a win after the tough loss earlier in the day.

"We responded very well to the adversity we faced in game one," Grant said. "Matt Daley gave us a solid complete game effort and we provided enough offense to earn the win. A sign of a solid and experienced team is being able to bounce back from a tough loss, and we did that very well."

Sunday's game started as a pitcher's duel between Phil Futrick '06 and James Madison's Travis Miller through the first three innings, but eventually erupted into another offensive showcase.

In his first effort as a starter, Futrick blazed through the first two innings, retiring the first five batters he faced and piling up three strikeouts. James Madison finally got the scoring started in the third inning when a walk, a sacrifice bunt, a botched pickoff attempt and a bunt single put a run on the board for the Dukes.

The Bison fired back in the top of the next inning, when Chris Mahony '04 came to the plate with the bats loaded and cranked out a three-run double on the first pitch of the at-bat. Mahony started in place of Hirschberg, who injured his ankle while running out a single in the final inning of Saturday's win.

Despite the three-run inning, the Dukes' Miller held the damage to a minimal, keeping the Dukes within striking distance of the lead.

"Phil Futrick kept us in the game early, but JMU's pitcher settled in very nicely," Grant said. "We struck for three runs in the fourth, but for the most part, he kept our hitters off balance by throwing his fastball, slider and change-up for strikes. When a pitcher does that, they are going to be effective."

The Dukes backed up their pitcher with a three-run inning of their own in the bottom of the frame, scoring via a pair of singles, an error, a two-run double and an unearned fielder's choice RBI before Tim Peacock '05 came in for Futrick and retired the next three batters.

Day's second home run and fifth RBI of the series, a solo shot to lead off the sixth inning, evened the contest at 4-4, but the Dukes quickly regained the lead with another three-run inning.

Two errors, a triple and a single gave James Madison the 7-4 lead before Nathan Mittag '07 replaced Peacock and got the last out of the inning. Mittag held the Dukes scoreless and hitless in his 1.1 innings of work.

The eighth inning marked a meltdown for the Bison, as James Madison unleashed a nine-run scoring onslaught, pulling away to a 16-4 lead.

The Bison added another two runs in the ninth inning with RBI doubles from Matt Capece '06 and Walter, but could not challenge the daunting lead as the Dukes walked away with the 16-6 victory.

Despite the two routs, Bucknell players are

Matt Daley '04 winds up during his complete-game performance on Saturday afternoon. Daley was on the mound for all seven innings of the Bison's win over JMU.

intent on focusing on the positive aspects that can be taken from all three games while also building on the weak points.

"I thought we played pretty well as a team being the first time on the field this year," Day said. "We need to take the positive aspects of the weekend into Davidson, while working hard this week to improve on the negative ones."

Futrick also noted the positives for the Bison.

"While the results of the games this week were disappointing, I believe the most important part of these first few weekends is just to get as many positives as we can out of them," Futrick said. "A major positive was our hitting. We hit the ball extremely well, especially for how early in the season it is. Our pitching and defense showed some good signs, but some improvement still needs to be made. The important thing is to stay positive and keep on working."

Dewep hopes the Bison will build off of the experience at James Madison.

"We need to build on the good things and make progress on our consistency of execution especially on defense," Dewep said.

Defense, as well as pitching, was an area in which the Bison will seek to improve. During Sunday's game, Bucknell players combined for five errors, while the team's pitchers allowed 14 earned runs over eight innings.

Stoll hopes for improvement from the defense.

"We have to become more consistent on defense and with our experienced starters I think this will occur quickly as we play more baseball," Stoll said.

Grant addressed some of the weaknesses that troubled the Bison staff.

"It seemed as if every time we left a ball up in the zone, JMU hitters made us pay dearly," Grant said. "I was happy with the effort put forth, but our pitchers know that in order to be successful, they are going to have to do a better job getting ahead of the hitters and keeping the ball low in the zone."

The fielding and pitching struggles are not indicative of the team's ability, as both of these aspects of the game have suffered from the limitations placed on practice conditions and from inexperience.

Daley also has faith that these aspects will soon improve.

"In the next couple of weeks, our pitching and defense will come around once we get used to playing outside instead of in the fieldhouse," Daley said.

Nadler also believes that the pitching staff will soon join the offense as a strongpoint for the team.

"If we can continue to hit like this we will have a very good season because the pitching is only going to get better," Nadler said. "We had four guys pitch for the first time in college baseball [Mittag, Ryan Gryskiewicz '07, Matt Curry '07 and Luke Mara '07], and they are only going to get better as the season goes along, and the same goes for our returning veteran pitchers."

The Bison will continue to shake off the winter rust this weekend as they travel to North Carolina for another non-conference, three-game set against Davidson. They will play a pair of games tomorrow starting at 1 p.m., and a single game at noon Sunday.

"We're looking forward to heading down to North Carolina for a three game set with Davidson," Grant said. "They are very much like JMU, in that they are young, but very competitive. This will be another early challenge for our squad."

Track rolls on

TRACK from page B1

Buczek won the 55m hurdles. "It was great that it worked out that way. I think it sent the message to the rest of the teams at the meet that Bucknell should never be underestimated."

"My staff and I were very happy with both teams final results," Donner said.

"I think most of us feel that we squeaked by," Mike Mellas '05 said. "Our goal was to finish third and we finished third. We didn't compete amazingly, but we got the job done."

Mellas competed in the grueling heptathlon, finishing a respectable third, and then came back to finish sixth in the triple jump. Besides helping the men out with his points, Mellas also helped to inspire the women.

"It was the last event of the heptathlon and I was in the middle of long jumping," Fanyanjuola said. "The athlete in second place was riding Mellas the whole race and I assumed that he would kick and blow out Mike on the last lap. Sure enough, the kid in second place kicked on the second turn of the last lap but on the home stretch Mike came out of nowhere and passed the guy in the last 10 or 20 meters."

The men put up many other gutsy performances with Noel Powell '04 and graduate student Greg Costello '03, sending the University team and fans into mayhem every time they competed, helping the Bison to score 68.75 points behind Navy with 177.75 and Army with 175.75 points.

Powell had three runner-up finishes in the 200m, 400m and long jump. The 400m proved to be Powell's most exciting race—he finished a disappointing seventh in the 60m only a short while earlier, had run trials in both the 60m and 200m dashes and had already long jumped. Trailing the chase pack, Powell looked rough early, but made a strong move coming off of the final turn to finish second.

Costello held his own competing in what proved to be two of the three most competitive races in the meet. Saturday afternoon, Costello waited in the pack of the 5000m through two miles, before closing with a 4:27 final mile to finish a close second to Matt Seymour of American. Both the 5000m and mile saw the top five finishers go under the IC4A mark. However, in an unprecedented race, the 3000m proved to be the class of the meet, as the meet record fell and all six scorers were under the IC4A standard. Costello made a valiant effort to go with Seymour, before faltering late and finally kicking to a third place finish.

Although the final event, the men's 4x400m, was not the most competitive, it was no doubt the most exciting event of the meet. Army and Navy entered the event tied, with Army never having lost a Patriot League Indoor or Outdoor Track and Field title in 10 years. With the noise level raised to a maddening level in the Gerhard Fieldhouse, Navy pulled away for good on the third leg and never looked back.

"Army and Navy really flexed their muscles and it seems the rest of the league got caught in their crossfire," Donner said. "The addition of Navy makes the Patriot League a very formidable league which is only going to make everyone else better."

"Even without Navy, the league is getting more competitive," Mellas said. "So when you take a more competitive league and add a powerhouse team into the mix, it means that it's going to be much harder to score points, and the points you do score become all the more valuable."

Do not expect either the men's or women's teams to celebrate too much. Besides indoor ECAC for women and IC4A for the men, the athletes are already looking to spring.

"Everyone is ecstatic about the win, but during the meeting Coach Donner pointed out that we cannot get too happy and rest on our laurels," Fanyanjuola said. "I think that everyone is really proud and happy that the team did well but I also think we are hungry for another slaughter at outdoor leagues."

Bull Run Inn

Celebrates

Seniors Night

Thurs., Feb. 26

10 p.m. - 2 a.m.

All 21 and over are welcome!

DJ & Dancing

Food & Beverage Features

Check it out at: www.bullruninn.com

Lousy at sports?

Compensate for it by writing about them.

E-mail ccairns@ to join our writing staff.

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

All the heart money can't buy

Bowers was no $4.5 million assemblage of horseflesh. He'd sell instead for a trifling sum of $1,100 to a small-time trainer and breeder named John Calloway.

All that the bidders saw in 1976 was a wretched-looking castaway with a sanguineous trail of crimson rolling down his forehead, a bloody wreck who was so ornery as to bash his own noggin on the stall door several times in the holding area.

Calloway paid for what he saw. He paid for as much as logic told him might be on the horizon. And he was the only one that thought he was looking at something worth as much as a lousy grand.

Calloway would end up shutting the animal off to another auction after a year, but unbeknownst to him at the time, he would bound himself to the early twines of horse racing's greatest gutter-to-glory legend.

Even as a rag-tag youngster, though, the $1,100 colt left somewhat of an impression on his first owner's farm. He left impressions all over, actually—in his stall door, in his handlers' flesh, in anything the least bit maleable or dentable. He especially enjoyed pulverizing his feed buckets, which he'd wrench from the wall and pulp into the stall floor with one of his forehooves, in the manner of a steeldriver trying to make a living.

And so before he left Calloway's farm, he was afforded a name: John Henry, in honor of the steel driving man of American tall tale.

If it hadn't been documented otherwise, what John Henry the horse did over the next seven years would have sounded as fabricated as the deed of John Henry the human fictional creation.

He would be wheeled from farm to farm and pawed off from trainer to trainer a few more times, a journeyman equine in his first few years as a racer, still not very inspiring a physical specimen, still hot-headed and far from cuddly.

Not many people liked John Henry, and John Henry didn't like many people. The scrappy colt—who by now had been altered into a gelding—did develop an affection for one thing, though.

He liked winning.

He liked competing.

He liked prevailing.

And once he finally settled into the hands of first-time owner Sam Rubin and West-coast trainer Ron McAnally, he did a lot of that.

The gelding, it turned out, was as indomitable as he was inexpensive.

John Henry—ugly knees, working-man's pedigree and all—won eight of 12 starts in 1980, all stakes races, equaled a world record and truded home with the Eclipse Award for Champion Grass Horse.

For a $1,100 purchase, that year alone (and the $925,217 he raked in during it) would have been vindication enough.

But a hard-working fellow like John Henry wouldn't stop until a job was done so thoroughly that nothing was left unanswered. The next year, he won eight of 10, again all stakes races, one of which was the inaugural running of a race called the Arlington Million.

The Arlington Million would offer the highest winner's payoff ever imparted to a horse. It was the kind of race where a blue-blooded, big money yearling purchase had the chance to pay off. It was the kind of race where it would suit an owner to have at his dispense a horse like the one Sekiguchi purchased this year.

Or maybe in a race like that, a $1,100 nag is just as good as the best thing money can buy.

John Henry, working class scrapper, ended up winning the world's first million-dollar race, and doing it in the guttiest style imaginable.

When 1981 closed, the yearling every vet recommended for the junkpile had fought his way to being the world's champion and the Horse of the Year. And still, he wasn't done. He pounded out stakes victory after stakes victory for another three years.

At the age of 9—an age when most horses are long since lazing about in retirement—he picked up another six stakes wins, including another Arlington Million, another duo of course records and another Horse of the Year title.

By the time his career ended—eight years, 39 battling wins and seven Eclipse Awards after it started—John Henry had turned his $1,100 tab into a $6,597,947 paycheck, the most any horse had ever earned.

John Calloway probably never saw that when he laid down his pittance of cash for the sad little wreck of a colt in 1976. He probably didn't see it when he resold the horse, with a bit of hesitation, in 1977.

But it's those payoffs that we don't see that often make for the best stories. It doesn't happen often. Usually the Sekiguchi's and the Steinbrenner's get what they pay for.

That doesn't ruin sport.

It makes a fanciful stage for an athlete like John Henry to come along and light up a satisfied smirk upon the faces of the little guys, the underdogs and the cheapskates.

That's not to say that four-million-dollar colts and 100-million-dollar ballplayers aren't worth what their buyers are willing to rend from the bank. That kind of money can buy an awful lot.

But what you don't pay for—what you can't pay for—sometimes turns out to be the greatest investment.

NFL teams start offseason dealings

By Mike Orta
Staff Writer

Last weekend was the NFL Rookie Combine, but most of the big news involves veterans and blockbuster trades. General managers and agents were plotting ways to benefit their players and teams while Maurice Clarett was busy not working out and dodging questions such as "So why exactly did you not go to class and why was it that you accepted illegal benefits, negating your eligibility?"

Peyton Manning was designated a "franchise" player, netting him a one-year deal worth roughly $18 million. If the salary cap for this season is set at close to $80 million, the Colts are basically willing to pay him about 20 percent of their allotted salary. I wonder if Manning would be willing to fill about 20 percent of the roster.

With the number of cuts the Colts might have to make to pay him, Manning may have to start at quarterback, punting back, safety, kicker, punter and water boy. While this proposition is fairly interesting, the process looks to be drawn out. Neither side seems to be too close on what country's gross domestic product they want Manning's contract to resemble.

While the contract situation is enticing, it isn't even the big story. Once again the Redskins have found a way to get back into the headlines. Dan Snyder's public relations machine is more efficient than most presidential candidates' systems. The man who brought back Joe Gibbs presents you with (cue music) "One of the biggest trades in NFL history!"

While details are unresolved, and the start of free agency and trade isn't for a few days, it looks like the Broncos and the Redskins are close to a super-mega deal. Get this: Champ Bailey and a conditional pick for Clinton Portis. Huge. Enormous. Unimaginable.

Baseball has moves like this on a more frequent basis, and talk of trades is fairly common. In hockey, it is more common, and NBA teams basically use trades to renew waning interest about six times a season. Trades like this don't happen in football.

Clinton Portis is 22 and has had two 1,500-yard campaigns since being drafted in the second round. Champ Bailey is 25 and in five years has managed to be tagged by some as the best corner in football.

In most cases, these would be guys who would spend their whole careers in one place because they are so good or they would sign that blockbuster deal with the home team, then get cut a few years down the line in a cap related move. In this case, both are being traded by their franchise to meet a need and avoid a sticky that contract situation, a la Peyton "GDP of Kenya" Manning.

The Bailey deal isn't done yet, as several other teams covet the young corner.

The Jets offered a multi-player deal to the Redskins including a pair of former first round picks in tight end Anthony Becht and defensive end Shaun Ellis, and a solid running back in Lamont Jordan. Talk about enticing. Of course, there are teams like the Lions, who want to trade for Bailey and pair him with his linebacker brother Boss.

This trade talk overshadowed a weekend usually dominated by Combine news regarding what players ran sub 4.4, how many bench reps did they do and who had the best interview.

On the subject, Maurice Clarett didn't work out, was reported to look out of shape and is said to look shorter than what the height Ohio State listed him.

Here's to hoping that Maurice gets his now jiggly butt in gear to get in shape for his on-campus workout.

Reports coming out of Indy say that this year's crop of linebackers is fast, with many of them clocking in at under

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

BY JOE HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

Bail Bonds?

Courtesy of Reuters

NL MVP Barry Bonds recently denied any accusations of using steroids after his trainer was charged in an alleged steroid distribution ring earlier this month.

It was scary. Barry Bonds was using profanities. On the first day of spring training, his face was as straight as a needle. His words were just as sharp.

For years, Bonds has faced multiple accusations of using steroids and the assumptions that it's the reason he can still hit towering homeruns as he nears 40.

Needing only two more homeruns to tie godfather Willie Mays on the all-time list with 660, Bonds is heading toward becoming baseball's greatest slugger as he looks to pass Babe Ruth (714) and all-time leader Hank Aaron (755).

"I think I can do anything. ... I'm going for it all," Bonds said, according to ESPN.com.

But nothing of such magnitude comes without accusation or speculation in this day and age, and now there's the storm of BALCO brewing in Scottsdale, Az., heading right in Bonds' direction as the week progresses.

Earlier this month, Bonds' trainer, Greg Anderson, was charged along with four other men in an alleged steroid-distribution ring that federal prosecutors say supplied professional athletes with banned substances. All men have pleaded not guilty and no athletes have been charged.

In December, Bonds denied using any such substances in front of a grand jury probing a supplements lab that illegally distributed steroids.

"They can test me every day if they choose to," Bonds said, according to ESPN.com.

Here's the cup, Barry.

"I believe if I wasn't going for records, it would be a nullified situation. If you want to be at the top, you've got to have broad shoulders. ... I know who I am. I know what I stand for. I know what kind of ballplayer I am," Bonds said, according to ESPN.com.

Maybe so, but it is not abnormal for a 38-year old to shatter one of baseball's most prized records with 73 homeruns in 2001 after not touching the 50 mark in any of his other seventeen seasons?

At that age, most guys are sitting in their rocking chairs sipping lemonade and looking at their baseball pensions.

Still, numbers may be deceiving, but physical appearance isn't. Since his rookie campaign in 1987, Bonds has transformed his body into a Venice Beach body-building freak.

And he's not the only one. Sammy Sosa and Jason Giambi aren't much better.

It's simple—professional baseball players are notorious for using drug enhancements ever since the game was played.

Just look at Babe Ruth. All those hot dogs filled with nitrate built plenty of muscle mass for the Bambino to hit all of those historic homeruns.

"The only thought I have is that a man's innocent until he's proven guilty," Chicago Cubs Manager Dusty Baker said, according to ESPN.com.

So maybe we'll be seeing Bonds on the witness stand in the next couple of months with any further investigation.

"Regardless of what my problems are or what situations are at hand, they're still going to be there anyway," Bonds said, according to ESPN.com. "Baseball has been more of a stress release than anything else."

Bonds has blocked out the distractions before, but how much longer can he hold out with Anderson on trial and the media's eyes shining on him?

Whatever happens because of the case, this isn't just about Bonds. More importantly, there is major-league baseball in all of this! Where is Commissioner Bud Selig?

He's trapped between morality and the market, afraid of supporting either side of the story.

So for Bonds, having the whole BALCO case blow over sooner rather than later might be his best hope.

"There's nothing I can do about it right now," he said, according to ESPN.com. "I have to go out and play baseball and, hopefully, it will blow over."

But if not, Bonds could be in for a long season. Hey Barry, who's going to bail you out then?

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro
412 Market Street, Lewisburg

Best Lunch deal in Town
10% off lunch entrees with valid BU Student ID

New Winter Lunch Menu
Huge Chopped Cobb Salad
Chicken, steamed, tomato, bacon and romaine 9.00
Romaine with Egg-free Caesar
Parmesan, croutons and shaved pecorino 7.00

Boozy
Crispy oysters, bacon, slow in a rustic roll 9.00
Grilled Pizza
sun dried tomato, mozzarella & Prosciutto 8.00

Wednesday-Saturday
Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2, Dinner 5-9

570-523-8088

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All you can eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Arts & Entertainment

Seán Curran Company brings its modern dance show to Weis Center

By DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

The Weis Center for the Performing Arts will host an exciting performance by the Seán Curran Company tonight at 8. This New York based dance group will perform modern dance in an accessible and energetic style, backed by live musicians.

Curran, the group's artistic director, was a member of the original New York City cast for the percussion-based dance show "Stomp" and has choreographed for the Trinity Irish Dance Company. He has also choreographed for many shows and operas performed on and off Broadway and for many other professional dance companies. His broad artistic pedigree indicates a high level of prestige and experience in the realm of modern dance.

The company is mixed, featuring 12 male and female dancers. No more than eight will appear on stage at any time during this evening's performance. Curran will appear as a solo dancer in the piece "Five Points of Articulation."

Bill Boswell, Director of Cultural Events for the Weis Center, saw the company perform several years ago. Boswell was incredibly impressed by the performance and knew he wanted to bring the company here. "What they do is very beautiful, and really speaks to young audiences," Boswell said.

"What they do is very beautiful, and really speaks to young audiences."
—Bill Boswell, director of cultural events

Two pieces choreographed by Curran were created for Bucknell Dance Company (BDC) performances several years ago. The late Danna Frangione, who taught dance at the University, worked with the BDC during this creative collaboration. Tonight's performance by the Seán Curran Company will be in tribute to her.

The company is also conducting master classes with University dance students today before its performance this evening.

Even if you have never been to a performance of modern dance before, come to the Seán Curran Company. Tickets are $20, and the onstage action, combined with the playing by live musicians, promises to be one-of-a-kind.

Photo Courtesy of Lisa Gagliardi

Beethoven celebrated at Weis Center performance

By CATHERINE HEVERLING
Arts & Entertainment Editor

CONCERT REVIEW

Music-lovers young and old gathered Friday night at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts to witness the musical virtuosity of international performers Corey Cerovsek and Paavali Jumppanen.

During their visit to the University, the two presented three of Beethoven's most time-honored sonatas for violin and piano and over an hour's worth of expert, unforgettable musicianship.

The concert began with Beethoven's Sonata No. 1 in D Major. Although the stage had only a music stand and a piano, the stage took on the life of a full production as the two performers came out.

Jumppanen's piano playing, which was as smooth as the keys he played on, and Cerovsek's fervent bow striking complemented each other perfectly. The connection between the two performers was evident visually and aurally. Their synchronized dynamics and rhythm were matched by the common feel and intention for the piece revealed by their facial expressions and motions.

The final movements of the piece were the most active and lively. The third movement, Scherzo: Allegro, concluded in what sounded like the middle of a phrase, only to continue with a fast, complex final movement. Finale: Allegro-Presto featured brisk, clean playing by both Jumppanen and Cerovsek and was well-chosen as the audience's final souvenir of the performance.

World-renowned violinist Cerovsek began studying the violin when he was 5. When he was 12, he graduated from the University of Toronto's Royal Conservatory of Music. He received a bachelor's degree at 15, a master's degree at 16 and completed his doctoral course work in mathematics and music at age 18.

Now at the age of 32, Cerovsek has performed all over the United States and Canada, and has toured in countries such as Australia, Canada, Denmark, Japan, China and Spain. He has been featured on the "Tonight Show" and has released several collaborative albums.

Jumppanen won first prize in the 2000 Young Concert Artists International Auditions for his piano performance. He has since performed at Carnegie Hall, the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and the Isabelle Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston. At age 19, he received first prize at Finland's International Maj Lind Competition.

Cerovsek and Jumppanen will continue their collaboration during the 2003-2004 season with performances of the complete Beethoven Sonatas over three concerts at the Isabelle Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston.

During this movement, the melody was tossed back and forth between the instruments. Jumppanen hurried fast-paced scale passages with as much ease and purpose as he did with simple quarter note accompaniment.

The evening concluded with Beethoven's Sonata No. 7 in C Minor. The piece featured many musical ornaments and

There are significant ties between

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

SEVENTH STREET SPOTLIGHT

Teddy Goldstein entertained listeners as part of the Late Night Music Series on Feb. 20. Goldstein is known for his acoustic style and comedic ad-lib lyrics.

Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience
Jamaica • Acapulco • Cancun • Florida • Bahamas
Up to $100 Off
Beach Front Special - $499
All-Inclusive Special - $999
Per Room 1-800-733-6347
Bucknell U... Live Life The Beach Life Way!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

The Winfield Baptist Church
"The Bible Reaching Church For the Whole Family"
(Founded 1869)
Invites both men and women of Bucknell to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 am;
Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening Worship 6:30 pm
Evangelical
Traditional and contemporary Christian music
Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thronbury
Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28 acre site 3.5 miles south of campus. Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 miles, church on the right. For more information or transportation call 524-2735 or 743-7494 (any time)

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100
Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

Arts & Entertainment

Reality TV—has it gone too far?

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Watching other people's everyday lives, comedic mishaps, blossoming relationships or embarrassing first dates all in the name of entertainment is the newest fad in U.S. television—Reality TV.

With over 20 Reality TV shows on major networks every week, and reruns being shown just as often, this fad is monopolizing the TV Guide. What started out innocently enough, with a few inconspicuous video cameras hidden in a loft apartment, has blossomed into complete manipulation and exploitation of the participants.

Each new show proves itself to be more outrageous than the previous, making its viewers wonder if Reality TV is even realistic anymore.

As part of the MTV generation, students' earliest memory of Reality TV is "The Real World," which pitched itself as revealing what happens when people "stop being nice, and start being real." Now in its 14th season, "The Real World" has begun to lose some of the realistic characteristics it once possessed and now reflects only the sex, drugs and drama of the men and women participating in the show.

"The Real World" is like this fantasy world where the most attractive people interact, party at the expense of MTV and live in a lavishly decorated house that most of us will never see in real life," Jeanine Elbaz '06 said. "Nevertheless, it's entertaining to see the drama that unfolds thanks to the characteristics of these new lifestyles."

Blossoming from the success of "The Real World," MTV now also features "Road Rules," "Sorority Life," "Surf Girls," "The Osbournes" and many more in its Reality TV repertoire. However, it is not the only network guilty of giving into this fad. The newest addition FOX's Reality TV lineup, "The Littlest Groom," involves helping a 4'5" man find the love of his life.

"It seems like people will watch anything," Travis Hoadley '07 said.

Similar to "The Littlest Groom" is NBC's "Average Joe." Now in its second season, set in beautiful Hawaii, the show stars a woman trying to find love. However, the beautiful woman undertaking the quest is not told her suitors are not body-building

Courtesy of Mtv.com

"The Real World," (above) and "The Simple Life" (below) are two reality shows faithfully followed by viewers nationwide.

Courtesy of Tv.yahoo.com

studs. Instead, they are "average Joes."

To make it interesting, eight new men with model qualifications are dropped off on the island, pitting the "average" against the "above average."

"It was funny to see the woman's initial reaction because she was horrified about what she got herself into. But it really makes the woman on the show look past outward appearances and actually get to know the guys," Erin Zimmerer '04 said.

With reality themes as varied as CBS' "Big Brother," ABC's "Celebrity Mole" and FOX's "The Simple Life," it seems television makes it easier to experience reality from the comfort of a living room. But with each season bringing more and more outrageous ideas, is Reality TV realistic at all?

"Personally I think there is so much staged in [Reality TV], and people expect certain things that it's not even a reflection of reality anymore. I'm sick of it," Lianne Hansen '06 said.

That is not to say these shows do not provide entertainment to their viewing audience. The WB's "ElimiDate" is a prime example, for what could possibly be more enjoyable than watching the awkward first date of men and women who generally have less than wholesome morals?

Even TLC, which used to boost a lineup of truly wholesome Reality TV shows, has gone slightly seedy with "What Not to Wear."

A step away from "A Baby Story" or "A Wedding Story," "What Not to Wear" allows two self-proclaimed fashion experts destroy the wardrobes of style-challenged individuals and instruct them on how to "properly spend" $5,000 on new attire. This is not even a reflection of reality—most people do not have thousands of dollars to mindlessly blow on a new wardrobe.

Television was once an escape from reality, a way for a person to spend a little time forgetting about the stressors of his or her life, losing themselves in a mindless sitcom. However, with the explosion of Reality TV, it is becoming more than an escape. It is becoming an alternative to our own realities.

Wouldn't a better idea be to get off the couch and see what is really out there instead of taking someone else's word for it?

Student playwrights share their scripts

The University presents its first annual student playwright reading

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

Mia, portrayed by Elena Augustine '07 and the character Zain, played by Alex Dojter '07 discuss their deepest thoughts while in a drug induced daze in the ten minute play, "Tripartite"

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Student talent was in full force at the first student playwright reading Saturday night. The event acted as a forum for students' scripts, providing staging and an audience for the new texts.

"It's an event for us to be able to see how our scripts work out on stage," Cap and Dagger President and student playwright Kristen Habacht '05 said. "It's different because it's something that students are running and producing."

The event was the result of budding student interest on campus—students from a variety of majors try their hands at penning scripts and need an environment in which to test them and receive feedback.

"There's a demand for it and most of the topics are things people can relate to. It's kind of nice to see what fellow students are doing not just inside the classroom, but how they're applying it as well," Habacht said.

All plays performed Saturday night were done script-in-hand, with the actors reading from copies. Staging, costumes and sets were minimal to draw attention to the writing itself.

The evening began with Habacht's play "Yvain," a self-described "medieval translation with a Monty Python twist." This play was part of last week's Arthurian conference and was inspired by Habacht's Medieval Literature class.

In "Yvain," a cast of seven enacted a tale of the round table and courtly love, in which the title character takes on another knight to avenge his cousin's reputation. The tale was colored with interjections from a set of dual narrators. Knight Two's sassy comments kept the audience laughing and served as a contrast to the poised narration of Knight One.

"I took something that everyone knows, the Arthur story, and put a twist on it," Habacht said.

"Tripartite," by Brittany Bohn '04, was featured next on the program. Her short play took a smoky look at life through the eyes of three college friends, by raising questions about living, the meaning behind life and religious identity.

The dark but amusing satirical script posed its characters as drug-induced philosophers. The script was inspired by a year Bohn spent at Oxford University, where she witnessed first-hand this blend of academia and "recreation."

"All these people sit around and have all these grandiose thoughts and philosophize about life, and sometimes in the end that's no more ridiculous than saying that you're the Messiah," Bohn said. "It's about debunking that and taking a humorous look set of friends.

Chris, played by Chad North '06, and Caitie, portrayed by Rita DeAngelo '07, discussed a variety of subjects during what appeared to be a high school study hall. They began with the ingredients for a perfect novel, and traveled full-circle back to this subject, stopping in between to mull over prom dates, high school cattiness, relationships, true love and life's "what if's." The performance, which highlighted segments of a longer play, began and ended with a soliloquy by Chris. He spoke alternately about Kurt Cobain acting as the poet for his generation, and about friendship and the moments that are remembered later in life.

The night was another step in the process for these student playwrights, some of whom have spent over a year working on their scripts. All three plan on taking their drafts elsewhere, whether it be for competition, performance or publication. The event itself is not intended to be a one-time exhibition, and is scheduled to become an annual opportunity.

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

The title character of "Yvain" (Andy Nogasky '07) gets support from the steady narration of Knight I (Rachel Slotcavage '04)

Look Your Best With A Tan
From
TANNING WORLD
216 St. John Street, Lewisburg
Next to Fisher's Meats

Open 24 Hours
Free Membership
Lowest Prices
Speed System Beds with NEW Lamps
New 2004 StarPower 548 Bed

Call 523-7254 or tanningworld@hotmail.com

W the Sigmund and Claire
EIS CENTER
FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS
PRESENTS

Seán Curran Company

dancing to music by Leos Janáček performed live by
Jeremy Denk, piano, and Timothy Fain, violin

8 p.m.
Friday, February 27, 2004
reserved seating, tickets required

ALSO:
7 p.m., Thursday, February 26, 2004
a free open rehearsal with discussion at the Weis Center

Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000

NITTANY TRAVEL
201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 1, Shamokin Dam, PA 17876
ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK
Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!
El Puestito Resort Cancun, Mexico
$925/person - Double-Occupancy
523-3224 800-326-9603

Houses & Apartments
Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Units Available
Call: 570.524.2121 x3
Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

LBRYNWOOD
Rentals

Zelda's
on the park

Fabulous Coffee,
Deserts and More!

Coming Soon to South Sixth Street

Scott Stieler BU '87
Proprietor
522-0443

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Rebellion captures northern Haiti

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide agreed to a peace plan designed to end weeks of violence, BBC News reported on Feb. 21.

For nearly two weeks, rebels in Haiti have advanced through the country to expand the territory held by a conglomerate of radicals to include nearly the entire northern region of the country while driving the nation into chaos. According to The New York Times, insurgent leaders vowed to gain control of the country in two weeks' time.

The rebellion has been helped by the fact that Haiti has no military, only a civilian police force; Aristide dissolved the armed forces in the early 1990s. Many of the rebels are former military officers.

It seems surprising that with his agreement to the peace plan, the Haitian rebels would continue in their efforts to liberate Haiti. But the plan would leave Aristide in power, and BBC reporter Stephen Gibbs says that "the armed rebels that now control a substantial part of northern Haiti are not being consulted, and they say that their uprising will continue until the day that President Aristide steps down."

Meanwhile, the rebels continue to gain territory. They attacked the second-largest city in the country, Cap-Haitien, last week. Cap-Haitien is considered to be the last stronghold of the Aristide government, and is only 90 miles from the capital city of Port-au-Prince.

"They came in, went by the port, locked it up. They locked up the international airport, roamed through town firing and commandeered the prison, released the prisoners," said Walter Eussenius, owner of the Mont Joli Hotel, to CNN.

BBC News outlines the entanglements of the International Peace Plan as follows: Aristide will stay in power until 2006, the prime minister will be replaced; the new prime minister will be selected by a panel made up of the government, the opposition and the international community; and un-rigged elections will take place.

The proposal has the potential to lead to an international peace-keeping force with participation by France and members of the Organization of American States. Fifty U.S. Marines have already been sent to Haiti, but they are acting only as a security detail for the president and his staff, and are not helping the police fight the rebellion.

The United States has no intention of acknowledging a rebel government.

"A government created by violent means would be isolated and would not be recognized," an anonymous department official said to CNN.

According to MSNBC, France proposed on Wednesday the immediate dispatch of an international police force to Haiti, but there has been no official response at press time.

Foxnews.com reports that the peace plan is partially a result of the appeal by Caribbean nations to the international community to provide security assistance in Haiti to restore law and order and end the rebellion.

This rebellion has attempted to combat the political strife that has gripped the country for nearly four years. The New York Times reported the conditions that have become normal in a rebel-held Haitian city.

"With the road blocked by machine-gun wielding rebels, the price of rice, a staple food here, has doubled... The hospital's bullet-ridden gates are open but its wooden doors are shut tight. The Cuban doctors

"They came in, went by the port, locked it up. They locked up the international airport, roamed through town firing and commandeered the prison, released the prisoners."

—Walter Eussenius, Haitian citizen who normally staff it are afraid to show up for work, hospital workers said. International aid agencies said they cannot safely bring supplies into the city," The New York Times reported.

CNN.com reports that aid agencies, Caribbean nations and the United States fear the bloody uprising that began on Feb. 5, and has so far taken the lives of 60 Haitians, will spark a mass exodus of Haitians out of the country.

In fact, many are concerned that Haitians are crafting wooden boats to travel out of their impooverished nation to Florida. The Haitians currently building boats in an effort to escape the country are not fleeing because of the rebellion, but rather because of the poverty that has continually existed in the country.

"These would-be migrants are preparing their escape from Haiti at a time of rebellion that poses the greatest threat yet to the presidency of Jean-Bertrand Aristide. But their reason has been the same for many years—the lack of jobs and a future," states CNN.com, which also reports that U.S. Coast Guard patrols have caught approximately 1,126 Haitians at sea since October, compared to 2,013 captured in the past year.

"President Jean-Bertrand Aristide said today that he would not give in to rebel demands to step down and he appealed to opposition leaders to accept a proposed plan that would stop the rebel advance on the capital and avoid further bloodshed in the Caribbean nation," The New York Times reported Tuesday.

"If they come to Port-au-Prince, you will have thousands of people killed," Aristide said at a conference in the presidential palace. "I would like to see them neutralized rather than have that bloodshed."

One of the most important things to consider is whether or not Aristide decides to cooperate with the opposition and what happens in the peace talks may not matter. The capture of Cap-Haitien has for now put the rebels in control of not only half the country but also Haiti's heartland, leaving a great deal of important Haitian territory in the control of radical rebels.

Democrats ignore smaller contests for Super Tuesday

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

Tuesday marked a week in the Democratic primary that was notable only for the fact that nothing significant happened. Sen. John Kerry (Mass.) won primary contests in Hawaii, Utah and Idaho, but only 61 delegates depended on the week's primaries.

More delegates were at stake in last week's Wisconsin election alone, and almost 20 times more will be up for grabs on March 2's "Super Tuesday," when 10 states will hold primaries on the same night, awarding a total of 1,151 delegates.

Sen. John Edwards (N.C.) finished second to Kerry in Utah and Idaho, with 30 percent and 22 percent of the vote, respectively. Rep. Dennis Kucinich (Ohio) recorded his strongest showing of the campaign in the Hawaii primary, taking 30 percent of the vote to Kerry's 46 percent—the only election this week where Kerry received less than half of the ballots cast.

Kucinich received eight delegates for his performance, increasing his tally five times over—according to CNN, he now has 10, to Kerry's 727 and Edwards' 212. Kucinich did not actually campaign heavily in Hawaii recently, but the state is traditionally strongly liberal, in keeping with Kucinich's own leanings.

If a candidate can win 2,162 delegates, he will have a majority at the Democratic Party convention this summer, and, barring extraordinary circumstances, will be guaranteed the nomination.

With 10 high-stakes elections now close at hand, none of the candidates had much time for Tuesday's contests. Even Rev. Al Sharpton, who picked up no delegates this week and has only 16 in total, spent the day in his home state of New York.

Kerry spent Tuesday campaigning in Ohio, where he gave only a brief statement on his victories.

"I'm thrilled," Kerry told ABC during a campaign stop at a Cleveland steel plant. "It was great, but we've got a lot of work ahead of us, a lot of work, a lot of campaigning to do."

The elections were further overshadowed by President Bush's announcement that morning in support of amending the Constitution to ban gay marriage, which forced the candidates to prepare and issue responses to his newly solidified position (for more on the president's announcement and the Democratic response, see page B9).

None of Tuesday's states are expected to be heavily contested in the November elections. Hawaii is strongly Democratic, while Utah and Idaho went solidly for Bush in the 2000 election and show no signs of switching.

By contrast, the Super Tuesday states include a number of important votes in the electoral college, most notably New York and California (which has the most electoral votes of any state). Both went to Gore in 2000.

circumstances, will be guaranteed the nomination.

With 10 high-stakes elections now close at hand, none of the candidates had much time for Tuesday's contests. Even Rev. Al Sharpton, who picked up no delegates this week and has only 16 in total, spent the day in his home state of New York.

Kerry spent Tuesday campaigning in Ohio, where he gave only a brief statement on his victories.

"I'm thrilled," Kerry told ABC during a campaign stop at a Cleveland steel plant. "It was great, but we've got a lot of work ahead of us, a lot of work, a lot of campaigning to do."

The elections were further overshadowed by President Bush's announcement that morning in support of amending the Constitution to ban gay marriage, which forced the candidates to prepare and issue responses to his newly solidified position (for more on the president's announcement and the Democratic response, see page B9).

None of Tuesday's states are expected to be heavily contested in the November elections. Hawaii is strongly Democratic, while Utah and Idaho went solidly for Bush in the 2000 election and show no signs of switching.

By contrast, the Super Tuesday states include a number of important votes in the electoral college, most notably New York and California (which has the most electoral votes of any state). Both went to Gore in 2000.

circumstances, will be guaranteed the nomination.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Bush supports amendment on same-sex unions

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

Gay marriage still continues in San Francisco, but the push to stop the movement at the federal level gained a powerful ally on Tuesday.

That morning, President Bush lent his support to a constitutional amendment that would define marriage as existing only between a man and a woman.

In open criticism of moves toward same-sex marriage that have come from the Massachusetts Supreme Court and San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom, Bush said to CNN that "the voice of the people must be heard. Activist courts have left the people with one recourse. If we're to prevent the meaning of marriage from being changed forever, our nation must enact a constitutional amendment to protect marriage in America."

"President Bush came to the White House pledging to unite us and is now seeking to divide the country for his own political gain," said Democratic National Committee chairman Terry McAuliffe to CNN.

The campaign of Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) issued a statement Tuesday reaffirming Kerry's opposition to the amendment. Kerry maintains that he does not support same-sex marriage, favoring instead civil unions patterned after Vermont's program. The question of same-sex marriage has been brought into the public eye recently by Newsom, who personally ordered San Francisco city clerks to issue marriage licenses to homosexual couples on Feb. 12. The order is in violation of California's Proposition 22, which bans gay marriage and was passed in a general election in 2000 with 61 percent of the vote.

Newsom claims that the proposition violates the California state constitution. Specifically, he cites a clause that forbids the government from extended a privilege only to a certain group, instead of the general population.

"Most public opinion polls in the 1960s were against interracial marriages," Newsom said to Reuters. "The bottom line is that there are certain principles that transcend public opinion polls."

According to a recent Gallup poll, about six in 10 Americans oppose legalizing gay marriage, but less than half favor amending the Constitution to ban it.

After more than 3,000 couples had been married, Newsom halted the licensing process over the weekend of Feb. 21. It resumed Monday, but by appointment only.

Legal action on the marriages is still pending. In a lawsuit brought against the city by conservative groups, a state judge refused to issue a restraining order against the city on Feb. 20, saying that there was no proof that the marriages had caused "irreparable harm." It has since been combined with a suit brought by the city of San Francisco itself claiming that Prop. 22 is unconstitutional. The case will be heard at an unspecified date in March.

California's governor, Arnold Schwarzenegger, has joined his party in condemning Newsom's actions, although he has only recently moved to stop them. His attorney general, Bill Lockyer, will file suit today to ask the California Supreme Court to intervene.

"The people of California who have enacted laws that recognize marriage only between a man and a woman, and the same-sex couples who were provided marriage licenses in San Francisco, deserve a speedy resolution to the question of the legality of these licenses,"

Lockyer said to the AP on Monday. "I will not abdicate and step back and say what we were doing 10, 15 days ago—before this action—is appropriate," Newsom said to CNN. "I do not believe it's appropriate for me, as mayor of San Francisco, to discriminate against people. And if that means my political career ends, so be it."

Lockyer said to the AP on Monday. "I will not abdicate and step back and say what we were doing 10, 15 days ago—before this action—is appropriate," Newsom said to CNN. "I do not believe it's appropriate for me, as mayor of San Francisco, to discriminate against people. And if that means my political career ends, so be it."

Lockyer said to the AP on Monday. "I will not abdicate and step back and say what we were doing 10, 15 days ago—before this action—is appropriate," Newsom said to CNN. "I do not believe it's appropriate for me, as mayor of San Francisco, to discriminate against people. And if that means my political career ends, so be it."

Lockyer said to the AP on Monday. "I will not abdicate and step back and say what we were doing 10, 15 days ago—before this action—is appropriate," Newsom said to CNN. "I do not believe it's appropriate for me, as mayor of San Francisco, to discriminate against people. And if that means my political career ends, so be it."

Lockyer said to the AP on Monday. "I will not abdicate and step back and say what we were doing 10, 15 days ago—before this action—is appropriate," Newsom said to CNN. "I do not believe it's appropriate for me, as mayor of San Francisco, to discriminate against people. And if that means my political career ends, so be it."

House Joint Resolution No. 56 — "Federal Marriage Amendment":
"Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman. Neither this constitution or the constitution of any state, nor state or federal law, shall be construed to require that marital status or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon unmarried couples or groups."

—Proposed by Rep. Marilyn Musgrave

Stechschulte prepares for congressional campaign

Dr. Donald Stechschulte sits in his office on campus. He collected more than 1,400 signatures in his campaign for Congress, and will be on the ballot barring a legal challenge to the petition.

HOUSE From page B10

"It was incredibly wonderful to introduce myself to people and ask them what their concerns were," he said.

Stechschulte met one elderly couple living on a fixed income $960. Their Medicare expenses are $300 per month.

"The husband had worked in the coal mines his whole life to get that pension and he is paying so much for something that the government should basically be providing," Stechschulte said.

He advocates a major restructuring of the nation's health-care system. He said the problem with the new prescription drug bill is that all the federal funds are funneled through the insurance companies. It would be better if the government put out bids for medicines to the various pharmaceutical companies, similar to the way Canada and other western European nations get the best price for their citizens.

"In Canada, everyone has total free choice about where and with whom they seek medical care. Consumer choice is the ultimate free market of healthcare," Stechschulte said.

He also plans to make education and campaign finance reform issues in the campaign.

"Any citizen should be able to run (for office), not just multi-millionaires. Every bonafide candidate should have access to the media and not be reduced to sound bites," Stechschulte said.

Stechschulte also wants to take a look at pre-school, K-12 and college education in America. He said he thinks it is the right of every citizen to have access to each of these levels of education and that the government should ensure that.

"From estimates I've heard, that would cost the government 45-85 billion dollars. That's about what we have spent in Iraq in one year," he said.

Stechschulte wants to re-invigorate the family farm, which is vital to Pennsylvania's largely agricultural economy. He also would like to take a hard look at corporations in America.

"We need to end the myth that corporations have the same rights as individuals. They don't deserve the same protection under the Bill of Rights that a citizen does. Corporations are legal fiction and should be treated differently than living, breathing human beings," he said.

Stechschulte has been impressed with the support he has received from University students. Among other tasks, they helped him acquire the signatures he needed, some of whom were from the College Democrats. Stechschulte hopes to use the group to energize and organize his supporters on campus.

"Civic engagement is practically a mandate of a liberal arts education. Republicans, Democrats and everyone should be excited about and engaged in this process," Stechschulte said.

If you would like to be involved with Stechschulte's campaign, you can contact Matt Wirick '04, president of the College Democrats at mwirick@bucknell.edu or Stechschulte at dstechsch@bucknell.edu.

Retail

Half.com

Natural selection.

For a limited time, first-time buyers
Save an additional $5
on purchases of $50 or more!
Simply use this code:
BUCKNELL

How smart is this: All the textbooks you need for up to 50% off retail prices. New or used, all you have to do is go to half.com and type in the book titles, or ISBN numbers. Then let nature take its course.

half.com
by eBay

Same textbooks.
Smarter prices.

Copyright 2003-2004 Half.com. Half.com, the half.com logo, eBay and the eBay logo are trademarks of eBay Inc. All rights reserved. *Average Retail Price of a New Textbook based on data from: Follett Corp. (as reported by The Associated Press in January 2003). Average Retail Price of a Used Textbook based on data from: Monument Information Publications. Average Half.com Price for New and Used Textbooks based on an August/September 2003 analysis of over 100,000 books sold on Half.com. Quantities, pricing and availability are not guaranteed and will vary due to supply and demand. Coupon is for first-time buyers only. Limited time offer; excludes shipping and handling; offer subject to change or termination without prior notice.

Your
Dream: "I want to become a doctor."

Your
Reality:

"I don't have the
required courses
for medical school."

The Johns Hopkins Post-Baccalaureate Premedical Program prepares college graduates with strong academic records to apply to the best medical schools by giving them the personal attention, the necessary science and math courses, and one-to-one academic advising.

If you or someone you know wants to pursue a career as a doctor, apply by March 1.

For more information, visit www.jhu.edu/postbac or call 410-516-7748.

JOHNS HOPKINS
POST-BACCALAUREATE
PREMEDICAL PROGRAM

2004
SUMMER
SESSIONS

Learn while you play this summer

Earn undergraduate or graduate credits.
Attend day or evening classes. Sign up soon for the session that's right for you:

• Business
• Natural Sciences
• Humanities
• Counseling
• Social Sciences
• Mathematics
• Engineering

• Computer Science
• Nursing
• Languages
• Education
• The Arts

SUMMER SESSION I
JUNE 1-JUNE 30
SUMMER SESSION II
JULY 1-AUGUST 2

SUMMER EVENING SESSION III
JUNE 1-AUGUST 2

Call for more information, or visit our website to learn more. Registration closes for each session the day before the session begins. Over 34 distance learning courses offered.

ENROLL IN VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY'S SUMMER BUSINESS INSTITUTE

This intensive 10-week (May 24-July 30), 16-credit certificate program is designed specifically for non-business majors and graduates from the U.S. and abroad. Successful completion of the SBI also satisfies basic core requirements for a Villanova MBA. On-campus housing is available.

Complete details are available at www.cf.villanova.edu/sbi or by calling 610-519-6715.

VILLANOVA
UNIVERSITY

610.519.4300
www.villanova.edu

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Nader abandons Greens in new presidential bid

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

Ralph Nader, the University's planned 2004 Commencement Speaker, announced Sunday on "Meet the Press" that he would run as an independent instead of waiting until the Green Party's convention in June.

Nader pursued the presidency as the Green Party's candidate in 2000 and earned nearly 3 percent of the vote. Many Democrats blame Nader for the Republican presidency, labeling him as a "spoiler." Democrats also believe that another run by Nader will do nothing more than provide a second term for the Bush administration.

"He's had a whole distinguished career fighting for working families, and I would hate to see ... part of his legacy being that he got us eight years of George Bush," Democratic National Committee Chairman Terry McAuliffe said of Nader, according to The Wall Street Journal.

Many Democrats share McAuliffe's concern, especially concerning Nader's motivation to run without a party affiliation. "I think that Ralph Nader is proving that the only master that he serves is his enormous ego," chairman of the Democratic Party in Florida Scott Maddox said, according to The New York Times.

"I have nothing nice to say about him; 2000 should have proved to him that he's going to be nothing but a spoiler." Rev. Al Sharpton, one of the remaining Democratic candidates, also questions Nader's decision to re-enter presidential politics.

"The only reason he's running is either he's an egomaniac or as a Bush contact," Sharpton said, according to The New York Times.

Sharpton, who is still pursuing the Democratic presidential nomination, declared his intentions to stop Nader.

"I'm going on a national crusade to stop Nader. This is only going to help Bush," he said.

Despite discouragement from the Democratic party, Nader remains poised to make another strong run for the White House. According to his Web site, Votenader.com, Nader wants to help reinvigorate civic engagement and get the people of the

"They've lost their nerve and they've lost their expectations. They're willing to let the Democrats put a nose ring in the nose and say 'come along.'"

—Ralph Nader

United States more involved in politics.

Nader told The Washington Post that the Democrats who have tried to dissuade him from running are "sad."

"They've lost their nerve and they've lost their expectations. They're willing to let the Democrats put a nose ring in the nose and say, 'Come along,'" he said.

"I've been around this circle many times where I'm told, 'This is not the time, this is not the time.' I played the good soldier. But every time I was told it was not the time, the Democrats felt freer to follow the corporate pull," Nader said, according to The New York Times.

Ralph Nader announces his candidacy for president as an independent at a press conference in Washington, D.C. Nader has been the subject of heavy criticism since his announcement for potentially splitting the Democratic vote.

Opposition to the corporate world and its influence over the two major parties is one of the key planks that make up Nader's platform.

"Washington is corporate-occupied territory, and the two parties are ferociously competing to see who's going to go to the White House and take orders from their corporate paymasters."

"It's time to change the equation and bring millions of American people into the political arena," Nader said during his interview on "Meet the Press."

As Nader mounts his campaign, Republicans hope that Nader will have the impact on Democrats that they have worried about since the 2000 presidential election.

"Republicans love Ralph Nader," said Gov. Tom Pawlenty (R-Minn.) according to The Washington Post.

Although the Republican National Committee has not expressed its complete reaction to Nader making a bid for president, Republican concerns cannot compete with the outpouring of anxiety from Democrats.

Gov. Tom Vilsack (D-Iowa) doubts that Americans will repeat the events of the 2000 election, regardless of the Republican views and efforts. "People who voted for him [Nader] the last time recognize they made a mistake, and they won't do it again," Vilsack said to The Washington Post.

Regardless of opposition from the established liberal party, Nader remains steadfast in his quest. He reminds the American public, especially Democrats, on his Web site that "Al Gore won the election in 2000," and that events such as the recount, the use of the butterfly ballot and the "usual, lackluster corporate Democratic campaign" cost Democrats the White House in 2000.

"Americans who want to see change in this nation know how important it is to defeat George W. Bush. To do that, it is important that we remain united in November and rally behind the Democratic nominee, whoever that may be," Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) said, according to The Boston Globe.

Despite calls like Kerry's, Nader has committed himself to the long race to November. According to The Washington Post, Nader challenges Republicans and Democrats, saying, "It's up to them to grab my votes and my issues."

See A1 for the University's reaction to Nader's presidential ambitions.

Steichschulte begins run for Congressional seat

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

He is a familiar face around campus. In fact, you may even have visited him if you have had a sore throat, fever or other medical ailment that brought you to Student Health Services.

He is Dr. Donald Steichschulte, director of Student Health Services, and he hopes to run on the Democratic ticket in an effort to represent the 10th District in the United States Congress. His opponent is Republican incumbent Don Sherwood, who is trying to win his fourth term in this election.

Steichschulte needed 1,000 signatures from registered Democrats in the district in order for his name to be placed on the ballot in April. He collected 1,400 signatures and is cautiously optimistic, though he will not know until tomorrow if the petition is legally confirmed.

Steichschulte sees an opportunity to make this election more democratic.

"I've lived here [in Union County] for 12 years, and for the past eight of those years, there has been no Democratic opponent in Congressional elections. I want to give the people more of a choice in this election," Steichschulte said.

He also said his children and grandchildren are another reason for him to run. Steichschulte is worried about the direction our nation is heading in.

"This path of perpetual war and using force as the only means led by the present [Bush] administration is not one I am fond of," Steichschulte said.

This is not Steichschulte's first encounter with local politics. He ran for the Lewisburg School Board in 1998. Although he lost the actual election, he was appointed to the board after he used the school board. "They improperly appointed one member to two seats. I thought they had broken the law and the judge agreed with me," Steichschulte said.

He was also a write-in candidate two years ago in the 10th District Congressional election, but did not real campaigning.

One of the biggest obstacles Steichschulte faces is that he is challenging an incumbent. In the 2000 re-districting, in which Pennsylvania lost two Congressional seats, Union County moved from the 5th District to the 10th. Steichschulte says that the re-districting maintains Republican dominance.

"The whole system is designed to re-elect incumbents," he said.

This presents a challenge in the form of fundraising. Steichschulte estimates that his opponent already has about $500,000.

"The average Congressional campaign costs about 1.5 million [dollars], most of which is used for television ads," he said.

Steichschulte also said the system is biased in favor of incumbents because potential challengers, such as Steichschulte, are hesitant to go to fundraising before they know for sure if they will be on the ballot.

"It's difficult when you already have a full-time job. I want to make sure my candidacy is legal and viable before I do any fundraising. I love my work here at Bucknell and I wouldn't want to jeopardize that in any way," Steichschulte said.

Additionally, having a full-time job meant that Steichschulte had to collect the signatures he needed on weekends, which was difficult because people often were not home. He found the experience rewarding.

See HOUSE page B9

Massoud named for alumni lectureship

The Political Science chair was the 48th honored for inspiring teaching

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Associate Professor of Political Science Tony Massoud received the annual Class of 1956 lectureship for exceptional teaching last week.

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

Associate Professor of Political Science Tamsa Massoud became the 48th professor to be honored with the Class of 1956 Lectureship on Feb. 19.

The Class of 1956 Lectureship recognizes inspirational teaching in the University community and continues to be endowed by the Class of 1956.

"The award is a tribute to the whole faculty," Massoud said. "There are many wonderful professors here and I am happy to be a member of the faculty."

ing students learn and aiding them in setting and achieving goals is a distinguishing characteristic of the University.

Stephen Bowen, provost and vice president of academic affairs, echoed those sentiments as he read comments from Massoud's students.

"Professor Massoud is full of charisma and charm. These qualities, together with his superior knowledge of the material, make the lectures insightful, interesting and engaging," Bowen read.

"The greatest strength of this class was the professor," said another student. "He is a great teacher who really cares if the students understand the material."

Massoud attributes the roots of his teaching style to experiences in his early education. He said when he first came to the United States he struggled in school with language and adjusting to a different way of life. He said that a number of caring and committed public school teachers cared enough to help him make the transition and to make certain that he understood all the material. He also cited the influence of his parents. "My parents, who don't have a formal education, have always stressed the value of education to their children."

Massoud said two of the major characteristics his teachers demonstrated and that he thinks are vital to teaching are "passion and commitment."

"Professors are passionate because you want to share what you know and help students reach their potential," Massoud said.

He also feels committed to giving back and through teaching. He hopes to help students pursue their goals. Outside of the University, Massoud is also involved in teaching by volunteering to coach for soccer and basketball.

As part of the lectureship, Massoud gave a talk to an audience of students, administration, colleagues and community members. His talk was titled "War and Shaping of the Middle East."

"I always enjoyed Professor Massoud's classes, so I knew the lecture would be a good one. ... I found his opinions on the current situation and the possibility of democracy in Iraq especially interesting," said Allison Hoffmann '05, one of Massoud's students who was present at his lecture.

During his talk Massoud expertly used his knowledge of war and of the Middle East to examine wars in the region, their impacts and how the U.S. war in Iraq has affected and continues to change the region.

Massoud discussed how war has been around since the beginning of human civilization and that written history is a history of wars and warfare. He then gave a short overview of major world events from World War I through and including U.S. military action in Afghanistan and Iraq.

He concluded his talk expressing that he was a "bit optimistic" about the possibilities for Iraq and the Middle East. He said that despite the catastrophic impact wars can have, sometimes "war is like a catalyst." Massoud remains optimistic because he believes the potential is there for Iraq to grow and develop.

Massoud concluded that in order for the United States to build a successful democracy in the Middle East, the United States would have to help resolve the conflict between Israel and Palestine, pointing out that the country has a credibility problem in that region.

"They don't believe the U.S. is there to build democracy," Massoud said. "They believe the U.S. is there to protect oil and protect Israel."

Many other members of the Department of Political Science were also excited about Massoud's speech and accomplishment.

"The whole Political Science department was delighted that Tony's excellent teaching was recognized," said Professor of Political Science John Peeler.

"The Class of 1956 Lectureship was a timely chance for him to talk about his passion, war and peace in the Middle East. I was pleased to see the strong turnout of students, and the many good questions provoked by the lecture."

"Professor Massoud is an inspiration and represents the best that Bucknell has to offer," said Susan Tabrizi, assistant professor of political science. "He is an expert willing to share his knowledge which is really a gift because he has something to teach us all."

March 5, 2004

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside Volume 133, Number 6

Sports:
Women's swimming
wins second straight
Patriot League championship.

See page B1

Mitchell appointed as president

By SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

Brian C. Mitchell will officially join the University community as its 16th president July 1. As advocates of the value of a liberal arts education, Mitchell and his wife, Maryjane, were drawn to the promising future they recognized at the University.

"Bucknell is among a handful of those very special places," Mitchell said. "It is what it professes to be—a liberal arts university that is already special with the ambition and stamina to reach the next plateau."

Mitchell is currently the president of Washington & Jefferson College and the former president of the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of Pennsylvania. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Merrimack College and his Master of Arts and doctorate degrees from University of Rochester in history, concentrating on ethnic and labor history.

Susan Crawford '69, chair of the board of trustees, officially announced Mitchell's selection and acceptance Tuesday afternoon in a campus-wide e-mail.

She said Mitchell has an extensive background in higher education and was a very successful presidential leader at Washington & Jefferson.

Courtesy of Fahima Chowdhury

Brian C. Mitchell was appointed as the new University president by the board of trustees earlier this week. He and his wife, Maryjane, said they are excited to join the community and said they look forward to a promising future here.

"He has a deep knowledge of the issues affecting private colleges and universities today, and a great appreciation for the academic culture at institutions like Bucknell," and I believe he is uniquely qualified to be our next president at this time in our history," Crawford said.

The Presidential Search Committee, headed by

Norman E. Garrity '63, began the search process after the retirement announcement of University President Steffen Rogers in May 2003. The search committee narrowed down a pool of more than 50 applicants to the three final candidates, who were interviewed on campus and participated in open forums.

"Brian Mitchell was set apart from the other candidates by his presidential experience, which was clearly presented in his leadership style," Presidential Search Committee Student Representative Katy Tiner '04 said.

"In the open forum, I think this was evident by his insight and ability to honest assess situations."

Following the open forums, the committee members compiled the feedback they received from the community and submitted the information to the board of trustees for a final decision.

"In making its final selection, the board of trustees paid very close attention to the recommendations and evaluations of the Search Committee, its advisory groups and the campus community," Crawford said. "This presidential search was truly a University-wide effort and every member of the Bucknell community who participated

See PRESIDENT page A5

Richards garners $5,000 state grant

Courtesy of Samek Art Gallery

Art Professor Rosalyn Richards received a $5,000 grant from the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts. Richards submitted slides of her work, which were available during the faculty art exhibit at Samek Art Gallery last fall. The award is intended to further Richards' artistic level.

By DAVID MERIN
Contributing Writer

Professor of Art Rosalyn Richards was one of 74 state artists to win grants from the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts.

Every year, dozens of artists apply for funding from the council. This year it handed out a total of $430,000 to 74 artists in 16 different counties. Richards was the sole winner from Union county.

Awards are given to artists in a number of different categories. Richards was one of 20 winners from the visual arts category, specifically the works-on-paper subcategory.

Richards won for large-scale graphite pencil drawings and said her win was "very competitive and considered an honor."

Richards applied for this

See AWARD page A2

ASIAN GALA A HUGE SUCCESS

Christophe Richard—The Bucknellian

Students, faculty and community members attended Saturday's Asian Gala, sponsored by Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell. Students prepared Asian foods including shrimp fried rice, sweet and sour soup, and an exotic fruit medley. Those who attended said the performances were beautifully executed and offered a perfect compliment to the food.

Service helps improve town/gown relations

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Staff Writer

University students have performed 8,663 hours of service work since Feb. 25, according to the Office of Volunteer and Community Service. These hours benefit both the community and campus.

The "I Serve 2" Campaign encourages students to perform at least two hours of community service work during the academic year, an effort that, along with other groups and task forces forged within the area, benefits both the campus and the Lewisburg community.

"I feel that the progress in this area has begun to change town/gown relations for the better," Volunteer Services Coordinator Tina McDowell said.

The Town/Gown Committee seeks to promote a harmonious relationship between the University and Lewisburg community. The committee, created 30 years ago, provides a forum in which community and

See SERVICE page A2

Students question moral standards

By KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

After James Brown's contract to perform at the University's April Chrysalis Ball was canceled last month due to his alleged assault of his wife, some students have questioned the University's perceived moral standards for performers.

Brown's replacement, George Clinton, has also been recently arrested.

Brown was arrested for domestic abuse in January. He allegedly pushed his wife to the ground and threatened to kill her while holding a chair over her. He has also been arrested in the past and has served a term in prison for drug and assault charges.

Vice President of Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 made the decision to cancel Brown's performance and said he based the choice on upholding the moral obligations of the University.

"He [Brown] is effectively the poster boy for domestic violence," Pollock said.

See MORALS page A3

Abroad Perspective

Brittany Bohn '04 discusses the importance of keeping one's own identity while studying abroad.

See page A10

Open Letter

The Bucknellian editorial board writes an open letter to new University President Brian Mitchell, who replace current University President Steffen Rogers July 1.

See page A6

Democratic Nomination

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) has secured the Democratic nomination for president.

See page B10

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, Feb. 22

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—A student reported to Public Safety that she found a student drinking alcohol at Smith Hall. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that three students consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—A student reported to Public Safety that an unruly person at Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity was causing a disturbance and fighting. Upon arrival, Public Safety located the suspect and determined that the student consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

INFORMATION / SUSPICIOUS PERSON—A student reported to Public Safety that an unknown male knocked on her locked room door the previous night. The individual was asked to contact Public Safety immediately if the male should return.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—An employee was transported from the Sojka Pavilion by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of chest pains. The individual later returned to his home.

Monday, Feb. 23

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of an intoxicated and ill student. The individual refused the blood alcohol content (BAC) test but agreed to the field sobriety tests, which she failed. The individual was transported to Public Safety and met with a University official, who convinced her to submit to the BAC testing. The University official remained with the student at Public Safety until it was safe to transport her back to her residence. A citation was issued for underage drinking.

INFORMATION / VEHICLE ACCIDENT—An employee reported to Public Safety that a garbage dumpster rolled into a University vehicle, causing minor damage to the car. A report was filed for insurance purposes.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to the Dana construction site for the report of damage to the area and missing property. Upon investigation, Public Safety found that unknown person(s) threw a metal work cart down the stairs, causing tools and supplies to spill. East Buffalo Township Police responded. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) took a 10-inch knife from the L.C. Refectory. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) took a 10-inch knife from the L.C. Refectory. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, Feb. 24

MISSING PERSONS—Public Safety responded to the Gerhard Fieldhouse to assist an employee to locate his two daughters. Public Safety located the daughters and reunited them with the employee.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to the rear of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity for the report of a motor vehicle accident caused by an employee backing a University vehicle into an illegally parked student car. Both vehicles sustained minor damage. There were no injuries.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Vedder Hall caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station for no apparent reason. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

Wednesday, Feb. 25

RETAIL THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that a student had exited the Bison Snack Bar with unpaid food. The incident is under investigation. Charges will be filed.

RETAIL THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that a student had exited the Bison Snack Bar with an unpaid beverage. The incident is under investigation. Charges will be filed.

Thursday, Feb. 26

VANDALISM—While on routine patrol, Public Safety reported that unknown person(s) removed a parking sign from the Gateway parking lot. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, Feb. 28

MEDICAL TRANSPORT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / FRATERNITY VIOLATION—Emergency Medical Services was dispatched to Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity, for an unresponsive female. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the female as a visitor who consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. She was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. Lewisburg Police responded. Three students, all under the age of 21, who were served alcohol at the fraternity were cited for underage consumption. Phi Gamma Delta was cited for serving minors. Lewisburg Police charges are pending.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) took a 10-inch knife from the L.C. Refectory. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) took a 10-inch knife from the L.C. Refectory. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, Feb. 24

MISSING PERSONS—Public Safety responded to the Gerhard Fieldhouse to assist an employee to locate his two daughters. Public Safety located the daughters and reunited them with the employee.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to the rear of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity for the report of a motor vehicle accident caused by an employee backing a University vehicle into an illegally parked student car. Both vehicles sustained minor damage. There were no injuries.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Vedder Hall caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station for no apparent reason. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

Wednesday, Feb. 25

RETAIL THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that a student had exited the Bison Snack Bar with unpaid food. The incident is under investigation. Charges will be filed.

RETAIL THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that a student had exited the Bison Snack Bar with an unpaid beverage. The incident is under investigation. Charges will be filed.

Thursday, Feb. 26

VANDALISM—While on routine patrol, Public Safety reported that unknown person(s) removed a parking sign from the

Service to benefit community and campus relations

SERVICE From page A1

University members share news and concerns of interest to both groups.

Of its objectives last year, the most influential was the goal to identify activities and programs that will bring the campus community and downtown together, according to Vice President of Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70.

"This led to the program 'Welcome to the Neighborhood,' the Task Force addressing the future of the area now occupied by student renters and the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership," Pollock said.

According to Pollock, the partnership was created to keep downtown Lewisburg vital, healthy and economically thriving.

"This serves all of our interests: for the community it provides jobs and variety of new businesses and for the students it provides material needs, as well as [opportunities for] internships and community service," Pollock said.

Five years after the partnership began, the percent of vacant stores dropped from 13 percent to 2 percent as 31 new businesses moved into the area.

The University contributes to the community financially by attracting visitors and students alike, but it also gives the residents a chance to take courses and gives them opportunities to see guest artists, performers and speakers.

Richards receives grant for art achievement

Courtesy of Samek Art Gallery

Professor of Art Rosalyn Richards was one of 74 state artists to win a grant from the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts.

AWARD From page A1

grant late last summer by submitting 10-12 slides of her work along with her application. Some of the work submitted was seen at the faculty art exhibit at the Samek Art Gallery last fall.

Richards received the good news in January, although she has yet to receive the funding. Her individual grant for $5,000 is intended to further her artistic level. There are some guidelines as to how the grant can be spent, but Richards expects to use it on materials and travel expenses to exhibitions. She has one year to spend the grant.

The mission of the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts is to foster the excellence, diversity and vitality of the arts, and to broaden the availability and appreciation of art throughout the state. It is a state-run agency.

"This is a great reminder that the professors here are more than just teachers, they're artists too," Gloria Clendaniel '07 said.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

As part of Super Tuesday week, the college Democrats have been registering Pennsylvania voters and they held a mock primary.

Super Tuesday Week

MORALS From page A1

lence and far too easily and repeatedly identified with one of the greatest societal ills of our time," Pollock said.

According to Pollock, the performer's personal record cannot be hidden when entering the stage.

"There's an important difference between what a performer might say in one's lyrics as opposed to what that person does in real life ... it's obviously not what James Brown sings about or does on stage, but [it is obvious] what he does personally in life," Pollock said.

In real life, Clinton has also been arrested. In early December, only about month before Brown's arrest, Clinton was charged with possession of cocaine. Clinton has not had a prior record of assault, however.

Bucknell Student Government Vice President of Finance Rich Karcher '05 said the University must set an important precedence regarding moral standards.

"The question is now, 'Where and who makes the decision on where to draw the line? Who decides right from wrong?'" Karcher said.

Karcher says that student's free speech has been superced-

ed by the University.

"The James Brown situation, if people like it or not, is now a benchmark on who can speak and perform at the University, something that should never have been done in the first place," Karcher said.

Pollock said the University's decision to step in on this decision was a rare one.

"We pretty much stay out of the selection of speakers and performers, but in this case [Associate Dean of Students Karl] Conrad brought it to me because of the obvious issues involved, and I rendered a decision based on this case and this case only," Pollock said.

Leonard Gomella '07 said performers are role-models who need to uphold moral standards and that the University made the right decision to cancel Brown's contract.

"It would have caused a lot of commotion and controversy on campus if he came," Gomella said.

Katherine Wallis '07 has mixed feelings about the University's decision to cancel Brown's contract. She said that when dealing with a high-profile artist and singer such as Brown, the situation becomes problematic.

"Obviously there should be a standard for morals, but I feel like everyone in the music business has skeletons in their closet," Wallis said.

In South Africa, the nation with the largest number of HIV-positive people and where a woman is more likely to be raped than learn to read, the government has promised to give rape victims drugs to combat HIV/AIDS.

Human Rights Watch said the government is not following through on its commitment. The health minister has been attacked for her stance on AIDS-drugs by multiple human rights organizations.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

News

Gov. Thornburg speaks about ethical business leadership

Brad Thompson—The Bucknellian

Honorary Bucknellian and former Governor of Pennsylvania, Dick Thornburg spoke in the LC Forum while visiting Management Professor John Fernsler recently.

By DAVID MERIN

Contributing Writer

Former Pennsylvania Governor Dick Thornburg reflected on his experiences as the court-appointed examiner in the WorldCom bankruptcy in a lecture on Feb. 24 in the L.C. Forum. Thornburg told the audience that if the United States' business and financial communities are to continue to prosper and maintain the confidence of the taxpayer, they need to "do the right thing."

Thornburg, discussed the WorldCom bankruptcy at length and said it was a classic case of "cooking the books."

The WorldCom bankruptcy

caused losses in shareholder value of as much as $250 billion and was the largest bankruptcy proceeding in American history. It was also one of the first in a series of corporate scandals such as Enron and Tyco that shook the United States in the aftermath of the late 1990's technology bubble.

Thornburg, a former U.S. attorney general, said his investigation discovered a "culture of greed" within the corporation's top management, which was exacerbated by what he called a "complete breakdown of the system of corporate governance."

Thornburg described how the board of directors gave free reign to top executives

Messrs. Ebers and Sullivan, allowing them to engage in actions that were imprudent at best and inappropriate and fraudulent at worst.

Thornburg spoke of the unprofessional and unethical behavior of the accountants, lawyers and investment bankers associated with the firm. Making a small fortune themselves, these professionals served to help the executives conceal their corruption and line their pockets.

After discussing the findings of the WorldCom case, Thornburg explained the legislative and regulatory responses to the wave of corporate scandals, focusing mainly on the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002.

Thornburg described the consequences of these changes, many of which deal with the vastly different role of the corporate director. Thornburg, himself a director of a few companies, said "the days of an individual serving on as many as eight to 10 corporate boards at a time are over, due to increased time demands and exposure."

The cure for many of the problems identified is a strong dose of honest leadership and integrity, Thornburg said.

"These changes, put simply, offer the opportunity to empower the 'good guys,'" said Thornburg, referring to responsible directors, managers open to honest feedback, inquisitive auditors, ethical legal counsel, and investment bankers and analysts who perform their jobs responsibly.

"In final analysis, a culture which emphasizes ethical conduct will make more difference than all the laws and regulations promulgated by various governmental agencies," Thornburg said.

Visiting Assistant Professor of Management

Brad Thompson—The Bucknellian

The former Governor was well received by the community.

John Fernsler, a longtime friend of Thornburg's, gave an introduction which included Thornburg's illustrious resume. Thornburg has been a federal prosecutor, lawyer, educator and commissioner of baseball.

Moral standards for performers questioned

MORALS From page A1

lence and far too easily and repeatedly identified with one of the greatest societal ills of our time," Pollock said.

According to Pollock, the performer's personal record cannot be hidden when entering the stage.

"There's an important difference between what a performer might say in one's lyrics as opposed to what that person does in real life ... it's obviously not what James Brown sings about or does on stage, but [it is obvious] what he does personally in life," Pollock said.

In real life, Clinton has also been arrested. In early December, only about month before Brown's arrest, Clinton was charged with possession of cocaine. Clinton has not had a prior record of assault, however.

Bucknell Student Government Vice President of Finance Rich Karcher '05 said the University must set an important precedence regarding moral standards.

"The question is now, 'Where and who makes the decision on where to draw the line? Who decides right from wrong?'" Karcher said.

Karcher says that student's free speech has been superced-

ed by the University.

"The James Brown situation, if people like it or not, is now a benchmark on who can speak and perform at the University, something that should never have been done in the first place," Karcher said.

Pollock said the University's decision to step in on this decision was a rare one.

"We pretty much stay out of the selection of speakers and performers, but in this case [Associate Dean of Students Karl] Conrad brought it to me because of the obvious issues involved, and I rendered a decision based on this case and this case only," Pollock said.

Leonard Gomella '07 said performers are role-models

who need to uphold moral standards and that the University made the right decision to cancel Brown's contract.

"It would have caused a lot of commotion and controversy on campus if he came," Gomella said.

Katherine Wallis '07 has mixed feelings about the University's decision to cancel Brown's contract. She said that when dealing with a high-profile artist and singer such as Brown, the situation becomes problematic.

"Obviously there should be a standard for morals, but I feel like everyone in the music business has skeletons in their closet," Wallis said.

In South Africa, the nation with the largest number of HIV-positive people and where a woman is more likely to be raped than learn to read, the government has promised to give rape victims drugs to combat HIV/AIDS.

Human Rights Watch said the government is not following through on its commitment. The health minister has been attacked for her stance on AIDS-drugs by multiple human rights organizations.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

NEWS BRIEFS

By Meghan Ball

Increased meal credits options in the Bison

Meal credits will be accepted in the Bison on weekends starting next fall, according to University officials, although the details are still being worked out. Dining Services and the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) have been working closely on this for several years.

As of March 1, meal credits can also be used in the Bison starting at 7:30 a.m., an hour and a half earlier. This move came after BSG requested the change during its meeting last week.

Iraqi constitution installed

A temporary Iraqi constitution was finished Monday, two days after the deadline. The constitution includes a bill of rights, which protects freedom of speech and expression of religion.

According to BBC News, the constitution recognizes Islam as one of many sources for law. It also gives autonomy to the Kurdish minority, which will be explained in detail in the permanent constitution.

One goal of the constitution is to have women make up 25 percent of the new National Assembly.

Life on Mars

NASA rover Opportunity has proven that Mars had liquid water at some point in its history. Opportunity found rocks that had the physical traits of rocks affected by water and many minerals that are only found after interactions with water.

According to BBC News, the next step is to send a rover that can bring back rocks to be dated. These findings are still being disputed, as many geologists are concerned that NASA is stating its results to be more conclusive than they actually are for political reasons.

Headscarf ban

A bill to ban all religious symbols from schools was passed by France's National Assembly on Tuesday. This bill would prevent students from wearing all obvious religious symbols, most notably Islamic headscarves. There is concern that the law conflicts with religious freedom. French President Jacques Chirac has 15 days to sign the bill, and with 70 percent of French citizens supporting it, he is likely to do so.

Sept. 11 prisoner wins German retrial

Mounir al-Motassadek, the only person convicted in the Sept. 11 attacks, has been granted a retrial by German courts. A judge ruled that al-Motassadek was not treated fairly in the original trial because the United States withheld witnesses, according to The Washington Post.

Families of the victims of the Sept. 11 attacks are upset, but al-Motassadek is not being acquitted—he is only being retried. He will remain in custody throughout the proceedings.

South Africa "failing rape victims on AIDS"

In South Africa, the nation with the largest number of HIV-positive people and where a woman is more likely to be raped than learn to read, the government has promised to give rape victims drugs to combat HIV/AIDS.

Human Rights Watch said the government is not following through on its commitment. The health minister has been attacked for her stance on AIDS-drugs by multiple human rights organizations.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Presidential race begins

President Bush started his commercial campaign for the presidency with direct attacks aimed at Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. The ads claim that Kerry will go soft on terrorism and will raise taxes.

The commercials also cite Bush's behavior after the Sept. 11 attacks as good examples of the president's leadership. Using the attacks to win the election has upset many families of the victims.

Brad Thompson—The Bucknellian

The "I Serve 2" Campaign encourages students to perform at least two hours of community service during the school year. The new campaign has recorded 8,662 hours since Feb. 25.

NITTANY TRAVEL
201 Susquehanna Avenue, Suite 1, Shamokin Dam, PA 17876
ALL-INCLUSIVE SPRING BREAK
Limited Space Available! Includes Air & 7 Nights @ Resort!
El Pueblito Resort Cancun, Mexico
$925/person - Double-Occupancy
523-3224 800-326-9603

Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience
Jamaica * Acapulco * Cancun * Florida * Bahamas
Up to $100 Off
Beach Front Special - $499
All-Inclusive Special - $909
Per Room 1-800.733.6347
Bucknell U. Live Life the Beach Life Way!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

Endless Summer Tours
#1 Spring Vacations!
Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited!
Book Now & Save!
1-800-234-7007
www.endlesssummertours.com

DISCOVER NEW LEARNING OPPORTUNITIES... REGISTER FOR SUMMER CLASSES NOW AT THE UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

Our summer classes match your lifestyle and goals:

- Choose from 4-week, 6-week, 12-week, or full-term sessions.
- Begin or advance your studies with smaller classes in a variety of subject areas.
- Summer classes are usually small, providing a personal and intimate atmosphere in which to begin or advance your studies.

We welcome:

News

Speaker calls profiling for national security immoral

Executive Director of the Applied Research Center Gary Delgado condemned racial profiling in the name of national security. Delgado spoke on government intervention Monday.

By DREW CALVERT
Writer

"Democracy, Detention and Dirty Tricks" was the topic of Gary Delgado, who spoke Monday in the L.C. Forum.

Delgado, executive director of the Applied Research Center, said the United States has been conducting immoral racial profiling since Sept. 11.

"I believe this country is in big trouble," said Delgado, who is also the founder and director of the Center for Third World Organizing and leader in the National Welfare Rights Organization.

After briefly describing his upbringing as both an immigrant and African-American citizen in Brooklyn, N.Y., he talked of his childhood fascination with the "Diary of Anne Frank" and the horror of Nazi Germany.

Delgado paralleled our government's response to the fear of domestic terrorism to its reaction to the Palmer raids of 1919, Japanese internment camps of the 1940s and the more recent war on drugs, outlining a pattern of hysteria and government intervention.

Relating the major government policies and actions taken since the power-shift to the department of Homeland Security, Delgado discussed their effects both in domestic and historical terms.

"It has been a pattern of scape-goating focused on immigrant and refugee communities," Delgado said, citing the widespread detention of "The actions against immigrants have been swift and brutal."

—Gary Delgado, executive director of the applied research center

Arabs and South Asians, whose conditions following their arrest were so terrible that "you wouldn't put your dog" in them.

Delgado criticized the United States refugee program, saying that only 5 percent of African applicants were accepted, in striking contrast with the 65 percent of European applicants accepted. He also cited the deportation of 36,000 people in the first months of 2003, many of whom were sent to countries foreign to them.

"If it's wrong, we can't just stand by and let it go," Delgado said. "We've got to do something."

He said hate crimes have increased tremendously since Sept. 11 and that hundreds of immigrants working at airports have lost their jobs.

"The actions against immigrants have been swift and brutal," Delgado said.

According to Delgado, our government has also been offering "snitch visas" to anyone attempting to obtain citizenship who might share incriminating information about their neighbors.

Delgado had an impact on audience members, who expressed concern for their government's actions, many of which are slow to reach the major presses.

"The lecture unveiled many of the injustices people of color and immigrants have experienced in the name of national security and drew parallels to other times in our country's history when we have not lived up to our democratic ideals," said Janice Butler, director of service learning.

ENGINEERING WEEK

Courtesy of the College of Engineering

During last weeks Engineering Week, students in the six engineering majors to compete against one another in an effort to show leadership and pride in their majors. Students participated in poetry, art and banner contests, outdoor games and relays, and career networking events. The week ended with the engineers' dinner, during which the mechanical engineers won first place in the video contest and the chemical engineers won first place overall.

Gender issues speaker says language can change references toward women

Don McPherson encouraged students to change the language used to end violence against women Tuesday in the Weis Center.

By BRIANNA EVANS
Writer

Language is a tremendously powerful tool in combating the ideas that perpetuate violence against women, according to Don McPherson, a former NFL quarterback.

McPherson spoke to a large audience in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts on Tuesday night, giving a talk titled "You Throw Like A Girl: Masculinities and Gender Violence."

McPherson explained the ways in which society's views toward masculinity have shaped the way men think they should act when confronted with women's issues. By coming to the University, he hoped to start an on-campus dialogue about how men can begin to break down gender barriers and end violence against women.

"I want to engage women and men to work together to end violence," McPherson said.

He has not always spent his time educating people about violence against women. When McPherson played football for the NFL, he was known as "the man," but he said he did not become a real man until he gave up his football career.

Now, McPherson is one of the men leading a movement that challenges males to take responsibility for their inappropriate behavior. McPherson said being a good guy is not enough—men must stand up to other men, as well as themselves, to end violence against women.

"He talks about the way men are socialized and the implications that has for their relationships with other men and women," said Director of the Women's Resource Center Molly Dragiewicz. "He believes that men need to take a leadership role in preventing violence against women."

The language with which people learn to define masculinity begins at a very early age. When McPherson asked the audience what the worst insult you might hear as a 5-year-old-boy, the response was "You throw like a girl!"

In our society, young boys are taught to be tough, strong and brave and not cry or show emotions. As these boys become older, they think they must conform to these ideals in order to "be a man."

Unfortunately, these perceptions about masculinity often translate into violent behavior against women. McPherson said that in order to end violence against women, the way we define masculinity as a society needs to be changed.

"However, these are issues we have been raised not to talk about," McPherson said. "But you know what happens when we don't talk about it? We pass it on to future generations. Silence allows these issues to be passed on."

Despite McPherson's motivating message, some students were unconvinced that an on-campus dialogue would break the silence.

"Maybe his ideas will have an impact for the next few days, but the culture is pretty ingrained here," Ben Sirolly '07 said. "People are getting kicked out for drinking, and they have tried to educate them about that. I don't think one guy will have a huge impact."

McPherson remains hopeful. He said if we can change the types of language that surround masculinity, the root of the problem can begin to transform.

"In order for violence against women to end, we have to go beyond the violence and confront the issue," McPherson said. "Men confronting other men is essential to ending violence because men must realize that it is wrong in order for it to change."

Another problem McPherson pointed out is the way men label violence against women. They say it is a "women's issue" it is not their problem. However, he said 90 percent of the violence toward women is committed by men, a fact that makes violence a men's issue. Furthermore, the things that happen to women have an impact on the lives of the men who are connected to them. Until these things are understood by society, progress cannot be made toward stopping violence.

One way students can be conscious of their language and create change is to pay attention to how they label others. The way a man labels his own masculinity has an effect on how he labels a woman. For example, McPherson pointed out that women are often labeled sexually as a "piece," making them less of a person.

"If you believe a group of people are less than you, you are more likely to abuse them," McPherson said. "What are men saying if they don't confront those who use offensive language? They are saying it's OK. Men should quit labeling women and look to the root of the problem. It is silence that allows abuse to happen."

As McPherson was wrapping up, he gave a statistic: a woman is murdered by a man four times a day. While this is a problem in and of itself, the real tragedy occurs when nothing is done about it. People rarely make a big deal out of violence against women even though it happens so often. Women are actually a much bigger part of the country than any other minority, yet violence to them goes unnoticed.

News

STUDENT PULSE

"I really dig the concert for the great music and culture. Plus I'd rather even see Love Gravy over Third Eye Blind."

—Andy Schwenk '06

"Yes, I'm on the concert committee and everyone should enjoy the music. Everyone should come."

—Shereef Zaki '06

"No, I do not know any of the music."

—Caitlin Scudder '06

"Yes. And I'm looking for a date."

—Ben Keyser '06

"Yes, because of Love Gravy, they are my favorite band."

—Alex Custis '04

"Yes. I kind of wish it wasn't a Sunday night, but I'll be there."

—Mike Reynolds '06

Will you attend the spring concert Sunday?

Ziggy Marley and Robert Randolph will perform the spring concert Sunday at 7:30 p.m. at Sojka Pavillion. Student band Love Gravy will open the concert.

"Obviously! Ziggy Marley and Robert Randolph are sick. Love Gravy is real tight too. It's going to be a great concert."

—Robert Cannata '06

"Possibly, because there is nothing else to do."

—Cristina Meng '04

"No, I'll probably be sleeping."

—Sarah Diamond '05

"Yes. The bands playing are amazing! It's going to be a phat time."

—Alessandro Zanelli '07

Mitchell to replace Rogers as University president

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Mitchell will leave his post as president of Washington Jefferson to join the University community.

PRES From page A1

is to be congratulated."

The Mitchells were convinced the presidency of University was an exceptional opportunity after observing the Bucknell University Conservatives Club (BUCC) root-beer-pong protest of the emergency alcohol policy.

"It was a sign of clear intellect, and bright, engaging students," Mitchell said.

According to Mitchell, his first task at the University will be establishing himself in his new role.

"The first thing we need to do is refine and re-establish the importance, value and significance of the office of the president," Mitchell said.

Relying on information from members of the community, Mitchell will begin addressing other issues on campus, such as increasing the endowment and resolving student life issues.

"I will need to know as much as I can about every situation, and although a particular decision may not always be popular, I will communicate it so that everyone can understand," Mitchell said.

Mitchell defined constructive student involvement as central to the success of the University.

"The more appropriate student input there is, the better the policy," Mitchell said. Mitchell also stressed the importance of his and his wife's active engagement in "establishing a rapport" with the University community. He promises students can expect to see both him and his wife walking or bike riding through campus.

"Maryjane and I need to send a clear signal that we are delighted to be here," Mitchell said. "It is very important to us to be visible and to look for events that build community."

Mitchell plans to continue many of the practices he established at Washington & Jefferson, such as offering open office hours and encouraging members of the community to stop by his office or e-mail him. The Mitchells also host weekly dinners for 12-14 students, followed by a focus group discussion, attend at least one game or contest of each athletic team and attend art and music events.

Mitchell's involvement in student life made him popular among some students at Washington & Jefferson.

"In his years of president here at Washington & Jefferson, he has not only expanded the credibility of the college, but also produced a great campus to live on," Washington & Jefferson student Jeff Bender said. "He is also very easy to get along with and does his best to satisfy his students. He will be very difficult to replace and will be missed by many."

During his tenure at Washington & Jefferson, Mitchell participated in the addition of several new academic programs, such as women's studies and neuroscience, added several buildings and facilities to the campus, launched a capital campaign that raised $83.7 million and worked to improve town-gown relations.

"To say that he has made the college better is an understatement," Washington & Jefferson student Fahima Chowdhury said. "He has made the college a challenging, healthy environment to live and learn, and students are very grateful."

University students who attended Mitchell's open forum hope Mitchell will continue his reputation as an effective university leader.

"I got the impression that Mitchell was a strong leader open to all groups on campus—students, faculty and staff," Ron Julia '07 said.

Julia cited Mitchell's promise to write a yearly State of the Campus address as evidence of Mitchell's dedication to keeping the lines of communication open to everyone in the University community.

Mitchell hopes to begin this communication immediately, and encourages any member of the community to e-mail him at b Mitchell@washjeff.edu about all aspects of University life.

"Bucknell is at an incredible place and I want to make sure it stays that way," Mitchell said.

Courtesy of Fahima Chowdhury
Mitchell (center) speaks to faculty during Washington & Jefferson's commencement ceremonies.

GLOBALIZATIONS IMPACT ON UNIONS

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian
Joe Keffer P '05, the organizing director for Service Employees

International Union Local 415 based in Santa Cruz, Calif. discussed the numerous benefits of unions Tuesday. He discussed the impact of globalization during his lecture, "The Challenges of Organizing Unions Today."

Write the weekly news briefs!

contact jalesko@

Cinema Center

Solinasgrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 374-2949

Play Dates: March 1-7, 2004

Mystic River (R)	Along Came Polly (PG-13)
1:30, 5:15, 8:15	6:20

Lois: Return of King (PG-13)	Twisted (R)
6:30, 9:40	6:45, 9

Hidalgo (PG-13)	Miracle (PG)
Stars 35-Cali for advance tickets	6:15, 9:20

Havana Nights (PG-13)	Cheaper by the Dozen (R)
6:30, 8:40	7:20, 9:35

Against the Ropes (PG-13)	Eurotrip (R)
9:30	7:20, 9:35

50 First Dates (PG-13)	Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen (PG)
6:40, 9:15	6:15, 8:20

Passion of the Christ (R)	Welcome to Mooseport (PG-13)
7:00, 9:30	6:30, 9:10

Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.

Milton, PA

570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30

College Night

$5-3 Games & Shoe Rental

The Winfield Baptist Church

"The Bible-Teaching Church For the Whole Family"

(Founded 1869)

Invites both men and women of Bucknell to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 a.m.; Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening Worship 6:30 p.m.

Evangelical

Traditional and contemporary Christian music

Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thornbury

Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28-acre site 3.5 miles south of campus. Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 mile, church on the right. For more information or transportation call 524-2735 or 743-7494 (anytime)

RENTALS

for BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE JUNE 1, 2004

Large 2 BR APTS AT:

237 3rd & St. George

40 Brown St.

SOME APTS. AVAILABLE FOR IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY

Remodeled, clean, excellent condition, excellent location

RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO CAMPUS!

(570) 966-1488

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 6
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elizabeth Salemm '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editors
Julie Lesko '07
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRosa '05
Chris Stiers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwitz '06
Keeley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dornbeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Adviser
James F. Lee

OP-ED POLICY

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

An open letter to the next University president

An opportunity lies at our feet. The selection of Brian Mitchell as the University's 16th president is this opportunity. This event should provide a clean slate for this University—the failures of the past administration's policies should not and cannot continue.

We must take this chance to focus on positive change for the future. Now, more than ever, it is important for our next president to keep an open mind about issues that affect the lives of the students and members of the faculty.

The following is an open letter to the new President.

Dear President Mitchell,

The Bucknellian writes to you at an important time in our history. The current administration has long been criticized for being disassociated from the student body. The emergency alcohol policy and the issues of housing have been two recent examples in which the administration and students have had opposite reactions.

It has always seemed as though the University president has been superficially involved with the student population, and the policies created in order to deal with student problems have shown this superficial relationship. In the past, student input was considered an afterthought as opposed to an integral part of the decision making process. Current President Steffen Rogers personally implemented the emergency alcohol policy. Its supreme failure can be attributed to the complete lack of understanding of the student population. Any policy that suspends understanding of age students for drinking fails before it is even implemented.

President Mitchell, there is a misunderstanding between the students and administration. Recently many students have felt as said their time here has been marred by policies that have caused more harm than good, and the administration has been frustrated by the perpetual apathy by the student population. These problems do have a solution.

The solution stems from an increased student involvement in administrative areas. Increased student participation in decisions that affect students' lives at the University is vital to the future relations between the student body and the administration. It is difficult to make informed decisions about student life when the administration has no knowledge base. Meetings between many different students and administrators will provide the administration with more insight.

Relations between the members of the campus community are just as important as the dollar amount in our bank account.

The Bucknell Student Government has made commendable efforts to influence policy that would be beneficial for the students; however, the administration has not given much weight to the student government's actions. If this were to change and the administration actually listened to the ideas and reasoning behind student actions, it might not make policy decisions that adversely affect student life. By giving students more power, whether it is through student government or other groups, the normally apathetic student body will be more involved with more University issues.

The University has had concerns regarding downtown housing for years. Last year as a part of Vision 2010 the administration proclaimed its intention to move all students back to campus.

Bucknell has traditionally been a residential college; however, since the 1970s there has been an increase in students living off campus. It seems as if the University thinks this increase in independent students is a regrettable mistake as opposed to a sign of progress.

Living in a house downtown gives students the chance rely solely on themselves. One of the goals of the University has always been to prepare students for their life ahead of them. College is the last step before the "real world," and one of the ways students can learn responsibility is to live off campus and learn about life through their experiences rather than being told what to do and how to live. The administration needs to work together with students to come up with viable solutions for this significant issue.

One thing that The Bucknellian implores you to do, President Mitchell, is to become a leader in this tumultuous period. A president who commands the respect of the campus community will be able to accomplish so much more than one whose support has been dwindling for years.

There should never be a question of what the president actually does. The reality is that the University president's main focus has been to fundraise for the University; however, why must we accept that reality?

Relations between the members of the campus community are just as important as the dollar amount in our bank account. The president is given a house on campus for a reason, and that reason is to balance the important job of fundraising with maintaining a quality relationship between the administration and the campus.

Bucknell University is theoretically a wonderful institution that is full of potential leaders; however, right now the University is filled with an increasingly angry student body. You have an opportunity to change the entire administration's outlook with regard to campus relations. Working together as a community will make a significant difference in each student, faculty and administrative member's experience at Bucknell.

Sincerely,

The Bucknellian Editorial Board

Christophe Richards—The Bucknellian

Students should share blame for alcohol policy

To the Editor:

I am tired of the nature and amount of complaining that goes on at this university, so of course I am writing this to add to the list of complaints. Everyone is giving our president a hard time about the emergency alcohol policy.

It is an extremely stupid policy, but it does not bother me at all. I do not drink, which makes me an extreme minority at the University, but even people who frequently drink would not have to deal with the policy if they knew how to behave responsibly.

Some may say that on any given night most people on campus drink responsibly, and even when they do become stumbling drunks they really do not bother anybody. Those people often burden their friends and hallmates, but as long as they provide us with enough laughs we are generally willing to accept it.

Students need to stop blaming President Rogers for this emergency alcohol policy when their fellow Bucknellians who created the emergency in the first place. Blame those who keep going to the hospital, harass people and break everything in sight.

Considering that most students are heavily intoxicated on the same days of the week, you will probably not get in trouble unless you act like an idiot or have to go to the hospital.

If you do get suspended for blowing a .26 after "tripping over a rock" while walking back to your dorm, you can thank those students who kept getting rushed to the hospital during the beginning of this academic year for that. Just leave the president alone and let him retire in peace.

Sara Carlson '04 in her letter ("Student criticizes Rogers," Feb. 27) wrote that "The administrators and trustees of the University feel it is their privilege to impose moral standards of the student body. I understand that this is a private institution that reserves the right to formulate its own policies for student conduct. When private institutions place themselves above the law and make publicly legal acts illegal, they are overstepping their limits."

The school has no reason to outlaw what is already illegal. I think the school should just let the law deal with these things, erase all codes of conduct and fine people only for things they personally destroy. Why are we not complaining about the speech code and all the University's other policies that outlaw legal acts?

Sincerely,

Michael Bell '05

Sincerely,

Lindsay Betzendahl '04

Letters to the editor

Recent graduate laments changes to University policy

To the Editor,

My days of walking on eggshells to avoid breaking the University's countless rules has ended. I have graduated a semester early and its outstretched arm can no longer cross boundaries and punish me. I still live downtown with my friends and can only now relish in what is supposed to be the best four years of my life.

The days when 21-year-old students did not have to fear suspension during the last months of their senior year have vanished. Senior year should be spent completing a well-earned degree, spending time with friends who may be across the country by June and enjoying the last moments of a place we deem by default "not the real world," where everything seems picturesque.

Unfortunately, these ideals have withered away as administrators liberally take on roles and overstep their limits, as Sara Carlson '04 mentioned in her letter ("Student criticizes Rogers," Feb. 27). I completely agree that school has gone from a university I desperately wanted to attend to a place I can thankfully wipe my hands of.

The University has morphed into a mass of overprotective, constrictive administrators. This will cause students to stop valuing the University as a privileged learning environment and create a place where animosity festers in student's

The University has morphed into a mass of overproductive, constrictive administrators.

SHOULD GAY MARRIAGE BE LEGAL?

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

Last week President Bush said he supported a Constitutional amendment to "protect" marriage as the "legal union between one man and one woman as husband and wife."

Many, including Democratic front-runner Sen. John Kerry, see this as an attempt by Bush to make a nationally divisive issue a wedge for November's election. This attempt would take the focus off of a faulty foreign policy and the United States' slow economic recovery.

While this may be true, an amendment that would forbid gay couples from marrying is a huge injustice that defies the principles of equality, fairness and justice upon which the United States was founded.

Allowing imposition of a faith-based value system violates the First Amendment of the Constitution, which actively promotes equality between different groups in society.

The "sanctity of marriage" that needs to be upheld, in the eyes of the Christian right, is itself not very sanctified—heterosexuals beat their spouses, commit adultery and get divorced every day. Do they actually think that allowing gay couples to marry will completely destroy and break this special bond? Is society actually going to crumble because of same-sex marriage or from poor foreign policy?

Gay people cannot degrade the term marriage any more than heterosexuals already have with television's "Who Wants to Marry a Millionaire?" and "The Bachelor."

All the high and mighty talk about the word "marriage" that Bush and his cohorts put into their rhetoric is partially based on religious beliefs, and therefore has no place in the creation of public policy.

Allowing imposition of a faith-based value system violates the First Amendment of the Constitution, which actively promotes equality between different groups in society. Catholics do approve of divorce, but the United States does because what is good for a small group of religious people is not good for everyone. Same-sex marriage has no effect on most of society but it would improve the quality of life for many. It would allow them to become a family with whomever they love in the same way that heterosexuals do.

A proposed amendment would likely give states legislative power regarding arrangements such as "civil unions" or "domestic partnerships." While some states already grant these distinctions to solve a host of legal problems such as health care, they label homosexuals as second-class citizens whose relationships are less meaningful than those of heterosexuals.

This distinction cannot be resolved until civil, not religious, society can decide that marriage is a human, not heterosexual, right. Individuals sanctify their marriage based on mutual love and respect, not gender.

Instead of passing an amendment that limits marriage to a specific group, the United States needs to pass an amendment that grants the right to marry to any person within its borders.

By MARTIN WADE
Contributing Writer

The same-sex marriage debate has prompted gay activists nationwide to march, protest and many in unlawful ways. Men and women, both gay and straight, have voiced strong support for the legalization of same-sex marriage. Missing, however, is a counteractive movement that should be in full opposition. One group of Americans that has much to lose through the legalization of same-sex marriage has kept silent—the feminists.

Feminists must be seething with rage. Same-sex marriage, at least between two men, is an insult to all U.S. women. It is extremely sexist for two males to arrogantly assume they do not need a woman to raise a child. Women, and especially outspoken feminists, should be outraged over these recent developments. The University, whose Women's Resource Center has a budget and a paid director, should be making plans to educate the campus on the dangers of legalized same-sex marriage.

Living in an oppressive male-dominated society is a struggle in itself, and same-sex marriage between men goes one step further in degrading America's women. Instead of denouncing women to a second-class role in society, same-sex marriage gets rid of them completely. Women on this campus need to know that same-sex marriage is not a civil right—it is a recipe for continued inequality and male dominance.

"In the same way that polygamy teaches that women are inferior to men, 'gay marriage' implicitly teaches that women are superior to men, that women make no unique and irreplaceable contribution to family life. Indeed, 'gay marriage' teaches that the most basic unit of human society—marriage—does not need a woman to be complete," William

Mattox wrote in USA Today.

Any sensible woman should realize that two males will never equal a woman. In fact, marriage is the very thing that civilizes men. An institution that devalues the role of women and stresses their inferiority as spouses has no place in a society that is already strongly tilted toward men.

The Women's Resource Center and the Office for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Awareness should also be using their well-funded budgets to educate students on the dangers of same-sex lesbian marriages. Marriage between two women is dangerous because it creates a situation where a child grows up without a father.

According to national health statistics quoted in World magazine, children who grow up without Legalizing lesbian marriages will only perpetuate crime, poverty, illiteracy and even violence against women.

fathers never really grow up at all. For example, the chief predictor of crime in a neighborhood is the percentage of homes without fathers. Children from homes without fathers are five times more likely to live in poverty, three times more likely to fail in school, at least twice as likely to develop psychological problems and three times more likely to commit suicide.

Young men who grow up fatherless homes are also twice as likely to end up in jail as those who grow up with a father. In other words, legalizing lesbian marriages will only perpetuate crime, poverty, illiteracy and even violence against women.

I do not care if it is between two males or two females—same-sex marriage will never be good for children. Every time a gay couple marries, one half of the human race is totally left out of the equation. Supporters of same-sex marriage are promoting a practice that cheapens the value of women and threatens the livelihood of the next generation of children.

New alcohol policy discriminates against women

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Discrimination can be good or bad, depending on the circumstances. Business people, for example, would be justified in discriminating against heroin addicts in their hiring process because of heroin's negative effects on productivity. Such would be prudent, moral discrimination.

By contrast, a university should not discriminate on the basis of gender when its regulations significantly affect the futures of its students.

The new University alcohol protocol is blatantly discriminatory against female students. In an effort to improve what the University administration calls "objectivity" in assessing penalties to drunken students, it has created a relatively complicated new alcohol policy based on blood alcohol content (BAC).

When students are caught walking around at night or perhaps stumbling on the sidewalk, their overly suspect behavior necessitates a mandatory BAC breath test, along with an additional song-and-dance evaluation (touch your nose, touch your toes, walk a line) that some people cannot do even when sober.

Song and dance aside, the

The new University alcohol protocol is blatantly discriminatory against female students.

BAC test as a determination of the degree of policy violation and the subsequent punishments are disturbingly unfair to women as a result of some simple biological facts.

Generally, women have less body water and a higher body fat percentage than men do. This means that the average woman has less water with which to dilute alcohol in her system, as well as less protein/muscle mass with which to absorb alcohol than the average man.

As a result, women metabolize alcohol less effectively and are prone to have a higher BAC than men, even if they are of the same weight and have consumed the same amount of alcohol in the same period of time.

The Lifestyle Information For Everyone group at Washington & Lee University reports that women typically have less of the enzyme alcohol dehydrogenase, which is responsible for breaking down alcohol in the stomach, than men do.

With a smaller quantity of this undoubtedly important enzyme, women absorb more than 30 percent more alcohol into their bloodstream than do men of equal weight, again after imbibing the same quantity of alcohol in the same amount of time.

Translation: A hypothetical woman and man, equal in all things, could hypothetically consume equal amounts of alcohol in equal amounts of time and the woman would yield a significantly higher BAC reading than the man for the exact same actions.

Perhaps most obviously, the average woman is shorter and weighs less than the average man. Of course, this means that it is much easier for her BAC to be higher in a variety of circumstances.

Now, consider the nuances of the new alcohol policy. There are differentiations in penalties for BAC readings as similar as .109 and .11; .139 and .14; .169 and .17; and .239 and .24 (at which point one would be suspended for a semester).

Essentially, whether we are assessed points and allowed to remain students at our University hinges upon minuscule fractions of a decimal.

Further, one factor that could tip the scales of justice unfavorably for some students is gender—this is unacceptable.

While there are plenty of intelligent, responsible women

The average woman walking around Friday night is more vulnerable to a higher BAC reading because of her biological composition.

at our University who are aware of their biological composition and capable of working around the unfortunate reality of our new alcohol policy, they should not be subjected to its discriminatory nature.

This is not to say that women should ignore their susceptibility to intoxication and put themselves in dangerous situations for the sake of equality; rather, because of the social system in place, the reality is that women are going to be encouraged to drink alongside men at similar rates. Thus, the average woman walking around Friday night is more vulnerable to a higher BAC reading because of her biological composition. Even if she is not dangerously intoxicated, she stands a higher risk of accruing more points than a man in a similar situation.

It is hoped that all of us, male or female, are capable of realizing our limits before we put ourselves in jeopardy. This is the priority. Of lesser, yet acknowledgeable, importance is the fact that our new policy makes it far more likely that female students will be penalized more harshly than a male student for doing the same thing. This is immoral discrimination and it has no place at our University.

Osama bin Laden's capture will ensure a Bush victory

By JAKE PALLEY
Staff Writer

Osama bin Laden is the man Americans love to hate. His most annoying trait is that he just will not die. Former President Clinton failed to kill him with a handful of missiles.

Bush's entire War on Terror was set on bin Laden's head. This has been a tiresome, treacherous and seemingly endless search for one man.

The only way to explain why we have failed to capture bin Laden is with a bizarre conspiracy theory. As counterintuitive as it sounds, waiting to capture bin Laden in an election year makes perfect sense.

The 2004 elections are not far off, and Bush has made the War on Terror his signature issue. If Bush is going to win the presidency in 2004, he must win his war.

Bin Laden's capture will get him re-elected in November. The news of Hussein's capture and Bush's foray into Iraq for Thanksgiving during the same week sent opinion polls up and left the administration glowing with a job well done. News of bin Laden's capture will send his approval rating soaring, which is convenient for an election year.

The Pentagon tells us bin Laden is very much alive along the Afghan-Pakistan border and there is no good reason to doubt this assessment.

He miraculously escaped from our grasp at Tora Bora, the cave complex in southern Afghanistan. He has been broadcasting his fiery brand of jihad-filled messages through Al Jazeera time and again, encouraging others to take up arms and defeat the United States by all possible means.

And he is somehow eluding our grasp right now. One man is eluding the most technologically advanced nation in the world and one of its largest manhunts at the same time, and is doing a great job of it, too—for two years running. This is absurd.

Ever since the War on Terror began, the United States has been doing a spectacular job of losing the battle and the war.

U.S. presence in Iraq and in Afghanistan has caused more problems than it has solved, turning both countries into tinderboxes of ethnic conflict and general mayhem. The chaotic onslaught of suicide bombers, the anti-American sentiment and the number of U.S. targets have been overwhelming.

Before Sept. 11, Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld was convinced we could operate two full-fledged wars on two fronts (North Korea and Iraq), but today we can barely keep our hold over one.

The only way to explain why we have failed to capture bin Laden is with a bizarre conspiracy theory.

Meanwhile, al-Qaida's strength may have diminished, but its ideals and mass appeal captivates an untold number of recruits. Bin Laden is as legendary as Che Guevara, and this status is something we can never take away.

An uncaught bin Laden inspires terror. That terror is packaged and sold to the U.S. public, justifying the gargantuan budget and Bush presidency.

It makes sense not to catch bin Laden if satellites and ground surveillance systems monitor his every movement and word. By collecting active, real-time intelligence, the United States can outsmart the al-Qaida strategy and pre-empt al-Qaida's attacks. Simply put, it does us no harm to sit back and watch bin Laden squirm.

For the Pentagon, the War on Terror is the means to boost its budget, providing the excuse to shape the world on its terms. The Pentagon has seen its budget soar to record highs under Bush's administration.

The Pentagon's funding now stands at a ludicrous $401.7 billion, up from the already ludicrous sum of $268 billion in 2000. By the way, the hefty $401.7 billion does not include requests for minor details such as Iraq—expenditures for this war will cost an additional $50 billion.

The Department of Defense simply cannot afford to have its budget reduced under a skeptical Democratic presidency, while Bush simply cannot afford to lose his presidency.

Timing is everything. While Bush is distancing himself from bin Laden's fate, the Pentagon has made it abundantly clear that bin Laden's time is running out. Springtime is in the air, unmanned Predator drones are back in the Afghan skies and elite American forces are moving out of Iraq back into the moon-like terrain of Afghanistan.

No longer obsessed with capturing Hussein, Bush's highest priority now is to catch bin Laden, a wise move considering he is the man we were originally trying to capture.

While Pakistani troops seal the Pakistani border, The Observer reported that elite British air forces and the American special forces will relentlessly search for bin Laden.

Although he should have been found dead or alive a year or two ago, bin Laden must be, and will be, found dead or alive by November.

So now, only when it is politically convenient, one man makes his presidency on another man's incarceration. Call it a conspiracy theory for now, but call it fact come November.

FEATURES

Bison Girls Dance Team finds its groove

By AMY WAGNER
Writer

Throw away your ideas of female dance teams wielding pom-poms. Instead, picture a group sporting trendy outfits and dancing to hip-hop and jazz. That group is the University's Bison Girls, who perform during halftime at all home basketball games, as well as other special campus events.

"Being a Bison Girl has given [me] the opportunity to become close with the Bucknell community, whether it is through fundraisers, working with the Lewisburg community, or dancing at one of the basketball games."
—Jen Sievering '04

"They are a very skilled team with great choreography and a contagious energy... they're very entertaining to watch," Catherine Hay '07 said. This year the Bison Girls Dance Team has performed several unique dances during basketball halftime shows. The team choreographed dances to Beyoncé's "Crazy in Love" and "Baby Boy," Madonna and Britney Spears' "Me Against the Music," "Cell Block Tango" and "All That Jazz" from the Chicago soundtrack, and a decades dance to "Maniac," "2 Legit to Quit," and Spears' "Toxic."

With these entertaining dance numbers, the Bison Girls are a real crowd-pleaser during half-time. And the Bison Girls enjoy their performances as much as the audience does.

"What makes dancing so much fun is the crowd reaction. When the crowd is into what we're doing, it gives you this incredible adrenaline rush," Bison Girl Kari Panaccione '06 said.

The team revolutionized itself in 1998, exchanging pom-poms, pyramids and the name of the Starlets Drill Team for a new name, trendy outfits and a different style. While they do not currently compete in intercollegiate competitions, the girls hope to do so in the future. The 2003-04 Bison Girls Dance Team has 14 members, seven of which are seniors.

The women who make it through the tryouts at the beginning of the year become part of this close-knit group of friends.

"The Bison Girls were my first real group of friends," Bison Girl Cinda Dautrich '06 said.

During its long practices at least three times a week during the regular basketball season, the team polishes dances for upcoming performances.

"I was on the dance team at my high school for four years... the transition from the high school team to the Bison Girls was a big one. The Bison Girls is much more serious and focused on performances," Jill Tatarzewski '07 said.

The benefits of being a Bison Girl extend beyond the enjoyment of dancing and performing.

"Being a Bison Girl has given [me] the opportunity to become close with the Bucknell community, whether it is through fundraisers, working with the Lewisburg community, or dancing at one of the basketball games. It was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity and I'm glad I was a part of such an amazing group," Bison Girl Jen Sievering '04 said.

Dancing enthusiastically to the beats of popular music artists such as Beyoncé, Britney Spears and Madonna, the Bison Girls captivate audiences with each performance. Outside of games, the girls practice several times each week to ensure their routines are flawless.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Birth control options available at University

By LAUREN DAVIS
Contributing Writer

Birth control is considered a necessity for many sexually active women, but the cost of birth control at pharmacies is quite steep. At CVS Pharmacy, a three-month supply of Ortho Tri-Cyclen, a popular contraceptive, costs about $120, depending on the insurance plan.

For students on a budget, birth control is often too expensive, forcing them to go without rather than spend the money to protect themselves.

Cost can no longer be used as a reason to not use birth control, as the University is able to obtain birth control at a remarkably inexpensive price. The University's nurse practitioner, Rozalyn Yannaccone, purchases the contraceptives for students from Barr Pharmaceuticals at a cost of $5 per pack per month. And for the sake of convenience, this cost, obviously a remarkable savings from market price, can be paid with cash or University ID.

Yannaccone hopes to obtain the generic, less expensive form of Ortho Tri-Cyclen soon. Ortho Tri-Cyclen is one of the most popular brands on the market because of its mild, and sometimes desirable, side effects such as clearer skin.

Many people believe generic brands of birth control are less effective than the commercial brands. However, generic versions must meet the same FDA standards as the more well-known brands, thus using the same ingredients and amounts, the Planned Parenthood Web site claims.

Yannaccone said generic brands do contain differing levels of hormones, but they must contain comparable levels of hormones to the main brands. A generic brand could have up to 25 percent more or 25 percent less than the main brands. Problems of effectiveness arise only when a woman switches between two different generic brands.

Yannaccone is helpful and works hard to bring birth control to college women at an inexpensive price.

Sexually active female students are encouraged to make an appointment with her to obtain contraceptives. Although birth control does not protect against sexually transmitted diseases, taking the pill as instructed is about 99 percent effective in preventing pregnancy, according to Planned Parenthood.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The Bison Girls join together in a kick-line during a performance for a basketball game's half-time. The energetic routines continue to be a real crowd-pleaser.

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
~State of the Art Body Jewelry~

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7850-

Look Your Best With A Tan From TANNING WORLD

216 St. John Street, Lewisburg
Next to Fisher's Meats

Open 24 Hours
Free Membership
Lowest Prices

Speed System Beds with NEW Lamps
New 2004 StarPower 548 Bed

Call 523-7254 or tanningworld@hotmail.com

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Units Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg
T BRYNWOOD
Rentals

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100
Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

FEATURES

Reptiland—don't miss this hiss

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment
Editor

Travel out of Central Pennsylvania and into the tropics with a trip to Clyde Peeling's Reptiland. This American Zoo Association accredited zoo has been open for almost 40 years and houses more than 50 species at any given time. Its exclusive niche and high standards make it a national attraction—all within 15 miles of the University.

"We're a world-class but very specialized zoo, [allowing] us to not only maintain but go above and beyond standards," Operations Manager Chad Peeling said.

This becomes apparent with a visit to the zoo, and is with Conan O'Brien," where it appears regularly as a guest. Chad and Clyde Peeling have also appeared on "The Tonight Show" with Jay Leno, "Live with Regis and Kathie Lee," "The Daily Show" with Jon Stewart, "Real Life" with Jane Pauley, NBC's "Today Show," ABC's "Wide World of Sports," "Wild Moments" and "To Tell the Truth."

Reptiland also specializes in traveling tours and exhibits, and will be traveling to the American Museum of Natural History in New York City in May with an exhibition titled "Frogs—A Chorus of Colors."

Until the exhibit moves, "Frogs—A Chorus of Colors" is open to the public in Pennsylvania. It houses more than 150 species of frogs bred and housed specifically for the display.

Some frogs include the gliding frogs, able to fan out their webbing and so a r also proven by the extensive national attention Reptiland receives. On Tuesday, the zoo appeared on "Late Night between trees, and the "whooper," an African bullfrog that will eat birds, small mammals and other frogs.

The zoo's regular exhibits are divided into taxonomic categories, including turtles, tortoises and crocodilians. The first division highlights many species, including the alligator snapper, a turtle that lures its prey with a worm-like tongue but is so immobile that moss grows on its head. Visitors can also enjoy snake-neck turtles, a species almost extinct in the wild. These turtles are known

"Our larger goal is to broaden people's scientific horizons and make them more aware of their environment."

—Chad Peeling, operations manager of Reptiland for their curiosity—they will follow your finger around the outside of the tank.

Other reptiles include the venomous gila monster and water monitor. The water monitor, the second-largest reptile in the world, has a forked tongue and is carnivorous. For those interested, the tour features a live feeding where you can watch the reptile eat a mouse.

In the snake scene, visitors can view king cobras, vipers and reticulated pythons, the largest snakes at the zoo.

"They've been known to eat twelve rabbits in one sitting," Peeling said.

Outside the main exhibit room, visitors have the chance to observe larger species, such as alligators, housed in their own room, and Galapagos tortoises, which are kept outside during warmer months. Reptiland uniquely takes the risk of letting its visitors interact with reptiles. Employees give a presentation on the animals and then walk through the room, giving visitors the rare opportunity to touch two seemingly dangerous species; the boa constrictor and the alligator.

The zoo receives about 50,000 visitors per year from all over the world, and Peeling said no guests have ever been injured. This personal experience is one of Reptiland's foremost themes, but it also strives to educate and draw attention to its animals and the environment in which they live. It takes care to provide its inhabitants with all the "comforts of home."

"We take into account all the ethical concerns about captivity," Peeling said. "We provide them [the animals] with everything that they need, including variety and mental stimulation."

A visit to the Reptiland, 15 minutes north on Route 15, does just that—first exposing myths, then educating and opening eyes to the mystique of the world of reptiles.

"Our larger goal is to broaden people's scientific horizons and make them more aware of their environment," Peeling said.

A visit to the Reptiland, 15 minutes north on Route 15, does just that—first exposing myths, then educating and opening eyes to the mystique of the world of reptiles.

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian

Clyde Peeling's Reptiland, located within 15 miles of the University, offers visitors the opportunity to see unique critters such as the water monitor (above), the world's second largest reptile. Galapagos tortoises (below) roam inside during the winter months. Visitors can also pet the calm, yet cocky alligators (left), which are housed in their own room.

Mohring positively affects students and campus

By STUART CUBBON
Contributing Writer

Over the years, the University has welcomed many visiting professors to campus. Though most leave having enjoyed their time here, there are few who have left an impression as widespread as has Ron Mohring, visiting assistant professor of English. Through his interactions with students as well as continued publications, most would say that Mohring has left the University better than he found it.

"I know I am supposed to be a teacher because after a semester is over, I can never stop thinking about what I could have done."

—Ron Mohring, visiting assistant professor of English

"I know I am supposed to be a teacher because after a semester is over, I can never stop thinking about what I could have done," Mohring said. "I am always looking for ways to capture my students' interest in literature and writing, but when a student tells me he enjoyed my class I get a really good feeling. I know I am doing what I should be doing."

Students who have experienced Mohring in and out of the classroom can attest to his love of teaching. "His passion for teaching is as obvious as that for writing. He always goes out of his way to help students improve their work," Sarah Shepherd '06 said.

Mohring, who has a bachelor of arts degree in English from University of Houston and a masters of fine arts from Vermont College, is finishing his year as a visiting professor.

This is not the first time Mohring has spent time on campus. Mohring came the University in the summer of 1994, when he attended the Bucknell Seminar for Younger Poets. After the seminar he returned to the University of Houston, earning his bachelor's degree and working as the academic coordinator of the languages department.

Mohring returned to the University in 2000 as the Phillip Roth Resident. During that year, he was a resident poet and spent his time writing.

Immediately after his residency he became the Stadler Fellow, dividing his time among teaching, working at the Stadler Center for Poetry and serving on the editorial staff of West Branch, a semiannual University literary magazine.

During this academic year, Mohring works as a senior assistant editor for West Branch and teaches as a professor.

"My writing has certainly improved quite a bit [from having him as a professor]. I've always stayed away from creative writing, but [Mohring] has made it more accessible to me," Brett Dietrich '06 said.

Mohring's passions go beyond teaching, and he is happy the University has allowed him great opportunities for writing.

"Bucknell has been a great experience for me as a whole. I especially love the fact that this undergraduate institution has a center entirely devoted to poetry and creative writing," Mohring said, referring to the Stadler Poetry Center.

Mohring has published three chapbooks, short poetry books usually containing two movements that revolve around a common theme. The first part of his most recent chap-

"When a student tells me he enjoyed my class I get a really good feeling. I know I am doing what I should be doing."

—Ron Mohring, visiting assistant professor of English book, "Beneficence," was written during his time spent on campus in June 1994, and the second part was written in 2000 during his Phillip Roth Residency.

Mohring also has a full-length poetry book, "Survivable World," which is about the AIDS-related death of his former partner.

"This book isn't just about my personal confrontation with death—it is about opening up and connecting with other people, and realizing that we all must experience death because life is such a tenuous thing," Mohring said.

Mohring's plans for the future include continuing to work on the staff of West Branch and teaching at the University. He also will be promoting his new book with book signings in Chicago, New York City, Washington, D.C. and other cities around the area.

He is writing another book of poetry, has a non-fiction book in the works and has more literary ambitions for the summer months.

"This will be the first summer I spend in Lewisburg without teaching summer school. I will teach in the Young Poets Seminar in June, but what I really want to do is work on four

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Ron Mohring is finishing his year as a Visiting Assistant Professor of English. Mohring will have a book signing on Monday in Bucknell Hall for his full-length poetry collection, "Survivable World."

short stories that I have in my head but do not have the time to write down," Mohring said.

"Survivable World" is available at the University bookstore. Mohring will be signing the book at Bucknell Hall on Monday from 5-6:30 p.m.

Now Hiring...

ALDI INC.

- ✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
- ✓ Flexible AM hours
- ✓ $9.51 an hour wage

+ Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.

110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

Mya's Coffee House

Delicious Hot Chocolate available with white chocolate too!

Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts

Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

FEATURES

An American identity abroad

At Oxford, Bohn '04 stays true to herself while immersed in British culture

By BRITTANY BOHN
Contributing Writer

Many people will tell you when going abroad to totally immerse yourself in the culture of your host country. Take this advice with a grain of salt.

I spent my junior year abroad at Oxford University in England. I was intimidated by the prospect of studying there, but it was not the 10-15 page weekly papers I had to write or the one-on-one tutorials with Oxford dons (professors) that scared me. It was the prospect of the tea-drinking, scone-eating, "football"-watching Brits that filled me with anxiety.

During an orientation session, trained professionals gave advice on how to cautiously coax our way into acceptance among the Brits. We needed to adapt our ways to our host country: learn the language and change the way we dress, eat and socialize.

At orientation, we were told the British were a quiet, timid people prone to go in to shock if exposed to the blinding light of an American smile. I felt discouraged and was sure my loud, brash, American ways would never be accepted. I went out for a drink.

It was at that first pub that I realized the advice I was given was only partially true. The Brits were initially reserved, but as the hours ran down and the tabs ran up, I saw a change: they practically morphed into stereotypical Americans. They were loud, they argued about sports and they made inappropriate pickup attempts, all while using their British dialect. I was in heaven.

It didn't take long to realize that, despite its daunting architecture and reputation, Oxford was filled with twenty-somethings just like me.

It did not take long to realize that, despite its daunting architecture and reputation, Oxford is filled with twenty-somethings just like me. They wanted to get to know me too, wanting to hear my opinions on things such as rap music and "Friends." They wanted to hear me say things like "dude, you're harshing my buzz." They didn't want me to try to be like them—they liked that I was American.

There is a saying at Oxford: "Oxford students play as hard as they work, and they work very hard." I could not agree more. Some of my best friends were the Brits I had been so anxious to meet.

We learned from each other, grew together and became as inseparable as a Bucknell freshman hall. They brought me to their homes in the British countryside and took me on road trips to Stonehenge. They showed me the non-touristy sections of London and helped me plan my travels through the rest of Europe. My newfound friends showed me British food that would not make me gag. Most importantly, they were my true friends. They liked who I was and made me feel at home. I cannot wait to go back.

My advice for future students hoping to study abroad is, as Meggie Coates '04, my best friend and fellow Bucknell-to-Oxford traveler, so eloquently put it, "Immerse yourself in the culture of your host country, but hold on to who you are."

(Top) At St. Catherine's College, Bohn (second from left) was a member of the Oxford women's crew team. (Middle) Many of the gatherings at Oxford including frequent parties and mixers were black-tie themed, giving students the opportunity to throw away sweat pants for a night. (Bottom) Bohn and two of her British classmates enjoyed "punting" on the Thames. "Punting" involves propelling the boat with a long stick that pushes off the river bottom. (Below) One of the most eye-opening realizations was that her British friends were just like Americans.

Another romantic edition brought to you by ...

This week Ms. O will be answering the question of one of her very dear friends, who shall remain nameless. He was too shy to e-mail his question, so he sent it by Instant Messenger instead. So here we go ... Ms. O would like to dedicate this week's column to all the good ones, like Boy X, who are still out there.

Ms. O,
I think my big problem with college and dating is that I am too shy. The shy, nice guys never seem to get the girls here at the University. I try to talk to girls, but I feel awkward and the conversations never go well. Is it true that nice guys always finish last? It seems as though every girl I like completely ignores me and falls for some loud, arrogant jerk.

How can I compete with that? I am tired of being lonely, but I do not want to have to resort to being a total jerk either. Is there any way I can still be a nice guy but also get a girl to like me?
—Boy X

Dear Boy X,
Do not despair. I promise you there are girls out there, right here on this very campus, who are looking for a guy just like you. I know you, so this is kind of cheating, but I can assure you that you are an amazing guy! It may seem as though many girls are attracted to loud, bad boys, but you also have to realize that it is often a fleeting type of attraction.

Women do not want to date or marry the bad boys—we want guys like you who are able to really hold our attention. The bad boys may seem like they are winning out over you, but I bet there are just as many girls who like you as who like them. Perhaps you are just not noticing them.

There is nothing I can say that will magically get you a girlfriend. My advice to you would be to keep your chin up. Do not get discouraged. All Ms. O can tell you is to go out. Enjoy college. Meet as many people as you can.

When the time is right you will meet someone. Have faith in destiny. And do not waste away your college years being miserable just because you do not have a girlfriend.

Girls like confidence! Go out there and do your thing and enjoy yourself. We will be more attracted to you when you are energetic and confident, not moping and sad. Most importantly, keep being the caring and compassionate soul you are. We notice. I promise you.
—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell:
When do you feel your sexiest?

LOCKS FOR LOVE

Kyra Harris '05 was one of the 32 University students who donated hair at the Locks for Love hair drive Monday. The annual drive was sponsored by Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority and the Office of Dean of Students.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

March 5, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 6
Arts & Entertainment:
A preview of Robert Randolph and the Family Band and Ziggy Marley's spring concert at the University.
See page B10

Women's swimming repeats as PL champion

By BRENT BUTLER
Editor-in-Chief

On the final day of the Patriot League championships, the women's swimming and diving team was able to capture its second straight league title in Annapolis, Md. Over the three-day competition the women accumulated 715 points, nearly 200 points more than runner-up Navy.

After falling behind the first day, the men's swimming and diving team was able to rebound and capture second place overall in the championships. The men racked up a respectable 530 points, but it was not enough to catch up to a dominant Navy squad.

The women's performance was helped by the school record-breaking times of Jamie Flick '05, Leticia Altman '06, Meghan Freese '04 and Daniela Faas '04. "Winning the Patriot League title two years in a row is really amazing. We have really worked hard throughout the year and now it is really paying off," Altman said.

Altman grabbed her second Patriot League record of the competition Saturday by completing the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 2 minutes, 1.67 seconds, more than three seconds ahead of Lehigh's Julie Mitchell. Laura Goeller '07 followed closely behind Altman, finishing third and securing the fifth-best time in the University's history.

After capturing the school record in the preliminary races in the 100-yard freestyle, Freese won the gold with a time of 51.04. With the victory, Freese provisionally qualified for the NCAA Championship competition.

In the 200-yard butterfly, Jackie Feinthal '05 captured the gold in a close race. The women ended the competition with a second-best all-time University finish in the 400 free relay as Goeller, Altman, Freese and Rebecca Scheffer '07 took second place with a time of 3:30.80, just 2.05 seconds behind Navy's squad.

The Bison had a phenomenal day Feb. 27. By the end of the day the Orange and Blue had captured 14 top-10 performances between the preliminaries and finals and set three school records and one Patriot League record.

With a school and league record time of 4:26.51, Faas grabbed the win in the 400-yard individual medley. In the finals of the 100 back, Altman came in second by .12 seconds, but she picked up another school record with a time of 57.18.

Freese had the best individual night of any Bison woman on Feb. 26. With a time of 23.22 in the preliminaries, Freese set a new school record in the 50 free. She missed that time by .05 seconds in the final, but both times provisionally qualified her for NCAA championship competition. Freese's 50 free win was

See SWIMMING, page B2

A Bison backstroke swimmer cruises through the water during an earlier meet at Kinney Natatorium. The women's swimming and diving team stormed over league rivals last weekend in Annapolis, Md. en route to its second consecutive Patriot League championship title, winning by almost 200 points.

Men's lacrosse wins home opener

Lacrosse starts season off with an 11-8 victory over Mount St. Mary's

By BETSY HARNER
Contributing Writer

The men's lacrosse team began its season Saturday at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium.

Facing a difficult Mount St. Mary's team, the Orange and Blue came through with an 11-8 win.

Bucknell scored first, early in the first period with a goal by attack Patrick Christensen '05 at 12:21. Chris Cara '05 assisted Christensen on the score.

"They slid from the crease, which made it easy for me to find fellow attackman Pat Christensen," Cara said.

The Bison duo of Christensen and Cara seemed almost unstoppable in Saturday's win over Mount St. Mary's.

Christensen led the team in scoring with a career-high six goals. Cara completed the game with three goals and five assists.

Christensen attributed much of his performance to the help of his teammates.

"They were getting me really good looks at the goal, and I was having a good day putting them away," Christensen said.

"Chris Cara and Patrick O'Hearn

A Bucknell player heads toward the goal in the Bison's 11-8 win over Mount St. Mary's on Saturday at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium.

[05] were seeing me inside all day, and I was able to finish a good number of opportunities that I got. The credit really should go to the people around me."

The Bison held the lead for the rest of the game after Ross

Albers '05 scored his first quarter goal, set up by Cara, putting Bucknell up 2-1.

With 4:31 left to play in the first, Christensen increased the lead to 3-1 with a goal assisted by O'Hearn, but Mount St. Mary's fought back in the first quarter with a 2:04 goal by Eric Seifert.

The Blue and Orange responded with amazing second quarter play.

See LAX, page B4

Crew opens with Erg Armageddon

By LAUREN EWALD
Contributing Writer

Bucknell men's crew kicked off its 2004 season Sunday as participants competed in the annual Bucknell Erg Armageddon hosted in the Davis Gym. Attracting athletes from Lehigh, Lafayette, Susquehanna, Penn State and SUNY Binghamton, the event provided the Bison men with excellent competition in all events throughout the day.

"The Armageddon is a great way to end winter training. It gives us an indication of where we stand against several teams we will meet at races later this spring," Rob Bentinck-Smith '05 said.

The men have been engaged in an intense winter training program since their final race of the fall season. Six days a week, members of the club-varsity sport can be found throughout the athletic

See CREW, page B2

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

The Bucknell women's water polo team hosted the Bucknell Invitational last weekend at Kinney Natatorium. The Bison went 2-2 in the tournament, defeating Harvard 10-9 but falling 9-3 to No. 18 Hartwick the next day. At 4-3 overall, Bucknell will play Villanova, George Washington and Maryland this weekend in a tournament held in Washington, D.C.

Men's basketball ends season with losses at Colgate and Holy Cross

By PIERRE HERNANDO
Staff Writer

The Bison (13-14, 9-5) let a 10-point lead slip away and lost their second consecutive game with a 60-57 setback against Colgate (14-13, 6-8) Feb. 29 in Hamilton, N.Y. The first loss, which ended their seven-game losing streak, came as the Bison fell to Holy Cross on Feb. 27.

The Bison held a 27-18 halftime advantage against Colgate, mainly due to the inside baskets of their frontcourt players. Chris McNaughton '07 hit several layups in the opening stanza to help the Bison take the lead.

The lead stretched to 11 as Abe Badmus '07 converted on a layup less than a minute into the second half. Colgate climbed to within five at 31-26 as Howard Blue connected on a three-pointer with 15:43 left to play. The squad stretched the lead to 10 one more time at the 10:05 mark, as a free throw by McNaughton made it 46-36.

Blue then connected on a couple of free throws and a three-pointer in a matter of 30 seconds, cutting the Bison lead to 48-44 with just over eight minutes left in regulation. The Bison missed consecutive three-point attempts, which led to a layup by Andrew Zidar, cutting the lead to two. Mark Linebaugh then nailed a three the next time down the court to give the hosts the lead at 49-48 with 5:40 left in the game.

Several more missed Bison attempts resulted in Colgate taking an eight-point lead as Linebaugh connected on another jumper with just over 2:30 remaining. Five free throws by Kevin Bettencourt '06 and two from Charles Lee '06 cut the deficit to two at 57-55 with under a minute left in regulation. The Bison missed all three three-point attempts in the last minute, putting the win out of reach.

McNaughton led all scorers with 19 points. He also led the Orange and Blue with six boards. "He [McNaughton] could be as good a center as Bucknell has ever seen. He has all the tools. He will need to continue to work hard and get stronger in certain areas, but he's only going to get better. He has a great attitude and a strong work ethic so he's on his way," Assistant Head Coach Bryan Goodman said.

Bettencourt and Lee both finished with nine points. John Clark '07 dished out four assists.

Linebaugh led Colgate with 15 points. The Bison shot 44 percent from the field, although they struggled in the second half, shooting at a 39 percent clip. They missed all 14 of their three-point attempts.

Colgate also shot 44 percent from the field and converted on eight points from downtown. They outscored the Bison 42-30 in the second half.

Two days before their loss to Colgate, the Bison traveled to Worcester, Mass., to take on the Holy Cross Crusaders (12-14, 6-7), where they dropped a 72-61 decision.

The Bison held the lead for the last time at 12-11 with 13:45 remaining in the first half before the hosts took over. Holy Cross took a 19-12 lead after a bucket and free throw by Keith Simmons.

The Bison closed to within 20-18 after converting on a couple of layups and free throws, making the score 22-21 when Clark hit a three with just under five minutes left in the half. That was the closest the Orange and Blue came to the Crusaders.

The Crusader lead ballooned to 11 at 35-24 after Jave Meade scored on a layup at the 1:05 mark of the first half. A couple of free throws by Torey Thomas gave Holy Cross a commanding 39-24 half-time lead.

The largest lead was 17, which occurred when Nate Lufkin scored on a layup attempt to open up the second half. The Crusaders sustained a steady double-digit lead up until the 8:11 mark. A jumper by Bettencourt and a Davorin Skornik '04 block sandwiched between layups by Antonio Glover '05 and Matt Quinn '04 helped the Bison cut the deficit to five at 57-52.

The Bison got to within three at 60-57 after Bettencourt converted on all three foul-shot attempts with 4:13 remaining. They missed a potential game-tying attempt and two more shots, while the Crusaders were able to convert points to stretch the lead to 64-57. The Bison closed the gap to five a few more times before the hosts put the game out of reach.

Bettencourt led all scorers with 21 points. He also had seven

See MBALL, page B2

Sports

Women's basketball loses to Colgate in finale

Bison will enter the Patriot League tournament as the fifth seed after losing 75-66 at Colgate, ending the regular season with 14-13 and 7-7 records

By TERI SCHLANG
Staff Writer

The women's basketball team played its last regular season game of the year Sunday against Colgate in Hamilton, N.Y., losing 75-66. Colgate took the regular season conference title with the victory. The Bison finished fifth overall and will receive the fifth seed for the Patriot League tournament.

Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 scored more than 20 points for the fourth consecutive game. She opened the game by taking the opening tip-off and bringing it to the hoop for three points in the first four seconds of play.

The Bison opened the game 10-2 in the first 15 minutes before a Colgate player converted the first field goal of the game, making the score 10-4. Colgate started a 5-0 run, bringing Colgate within three, but Desire Almind '04 stopped the run with her first points of the game. The Bison led by seven points three times in the next four minutes. Hollobaugh made a layup, giving the Bison their largest lead of the half, 26-18.

Colgate went on to score 16 of the final 20 points of the half, giving it a 34-30 lead.

Almind finished the first half with seven rebounds. This gave her the Patriot League single-season record for rebounds. Hollobaugh had 17 points in the first half, making half her shots from the floor and all shots from the foul line.

Bucknell came within one in the opening of the second half after Almind's free throw made it 36-35. Brooke Tomovich '05 scored two points less than four minutes later, tying the game for the first time. Colgate scored six points in a row to lead 50-44. Lindsey Geosits '06 made it 50-46 with 12 minutes left to play. Colgate went on to outscore the Bison 11-4.

Colgate gained a 13-point lead twice. The Orange and Blue had one final spurt to make the score 69-64 with just over two minutes to play. However, the women could not take over the lead.

The Bison got two points from five different players during their 10-2 run, but they would only score two more the rest of the way. Colgate pro-

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Desire Almind '04 takes a shot during an earlier game at Sojka Pavilion. The Bison lost their last game of the year 75-66 to Colgate, dropping their record to 7-7 in the league and 14-13 overall. Almind led the team with 17 points and 10 rebounds in the contest Sunday against Colgate.

ceeded to go 4-5 from the free-throw line with 1:22 left to play and ran away with the win. The Bison shot 50 percent from the field in the second half, but it was not enough to overcome Colgate.

Hollobaugh led all scorers with 27 points. She also had eight rebounds and four assists. After Hollobaugh's performance she was named Patriot League Freshman of the Week for the eighth time this year. She broke the record held by Vicki Quimby '02 in the 1998-99 season. She was also named league Freshman of the Year and secured a spot on the all-rookie team.

Almind led the Bison with her 17th double-double of the year, finishing the game with 17 points and 10 rebounds. She ended the season with 354 rebounds, surpassing the old Patriot League record of 344. Almind was named Patriot League Player of the Week for the fifth time this season and named to the all-conference first-team for the first time.

The Bison enter the Patriot League tournament with a 14-13 overall record and a 7-7 league record. The women will play fourth-seeded Holy Cross in the quarterfinals today at 2:30. The Bison split their series with Holy Cross during the regular season. Colgate took the top seed with 10-4 in Patriot League play, and will play Lafayette in the first round of the tournament.

Women's swimming captures Patriot League championship

SWIMMING from page B1

the only Bison gold medal on the night for either the men's or women's team.

Although her own achievements were impressive, Freese was emphasized the importance of the team's unity and collective effort. "Being a champion means more than the numbers beside your name; it's more than winning and losing," Freese said. "It is the dedication, passion, determination and the ability to come together as one unit that defines a champion. Our girls exemplify all of these characteristics and that is exactly why we are champions."

Navy's women team came in second overall with 521.5 points while Colgate finished a close third with 520 points. Rounding out the team scores were Army in fourth with 486.5 points, Lehigh in fifth with 417, American in sixth with 319, Lafayette in seventh with 275 and Holy Cross in eighth with 133.

On the men's side, the Bison were not able to catch up to Navy and repeat as Patriot League champions. Todd Bauer '06 began the night by taking the silver medal in the 1650 race, finishing 6.05 seconds behind Army's Kevin Burke. In the 200-yard backstroke, Jack Sheehan '04 grabbed an eighth-place finish and Ian Rawhauser '07 finished 10th with a time of 1:54.15.

In the 100 free, an event in which Navy captured all three medals, Peter Garvin '04 narrowly missed medal contention as he secured a fourth-place finish with a time of 45.92.

Will Schilling '06 claimed a silver medal with a time of 2:03.42 in the 200 breaststroke. Mark Kretzer '06 grabbed the third silver medal of the night with a time of 1:52.34 in the 200 fly.

The Bison men finished second overall with 530 points behind Navy's 810 points. Army finished third with 507.5 points, Lehigh fourth with 462, American fifth with 434, Colgate sixth with 292.5, Lafayette seventh with 262 and Holy Cross eighth with 136.

Despite not reclaiming the championship crown, the men were pleased with their performance as a team.

"This weekend was a great opportunity for us to showcase our strength as a team," Bauer said. "Other teams seemed to be intimidated by our team spirit, unity, and enthusiasm. It was an awesome way to finish a fantastic season."

Both the men's and women's performances provided for an thrilling weekend.

"It was one of the most exciting swim meets I've ever been to. Both the men's and women's teams came together and we all managed to do great," Leslie DiMichelle '07 said.

Men's hoops fall

MBALL from page B1

rebounds. McNaughton led all players by snatching nine boards. Quinn played very well off the bench, pumping in nine points.

Lufkin led Holy Cross with 14 points. The Bison converted 38 percent of their field goal attempts, including three of 22 from deep. They outscored the Crusaders 37-33 in the second half.

Holy Cross shot 40 percent from the field and forced the Bison to commit 18 turnovers.

After a rocky start, the Bison, who will benefit from the return of Head Coach Pat Flannery, earned the fourth spot in the upcoming Patriot League tournament. The tournament begins tomorrow at the Show Place Arena in Maryland.

An impressive string of victories late in the season enabled the Bison to turn the season around before their winning streak ended. But they still need to work on their mistakes.

"We can get better. As good as we've been at times during [that] winning streak, there is always room for improvement. Our guys are confident that they can beat anyone in this league, because they've done that this year. But there are still some very good teams and the bottom line is [that] you have to win three in row when it counts the most," Goodman said.

Men's crew beings season with solid performances in Erg Armageddon center, weight training, building an aerobic base, or using the rowing machines, commonly referred to as "ergs."

CREW from page B1

"The winter is tough, but the work we put in now is critical to our spring performance. Participating in the Armageddon has given us a goal to work for over the past few weeks and has kept us working hard."

—Garrett Samuels '06

The time and effort that the men have been putting in was obvious at the competition, culminating in several medal performances by the Bison rowers. In the 2000-meter event, JT Dean '07 took gold with an impressive time of 6:46.8, and teammate Joe Scalia '07 captured the bronze with a time of 6:57.3 in the novice lightweight division. In the novice open weight category, Frank Rosenthal '07 collected third place with a time of 6:33.1.

Bucknell also found success in the varsity lightweight event, with Steve Patak '05 placing third with a time of 6:48.7.

"The effort the team put into the day was obvious, with several members hitting new PRs [personal records] for their 2Ks," Samuels said. "It was good to see so many guys take home a medal. Overall, it was a great day for men's crew."

Eager to put the days of indoor training behind, the crew is looking to get in some crucial water time before leaving for its spring break training trip in Augusta, Ga. While training in Georgia, the Bison will participate in their first actual race on March 19 against Skidmore University.

Courtesy of Bucknell Crew

Men's crew athletes compete during Erg Armageddon on Sunday in Davis Gym. Erg Armageddon was the first competition of the season for the men's crew team after weeks of intense winter training. Several Bison rowers set personal-record times in the event.

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Crimes punisha-ball by death

Cecily Cairns

Sports Editor

Suspect #4637585 and Suspect #4637586: The Wild Pitch and The E3
Date of offense: Oct. 25, 1986
Wanted for: Hijacking possible World Series victory, resisting capture Victims: The Boston Red Sox ballclub; thousands of disillusioned fans
Scene of crime: Fenway Park
Possible accomplices: Bob Stanley, relief pitcher for the Red Sox; Bill Buckner, first baseman for the Red Sox; Mookie Wilson, outfielder for the New York Mets; over-seeing intersubjective infliction of cruelty
Description of offense: The first suspect, upon leaving Stanley's right hand, disrupted rightful ascension to champi-

Scene of crime: Yankee Stadium
Victims: The Baltimore Orioles ballclub; spectator sense of decency Possible accomplices: Jeffrey Maier, derelict Yankee fan; Rich Garcia, umpire; Derek Jeter, shortstop for the New York Yankees
Description of crime: The Maier Ball—a cousin of recently deceased crimelord the Bartman Ball—departed from Jeter's bat and deployed itself in an arch toward centerfielder Tony Tarasco. The suspect then refused its rightful position in Tarasco's glove and imbedded itself instead in the glove of fractious 12-year-old Maier. The incident yielded a game-tying run for Jeter and the Yankees, resulting in ultimate destruction of Orioles' title hopes. Garcia, who failed to uphold his duty to identify such a crime, can be considered accessory for his dereliction.

Last seen: Whereabouts are uncertain since bobbling about in Maier's thieving glove.

Suspect #3847834: The Should-Have-Been-Interference Ball

Date of offense: Oct. 14, 1975
Wanted for: Loitering

Scene of crime: Riverfront Stadium, near home plate
Victims: The Boston Red Sox ballclub; Carlton Fisk

Possible accomplices: Ed Armbrister, outfielder for the Cincinnati Reds; Larry Barnett, home plate umpire

Description of crime: The suspect baseball may be considered guilty of failure to vacate the area in front of home plate in a timely manner. Ball left Armbrister's bat during the ninth inning, impelling the batter to linger and interfere with Fisk's obtainment of the ball. Once in custody of Fisk, the ball refused to be smoothly transferred to second base, directing its trajectory instead into centerfield. Repercussions of these actions led to Reds victory and ultimately deprived Red Sox of possible World Series title. Barnett, officer of the law of baseball, did not take action in repairing damages incurred by suspect. Barnett may be considered an accomplice and is wanted on charges of negligence.

Last seen: Ball was lost in commotion as other involved parties argued the turn of events.

Suspect #28943748: The Post-Bartman Double Play Ball

Date of offense: Oct. 14, 2003
Wanted for: Accessory to Pennant-slaughter; conspiracy; impersonating a game-saving double play

Scene of crime: Wrigley Field
Victims: The Chicago Cubs ballclub; Mark Prior, pitcher for the Cubs; sports-writer who shall remain anonymous

Possible accomplices: Alex Gonzalez, shortstop for the Chicago Cubs; possible involvement of anonymous billy goat

Description of crime: This suspect remains at large and may be considered part of a conspiracy involving the heinous killing of Cubs' Pennant hopes. The ball, a participant in the same crime loop as the notorious and recently executed Bartman Ball, assumed the guise of a double play before evading capture from Gonzalez. Gonzalez failed to turn ball over to proper authorities at second and/or first base, preventing termination of Marlins' injurious behavior. This ball can be considered responsible for perpetuating the crimes wrought by The Bartman Ball, and for contributing to subsequent implosion of all that is just and fair.

Last seen: Uncertain. Scene of crime can be considered too emotionally scarring to revisit or recall.

—Illustration by Cecily Cairns

onship title by failing to cross strike zone, instead choosing to missile into the dirt in front of home plate, allowing tying run to score. The second suspect, upon leaving Wilson's bat, furthered the damage by refusing to enter Buckner's glove, its designated deposit, and subsequently allowing winning run to score. The actions of these balls may be held responsible for the unlawful deprivation of World Series status suffered by Boston Red Sox and innumerable supporters.

Last seen: The Wild Pitch vanished amidst the flock of attention afforded its desisted accomplice, while the E3, saddled with majority of blame for dual crime, was last seen housed by known abettor Charlie Sheen.

Suspect #3647582: The Merkle Misjudgment

Date of offense: Sept. 23, 1908
Wanted for: Obstruction of rightful Pennant pursuit, disrupting the peace, damage to reputation

Victim: The New York Giants baseball club

Scene of crime: Polo Grounds

Possible Accomplices: Fred Merkle, first-baseman for the New York Giants; Hank O'Day, first-base umpire; Johnny Evers, second-baseman for the Chicago Cubs; unread rule-book

Description of offense: The suspect, upon departing from its union with Al Bridwell's bat, dropped into the outfield, resulting in the scoring of a run. Merkle, seeing the run score, ceased his progress toward second base and redirected himself toward the dugout. The offending ball at this point reappeared in the glove of Evers, who abetted the crime by stepping on second base. O'Day, in compliance with his servitude to the unread rulebook, called Merkle out and stripped the Giants of the run. Repercussions of the thievery deprived the Giants of a Pennant title. Several witnesses place the perpetrating ball at the scene of the crime, while a conflicting witness account suggests an accomplice ball replaced it halfway through the crime. Both baseballs remain at large.

Last seen: Spotted in the glove of Cubs second baseman Johnny Evers as he stepped on second base.

Suspect #4783291: The Kubek Choker

Date of offense: Oct. 13, 1960
Wanted for: Assault, battery, reckless endangerment

Victims: Tony Kubek, shortstop for the New York Yankees; the New York Yankees ballclub

Scene of crime: Forbes Field

Possible accomplices: Bill Virdon, outfielder for the Pittsburgh Pirates; nonspecific deviant area of infield, with possible involvement of a pebble

Description of offense: Ball departed from Virdon's bat during the eighth inning, whereupon—under the influence of imperfections in the infield surface—it headed toward Kubek. The suspect projected itself from the ground and maliciously struck Kubek in the throat, temporarily disabling the victim. Under security lapse resulting from the victim's incapacitation, Virdon reached base safely, initiating a Pirates rally that two innings later culminated in Yankee-destroying home run from Bill Mazeroski. Ball can be considered responsible for these damages.

Last seen: Lying on ground at scene of assault.

Suspect #2839487: The Jeffrey Maier Ball

Date of offense: Oct. 9, 1996
Wanted for: Aiding and abetting a criminal, catch evasion

Around the sports world

By MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

With the NFL action slowing down, we're going to start taking jabs at some of the other major sports in season. With so much going on right now, I feel like a kid in a candy store.

We've got the Jose Canseco publicity tour, the ongoing Red Sox/Yankees feud, March Madness, the Blunders of Boulder, Bowl Championship Series (BCS) changes and the always entertaining NBA.

In case you haven't been paying attention for the past month, the University of Colorado is in deep trouble. I'm talking Richard Milhous Nixon deep.

It started out as your typical recruitment scandal. It escalated when kicker Katie Hnida came forth with allegations of rape and sexual harassment during her "tenure" with its football team.

Then, Head Coach Gary Barnett made the mistake of making disparaging comments about Hnida's kicking ability when asked about the allegations, damaging his already dismal prospects of staying in Boulder. More rape allegations came forth and the state government decided to get involved.

What we are witnessing is a total breakdown of a school's athletic department. Usually a school will get one scandal every few years, manage to "deal with it," and life goes on. Colorado is getting pounded like the French army in the face of a blitzkrieg.

The hits just keep on coming, as every dirty secret is exposed and the dots are connected.

Scandals come and go with college football teams. Florida State University is

See ORTA, page B4

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

By JOHN HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

Losing perfection

Courtesy of Reuters

Stanford and Saint Joseph's could become the first two teams since 1981 to enter the NCAA tournament without a loss this season.

It's March. The Madness is here. And if you haven't noticed, the chants of "undefeated" are starting to buzz through the air in Palo Alto and Philadelphia. With the NCAA tournament approaching in the upcoming weeks, Stanford (25-0) and Saint Joseph's (27-0) could become the first two teams since 1981 to enter the tournament undefeated.

But surprisingly, losing once might be in both teams' best interest before the round of 64 hits the main stage.

"Both Stanford and Saint Joe's want to lose a game," Memphis Head Coach John Calipari said, according to ESPN.com. "You don't want to go into the NCAA tournament undefeated."

That could have happened last month for the Cardinal if it wasn't for Nick Robinson's 35-foot heave that hit nothing but net to beat Pac-10 rival Arizona 80-77 at Maples Pavilion. Or maybe Tiger Woods' charm had something to do with it.

No guarantees, but Robinson's buzzer-beater could be the Cardinal's biggest downfall this season. That is, if they don't happen win it all in San Antonio.

"They've got to lose before the tournament," Calipari said, according to ESPN.com. "The pressure to win is one thing. The pressure to win every game, while you're winning every game, is another. It's totally consuming. I was there. The best thing for us was losing that game. We lost it early enough to recover."

By no means is Calipari suggesting that Stanford or Saint Joseph's should blow off their conference tournaments next week. But, if a loss happens on their way to Selection Sunday, neither team should be faded too much.

"If Stanford and Saint Joseph's both go undefeated it would be hard for them not to be on the top line," said Bob Bowlsby, Iowa athletic director and the NCAA tournament selection committee chair, according to ESPN.com.

Even so, did the NCAA Tournament selection committee ever say 30-0 was necessary for a No. 1 seed?

In 1996, Massachusetts lost just once after running off 26 straight wins to start the season. Calipari's team didn't lose again that season until Kentucky beat UMass in the national semifinal.

So did losing during the regular season help the Minutemen reach the Final Four later that year?

Yes. At least Calipari thought so. "I wanted to win the national title, but running the table wasn't a goal. As soon as we lost, I knew it wasn't a big deal. You don't want that hanging over your head. They'll play looser if they don't have [being undefeated] hanging over their head," Calipari said, according to ESPN.com.

Losing is never something a team wants to experience, but for Stanford and Saint Joseph's, it might be their best prescription for championship success.

Just ask Duke, Mississippi State and Utah State. Duke's loss to Purdue in the Great Alaska Shootout back on Nov. 30, 2003 was a wakeup call for the Blue Devils. Since then, Duke (24-3) rattled off 18 wins before losing at N.C. State on Feb. 15.

Mississippi State (24-2) lost in the final seconds at home to Kentucky on Jan. 13. After that the Bulldogs won eight straight before surrendering their only other loss to Alabama at home on Feb. 21.

Utah State (24-2) lost at Utah on Dec. 3, 2003, but the loss seemed to humble the Aggies. Utah State went on to win its first 12 Big West games and 17 straight overall before University of the Pacific knocked them off in Stockton, Ca. on Feb. 14.

So go ahead, Stanford; go ahead, Saint Joseph's—lose a game. It might hurt for a few hours, but not as much as it will losing in the Sweet 16 or Elite Eight.

Sports

Buczko '07 vaults into new life at University

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

As the track team heads to Boston this weekend for the IC4A and ECAC meets, six first-year women will be accompanying the women: Mel Buczko '07, Angie Hall '07, Marjorie Grap '07, Christa Sawko '07, Lauren Bricker '07 and Ann Doty '07. Already ranked first on Bucknell's all-time indoor track list for the pole vault, Buczko looks to shake things up at the ECAC meet.

Buczko, winner of both the 55m hurdles and the pole vault at the Indoor Patriot League Championships, will try for the NCAA provisional mark, as her best is only 5 cm short. The Bucknellian recently caught up with Buczko, who describes herself as small, athletic, happy and energetic, to find out what life as a first-year student-athlete is like at Bucknell.

Bucknellian: How do your track experience thus far at Bucknell compare to your high school experiences with track?

Buczko: My track experiences at Bucknell are pretty similar to high school, that being very good experiences. My experiences aren't necessarily good just because I'm doing well.

Throughout high school I was never that great until my senior year—I went from 9'6" my junior year to 12'6" my senior year. I'd have to say that college track is more intense than high school, but in a different way. In high school I did four events so I did a lot more longer sprinting than I do now, and I lift way more now than I ever did in high school.

Bucknellian: Who is your primary event coach?

Buczko: I'm with Coach Wilson and I really like his coaching. My high school coach actually taught Coach Wilson how to pole vault so they are very similar in the way they coach. Most of the time he's pretty understanding... if we're not feeling well one day he'll have us do something different or tell us to go home. He just wants us to do well and be happy.

Bucknellian: Mel, tell me about ice cream.

Buczko (laughing): I eat it way too much! I'm surprised it hasn't affected my vaulting—or maybe it has.

Bucknellian: How would you say you are adjusting to academics at Bucknell?

Buczko: Adjusting the first semester was pretty easy. A lot of my classes were similar to what I had taken in high school, so I did really well the first semester. This semester is a little tougher though. I have to spend a lot more time on my homework and studying because the material is harder for me to grasp and understand, but I'm getting better now.

Bucknellian: Do you know what you want to major in yet?

Buczko: I came in undecided, but I would like to be a mechanical engineer so I can design sports equipment.

Bucknellian: What do you think of most Bucknell students? What's the best way to stereotype them, or is there a best way?

Buczko: Most of the students that I've met have been pretty friendly and easy to get along with, but I don't know if I could say a generalized statement about Bucknell students. A lot of people who don't go here might think that we're a bunch of rich, stuck-up snobs, but I don't think it's like that, for the most part at least.

Bucknellian: What do you like best about Bucknell so far?

Buczko: I think I like the size probably. It's pretty easy to meet people, but you don't see everyone all the time. I don't think I could go to a huge school.

Bucknellian: Would you change anything about Bucknell?

Buczko: The location—we definitely need some excitement. Lewisburg just isn't cutting [it] for that.

Sports filled with surprises

ORTA from page B3

having trouble getting players to go to class and Ohio State's star running back can't stay out of the press. And then there is the University of Miami, which practically wrote the book on college football scandals.

The fact that this sort of thing is happening again should come as no surprise, as NCAA guidelines and regulations have been ignored and sidestepped by major universities for years as the pursuit for the dollar has gotten out of control.

In a related matter, the BCS announced the creation of a fifth bowl game in an effort to placate the have-not universities. This is a shallow attempt to cover up the fact that the BCS can generate even more money with another game.

The selection committee isn't going to pit Marshall, Northern Illinois or Brigham Young University against a team like Texas, Oklahoma, Florida or Miami; they're just going to put two teams from the major conferences in the game because they can sell more tickets.

Now the Notre Dame's, Florida's, Miami's and Big 12 teams can all rest assured that they will be able to rake in the big bucks with a 6-6 record, while schools like Tulane fight to save their programs.

Think about this: While teams such as St. Joe's, Marquette, Xavier, St. John's and Georgetown can get into college basketball postseason play, college football teams that aren't public universities can't even catch a whiff of a shot at the title. It seems more and more like the NCAA is digging its own grave while it's busy counting their profits.

On a lighter note, Jose Canseco showed up at an open tryout for the Dodgers the other day. That's all I really need to say—the man is that entertaining. While guys such as Bonds, Giambi, Sheffield and Sosa are getting drilled about steroids, Canseco tries to get back into the league. Canseco turned steroid use into a science as a pro baseball player. It is absolutely hilarious that this guy isn't banned from baseball, while Charlie Hustle (Pete Rose) is portrayed as Satan.

You know whose fault this whole thing really is? It's the owners. And you thought I was going to blame the union. The owners let the unions get this warped sense of control. The owners started overpaying guys who could only hit the long ball. The owners should have been concerned with team image when a player was accused of juijing. They let the snakes into their garden.

Gary Barnett and the University of Colorado football program have been under much speculation since female kicker Katie Hnida announced allegations of rape and sexual harassment last season.

This whole mess started when the owners stopped caring about the game itself and started to focus solely on the numbers. Stats, attendance, profits, contracts and rankings; these have become the modern baseball team owners' golden calf, and they should go down with the players and unions when the punishment is dealt out.

The owners will never have to live up to their role in this nefarious turn of events, because they not only own the teams, but they control the league offices including the position of Commissioner.

This whacked system of governing in baseball has perpetuated the whole situation, and I eagerly wait for the day when MLB goes the way of the CBA and NFL.

The next time you hear someone say that so-and-so never juiced or talk about how their university's athletics department is squeaky clean, just remember that all things come to light. No sports fan can afford to be naive anymore.

Men's lacrosse opens season strongly

LAX from page B1

Christensen added two more goals, while both Cara and Wes Fetsch '04 each scored once, increasing the Bison lead to 7-4 at halftime.

"On offense, we just worked the ball well and eventually the open man was found," Cara said.

The Bison continued to find the open man in the second half of the game. Christensen and Cara connected again four minutes into the third quarter, increasing the lead to a score of 8-4.

Mount St. Mary's answered back, scoring two goals after another Christensen goal and making the score 9-6 heading into the final quarter.

Mount St. Mary's Jay Duffy scored his second goal of the day only 48 seconds into the fourth quarter.

Cara answered back for the Bison, scoring the next two goals. Cara's second was a man-up goal for the Bison, their only man-up goal in five attempts Saturday afternoon.

Cara's pair of scores put the Bison up by four until the final score of the game at 5:06 by Mount St. Mary's Matt Warner. Goalkeeper Matt Baran '06, in his first career start, contributed to the Bucknell victory with 13 saves on 36 shots. Faceoff specialist Ryan Goodman '05 was able to win 14 out of 22 faceoffs, also adding to the Bison victory.

While they are excited about their season-opening win, it is early and the Bison know that they must continue to practice hard in order to be successful.

"Overall, our team played a decent game, but we had many opportunities where we didn't score and that cannot happen for us to be successful for the rest of the year," Cara said.

Christensen agreed that the game was a solid start to the season, even though it revealed some Bison weaknesses.

"I think as a whole, we played pretty well," Christensen said. "There are some things that both sides of the field need to address, but overall it was a good team effort and win."

After starting off with a win, the Bison look forward to a terrific year. They will continue their season with another home game against Harvard tomorrow at noon.

A Bucknell player runs past a Mount St. Mary's defender in the Bison's season opener at home. Patrick Christensen '05 lead the way with a career-high six goals, and Chris Cara '05 added three goals and five assists in the game.

So many sports. So few writers.

With just 700 words a week, you can make a difference in the plight of a weary sports editor. Please, think of the editors.

E-mail ccairns@

Sports

Bucknell Sports Calendar

Men's Basketball
Patriot League Tournament
Holy Cross
Upper Marlboro, Md.
Sat., March 6
2:30 p.m.

Men's Lacrosse
Harvard
Sat., March 6
12:00 p.m.
and at Villanova
Villanova, Pa.
Tues., March 9
7:00 p.m.

Men's and Women's Track and Field
IC4A Championships and ECAC Championships
Sat., March 6
and
Sun., Feb. 7
All Day

Women's Water Polo
at George Washington
Washington, D.C.
Sat., March 6
5:00 p.m.
and at Maryland
College Park, Md.
Sun., March 7

Women's Basketball
Patriot League Tournament
Holy Cross
Upper Marlboro, Md.
Fri., March 5
2:30 p.m.

Women's Lacrosse
Wagner
Sat., March 6
3:00 p.m.
and
Virginia Tech
Thurs., March 11
4:00 p.m.

Baseball
Fordham
Sat., March 6
12:00 p.m.
and Fordham
Sun., March 7
12:00

Softball
at Delaware
March 6
Newark, Del.
1:00 p.m.
Women's Golf
Xavier Invitational
St. Croix, Virgin Islands
All day

Bucknell Men's Basketball 57, Colgate 60

Player Name	TOT-FG 3-PT		REBOUNDS
	FG-FGA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
03 Lee, Charles	3-9	0-3	3-3	1	4	5	2	9	2	0	0	1	28
05 Badmus, Abe	3-6	0-1	0-0	0	3	3	3	6	0	2	0	3	35
11 Clark, John	3-9	0-2	0-0	1	3	4	3	6	4	0	0	0	28
12 Bettencourt, Kevin	2-10	0-6	5-5	0	1	1	2	9	2	4	0	3	32
32 McNaughton, Chris	9-12	0-0	1-1	2	4	6	2	19	0	4	1	0	25
00 Skornik, Davorin	3-4	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	6	0	1	0	0	16
04 Brown, Donald	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	1	1	2	1	0	1	0	2	15
22 Glover, Antonio	1-2	0-0	0-0	0	1	1	1	2	3	0	1	0	16
25 Quinn, Matt	0-1	0-1	0-0	0	1	1	0	0	0	0	0	1	5
Team Totals	24-53	0-13	9-9	5	21	26	14	57	12	12	2	10	200

Bucknell Men's Basketball 66, Colgate 75

Player Name	TOT-FG 3-PT		REBOUNDS
	FG-FGA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
13 Almind, Desire	8-19	0-0	1-2	5	5	10	1	17	3	4	1	2	40
15 Geosits, Lindsey	1-1	0-0	3-4	1	2	3	3	5	2	6	0	2	34
20 Hollobaugh, Lindsey	11-23	1-5	4-5	0	8	8	3	27	4	5	0	1	39
33 Drumgold, Lillian	2-6	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	5	4	1	1	0	1	17
41 Valdner, Kristin	1-5	0-1	1-2	1	8	9	1	3	1	0	0	2	27
11 Hatalsky, Laura	1-4	0-1	0-0	0	0	0	1	2	0	0	0	0	15
31 Ketcham, Amy	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	3
44 Tomovich, Brooke	3-7	0-0	2-3	0	2	2	3	8	0	1	0	0	25
Team Totals	27-65	1-7	11-16	9	26	35	17	66	11	20	1	8	200

If Jose Canseco can give it a second shot, you can at least give it a first...

Write for sports.

E-mail ccairns@ or jherwitt@

Dagwood Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
Floral Gifts
Unique Stationery
430 Market Street,
Lewisburg
524-7930

JAMAICA
Spring Break 2004
The Ultimate Experience
Packages starting at
Group Discount $469
1.800.733.6347 (Select Cities)
Free Spring Break T-Shirt and Beach Towel
Beach Front - $499
Cliffs - Mariners Inn - $469
Near Beach - Chuckles - $589
T-Water - Standard - $689
T-Water - All-Inclusive - $909
Beach Life Vacations Party HQ
Negrit Beach Club - $679
Live Life the Beach Life Way!
www.BeachLifeVacations.com

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net
for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Welcome to
"A Cut Above Hairdressers"
A UNISEX SALON
633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys
WALK INS WELCOME
Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment
Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

DOR-DAY'S
GREAT SUBS!
Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696
Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included.
Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe one way $169
Book Online
www.airtech.com
or 212.219.7000

Who Says You Can't Have It All?

53.2 cu. ft. of cargo space
Available with 4-wheel anti-lock brake system
Up to 130 lbs./ft. torque, 180 horsepower
30 MPG City 35 MPG Highway*

TOYOTA

MATRIX

GET THE FEELING
TOYOTA

You're lord and master of quite possibly the most versatile automobile on the planet. Matrix is an entirely new breed of vehicle-cutting edge styling, standard air conditioning, and up to 180 horsepower with available 6-speed. Matrix is designed to be whatever you want, including affordable.

TOYOTA

Visit www.buyatoyota.com for details.

*Based on EPA estimates for 2003 5-speed manual.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Kerry secures Democratic nomination

John Edwards dropped out of the race after losing on Super Tuesday, leaving the front-runner unopposed

By DAVID LAROSS
Business and Politics Editor

Sen. John Kerry (Mass.) won the final battle of the Democratic primary on Super Tuesday, finishing first in nine of the ten states holding contests that day and knocking his last rival out of the race.

Sen. John Edwards (N.C.), who won only South Carolina's primary but had the second-highest delegate count of any Democratic candidate, dropped out of the race after winning no states on Tuesday, leaving Kerry essentially unopposed for the Democratic nomination for president and more than three-quarters of the way to a certifiable victory.

"He's won because his heart is good. He believes that America is at its best when we all have an equal chance and equal opportunity to do our very best," Edwards said in a concession speech on Wednesday from his headquarters in Raleigh, N.C., keeping the positive tone that characterized his 14-month campaign.

At a nationally televised speech in Washington, D.C., after the last polls closed, Kerry was introduced as "the next president of the United States" by Sen. Ted Kennedy (D-Mass.), one of the most prominent members of his party.

"Thank you to voters from coast to coast who have truly made this a Super Tuesday," Kerry said.

He went on to give a thorough stump speech, denouncing Bush's foreign and economic policy while declaring his own readiness to "reverse that course."

Kerry praised Edwards, who, according to MSNBC, informed him of his withdrawal from the race before the speech.

"There is no question that John Edwards brings a compelling voice to our party, great eloquence to the cause of the working men and women of America, and great promise of leadership for the years to come," Kerry said.

He finished the speech to the sound of the crowd saying with him what has almost become the catch-phrase for his addresses: "If George Bush wants to make national security the central issue of 2004, I have three words that I know he understands—bring it on!"

According to multiple news outlets, President Bush called Kerry's headquarters to congratulate him on his victory before the speech, further cementing Kerry's status as the unofficial nominee.

The only state that Kerry lost was Vermont, where former governor Howard Dean won with a majority of the vote, even though he officially dropped out of the race two weeks before. Vermont was Dean's first primary victory, an ironic end to his campaign after spending much of 2003 as the acknowledged front-runner for the Democratic nomination.

Tuesday's closest election was in Georgia, where CNN reports that Kerry won with 47 percent of the vote to Edwards' 41 percent.

The next step for Kerry may be to choose a running mate. Speculation on the issue is unavoidable, and Edwards

Sen. John Kerry (Mass.) speaks to his supporters in Washington, D.C., after winning nine of 10 contests on Tuesday and essentially claiming victory in the Democratic primary. He won 28 of the 31 primaries so far, and has been endorsed by all of his former rivals himself seems to be a popular choice. According to MSNBC, Edwards has stated that he would be "interested" in the position if offered, but that his first priority in the coming months is to help Kerry's campaign. Although only a first-term senator, he has already announced that he will not seek re-election.

Now that the Democratic contest is all but over, Bush has begun his campaign for re-election. He unveiled his first mass-market ads on Wednesday to the press. They began airing late in the week on television in many key states, including Pennsylvania. Although the Kerry campaign has not yet begun airing ads targeted at the general election, the independent group MoveOn.org has begun showing its own anti-Bush ads in those same markets, in an effort to "counter" their effect.

This bracelet was a gift Amber Apodaca received from the center where she helped teens with drug and alcohol problems. She was wearing it when an underage drunk driver took her life.

Friends Don't Let Friends Drive Drunk.

AIDS HAS CREATED 14 MILLION ORPHANS WORLDWIDE. TO HELP, CALL 866-AIDS-FUND OR GO TO APATHYISLETHAL.ORG. AIDS IS PREVENTABLE. APATHY IS LETHAL.

UNITED NATIONS FOUNDATION

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Haitian president resigns as rebels enter capital

A member of the Haitian rebellion is welcomed into the capital city of Port-au-Prince. The rebels' march through Haiti ejected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide from power on Monday, and their leadership now forms part of a provisional government.

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

After weeks of bitter revolt against the installed government in Haiti, Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide has resigned and fled his country.

Rebel forces have gained control over the country in an effort to oust Aristide. "We are ready to die for Haiti. This is our advantage. No one wants to die for Aristide," rebel commander Guy Philippe said, according to The New York Times.

The situation in Haiti was grim; The New York Times reported there were few jobs and international aid was having a difficult time getting supplies to Haitian citizens.

BBC News reported Feb. 21 that Aristide had agreed to an international peace plan because he was concerned about the welfare and the state of Haiti. According to the conditions of the peace plan, Aristide was to stay in power until 2006; the prime minister was to be replaced; the new prime minister would be selected by a panel made up of the government, the opposition and the international community; and un-rigged elections would take place.

The same article reported that the rebels were unsatisfied and would continue to cause chaos until Aristide had been ousted from his position.

In Aristide's letter of resignation, dated Feb. 28, he said he left to prevent further bloodshed.

"The constitution is the guarantee of life and peace. It should not be drowned in the Haitian people's blood. This is why tonight, if it is my resignation that will prevent a bloodbath, I agree to go with the hope that there will be life and not death. Life for everybody, death for nobody. In respect for the constitution and in the face of respecting the constitution, Haiti will have life and peace," Aristide wrote, The New York Times reported.

Aristide's plane left Haiti before dawn Monday, and mobs of rebels immediately converged on the National Palace, firing guns and celebrating. Rioters destroyed a Texaco station and looted every shop in the city. Several bullet-ridden bodies were found around the city, and authorities said that it is impossible to know the death toll yet.

Almost immediately upon learning of Aristide's resignation, President Bush deployed the Marines to Haiti to help restore order.

"The government believes it is essential that Haiti have a hopeful future. This is the beginning of a new chapter. I would urge the people of Haiti to reject violence, to give this break from the past a chance to work. And the United States is prepared to help," Bush said, according to The New York Times.

With Aristide's flight from Haiti, some wonder where he will go. Fox News reported that Panama's president, Mireya Moscoso, said that if she were asked, she would consider granting Aristide asylum.

"We have to look at Haiti with compassion. And if Panama could help in a given moment, we would think about it," Moscoso said.

Aristide's plane landed in the Central African Republic later on Monday, and he is hoping to stay until South Africa grants him refuge. Unfortunately for Aristide, South African officials gave mixed signals as to whether they would grant him asylum, according to The New York Times. Both South Africa and the Republic are wary of the political consequences of allowing him to stay.

The same Times article discussed where else Aristide might stay. As he had already been granted refuge in the United States when he was previously ousted from Haiti, officials have suggested that he stay in the United States.

It was in 1994 that the United States led a military invasion to re-install Aristide and in 2000 he won a second five-year term to serve as president. In the past three years, his power has eroded as his government has become more and more corrupt.

Now, in this time of upheaval, Haitian Supreme Court Justice Boniface Alexandre has filled the void of power, Foxnews.com reported on Sunday.

"The task will not be an easy one. Haiti is in crisis ... it needs all its sons and daughters. No one should take justice into their own hands," Alexandre said, according to Foxnews.com.

Alexandre has been honored for his honesty in dealing with a political system riddled with corruption.

As things calm down in this explosive nation, the U.S. administration has said it will work with the United Nations and the Caribbean community to restore peace in Haiti.

Greenspan calls for cuts in Social Security benefits

Smaller payments are the only way to avoid bankruptcy for the program, according to the Fed chairman

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan warned Congress on Feb. 25 of the growing deficit and proposed a cut in social security benefits for future recipients, according to The Washington Post.

University Associate Professor of Economics Geoff Schneider said Greenspan has a conservative agenda.

"Much of economics is about choices, and although Chairman Greenspan didn't make this completely clear in his statements, he was advocating a particular set of choices that would tend to benefit the rich at the expense of the poor and the middle class," Schneider said.

The projected deficit predicted by Bush earlier this month is more than $500 billion, the largest deficit since the mid-1980s. This estimate did not include the hundreds of billions anticipated for other costs, such as rebuilding Iraq.

Greenspan supported President Bush's 2001 tax cuts and endorsed making the cuts permanent. However, Greenspan did acknowledge that a tax increase would eventually be needed to reduce the expanding federal budget deficit.

"I am fully aware of the fact that it may not be possible to keep the tax rate down and still maintain some semblance of deficit control," Greenspan said, CNN.com reported.

Greenspan advised that before the federal government raises taxes, they should investigate alternative ways to lower the deficit.

Two of Greenspan's most controversial proposals included cutting future Social Security benefits and increasing the program's age requirement.

"Greenspan implicitly argued that the Bush tax cuts which primarily benefit the extremely wealthy are preferable to Social Security payments that go to Americans from all walks of life," Schneider said.

A specific concern expressed by Greenspan is keeping up with the anticipated longevity of the Baby Boomers. Elder members of this generation are eligible for benefits in 2008.

"This dramatic demographic change is certain to place enormous demands on our nation's resources—demands we almost surely will be unable to meet unless action is taken," Greenspan said, according to CNN.com.

Greenspan and other economists have cautioned that persistent deficits and high national debt will cause interest rates to escalate, which in turn could lead to lower economic growth and a nationwide decrease in the standard of living.

"I would strongly recommend that the priority of evaluations start with the expenditure side: what can be constrained, what can be reduced," Greenspan said, CNN.com reported.

The cut in benefits would not affect current benefit recipients and Greenspan urged Congress to act soon so that future retirees could begin planning for their retirement. The new system could take several years to come into effect, according to The Washington Post.

Greenspan also recommended restoring the "pay as you go" caps on increases in discretionary spending that expired in 2002. These controls were implemented in 1990 and required that almost any tax cut or spending increase had to be matched by a budget reduction of equal value so that there would be no increase in the deficit.

The "pay as you go" caps force the government to choose between competing requests, which makes cutting the deficit a difficult task.

Another suggestion was to link increases in Social Security benefits to a measure of inflation other than the consumer price index, which many economists claim overstates price changes.

In his response, Bush did not commit to cuts, but said that benefits "should not be changed for people at or near retirement," according to Fox News.

House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi (Calif.) released a statement saying that Greenspan's report "dramatizes the destructive effects of Republicans' reckless economic policies," The Washington Post reported.

"A few months before January 2001 Greenspan was arguing against tax cuts," Paul Kasriel, director of economic research at Northern Trust, said to MSNBC. "Suddenly with a new president in office who had campaigned heavily on tax cuts, Greenspan comes up with this novel argument for cutting taxes."

Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts, the Democratic presidential nominee, also spoke out.

"The wrong way to cut the deficit is to cut Social Security benefits," he said to CNN.com.

Other Democratic senators contributed to a letter to Bush, according to MSNBC, that called on him to "publicly reject" Greenspan's proposal. The letter points out that Social Security will cost less than one-third of what tax cuts will.

"It is simply wrong to say that we can afford

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan speaks to Congress. His advice to cut Social Security benefits was unusual since he usually deals with the supply of money, not how it is spent.

permanent tax breaks for the most fortunate among us, we can't afford to honor our commitment to America's seniors," the senators wrote, according to MSNBC.

Republicans were encouraged by the credit Greenspan gave to Bush's tax cuts for their role in the recent economic recovery. Both Republicans and Democrats were receptive to different aspects of Greenspan's comments about tax increases as an eventual inevitability in the quest to reduce the deficit.

Elizabeth's
An American Bistro
412 Market Street, Lewisburg
Best Lunch deal in Town
10% off lunch entrees with valid BU Student ID
New Winter Lunch Menu
Huge Chopped Cobb Salad
Chicken, shrimp, tomato, bacon and romaine 9.00
Romaine with Egg-free Caesar
Parmesan, croutons and shaved pecorino 7.00
Po Boy
Crispy oysters, bacon, slow in a rustic roll 9.00
Grilled Pizza
sun dried tomato, mozzarella & Prosciutto 8.00
Wednesday-Saturday
Bakery 10-2, Lunch 11:30-2,
Dinner 5-9
570-523-8088

Do you like being in the know?
Write for Business and Politics
Contact cstyers@bucknell.edu

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproducts.com
Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

you come home late at night in need of a snack. you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question, compare your opinions with others, explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a Delaware limited liability partnership, or, as the context requires, other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. It is not to be used as an endorsement or a statement of opinion.

Arts & Entertainment

Not magicians, not doctors

British band The Coral releases Magic and Medicine

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior writer

CD REVIEW

Britain has always been famous for bringing experimental music into the mainstream. Take a look at Radiohead and The Verve, or even The Beatles, who revolutionized music. The newest Brit-rock band to come out of the woodwork is The Coral, a six-piece from the western half of the United Kingdom. The band explores musical history and throws a touch of modernity into its newest release, "Magic and Medicine." Taking a cue from some of psychedelia's most recognizable sounds, the album opens with the more-than-trippy track "In the Forest," and does not end until the surf-rock styles of "Confessions of ADD."

In between, The Coral charts some very interesting territory. The album's second track, "Don't Think You're the First," has a definite 1960s feel to it, offering a wavering guitar line coupled with interesting sounds that echo throughout the track. "Talkin' Gypsy Market Blues" opens with a line that borders on funk, and quickly becomes a road song comparable to the Doors' "Roadhouse Blues." "Secret Kiss" follows the classic 1970s feel—writing a catchy tune that most underground fans can still enjoy, something you might hear on a b-side from Cream or Iron Butterfly. The most stripped-down piece on the album is "Eskimo Lament," a piano and guitar-driven track that starts off slow and eventually incorporates the use of a horn section to add an interesting flavor to the song's makeup.

The album's best song, "Pass

The Coral puts a spin on musical history with its album, "Magic and Medicine" reflecting pop styles of the '60s and '70s.

"...a perfect mix of acoustic guitar, just enough effects and a driving bass-line and drumbeat that make it impossible not to bob your head to the melody."

it On," is a perfect mix of acoustic guitar, just enough effects and a driving bass-line and drumbeat that make it impossible not to bob your head to the melody.

This track sounds like a combination between Bob Dylan and Widespread Panic, musically and vocally. The intriguing lyrics add much as well, with various singers in the band crooning: "Then all the tales will be told / Whilst you and I are in the cold / But don't think this is the end / 'Cus it's just begun, my friend."

The Coral's eclectic sound, drawing on influences that span the past five decades, offers listeners a fresh disc to check out. Very few bands sound all that new, even if they just broke onto the scene, but these guys do it with style on "Magic and Medicine."

More impressive than its sound is the fact that the band members are all between 19 and 22. When I was 19 I barely knew anything about music; this group is creating some of the most unique stuff heard from Britain in a long time. Check them out at Thecoralusa.com.

The Hannigans play tour guide on a musical voyage

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

CONCERT REVIEW

Guest performer Mary Hannigan and University Professor of Music Barry Hannigan led their audience through a tour of European music from the time period between the two world wars at their concert Feb. 26. Mary Hannigan performed flute while Barry Hannigan accompanied her on piano in the six-piece program. Perhaps most striking to the audience was the duo's rendition on Philippe Gaubert's "Sonatine (quasi fantasia)."

"This piece represents the French school," Mary Hannigan said. "It's the last piece [Gaubert] wrote for flute and piano and possibly the last piece he wrote altogether."

True to its French heritage, the piece presented many vibrant harmonies played with the use of these chords for harmonies rather than technical function. Its complicated and romantic nature blurred the lines between melody, harmony and transition.

"I liked the Gaubert [piece]," Dave Tomasacci '06 said. "It was very virtuosic for flute and piano and it emphasized the transition during the time period from functional harmony to chords for color."

Also of interest was a Hindemith sonata, which ended the evening's program and had significance for both performers and the audience. Mary Hannigan said it was one of her favorite pieces as it is very near classical. The piece had a powerful and driving sound throughout, even in the seemingly lighter sections.

"I enjoyed the Hindemith," flutist Amy Sutter '06 said. "It was a famous one—one I know."

Eugene Goossens' "Three

Pictures" held unique interest for its link to the visual arts as well as to the area. The piece was inspired by three paintings, each with its own mood; wistful, lyrical or dramatic, that was reflected in the music it inspired.

"Goossens was married to a woman from Central Pa," Mary Hannigan said. "He was also very good friends with my teacher."

Rounding out the program were Edgar Varese's avant-garde work, "Density," Bela Bartok's "Suite Paysanne Hongroise," which reflected the folk interests of the time, and the virtuosic and dramatic "Ballade," by Frank Martin.

Regardless of the difficulty, style or nationality of the music, Mary and Barry Hannigan seemed to enjoy each piece with poise. Both exhibited the mark of many great performers—difficult repertoire executed with an effortless appearance.

Dave's Double Take

A closer look at this week's hottest singles

By DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

The last edition of "Double Take" featured five songs that you could probably hear by turning on any commercial radio station in the United States. This week I am going further underground to some artists who are just starting to make names for themselves.

The only place you are going to hear these songs right now is on the University's radio station, WVBU, so tune in and keep your ears open.

T. Raumschmiere
featuring Miss Kittin—
"The Game is Not Over"

Deep Enough to Die—
"The Night the End Was Near"

This techno/electronic track from German artist T. Raumschmiere grew more irritating as it continually repeated its ironing synthesizers and thumping beats. The bleated, toneless vocals provided by Miss Kittin were indistinct. I only managed to make out the phrase "highway rock and roll disaster."

The vocals were broken up by intermittent tweaks of feedback and sound effects. Among the grating presences in the song's cluttered soundscape are digitally distorted vocal parts that sound like something out of "The Matrix," whenever Agent Smith creates a clone.

While I am not a huge fan of techno music, I do enjoy ambient, trance-like songs and some of the more musically complex sample-based works by the Chemical Brothers. This song embodies everything I do not enjoy about electronic music: it is noisy, repetitive and almost impossible to listen to.

Courtesy of emergencymusic.com

Emergency Music—
"Everything is Fine"

This light, breezy song from Boston-based newcomers Emergency Music is styled after 1960s pop songs like The Beatles' "I Want to Hold Your Hand." The instrumentals are driven by acoustic guitar strumming and bouncing drums, accented with handclaps and light electric guitar arpeggios.

Backing up the high, somewhat nasal vocals are harmonized "ooh-ooh-oohs," another retro sound from U.S. pop music. The lyrics hint at teenage rebellion: "The kids in the club are acting up... their mothers and fathers have all agreed it is a crime."

"Everything's alright, pretend it's not a lie," urges the chorus. By taking a departure from earlier styles, Emergency Music ensured that "Everything is Fine" sounds refreshingly different from much of the modern rock music on the airwaves today.

Courtesy of amazon.com

Courtesy of aufdermaur.com

Auf der Maur—
"Followed the Waves"

In the second edition of this column, I am including another single from a former member of Hole. This track is the first solo offering from bassist Melissa Auf der Maur, who also played with the Smashing Pumpkins on its farewell tour.

"Followed the Waves" features Auf der Maur's vocals over-dubbed on to an ominous opening chorus, giving way to storming waves of guitar and bass. The guitar riffs build and swell powerfully, played by Queens of the Stone Age guitarist Josh Homme.

The alternating sections of heavy and mellow instrumentals are similar to those found on Homme's band's most recent album, and to the music of Tool's experimental heavy metal.

Having expanded her musical output from the angry, aggressive grunge of Hole, Auf der Maur has embarked on a solo career with a great deal more promise than that of former Hole vocalist/guitarist Courtney Love.

LEAPING TWO PAST MIDNIGHT

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

University a cappella group Two Past Midnight celebrated the leap year with a concert in Bucknell Hall Sunday. The group collaborated with the talents of None of the Above, from Penn State for the performance.

The BISON BUNKHOUSE

"A Great Place to Stay when visiting Bucknell!"

The Bison Bunkhouse is a 4 Bedroom, 2 bath family house, fully appointed for your stay and your enjoyment.
Call 570-522-0443 for reservations
www.bisonbunkhouse.com

Arts & Entertainment

Great expectations: Marley and Randolph to fit the bill

Performers to co-headline with their jam-band music at spring concert Sunday, March 7 in the Sojka Pavilion

"Voodoo Chile" and rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner" during shows.

Randolph is exceptional in that he plays the pedal-steel guitar, an instrument often associated with country-and-western music. Randolph's guitar playing style is rooted in the "sacred steel" praise tradition of the House of God denomination, involving fast, complex soloing as a lead instrument. His style led to his inclusion in Rolling Stone's 100 greatest guitarists of all time.

Rich Karcher '05, a member of the Concert Committee, has seen Randolph in concert several times, and raves about his musical skills and stage presence.

"Randolph is a huge act for [the University]. The buzz from after this concert is going to be huge," Karcher said.

Randolph is the final act performing at the March 7 concert. Taking the stage earlier in the evening is Ziggy Marley, the son of legendary reggae artist Bob Marley. He performs some of his father's music live, but also has his own personal spin on the traditional reggae sounds, combining elements of rock, hip-hop and soul. His mellowed-out reggae jams will serve as an excellent musical contrast to the frenetic energy of Robert Randolph and the Family Band.

coordinate for a large musical act to perform at the University is the availability of the Sojka Pavilion. Working with date conflicts during basketball season "takes some negotiating," Conrad said.

Also, because of Lewisburg's remote location, performers have to be relatively close to the University, usually near New York City or Philadelphia, and have an open date on their tour schedules.

Robert Randolph and the Family Band play music that draws from gospel, blues, funk and psychedelic rock. The group recently performed on the Grammy Awards with George Clinton, who will perform at the University's Chrystal Ball on April 23.

There is a great deal of buzz about the Family Band stemming from this performance, and from its debut album, "Unclassified." Conrad said many of her colleagues at other schools also placed bids on Robert Randolph to perform at their schools.

The Family Band has opened for the Dave Matthews Band and performed with Trey Anastasio from Phish. Bandleader Robert Randolph cites legendary guitarist Jimi Hendrix as a chief musical influence, and he often performs covers of Hendrix's

Even if these artists are unfamiliar to you, pick up a ticket and check out the concert anyway. The musicianship will be of a very high caliber, and the experience will be an exposure to many diverse styles of music, different from those currently dominating mainstream music. Tickets are available to University students for $15 and the concert is Sunday at 7:30 p.m. at the Sojka Pavilion.

Slamming powerful poetry

Zeta Phi Beta and Sirens host progressive poetry slam

By TYLER MILLS
Writer

What do you get when you combine performance, language and empowerment? The University's first Progressive Poetry Slam, which will be hosted in the 7th Street Café tomorrow night at 10. Those who believe poetry ended with Robert Frost's "The Road Not Taken" can witness the University's own student poets engaged in modern poetry performances.

"This poetry slam will focus on empowerment issues, gender rights, race rights and sexual orientation equality."

—Erin Lion '05

"This poetry slam will focus on empowerment issues, gender rights, race rights and sexual orientation equality," President of the University Slam Committee Erin Lion '05 said.

Slams at the University are usually open to any theme or subject. Although Lion said that some slammers feel artistically restricted by the new focus on empowerment, but she believes that now is the time to be addressing the issue in a slam setting.

"I think especially at Bucknell these are important issues and they are relevant to the current controversies surrounding gay marriage," Lion said.

Tomorrow's Progressive Poetry Slam is sponsored by Sirens and the Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Inc. The progressive slam coincides with Zeta Phi Beta's "Finer Womanhood Week," a program begun by the sorority in 1923 to celebrate womanhood and to connect this celebration to the local community.

"The Finer Womanhood Observance is a time when Zetas around the globe bring before the local community programs that emphasize the national theme," according to the Zeta Phi Beta Web site. The Progressive Poetry Slam is one of the many events Zeta Phi Beta has sponsored this week in an effort to connect the University community with issues of womanhood.

The University's first progressive slam is certain to be energetic. Poetry slams usually draw a large crowd, so students should arrive well before 10 p.m. to claim seats.

A Night at the Oscars

"Lord of the Rings" cast members celebrate their record-tying Oscar win. The film won all 11 of their Oscar nominations, including the awards for "Best Directing" and "Best Picture."

Best Picture "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Barrie M. Osborne, Peter Jackson and Fran Walsh	Foreign Language Film "The Barbarian Invasions" Directed by Denys Arcand
Actor in a Leading Role Sean Penn "Mystic River"	Honorary Award Blake Edwards
Actress in a Leading Role Charlize Theron "Monster"	Makeup "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Richard Taylor Peter King
Actor in a Supporting Role Tim Robbins "Mystic River"	Music (Score) "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Howard Shore
Actress in a Supporting Role Renée Zellweger "Cold Mountain"	Music (Song) "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" "Into the West" Music and Lyrics by Fran Walsh and Howard Shore and Annie Lennox
Directing "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Peter Jackson	Short Film (Animated) "Harvie Krumpet" Adam Elliot
Animated Feature Film "Finding Nemo" Andrew Stanton	Short Film (Live Action) "Two Soldiers" Aaron Schneider and Andrew J. Sacks
Art Direction "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Grant Major (Art Direction), Dan Hennah and Alan Lee (Set Decoration)	Sound Editing "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World" Richard King
Cinematography "Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World" Russell Boyd	Sound Mixing "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Christopher Boyes, Michael Semanick, Michael Hedges and Hammond Peek
Costume Design "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Ngila Dickson and Richard Taylor	Visual Effects "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Jim Rygiel, Joe Letteri, Randall William Cook and Alex Funke
Documentary Feature "The Fog of War" Errol Morris and Michael Williams	Writing (Adapted Screenplay) "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Screenplay by Fran Walsh, Philippa Boyens & Peter Jackson
Documentary Short Subject "Chernobyl Heart" Maryann DeLeo	Writing (Original Screenplay) "Lost in Translation" Written by Sofia Coppola
Film Editing "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" Jamie Selkirk

Courtesy of Oscar.com

SEVENTH STREET SPOTLIGHT

The Alfred James Band with cellist Alfred James and guitarist Joshua Pride performed their southern acoustic music as part of the Late Night Music Series

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 133, Number 7

Features:

Read about the options for fun and entertainment in Las Vegas for those under the age of 21.

See page A12

Cable testing begins this week

computers or televisions.

Under a previously considered plan, the University would have had to essentially run its own cable company, buy equipment to download signals from a satellite and then run them through the data network.

During this trial run, housing units chosen by the Office of Housing and Residential Life will receive cable boxes and service free of charge. The University, BSG and RHA will share the cost of the testing.

A mixture of first-year student halls and upper-class halls in uphill and downhill locations were selected to test the equipment. The selected locations include Malcom 4 in Swartz, Kress ground and first floors, all three floors in Larison Cottage, Harris first and second floors, Martin House, and two Roser Gateway units.

Cable will be provided for the testers until April 28, when the students will evaluate their satisfaction through a survey. Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Housing and Residential Life Dan Romley stressed the importance of testing the system under typical conditions during the academic year.

Because the cable is being fed through the network, a network overload could be possible. Pollock said he is assured a network overload should not be a problem, but sees the testing as a way for knowing for sure.

See CABLE page A2

By MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

Bucknell Student Government, in conjunction with the President's office and the Residence Hall Association, announced it will begin testing cable television in select dorm rooms this week. If the test proves successful, cable could be implemented campus-wide next semester.

If cable is an option for students in the fall, those who wish to receive it in their dorm rooms will likely pay less than $150 a year, according to the administration.

Students have been asking for cable for years, and a recent technological breakthrough enabled D&E Communications, the local phone company, to provide digital cable programming. Cable would be routed through the University's already-existing computer network directly into student

ACP names The Bucknellian one of the best papers in nation

By BRENT BUTLER
Editor-in-Chief

The Associated Collegiate Press and the Columbia Scholastic Press Association recently honored The Bucknellian for its work during the past year.

The Bucknellian received second place for a four-year university weekly newspaper in the best-in-nation category at the ACP competition in Las Vegas on March 7. The competition was conducted at the ACP-sponsored Midwinter

National College Newspaper Convention

The Bucknellian submitted its Nov. 21 issue, which featured the implementation of the administration's emergency alcohol policy. The newspaper was judged on general excellence, with focuses on the quality of the reporting, overall use of photos and art and the leadership of the editorial page. Judges spot-checked the editorial and writing content of the entire 2003 press run.

Nearly 700 students and advisers from more than 150 universities attended the Las Vegas convention. The schools ranged in size from large four-year universities such as UCLA and New York University to smaller two-year colleges.

The Bucknellian was awarded two certificates of merit by CSPA at its annual awards program. The CSPA Gold Circle Awards program is an annual competition for individual achievement by

See AWARD page A3

Rumors of Rogers' early retirement quelled

By ELISABETH SALEMME
Editor-in-Chief

University President Steffen Rogers denied rumors that he is going to retire in the middle of this semester, which would have been months earlier than expected. Sources from inside the University said they heard the rumor, but could not confirm its truth.

Rogers said that although he may leave the University in June, he would "certainly not" leave the University prior to Commencement. "I wouldn't even think about leaving in the middle of a semester," Rogers said. "I want to shake the hands of the class of 2004. I came in with that class and I wouldn't pass up that experience."

THE CAMPUS THEATRE LIGHTS UP MARKET STREET

Courtesy of Ken LeVan

After the eight-month restoration project of its historic 1941 original marquee, the Campus Theatre lit up Market Street Tuesday evening. The 400 block of Market Street was closed for the public to witness the historic lighting. A free screening of the 35mm classic "Casablanca" followed the lighting.

The downside of cable

Managing Editor Melinda Kummer writes about the benefits of not having cable TV throughout her youth.

Baseball

Baseball wins five of seven games in Bradenton, Fla. over spring break.

Fun with politics

Senior Editors Peter Hackeman and Jason Rubinstein present the first installment of their political satire column.

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Wednesday, March 10

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to Stadium Road for the report of a vehicle that was struck while it was parked. The vehicle was damaged at the rear on the driver's side. East Buffalo Township Police responded. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that a window at Smith Hall was broken by a water balloon. Lewisburg Police responded. Upon further investigation, Public Safety identified a student and two visitors responsible for breaking the window. Citations were issued for criminal mischief.

Thursday, March 11

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety observed two males walking in the cemetery late at night. When approached by Public Safety, one male ran. The other was identified as a student who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Lewisburg Police Department stopped to assist. Citations were issued for underage consumption.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window in Marts Hall. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—An employee reported to Public Safety that a woman drove her vehicle past him on Lit Road and yelled obscenities at him. Upon investigation, the individual was determined to be a student, who said she did not yell at the employee. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded. The employee could not be contacted; therefore, no further action was taken.

Friday, March 12

ACT 64 (Drug Violation)—Public Safety responded to Gateway Kalman Posner at the request of the Milton Police Department. Upon arrival, Public Safety met with two Milton Police Department officers, who informed Public Safety that they were arresting a student off campus for possession and sale of cocaine. The investigation of this case is ongoing.

INFORMATION / SMOKE CONDITION—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of smoke coming from a heating unit. Physical Plant was on the scene and determined that the smoke was caused by a fan motor that had overheated. Repairs were made.

THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) entered an unlocked window in the Botany building and removed a computer. Lewisburg Police Department responded. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, March 13

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to the Sojka Pavilion for the report of a vehicle accident. A visitor's vehicle was driving on ROTC Drive when it stopped for unknown reason(s) and was struck by another visitor's vehicle, causing minor damage to a headlight. The drivers exchanged insurance information.

Saturday, March 20

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Biology building for the report of an employee who had slipped and fallen on the roof. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to his home.

Courtesy of Reuters

If he speaks, they will come

Actor James Earl Jones scheduled to give spring lecture on April 12

By MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

"The only thing it would really be useful for is watching the news," Casey said. "Then again, that's all available either online or on the TVs in the lounges."

Lina Nandy '04 shares similar sentiments. "There are enough TVs in the dorm that you ought to be able to find something, and it's an unnecessary expense," Nandy said.

Other students said they would they are excited about the possibilities that cable would provide.

"I think cable would help me keep in touch with the outside world and burst the bub-

"The drive for cable began with students who have long since graduated and the introduction of cable is a credit to all students who have voiced their concerns throughout the years."

—John Siwicki '05,
BSG president

the campus through an e-mail; the committee decided Jones fit its needs perfectly.

The last big name to lecture at the University was Ben Stein in February. Conservatives Club President Charles Mitchell '05, who played a large role in bringing Stein to campus, said he looks forward to Jones' lecture.

"Despite my obvious interest in politics, I don't think all or even most, University lec-

"[Students] will gain insight into how the media plays a crucial role in our lives and functions as a vital link in today's society both positively and negatively."

—Cori Hetherington '04, lectureship committee chairperson

ble," Chelsea Hetrick '07 said. This test is a huge step in the fight that seemed, to students, to be a losing battle, BSG said it sees the cable testing as the collaborative effort of students past and present.

"The drive for cable began with students who have long since graduated and the introduction of cable is a credit to all students who have voiced their concerns throughout the years," Siwicki said.

The Lectureship Committee carefully analyzed past lectures in an effort to gauge the responsiveness of the University community. Finding the most recent lectures to be authors and national figures—Sylvia Nasar, Janet Reno and New York City Fire Commander Richard Picciotto—the committee decided to look for a lecturer from the arts and entertainment industry. After surveying tures should be political in nature," Mitchell said. "Plus, in contrast to [Reno and Nadar], we can realistically expect that when he comes here Mr. Jones won't be running for anything. I have to say, that'll be nice!"

The event is free for students. Doors will open at 6:30 p.m. for BUID holders. After members of the campus community have entered, the lecture will be opened to the general public.

Cable may be an option in fall

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Select dorms around campus were chosen to test the new cable system which could be implemented next fall. Students could have the option of having digital cable in their rooms at a cost that is hoped to be less than $150 a year, not including the box receiver.

CABLE From page A1

"No final decision about going forward with cable will be made until after the test has been completed, at the end of April," Vice President of Student Affairs Charlie Pollock '07 said.

Pollock said a student's choice is one of the best features of the proposed plan.

"From the start of our investigations, BSG has told us that students generally support the idea of an extra charge for cable, even if they wouldn't have a choice of getting cable or not," Pollock said. "Having a choice and paying a reasonable fee strikes us as a win-win situation."

Some students said they share Pollock's point of view.

"I think it is definitely a step in the right direction to offer cable as an option," Matt Gabler '06 said. "Having the option to pay gives students the ability to weigh how much they want [cable] versus how much they are willing to pay."

Some students said reasons for choosing cable may extend only as far as watching sports coverage and MTV. Pollock said he hopes students would use cable to learn about current events and that it could be used in the future for campus programming.

"Cable provides a myriad of possibilities that can positively affect the academic life of students," BSG President John Siwicki '05 said. Siwicki is confident that students can balance cable in their already busy schedules.

Emily Izibicki '05 said she would enjoy access in her room. She said she does have some reservations, joking that "On the whole, I think it may be detrimental academically."

Angela Casey '05, who will receive cable as part of the test, does not think cable in her dorm room will change her life.

DISCOVER NEW LEARNING OPPORTUNITIES... REGISTER FOR SUMMER CLASSES NOW AT THE UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

Our summer classes match your lifestyle and goals:

- Choose from 4-week, 6-week, 12-week, or full-term sessions.
- Begin or advance your studies with smaller classes in a variety of subject areas.
- Summer classes are usually small, providing a personal and intimate atmosphere in which to begin or advance your studies.

We welcome:

- Currently enrolled students
- Students home for the summer from other colleges or universities
- Adults continuing their education

University of Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH
BRADFORD
GREENSBURG
JOHNSTOWN
TITUSVILLE

FOURTH FLOOR, CATHEDRAL OF LEARNING • 412-624-6600 • WWW.PITT.EDU/~SUMMER

News

Students present work at Kalman Research Symposium poster session

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Sarah Diamond '05 presented research in biology Tuesday during the Symposium. The University's Program for Undergraduate Research gives undergraduate students the opportunity to participate in an eight-week project with faculty members.

By SARA STEFANINI
Contributing Writer

Seventy-seven undergraduates presented the results of their summer research projects at the third-annual Kalman Research Symposium on Tuesday.

Projects covered a wide range of topics, including "Bee Diversity and Abundance in Pennsylvania's Natural Habitat" by Shannon Benson '04, "The U.S. Housing Market: Bubble or Boom" by Ryan Berry '05 and "The Impact of Moving Students Back to Campus on Local Housing Prices" by Lisa Thier '05.

The University's Program for Undergraduate Research requires summer research students to participate in the symposium, which gives students a chance to share their collaborative work with the campus community.

"The symposium really represents what is best about Bucknell—students being exposed to and collaborating in our faculty's scholarship and research," Assistant Vice President of Academic Affairs James Rice said.

Rice said the Symposium has continued to grow since its inception three years ago. Each summer, the Program for Undergraduate Research supports 30-50 student research projects covering topics in the natural and social sciences, engineering and humanities.

There are also several smaller research programs, such as the McKenna Summer Environmental Internship, in which students participate in environmental research, and the Price Waterhouse Coopers Undergraduate Research Fellowship.

To apply, students must create a research project designed to cover an eight-week period. Once they have found a faculty member with whom to collaborate, they must submit a proposal detailing the methodologies they intend to use. Most of the summer research programs award students a $2,000 to $3,000 stipend and free housing on campus for the duration of their research projects.

Many students said these summer programs can prepare them for future graduate studies and professional careers in research.

"I always wondered if I would like to do research after I graduate. This was a good experience, and now I know that it is what I want to do," Heather Beck '04 said.

The projects give students a chance to work more closely with professors and to focus on their specific fields of interest.

The Kalman Research Symposium also gives other students a chance to see examples of what their classmates have studied and helps them decide whether or not to apply to programs.

Barry DeSain '04, whose project was titled "Archeological Glass from Aila and Carthage," said the project reassured his future career goals.

"This research project gave me an in-depth look at the field and it made me really want to be an archeologist," DeSain said.

"Science is about researching, so if you want to go into a scientific field, it's important to get this experience. A lot of bigger schools don't offer these opportunities," said Robert Rhoades '05, who attended the symposium to see the presentations.

"I think it would be good to get research experience here with a professor supporting you, and I was interested in seeing what other students have done," Deborah Osborn '07 said.

In the summer of 2004, the program will support 29 natural sciences projects, 10 engineering projects, nine social sciences projects and four humanities projects.

Bucknellian rewarded AWARD From page A1

student writers, editors, designers and photographers.

• College student journalists submitted 3,366 entries in 77 available categories for the collegiate classification. There were 683 first-, second-, third-place or certificate-of-merit awards given in the collegiate division.

Photographer Eric Graham '05 received a certificate of merit for his portfolio of work for his photos printed from Nov. 1, 2002 through Oct. 31, 2003. Graham's work throughout the past year has been an important part of the design and layout of the entire paper.

"Columbia is proud to give these awards to these energetic and talented student journalists," CSFA Director Edmund J. Sullivan wrote in a press release.

Contributing Writer Nicole Wiederspiel '03 received a first-person-experience Certificate of Merit for her abroad perspective of Vienna, Austria.

Recognition by these two prestigious journalism authorities is particularly remarkable due to the fact that most of our editors receive no class credit for participation with The Bucknellian and the University does not have a journalism department. Many of the newspapers with which The Bucknellian competes at these competitions have these two forms of university support.

The Bucknellian is extremely proud of these distinctions and thanks everyone who has contributed to its success.

The Bucknellian was recognized for the Nov. 21 issue, featuring the administration's emergency alcohol policy, at an ACP conference in Las Vegas.

Write for the award-winning Bucknellian

email mkummer@

Write for News jalesko@

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by traufman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo
and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
-State of the Art Body Jewelry-

Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

summer

AT NORTHWESTERN

REQUEST YOUR CATALOG TODAY!

REGISTRATION BEGINS APRIL 12 CLASSES BEGIN JUNE 21
847.491.5250 www.northwestern.edu/summernu

NORTHWESTERN
UNIVERSITY

News

Legal issues force Stechschulte to end campaign

Director of Student Health Services Dr. Don Stechschulte was prevented from appearing on the primary ballot for U.S. Congress because of procedural issues regarding his petition.

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Staff Writer

Director of Student Health Services Dr. Donald Stechschulte Jr. was removed from the Democratic Congressional election ballot due to legal problems with his petitions.

His forced removal leaves

U.S. Representative Don Sherwood (R-Tunkhannock) alone on the ballot for the 10th Congressional District seat in Pennsylvania. Stechschulte collected 1,218 signatures on 80 petitions, but, according to the Scranton Times, Democrat John Kropa challenged 333 of the signatures for various reasons. Stechschulte was disqualified from running due to a problem involving his personal signature on petitions he did not circulate.

"Nothing was forged on the petitions; there was nothing dishonest about them. I lost on a technicality," Stechschulte said.

Along with several other participants, the Bucknell College Democrats assisted Stechschulte with the petition signing.

"A few people set up a table in the L.C. Mall to encourage people to register to vote in Pennsylvania so they could sign the petition, and others went door-to-door with petitions," Emily Johnson '07 said.

Stechschulte's case was heard on March 8. Robert Tidmore '04 said he was called to testify. He said he helped circulate petitions along with Associate Professor of Geography Paul Susman and Sarah Dickinson '05 in order to prove that enough legitimate signatures were collected. "The judge understood that the signatures were valid, but could not amend the petitions due to a court case that requires the circulators' signatures," Tidmore said.

Stechschulte signed the back of the petitions that did not have a circulator's signature, a practice made illegal by a Supreme Court decision in 2001.

Tidmore said Stechschulte's campaign director was under the impression that the candidate's signature was sufficient.

"I am not a professional politician, and it is unfortunate that I depended on people with more experience who still told me the wrong information. I'm not blaming anyone; it is just unfortunate," Stechschulte said.

Stechschulte had two options after the court order: appeal the Supreme Court decision or conduct a write-in campaign, both of which he decided against.

"Part of me wants to respond to this, but I'm so far behind on what a campaign should be doing right now that it's hard to justify," Stechschulte said.

According to The Scranton Times, Kropa set out to knock Stechschulte off of the ballot because he is happy with the job Sherwood is doing. Questions of political motivation are apparent, but Stechschulte said he emphasized that these are only speculations.

Bucknell College Democrats President Matt Wirick '04 said there is nothing to directly link Sherwood with the challenge against Stechschulte's signatures.

"The allegations made by the man who challenged the signatures are false, mean-spirited and have the feel of partisan politics," Wirick said.

Stechschulte said he chose to run because this is the 10th year there has not been a Democratic candidate on the ballot for U.S. Representative. "For democracy to take place there has to be dialogue, and dialogue implies at least two voices. Without that we become stagnant as a people. We need new and different ideas to discuss and argue about," Stechschulte said.

Stechschulte said other reasons for running included his ideas that stress human rights and the power of the people.

"I think it's important to take the issues that people are talking about around the breakfast table as important," Stechschulte said.

Wirick said Stechschulte has ideas and a commitment to the people of this community that would have made him an exceptional candidate. Meanwhile Stechschulte said he is taking these events as a learning experience.

"Bucknell values encourage civic engagement, and I wish I had the experience as a young person because this problem might not have happened. Take a lesson: Get involved early," Stechschulte said.

Administration chooses to participate in free speech forum

By JULIE LESKO
News Editor

The Bucknell Conservatives Club, Bucknell Student Government and the department of history are co-sponsoring a campus-wide discussion of the University's harassment policies at 7 p.m. on April 1 in the L.C. Forum.

Next month's scheduled release of the new bias-related harassment policy has sparked interest in the event. The policy, which has yet to be specified, will define different forms of bias-related harassment. This is similar to the current definition of harassment on campus.

The BUCC has scheduled two experts on the subject to speak and represent the leftist view of the topics: Michael Meyers, vice president of the American Civil Liberties Union and executive director of the New York Civil Rights Coalition and Greg Lukianoff, director of public and legal advocacy for the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education.

Meyers is an expert on both civil liberties and civil rights, while Lukianoff is a First Amendment lawyer on campus "speech codes." After an initial refusal to participate, the University administration decided that

Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 and University Chaplain Ian Oliver will speak on behalf of the University. Chair of the Faculty and Professor of English Michael Payne is moderating the event.

"The point of this exercise would not be to force a specific viewpoint on the University's policies, but rather to encourage an intelligent and informed discourse on them."

—Charles Mitchell '05, Bucknell University Conservatives Club president

"The point of this exercise would not be to force a specific viewpoint on the University's policies, but rather to encourage an intelligent and informed discourse on them. It would also provide an excellent opportunity for widespread discussion of the new bias-related harassment policy, which reportedly will be out this month," BUCC President Charles Mitchell '05 said.

The event will be held before the release of the University's new policy for bias-related policy is issued. It was the timing of the event that led to the administration's initial reservations about the discussion.

"We would rather hold the panel before the policy comes out, in hopes of having some influence on it," Mitchell said.

Pollock said neither he nor Oliver will address details of the emerging bias-related policy, but will speak generally about the necessity of a concrete policy.

"A policy draft won't be in circulation as of April 1, and until one is we are not inclined to discuss specifics," Pollock said.

BUCC's event proposal was originally rejected by the administration because of the "unbalanced" nature of the event.

"This event was supposed to be a non-adversarial discussion, for and about Bucknell. We invited off-campus legal experts on free speech and civil rights simply because such persons cannot be found on campus. We invited members of the administration simply because... [They] are the people writing and enforcing Bucknell's policies," Mitchell said.

Mitchell said such internal experts as Oliver, who chaired the task force that drafted a policy on bias-related harassment, are necessary in understanding our current policies.

"No one knows the policies we have and why we have them better than University administration. We do not understand why the people drafting such a policy cannot speak on its behalf," Mitchell said.

Pollock said outside experts are necessary to fully understand policies like the one being discussed at the forum.

"We consult the work of these experts in developing policy, but that's not the same as producing their work," Pollock said.

Chair of the board of trustees Susan Crawford was supportive of the debate.

"I applaud efforts to address and debate issues of free speech in a constructive manner that allows open discourse among the participants."

—Susan Crawford chair of the board of trustees

"I applaud efforts to address and debate issues of free speech in a constructive manner that allows open discourse among the participants," Crawford said.

Mitchell said that the BUCC wants to talk specifically about the University's speech policies.

"We are trying to have a discussion about Bucknell's harassment policies and how they affect free speech, not a debate about such policies in general. We truly believe that this will be an event from which everyone, participants included, can learn," Mitchell said.

BSG President John Siwicki '05 said he supports the event because of its encouragement of free speech dialogue among students, faculty and administrators.

"Based on the panelists scheduled to attend, the forum will provide an informative and thought-provoking perspective on speech and harassment codes, regardless of whether the administration decides to join the panelists," Siwicki said.

Enloe discusses changes in freedom of women in Iraq

By DAVID MERIN
Contributing Writer

Cynthia Enloe told Bucknellians on Tuesday that Americans need to break the silence and ask more questions about the misogynistic behavior in the U.S. armed forces.

"Silence is gendered in so far as it is more feminine, and we need to encourage people to break the silence and speak up about what is really going on," Enloe said.

Enloe, a government professor at Clark University and a well-known feminist and author, spoke in the L.C. Forum and said the alarming number of sexual assaults in the armed forces that has been in the news lately is only the most visible aspect of misogynistic behavior in the military.

Enloe filled the blackboard with many statistics regarding sexual assault about both women in the U.S. military and women in Iraq. She said that because the U.S. military is in charge of rebuilding Iraq, it is helpful to look at the statistics side by side to see how they are inter-related.

Enloe said the women in Iraq had more liberties and a more prominent place in society under Saddam Hussein in the 1980s, before the U.S. military first got involved in Iraq.

"Both the disturbing situation of women in Iraq and women in the military have to do with the gender politics of silence," Enloe said.

Enloe posed many questions that do not yet have answers, and she encouraged those in the audience to contemplate the questions and to try to read between the headlines to try and grasp what is really going on.

CAMPUS COMMUNITY CELEBRATES DIVERSITY

Jacklyn Carr—The Bucknellian

The first Multicultural Explosion was held March 6 in Larison Dining Hall. Eleven groups performed and shared their knowledge and culture. The event was hosted by the National Society of Black Engineers.

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL
Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT
Mondays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia
Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd
Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am
Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd
Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm
Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am
Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am
E-mail nls01@ptd.net for Transportation

News

IN MEMORIAM

Bishop Nicholas C. Dattilo

By KIM DUNLAP
Writer

Bishop Dattilo (right) of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Harrisburg meets with Pope John Paul II. Dattilo passed away March 5 in Camp Hill, Pa.

Dattilo, whose parishes included the University, visited campus last February. He encouraged others to "love life."

church, which is particularly poignant for Bucknell," Hohl said.

Jennifer Malcolm '04 said she could tell Dattilo spoke with compassion.

"I enjoyed his homily at the mass because he really had great things to say. ... It was very inspiring," Malcolm said.

Many agreed that they were warmed by their meeting with Dattilo and that he was a truly likeable individual.

"I had a wonderful feeling of comfort when I was around him. ... It made you feel good just being with him," University President Steffen Rogers said.

"I spoke with him before and after the mass. He was just a very genuine person—so nice, so sweet and definitely very funny too," Malcolm said.

University Catholic Chaplain Martin Morgan said that University students were not the only people affected by the bishop's visit—Dattilo himself enjoyed the trip.

Dattilo supported Bucknell through monetary contributions to CCM from the Harrisburg diocese as well as personal support.

"At times when he wasn't dressed up as a bishop, he was always found wearing his Bucknell T-shirt. ... He loved Bucknell and was really touched by his visit," Moran said.

"He's a huge Bucknell enthusiast. He was very proud of the Catholic program here on campus and of Father Moran and all he has done. He was pleased that students were returning to religious life. He saw Bucknell as a model for how things should be in the future," Rogers said.

The Bishop strongly reinforced CCM at the University. "He was our biggest supporter. ... He was supportive not only personally but also financially and professionally," Rogers said.

"Bishop Dattilo has defended keeping a full-time priest on our campus to serve our students as well as developing inter-religious dialogue and understanding in our area," University Chaplain Ian Oliver said.

Dattilo also made extensive efforts to personally keep in touch with student CCM members at the University.

"He sends all freshman a personal letter welcoming them to the diocese. Many of us didn't know him one on one, but he really reached out," Hohl said.

Dattilo was known for his kind and giving personality and for his dedication to those within the diocese. Dattilo worked to consolidate parishes, relocating priests to the most thickly settled areas to serve more people. He also organized the construction and finance of a new diocesan hall and a new retirement home for priests.

The bishop's motto, emblazoned on his coat of arms, was a Bible passage: "Love life and do good."

"He had an ability to look at the worst of situations and bring some good out of it," said Ronald Lengwin, a close friend of Dattilo's.

"He will be missed," Oliver said.

Dattilo was born in New Castle and received his seminary education in Pennsylvania. After serving as pastor and vicar in several areas, Dattilo was named the Roman Catholic Bishop of the Diocese of Harrisburg by Pope John Paul II in 1989. His funeral was held at the Good Shepherd Church in Camp Hill on March 12. 1,100 people attended.

Duquesne University • Pittsburgh, PA • www.leadership.duq.edu/summer

Summer Sessions

2004

Now's the time to get ahead, catch up, or just take a class for enjoyment — do it for you!

Do More...
DUQUESNE UNIVERSITY
For the Mind, Heart and Spirit

School of Leadership & Professional Advancement

Courses, Workshops, Seminars, Study Abroad
Accelerated Sessions

Seven Different Start Dates, May through July

Register by fax, phone, mail or in person.

Visit www.leadership.duq.edu/summer

Please call 1-800-283-3853 for our complete Summer Information Package.

INVESTING ISN'T ROCKET SCIENCE. WHICH EXPLAINS WHY WE HELP SO MANY ROCKET SCIENTISTS.

Putting a rover on Mars is quite a feat. So is preparing for retirement and your child's tuition while paying today's bills. That's why so many forward thinkers turn to TIAA-CREF for down-to-earth answers. Contact us. After all, when it comes to something as important as your financial future, a little bit of expertise can go a long way.

TIAA-CREF.org or call 800-842-2776

Find out more about TIAA-CREF IRAs
and our other tax-smart financial solutions

Managing money for people with other things to think about.™

RETIREMENT | INSURANCE | MUTUAL FUNDS | COLLEGE SAVINGS | TRUSTS | INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT

You should consider the investment objectives, risks, charges and expenses carefully before investing. Please call 877-518-9161 for a prospectus that contains this and other information. Please read the prospectus carefully before investing. TIAA-CREF Individual & Institutional Services, LLC and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products. Please read the prospectus carefully before investing. © 2004 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund (TIAA-CREF), 730 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10017 C31474

News

Students condemn "Passion of the Christ" at forum held by OCRL

The film "The Passion of the Christ," directed by Mel Gibson, has sparked much debate since its release. The Office of Chaplains and Religious Life sponsored a closed discussion open for all students after viewing the film.

By BRIANNA EVANS
Staff Writer

The Office of Chaplains and Religious Life (OCRL) held a closed discussion of the film "The Passion of the Christ" for all students March 8. The general sentiment expressed by students at the forum was that the film was violent and expressed anti-Semitism.

Mel Gibson's new film has sparked controversy ever since its release a few weeks ago. Much of the controversy surrounding the film, which depicts the last 12 hours of Christ's life leading up to his crucifixion, centers on questions raised about Gibson's interpretation of the Christian gospels.

The film debate throughout the campus has not brought about only negative opinions. Matt Fornataro '05 said he appreciated the cinematography found in the film, but disagreed with Mel Gibson's personal interpretation.

"It was definitely a powerful film because you don't normally see that type of violence. I did enjoy it just as a story, for the movie's sake, even though it was Mel Gibson's version of the story," Matt Fornataro

Students and University religious leaders joined the "Passion" debate in the forum they viewed the film. During the forum, some in the University community agreed with what some film critics have said: the brutality depicted during the beatings of Christ distracted them from Gibson's intended message.

"The Passion of Christ" is so relentlessly focused on the savagery of Jesus' final hours that this film seems to arise less from love than from wrath, and to succeed more in assaulting the spirit than in uplifting it," wrote A.O. Scott, a critic for The New York Times. "Mr. Gibson has constructed an unnerving and painful spectacle that is also, in the end, a depressing one. It is disheartening to see a film made with evident and abundant religious conviction that is at the same time so utterly lacking in grace."

Steve Rhodes of InternetReviews.com wrote that the spirituality of the movie was lost in the gore. "As both a Christian and a reviewer, I was disappointed," Rhodes wrote.

Students were also disappointed. "I think he [Gibson] kind of missed the point. He didn't convey the message that Christ suffered for the sins of the world. He spent most of the time on the brutality of crucifixion and didn't explain why he died. It just showed someone being beat up... and who wants to see that?" Morgan Swegles '07 said.

The violence seems to be the concern many people keep coming back to because, for many, it overshadows the Christ as a profound and loving leader that Gibson may have been trying to portray.

Because the crucifixion was depicted that way, many viewers could not see how they fit into the story because they could not relate to such extreme violence. "I had trouble getting away from what a 'movie' it was. There was so much blood that I got lost in it," University Chaplain Ian Oliver said. "If it makes people understand the brutality, that's a good thing. However, as one student said... 'I got the suffering, but I didn't get the me part.'"

But some have questioned Gibson's decision to create a film from such an important historical story in the first place. "Making a movie out of the Bible just doesn't make sense," Oliver said.

There is fear that Gibson's interpretation may misinform people who have not read the Gospels. "One of the worries I have ethically is what ideas people are getting about the actual story, such as things that were added for Hollywood impact that weren't in the Gospels," Alisha Lang '05 said.

Fujita said Gibson's change of history contributed to her dislike of the film.

"There were superficial things I did not like [such as the manipulation of the role of certain characters.] The Pharisees end up being these strong characters, which they are not at all. Pilate [the Roman Governor] is not as strong, when in reality he was a strong character," Fujita said.

Just like the Gospels, which were written years after Christ died, the film can also only be an interpretation. "Gibson really is demonstrating his belief and he has the right to depict it as he sees it. But once he makes any attempt to depict it as the only way to think about it, he is overstepping his boundaries," Lang said.

Perhaps the controversy is exactly what Gibson intended: to renew discussion about the crucifixion of Christ. "I do appreciate that this film has raised a lot of issues that wouldn't otherwise be talked about. What do we believe about Jewish-Christian relations? The worry is just that this is going to put us right back where we were," Oliver said.

he included many subtle details not included in the Gospels. But some have questioned Gibson's decision to create a film from such

NEWS BRIEFS

By Meghan Ball

Salman Rushdie named Janet Weis Fellow

University President Steffen Rogers announced that the third recipient of the Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters is Salman Rushdie.

Rushdie writes fiction and nonfiction inspired by his personal experience of growing up in Bombay, India. His novel "The Satanic Verses" caused such a commotion among Muslim communities that he had to go into hiding. Rushdie will accept his prize Nov. 16 at the Weis Center for Performing Arts.

Toni Morrison was the first recipient of the award in 2002, followed by John Updike in 2003.

Pelosi indicted in the murder of Bucknell Trustee Ted Ammon

An electrician long suspected of the October 2001 death of multimillionaire New York financier and University trustee Ted Ammon '71 has been indicted in the case and ordered to surrender to prosecutors.

Daniel Pelosi, who married Ammon's widow, was ordered to appear for a Tuesday morning arraignment, CNN.com reported.

Ammon had been on the University's board of trustees since 1992. He gave $15.1 million to the University in 1996, the largest single gift in University history. He created a scholarship fund and issued a challenge to other donors that resulted in $52.4 million in new gifts for endowed scholarships.

National Commission on Terrorist Attacks investigates Bush and Clinton administrations

As the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States continues to investigate, the former counter-terrorism coordinator for the past four administrations has come out against President Bush's actions.

Richard Clark claims in his book that "the invasion of Iraq had 'undermined' the U.S. war on terror," the BBC reported.

Clark has also claimed that the government had been aware of a possible attack using commercial airplanes since 1996, according to the BBC.

The commission is comprised of five Democrats and five Republicans. Since its formation, it has interviewed more than 1,000 people in 10 countries. The people have included CIA Director George Tenet, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and former National Security Advisor Samuel Berger.

While both former President Clinton and former Vice President Gore agreed to meet with the commission, Bush and Vice President Cheney have agreed only to meet with the chair and vice chair of the commission.

Election problems in Taiwan

Taiwan President Chen Shui-bian's re-election has been called into question by the opposition party. Kuomintang claimed that the election was rigged and that a shooting of the president that took place just hours before the election was a staged publicity stunt.

The race was incredibly close, with Shui-bian winning by fewer than 30,000 votes. According to the BBC, the Kuomintang has questioned the 337,000 ballots that were discarded as "spoiled."

This number is a significant jump from the 120,000 to 140,000 ballots discarded in the last two elections. However, the increase might be due to a campaign by civic groups that opposed both parties. They advocated citizens to send in blank ballots in protest.

The Kuomintang has demanded an immediate recount, and while Shui-bian openly announced his support for one, it is questionable as to whether such a recount will take place. Most observers suspect that the president will delay a recount until after the protests subside.

Civil rights activist lectures on the importance of education for minorities

By DREW CALVERT
Writer

Robert Moses, a civil rights activist, told audience members during his lecture on Monday lecture why studying math would help today's minority students flourish in an economy that presently stifles them.

Interweaving autobiography and history, he revealed an America that denied education to blacks and then denied them politics because they were not educated.

Moses traced the legacy of an impoverished, work-constricted education from sharecroppers in Mississippi, to the desperate migration of blacks to Chicago in the 1940s, and to the school systems of today. The only differences in the legacy is the desired educational tool.

"Whereas literacy was the issue that kept sharecroppers from participating in mainstream political and economic life in the early 1960s, Moses argues that students who leave school today without sufficient mathematical and critical thinking skills may also be closed out of many opportunities," Associate Professor of Education Abe Feuerstein said in his introductory remarks.

Moses said that with the shift from industry to information technology, children will be left behind unless they have a quantitative literacy as well as language competency.

"All the children in the country are the country's children," Moses said.

Moses worked in the 1960s with groups such as the Southern Christian Leadership Council and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee to educate blacks and fight for their votes. He is now fighting for the new generation in the same high school classrooms where he teaches math.

"As the right to vote was an opening in the '60s, math is an opening today," Moses said.

Moses, whose talk reflected a long history of the hope and determination of the civil rights movement, is still making an impact. He told his story as having been both a young activist dodging bullets in a 1950 Chevy and a patient school teacher in inner-city Jackson.

"Here is a man who has risked his life for the cause of social justice and continues to push forward by teaching mathematics," Feuerstein said. "He just seemed unstoppable—like an engine for social justice that will not be moved from its tracks."

Moses' major recent development, the Algebra Project, is a national mathematics literacy effort aimed at helping lower income students and students of color, particularly black and Latino students, achieve the skills they need for college preparatory mathematics. Moses brings the civil rights movement into the classrooms because of what he sees as under-served students who are under-prepared in a knowledge-driven economy.

Nate Young '06 said Moses' motivation clearly outlines the need for change.

"I am amazed that he could be so determined as to realize just what is necessary for large-scale change," Young said.

Moses' talk was part of the Brown at 50 series put on by the Education Department. The next speakers will be Susan Eaton and Melba Beals at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the L.C. Forum. Eaton will talk about desegregation in our schools. Beals, one of the first nine black students to enroll in Central High School in Arkansas, will discuss her book "Warriors Don't Cry."

Don't just read the news.

Write
the news.

Contact mkummer@

you are having trouble understanding something your professor is teaching. everyone else in the class seems to get it. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

roll-on courage

Opinions

Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 133, Number 7
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Salemme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editors
Julie Lesko '07
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRoss '05
Chris Stiers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwit '06
Keeley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Julianne Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Debeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Advisor
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board. If an advisor, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Student opinions ignored by administration

The condescending attitude that the administration continues to have toward the student body was reflected in a letter sent home to parents by Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70, which accused The Bucknellian of trivializing drinking on campus. This is the most recent example of a continuing sentiment that the administration has with regard to the voices of the students.

The edition of The Bucknellian that featured the story on the emergency alcohol policy and the open forum held after the policy's implementation was awarded second place under the best-innovation category by the Associated Collegiate Press at its annual conference in Las Vegas (see page A1). Surely such a prestigious organization would not award a second-place prize to a newspaper that trivialized an important issue such as drinking. It is unfortunate that the administration could not recognize this.

Pollock's letter indicates a larger problem that The Bucknellian has stressed for years: students are not adequately represented in University policymaking issues.

The consistent problem of a lack of communication between students and administrators is something that must and can be remedied with respect for student opinion by the administration and an effort by the students to have their voices heard.

The administration says it makes decisions in the best interest of the students. But when students are continually ignored, the logical conclusion is that the administration looks out for the best interests of the University's reputation and persona instead.

For example, determining the next University president is a decision vital to students' lives, yet former Bucknell Student Government President Katy Timer '04 was the only student representative on the presidential selection committee. If the administration was to choose one student to represent student views, one another will not prove effective in attaining the ultimate goal, which is representation in policy decisions. Students must take advantage of every opportunity presented by the administration to participate; otherwise, students will not be taken seriously, and the administration will never ask their opinion.

When students rally together to pursue what they want, action is taken in favor of the students. The emergency alcohol policy was supposed to be heard. The students must then actively pursue these opportunities.

Proper, fair policymaking at this University is possible, but a dual effort must be made in order to accomplish desired results. The Bucknellian encourages future University President Brian Mitchell to embrace students' viewpoints and make this vital communication between the administration and students possible.

last for the entirety of the spring semester. However, more than 1,000 students attended the open forum regarding the policy to protest it, and within a month and a half a new alcohol policy and points system was implemented.

Both students and the administration are taking small steps to improve their strained relationship. The administration's decision to participate in the free speech forum co-sponsored by various University groups (see page A4) should be applauded as one of the first steps to a better understanding between the two.

As it is a

Christophe Richard—The Bucknellian

role of the administration to welcome student views, the administration must make the first step to grant students opportunities to be heard.

The students must then actively pursue these opportunities.

Proper, fair policymaking at this University is possible, but a dual effort must be made in order to accomplish desired results. The Bucknellian encourages future University President Brian Mitchell to embrace students' viewpoints and make this vital communication between the administration and students possible.

When students rally together to pursue what they want, action is taken in favor of the students. The emergency alcohol policy was supposed to

U.S. needs to start a 'war on apathy'

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

Today at the University, in Lewisburg, in the United States and around the world there are literally thousands of issues of varying importance that need attention and resolution.

The war in Iraq, Supreme Court decisions regarding affirmative action, capital punishment and abortion, rising cost of higher education, poverty, drug abuse, health care—the list goes on and on.

Yet at a time when there are this many issues which often provoke anger, concern or interest, the University student community and the American populace in general seem to be at its most apathetic—a situation that negatively affects how issues are dealt with.

Apathy could be the worst terrorist that is attacking the United States today. In the year 2000, the United States had one of the closest presidential elections in recent memory, yet only half of eligible voters turned out to the polls.

Citizens of the United States have an opportunity that not every person in world gets—freedom of speech and the right to vote. Not everyone is taking advantage of this opportunity. Even at this University, such national issues as the war in Iraq receive little student attention compared to the relatively small issue of what the punishment was for being caught with hard liquor.

Every looking at the number of writers that put pen to paper for the Opinions section of The Bucknellian shows the limited number of people engaged enough to form quasi-coherent opinions.

In the 1960s, students were a driving force behind the civil rights movement, anti-war movement and the women's rights movement. Today, despite equally important problems facing our generation, students' great movement is over alcohol violations?

Apathy, while potentially the most dangerous adversary the United States faces, can be beaten. Right here, right now, I am declaring a War on Apathy. The war will be long and difficult, but it can be won with the one weapon that apathy runs from—information.

Fortunately for the War on Apathy, there are countless mediums and outlets by which the citizens of the United States can arm themselves.

When Thomas Jefferson described the "ideal citizen" to participate in democracy, one of his most important characteristics was that the citizens be educated on the issues. Simply spending a 30 minutes a day reading a variety of mainstream and alternative news sources in print, on the Internet and even the sensationalized medium of television will create another soldier ready to be mobilized against all the wrongs that he will inevitably find in the workings of the world as he informs himself.

Creating a more engaged population will not solve the all the ills of the University, the United States or the world, but what it will do is create more energized public discourse, hold politicians accountable by a collective awareness of what they are doing and make people more aware of why decisions are being made, even if they don't agree with them.

Join the War on Apathy by reading, listening or watching today. And remember, it is not what you think that is important—it is just that you are thinking.

Adam Kronfeld '02

Letter to the editor

Claim of alcohol policy discrimination refuted

To the Editor:

I take issue with Aaron Hanlon's March 5 Opinions article ("New alcohol policy discriminates against women"). Hanlon asserts that basing punishment on blood alcohol content is discriminatory toward women because women absorb more alcohol per volume into their bloodstream than do men.

Says Hanlon, a woman and a man with equal body masses, who both drink the same volume of alcohol, will be punished differently for the same offense, inasmuch as the woman will absorb more of the alcohol and have a higher BAC.

The apparent intent behind the alcohol policy is to deter students from drinking to the point when they cause harm to themselves or others. With this objective in mind, BAC is a perfect scale for testing impairment and administering punishment.

All else being equal, a man with a .24 BAC will suffer roughly the same loss of motor skills, impaired judgment and deleterious health effects as a woman with a .24 BAC. Both will be equal dangers to themselves and others, so punishing them equally is perfectly rational.

The alternative, as Hanlon seems to imply, is to punish according to the underlying offense—the actual amount of alcohol imbibed. This approach would mean that all else being equal, a woman drinking five beers would be punished the same as a man drinking five beers, with no regard for the effects of drinking.

A man with no impairment in motor skills or judgment could be punished the same as a woman intoxicated to the point of unconsciousness. Is this policy anything less than irrational and unintelligible?

The BAC measurement has been adopted by all 50 states as a standardized scale for prosecuting alcohol-related crimes. Does Hanlon argue that these laws are discriminatory?

Does Hanlon think this policy discriminates against ethnic groups that have, on average, less body mass than other ethnic groups? Does he believe it discriminates against a 155-pound man because he has less body mass than a 200-pound man and will therefore have a higher BAC upon drinking the same amount of alcohol? I certainly hope he does not, but these arguments seem to be extensions of his logic.

Do not misunderstand the intent of this letter; I offer neither support for nor criticism of Bucknell's alcohol policy. The propriety of the policy is debatable, but such debate should not be littered with ludicrous arguments and frivolous, misbegotten charges of discrimination.

Sincerely,

Adam Kronfeld '02

WRITE A LETTER TO THE EDITOR 'AND HAVE YOUR VOICE HEARD'

E-MAIL BUCKNELLIAN@

Cable not all it's cracked up to be

By MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

Other kids talked about the fantastical Disney Channel, MTV and Nickelodeon. I talked about "Jeopardy," "The Price is Right" and "Wheel of Fortune." They knew about new music and "toons while my family played Guess What Color Vanna White's Dress is Tonight.

After the game show ended and prime-time TV started up, our television shut off. The games continued in our house, though, with rousing matches of cutthroat Yahtzee and Scrabble. After we all went broke during Monopoly, my mom would read books aloud to us—books such as "Oliver Twist" and "Charlotte's Web."

Other kids pitied me, and I often pitied myself. They were just starting to watch Nick at Nite by the time I had already been in bed for 30 minutes.

Every summer my brother and I were sent to our grandparents' house for two weeks—sort of a cheap summer camp alternative. Those two weeks were better than Christmas. Grandma had cable and fed us Lucky Charms. We did not have to go to bed until after 2 a.m. We were giddy with delight and only promising us shopping sprees could wrench our little eyes away from the wonders of cable. Then we had to go home to the five channels the antenna occasionally picked up for the other 50 weeks of the year.

We were convinced we were being cheated out of a normal childhood—as if being home-schooled did not make us weird enough, we did not have cable either.

Other kids came home after school to watch "Doug." I stayed at home for school and got to watch the old "POW" and "BANG" Batman (if I hadn't already used up the five TV Tickets my mom cut out of construction paper and gave to us each week).

The reality that I hated as a child I can now appreciate. Looking back, I remember hours spent laughing with my family instead of laughing over long-forgotten Comedy Central shows.

I learned to love to read instead of learning the lyrics to MC Hammer songs. I know how to fill my time when "there's nothing on TV."

I came to these realizations only after my parents told me they had just ordered digital cable for our house. At first I was livid—I had begged them, pleaded with them, was willing to offer limbs in exchange for cable—and now that I was no longer home to enjoy it, they had ordered it out of spite.

Of course they did not do it out of spite. Actually, the antenna finally broke (all those prayers I prayed were answered a few years too late.) And upon reflection I can see how lucky I was to be surrounded by family instead of television. My parents did me a favor by denying me the "basic necessity" of cable TV.

Now, when the University has deemed it the right time to add cable to the mix of our lives, I confidently decline the "opportunity." I want to read more, call my family, chill with friends. In the end, these are the things I will regret not doing enough. Sure, I will catch at least a few glimpses of cable over my last months at the University. But I have the feeling I will revert to my old game show habits, and I can never watch "Wheel of Fortune" without guessing the color of Vanna White's dress.

Christophe Richard—The Bucknellian

I know how to fill my time when "there's nothing on TV."

Worker sickness is a symptom of misguided foreign policy

By JAKE PALLEY
Staff Writer

It bothered me. Last year when I attended the University of Salamanca, I knew I was attending the same school Hernán Cortés attended 500 years ago. The University of Salamanca was partly built on the wealth stolen from the Aztec empire, and I knew that the Aztec empire was subsidized by the blood, sweat and tears of an enslaved people. Spain was the new empire, and its fabulous wealth came at the exploitation of the New World. Little has changed.

Just last week, when I was in Nicaragua with the Bucknell Brigade, I saw history repeat itself. We met banana workers from the northern province of Chinandega. During the 1970s and '80s, they worked in the banana plantations of Dole, Chiquita and other transnational plantations. They worked hand-in-hand with mechanized agriculture, picking bananas while machines applied DBCP, a pesticide so toxic it is banned from use in the United States.

Of course, the manufacture, exportation and subsequent application of such a toxic chemical is perfectly legal, and that is exactly what happens: American transnational companies knowingly export known carcinogenic pesticides abroad just so we can import the perfect banana at a cheap price and quick profit, and this practice still continues.

The injustice of the situation could not be more pronounced. For decades, these banana workers have complained of rashes and skin lesions. Patches of skin and hair have lost pigmentation. Bones have been decalcified. Miscarriages are common. Confirmed cancer cases number in the hundreds, but a true count would total into the thousands. Thousands of males are sterile. Hundreds, if not thousands, of Nicaraguans have died. And when I asked a worker if he had ever been given some kind of suit to protect himself from the pesticides, he told me absolutely not.

Then they told us their stories. A steady progression of workers told us about their lives and compressed them down into just a few sentences. They told us their name and showed us their wounds. As the wives started to break down into tears, one man said, "We are rotting from the inside out. We have nothing left to hope for but death."

To see lives, human lives, literally wasting away is one of today's greatest injustices. It is inhumane. It is insidious. It is unconscionable. And it is happening every single day, in every corner on this planet.

But that is what today's global capitalism has reduced humanity to—a pool of exploitable, cheap labor without regard for human life. How is it that DBCP is too toxic for Americans, but perfectly acceptable pesticide for Nicaraguans?

Perhaps the most repulsive aspect of this whole situation is that the use of carcinogenic pesticides in third-world countries is perfectly legal and meant for the sole purpose of making a quick buck and easy profit. This is a case of income class discrimination, of the haves versus the have-nots.

And to me, this symbolizes the next great holocaust—a systematic, legally justified extermination of the economically inferior.

For decades, these banana workers have complained of rashes and skin lesions. Patches of skin and hair have lost pigmentation. Bones have been decalcified. Miscarriages are common. Confirmed cancer cases number in the hundreds, but a true count would total into the thousands. Thousands of males are sterile. Hundreds, if not thousands, of Nicaraguans have died. And when I asked a worker if he had ever been given some kind of suit to protect himself from the pesticides, he told me absolutely not.

Then they told us their stories. A steady progression of workers told us about their lives and compressed them down into just a few sentences. They told us their name and showed us their wounds. As the wives started to break down into tears, one man said, "We are rotting from the inside out. We have nothing left to hope for but death."

To see lives, human lives, literally wasting away is one of today's greatest injustices. It is inhumane. It is insidious. It is unconscionable. And it is happening every single day, in every corner on this planet.

But that is what today's global capitalism has reduced humanity to—a pool of exploitable, cheap labor without regard for human life. How is it that DBCP is too toxic for Americans, but perfectly acceptable pesticide for Nicaraguans?

Recreational drugs should be legal

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

According to the Drug Enforcement Agency Web site, the illegal drug market in the United States is one of the most profitable in the world. On the surface, this is a disturbing statement, implying that our country is brimming with criminals trafficking drugs across our borders and to a playground near you.

I can see the mental images forming already: pushers on the street corners, blacked-out rave-goers, powder on the dormitory furniture. Sounds like trouble.

It is possible, however, that drug legalization could make one of the world's oldest and most honest businesses safer and more profitable.

A closer look at the DEA's statement is encouraging; did it say profitable? The U.S. government has been trying to suppress drug trafficking and abuse since long before most of us were born, yet the demand for illegal drugs has remained relatively high. Prisons are packed with drug crime offenders who drain money from federal and state budgets, yet more and more new dealers are turning up.

Face the facts: America loves its drugs. And while America is loving its drugs, people are making unbelievable amounts of money selling them. The drug business is as remunerative as it is dangerous, in spite of its illegality.

Because many drugs are illegal, drug trafficking and selling take place outside of the watchful eye of governments and legitimate oversight groups. The result is a relatively lawless, barbaric system in which violence and deceit are often used to get ahead in the market.

When selling drugs is already illegal, there is far less incentive for those involved to abide by other laws. This is common sense. The drug business runs on turf wars in the streets in the absence of a legitimate establishment that has the power to dictate and enforce laws within the business. The government's attempts to terminate the business only marginalize it and push it further from the realm of safe, legitimate business.

Were drugs legalized, the drug business would be able to continue to make profits in an honest business (providing products for people who clearly want them). In addition to this, it would have the opportunity to establish a self-regulating organization (perhaps a mixed committee of DEA officials and important players in various drug businesses) to civilize and legitimate the business of selling drugs.

It is probably safer to smoke marijuana than to go bungee jumping, yet the latter is perfectly legal.

Though the stock market is admittedly plagued with a multitude of ethical problems, its self-regulating organizations have arguably allowed it to be extremely successful over the years in spite of such setbacks. The drug market could theoretically be regulated by a similar type of governing body—one that has the legitimacy and knowledge of business insiders and the accountability of outside watchdogs.

While this likely seems shocking at first, consider how many drugs are already legal, along with their health risks: alcohol, tobacco, over-the-counter pain killers, Robitussin, etc. These are all seen as roughly harmless substances, yet anyone could "misuse" them while seeking a high. Even overdoses of water can cause severe health problems, and even death.

By protecting society from such stigmatized illegal substances as marijuana, cocaine, mescaline, etc., we are only facilitating more violence and drug-related crime in addition to merely sales and distribution.

Although drugs, particularly those that are currently illegal, can be extremely dangerous, we allow people to do all sorts of dangerous things in our society. For example, it is probably safer to smoke marijuana than to go bungee jumping, yet the latter is perfectly legal. If adults (over the age of 21, as it is for alcohol consumption) wish to partake in drugs, we ought to let them do so. It is not only economically prudent; it is a freedom that we all should have.

Face the facts: America loves its drugs. And while America is loving its drugs, people are making unbelievable amounts of money selling them. The drug business is as remunerative as it is dangerous, in spite of its illegality.

FEATURES

Take a tasty sip of culture and wine

Central Pa. offers five wineries within an hour of the University on the Susquehanna Heartland Wine Trail

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Sample the fruits of Central Pa. with a tour of the Susquehanna Heartland Wine Trail. The wine trail consists of five wineries in the valley, each offering its own samples of scenery and wine for those of age.

Brookmere Winery
The tour begins in the Kishacoquillas Valley, near Belleville. The Brookmere Winery specializes in a sweet wine, Tears of the Goose, is labeled as "our answer to white Zin" on the website. It was created to "complement roasted goose, which is a Mifflin County tradition on St. Michael's Day or 'Goose Day.'"

Frog Hollow, another Brookmere Farm best seller, is advertised as "a blend of foxy, flavorful Labrusca and French hybrid grapes to create the bluish wine symbolic of Brookmere Farm."

The winery is open year round and makes and sells its products on site. "We pick in the summer and bottle in the off-season," employee Rebecca Wallman said. "We sell from here and a few area restaurants."

Brookmere's wines can also be sampled at the Selingsgrove Brewery, located on Route 15 in Selingsgrove. Expect a long but scenic ride to the winery, which is about an hour southwest of the University. The region is also home to a large Amish community, and buggies are a more-than-frequent sight en route. For more information, visit its Web site at www.brookmerewine.com.

Shade Mountain Winery
The Shade Mountain Vineyards and Winery is closer to campus than the other wineries featured on the trail. It is only 20 minutes away and can be reached by driving down Route 45 into Mifflinburg and then left on Route 104 toward Middleburg. "It's not that far of a drive and it's kind of fun to go to some different things, just to change the scene," said Bill Zimmerman '03, son of owners Carolyn and Karl Zimmerman.

This local vineyard grew during the last 15 years from more general farming to its current enterprise. "It sort of started as a hobby for my husband," Carolyn Zimmerman said. "He was a more traditional farmer and started looking for different things to try ... it was an evolution."

Brookmere Winery (above) specializes in sweet wine like Tears of the Goose and Frog Hollow, the latter of which the Web site claims to be one of the most requested wines in Pennsylvania.

Shade Mountain Winery now distributes its wines to several local venues, including the Town Tavern in Lewisburg, the Inn at New Berlin and the Selingsgrove Brewery. Several of these wines have won awards at local competitions—the Proprietors Red Wine won the gold medal for best hybrid at the 2004 Pennsylvania Farm Show.

The selection is broad and all the grapes are grown on site, also adding to the appeal. "We have 25 different varieties of grapes," Carolyn Zimmerman said.

"It's a good choice and everybody should find something they like." For more information, visit Shade Mountain's Web site at www.shademountainwinery.com.

Hunters Valley Winery
Liverpool, approximately an hour south on Route 15, is home to Hunters Valley Winery, the next stop on the trail. The winery business runs in the family.

"My background is Croatian," said owner Bill Kvaternik, "and one of my relatives still owns a vineyard in Slovenia ... I'm in it for the growing ... I planted the vineyard, then started selling grapes, and then eventually decided to open it up as a winery."

Like the other wineries on the trail, Hunters Valley aims to please, whatever your wine preference may be. "Like most wineries, we try to offer a wide range to accommodate people of different tastes," Kvaternik said.

Its specialty is its award-winning Niagara, Riesling and Chardonnay wines. These can be sampled and purchased at the winery, or at seasonal tastings offered on the Millersburg Ferry Boat across Route 15 on the Susquehanna River.

Although it is a bit of a drive, the experience is worth it. "It is a great thing to do, tasting the wines and seeing the countryside," Kvaternik said.

More information can be found at www.huntersvalleywines.com.

Benigna's Creek
Sweet wines and fruit wines are the wines of choice at Benigna's Creek Vineyard Winery in the Mahantango Valley. The up-and-coming winery has won awards for its Strawberry wine and Patriot Red Grape wine at the Pennsylvania Commercial Wine Competition. The family-run business grows its own grapes on site and is expanding its business to new locations.

"Our families have always been here," said Nancy Masser, mother of vineyard owners Rick and Mike Masser. "It's all our relatives and friends that are helping."

Part of this expansion is a newly opened shop at 214 Market St. in Lewisburg. The store is family-run and open Thursday through Saturday. Its wines can also be found for purchase at the Hometown Farmer's Market and the Schuylkill and Lyncoming Malls. Despite these different branches, the winery is relatively new.

"My two sons started it," Masser said. "We were in the farming business and had hogs, but couldn't make the money there anymore, so we decided to try something new."

Benigna's name and location bear a rich past. The winery's name is not a family one, but comes from the earliest name of Mahantango Creek, which runs behind the vineyard. The original Benigna's Creek took its identity from a regional pioneer's daughter, who later went on to found the first all-girl's school in the United States. The winery is located on the Masser family's original farmlands and overlooks the Mahantango Ridge and this creek.

"It's a beautiful view and just the right place for growing grapes," Masser said.

The winery welcomes visitors for samples or picnics at its location, 45 minutes from the University, near Klingersstown. For more information, view its Web site at www.bcwine.com.

Mount Nittany Winery
Located just a step away from State College, it is no surprise that Mount Nittany Vineyard and Winery does well in the fall season.

"Our best-selling wine is Tailgate Red, which is popular in the fall, but all year as well," said owner and former Penn State faculty member Joe Carroll. "Our next best-selling is Nittany Mountain White, a blue bottle with white label—Penn State blue and white."

Its products may be the most widespread of all the wineries on the trail, as it is part of the Pennsylvania state-store system.

"Eight wines are available to any store in the commonwealth that wants to order them," Carroll said. "We also have two extensions of premises—one we share with two other wineries at Old Cloverleaf Village. The other is in Boalsburg at the Country Sampler specialty store."

Mount Nittany wines can also be sampled on the premises and in multiple area restaurants. Like many other wineries on the trail, Mount Nittany features award-winning wines. The Chardonnay and Chambourcin both won silver at the 2004 Pennsylvania Farm Show.

These and the 20 other wines available at the winery can be sampled at its vineyard, about an hour down Route 45 toward State College. "They offer many unique fine tasting wines," Lauren Scott '04 said. "Two of my favorites were Montmorency Cherry and the Spiced Wine."

Carroll said a day on the wine trail is worth the drive toward State College.

"We have a very nice location looking out over the valley with a pond in the back," he said. "It's a nice place to have a picnic, and we treat people well ... most people that visit us and other wineries enjoy their time there."

More information can be found at www.mtnittanywinery.com.

Before you embark on your exploration of the Susquehanna heartland, plan well. The wineries are widely dispersed, so selecting a strategy may help—stock up on gas money, and then pick and choose wineries to visit, dedicate a whole day to the tour, or spread your visits over several weekends.

All of the wineries offer picturesque picnic locations and encourage visits from out-of-state guests who wish to make a meal part of their visit. With the combination of sweet spring weather and the harvest of the Pennsylvania heartland, the Susquehanna Wine Trail is an experience worth uncorking.

Good Wil's for a good meal

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Sunday mornings are a wonderful time. Waking up late without the obnoxious blare of an alarm, we have until the blissful hour of 2 p.m. to wander into the cafeteria and grab brunch.

But what if, despite the delicious variety of both breakfast and lunch foods available on campus, you long for just a little bit more on one particular Sunday? There is a place where more is possible. Just over the Rt. 45 bridge you will find Good Wil's—a quaint, tiny restaurant that can meet your breakfast desires.

Decorated as any true Central Pa. diner should be, Good Wil's is essentially a one-room, wood-paneled restaurant with tables stuffed neatly into every square inch. Every seat on the floor, in addition to those available at the counter, is always filled by customers as varied as those from the typical post-church diner crowd to the steadily increasing number of college students who have discovered the food.

My first adventure to Good Wil's was around the time of Valentine's Day. In accordance with this token Hallmark holiday, the staff had hung festive décor from the high ceilings and garland along the walls. As we glanced at the menu, eyeing up the winter weekend specials, my friends and I were completely immersed in the Good Wil's experience.

Those in my party decided to be traditionalists and order breakfast. I started with a delicious stack of three pancakes. Flavor and consistency were more than perfect; however, I did have one small issue with the presentation: In lieu of a full-sized syrup bottle were three small, individually pack-

Located a short drive down Route 45, Good Wil's offers a variety of breakfast and lunch entrees at a reasonable price. Though it usually takes students a while to discover the restaurant, many make it a regular weekend trip once they experience the restaurant.

Stillerman '99 finds a GEM with the CDC

By LAUREN DAVIS
Contributing Writer

Many University students dream of graduating and moving to New York City and living the single, twenty-something life, as romanticized by such shows as "Friends" and "Sex and the City." Megan Stillerman '99 lives that dream. She resides and works in New York City and is an account manager for the GEM Group, a large marketing agency whose specialties include entertainment marketing.

Although Stillerman was an international relations and Spanish double major, she entered the advertising industry right after college. This industry appealed to her because there was a lot of mobility and there were many people her age within the company.

Stillerman first accepted a job at the Fox Family Channel, with the help of the Career Development Center.

"I used the Bucknell Alumni Network but actually got very lucky finding my first job. The woman interviewing me had a brother at Bucknell," Stillerman said.

Stillerman spends her days writing proposals and meeting with clients to discuss their brands' futures. Stillerman said her current social life is very different from her life at the University.

"My life and interests have changed over the last couple of years and my social life has followed suit," Stillerman said. "I've been able to add new experiences each year that I've been out of school."

Stillerman said students should not think they need to have their entire life planned after college or to set career and life goals around a predetermined age.

"You follow a path as long as it challenges and satisfies you, and everyone's path and the time it takes them to land where they need or want to be is different," Stillerman said.

Students should also not let friends and family members influence their decisions, according to Stillerman.

"Instead of focusing on where other people are in their lives, focus on what is right for you and you'll come to your own milestones and decisions at your own time," Stillerman said.

While the end of college may be a sad time, Stillerman said students have much to look forward to as they transition into the "real world."

"The first five years or so after you graduate are a time of tremendous change. You develop your own interests and your own life apart from classes, cliques and life on a small campus. It's such an exciting time—there's so much to see and do and be," Stillerman said.

Another romantic edition brought to you by ...

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,
My boyfriend and I have been together for about two years. We get along relatively well, for the most part. However, every once in a while we have a really awful and explosive argument. Do you have any tips on how we can avoid these?

Dear 'J'
In Ms. O's opinion, it does not sound like you have too much to be worried about in this situation. Arguments are an extremely normal part of every relationship. As long as they are not violent or abusive, I would say that there is no need for you to try to completely eliminate them from your relationship.

In fact, I think disagreements between a couple help keep the relationship functional and healthy. A fight once in a while clears the air and keeps things from becoming boring between two people.

You should be happy that you and your boyfriend have such an open and caring relationship in which you both feel that you can express your different opinions on occasion and yet still be happy together.

In the meantime, I can give you some tips to try to make your arguments less "explosive" when you do have them. Here are a couple of pointers to keep in mind the next time you guys have an argument.

If you feel a fight brewing, take a step back. If necessary, take a break and do something apart from each other. This will help you both calm down and sort out your thoughts. When you feel more calm and collected, sit down and discuss the problem.

Try not to lose your tempers. Before your disagreement turns into an all-out battle of wills, try to take a few deep breaths and keep calm. You both will be more focused if you do not lose your tempers.

Do not bring up things unrelated to the subject you are arguing about. Focus on the real issue of the argument. It will keep your argument shorter if you do not bring up unrelated issues, which will only anger the other person more. (This is not the time to mention that you hate it when he bites his nails or leaves cookie crumbs on your bed.)

Keep your voices down. Yelling at him will not make your point more clear—it will only put him on the defensive. The next time the two of you are having a disagreement, try to keep your voice at its normal conversation sound level. You will be more willing to listen to his point of view when he is calmly discussing it with, and not screaming at, you.

No name calling! As tempting as it may be to call each other four-letter words and other lovely expletives, do yourselves a favor and leave them out. They will only make matters worse and give you more to be angry about.

If you make a conscious effort to follow these tips, I guarantee that your next fight will be much less brutal. Good luck to you both!

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell:
What is the worst kissing faux pas you can think of?

Have more fun than you should be allowed to have.

Write for Feats.

Contact amaliken@bucknell.edu

Seniors: It's time to CELEBRATE and share fond FAREWELLS....
Make it MEMORABLE!

From pig roasts to an elegant cold buffet, we offer menu ideas to create your perfectly prepared celebration. We also offer a variety of favorite entrees, hors d'oeuvres & party platters to go.

If you're looking for a place to have your party or special dinner, our Brynwood Room accommodates up to 125 guests and Rusty's South Room is available for dining affairs up to 30 guests.

PLAN NOW!! BRYNWOOD catering

For more information or reservations call us at:
Brynwood Catering: 570/524-2121 x1

Bull Run Inn
Celebrates
Seniors Night
Thurs., April 1
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.
All 21 and over are welcome!

DJ & Dancing
Food & Beverage Features

Check it out at: www.bullruninn.com

Cinema Center
Sellinggrove - Susquehanna Valley Mall -
374-2048

Play Dates: March 1-7, 2004
Slushy and Hutch (PG-13)	Secret Window (PG-13)
7:00, 9:30	7:15, 9:35
Agent Cody 2 (PG-13)	Dawn of the Dead (R)
6:20, 8:40	7:15, 9:35
Hidalgo (PG-13)	Talking Heads Select MPA
6:10, 9:00	7:20, 9:30
Passion of the Christ (R)	Eternal Sunshine (NR)
8:00	6:40, 9:10
Against the Ropes (PG-13)	Eurotrip (R)
9:30	7:20, 9:25
50 First Dates (PG-13)	Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen (PG)
6:40, 9:20	6:15, 8:20

Located only 15 Minutes from Campus
Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

RENTALS
for
BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE JUNE 1, 2004

Large 2 BR APTS AT:
237 3rd & St. George
40 Brown St.

SOME APTS. AVAILABLE FOR IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY

Remodeled, clean, excellent condition, excellent location

RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO CAMPUS!
(570) 966-1488

FEATURES

VEGAS under 21

BY ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

As part of the privilege of being on the editorial staff of this paper—my and your favorite University publication—I recently made a trip to lovely Las Vegas. Home of more faux Elvisses than should be allowed by law, what has been dubbed "Sin City" by many actually proved to be relatively sin-free.

While many naïve types think this town can offer a good time only to those of legal gambling night sky, a glowing mirage will grow before your eyes, twinkling in the distance. The lights of Las Vegas, a city oasis in the desert, are nearly blinding from 5,000 feet in the air. Landing among them, it is almost as if you have been dropped on another planet made solely of neon lights.

With the three-hour time difference from Lewisburg, we landed at 9 p.m. Vegas time, or midnight in Pennsylvania. Obviously, the late hour did not dampen our spirits or desire to explore the town. The crowds on the streets never cease, and after unloading at the Stardust, home of the timeless lounge singer Wayne Newton and his self-titled theater, we started our walking tour.

It was then that we discovered the best thing Las Vegas has to offer its patrons: food. Lots and lots of food, available at all hours of the night and day. Our first sampling was of the late-night $3.99 breakfasts at the Barbary Coast Hotel and Casino. My companions and I agreed that nothing is better than breakfast, especially when it is late at night and deliciously inexpensive. I would be lying if I said we did not go back there more than a few times.

Though we did much more eating while in Vegas, it was certainly not the most exciting of our adventures. As it is obligatory of all visitors, we toured the more exotic and elaborate hotels. The Bellagio and its famous fountains, New York-New York with its outdoor roller coaster, and the Venetian sporting its second-story indoor gondola ride were among the many that presented hours of eye candy and photo ops. With cameras in hand, we wandered through, snapping shots of the glorious decorations and elaborate attractions.

Whether you were in a casino or simply wandering around the indoor shops, you never knew what time it was. There were no clocks on the walls, and the shopping malls provided a very real illusion of being outside on a sunny afternoon. Those entrepreneurs knew what they were doing when they planned the buildings, keeping shoppers and gamblers locked in a mystical world of perpetual daylight.

The outdoor-esque shopping malls provided miles of opportunity to spend money, another option readily available to younger visitors. However, the price tags attached to most items was somewhere in the stratosphere, so we primarily stuck with window shopping. There was bling-bling and ice around every corner, adding to the rich fantasy life of Vegas.

Though we ate a substantial amount, all pounds gained were lost due to the excessive mileage of the shoe leather express. Between munching and taking pictures, our time in Vegas passed rather quickly.

There were some in town, however, who took time out of their Sunday afternoon for a special treat: Nascar was in town that weekend, which could have been another exciting option for the young 'uns had we been leaving a day later. Last I heard, Nascar lovingly welcomes spectators of all ages and hairstyles.

It was then that we discovered the best thing Las Vegas has to offer its patrons: food. Lots and lots of food, available at all hours of the night and day.

I hope it does not seem like all we did in Vegas was wander around and squander precious hours that could be spent learning. Just take a look on A1 of this issue to see what we were up to. But I simply wanted to disprove the myth that underage patrons would find themselves without a thing to do. This is certainly not the case, as was evident by the fabulous time had by all members of our party, regardless of their age. Vegas is a rocking good time for everyone—it is as simple as that.

Photos courtesy of Ashley Maliken and Tyler Kidder

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

March 26, 2004

inside
Volume 133, Number 7
Read about the many options for fun and entertainment in Vegas for those under the age of 21.
See page A12

NO-NO? NO... BUT, OH, SO CLOSE

Matt Daley '04 eliminated the first 26 Dartmouth batters he faced in the last of the Bison's seven spring-break games in Bradenton, Fla., but a double from the 27th man thwarted his bid to join the short list of Bucknell pitchers who have tossed a no-hitter. Daley still made the record books with what ended up as a one-hit, nine-inning complete-game shutout, while a 20-hit, 16-run show from the Bison hitters provided more than enough offense in the contest. The team produced plenty of headline fodder over the course of its seven-game trip, including the milestone 400th win of Head Coach Gene Depew's career on March 17.

For more baseball, see right and page B2

Bison go 5-2 in Fla.; offense keeps rolling

BY CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell baseball team is poised to launch its bid for a second consecutive Patriot League title after wrapping up a seven-game spring training session in Bradenton, Fla. over break. During the trip the Bison went 5-2 and outscored their opponents 50-16.

The last several games have provided plenty of notable achievements for the squad, including the 400th win for Head Coach Gene Depew, a Patriot League Player of the Week honor for Kyle Walter '06, and a near-no-hitter for ace Matt Daley '04, whose performances over break earned him pitcher of the week awards from both the league and the National Collegiate Baseball Writer's Association.

The spring training trip provided an excellent opportunity for the Bison to escape the unpleasant weather and tune up for the ensuing league games.

"Our Bradenton trip was a good one for us," Depew said. "We made some progress as a team and many individual players made some good strides."

The trip revealed promise in several aspects of the team's play.

"I was impressed with the way our team played this week," Brian Hirschberg '04 said. "Our pitching was very strong and we are starting to get timely hitting."

Although our defense needs some work before Patriot's begin, I think this week helped each of us with our confidence in the field.

The Bison opened up their seven-game set of Florida competitions on March 14 with a 6-1 win over Columbia.

The victory included a 15-hit effort from the offense, while Kevin Miller '04 turned in a six-inning, three-hit performance on the mound to record his first win of the season.

"As he did all of last season, Kevin came out in game one and set the tone for 400

The Bison celebrated Head Coach Gene Depew's 400th career win on March 17.
For more, see box on page B2.

See BASES, page B2

Herbin '05 wins Georgetown Invite

BY JOSH HERWITT
Sports Editor

After problems with plane flights canceled a trip to the St. Croix Collegiate Invitational in the Virgin Islands, the Bucknell women's golf team opened spring play with a sixth-place finish in the Georgetown Invitational at Reston (Va.) National Country Club last weekend. Overcoming rather cold and windy conditions, the Bison shot a 333-338-671 in the 14-team field.

Continuing to shatter school records, Bucknell's Celine Herbin '05 won the event with a 76-73. Herbin, an exchange student from Foncuverte, France, tied her own 18-hole school record with a final-round 73 and broke the 36-hole Bucknell record with a 149 composite.

"Celine has the total package," Head Coach Kevin Jamieson said. "She is a foreign-trained player and maybe came into our program a little bit better equipped to play tournament golf. She hits the ball a mile and can move the ball in any direction."

In October, Herbin also shot a 73 in the first round of the Yale Invitational, one of the most difficult golf courses in all of New England.

"She proved that she could play when she went out and shot 73 at Yale with no practice round on one of the harder golf courses in New England. If she's playing well,

See GOLF, page B5

Men's lacrosse motors over Holy Cross

Christensen scores six goals in Bison's 18-5 shellacking of Crusaders

BY BETSY HARNER
Contributing Writer

After a three-game losing streak, the Bison were victorious with a 18-5 Patriot League win over Holy Cross on March 20.

"The game was a confidence booster, as we won 18-5. A few players got their first goal as a Bison—Junior Pat Lenhart and freshman Kevin McCarthy," Wes Fetsch '04 said.

Patrick Christensen '05 tied his career-high six goals, John Salvensen '05 scored a career-high four goals, and Chris Cara '05 (the national scoring leader) scored two goals and added eight assists for a career-high 10 points, nearly breaking the Bucknell lacrosse record.

The Bison defense held strong, keeping the Holy Cross Crusaders to only five goals. The final Holy Cross goal was scored with 8:27 left in the third quarter as Bucknell claimed its third win of the season and their first league victory. "It was good to get back on the winning end of the score after three straight losses," Fetsch '04 said.

The Bison continued to show their talents with a 15-4 win over Harvard on March 6. The Orange and Blue were unstoppable, holding the lead for the entire game; Harvard was unable to score against the Bison until the third quarter. Bucknell was able to build its lead early with the help of goalie Matt Baran '06, who stopped seven shots in the first quarter. Baran had 17 saves for the day.

Offensively, the Bison dominated the first half with goals by Salvensen, Brian Gargan '07 (his first career goal), Fetsch, Ross Albers '05 and four goals by Cara.

"Our biggest strength this year is our offense. When the defense can clear and get us the ball, we can play with anyone," Albers said.

The Bison continued to excel in the second half, holding Harvard to four goals while they moved toward their second win with goals from Craig Fleishman '04, Christensen, Greg Sowyrda '07 (first career goal) and Cara, who finished the day with nine points (six goals and three assists).

"The Harvard game was an emotional win because we knew we could take it to them and we did. Harvard has a potent offense and a recognized goalie, Jake McKenna. We had a terrific day on both offense and defense," Fetsch said.

Unfortunately, the Bison's winning streak would not last as they suffered their first loss 16-11 at Villanova on March 9. Bucknell started the game off right with three goals in the first five minutes of play.

The Orange and Blue held onto their 5-3 lead until late in the first quarter when the Villanova Wildcats broke ahead leading the Bison 8-6 at the half. The Bison were unable to regain the lead and were outscored 8-5 in the second half, leaving Bucknell with its first season loss of 16-11.

The Bison faced their second loss of the season against No. 15 Navy in their first Patriot League match up on March 13. First half goals by Christensen, Salvensen and Gargan kept the Bison within two with Navy in the lead at the half 5-3. Fetsch was able to pull Bucknell within one with a score only 38 seconds into the third quarter. Fetsch scored once more for the Bison in the third quarter, but the Orange and Blue were unable to find the net in the fourth, leading to an 11-5 loss.

"Our main problem is that

See MLAX, page B5

Women's lax dumps Lafayette 16-9

Bison overthrow Leopards' reign with first victory in 26 matchups between the two teams

BY KEELEY SIOUX
Sports Editor

The women's lacrosse team traveled to Florida for the start of its spring break. There it participated in the West Palm Lacrosse Program and played five half-hour games Sunday.

Coach Randall Flynn likes this tournament because "it gives the opportunity for all players to participate but most importantly an opportunity for all players to show what they can do on the field," he said.

While in Florida, the Bison fell short to Columbia, 16-6. The team started the game slow and simply was not playing the way it normally does.

"You have to show up every game, and it's so true that any team can win or lose on any given day, regardless of how outmatched they might appear on paper or how critics predict the game should go," Coach Flynn said.

The Orange and Blue were simply unable to focus and Columbia capitalized on their mistakes. The loss to Columbia brought their record to 2-3.

The Bison then returned to Lewisburg for the remainder of their spring break and secured a win over Lafayette on Saturday.

Lafayette has won every game that it has ever played against the Orange and Blue, winning 16-9 last Saturday in Easton, Pa. Katie Edge '07 scored five goals and Lizzy McDaniel '06 came up with nine saves as the Bison improved to 3-3 overall and 1-1 in the Patriot League.

See WLAX, page B5

The women's lacrosse team picked up its first-ever win against Lafayette in a 16-9 rout last Saturday in Easton, Pa. Katie Edge '07 scored five goals and Lizzy McDaniel '06 came up with nine saves as the Bison improved to 3-3 overall and 1-1 in the Patriot League.

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Sports

Spring break trip good experience for Bison unproductive. "Phil Bunting called a great game and I owe a lot of the credit [for the shutout] to him," Daley said.

BASEBALL from page B2

The Big Green's lone hit was especially dwarfed by the Bison's offensive output in the contest, as the Orange and Blue amassed 16 runs on 20 hits, including four-hit efforts from Wolf and Walter, as well as a three-hit day for Moss.

Bunting helped the team at the plate as well as from behind it, as he was accountable for five of the team's runs, finishing up RBIs with a two-run homer and a two-run double.

The well-rounded victory provided an excellent finale to the road trip. "All facets of our game were on," Daley said. "Our defense was really strong and seemed to be in the right place at the right time. The hitters were seeing the ball really well and capitalized on that."

Overall, Depew was impressed with the Bison's showing in Florida.

"I'm encouraged by our offense as we showed some very good potential to hit against quality pitching," Depew said. "We also got quality pitching from our starters and, as importantly, got some very good performances from our bull pen."

The offense has been a consistent strongpoint for the team throughout the season so far.

After their first 14 games of the season, the 9-5 Bison have posted a .315 team batting average and a .825 team OPS and have averaged seven runs per game.

Leading the offensive deluge is Walter, who was named the league player of the week after batting .764 in his first eight games. After 14 games, the centerfielder holds a .471 average with a .525 on-base percentage and a .784 slugging percentage.

Also picking up awards this week was Daley, whose efforts in Florida earned the Patriot League Pitcher of the Week distinction, as well as the honor of being named co-pitcher of the week by the National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association.

Against Vermont and Dartmouth, Daley strung together 15 scoreless innings, in which he surrendered only three hits and two walks while striking out 16.

"Through our first 14 games, Matt has been the most consistent guy on the staff," Grant said. "On the mound, he attacks and doesn't try to be too fine. He attacks every batter beginning with the first pitch."

The Bison will begin league competition tomorrow when they face off against Navy at Depew Field. The last time the Bison and the Midshipmen competed, Bucknell trounced Navy twice on May 11, 2003 to win the league championship title.

The Midshipmen, who graduated over 10 seniors last year, have struggled to a 5-15 record to begin their season, but the Bison are still expecting a competitive series.

"They have been at the top of the league for the past couple of years, including two NCAA tournament berths, so they are not going to lay down for us," Grant said. "We expect them to come at us with their A-game. We look forward to the challenge."

The two teams will play a doubleheader beginning at noon tomorrow, as well as a twinbill on Sunday at the same time.

Nate Mittag '07 delivers a pitch to catcher Austin Barrett '05 during a game against Fordham prior to spring break. Mittag pitched six scoreless innings during three appearances in Fla.

Women's bball ends season with 61-57 loss

By TERI SCHLANG
Staff Writer

The women's basketball team concluded its season March 7 after almost upsetting No. 1-ranked Colgate in the semifinals. The Bison lost 61-57 in Upper Marlboro, Md.

Desire Almind '04 set a tournament record with 20 rebounds during the final game. The Bison finished their season 15-13 overall. On March 5, the fifth-seeded Bison upset the No. 4-seeded Holy Cross in the first round of quarterfinals by a score of 94-75.

Against Holy Cross, Almind scored 24 points and brought down 16 rebounds during the game for her 18th double-double of the season. Lindsey Hollibaugh '07 scored 25 points in the game for her fifth-straight 20-point game. Hollibaugh also received honors as the Patriot League Freshman of the Year.

The Bison's upset over the Crusaders was the first time in the 34-game history that Bucknell had beaten Holy Cross. It was also the first time Holy Cross did not advance past first round play and just the third time in the 14-year program history that they did not compete in the championship game.

Holy Cross took the lead just once in the game around the 12-minute mark. Brooke

Quarterfinals
5 Bucknell 94
4 Holy Cross 75

Tomovich '05 responded immediately, scoring her second straight three-pointer and giving the Bison the lead for good. The Bison closed the first half with the lead, 39-32, with Hollibaugh scoring a three-pointer with six seconds left to play. The Bison opened the second half with a 10-4 run, giving them the first double-digit lead of the game 49-36 with over 16 minutes to play. Holy Cross got

Semifinals
1 Colgate 61
5 Bucknell 57

Men's basketball suffers loss to Lehigh in PL tourney semifinal

At right: Charles Lee '06 drives toward the hoop during a game against Lafayette at Sojka Pavilion. At left: Davorin Skornik '04 guards the ball from a Lafayette defender. The Bison reached the Patriot League tournament semifinals for the 11th time in 14 years, but lost 60-45 to eventual league champion Lehigh in the semifinal game, ending the 2003-2004 season with a 14-15 record.

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell men's basketball team ended its championship bid on March 7 with a 60-45 loss to Lehigh in the semifinals of the Patriot League Championship tournament. The Bison reached the semifinals for the 11th time in 14 years with a 66-60 victory over Holy Cross on March 6.

The Bison grabbed an early 6-0 lead over top-seeded Lehigh in the opening minutes of the semifinal playoff when Kevin Bettencourt '06 hit a pair of three-pointers. The Mountain Hawks battled back to tie the score with 12 minutes, 15 seconds remaining in the half and then pulled ahead 10-6 at 11:06.

A layup by Charles Lee '06 pulled the Bison to within two, but Lehigh fired back with a 13-point unanswered scoring streak.

The Orange and Blue decreased their opponent's advantage to 25-16 when Donald Brown and Christ Neitz scored on a three-pointer and a layup, respectively, but by halftime Lehigh had again pulled away from the Bison, posting a 36-20 record at the end of the first half.

The Bison launched a late rally in the final minutes of the game, pulling to within eight when Lee hit a pair of free throws at 4:57 to make the score 50-42. Lehigh continued to stifle the Bison with strong defense while tacking on 10 more points in the closing five minutes of the contest to make the final score 60-45.

Bucknell's 45 points was the lowest point tally registered by the program in 29 Patriot League Tournament games.

Semifinals
1 Lehigh 60
5 Bucknell 45

The Bison earned a berth in the semifinals after an intense 66-60 win on March 6 over defending three-time league champion Holy Cross.

Lee led the Bison in scoring with a 20-point effort, while Chris McNaughton '07 added a double-double with 19 points and 11 rebounds.

Quarterfinals
5 Bucknell 66
4 Holy Cross 60

Although the Crusaders put them at a 20-15 deficit to start the game, the Bison came away with a 27-23 halftime lead, capitalizing on nine of their 13 shots in the stanza and hitting nine of their 10 free throw attempts.

Bucknell pulled ahead of Holy Cross with 1:17 left in the half with a McNaughton dunk and did not relinquish the lead for the rest of the game.

The Crusaders lurked within striking distance in the last five minutes of the game, but never narrowed the lead to less than six points.

After a Holy Cross three-pointer with 1:50 remaining made it 58-52, the Bison took advantage of free throw opportunities to pull away in the final minute and a half.

A pair of free throws from the Crusaders in the final 10 seconds were not sufficient to reel in the Bison, leaving the final score 66-60.

The Bison finished their 2003-2004 campaign with a 14-15 record overall, winning 11 of their last 15 games.

Among the individual achievements from the team was a single-season record-tying 72 three-pointers for Bettencourt, who had three treys in his final game of the year. Also entering the record books was McNaughton, whose 334 points rank fourth on Bucknell's all-time first-year player scoring list.

Lee's stellar effort in the loss to Lehigh earned him a spot on the Patriot League All-Tournament Team.

Lillian Drumgold '05 maneuvers around a Lafayette player during one of the Bison's earlier games at Sojka Pavilion. The Bison defeated Holy Cross 94-75 to advance to the semifinals in the Patriot League Tournament, but fell short of the finals, falling to Colgate 61-57 to end their season.

See WBBALL, page B6

Sports

Softball finishes spring training with victory

By JOSH HERWITT
Sports Editor

The Bucknell women's softball team concluded its spring training trip to the Rebel Spring Games with a strong 4-2 win over Jacksonville State on March 20. After a sluggish start, six different players recorded hits in the game for the Bison.

Jacksonville State jumped out to an early 2-0 lead in the top of the second inning, scoring twice on Samantha Gutierrez's double.

The bats finally came alive for the Orange and Blue in the fourth inning, banging out three hits that broke up Jacksonville State pitcher Katy White's previous no-hitter.

Kristen Potts '04 reached base on a fielding error to start the inning. Angela Stackhouse '04 knocked a double to the left field fence, scoring Potts on the play. Potts's run snapped a 24-inning scoreless stretch for Bucknell.

Lauren Wible '06 followed up with a double of her own, allowing Stackhouse to score.

Kris Devore '06 made it back-to-back doubles as pinch runner Megan Good '07 stepped across home plate for the Bison's third run.

The Orange and Blue

added an insurance run in the bottom half of the sixth as Jenny Ross '05 drew a bases-loaded walk.

Bison pitcher Kelli Haskins '05 pitched a complete game after throwing the final four innings of the previous game. The right-handed hurler gave up 11 hits, but only allowed two runs while striking out three and walking one.

Bucknell improved to 3-6 overall with a 3-5 record on the trip with wins over the Gamecocks, Vermont (4-1) and Wagner (5-1).

The Bison struggled to find any source of offense in losses to Delaware in the season opener and to Fordham, Fairfield, Colorado State, Cleveland State and Iona while in Orlando, Fla.

Devore and Michelle Danish '07 were the only Bucknell softball players to record a hit in their 5-0 loss to Cleveland State on March 19.

In a 7-0 loss to Iona the next day, the Bison could only scrap up four hits as Devore and Stackhouse added singles and Jill Pompeii '05 collected two hits to go 2-3 on the day.

The Orange and Blue returned to the field to play a doubleheader at home against Siena yesterday, and now head to Lafayette for double-headers March 27 and 28.

Spring Training Results

March 15
Bucknell	4
Vermont	1
March 18
Bucknell	5
Wagner	1
March 19
Fordham	3
Bucknell	2
Fairfield	4
Bucknell	3
March 20
Colorado State	10
Bucknell	0
Cleveland State	5
Bucknell	0
March 20
Iona	7
Bucknell	0
March 20
Bucknell	4
Jacksonville State	2

Courtesy of www.bucknellcycling.com

The Bucknell cycling team presents its Campus Circuit Race on Saturday, March 27. The course will be a 2.4-mile loop, which begins on campus and travels down to the Susquehanna River. Bucknell competes in the Eastern Collegiate Cycling Conference and has raced at Rutgers, Penn State, Columbia and Princeton so far this season.

Women's golf opens spring at Georgetown Invitational

GOLF from page B1

she has a shot to contend at the Big South Championships," Jamieson said.

With the victory, Herbin became just the second Bison in program history to win an individual title. Jess Hetrich '02 was the last to accomplish such a feat, winning the Bucknell Invitational in April 2002.

Herbin's supporting cast chipped in as Teri Schlang '07 put in a solid effort at 83-87 and Stephanie Calhoun '07 shot 89-90.

"Teri and Stephanie are two of the hardest working kids we've had here," Jamieson said. "I think we will see that pay off this spring. With our schedule, we see a lot of high-caliber players and teams. Now they can all say they've been there before."

Meredith Kalman '07 added an 87-90, which could give her more confidence for the spring season.

"Meredith is a very hard worker who is at a bit of a disadvantage because of her height," Jamieson said. "She is working very hard, however, to add length, and she has the potential to contribute this spring. Her ability to stay out of trouble is one of her big strengths, resulting in consistent scores."

Team Captain Jaime Hays '05 continues to improve her game early this spring as she shot 87-88 to round out weekend play.

"Jaime is an example of what our program is all about," Jamieson said. "She just keeps getting better and better. Not only is Jaime getting better herself—I think she is going to have a fantastic spring—but she is almost like an assistant coach. She works well with the younger players, and on occasion when I get "Jaime is an example of what our program is all about. She just keeps getting better and better. Not only is Jaime getting better herself... but she is almost like an assistant coach."

—Kevin Jamieson,
head coach

called to a coaches meeting at a tournament, Jaime will walk the team through how we want to play the golf course."

Radford, who also competes in the Big South Conference like Bucknell, won the event as Boston College, Georgetown, St. John's and Penn followed in order.

The Bison return to action this weekend at the William and Mary Invitational.

Women's lacrosse snaps losing streak

WLAX from page B1

until this year. The women were able to capture the 16-9 victory through a combination of hard work and a desire to improve their playing from their performance in the past week.

Katie Edge '07, recently named Patriot League Rookie of the Week, was a large contributor to this success, with five goals and one assist.

Andrea Paraud '05 and Meredith Wright '04 also played added much through their three goals and one assist each. Amy Hasler '04 helped seal the win with her addition of two more goals and three assists. Overall, the Bison overshot Lafayette 29-22.

The Orange and Blue were leading at the end of the first half 10-5, due to Tory Field '06, Emily Burman '06, and Edge scoring within 46 seconds of one another.

The Leopards were able to close the gap by scoring the first three goals of the second half.

The Bison, however, retaliated by taking the next six goals and keeping Lafayette from scoring for 21:13 minutes.

The Orange and Blue goalie, Lizzy McDaniel '06, played a large part in this by making nine saves.

This win broke up a three game losing streak and improved their record to 3-3. More importantly, it brought the Bison their first-ever win over Lafayette.

"We have a great group of young women who are determined to put Bucknell women's lacrosse on the map for good," Flynn said.

The Bison are excited to play their upcoming games against Holy Cross and Harvard this weekend.

Chris Carillo '06 scoops up the ball as a Harvard opponent gives chase from behind in a recent home game.

Wes Fetcher '04 evades a Harvard defender in the Bison's win 15-4 at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium earlier this month. Bucknell defeated Holy Cross 18-5 last Saturday to go 3-3 on the season.

Write for sports.

Please.

E-mail ccairns@
or jherwitt@

Sports

Owens and Sapp find new homes in NFL offseason

ORTA from page B3

knows he is guaranteed a huge chunk of money, he can talk all he wants.

Talk about risky business, a franchise with as much team chemistry as the Eagles really didn't need this guy. For what they are paying him, they can afford two or three other receivers in the draft who will not cause as much trouble. And trust me—there are plenty of prospects who could develop into big time gamers.

David Boston got himself traded from one coastal city with quarterback problems to another, as he leaves the hapless Dolphins offense. Miami has been trying to solve its QB problems by surrounding them with high-priced players at the other skill positions for years, but the results are pretty much the same.

The Broncos brought in a notoriously hard hitter to pair up with shutdown corner Champ Bailey, solidifying up their crop of DBs. John Lynch was a pretty good pickup. Though he may have lost a step, it will be fun to watch him out the hurt on some AFC wide receivers for once.

Almind '04 named to PL all-tournament squad

By JOSH HERWITT
Sports Editor

Desire Almind '04 earned another award during the 2003-2004 season by recently becoming part of the Patriot League all-tournament team.

The 6-foot guard/forward from Blairstown, N.J., made her second straight appearance for the all-tournament squad after leading her team to the semifinal game for the past three years.

In the quarterfinals against Holy Cross, Almind led her fifth-seeded Bison past the fourth-seeded Crusaders with 24 points and 16 rebounds. It was her 18th double-double of the season.

The co-captain went 10-for-10 from the foul line, swiped six steals and swatted four blocks for the Orange and Blue.

In the semifinal game against top-seeded Colgate, Almind was held to only 10 points, but she did more than make up for it on the glass with 20 rebounds, a new single-game record. Her 36 total rebounds through both contests set a Patriot League Tournament record for rebounds in two games, passing her old mark of 29 set just a year ago.

Overall in the tournament, Almind averaged 17.0 points per game, 18.0 rebounds per game, 3.0 steals per game and 2.5 blocks per game.

Adding her 19th double-double of the season against Colgate, Almind tied the Bucknell record for double-doubles in a career with 32.

Colgate went on to win the Patriot League tournament in a 71-60 decision over American at Cotterell Court in Hamilton, N.Y.

With the win, the Raiders earned a bid to the NCAA tournament for the first time in school history.

2003-2004 Patriot League All-Tournament Team

Desire Almind	Sr.	G/F	Bucknell
Joanna Barnes	Jr.	G	American
Malissa Burke	Sr.	G	Colgate
Jessica DePalo	Jr.	F	Lehigh
Chanel Hunt	Jr.	F	American
Milaina Lagzdins	Jr.	F	Colgate

Women lose in semi-finals

WBBALL from page B4

scored a three-pointer. Colgate took the lead after a 15-4 run, giving it its largest lead of the game at 45-40 with just over 13 minutes left to play.

Lillian Drumgold '05 helped the Bison with an 11-1 run by scoring six points. The Bison had the lead 51-46 with 7:40 left to play. The two teams exchanged baskets over the next few minutes until Almind scored, making it 57-52 with 5:30 left to play.

That was the last time the Orange and Blue would score. The Raiders scored seven straight over the next few minutes of the half, giving them a 59-57 lead. The Bison had many opportunities to regain the lead, but they missed their last eight shots of the game from the field.

Colgate went on to win the Patriot League Crown, defeating American in the finals. As league champions, Colgate represented the Patriot League in the NCAA tournament.

Hollobaugh was limited to just two shots during the second half, finishing the game with her sixth-straight 20-point game. Almind finished with her 19th double-double of the season with 10 points to go along with her 20 rebounds of the game. Her 20 rebounds set a semifinal record and her 36 rebounds combined in the two games broke her own mark set a year ago of 29 rebounds—19 versus Navy and 10 versus Holy Cross.

Almind finished out an outstanding career at Bucknell as the school's third-leading scorer with 1,581 points and the third-leading rebounder with 873 rebounds. Her 13.4 rebounding average this season set a Patriot League single-season record and will finish among the top in the country. She also tied the school record of 32 career double-double games.

Write for sports.

Because apparently there's more than one team on campus.

E-mail ccairns@

Terrell Owens will take his antics to the City of Brotherly Love next season, signing with the Philadelphia Eagles during the offseason. Owens is one of several players joining new teams.

Zelda's
on the park

Fabulous Coffee,
Deserts and More!

Coming Soon to South Sixth Street

Scott Stieler BU '87
Proprietor
522-0443

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2004/05 1-6 bedrooms Spring '04 Semester Units Available

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

BRYNWOOD
Rentals

Doewood Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
Fine Gifts
Unique Showers
430 Market Street,
Lewisburg
524-7930

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
~State of the Art Body Jewelry~

Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
745-7830

Welcome to

"A Cut Above Hairdressers"
A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys
WALK INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH

THE PASSION OF THE CHRIST

He died for us and rose again.
What is your response?

Join us as we honor Him each Sunday at the
MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH
Sunday Services at 10:30am and 6pm
Wednesday 6pm Community
Meal and 7pm Bible Study
1.2 miles south of Rt. 45 off Forest Hill Road in Mifflinburg.
For more info call 966-4899

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

The Winfield Baptist Church
"The Bible Preaching Church For the Whole Family"
(Founded 1860)

Invites both men and women of Bucknell to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 am;
Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening Worship 6:30 pm

Evangelical
Traditional and contemporary Christian music
Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thornbury
Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28 acre site 3.5 miles south of campus. Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 miles, church on the right. For more information or transportation call 524-2735 or 743-7494 (any time)

Statistics

Bucknell Sports Calendar

Softball
at Lafayette
Easton, Pa.
Sat, March 27
12:00 p.m.
and
Sun, March 28
1:00 p.m.
and at St. Francis Loretto, Pa.
3:00 p.m.

Baseball
Navy
Sat, March 27
12:00 p.m.
and Navy
Sun, March 28
12:00 p.m.
and
Mount St. Mary's
Wed, March 31
3:00 p.m.

Women's Water Polo
Maryland
Princeton, N.J.
Sat, March 27
2:00 p.m.
and Princeton
Princeton, N.J.
Sat, March 27
7:00 p.m.
and
George Washington
Princeton, N.J.
Sun, March 28
10:40 a.m.
and Villanova
Princeton, N.J.
Sun, March 28
1:40 p.m.

Men's Crew
Bucknell-Army Duel
Sat, March 27
All Day

Men's and Women's Track and Field
Stanford Invitational
Palo Alto, Ca.
Sat, March 27-Sun, March 28
All Day

Men's Tennis
Colgate
Sun, March 28
12:00 p.m.
and at Towson
Towson, Md.
Tues, March 30
3:00 p.m.

Women's Lacrosse
at Holy Cross
Worcester, Mass.
Sat, March 27
12:00 p.m.
and at Harvard
Boston, Mass.
Sun, March 28

Women's Golf
William & Mary Invitational
Williamsburg, Va.
Sat, March 27-Sun, March 28
All Day

Women's Tennis
at Colgate
Hamilton, N.Y.
Sat, March 27
11:00 a.m.
and
at Towson
Towson, Md.
Tues, March 30
3:00 p.m.

Women's Crew
George Mason and Army
Sat, March 27
All Day

Bucknell Cycling presents: Campus Circuit Race on the Bucknell University Campus Saturday, March 27

Schedule:

- 11:00 a.m., Men D 3 Laps (est 24 minutes)
- 11:30 a.m., Men C 5 Laps (est 26 minutes)
- 12:15 p.m., Women B 4 Laps (est 28 minutes)
- 12:50 p.m., Men B 7 Laps (est 46 minutes)
- 1:45 p.m. Women A 7 Laps (est 46 minutes)
- 2:45 p.m., Men A 10 Laps (est 60 minutes)

Bucknell Men's Basketball 66, Holy Cross 60

		TOT-FG 3-PT			REBOUNDS
##	Player Name	FG-FGA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
03	Lee, Charles	6-8	1-2	7-7	0	3	3	2	20	0	6	0	1	31
11	Clark, John	2-5	1-2	0-0	0	5	5	4	5	4	2	1	0	27
32	McNaughton, Chris	8-10	0-0	3-4	3	8	11	3	19	0	3	0	0	31
05	Badmus, Abe	1-3	0-0	4-6	0	2	2	2	6	2	4	0	3	29
12	Bettencourt, Kevin	2-5	0-3	4-6	0	1	1	2	8	2	4	0	1	27
00	Skornik, Davorin	0-0	0-0	0-1	1	1	2	0	0	0	2	0	0	10
04	Brown, Donald	0-1	0-0	0-0	0	2	2	3	0	0	5	0	1	16
22	Glover, Antonio	2-2	0-0	3-4	0	3	3	1	7	0	2	0	0	17
25	Quinn, Matt	0-0	0-0	1-2	0	2	2	0	1	0	0	0	0	8
31	Niesz, Chris	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	2
44	Viera-McClymont, Ta.	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	2
Team Totals		21-34	2-7	22-30	5	28	33	17	66	8	28	1	6	200

Bucknell Men's Basketball 45, Lehigh 60

#	Player Name	TOT-FG		3-PT	REBOUNDS
		FG-FA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
03	Lee, Charles	3-9	0-1	4-6	1	2	3	4	10	2	0	0	4	26
11	Clark, John	1-4	1-3	0-0	1	1	2	4	3	1	1	0	2	19
32	McNaughton, Chris	3-6	0-0	1-3	4	3	7	2	7	0	2	0	0	30
05	Badmus, Abe	1-7	0-1	0-0	0	3	3	3	2	2	5	0	3	30
12	Bettencourt, Kevin	3-12	3-10	1-2	0	1	1	1	10	0	3	0	1	35
00	Skornik, Davorin	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	1	1	1	0	0	0	0	0	15
04	Brown, Donald	1-2	0-0	1-1	0	0	0	3	3	0	1	0	0	3
10	Webber, Roland	0-0	0-0	1-2	0	0	0	0	1	0	1	0	0	1
21	Namvou, Jack	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
22	Glover, Antonio	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	2	2	2	0	1	0	0	0	12
25	Quinn, Matt	0-2	0-1	4-4	0	0	0	0	4	1	0	0	0	14
31	Niesz, Chris	2-2	1-1	0-0	0	1	1	0	5	0	0	0	0	12
44	Viaer-McClymont, Ta	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
50	Bennett, Jeremiah	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	1	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
Team Totals		14-44	5-17	12-18	7	16	23	20	45	7	14	0	10	200

Bucknell Women's Basketball 94, Holy Cross 75

Player Name	TOT-FG 3-PT			REBOUNDS
	FG-FGA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
13 Almind, Desire	7-17	0-2	10-10	7	9	16	3	24	4	2	4	6	38
41 Valdner, Kristin	2-3	0-0	5-6	1	5	6	3	9	1	1	1	1	17
15 Geosits, Lindsey	1-6	1-4	3-6	2	1	3	3	6	6	6	0	1	39
20 Hollobaugh, Lindsey	10-19	2-4	3-4	2	4	6	2	25	3	3	0	2	39
33 Drumgold, Lillian	3-9	0-0	6-6	1	4	5	3	12	3	6	0	2	33
11 Hatalsky, Laura	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
12 Barriet, Emilie	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
21 Hettler, Katie	0-2	0-0	0-0	1	1	2	0	0	0	1	0	0	2
31 Ketcham, Amy	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	1	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
42 Fleming, Amanda	0-0	0-0	0-0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
Team Totals	27-67	5-12	35-40	16	27	43	16	94	17	19	5	13	200

Bucknell Women's Basketball 57, Colgate 61

##	Player Name	TOT-FG 3-PT			REBOUNDS
		FG-FGA	FG-FGA	FT-FTA	OF	DE	TOT	PF	TP	A	TO	BLK	S	MIN
13	Almind, Desire	4-18	1-1	1-3	1	19	20	1	10	1	1	1	0	39
41	Valdner, Kristin	2-5	0-1	0-0	2	1	3	4	4	0	1	0	0	18
15	Geosits, Lindsey	3-8	0-2	0-0	0	0	0	3	6	4	8	0	1	40
20	Hollobaugh, Lindsey	7-12	3-4	3-3	2	4	6	1	20	4	3	0	1	40
33	Drumgold, Lillian	3-7	0-0	2-2	2	2	4	2	8	1	3	0	1	36
44	Tomovich, Brooke	4-11	1-2	0-0	2	4	6	2	9	0	0	0	0	27
Team Totals		23-61	5-10	6-8	11	31	42	13	57	10	16	1	3	200

Compiled by David Seal

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.

Milton, PA

570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30

College Night

$5- 3 Games & Shoe Rental

Bring me the finest meats and cheeses in all the land ...
along with some new writers for
sports

*email jherwitt@

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Political Ramblings

Making politics fun by making fun of politics

This is the first installment of a regular column by former Bucknellian editors-in-chief Jason Rubinstein and Peter Hackeman regarding the lighter side of politics. This week, they bring you an account of a bar fight for the ages.

After a hard day of campaigning in Pennsylvania, President George W. Bush shakes off his secret service escort and stops by the Towne Tavern for a few beers before heading back to the Country Club. Across town, Democratic nominee John F. Kerry is downing some European liquor at the Highlands Pub.

Kerry notices Bush's twin daughters, Jenna and Barbara, sharing a pitcher and walks over to congratulate them on turning 21 and finally being able to drink legally. Jenna thinks he is hitting on her and runs out and over to her dad at the Tavern. Barbara stays to finish the beer.

Confused, Kerry walks back to the bar and continues drinking.

Bush enters the bar a few minutes later, immediately spots Kerry's oversized head and puffy hair, walks up behind him and punches him in the back of the head with a pre-emptive strike.

Kerry, feeling personally threatened, looks around for friends or allies, but finds that Bush has chased all the allies away. Much like the United States, Kerry is alone in a dangerous situation. Gathering his courage, Kerry stands up and turns around.

"Bring it on!" Kerry yells at Bush.

"Are you sure about that, or are you going to change your mind?" Bush retorts.

Kerry considers the situation and then calls John Edwards to see what he should do. Edwards convinces Kerry not to change his mind. Kerry decides to put his Vietnam combat experience up against Bush's supposed protection of Texas and Alabama from Viet Cong invasion and slaps Bush in the face.

Shocked, Bush whips out his revolver and says, "Pennsylvania is a conceal-and-carry state, you yellow-bellied scoundrel."

In a rare moment of decisive action, Kerry knocks the gun away from Bush and puts the 43rd president in a headlock. "Quick, someone give me a pretzel! This time I won't let him spit it up," Kerry yells.

"We don't have any pretzels here; it's after midnight," the bartender explains.

Bush breaks free from Kerry and runs to the Lewisburg Hotel, where Colin Powell and Arnold Schwarzenegger are eating wings.

Meanwhile, not believing that all the bars in town would stop serving food so early, Kerry decides to see if the Bull Run has any pretzels.

George, Colin and Arnold see Kerry running down Market Street and immediately begin to pursue. "You don't run as well as you run away from your record," Bush yells.

Bush, Powell and Schwarzenegger are so focused on Kerry that they do not notice that Jenna and Barbara have been detained by Public Safety for under-age intoxication.

Kerry bursts in the door of the Bull Run and is relieved to see Howard Dean and Al Sharpton. "What great luck to find the angriest man in the country and Al Sharpton, the accidental child of the Democratic family," he says.

Just then, a hush falls over the crowd as Bush and company enter.

To be continued...

What do you think will happen in this battle between "old-school" John Kerry and "dropped-out of school" George W. Bush? Will the brashness of Dean overcome the diplomacy of Powell? Who will win the war of the sound bite between Al "one liner" Sharpton and Arnold "no one can understand anything he says" Schwarzenegger?

Write us at bucknellian@bucknell.edu or through campus mail at box C3952 with your endings.

Al-Qaida strikes Spanish rail system

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

Exactly two and a half years (911 days) after the Sept. 11 attacks on the United States, nearly 200 people were killed in simultaneous attacks on commuter trains in Madrid, Spain. It is suspected that al-Qaida was responsible for the attacks.

The explosions were set off shortly before 8 a.m., 2 a.m. EST on March 11, when four separate trains at three different stations were hit by blasts along the southern part of Madrid's railway system, according to CNN.

There were a total of 10 explosions at the Santa Eugenia, El Pozo and Atocha Stations. Three other bombs were later found and safely detonated by Spanish police.

Former Democratic presidential candidate Howard Dean told the Associated Press news agency that he thinks the Iraq war and Spain's involvement in it, was probably the motivation for the bombings.

Dean referred to a video tape that was found near a mosque, in which an al-Qaida operative claimed that the attacks were to punish Spain for its support of the U.S.-led mission against Saddam Hussein.

"We declare our responsibility for what happened in Madrid exactly two and a half years after the attacks on New York and Washington. It is a response to your collaboration with the criminals Bush and his allies," the al-Qaida operative said to The Washington Post.

These attacks came right before the critical election for prime minister in Spain. According to CNN, after trailing by a large margin in polls before the attack, Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero and the Socialist party were swept into power March 14, after the elections that took place only three days after the bombings. The quick swing of public opinion has provoked criticism that Spanish voters may have been "giving in" to terrorists.

Antonio Contreras holds a photo of his daughter Jackeline as relatives carry her coffin in Lima on Saturday. Jackeline Contreras was one of four Peruvians killed in the attack on a Madrid railway.

Zapatero has openly denounced the U.S. involvement in Iraq but said "the Socialist Party is going to keep relations with all the governments of the world, including the United States, even though we don't agree on some issues. That is part of democracy, that we get along with every single nation," according to CNN.com.

Since the bombings, a total of 11 people have been charged with involvement in the bombings, according to The New York Times. Those who have been directly linked to the bombings have each been charged with 190 counts of murder and 1,430 counts of attempted murder.

Others have been charged with belonging to a terrorist organization, conspiracy and forgery of official documents.

"I have relatives in Madrid itself, so it was very worrying."

—Yew San '06

"It was very tragic. They [al-Qaida] seem to be attacking everyone... a handle needs to be put on them."

—Dante Ross '06

"We have to keep up our attacks on al-Qaida; they're obviously still a functioning network."

—Nathan Mittag '07

Stewart convicted on all charges

Martha Stewart leaves the courthouse where she was convicted on March 5. She has resigned her executive positions in two of the companies she founded.

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Martha Stewart, founder of Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia, Inc., stepped down from her position as the company's director and chief creative officer March 15. Stewart's resignation was prompted by her March 5 conviction on the charges of making false statements, conspiracy and obstructing a federal investigation into the sale of her stock in ImClone Systems Inc., The Washington Post reported.

The original charge of insider trading was dismissed before the trial even began. This left Stewart to be tried—and ultimately convicted—of obstructing an investigation into charges that would never even go to trial.

Stewart, 62, had already been stripped of her chief executive officer and chairman of the board titles after she was indicted in June in connection with the trading scandal. Stewart will continue to operate as a creative adviser, for the companies she started. She also still holds 61 percent of the shares in Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia and continues to collect a guaranteed salary as well as a recent bonus of $1.2 million, according to The New York Times.

The long-term effects of Stewart's conviction remain to be seen. Advertisers have already started to withdraw their support of the Martha Stewart Living magazine, and CBS has canceled Stewart's television show, The Washington Post reported. The program had lost almost half its viewers since the verdict. Two syndicated newspaper columns written by Stewart, "askMartha" and "askMartha Weddings" are now known as "Living" and "Weddings," respectively.

It was widely speculated that Stewart's daughter, Alexis Stewart, would take her mother's place on the board. When asked about this possibility on the "Larry King Live" television show, Alexis Stewart said, "I'm not so goal-oriented. I'm more interested in environmental-type issues." The New York Times reported. She has not actually rejected the possibility that she will take over her mother's empire, however.

Although the criminal trial is over, Stewart may still face civil insider trading charges. Despite her conviction, Stewart maintains her innocence of dishonest trading practices, claiming that she had an existing agreement with her stock broker to sell her shares if they dropped below a certain price.

Stewart plans to appeal the conviction once she is sentenced June 17. If the appeal fails, she could face between 10 and 16 months in prison, according to The New York Times. The convictions carry a maximum penalty of twenty years in prison, but it is highly unlikely that Stewart will receive this sentence, according to multiple sources.

"She got off lightly; she was able to buy a $12 million defense, and that's what got the [insider trading] charges dropped."

—Lina Nandy '04

"Maybe we would be better served if Stewart was made to use her talents and the money that she would have made from the transaction to redecorate social service offices."

—Susan Tabrizi, assistant professor of political science

College Democrats work to broaden political discussion

By MATT HINSON
Senior Writer

The College Democrats have been reinvigorated this semester and look to grow and change to meet the needs and wants of their members and the University. Since being re-established three years ago, the club has matured and is busy this election year with supporting local and national candidates, as well as bringing its views to the forefront on campus.

The club has developed a strong foundation since it was organized three years ago. The organization was reformed under the direction of former President Denis Kennedy '05 and has since grown to be an active political organization.

"I did not envision that in such a short amount of time we would be reaching out to hundreds in the Bucknell community and accomplishing tangible results on both the state and local level," Kennedy said.

The group does not just discuss politics—its members are actively involved in the political process as well. Members have worked on campaigns in Kansas, Louisiana, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia, and President Matthew Wirick '04 said many members will continue to work on campaigns at all levels, from local offices to U.S. Congress, throughout the summer and into November.

Along with all the involve-

"The skills our leaders learned working in those campaigns have helped us to be a more efficient and effective student organization," Wirick said.

"I was employed as field director this summer for a competitive Virginia state Senate race," Kennedy said. "We have since pooled some of the knowledge that we've gleaned from these campaigns to help create a more viable and visible organization on this campus."

Locally, the group campaigned for the University's medical director, Donald Stechschulte Jr., who was a potential candidate for the local 10th District for the House of Representatives. The club organized a drive over Valentine's Day weekend to help Stechschulte get closer to the 1,000 signatures needed for his petition to enter the election.

Members of the club helped Stechschulte get 1,400 signatures. Unfortunately, legal challenges prevented him from entering the general election (for details, see page A4).

"We have been out on the front lines of the grassroots battlefield that is American politics," Kennedy said. "Members have worked on and run campaigns, we have registered voters, we have gone petitioning and done Election Day GOTV [Get Out The Vote] and polling."

Along with all the involve-

Former College Democrats President Denis Kennedy '05 shakes hands with Governor Ed Rendell. The two met at a campaign event in University Park during the 2002 gubernatorial race, where the College Democrats also prepared for a voter registration drive.

ment in political campaigns and activities, the College Democrats have recently been undergoing internal change. After a recent club meeting, the club discovered that a large proportion of those in attendance were looking for a strongly leftist group to represent their personal interests, instead of a local representative of the views and goals of the Democratic Party. The executives decided that the club needed to refocus its political views to incorporate these students, and renamed itself the College Democrats/Liberal Alliance.

"We are still able to be the avenue to the Party, but now we can take our message and the body of the Democratic party to everyone else who would like to identify with us," Wirick said.

The club is looking for possible speakers for next year, but without outside funding, big-name speakers are out of its price range. Despite the challenge, the College Democrats have been actively seeking possible high-profile speakers, including Al Franken, Lewis Black and Bill Maher.

Kennedy said the difficulty of bringing in high-profile speakers is incentive for the club to work even harder to try and get its message across.

"The only change comes through hard work, and we are doing our best to provide a forum for progressive Bucknellians to express their opinions and to get involved in the community," Kennedy said.

One of the College Democrats' focuses has been on the primary elections. The club sent out periodic updates on the primary races in hopes of interesting the student body in what is going on outside of the Bucknell "bubble." So far, the Democrats have received significant support for the e-mail updates. More than 200 people (students and faculty alike) have signed up for updates.

To further their particular message, the College Democrats sponsored and ran a Theme Week of events in the L.G. Mall to correspond with the Super Tuesday primary elections. They hosted a mock primary, ran a contest to create humorous picture captions of prominent Republicans, gave out Democratic-party-themed cookies and played Saturday Night Live clips while discussing politics with all interested passers-by.

As the primary season draws to a close, the College Democrats are also considering joining other schools' Democratic clubs for a rally during the Pennsylvania state primaries on April 27.

Finally, as campaigns for the November elections begin, the College Democrats look forward to spreading their message and gathering support for the Democratic candidates. The organization plans to release a publication in the spring and hopes to engage the Conservatives Club in a debate in the near future.

College Democrats mock primary results The official contenders:

Kerry	51.8%	Edwards	32.1%
Kucinich	11.6	Sharpton	4.5

The fantasy candidates:

Hillary Clinton	25.0%	Howard Dean	6.4%
Al Franken	9.6	Wesley Clark	8.7
Michael Moore	7.7	Ed Rendell	6.7
Al Gore	5.8	Joe Lieberman	5.8
Ted Kennedy	4.8	Tom Daschle	2.9
Bob Graham	0.9%	Joe Biden	0.9%
Bill Bradley	0.9%	Bob Kerry	0.9%
Carol Braun	0.9%	Michael James	0.9%
Steffen Rogers	0.9%

Commentary: what to look for in the presidential ad blitz

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

Now that Sen. John Kerry (Mass.) has his ticket to the November election firmly in hand, you can look forward to more than six months of mudslinging, election ads, debates and opinion polls. And as long as you live in Pennsylvania, it is unavoidable—this is a "battle-ground" state, with 21 electoral votes (out of 270 needed to win the presidency) and a close split between the parties. The state has already been targeted by the earliest wave of campaign ads, and we will only see more of the candidates as November gets closer.

The early stages of the presidential campaign have already concluded, but a lot can and will change between now and the election. I cannot say this is a map of how things will go, but as long as there are no political bombshells, it is an idea of what to expect.

As campaigns go, the Democratic primary was civil, especially after the elections started and the field narrowed. But that was only within the circle of Democratic hopefuls—they all took frequent potshots at President Bush, and Kerry was no exception.

Kerry has continued that pattern now that he is Bush's official Democratic challenger; most of his ads and speeches have been either overtly negative or focusing on how he plans to fix the problems that he claims the Bush administration has caused.

This seems to endear him to the Democratic base—particularly the more liberal voters, some of whom have reacted to Bush's presidency with nothing short of hatred. Motivating these voters to go to the polls for Kerry (instead of staying at home or casting a "protest vote" for Ralph Nader) is key for the Democratic effort, but he will have to tone down his attacks to convince the genuinely undecided voters, who see merit in both candidates, to vote Democratic.

For his part, Bush opened the season with a week of positive ads showcasing the slogan and theme of his campaign: "Steady leadership in times of change." The publicity focuses mainly on Bush's actions in the face of the Sept. 11 attacks and the ensuing wars.

Unfortunately, this campaign has already come under fire for using footage of the World Trade Center ruins for political gain, although it is not clear how much that complaint will affect the conservative voters the president wants to energize. He already lags well behind the Democrats there; the Republicans, after all, have not had an intense primary to motivate interest in and donation to political campaigns.

After the first week, however, the Bush campaign's negative ads began, and they are here to stay. Kerry's decades in the Senate will provide ammunition for the right-wing accusations of "flip-flopper," a theme that Bush himself put forward in his first speech against Kerry.

For tax cuts and against them, for NAFTA and against NAFTA, for the Patriot Act and against the Patriot Act, in favor of liberating Iraq and opposed to it. And that's just one senator from Massachusetts," Bush said of his opponent in a nationally televised speech after Kerry locked up the nomination.

Of course, one place Bush certainly does not lag behind is in money; his war chest, more than $200 million, is more than 10 times Kerry's. This is a serious disadvantage for the Democratic candidate, but not completely crippling: Republicans typically outspend their opponents, even in losing campaigns.

At least in part, the negativity of Kerry's campaign is an unavoidable strategy in running against a sitting president. Whether he likes it or not, Bush is going to be identified with every event and trend that has happened since the minute he took the oath of office, and when the election comes, Americans are going to vote based on whether they think Bush is doing the job well.

Like the last Democrat to run against an incumbent Bush, Kerry is running on the idea that Bush has hurt the national economy. It worked for Clinton, but Kerry had better have a backup plan. In many respects, the economy is doing OK now, whereas Bush Sr. was hit with a full-blown recession in his re-election year.

Kerry's economic messages have to focus on the unemployment rate, which has grown by half since Bush took office. The other numbers—gross domestic product, the stock market and more—are in the president's favor. The question is how important unemployment will be to the voters compared to the overall picture of the economy; if this aspect of public opinion comes through for Bush, Kerry will be hurt badly. And if current events tend toward good news, especially in Iraq, the most prominent project of the Bush administration, unemployment will be balanced out.

Meanwhile, Bush's prime weapon will be his record against terrorism. Whether or not it is true, conventional wisdom is that Republicans are stronger on defense than Democrats, and Bush will run this conception into the ground over the next seven months.

Kerry has a strong war record, and he and his supporters are hammering it into the electorate, but it will take that publicity just to keep him from losing ground on the issue. Meanwhile, Bush is planning to sell himself as a "war president," meaning that both sides have every reason to keep hitting the issues of war and terrorism.

Whatever the specific issues, this presidential campaign is going to be a slugfest—long, personal and very negative. Now that battle lines are drawn, with half the country on each side, Kerry and Bush are going to fight long and hard for a fairly small amount of swing votes. And in one of the biggest battlegrounds, we are going to have a ringside seat for the whole spectacle.

Think outside the bubble.
Write for B&P.

Contact cstyers@bucknell.edu

Chi Omega Auction
CHINESE AUCTION TO RAISE MONEY FOR MAKE-A-WISH FOUNDATION.
Location: Terrace Room
When: March 27th from 6-10 pm
Drawings begin at 8:30 and will end by 9pm
Three types of tickets will be sold:
$1 tickets for items valued under $50
$5 tickets for items valued over $50 and only $10 tickets for the grand prize
The Grand prize is a trip to the Caribbean!
BU ID is accepted!

Fraternities-Sororities
Clubs-Student
Groups
Earn $1000-$2000 this semester
with a proven Campus
Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks.
Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program!
It works.
Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit
www.campusfundraiser.com

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
770-743-4696
Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

DOR-DAY'S
GREAT SUBS!
Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 770-524-7481

Now Hiring...
ALDI INC.
✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
✓ Flexible AM hours
✓ $9.51 an hour wage
+ Please fill out applications at the store
ALDI INC.
110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

Mya's Coffee House
Delicious Hot Chocolate available
with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

THE Bucknellian

BECAUSE IT COULD SAVE YOUR LIFE ONE DAY

Arts & Entertainment

University turns new leaf with spring concert

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

Having been a member of the Bucknell Concert Committee for the past three years, I have seen many acts come and go. Speaking from experience, there has been a definite decline in interest among students with regard to bringing big-name pop acts to campus. The committee decided to go a slightly different route this year, joining a notable name with an up-and-coming act.

The combination could not have been better. An overwhelming majority of students in attendance left the March 7 concert of Ziggy Marley and Robert Randolph & the Family Band smiling.

The night kicked off with student band Love Gravy opening, performing a solid set of its own jam-influenced rock. Students familiar with the band from its performances downtown knew what to expect, and Love Gravy was able to bring new listeners to their feet during its thirty-minute performance.

The first headliner of the night was Ziggy Marley, who carried on the legendary reggae tradition of his father, Bob Marley, surprisingly well. Starting off with some of his own material, Ziggy Marley set the tone for his set with such solid tunes as "Wake Up and Live" and "In the Name of God" before breaking into a moving rendition of one of his father's classics, "War."

Later in the set he called on his father's genius again, playing crowd favorite "Jammin'," and eventually closed his performance with the upbeat "I Get Out."

However, the night belonged to Robert Randolph & the Family Band. The interesting thing about them was that most of the concertgoers seemed to not know much about them at all, and even those who had heard the name did not know what kind of music they would play.

The band opened with the theme from "Beverly Hills Cop," fueled by Jason Crosby's aggressive violin playing. It quickly moved into its own songs, such as "I Need More Love," the cornerstone of the band's newest release, "Unclassified." The crowd immediately responded with more fervor than I have ever seen at the University.

Moving quickly into a stunning rendition of Jimi Hendrix's "Voodoo Chile (Slight Return)," Randolph began to show why he is known as one of music's most talented artists, ripping through Hendrix's solos on his pedal steel guitar with an intensity and crispness that even the most devout Hendrix fan would appreciate.

The crowd pleaser "I Don't Know What You Came to Do" even had those sitting in the bleachers dancing, and by the show's close (a combination of the "Three's Company" theme song and one of Randolph's own compositions), there was not a disappointed face in the entire building.

While ticket sales were fairly average and many students could not make the show due to the Sunday night time, Ziggy Marley and Robert Randolph & the Family Band brought a fresh sound to the University, one that may be ringing in the campus' ears for a long time.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The concert's final performance was given by Robert Randolph & the Family Band. The band played familiar hits, such as the themes of "Beverly Hills Cop" and "Three's Company."

We Brake for Nobody revs up the audience

By TYLER MILLS
Writer

There were few empty seats and the aisles were lined with students awaiting. The first performance of the semester from the University's student-run comedy improv troupe, We Brake for Nobody, in the L.C. Forum on March 5. Although most of the humor appealed to all of the audience members, some were offended by the troupe's more racy humor.

The troupe began its perforcomedic horror.

After the troupe took the stage, each skit relied heavily on audience participation. In a skit called Party Quirks, a member of the troupe left the forum, while the audience chose random characters for the remaining performers to act out. When the actor returned, he had to guess that one person was obsessed with sponges, two were the Nintendo duo Mario and Luigi, and the last was the Rev. Al Sharpton. At first he thought the sponge-obsessed actor was infatuated drop, they yelled "Die!", and that performer had to exit the skit.

"The adding skit was hilarious and they mixed up the jokes all the time," Mike Sokol '06 said. "Everything was original."

While We Brake for Nobody excelled at timing its comedic pauses and facial expressions, some students thought that the actual content of the humor occasionally overstepped the balance between being funny and making fun of a group of people. A row of students left the

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

The latest performance by the University's student-run comedy improv troupe, We Brake for Nobody, was March 5. The performance featured original skits and audience participation.

mance with its movie. First, images of a student applying makeup, showering in a dorm, swimming laps and reading at the library were shown.

The comedic timing of each action produced some chuckles in the audience, but it was not until mood music was piped into the images that the audience was laughing hysterically. In one clip, the addition of dark, somber music to an image of a student standing barefoot in a grimy dormitory shower was transformed into a moment of with squares. Many of We Brake for Nobody's skits involved a riot of witty lines and facial expressions to guide major scene and genre shifts. In one skit, two characters began in a McDonald's and switched genres to horror, romance, interpretive dance and then porn at the audience's command.

In the Story Story Die skit, each performer contributed to a story one line at a time. When the audience members thought that one performer let the story performance shortly after a skit that was a string of stereotypes about Jews. Other skits targeted such issues as affirmative action.

For a performing group that excels at comedic timing and wit, it remains unclear why it cracked jokes about ethnic stereotypes.

"It was funny, but it was also sad how much race had to be a part of a lot of the jokes," Leonore Fleming '05 said.

We Brake for Nobody performs tonight at 8 p.m. in the L.C. Forum.

CHIPFEST '04

The Bison Chips, the University's all-male a cappella group perform tomorrow night at 9 p.m. at the Weis Center. Tickets for this annual Chipfest performance are $5.

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Spring break is over. The cruel reality that is academic life is upon us again. And I know each of you, eager to escape the homework that undoubtedly waits, is in need of a lucrative excuse to avoid it. You are in luck, for one of our own a cappella groups is providing the very outlet you are looking for.

The Bison Chips perform at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts tomorrow at 9 p.m. This annual Chipfest performance, open to all students and faculty looking for an exciting and cultured evening out, costs just five very well-spent dollars and promises to be a good time.

"There's going to be a ton of new songs, and we're digging into the archives for some old songs that haven't been heard in a while.

Plus, what's better than seeing a lot of hot guys on stage?" Bison Chip Adam Gasiewicz '07 said.

As was evident by the attendance at their CD release concert last month, the Bison Chips have a crowd of dedicated followers. This concert, however, is not just for the die-hard groupies. The enthusiasm of the guys themselves is enough to get novice a cappella fans excited about the concert.

"It's always our favorite show of the year. We love singing in the Weis Center and have a great time with it. Plus, all the Greeks get $5 of philanthropy credit for each ticket, so there is no excuse not to come out for an hour and a half of mindless pleasure," Bison Chip Mike Stone '06 said.

So there you have it. Cheap, entertaining and full of attractive males. What more could you possibly ask for?

In your free time, do you...

- find a pocket full of ticket stubs when you do laundry?
- blow all your money at the closest record store?
- tour the country along with your favorite band?
- cuddle up with a pillow and a bestseller?

If so, you should take some of that time and write about it!

Write for A & E...

jpietak@bucknell.edu

Arts & Entertainment

Student Publications

uncovered

Mirth Grinder— a brewing revolution

By KATE TANITA
Contributing Writer

Fire and Ice sizzles with visual and written expression

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

New things are brewing for the next Mirth Grinder. It will remain one of the University's literary magazines publishing student and faculty prose, art and poetry, but it will have a very different look. If you were wondering if you missed the fall issue, don't worry—there wasn't one. The last issue was published a year ago, allowing the Mirth Grinder staff to focus on revamping its magazine.

"I feel really fortunate to be a part of the Mirth Grinder staff. I get to read great poetry and fiction and see beautiful artwork, all while working with a quicky and intelligent group of people."

The binding will change, making the magazine look more like a book and less like a magazine. The whole square, not rectangular, and the whole magazine layout will be different. It will also feature a staggered production schedule.

Unlike in the past, when artwork was graphically manipulated and placed next to prose or poetry, artwork is now featured by itself and left untouched.

Although the magazine's core and purpose will presumably stay the same. As for what that is, Editor-in-Chief, Joanna Tepley '04 said that its purpose is to "inspire the appreciation of beauty and the good in an otherwise unoccupied atmosphere."

The magazine started out as The Catalyst (unrelated to The Catalyst newsletter) years ago and after a few other name changes finally came to rest on its current name, which is, according to Tepley, purposefully paradoxical.

"This is not to say that it is purposefully ambiguous, for it has a definite meaning," Tepley said. "However, it is similar to a Zen koan [parable], insofar as one cannot be told what it means to think. One just sees it."

The best way to get a sense for Mirth Grinder is to actually get one and take a look at what is inside.

Judging from past publications, Mirth Grinder is not simply about seeing your work in print—it is about expressing. All the pieces in the magazine have something to say, including such topics as a student's love/heartache, the more philosophical issues dealing with abstract ideas.

If you have something to say and want to express it artistically, come along and submit to Mirth Grinder. Check out its Web site at www.orgs.bucknell.edu/mg.

Throughout its seven-year history at the University, the student literary magazine Fire & Ice has been dedicated to forging its own path among the other student-created publications. Bridging the gap between the written word and visual art, the upcoming issue promises more of the same mixture of these art forms.

Under the guidance of Editor-in-Chief Carmen Gherghisan '05, President Tyler Mills '05 and faculty advisor Chynis Carr (associate professor of English), several ambitious changes have been made for this year's publication.

The upcoming issue heralds an exciting alteration for Fire & Ice's structure. The printed copies will be smaller, making them more backpack-friendly and portable for any students interested in picking up a copy.

There will also be a few stylistic changes. The magazine's layout will incorporate a "more simple, but aesthetically pleasing layout," according to Mills. This clean image will break from the Fire & Ice formula of the past, when art was laid out as the background behind each poem. The poems, prose and art will now be featured separately, allowing them to be considered individually.

"The art will speak for itself," Mills said.

Another landmark event is the publication's first cover-art contest. The student who submits the winning design wins a $50 prize and the winning submission will be unveiled across campus when the issue arrives in late April.

Although some think the magazine is known for its focus on art, its staff said that art is only one element of the magazine.

"We weigh art and literature evenly in the magazine," Mills said. "We like to publish a diverse variety of pieces, pieces."

Though some would say there is fierce competition among the literary magazines, each has its own distinct style. Fire & Ice is decidedly noncompetitive, and Mills said it is wonderful that there are a variety of publishing opportunities through student publications.

While Fire & Ice is not accepting any more submissions this semester, Mills encouraged students to work on their art, prose and poetry over the summer and said the editorial staff is eager to receive them for review for the next issue.

theredwheelbarrow

Red Wheelbarrow delivers poetry and prose

By KRISTIN HARACHT
Writer

If people doubt students on campus are creative, pick up a copy of The Red Wheelbarrow magazine. Called Triestram in the 1970s, The Red Wheelbarrow first published in its current form in 1986.

"Our basic goal is to publicize and encourage students to submit their poetry and photography throughout the year so that our end result is a thorough range of both creative, well-written poetry and a selection of student photography," staff member Leah Cunningham '06 said.

The magazine is printed once a semester and publishes about 25 pieces of poetry, short stories and visual art. These pieces are not edited for space and are published as the author wrote them; they are not intermingled with other pieces of art, which maintains the integrity of the pieces and displays the individual artist work.

"Literary magazines like The Red Wheelbarrow are a unique opportunity to showcase students' original works that may otherwise never make it out of class or the dorm room," said William Hart '04, one of The Red Wheelbarrow's executive editors.

The Red Wheelbarrow is not just a medium for student creativity—it is also a training ground.

"I've learned what it takes to create a successful literary publication and look forward to applying these skills to a career in publishing," staff member Brian Hoover '05 said.

"This is now my second year working with The Red Wheelbarrow and the experience as taught me a great deal about the editing process as well as the tremendous amount of work that goes into creating successful publications like this," Hart said.

The small staff is dedicated to its work and many on staff have been a part of The Red Wheelbarrow for years. One such staff member is Editor-in-Chief Ryan Sexton '04, who has been the editor for two years.

Now that spring is quickly approaching, the staff at The Red Wheelbarrow has seen the deadline for submissions pass and is now working to put it all together. Sexton will supervise this publication for the last time and his staff has great faith.

"Our group works well together when it comes to crunch time, so I'm confident that this spring's Red Wheelbarrow will be a success," Cunningham said.

So when you see this spring's publication sitting in the Seventh Street Cafe, pick up a copy and read your fellow classmates' work. Once you have done that, check out its Web site at <http://www.orgs.bucknell.edu/rw/index.htm>.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

April 2, 2004

inside

Volume 133, Number 8
Business and Politics:

Students share their views on how the Supreme Court should rule in a case involving the use of "Under God" in the Pledge.

See page A10

Commission begins campus evaluation

By SARA STEFANINI
Contributing Writer

A team of eight evaluators from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools Commission on Higher Education visited the campus Monday and Tuesday. The team was charged with developing an overall assessment of the University's institutional operations.

The Middle States Association is a regional accrediting agency recognized by the federal government. The visit is part of a process that occurs every 10 years, in which the commission reviews the University's accreditation.

"I think this [review] has come at a critical time for us; we need to make decisions about the school," Bucknell Student Government Vice President Duff Weber '05 said. "We have a lot of good little pieces, but we need to find something to fit them under an overarching theme and bring them together, unite them."

The process began in April 2002, when the University submitted a detailed plan for its self-study.

A steering committee comprised of faculty, students and senior administrators conducted the comprehensive study. It is co-chaired by Associate Vice President of Academic Affairs Lois Huffines and Director of Institutional Research and Assessment Jerry Rackoff.

In its analysis, the committee examined "longitudinal data on Bucknell's performance over time in areas such as admissions, retention and graduation rate, placement in jobs and graduate or professional schools," Rackoff said.

In the self-study, the University must demonstrate that it meets the Middle States Commission's newly developed 14 standards of accreditation and outline its strengths and challenges.

The standards consider varying aspects of the institution, such as its mission and goals, leadership, governance, integrity and educational effectiveness, which includes student admissions, student support services and educational offerings.

The University is one of the first institutions to be evaluated for re-accreditation under the commission's new standards. As a result, it is difficult to judge how the University will be evaluated.

After the University's self-study, the accreditation team, comprised of professionals from institutions similar to the one they are examining, began its own evaluation of the University.

"It's great to get other schools' opinions and see what we are doing relative to what they are doing," Meghann Reilly '04 said.

During its visit, the team interviewed members of all groups of the campus communi-

See STATES page A2

GREEK WEEK MANIA

Chris Stokes and Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

Greek Week began Sunday with pie-eating contests, balloon shaving and other competitions on Smith Quad. In addition to recruitment, barbecues held by the fraternities and an ice cream social held by the sororities, there was a chariot race, which was won by Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority and Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. The week ended yesterday with a carnival in the Gerhard Fieldhouse and the Greek God and Goddess competition.

Pipeline repairs beside Rooke Chapel underway

Dan Fallon—The Bucknellian

Workers have been replacing the steam pipes used to heat Rooke Chapel, which have been leaking for almost a year. Originally, it was thought that the leak could be patched; however, when the pipes were exposed, it was discovered they were in much worse condition than previously thought.

By KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

Workers began digging a 450-foot trench in the field between the Langone Center and Rooke Chapel on March 22. The trench is necessary for the replacement of the steam pipes used to heat the chapel. This project is part of a campus-wide maintenance plan for the maintenance of the University's heating pipes.

"We've had a leak in the old line for almost a year now, and we thought we might be able to patch it, but we found out the old line was in a lot worse shape than we thought,"

Assistant Director for Utilities James Knight said.

Knight said there was not time to perform the maintenance in the fall, so it was delayed until the spring. Its timing with Siblings Weekend, House Party weekend and the increasing number of admissions tours was unavoidable, according to Knight.

"We had planned to start during spring break, but the weather was not good. Otherwise, we would be a little further along," Knight said.

Despite the inconvenience of the construction, the Campus Projects Team plans to have most of the work finished soon.

"There is one small section right in front of Marts Hall that will stay open longer until we get the last piece of pipe in, but most of it, if the weather cooperates, should be filled in next week," Knight said.

In addition to the inconvenient timing of the project, many students think the maintenance is a blemish on the campus' beauty, especially during the recent mild weather.

"It is aesthetically destructive to a campus that is notorious for its beauty," Caitlin Trow '07 said.

Others are more tolerant, considering both the necessity and brevity of the project.

"I think it looks pretty bad, being in the middle of one of the nicest parts of campus," Ryan Gillespie '07 said. "But you can't really complain about maintenance construction, especially if it will only last a week or so."

The pipe replacement project is overshadowed by the much larger construction project of the Breakiron Engineering Building, which will also be completed soon.

"That has been planned for a couple years now and is scheduled to be done this summer," Knight said. "Other than that we don't have any major new construction planned."

Student arrested on charges of dealing cocaine on campus

By SANDI-JO GALATI
AND ELISABETH SALEMME
Senior Editor and Editor-in-Chief

University student Dawud Fareed Ali, 23, was arrested by the Pennsylvania State Police Department on charges of selling cocaine to a confidential informant on Friday, March 12.

Ali was arrested in Milton, and according to Milton Police Chief Paul Yost, the Milton Police Department assisted the state police with the arrest.

Officers in the Pennsylvania State Police Department were unavailable for comment.

According to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, Ali has been temporarily suspended from the University.

The suspension stands until the Community Judicial Board Hearing hears Ali's case after the completion of his legal proceedings. Students, faculty and staff sitting on the CJB will hear the case and make the decision about Ali's future at the University.

The Milton Standard-Journal reported that the sale occurred between McDonnell Hall and the Christy-Mathewson Memorial Stadium. Ali allegedly offered to sell the informant 39 grams of cocaine for $1,800 on March 11.

State police gave the informant $400 to make a deal with Ali. After the exchange, Ali was arrested during a traffic stop at the border of Union and Snyder County.

The Standard-Journal reported that a search of Ali's car and apartment yielded $4,350 in cash, 0.40 and 0.22 caliber ammunition and digital scales. University Public Safety reported officers met Milton Police at Gateway Kalman-Posner, Ali's on-campus residence, and were then informed that Ali had been arrested off campus.

"We were not aware of the undercover drug investigation until after the arrest had been made," Director of Public Safety Vince DeCerio said.

District Justice Leo Armbruster arraigned Ali on felony charges of possession with intent to sell a controlled substance and criminal use of a communication facility and a misdemeanor charge for possessing a controlled substance. Armbruster committed Ali to Union County Prison on $50,000 bail.

According to DeCerio, it is likely that investigations involving drug use will continue.

"I received information that there will be more undercover drug operations at schools throughout central Pennsylvania," DeCerio said.

TIME TO ANTE UP

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Students participate in a poker match held by Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity on Friday. The biggest winner took home approximately $1,000 at the end of the night.

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, March 21

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF/VANDALISM—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window in Larison Hall. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) removed an X-Box video game system, four controllers, 12 DVDs, 12 games and an athletic bag from his locked room at Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity. East Buffalo Township Police responded. The incident is under investigation.

Monday, March 22

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF/VANDALISM—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged a computer cabinet in McDonnell Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Tuesday, March 23

ALCOHOL OVERDOSE—An employee contacted Public Safety to advise that a student was brought by friends from an off-campus location to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of an alcohol overdose. The individual was admitted to the hospital for observation.

RECOVERED PROPERTY—A visitor came to Public Safety and turned in a wallet that had fallen off a student's vehicle while it was driven away from an off-campus location. The student was notified.

Wednesday, March 24

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the Langone Center for the report of a student experiencing a seizure. The individual was gone upon the officer's arrival. An employee notified Public Safety that the student was seeking medical attention for the problem.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a student with a head laceration. The individual did not exhibit any other symptoms and was transported by a friend to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety stopped two male students who were staggering while walking on St. George Street. Upon investigation, the students admitted to drinking alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

Thursday, March 25

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety stopped two male students who were staggering while walking on St. George Street. Upon investigation, the students admitted to drinking alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety stopped and assisted Lewisburg Police with a pedestrian stop outside Smith Hall. Public Safety determined that the male student was yelling, creating a disturbance and consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of an old hip injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the student, who later returned to campus.

MISSING PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Coleman Hall for the report of a missing wall clock. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

TRESPASSING—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) entered several offices at Dana Engineering through unlocked windows. The incident is under investigation.

RENTALS
for
BUCKNELL
STUDENTS

AVAILABLE
JUNE 1, 2004

3 LARGE 2 BR APTS.
AT:
237 South 3rd &
Saint George

Excellent condition,
excellent location -
right next door to campus

(570) 966-1488

INFORMATION / SEXUAL ASSAULT—A senior student reported that a male student, whom she knew, sexually assaulted her on two occasions prior to the fall of 2003. She chooses not to press charges with any authority at this time. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) took her unattended wallet while she was working at a computer in the Bertrand Library. The wallet contained $30, a driver's license, two bank cards and a BU ID. The incident is under investigation.

Friday, March 26

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / FRATERNITY VIOLATION—Public Safety stopped at Phi Psi Fraternity for a party check and found several students playing beer pong. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that four students consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF/VANDALISM—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) broke a window at Vedder Hall. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, March 27

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DUI—Public Safety stopped a vehicle at ROTC Drive. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the driver was intoxicated, although under the age of 21. One passenger in the vehicle had been drinking alcohol, although under the age of 21. Lewisburg Police responded. A citation will be issued pending blood alcohol test results. Citations were issued to the driver and the intoxicated passenger for underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to Edwards House for the report of an unconscious female. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that a visitor drank alcohol, although under the age of 21. Lewisburg Police responded.

A citation was issued for underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DUI—Public Safety stopped a vehicle in BU West after the driver had been observed driving through the intersection at Seventh Street and Moore Avenue. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the driver of the vehicle consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. East Buffalo Township Police responded. Citations were issued for underage consumption and DUIs are to be issued pending blood alcohol test results.

INFORMATION / UNAUTHORIZED ENTRY—Public Safety responded to the Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium for an alarm activation caused by two students entering the unsecured band practice space. The individuals are authorized to use the space. The students advised that the door frame was broken. The Physical Plant was contacted to repair the door so that it may be properly secured. Because the students were on the authorized list for use of this space, the officer did not charge them for trespassing. Vehicle citations were issued to one student for failure to display a decal and to the other for failure to register a vehicle.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / VANDALISM / PROPERTY DAMAGE / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—A student reported to Public Safety that another student vandalized her Hunt Hall room. The student reported that an individual urinated on her bed, broke a picture frame and glass, damaged her computer, and threw items out her room window into the bushes. A citation was issued for criminal mischief, property damage and disorderly conduct.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety stopped a visitor at Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity after he threw a golf ball at an officer. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the visitor had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Lewisburg Police responded and issued citations for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

Middle States to assess University

STATES from page A1

ty and looked at institutional plans and documents, including the self-study report. On Tuesday, members of the team were also available for walk-in meetings open to anyone who wished to speak with them.

"Student input is really important," Reilly said. "It's important to get students involved and listen to what they say."

Following the visit, the team will present a preliminary oral report to the senior administration so the University has an opportunity to respond to the report with any corrections to facts.

The Commission on Higher Education then conducts an independent review of the self-study document, the team's final report, and the University's response. The University's re-accreditation status will be determined at the next Middle States Association's meeting in June.

Although membership to the Middle States Association and its accreditation is voluntary, Rackoff said it is important for several reasons.

"It is a means of professional self-regulation, and it assures prospective students, parents, government officials and others that the University has met certain standards of institutional quality," Rackoff said.

According to Rackoff, because the federal government has no procedure to determine an institution's eligibility for federal financial aid, it relies on regional accrediting agencies' judgment. An institution must be accredited in order to be eligible for federal financial aid.

Besides certifying the University's re-accreditation, the visiting team also makes specific observations and sometimes requires that the institution make changes within a given time frame. Every five years commission members must complete a Periodic Review Report. This report is a smaller self-study that examines how the institution has responded to the last visiting team's and commission's recommendations.

Rackoff said these objective third-party recommendations are helpful in the University's continuous effort to improve.

"For an institution of Bucknell's caliber, we should be proud of our efforts to sustain high quality and indeed to continuously improve the quality of education and service that we provide," Rackoff said.

PANCAKES FOR CHARITY

Tyler Kipper—The Bucknellian

Alpha Chi Omega invited students and their siblings to a pancake brunch Sunday. All proceeds were donated to the Red Cross.

IN THE EMPLOYEES' BATHROOM
YOU'LL FIND MAGAZINES.

IN THE EXECUTIVE BATHROOM, A NEWSPAPER.

200 Market St.
Sunbury PA 17801
570-286-5671

The Daily Item
BLACK AND WHITE MAKE GREEN

Extreme Auto

Works

49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

- *Exterior & Interior Detailing
- *Paintless Dent Repair
- *Bumper Repair
- *Windshield Chip Repair
- *Leather & Vinyl Repair
- *Audio & Video Installation
- *Auto Customizing
- *Lockout Service

DISCOVER NEW LEARNING OPPORTUNITIES... REGISTER FOR SUMMER CLASSES NOW AT THE UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

Our summer classes match your lifestyle and goals:

- Choose from 4-week, 6-week, 12-week, or full-term sessions.
- Begin or advance your studies with smaller classes in a variety of subject areas.
- Summer classes are usually small, providing a personal and intimate atmosphere in which to begin or advance your studies.

We welcome:

- Currently enrolled students
- Students home for the summer from other colleges or universities
- Adults continuing their education

University of Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH
BRADFORD
GREENSBURG
JOHNSTOWN
TITUSVILLE

FOURTH FLOOR, CATHEDRAL OF LEARNING • 412-624-6600 • WWW.PITT.EDU/-SUMMER

News

BU House Party 2004

Friday, April 2, 2004

6-11 p.m.	SAE	Love Gravy & Indian Summer
7-9 p.m.	Sig Ep	DJ Self Denial
8-11 p.m.	Sig Chi	City Chicken
10 p.m. - 1 a.m.	Phi Psi	Love Gravy
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	Fiji	DJ Sheldon
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	Lambda	RAQ
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	Sig Ep	DJ Breathalyza
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	KDR	DJ James

Saturday, April 3, 2004

1-5 p.m.	Phi Psi	Jimmie's Chicken Shack
4-8 p.m.	KDR	Lou Dawg
5-9 p.m.	TKE	Big Fish
5:30 - 7 p.m.	Sig Ep	Shady Uncle Thomas
6-10 p.m.	Fiji	Flow Down Street Six
6-9 p.m.	Sig Chi	Battle of the Bands
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	KDR	Deep Banana Black Out
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	Lambda	DJ James
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	Phi Psi	Dance Party & Short Bus
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	Sig Chi	DJ Sheldon
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	Sig Ep	Right Foot Red
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.	TKE	Snack Bar Jones

*Schedule
subject to change

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

Don't wait in line
reserve your table NOW!
Easter Brunch
Sunday, April 11
11 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Hot Buffet featuring:
Carved Steamship Round and
Dry Rubbed Slow Roasted Pig
Shrimp & Scallops Fra Diabolo
Mahi-Mahi w/ Tropical Salsa
Eggplant Caviar Stuffed Portobello Mushroom
Chicken Francaise — Lobster Corn Chowder
Traditional Brunch Entrees — Omelette Station
Cold Buffet of Salads and Fresh Fruits
Assorted Pastries, Cakes, Muffins and Cookies

Reservations:
Phone 570/523-6000
15 S. 6th St., Lewisburg

Zelda's
on the park

Fabulous Coffee,
Desserts and More!

Coming Soon to South Sixth Street

Scott Stieler BU '87
Proprietor
522-0443

summer
AT NORTHWESTERN

REQUEST YOUR CATALOG TODAY!

REGISTRATION BEGINS APRIL 12 CLASSES BEGIN JUNE 21
847.491.5250 www.northwestern.edu/summernu

NORTHWESTERN
UNIVERSITY

Opinions

Bucknellian

Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 8
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Salenne '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubenstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editor
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRoss '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herscovitz '06
Keeley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Julianne Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editors of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print offices.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian.

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Make this House Party memorable

Today marks the first day of the University's highly anticipated House Party weekend. This weekend, however, could jeopardize the relationship between the student body and the administration.

Throughout the year the University has been marred with such unfortunate incidents as underage drinking, drunk driving, alcoholic violence and myriad other alcohol offenses. These problems led the administration to implement a strict emergency alcohol policy from November to March.

Although the emergency measures have been lifted, students still feel animosity toward administrative policies. With this year's festivities now upon us, the future of the fragile relationship between the administration and the student population hangs in the balance.

The following is an open letter from the Bucknellian editorial staff to the student population regarding House Party and how to improve this important relationship.

Our fellow students,

While often considered simply a chance to prove that students at Bucknell "work hard and play hard," the weekend has potential for students to prove more. House Party is our opportunity to prove the maturity that we, as mature adults, theoretically possess.

As it is with every weekend, most students are going to act in a respectable manner that should not significantly disrupt ordinary life. The small minority that acts immaturely and irresponsibly unfortunately casts a bad light on us.

Normally students tend to overlook the distasteful and sometimes dangerous events of the weekend. But this year, we should take responsibility for our lives.

House Party

2004

No one wants this to be the House Party when a student dies.

If you see someone who needs help, do what is right: call Public Safety, call the deans, call 911. It is better for you and your friends to use the single-point partial amnesty than to have to go to your classmate's funeral the following weekend.

If we can demonstrate our intelligent use of alcohol without being reckless, we will prove to ourselves and the administration that we are responsible and mature.

In order to be safe, students should heed the following tips:

Do not get into your car if you have been drinking. Even if you have not been drinking, people who have been will be everywhere—watch out.

Even though some people enjoy blacking out after drinking excessively, you will not want to forget this weekend. Pace yourself; passing out at 1 p.m. is not exactly the way most people envisioned their House Party weekend.

Remember to eat and drink lots of water—take advantage of the free food and drinks provided throughout the weekend.

Listen to Public Safety—do not provoke the officers. Give them respect and they will respect you, too. Remind guests to behave respectfully as well.

One major problem could spell disaster for the future of House Party and the future of the relationship between the students and the administration. House Party should be a memorable event, showcasing the strength of Greek life and bringing the campus community together.

Sincerely,

The Bucknellian Editorial Board

Letter to the editor

National Championship hopes dashed for crew team

To the Editor:

According to a recent petition containing more than 1,000 signatures of students, faculty and staff alike, the population of the University can agree upon something: More than a fourth of this campus supports the student athletes of the crew team and their dream to defend a gold medal championship at the Dad Vail Regatta this spring.

It may seem obvious that the University should be proud of a nationally ranked boat and a promising team, but there's a catch. A catch that students around here are familiar with—University policy is saying no.

So you can imagine my confusion and disappointment, as one of these athletes, when I was told that a technicality, a flawed clause in the final exam policy, is holding me back from defending a gold medal I spent nine months training to win. But due to a conflict common to many of the University's varsity sports, our championship race falls on a final-exam day.

And though concessions and alternate arrangements have and are still being made for teams to compete during final exams, the administration is refusing to budge in this instance.

Yes, the administration is taking a firm stand, asking my team to "pony up" and accept the fact that this is a conflict with no resolution. Why? Because the policy says so. But there is such a thing as bad policy. We have seen it in action.

But unlike the experience of four years at the University, policies can be revisited and rewritten.

My question ultimately becomes, "Since when are penalties the reward for hardworking student-athletes who have earned the respect of their competitors and given the University something other than controversy to be proud of?"

I see too many students pass by the walls of this university in contempt for an education they cannot control. I see too many administrators regretful, apologetic for what they think they cannot put into effect.

But as 1,000 voices and counting show, all we ask from this school is for the chance to succeed. Please, leave the winning to us.

Sincerely,

Rachel Trusheim '05

Reality TV enforces negative body image

By JAMIE GOW AND LAUREN KINSEY
Contributing Writers

"Extreme Makeover." "I Want a Famous Face." "The Swan." This newest batch of reality programming sugarcoats serious medical decisions. In a society that idolizes the rich and the famous, the thin and the beautiful, these shows portray cosmetic surgeons as fairy godmothers.

With a wave of their scalpel, poof! A fairy tale comes true. The reality is that at the stroke of midnight, those who have undergone such procedures cannot hop in their carriage, go home and revert back to their former selves. For better or for worse, their decisions are permanent.

No matter what your stance on cosmetic surgery is, using fairytale language trivializes the serious nature of this phenomenon.

Throughout history, individuals have altered their appearance to evoke a certain response from society. However, the current problem at hand is how such a personal decision is being made into a public spectacle.

The latest series, "The Swan," puts a sick spin on a children's story of social acceptance. True to the tale of the ugly duckling, a group of women are made into real-life swans. Taking "ugly ducklings" and making them beautiful is not so unlike the story. Forcing them to compete in a beauty pageant, "something they never thought possible," sends the message that their former selves were not worthy of our attention. Now that they are visually appealing, they may be paraded around on national television.

In the beginning, the show may have operated under the pretense of doing good for individuals. But with the end's superficial conclusion, the real and perhaps justifiable reasoning behind having the surgery is negated.

Reality programming of all kinds has come under numerous fire since its inception, but the newest group seems to have an even more detrimental effect on the public.

Being the last one left on an island or living with seven strangers does not come with the consequences of this new phenomenon, so why should the media portray it as a real-life fairy tale come true? In fact, these makeover shows are akin to watching a car crash—horrible, but somehow difficult to look away. Could someone save us from ourselves and keep this latest wreck off the air?

Opinions

THE WAR IN IRAQ: PAST AND FUTURE

Where are the weapons of mass destruction?

By MATTHEW FORNATARO
Contributing Writer

Where do we go from here?

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

With over a year since the Iraqi phase of the duplicitous "War on Terror," I seek clarification. A year ago, Secretary of State Colin Powell, while riding the wave of post-Sept. 11 fears, declared to the United Nations Security Council that "[l]eaving Saddam Hussein in possession of weapons of mass destruction for a few more months or years is not an option, not in a post-Sept. 11 world."

Furthermore, Powell asserted, "We know that Saddam Hussein is determined to keep his weapons of mass destruction; he's determined to make more," according to whitehouse.gov.

Now, explanation is needed on this point: with teams of U.N. weapons inspectors surveying the country and with hundreds of thousands of U.S. and coalition soldiers stationed in all corners of the war-torn country, where are the weapons of mass destruction? Where are the weapons Hussein intended to "keep" and proliferate? Why were our sons, daughters, brothers and sisters sent to war?

It was the sole assertion of the Bush administration that the invasion and occupation of Iraq was necessary based upon the stockpiling and production of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear, biological and chemical arms, in that country.

At no time were the American people sold on war based on the fact that Hussein was a "bad guy." Yet, after a year of searching for these weapons that President Bush affirmed were threatening the United States and the world at large, no weapons were found. Our president (with a boldness unseen for a man in his position) proposes that war was justified, despite not having been for its originally stated purpose.

This war was carried out at the behest of one man and one administration with motives residing underneath any façade that was presented to the American people. Shimmering on the surface was Bush's feigned bravery and leadership; however, I was not fooled by this bravado.

Shall we forget the underhanded profits that Halliburton, a company formerly headed by Vice President Cheney, attempted to garner in the Iraqi reconstruction efforts?

Shall we ignore the fact that Bush's former Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, who held a permanent seat on the Security Council, said, according to cbs.com, "From the very beginning, there was a conviction: that Saddam Hussein was a bad person and that he needed to go?"

Shall we be blind to the fact that just last week, former counterterrorism chief Richard Clarke, in press resulting from his new book of condemnation for the Bush Administration, told a CNN anchor, "the White House is papering over facts, such as, in the weeks immediately after 9/11, the president signed a national security directive instructing the Pentagon to prepare for the invasion of Iraq. Even though they knew at the time from me, from the FBI, from the CIA that Iraq had nothing to do with 9/11?"

Now, as the Bush administration seals documents and refuses intelligence probes and questions, how can we, as Americans, remain blind? Shall we be so awed with the elimination of playing cards that we not see we were lied to?

Open your eyes! Are you so content to believe we are safer? The next time we are subjected to terrorism on American soil, shall we just invade the country with the next most-threatening leader? What sort of precedent have we set?

An intelligence failure? Certainly not. You can tell the thousands upon thousands of innocent Iraqi civilians who were killed it was an intelligence failure. Tell the hundreds upon hundreds of military families whose loved ones will not return home it was an intelligence failure. Tell the American people it was an intelligence failure. But do not tell me it was an intelligence failure. Let us not close our eyes to the truth:

There were no weapons of mass destruction.

House Party regulations need revision

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

There probably are not many people on campus now who have actually experienced a real House Party weekend. Most of us have been around for only the repressed version: party like there is no tomorrow—because there isn't when Public Safety is standing outside of every fraternity, waiting to snatch you up.

Party like there is no tomorrow—unless you do not have a wristband. Party like there is no tomorrow—or not. Why risk getting yourself in big trouble for one lousy weekend of festivities? If we cannot have a real House Party weekend, we should not have one at all.

Back in the day, House Party was truly a time to let loose a little bit. People walked around with open containers, roaming from venue to venue with the carefree ease of alcohol-induced euphoria. The biggest obstacle was putting one foot in front of the other without falling down. Some professors even got into the act.

Back in the day, House Party was truly a time to let loose a little bit.

If you wanted to see a band at 11 p.m. and then go to a dance party at midnight, you did not have to pound your beer before exiting the premises to avoid getting in trouble—you just carried it with you and on you went. It was a relaxed atmosphere; a time to let go; a time to unwind. It was fun.

Things went pretty smoothly for a while, until someone brought a friend from another school who ended up clocking a University student and doing him significant harm. Instantaneously, one jerk from Texas ruined House Party.

Since then, House Party has become very regulated and increasingly bureaucratic. It requires registration and special mugs. It requires increased fees for non-Greek students and visitors.

It also requires Greek organizations that are hosting events to accept huge burdens of liability. If students drink on their own and get sick or reckless at fraternity houses, the fraternities get fined and sanctioned. The hosts of House Party events will inevitably incur all sorts of fines and charges for routine, incidental occurrences while being forced to hold events at their venues.

In this scenario, Greek

How I long for the days of last May—the air was fresh, the smoke was beginning to lift from the battlefields of Iraq, and President Bush had just given the American populace the post-game pep talk for the ages, after riding shotgun in a fighter jet on the deck of an aircraft carrier.

Each day Donny Rumsfeld assured us that were moments away from finding the weapons of mass destruction and that Iraqis were still thinking of us for ridding them of Saddam Hussein; or at least they were not shooting as much.

Things were looking up: The war was shorter than critics feared, Bush was working on restoring positive relations with the European nations that had opposed the war, and every day reports from Paul Bremer were coming back from this previously war-torn land that electricity was being restored and that many people were already better off than when Hussein was in power.

Fast forward 10 months and the scenario that the United States faces is significantly less pretty than the one that was looking good in May. Instead of marking the end of the war in May 2003, all the president did was declare that the war was about to enter its second phase; the phase of unconventional warfare and attacks against U.S. troops.

U.S. military officials are now saying that there is a staggering average of 26 attacks against coalition troops every day in Iraq. On Wednesday there were two horrific attacks on Americans that resulted in nine total deaths. The first attack was against a SUV carrying American contractors through the streets of Falluja that resulted in four deaths. Reports now say that two of the bodies were put on the hoods of cars and driven around and then burned while the other two bodies were hanged from an overpass of the Euphrates river. In the second tragedy, five American troops were killed when their vehicle ran over a bomb on a road.

Meanwhile back in the United States, former counterterrorism czar for the Bush administration Richard Clarke and former Secretary of the Treasury Paul O'Neill have come forward in two different books discussing the faults of the Bush administration in dealing with, respectively, Sept. 11 and the war in Iraq. The criticisms of Bush for the situation in Iraq are coming increasingly from those high up in government, such as Clarke and O'Neill, which adds to the validity of the claims for misconduct, and also makes the debate within the United States more heated and damaging for Bush.

All of these tragedies and mistakes leave the United States with the question, where do we go from here? Clearly the current situation in Iraq, and the politics at home that lead us there, are unacceptable and something must be done immediately to stop the bloodshed in Iraq, as well as make changes at home so that a preemptive and unnecessary war do not happen again.

The first step that needs to be taken in Iraq is to end the reign of our "coalition of the willing" and humbly turn this endeavor over to the United Nations. With the decisions about the future of the nation coming out of Washington and the country that invaded it, the citizens will be much more likely to accept the legitimacy of what is being done. The Bush administration's policy of unilateralism in all foreign policy, military or not, is a mistake and needs to be stopped. Putting faith in such multilateral institutions as the United Nations will improve the security of the United States, make it less resented by nations that feel threatened by our economic and military superiority and less likely to be singled out by terrorists.

The second step that the citizens of the United States need to take is to not vote to re-elect Bush. This president has led our country in a dangerous new direction in regards to foreign policy, and needs to be stopped. The policy of preemptive war will not reduce terrorism in the United States or abroad, but will only proliferate the number of people who hate the United States.

Because this president refuses to recognize that, he must be voted out of office in November and replaced by a president who can work with the international community to defeat terrorism without creating more terrorists.

For House Party to return to its once-great status, both students and administrators would have to evaluate their approaches to the weekend.

home. I am sure there are a lot of you out there who know exactly what I am talking about.

Given the attention that the University's alleged "drinking problem" has received this year, along with the increasing regulation of House Party, it seems as though it would be best to call the event off altogether unless it can return to its original status as a truly low-risk, low-anxiety campus-wide party.

For House Party to return to its once-great status, both students and administrators would have to evaluate their approaches to the weekend. Students would have to give an optimal effort to be responsible and safe, and not use the weekend as an excuse to get stupid.

Administrators and Public Safety officers would have to recognize the reality of college life and allow students to take their responsibility into their own hands, rather than going out, paranoid, to get people in trouble and clamp down on alcohol consumption. Unless both ends can achieve these ends, we might as well do away with House Party.

Arts & Entertainment

Palumbo demonstrates a life-long dedication to music in senior recital

Katherine Palumbo '04 presented her senior recital Sunday evening at Rooke Recital hall. Palumbo performed pieces by Dvorak, Chopin and Beethoven, alone and accompanied by a string quartet.

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

BY RACHEL HOFFORD
Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

It is obvious when someone loves the piano. Not just the way it feels to perform, or the way it sounds, but how it feels to be stuck in the music building for hours every night practicing and yet feel like there is no better place to be.

This is what it means to really love the piano. Katherine Palumbo '04 showed off her love and passion for the black and white ivory Sunday evening at her senior recital in the Rooke Recital Hall.

The pieces she performed reflected a variety of musical time periods, combining both modern and more traditional fare. Each displayed incredibly complex technique. "Katie the Artist" overshadowed "Katie the Technician," however, as she disguised immensely difficult technique beneath soaring, simple melodies and dynamic emotions. The first piece, Antonin Dvorak's "Piano Quintet, A major, Op. 81," best embodied these characteristics.

Rounding out the piece's quintet were Monica Hoy '04 and Tyler Mills '05 on violin, Kelly Rafferty '05 on viola and retired University employee Zoya Jenks playing the violin. Their chorus of strings played a refined second fiddle to Palumbo's precise melodies, as moments of placid harmonies were interspersed with flashes of intensity.

For the second composition, the quartet of string instruments was stripped away, leaving Palumbo to adeptly guide her audience through the emotional complexities of Frederic Chopin's "Ballade No. 1 in G minor, Op. 23." Throughout the powerful piece she also showcased her dexterity, controlling the entire keyboard with ease.

Throughout the powerful piece she also showcased her dexterity, controlling the entire keyboard with ease.

The final piece of the first half, a modern composition by George Crumb, "Makrokosmos, Vol. 1," was divided into parts according to different zodiac signs and created a dramatic shift in the tone of the performance. It was obvious the piece was extraordinary when the piano lid was removed and Palumbo began to play the discordant piece by sharply pulling one of the springs in the piano's internal structure. Throughout much of the eerie composition, Palumbo played the keys with one hand while manipulating the tones and textures of their sounds by adjusting the piano's hidden mechanisms with the other.

To make the piece even more unique, small sections of Chopin's "Fantasie Impromptu" were mixed throughout, but never enough to allow it to take on the comfort of a sustained melody. The combination of contrasting musical ideas created tension between Chopin's symmetrical melody and the asymmetrical fragments of the rest of the composition.

Following the intermission, Palumbo completed her recital with Ludwig van Beethoven's "Sonata No. 23 in F minor, Op. 57 (Appassionata)." The familiar theme filled Rooke Recital Hall as Palumbo's senior performance ended with a flurry of impassioned playing. The triumphant themes of the piece were stately and dignified, appropriately reflecting Palumbo's grace.

This senior recital was the culmination of a prolific music career at the University, as Palumbo has not only pursued a music performance major, but has also played prominent roles in various other musical groups on campus, such as chapel choir and the all-female Silhouettes a cappella group. The amount of respect she has gained from others through her talent and dedication was evident by the number of people who attended her performance, sitting with rapt attention and then bursting into prolonged applause after each piece.

The Bison Chips' annual concert swoons the crowd

BY ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

The Weis Center for the Performing Arts hosted Chipfest, the Bison Chips' annual concert, on Saturday. This performance, which showcased not only the University's talented a cappella group, but also the Syrens, an all-female a cappella group from Dickinson College, enjoyed another year of success as the seats were packed.

The Chips performed a wide range of songs, both new and old, that allowed the audience to appreciate the hours of practice they had committed to the concert.

The Bison Chips began the evening with a video documentary, amusing the audience with a depiction of their escaping a run-in with Public Safety due to numerous "infractions," including their listening to James Brown music.

Before the headlining act took the stage, entertainment was provided by two Bison Chips alumni. Known to the crowd as Matt and Jason, these characters tried their best to liven up the show. Most onlookers, however, would not have been too upset had they cut their act about an hour shorter.

"I was looking forward to the performances of the Syrens and the Chips. Those two guys weren't really that funny and could've been done with out," Liz Manning '05 said.

Once the alumni left the stage, the Syrens began their act. Despite the failed attempt of the "warm-up" performance that preceded them, the Syrens still received a warm welcome. The guest group sang a four-song lineup, including a very melodic pseudo-hymnal, and seemed as pleased to be here as the audience was to have it.

The highly anticipated Chips then took the stage, ending the show with a great performance. The three first-time Chips, Dave Seal '06, Adam Gasiewicz '07 and Josh Kaehler '07, had their first solo performances, while seniors such as Dan Ross and Brian Bialas got a chance to sing a final number with the group. Bialas' song, "Sweet Caroline," had been dug out of the archives for this performance and was a big hit.

"I was almost in tears when they sang 'Sweet Caroline.' It's one of my favorite songs, and I knew they'd done it in the past. I had hoped they'd bring it back for this show," Caroline Karlberg '06 said.

Overall, the concert was a huge success for the Bison Chips and the Syrens. Through years of gaining a fan base and honing their style, especially with their traditional closer, "Coney Island Baby," by Lou Reed, the Bison Chips have consistently lived up to our now high expectations.

MEYER ENTERTAINS WITH ORPHEUS ORCHESTRA

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Double bass virtuoso Edgar Meyer returned to the Weis Center stage on March 26 to accompany the Orpheus Orchestra. The group performed works by 20th-century composers Charles Ives, Walter Piston and Aaron Copland. Earlier this semester, Meyer was featured in a concert with jazz banjo musician Bela Fleck.

Seniors: It's time to CELEBRATE and share fond FAREWELLS.... Make it MEMORABLE!

From pig roasts to an elegant cold buffet, we offer menu ideas to create your perfectly prepared celebration. We also offer a variety of favorite entrees, hors d'oeuvres & party platters to go.

If you're looking for a place to have your party or special dinner our Brynwood Room accommodates up to 125 guests and Rusty's South Room is available for dining affairs up to 30 guests.

PLAN NOW!!

BYRNWOOD
catering

For more information or reservations call us at:
Brynwood Catering: 570/524-2121 x1

Bull Run Inn Celebrates Seniors Night
Thurs., April 1
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.
All 21 and over are welcome!

DJ & Dancing

Food & Beverage Features

Check it out at: www.bullruninn.com

Arts & Entertainment

Dave's Double Take

A closer look at this week's hottest singles

BY DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

WVBU, the University's radio station, plays the best in modern rock music from both independent and mainstream artists. This week, I'm taking a look at music from American and British rock acts.

Lately, with the advent of bands such as The Darkness, acts from the United Kingdom are receiving more attention here in the States and are making American artists seem pretty weak in comparison.

This week's installment of the Double Take has some British acts far outshining an unimpressive song from a U.S. act, but also one outstanding track from the Midwest picking up the slack.

From the United Kingdom ...

Starsailor—
"Silence is Easy"

This band's album and a compilation featuring this song have been in rotation at WVBU since before break, so while it's not brand new to the station, this song is so excellent I thought it warranted

Courtesy of amazon.com

ed a profile here. Singer James Walsh exhibits fine, agile singing, alternately drawing out and slurring together the lyrics. The slightly melancholy lyrics are backed by sunny instrumentals, featuring steady piano playing, subtle bass and drums and touches of keyboards and chiming bells.

The heuristics before the last chorus features light "wah-wah" guitar and snatches of doo-wop style "oohs" and "ohs" in the backing vocals. This track is put together outstandingly well, and Starsailor is a British band destined to make it big without borrowing shamelessly from Radiohead.

Snow Patrol—
"Run"

This song is another well-constructed piece of rock music from the United Kingdom. It begins with a stark frame of electric guitar, then adds guitar with a light, warbling tone and a dry, mechanical back beat. The contrast between verse and chorus exhibits the standard soft-loud dynamics typical of modern rock music since Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit," but the chorus swells and expands beautifully while remaining at a slow, steady pace.

The vocals begin to soar from the weary, wispy sound of the verse as the guitar and bass generate more sound. The strings at the song's beginning and during the instrumental bridge is another nice melodic touch. This expansive, artful song certainly invites a second listen and got me interested in hearing more from this act, who, with its third album, is just beginning to make its name here in the United States.

Courtesy of amazon.com

Tears for Fears—
"Closest Thing to Heaven"

This track from the 1980s British band Tears for Fears marks the first new material jointly produced by Roland Orzabal and Curt Smith in 13 years. This song is not like their angst-ridden mainstream hits "Shout" and "Mad World," the latter of which was recently revived by artist Gary Jules and reached No. 1 on the U.K. charts. It's a light, airy pop tune with soaring, melodic vocals.

The instrumentals are dominated by piano and synthesizer, and the lyrics are heavy on romance and sentiment: "Make love your destination / Here we go, boys and girls / Act like a generation." This pleasant tune serves as a nice introduction for a new generation of listeners to the band's music, and will certainly get longtime fans excited for the new album due in April.

From here in the States...

Preston School of Industry—
"Caught in the Rain"

This is a simple, folksy tune featuring acoustic guitar, mandolin and pedal steel guitar.

Courtesy of amazon.com

tar. The vocals in the verses are flat and uninteresting, and there are no vocal harmonies in the chorus to add variety. The fuzzy, distorted guitar solo after the second time through the chorus did not strike my interest either.

Both lyrically and instrumentally, this song was pretty anonymous and failed to make a definite impression. There are some rock bands with a country tinge whose music I really enjoy, like Ryan Adams and the Jayhawks, but this offering from the Preston School of Industry was just too repetitive and simplistic to make me interested in hearing more.

The Get Up Kids—
"The One You Want"

Thank goodness for The Get Up Kids. This Kansas-based band has been a mainstay of the emo-punk scene since its debut album, "Something to Write Home About," was released. After the band took a more acoustic, subdued approach on its last album, electric guitars are back in full force on this track, chugging along rhythmically and twisting into complex, intricate layers.

Courtesy of amazon.com

The song is a nice bit of melodic pop-rock, driven by guitars, backed by keyboards, and topped off with clear, high-pitched vocals. The pattern of verse and chorus is broken up by a rhythmically syncopated bridge, as well as a skilled, energetic guitar solo backed by "woo-hoo-hoo!" vocals. This catchy, enjoyable track is a great first single and should make a lot of fans of punk and indie-rock very happy.

Fancy footwork showcased in Tustin

Student choreographers' and dancers' time to shine

BY DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

DANCE PREVIEW

The University's finest dancers and choreographers will be featured tonight at 8 p.m. and performed last night in the Tustin Black Box Theatre. The Department of Theatre and Dance's Choreographers' Showcase will include many different styles of dance, performed by artists with very diverse backgrounds and experiences in the world of dance.

The program consists of 14 short pieces, including jazz, ballet, modern and musical theatre. Many of the pieces have been choreographed by students, and three pieces were created for student dancers by faculty members in the Department of Theatre and Dance.

Ashley Baer '06 (tap and jazz), Kristin Bassett '06 (hip hop), Heather Beck '04 (tap), Laurie Brzezinski '06 (musical theatre), Sarah Close '05 (jazz), Janelle Nodturtur '07 (ballet) and Vita Lamberson '06 (contemporary ballet and jazz modern) will be featured in the showcase.

Associate Professor of Dance Er-Dong Hu choreographed a contemporary ballet piece accompanied by live drumming. Assistant Professor of Theatre and Dance Paula Davis-Larson's piece features Romanian folk dances, and Visiting Assistant Professor of Theater and Dance Kelly Knox created a modern dance number set to the music of 20th century composer Laurie Anderson.

Though several dancers will be featured as soloists during the showcase, Knox stresses that the performance is about "every dancer."

"All of the dancers are equally important ... the purpose of this concert is to provide a venue for new and experimental choreography," Knox said.

Knox credits Lauren Dugan '04 and Beck with "bring[ing] the concert to life." They are acting as concert directors, and Dugan and Beck "are incredible women who have been involved with Choreographers' Showcase throughout their [University] careers," Knox said.

As directors, Dugan and Beck are responsible for guiding the performers and technical assistants for the show, deciding how to manage lighting, sound and spacing on stage, keeping the performance organized by telling the dancers where to be at what time, and arranging tickets sales and concert programs.

"The choreographers and dancers are very responsive to suggestions by Heather and myself," Dugan said. "Choreographers' Showcase [is] ... an opportunity to dance and perform without giving into a big time commitment. Rehearsal is only once a week, and we come to have fun."

Students who are enrolled in dance classes, minoring in dance and who express a love for the arts are all involved in this program, leading to a very diverse and exciting range of techniques and presentations.

Beck appreciates the openness and inclusiveness of the production.

"There's always a place for anyone with an interest in dance to perform, no matter what their level of experience is. It has places for people who haven't danced since they were seven and those who have danced the past 17 years," Beck said.

A highlight of the evening will be the live accompaniment by guest artists Stacie Fox and Phil Hayes. Each number in the show will begin with live music.

In addition to the special use of live music, Beck encourages the audience to expect some other surprising performance elements.

"As for this year's variety ... the show involves portable ballet bars, top hats and a pineapple," Beck said.

Though the concert is not a production of the Bucknell Dance Company, members of the company are featured as both performers and choreographers. The company has also been involved in selling tickets and laying the floor for the performance.

Melissa Agrimanakis '06 is a member of the company and is appearing as the soloist in a classical ballet piece choreographed by Hu and set to music from Tchaikovsky's "Swan Lake." She said she has enjoyed working one-on-one with Hu in learning choreography created by another performer.

"Although my dancing is not at the same levels as theirs [those who have previously performed the piece], ... it feels good to know that I can actually finish a piece that a great dancer has danced," Agrimanakis said.

Students from the Department of Theatre and Dance are also involved in helping to put the show together from off stage. Chris Stokes '06 is the lighting designer, Christina Weniger '06 is the sound technician and Emily Rackoff '04 is the stage manager.

Do not forget to check out the Choreographers' Showcase at 8 tonight in the Tustin Black Box Theatre and witness the display of tremendous talent and artistry of many University students. Even if you have never been to a dance performance, the breadth of material and innovative new techniques are sure to provide you with something you will enjoy.

BUCKNELL BANDS BATTLE IT OUT

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Seven bands competed at the University's annual Battle of the Bands, sponsored by Phi Kappa Psi and Alpha Chi Omega. Proceeds from the contest went to Lewisburg and Milton Library Children's Programs.

The Winfield Baptist Church
"The Bible Preaching Church For the Whole Family"
(Founded 1863)
Invites both men and women of Bucknell to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 am;
Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening Worship 6:30 pm
Evangelical

Traditional and contemporary Christian music
Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thornbury
Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28 acre site 3.5 miles south of campus. Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 mile, church on the right. For more information or transportation call 524-2735 or 743-7494 (any time)

Seniors: It's time to CELEBRATE and share fond FAREWELLS.... Make it MEMORABLE!

From pig roasts to an elegant cold buffet, we offer menu ideas to create your perfectly prepared celebration. We also offer a variety of favorite entrees, hors d'oeuvres & party platters to go.

If you're looking for a place to have your party or special dinner our Brynwood Room accommodates up to 125 guests and Rusty's South Room is available for dining affairs up to 30 guests.

PLAN NOW!!

BYRNWOOD
catering

For more information or reservations call us at:
Brynwood Catering: 570/524-2121 x1

Bull Run Inn Celebrates Seniors Night
Thurs., April 1
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.
All 21 and over are welcome!

DJ & Dancing

Food & Beverage Features

Check it out at: www.bullruninn.com

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL
Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net for Transportation

THE Bucknellian

BECAUSE IT IS JUST THAT STRONG

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Bucknellians for Peace host film on Iraq war

The Bucknellians for Peace protest the Iraq war in 2003. Although the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq were not stopped, the club has continued recruiting and educating members of the community and supporting the larger cause of peaceful U.S. policy.

By CHRIS STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

The Bucknellians for Peace held a concert and showed a movie last weekend in a project to increase campus awareness of the debate over the Iraq war. The organization continues to grow and expand as it embraces more issues and more students find a collective voice for their beliefs.

"Students come to Bucknell and enter the Bucknell 'bubble' and have little contact with the outside world, making many students apathetic to world affairs,"

Hasan Sultan '04 said.

"Students work really hard but because they are so isolated they are more concerned with issues that directly relate to them," Josh Fisher '04 said.

BFP was created in the fall of 2001, following the events of Sept. 11. BFP was first mobilized in reaction to military action in Afghanistan. The group formed a protest outside the post office, and since then has organized peace protests against such military action as the war in Iraq.

BFP diligently works to spread its message to the campus community and provide an outlet for all who feel strongly about war and peace.

"All are welcome," BFP President Aislinn Hyde '07 said.

Hyde encourages anyone who feels strongly about their beliefs on war and peace to attend BFP's weekly meetings at 6 p.m. on Wednesdays in the Niche.

"I feel some people are scared off by the name," Hyde said. "People might think we are a group of 'hippies,' which isn't true. We really are a group of students coming together and trying to make a difference."

"Our biggest issue right now is Iraq and the war on Iraq," Hyde said. "We are upset with the way Bush has been handling the issues."

Sultan said it is clear that we cannot go back and change what has happened. He said one of the most important questions the organization is trying to address is, "What should we do now?"

In response to this question, BFP decided to hold the event on Saturday night, which offered some different views on actions taken under the Bush administration. The event featured a local band, Good Without One, which performed music expressing a theme of concern for the current state of national and world affairs.

Following the band, BFP presented the film "Uncovered: The Whole Truth About Iraq." Created and distributed as a "public service" by Robert Greenwald, the film offered strong criticism from more than 20 political experts concerning the Bush administration's reasons for going to war in Iraq.

At the conclusion of the film, the organization held a discussion examining the film and the feelings of those in attendance. They concluded that something needed to be done about the United States' ongoing military presence in Iraq.

"The general consensus of the debate was that something must be done to the Bush administration to find the truth and have the administration brought to justice if they were found to misrepresent the case to the American people," Sultan said. "People agreed that something must be done to improve the situation in Iraq immediately."

"People might think we are a group of 'hippies,' which isn't true. We really are a group of students coming together and trying to make a difference."

—Aislinn Hyde, BFP president

Hyde echoed the sentiments of the debate, but recognized the difficulty of getting things to change.

"The only way to fix the situation is to have people donate money, sign petitions, participate in protests, write letters and do whatever they can do. All the little things help and people need to realize that," Hyde said.

BFP is planning a second screening of Saturday's film on April 19. This showing is in response to the Conservatives Club's speaker the evening before—Christopher Hitchens, a well-known writer and supporter of the war in Iraq, will speak in Bucknell Hall on April 14.

"Many times when a side is presented, groups don't show both sides. We want to show the other side so people can see the argument in its entirety," Hyde said.

In addition to showing the movie, the BFP intends to distribute fliers and other materials and to hold another discussion following the film.

Hyde said she hopes for more diversity in the next discussion group with both sides well represented.

"We would like to encourage the conservatives on campus to come to the movie and try to counter the arguments presented in the film," Sultan said.

As the semester starts to wind down, BFP does not have any other major events besides the second showing of the film on its agenda. However, the BFP will start making plans for next semester and several fundraising projects and awareness projects it hopes to initiate.

BFP hopes to raise funds for causes associated with nation building, rebuilding Iraq and other organizations that are in support of peace. It also hopes to help educate the campus about the presidential election and motivate students to seriously consider the events that took place in Afghanistan and Iraq when they go to the polls.

Law protects rights of unborn victims in violent crimes

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

The Senate voted on March 25 by a 61-38 margin to make harming a fetus during a violent federal crime a separate crime. The bill is being touted as a monumental victory for those seeking equal protection for the legal rights of the unborn. But some fear that it could eventually lead to an overruling of Roe v. Wade.

"The Unborn Victims of Violence Act provides that an attack on a pregnant woman is now regarded as two distinct crimes, an attack on the woman and an attack on her fetus, whatever the stage of development," The New York Times reported.

The Times also reported that although the act "exempts legally performed abortions," it also defines a "child in utero" as a "member of the homo sapiens, at any stage of development, who is carried in the womb."

The implications of the bill are that an assailant who attacks a pregnant woman can be prosecuted for separate offenses against both the woman and her unborn child.

Abortion-rights lawmakers contend that giving the fetus the same legal rights as the mother from the point of conception sets a huge legal precedent that can be used in future abortion rights legal challenges, CNN reported.

The president has promised to sign the bill, which passed the House in February.

There are two victims—the mother and the unborn child—and both victims should be protected by federal law," Bush said in a statement praising the bill.

"Much of this is preparing for the day the Supreme Court has a majority that will overrule Roe v. Wade."

—Katie Michaelman, NARAL president

Many critics of the bill think that this piece of legislation is a way for anti-abortion forces to "chip away at Roe v. Wade and women's rights to privacy and freedom of choice," said Katie Michaelman, president of NARAL

Pro-Choice America, according to CNN.com.

"Much of this is preparing for the day the Supreme Court has a majority that will overrule Roe v. Wade," said Michaelman, according to CNN.com.

This legislation is designed to undermine the legalization of abortion under Roe v. Wade, according to Tom Teepen of the Cox News Service. He emphasized that it dovetails the law banning partial-birth abortion that was made last year.

Meanwhile, supporters deny that the bill is linked to abortion. Sen. Mike DeWine (R-Ohio) said, "this bill is about simple justice." Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) said the bill was "powerful because this act is about simple humanity, about simple reality."

Another supporter of the legislation, Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) said during the Senate debate that this law is "not about abortion, but about criminals who attack pregnant women."

According to CNN, other advocates of the bill have linked it to Laci Peterson and her unborn child, who were the victims of a highly publicized murder case in California.

Because California is one of the 29 states that has an unborn victims law, Scott Peterson, who is Laci Peterson's widower and accused of her murder, is being tried on double murder charges for the deaths of both Laci Peterson and her child.

In an attempt to determine what unborn children can physically feel, a physician could testify for the government in the near future to help prove the claim that fetuses can feel pain while still in the womb, MSNBC reported.

U.S. District Judge Richard Casey of New York has called on Dr. Kanwaljeet S. Anand to help him assess the claims Congress has made by saying that partial birth abortion is "brutal and inhumane" and that "the child will fully experience the pain associated with piercing his or her skull and sucking out his or her brain."

Through extensive research, Anand found that a fetus can begin to feel pain within 20 weeks of gestation.

This implies that if an unborn fetus was harmed by a criminal act, as in the case of Laci Peterson's unborn child, it would be considered subject to pain and treated as a human, with protection from attack under federal law.

Mya's Coffee House

Delicious Hot Chocolate available with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo
and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
-State of the Art Body Jewelry-

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $975
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $850
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100
Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate

521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837

570-523-3244

524-9000

Party with us late till 3 am!

Party Deal:
5 or More Large Pizzas
$6 each

Bread Deal:
Order any Pizza at regular price and get a Free Bread Item!

Wing Deal:
Medium Pizza and 10 Wings/Kickers
$10.99

Only Valid House Party Weekend!

Now Hiring...

ALDI INC.

- ✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
- ✓ Flexible AM hours
- ✓ $9.51 an hour wage

+ Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.

110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

All units:

- Close to campus.
- Off street parking.
- 24/7 maintenance.
- Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available
2004/05

1-6
Bedrooms

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

LBRYNWOOD
Rentals

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Political Ramblings

Making politics fun by making fun of politics

Former Bucknellian editors-in-chief Jason Rubinstein and Peter Hackman continue their look at the lighter side of politics. This week, they offer the exciting conclusion to their bar fight for the ages.

... just then, a hush falls over the crowd as Bush and company enter the Towne Tavern to confront John Kerry and his Democratic allies.

The stage is set for one of the epic battles of modern politics. Students and locals sit together awaiting the monumental event. Bush reaches for a cowboy hat on the coat rack. Lifting up the brim, he beams a cocky Texas grin at the Kerry camp. "I've bombed Afghanistan back further in the Stone Age and avenged my father's honor in Iraq; I think I can take you," he says.

"Bring it on," replies Kerry, using the only line he ever gets applause for.

"That's my line, you 87-pound sorority-girl look-alike," Bush retorts.

"Yeeooooohhh!" yeeoooh's Dean, as he charges Powell. "Get downwwn, Powell," Schwarzenegger says.

"Hasta la vista, Dr ..." Schwarzenegger says as he swats Dean into a nearby table. Dean tries to stand, but an Iowan family at the University for House Party yells to Dean, in a moment of historic irony, "sit down, you've had your turn."

"Don't mess with Cali-form-a," laughs Schwarzenegger.

"Yo, Gov, the phrase is 'don't mess with Texas,'" says Sharpton, surprised he has outlasted Dean again.

"You want to take this outside?" asks Arnold. "I'll show you the way we do this in California." Sharpton, Powell and Schwarzenegger exit the front of the building while Dean sneaks out the back, watching for the right moment to jump back into the spotlight.

"Looks like it is just you and me. Pick your weapon," says Bush.

"Weapon?" asks Kerry. "I choose WMDs." Bush searches his pocket and under the nearest table before bursting out into laughter. "Guess I can't find any. Then I'll take Karl Rove as my weapon of choice."

Kerry looks somewhat confused for a second, then sees Rove getting out of a car and knows he has to think fast.

"Aardvark. A-a-r-d-v-a-r-k. Aardvark. Aardvark is a noun. Aardvark is a nocturnal African mammal with a long snout that feeds on termites. Aardwolf. A-a-r-d-w-o-l-f ..." he says.

"You can't filibuster me!" exclaims Bush. Not knowing what to do, Bush walks out of the bar to consult with Rove; Kerry follows. "... Aardwolf is a noun. The plural form of ..." Just then, Public Safety arrive, demanding ID and a sobriety test.

"But I'm so old I look like a corpse," Kerry explains. "And I'm the commander-in-chief. If I say something that Rove or Cheney tell me to, you have to listen," Bush protests.

"It doesn't matter who you are or how old you are, no one is allowed to have any fun, legal or otherwise. Now take your breath-test or I'll be forced to recommend you two for expulsion for off-again intoxication," says the officer.

Kerry blows a .06 and is released into the custody of the corner.

Bush's Secret Service detail finally catches up with the president and whisks him away, using protocol from operation "No more drug or alcohol arrests for W."

FOUR U.S. CIVILIANS DIE IN IRAQ TERROR

Courtesy of Reuters

Four security contractors working for the U.S. government were killed in their cars in a roadside grenade attack in central Iraq on Wednesday. On the same day, five soldiers died in a bombing near a military base at Habbaniya.

HOW SHOULD THE COURT RULE?

Supreme Court hears arguments on use of "under God" in Pledge

"I think they should take it out, but it doesn't really matter. I do believe in separation of church and state, but I also believe that some people are too nit-picky."
—Stephanie Wright '06

"I think they will rule against the plaintiff... how much difference can two words make?"
—Chris Mack '05

By CHRIS STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

The Pledge of Allegiance has been an integral part in the early education of Americans for generations. Recently, the U.S. Supreme Court started to hear testimony from Michael Newdow, an atheist who sued the Sacramento County, California school district, where his daughter attends school. According to CNN, Newdow claims that reciting "under God" in the pledge of allegiance in a public setting violates his daughter's rights as protected by the Constitution.

Newdow claims that the practice of a teacher-led pledge places his daughter in an unfair situation in which she is forced to conform instead of hold fast to her beliefs. According to CNN, Newdow accuses the government of approving the recitations of "a prayer" in school and states that the government must remain out of religious affairs.

The Supreme Court has heard two previous challenges to the use of "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance and in both circumstances the court ruled in favor of the pledge.

The Supreme Court is expected to rule on the case in July, but the court may choose to sidestep the issue entirely and instead cite legal issues in Newdow's past.

The words in question were added to the pledge in 1954 as part of a publicity campaign against communism in the early stages of the Cold War.

"It doesn't bother me either way. It's in now and doesn't affect me."
—Michael Rice-Shesh '06

"Since the American tradition is founded on thoughts of freedom of religion, and one of the most important aspects of the government is the separation of church and state, then any mention of religion, may it be as specific as to indicate a certain faith, or as broad as the mention of God in the pledge, is a direct violation of the governments guarantee to protect our religious freedoms and contradicts American liberty."
—Candice Olszewski '04

Commentary: 9/11 panel's necessary work leads to shortsighted arguments

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

It is hard to deny that the attacks of Sept. 11 represent a serious failure of intelligence and counterterrorism. The country can only become more secure if we know what was responsible for those failures. That alone makes the independent commission now investigating the attacks a good idea.

But the unfortunate timing of the most public stage of the investigation is undermining what should be the greatest impact of the commission. Instead of an impartial analysis, representatives of the two parties fight to assign blame, and blame is not going to make us safer.

The bipartisan panel of current and former government officials has finally started taking high-profile sworn testimony. Former counterterrorism chief Richard Clarke and current National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice should be able to shed new light on the attacks. Instead, they are twisting the facts for political advantage.

Most reaction from the left has concentrated on finding some way to blame President Bush for allowing the attacks to happen. Likewise, Republican damage control seems to be about removing any responsibility from Bush and his appointees.

This is a perfectly natural response in an election year, but it is still wrong by any standard of national defense. Both parties have shown a commitment to strengthening our defenses, but still don't know what exactly

Courtesy of Reuters
Former counterterrorism officer Richard Clarke testifies before the Sept. 11 commission on March 24. A high-ranking official under four presidents, Clarke has achieved new publicity with the publication of his book accusing the Bush administration of mishandling the fight against terror.

went wrong to allow the attacks. Until then, we cannot be sure we have repaired our vulnerabilities.

Despite her willingness to speak at length on national news, Rice refused to testify, with the administration's blessing, until earlier this week. The Bush team claimed that executive privilege—the secrecy of communications between the president and his advisers—prevented Rice from testifying whether she wanted to or not, but that claim falls flat.

Less than eight years ago, President Clinton's security adviser, Sandy Bergman, testified before the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs. Even then the chairman called his testimony "not unprecedented"—contradicting the claim that Rice could set a new precedent by going under oath.

I am glad the president finally put the issue in perspective, but that he took more than a week shows seriously misplaced priorities. As long as Rice testifies by choice, there is still no precedent that forces a presidential adviser to reveal privileged information.

For that matter, there is nothing to stop Rice from refusing to answer a question that deals with classified information.

The bottom line is that the country cannot afford to let such a crucial investigation degrade into power mongering. Let us say one side manages to put the larger share of guilt on the other, and spins that into an election victory. That leaves us with a government that has refused responsibility for allowing the Sept. 11 attacks and will not feel as much pressure to find and fix the country's deepest weaknesses.

The only way to guarantee defense against terrorism is to find out why we could not do it before. If we can make Secret Service agents take a bullet for the president, can't we ask politicians to risk electoral defeat to safeguard the lives of Americans?

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

April 2, 2004

inside

Volume 133, Number 8

Features:

There are many families, including siblings, legacies and married professors, within the Bucknell community.

See pages B 8-9

Bison take three of four against Navy

Baseball sweeps Saturday doubleheader, splits a set with Mids on Sunday to start league play with 3-1 mark

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell baseball team grabbed an early lead in the Patriot League standings after the first weekend of intraleague competition, picking up wins in three of four contests against Navy this weekend.

The Bison swept a doubleheader Saturday with 2-1 and 5-1 victories and then split a twin-bill on Sunday, struggling to a 9-7 loss in the first game but tearing apart the Midshipmen for a 9-1 win in the second game.

The series moved the Bison's record to 12-7, overall and 3-1 in the league.

Despite dropping the third game of the series, the Bison were pleased with the weekend's outcome.

"Navy has been a top team in the Patriot League for a long time, so beating them is always great," pitcher Matt Daley '04 said. "It would have been nice to win the third game, but if we can keep winning three out of four every weekend, we will host the tournament and put ourselves in a very good situation."

Saturday's doubleheader sweep was marked by stellar pitching efforts from Daley and Kevin Miller '04, both of whom notched complete games for the Bison.

The series opener featured an intense pitcher's duel between Daley and Navy's Andy Froistad, with neither hurler allowing a run until the Bison slapped a pair on the board in the fifth.

Froistad, who had previously been unbeatable in league play, provided a formidable opponent for the Bison.

"Andy Froistad had the rare

Cecily Cairns—The Bucknellian
Chris Mahony '04 slides into home during the fourth inning of the Bison's 9-1 slaughter of Navy on Sunday. Mahony was out on the play, but made a large contribution to the team's offensive output over the course of the afternoon, banging out seven hits in eight at-bats with four RBI and two runs scored during Sunday's two games.

distinction of beating us twice last year and he did a great job of keeping our hitters at bay for the most part of today," Pitching Coach R.J. Grant said.

Froistad's effectiveness was outdone by Daley and by well-timed offensive efficiency from the Bison.

The Bison gave Daley a two-run cushion in the fifth inning, taking advantage of the Midshipmen's defensive foibles. A walk, a passed ball and an error put Chris Mahony '04 and Phil Bunting '05 on the corners for Ben Stoll '04, who sent both runners home with an RBI single. Stoll had two of the team's three hits in the game.

The Midshipmen kept the game suspenseful when they picked up an unearned run in the sixth on a pair of singles and an error, but Daley fanned Ryan McGinn to end the threat.

Daley finished off his seven-inning complete game by shutting down Navy in the final frame to give the Bison the 2-1 win.

The combined efforts of

Daley, the defense and offense provided exactly the start the Bison needed to kick off the weekend.

"I think it was crucial to win game one against Andy Froistad, the Navy pitcher who had never lost a Patriot League game," Head Coach Gene Depew said. "Matt Daley's pitching and Ben Stoll and Phil Bunting's timely hitting gave us the win."

Grant was also impressed with Daley's performance, especially his resilience in the game's final inning.

"He was getting tired and walked a guy, then threw the ball away," Grant said. "He refocused and went right after the next two guys, inducing a soft ground out and then taking matters into his own hands and struck out the last batter of the game."

In five starts this year Daley is now 5-0 with three complete games (two seven-inning games and one nine) and has held batters to a .151 average while striking out 8.49 batters per inning. He has not allowed an earned run in his last 22 innings.

The Bison benefited from another brilliant pitching effort in game two of the twinbill, as Miller stymied the Midshipmen through all nine innings, while opportunistic baserunning and a lively seventh inning from the offense gave the team a comfortable margin of victory.

Miller did not allow an earned run during his complete-game win, continuing where he left off last season as one of the

See BASEBALL, page B4

Tennis shuts out Towson 7-0

By JOSH HERWITT
Sports Editor

The men's and women's tennis teams took care of Towson on Monday, combining to win win every singles and doubles match.

It was just the second time the men (6-6) took all nine contests in their 7-0 victory. The men routed St. Francis (Pennsylvania) in similar fashion Sept. 26 during their fall season.

The men's doubles attack featured a dominating performance by Gerald DiChiara '05 and Joe Menezes '05.

"We looked sharp out there," Menezes said. "I think the entire team is starting to click together."

Playing together for the first time this season, DiChiara and Menezes defeated Towson's Chris Rowland and Todd Nagel 9-8 (3).

Season-long duo Nick Deneff '05 and Matt Pikus '07 won their match 8-3 over Doug Ferguson and Itai Divar.

Asher Salam '06 and Aaron Saperstein '06 were also paired together for the first time this year, but had no trouble in taking their match 8-6 against Mike Edison and Kevin Kahn.

In the first position for singles, Deneff took the match 6-1, 1-0 after his opponent Rowland retired early in the second set.

DiChiara took the second singles match over Dvir, coming from behind to win, 3-6, 6-4, 6-2. Menezes dropped the second set and needed a third set to defeat Ferguson, 7-5, 1-6, 6-4.

"This match gave us good preparation for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

event for the Patriot League

Tyler Kidd—The Bucknellian

Asher Salam '06 sets up for a return in his singles match. The men and women grabbed a 7-0 victory from Towson on Monday. Salam gave up only one point throughout his singles match and also secured a win in doubles with his partner Aaron Saperstein '06.

Cheerleading takes first at NEPA Challenge

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell cheerleading squad made its first appearance in a competition, participating in the North Eastern Pennsylvania Cheerleading Challenge at King's College on Monday. The debut was a stellar one, as the team picked up first place in the college co-ed division and also saw several individuals fare well throughout the event.

In the Co-ed Partner Stunt, tri-captain Will Ding '04 and Danielle Gutelius '05 took home first-place honors, and Kristy Langley '05 also scored a victory with her performance in the Individual Cheer event.

Aubrey Grosser '06 and tri-captain Kendra Johnston '04 also placed in the Individual Cheer competition, grabbing second and fourth place, respectively, while Beth Ann Zarko '07 picked up fourth place in the Individual Dance event.

In the Stunt Group competition, the team of Grosser, Johnston, Langley, tri-captain Rachel Snyder '04 and Danielle Watson '05 placed sixth.

Head Coach Heather Walters was thrilled with the team's win in the landmark event for the program.

"I am extremely proud to be the coach of such an awesome cheerleading squad," Walters said. "I always stress how there's no 'I' in team and I think we've definitely proven that after this weekend's competition."

The cheerleading squad practices hard throughout the year to prepare themselves for football and basketball seasons, and this year it took on the additional challenge of preparing for the competition.

During the past months, the squad has been practicing for basketball games and putting in extra hours to prepare for last weekend's event.

"We practiced several hours every single day of the week in order to prepare not only for games but also for the competition, and when we went out there, it showed," Langley said.

Some of the work for the team involved designing and perfecting its own original routine. While some squads hire professional choreographers, Snyder, Johnston and Walters choreographed their own routine for Bucknell in addition to cutting their own music for it.

"I think [our routine] turned out so well because it included a lot of creativity, and the whole squad worked so incredibly hard to make it work," Johnston said.

The team had to overcome a bit of unexpected adversity while performing the routine in the competition, as a CD-player malfunction left them without music for the final 30 seconds of their performance. The group remained unfazed and finished the routine with only the cheers of the crowd as sound.

"As shocked as we all were, we kept going through the rest of the routine just counting it out ourselves," Johnston said. "A lot of squads wouldn't have been able to recover like that."

Despite the glitch, the routine was sharp enough to beat out some

See CHEER, page B5

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Political Ramblings

Making politics fun by making fun of politics

Former Bucknellian editors-in-chief Jason Rubinstein and Peter Hackman continue their look at the lighter side of politics. This week, they offer the exciting conclusion to their bar fight for the ages.

... just then, a hush falls over the crowd as Bush and company enter the Towne Tavern to confront John Kerry and his Democratic allies.

The stage is set for one of the epic battles of modern politics. Students and locals sit together awaiting the monumental event.

Bush reaches for a cowboy hat on the coat rack. Lifting up the brim, he beams a cocky Texas grin at the Kerry camp. "I've bombed Afghanistan back further in the Stone Age and avenged my father's honor in Iraq. I think I can take you," he says.

Bring it on, replies Kerry, using the only line he ever gets applause for.

"That's my line, you 87-pound sorority-girl look-alike," Bush retorts.

"Yeeooooohhh!" yeeooooh's Dean, as he charges Powell.

"Get downwin, Powell," Schwarzenegger says.

Hasta la vista, Dr. . . . Schwarzenegger says as he swats Dean into a nearby table. Dean tries to stand, but an Iowan family at the University for House Party yells to Dean, in a moment of historic irony, "sit down, you've had your turn."

"Don't mess with Californi-a," laughs Schwarzenegger.

"Yo, Gov, the phrase is don't mess with Texas," says Sharpton, surprised he has outlasted Dean again.

"You want to take this outside?" asks Arnold. "I'll show you the way we do this in California."

Sharpton, Powell, and Schwarzenegger exit the front of the building while Dean sneaks out the back, watching for the right moment to jump back into the spotlight.

"Looks like it is just you and me. Pick your weapon," says Bush.

"Weapon?" asks Kerry.

"I choose WMDs." Bush searches his pocket and under the nearest table before bursting out into laughter. "Guess I can't find any. Then I'll take Karl Rove as my weapon of choice."

Kerry looks somewhat confused for a second, then sees Rove getting out of a car and knows he has to think fast.

Aardvark is a nocturnal African mammal with a long snout that feeds on termites. Aardwolf, Aard-dw-o-lf, he says.

"You can't filibuster me," exclaims Bush. Not knowing what to do, Bush walks out of the bar to consult with Rove. Kerry follows.

Aardwolf is a noun. The plural form of.

Just then, Public Safety arrives, demanding ID and a sobriety test.

"But I'm so old I look like a corpse," Kerry explains.

"And I'm the commander-in-chief. If I say something that Rove or Cheney tell me to, you have to listen," Bush protests.

"It doesn't matter who you are or how old you are, no one is allowed to have any fun, legal or otherwise. Now take your breath-test or I'll be forced to recommend you two for expulsion for off-age intoxication," says the officer.

Kerry blows a 00 and is released into the custody of the corner.

Bush's Secret Service detail finally catches up with the president and whisks him away, using protocol from operation "No more drug or alcohol arrests for W."

FOUR U.S. CIVILIANS DIE IN IRAQ TERROR

Courtesy of Reuters

Four security contractors working for the U.S. government were killed in their cars in a roadside grenade attack in central Iraq on Wednesday. On the same day, five soldiers died in a bombing near a military base at Habhaniya.

HOW SHOULD THE COURT RULE?

Supreme Court hears arguments on use of "under God" in Pledge

"I think they should take it out, but it doesn't really matter. I do believe in separation of church and state, but I also believe that some people are too nit-picky."
—Stephanie Wright '06

"I think they will rule against the plaintiff... how much difference can two words make?"
—Chris Mack '05

"I think it should be removed. I don't personally have a problem with it, but taking into consideration separation of church and state, it shouldn't be in the pledge."
—Allison Davies '04

By CHRIS STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

The Pledge of Allegiance has been an integral part in the early education of Americans for generations. Recently, the U.S. Supreme Court started to hear testimony from Michael Newdow, an atheist who sued the Sacramento County, California school district, where his daughter attends school. According to CNN, Newdow claims that reciting "under God" in the pledge of allegiance in a public setting violates his daughter's rights as protected by the Constitution.

Newdow claims that the practice of a teacher-led pledge places his daughter in an unfair situation in which she is forced to conform instead of hold fast to her beliefs. According to CNN, Newdow accuses the government of approving the recitations of "a prayer" in school and states that the government must remain out of religious affairs.

The Supreme Court has heard two previous challenges to the use of "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance and in both circumstances the court ruled in favor of the pledge.

The Supreme Court is expected to rule on the case in July, but the court may choose to sidestep the issue entirely and instead cite legal issues in Newdow's past.

The words in question were added to the pledge in 1954 as part of a publicity campaign against communism in the early stages of the Cold War.

"It doesn't bother me either way. It's in now and doesn't affect me."
—Michael Rice-Shesh '06

"Since the American tradition is founded on thoughts of freedom of religion, and one of the most important aspects of the government is the separation of church and state, then any mention of religion, may it be as specific as to indicate a certain faith, or as broad as the mention of God in the pledge, is a direct violation of the governments guarantee to protect our religious freedoms and contradicts American liberty."
—Candice Olszewski '04

Commentary: 9/11 panel's necessary work leads to shortsighted arguments

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

It is hard to deny that the attacks of Sept. 11 represent a serious failure of intelligence and counterterrorism. The country can only become more secure if we know what was responsible for those failures. That alone makes the independent commission now investigating the attacks a good idea.

But the unfortunate timing of the most public stage of the investigation is undermining what should be the greatest impact of the commission. Instead of an impartial analysis, representatives of the two parties fight to assign blame, and blame is not going to make us safer.

The bipartisan panel of current and former government officials has finally started taking high-profile sworn testimony. Former counterterrorism chief Richard Clarke and current National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice should be able to shed new light on the attacks. Instead, they are twisting the facts for political advantage.

Most reaction from the left has concentrated on finding some way to blame President Bush for allowing the attacks to happen. Likewise, Republican damage control seems to be about removing any responsibility from Bush and his appointees.

This is a perfectly natural response in an election year, but it is still wrong by any standard of national defense. Both parties have shown a commitment to strengthening our defenses, but still don't know what exactly went wrong to allow the attacks. Until then, we cannot be sure we have repaired our vulnerabilities.

Courtesy of Reuters

Former counterterrorism officer Richard Clarke testifies before the Sept. 11 commission on March 24. A high-ranking official under four presidents, Clarke has achieved new publicity with the publication of his book accusing the Bush administration of mishandling the fight against terror.

Despite her willingness to speak at length on national news, Rice refused to testify, with the administration's blessing, until after this week. The Bush team claimed that executive privilege—the secrecy of communications between the president and his advisers—prevented Rice from testifying whether she wanted to or not, but that claim falls flat.

Less than eight years ago, President Clinton's security adviser, Sandy Berger, testified before the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs. Even then, the chairman called his testimony "not unprecedented"—contradicting the claim that Rice could set a new precedent by going under oath.

I am glad the president finally put the issue in perspective, but that he took more than a week shows seriously misplaced priorities. As long as Rice testifies by choice, there is still no precedent that forces a presidential adviser to reveal privileged information.

For that matter, there is nothing to stop Rice from refusing to answer a question that deals with classified information.

The bottom line is that the country cannot afford to let such

Bucknellian

April 2, 2004

Volume 133, Number 8

Features:

There are many families, including siblings, legacies and married professors, within the Bucknell community.

See pages B 8-9

Bison take three of four against Navy

Baseball sweeps Saturday doubleheader, splits a set with Mids on Sunday to start league play with 3-1 mark

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell baseball team grabbed an early lead in the Patriot League standings after the first weekend of intraleague competition, picking up wins in three of four contests against Navy this weekend.

The Bison swept a doubleheader Saturday with 2-1 and 5-1 victories and then split a twin-bill on Sunday, struggling to a 9-7 loss in the first game but tearing apart the Midshipmen for a 9-1 win in the second game.

The series moved the Bison's record to 12-7 overall and 3-1 in the league.

Despite dropping the third game of the series, the Bison were pleased with the weekend's outcome.

"Navy has been a top team in the Patriot League for a long time, so beating them is always great," pitcher Matt Daley '04 said. "It would have been nice to win the third game, but if we can keep winning three out of four every weekend, we will host the tournament and put ourselves in a very good situation."

Saturday's doubleheader sweep was marked by stellar pitching efforts from Daley and Kevin Miller '04, both of whom notched complete games for the Bison.

The series opener featured an intense pitcher's duel between Daley and Navy's Andy Froistad, with neither hurler allowing a run until the Bison slapped a pair on the board in the fifth.

Froistad, who had previously been unbeatable in league play, provided a formidable opponent for the Bison.

"Andy Froistad had the rare

Cecily Cairns—The Bucknellian

Chris Mahony '04 slides into home during the fourth inning of the Bison's 9-1 slaughter of Navy on Sunday. Mahony was out on the play, but made a large contribution to the team's offensive output over the course of the afternoon, bashing out seven hits in eight at-bats with four RBI and two runs scored during Sunday's two games.

distinction of beating us twice last year and he did a great job of keeping our hitters at bay for the most part of today," Pitching Coach R.J. Grant said.

Froistad's effectiveness was outdone by Daley and by well-timed offensive efficiency from the Bison.

The Bison gave Daley a two-run cushion in the fifth inning, taking advantage of the Midshipmen's defensive foibles. A walk, a passed ball and an error put Chris Mahony '04 and Phil Bunting '05 on the corners for Ben Stoll '04, who sent both runners home with an RBI single. Stoll had two of the team's three hits in the game.

The Midshipmen kept the game suspenseful when they picked up an unearned run in the sixth on a pair of singles and an error, but Daley fanned Ryan McGinn to end the threat.

Daley finished off his seven-inning complete game by shutting down Navy in the final frame to give the Bison the 2-1 win.

The combined efforts of

Daley, the defense and the offense provided exactly the start the Bison needed to kick off the weekend.

"I think it was crucial to win game one against Andy Froistad, the Navy pitcher who had never lost a Patriot League game," Head Coach Gene Depew said. "Matt Daley's pitching and Ben Stoll and Phil Bunting's timely hitting gave us the win."

Grant was also impressed with Daley's performance, especially his resilience in the game's final inning.

"He was getting tired and walked a guy, then threw the ball away," Grant said. "He refused and went right after the next two guys, inducing a soft ground out and then taking matters into his own hands and struck out the last batter of the game."

In five starts this year, Daley is now 5-0 with three complete games (two seven-inning games and one nine) and has held batters to a 1.51 average while striking out 8.39 batters per inning. He has not allowed an earned run in his last 22 innings. The Bison benefited from another brilliant pitching effort in game two of the twinbill, as Miller stymied the Midshipmen through all nine innings, while opportunistic baserunning and a lively seventh inning from the offense gave the team a comfortable margin of victory.

Miller did not allow an earned run during his complete-game win, continuing where he left off last season as one of the

See BASEBALL, page B4

Tennis shuts out Towson 7-0

By JOSH HERWITT
Sports Editor

The men's and women's tennis teams took care of Towson on Monday, combining to win win every singles and doubles match.

It was just the second time the men (6-6) took all nine contests in their 7-0 victory. The men routed St. Francis (Pennsylvania) in similar fashion Sept. 26 during their fall season. The men's doubles attack featured a dominating performance by Gerald Dichiaro '05 and Joe Menezes '05.

"We looked sharp out there," Menezes said. "I think the entire team is starting to click together."

Playing together for the first time this season, Dichiaro and Menezes defeated Towson's Chris Rowland and Todd Nagel 9-8 (3).

Season-long duo Nick Deneffro '05 and Matt Pikus '07 won their match 8-3 over Doug Ferguson and Itai Dvair.

Asher Salam '06 and Aaron Saperstein '06 were also paired together for the first time this year, but had no trouble in taking their match 8-6 against Mike Edison and Kevin Kahn.

In the first position for singles, Deneffro took the match 6-1, 1-0 after his opponent Rowland retired early in the second set.

Dichiaro took the second singles match over Dvair, coming from behind to win, 3-6, 6-4, 6-2. Menezes dropped the second set and needed a third set to defeat Ferguson, 7-5, 1-6, 6-4.

"This match gave us good preparation for the Patriot League

See TENNIS, page B5

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Asher Salam '06 sets up for a return in his singles match. The men and women grabbed a 7-0 victory from Towson on Monday. Salam gave up only one point throughout his singles match and also secured a win in doubles with his partner Aaron Saperstein '06.

Cheerleading takes first at NEPA Challenge

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell cheerleading squad made its first appearance in a competition, participating in the North Eastern Pennsylvania Cheerleading Challenge at King's College on Monday. The debut was a stellar one, as the team picked up first place in the college co-ed division and also saw several individuals fare well throughout the event.

In the Co-ed Partner Stunt, tri-captain Will Ding '04 and Danielle Gutelius '05 took home first-place honors, and Kristy Langley '05 also scored a victory with her performance in the Individual Cheer event.

Aubrey Grosser '06 and tri-captain Kendra Johnston '04 also placed in the Individual Cheer competition, grabbing second and fourth place, respectively, while Beth Ann Zarke '07 picked up fourth place in the Individual Dance event.

In the Stunt Group competition, the team of Grosser, Johnston, Langley, tri-captain Rachel Snyder '04 and Danielle Watson '05 placed sixth.

Head Coach Heather Walters was thrilled with the team's win in the landmark event for the program.

"I am extremely proud to be the coach of such an awesome cheerleading squad," Walters said. "I always stress how there's no 'I' in team and I think we've definitely proven that after this weekend's competition."

The cheerleading squad practices hard throughout the year to prepare themselves for football and basketball seasons, and this year it took on the additional challenge of preparing for the competition.

During the past months, the squad has been practicing for basketball games and putting in extra hours to prepare for last weekend's event.

"We practiced several hours every single day of the week in order to prepare not only for games but also for the competition, and when we went out there, it showed," Langley said.

Some of the work for the team involved designing and perfecting its own original routine. While some squads hire professional choreographers, Snyder, Johnston and Walters choreographed their own routine for Bucknell in addition to cutting their own music for it.

"I think [our routine] turned out so well because it included a lot of creativity, and the whole squad worked so incredibly hard to make it work," Johnston said.

The team had to overcome a bit of unexpected adversity while performing the routine in the competition, as a CD-player malfunction left them without music for the final 30 seconds of their performance. The group remained unfazed and finished the routine with only the cheers of the crowd as sound.

"As shocked as we all were, we kept going through the rest of the routine just counting it out ourselves," Johnston said. "A lot of squads wouldn't have been able to recover like that."

Despite the glitch, the routine was sharp enough to beat out some

See CHEER, page B5

Sports

Men's lax downs Lehigh 15-6

By BETSY HARNER
Contributing Writer

The men's lacrosse team dominated fellow Patriot League contender Lehigh with a 15-6 victory in the Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium on Saturday. Contributing to the Bison victory was Wes Fetcher '04 with three goals and one assist. Pat Christensen '05 had a hat trick on the afternoon, while Ryan Goodman '05 was also a key player for the Bison, winning 15 of 21 face-offs. However, the Bison win was a team effort; nine players scored during the game.

"What I was particularly impressed with was the balanced scoring coming from the midfield. Freshman middies Gargan, Klett, Case, and Millice all scored for us. Having balanced scoring is always a good thing," said Fetcher, referring to Brian Gargan '07, Kirkin Klett '07, Steve Case '07 and Clay Millice '07.

The game got off to a rocky start, with Lehigh leading 1-0 after six minutes. But the Orange and Blue were able to take the lead soon after and keep it for the rest of the game. Case scored the first goal for the Bison less than a minute after the first Lehigh goal, and Christensen scored on a man-up opportunity that gave the Bison the lead.

Gargan and Fetcher both scored before Lehigh was able to respond early in the second quarter. John Salvesen '05 scored off an assist by Patrick O'Hearn '05 with 9:27 left in the second quarter. Six seconds later, Case recovered a ground ball, which resulted in another Bison goal. Christensen was able to add another score before the half, giving the Bison a 7-3 lead going into the third quarter.

The first three goals of the third quarter were all unassisted and scored by Gargan, Fetcher and Klett. Lehigh fought back with a 3-1 run in under two minutes. This would mark Lehigh's last score of the game with 5:24 left in the third.

"Our defense shut down their offense. Granted, they were 0-6 coming into the game, [but] they had some big shooters up top we had to respect. Matty Baran had another impressive day in net. We were happy that Mark Davis was able to go in during the fourth quarter and make a few stops," Fetcher said, referring to goalie Matt Baran '06 and Mark Davis

'07. Christensen and Millice were each able to add a goal for the Bison in the third quarter. The score marked Millice's first career goal. Fetcher and Chris Cara '05 added two more goals for the Bison in the fourth quarter. Lehigh continued to cover Cara, holding the nation's leading scorer to only one goal and one assist. "Saturday was another confidence booster for us. Lehigh threw a different style of defense at us—for much of the game they shut off both Chris Cara and Pat Christensen because they are our leading scorers. That was a different look than we are used to, but offensively we countered well. I believe we will see this kind of look again this year," Fetcher said.

The Bison outshot Lehigh 39-29 and converted three of five extra-man attempts. Baran made six saves, contributing to the victory. The Bison will face Hobart in a league game tomorrow at 1 p.m. in Geneva, N.Y.

"I'm confident that we will be able to win when it counts, in the Patriot League tournament. This weekend is going to be a big game for us, so hopefully we will be able to step up," Goodman said.

The Bison (4-4, 2-1) maintain control of the ball despite the commotion surrounding it in Bucknell's 15-6 rout over Lehigh at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium on Saturday. Pat Christensen '05 scored a hat trick and Wes Fetcher '04 added three goals and an assist in the win.

Track team splits squad to open outdoor season

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Coming straight out of the indoor track season, the University's track and field team spread itself across the Northern Hemisphere, competing at Susquehanna University, Penn State University, Stanford University and in the Dominican Republic to open up the outdoor season last weekend.

Greg Costello '03 and Dan Lounsbury '05 were two of five Bison to travel to the prestigious Stanford Invite, both hitting IC4A times in the 10,000-meter run.

Stanford proved to be the place to run fast once again, as 27 men hit the NCAA provisional time. Costello was in the hunt for the provisional mark, but came up a bit short late in the race.

"We were hoping for a little faster," Head Coach Kevin Donner said.

Donner could not be too upset though, as both Costello and Lounsbury ran personal bests.

"The Stanford meet was a great experience for those involved," Donner said. "We plan to return in future years. It's nice to give Bucknell West Coast exposure, and it is a great recruiting tool."

Maria Garcia '04, a native of the Dominican Republic, traveled home in her quest to represent the Dominican Republic at the 2004 Olympics games. Garcia won the hammer throw, setting a school record, but will not find out if she has qualified for the Olympics until later. Although official results have not been made available, Garcia's throw should easily surpass the ECAC and NCAA Regional standards.

The rest of the team was split between the Susquehanna Invitational at Susquehanna University and the Jim Thorpe Invitational at Penn State.

A number of men fared well at Penn State, including Justin Crane '04, who ran a personal best in the 400-meter dash and split a personal best in the 4x400m relay, running 50.28 seconds and 49.0 respectively.

"Overall, I thought we had a very solid first outdoor meet," Crane said. "Many people improved on their indoor times, which is a great way to begin the outdoor season. In addition, some people who are coming back from injuries ran well, and others who had not been running as well as they wanted really stepped up."

According to Crane, javelin thrower Josh Kaehler '07 performed well and Ryan Newberger '05, who was out for a while, had a good overall showing at the meet. Crane also said Chris Edwards '04 had his best meet of the season.

"Overall, I was very pleased after looking at all the results," Donner said. "We did seem a little stale in some events due to the long layoff, but we peak in May, not March."

The women looked strong at Penn State, bringing home a number of top finishes. Tolu Fayanjuola '04 took the 100m, Christa Sawko '07 took the 1,500m and 400-meter hurdles, Angie Hall '07 set an outdoor school record in the pole vault, Angie McFarland '05 won the hammer throw and Marjorie Grap '07 won the discus. "Our women look very deep in many events and should contend for a Patriot League title," Donner said.

That depth was evident in the throwing circle as the Bison took five of the top six places in the hammer throw, the top four places in the discus and second through fifth in the shot put, led by Grap. Grap was slightly disappointed in her shot put performance, but felt rusty after focusing so much on the 20-pound weight throw for the end of the indoor season.

"As for my discus and hammer performances, I am extremely happy," Grap said.

Reflecting on the performances by the rest of the throwers and the women on the track, Grap was excited.

"I thought the rest of the female throwers did very well for the first outdoor meet of the season," Grap said. "It was nice to see Erin Lee '04 back in the outdoor throwing scene, and I was also excited for my fellow freshmen throwers to make their mark on the track team for the outdoor season. I am very confident that the Bucknell ladies will add another Patriot League championship under their belt."

Looking ahead to this weekend, the Bison will split up their squad once again.

"We are actually taking most of our runners to Duke and most of our field events to Maryland," Donner said. "Both meets are very competitive, and we look to get some great performances."

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

There's still time left for underdogs developed a reputation in the league for having good stuff but being a tad too willing to direct it at his enemy's noggin—to "buzz the tower," in his tactical explanation.

If Johnston, who spent last year going 6-2 with a 2.12 ERA for Double A Altoona, is a bit of a bully on the mound, it might be for good reason. He's had to fight—sometimes literally—for respect since he was 10 years old.

As a kid, the big lefty was diagnosed with Tourette's Syndrome, a cruelly misunderstood disorder that caused him to have uncontrollable facial ticks and convulsions.

Johnston, because of this, didn't play baseball in high school. Didn't even go to high school. His peers—limited in their empathetic capacities, as teenagers tend to be—mocked him ceaselessly to an extent that he was driven into surrender.

Temporary surrender, that is. From there on in is where the story gets good.

After dropping out of high school, the kid hung on to what he could—a GED, a low-wage night-shift job and, of course, baseball. Then somewhere along the lines, someone noticed that he was chucking the ball in the mid-90s for his American Legion team.

After being granted a chance at Garrett Community College, Johnston was picked up by the Pirates in the 20th round of the 1998 draft, despite the fact that his pitch repertoire wasn't particularly dynamic, consisting of a fastball, a fastball and a fastball.

So Johnston, underdressed by his affliction, underdressed by the fact that he had to learn rather rapidly how to throw a curveball and a change, has been motorizing through the Pirates system with admirable determination.

In the final week of spring training this year, the club has kept him hanging around on the 40-man and he could be on the verge of landing his unlikely quest right smack in the middle of Pittsburgh's bullpen.

He's still a bit snarlish toward batters when on the mound, but it's a quality that he seems to have directed in his favor.

It's hard not to root for a guy who can take such a dire situation and translate it into bulldoggy grit.

Jason Szuminski, RHP, Padres: Baseball is an intricate game. In fact, there are moments when its finer details walk the line between intricacy and rocket science.

In the event that those moments should become intellectually overwhelming, the San Diego Padres have a reserve troop of aerospace engineers poised in their farm system to remedy such a perplexion.

Alright, so they don't have a troop. But they have one.

His name is Jason Szuminski, and the Padres hope he'll have the stuff to become the first MIT graduate in the major leagues. Ever.

Szuminski's unprecedented ability to gracefully synthesize nerdiness and athleticism has made him somewhat of a cult favorite for such publications as Sports Illustrated and ESPN.com, but his pitching ability itself has been the operating item of interest for the Padres.

And Szuminski's been pretty sharp on the mound despite his unusual alma mater.

One doesn't generally think of intellectual brilliance as a setback, but Szuminski's scholarly background has stacked the odds against him a bit.

The fact that MIT hasn't spun out any major-leaguers yet probably isn't just coincidence. It isn't exactly a baseball powerhouse. It's understandable that athletic endeavors don't always fit tidily into the students' schedules and thus, the team has traditionally suffered from low participation. Really low.

Szuminski managed to find the time, though, to develop his pitching skills in between graduating from MIT and serving as a first lieutenant in the Air Force.

And he's a lot more than just a brainy media darling.

The Rule V pick has posted an ERA of just over 2.00 in his work with the major league camp, and has a legitimate chance to dig his way into the Padres bullpen—or someone else's bullpen—with his dandy sinker and mid-90s fastball.

You don't exactly need to be an aerospace technician to appreciate the numbers he's posted.

Chad Bentz, LHP, Expos:

I never really thought I'd find any pressing reason to check the Expos' spring training boxscores on a daily basis, but Chad Bentz' story has been compelling enough to convince me otherwise.

Bentz, like Johnston and Szuminski, spent last season at Double A but is still vying for a spot on the major-league roster.

And like the first two, Bentz has had to kick aside his share of potential roadblocks en route to his position on the brink of the majors.

For one thing, he grew up in Alaska, a land not famed for its baseball-friendly terrain. Only one other major leaguer, Marshall Boze in 1997, has ever ascended the Alaska-to-MLB ladder.

What's more impressive is that everything that Bentz has done—including his 2.55 ERA and 16 saves with Harrisburg last year—he's done while spotting his opponents an appendage. The lefty was born without most of his right hand, so he has to do all his throwing, catching, fielding—everything—with his left arm.

But his left arm does a damn good job.

In his 11 showings with the Expos' camps, he's stamped himself as a worthy contender for a spot in Montreal's bullpen.

He's been pretty much oblivious to the fact that missing a hand is a considerable deficit—having to divide the throwing and catching between two hands, according to Bentz, would be "boring."

Of course he won't be the first one-handed pitcher to find his way to the major leagues—a smattering have done so, from Hugh Daily in the 1880s to Bentz' boyhood hero Jim Abbott, who had a solid run in the majors last decade.

Bentz' status as a one-pawed southpaw has drawn a considerable amount of attention from the Cinderella-seeking media, but the thing is, he's not just good for a guy with one hand.

He's just good. For anyone.

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

BY JOSH HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

Flying with the boys

Move over, Lebron. You've got company.

It's your little sister, and recently she's been collecting some serious frequent-flier miles.

Since the 1950s, women have ambitiously left their homes to join the work force and start a working life. But this episode isn't about females becoming police, soldiers, fire fighters, doctors, senators or even pilots.

On Monday night in a high school gymnasium just southeast of Oklahoma City, a 17-year-old high school senior soared high above any of our dreams and expectations.

She kept flying, and she didn't stop until her hand grabbed some iron.

There's a new high school basketball slam dunk champion. Her name is Candace Parker.

This wasn't another Lisa Lesley jam or a Michelle Snow throw-down. This was history.

"That was big," said Glen "Big Baby" Davis, an LSU-bound forward, according to ESPN.com. "I saw history tonight, right before my eyes."

For years women's basketball has taken a backseat to the men's game, lost in a sea of powerful tomahawk jams and emphatic alley-oop plays.

Finally, opportunity arose with the WNBA as basketball's first professional league for women. It attempted to bring equality to a game that was dominated by the physical and high-flying action of men. It attempted to give women basketball players the opportunity to participate at the highest level of competition for the first time.

But nothing has changed. Season attendances remain static. Television ratings are non-existent. Women's basketball has remained secondary to the men.

Still, one night, one young girl, one dunk—everything could transform in a moment of hope and greatness.

"I'm not surprised, she really plays at the rim," Tennessee head coach Pat Summitt said after learning of Parker's winning performance, according to ESPN.com. "Obviously, Candace is a very special player. She's going to be good for the women's game. She's the kind of individual who has a lot of charisma and personality."

That's not the entire story either.

Averaging 24 points, 11.5 rebounds and 3.5 blocks, the 6-3 Parker led her team to its second consecutive Illinois state title this year. The two-time winner of the Naismith prep basketball Player of the Year award will play for Tennessee under Summitt next season.

During her summer workouts, Parker could leap and do one-handed reverse dunks from under the rim as well as a lean-in dunk where she flies above the rim and quickly snaps the ball into the basket.

However, just weeks ago, Parker had enough trouble dunking her cookie into a glass of milk from the lingering effects of an ACL tear last July.

Her chance of winning the McDonald's Slam Dunk contest was a long shot. She had to face North Carolina signee J.R. Smith, potential NBA lottery pick Josh Smith and another possible first-round choice in Dariusson Washington.

But on Monday, Parker opened her eyes as she closed hers for her right-handed jam.

"I've been dunking the ball since I was 15," she said, according to the Los Angeles Times. "I just wanted to get my first one down and knew I'd be all right."

She did just that and more. Finishing with 223 points in the contest, runner-up Joe Crawford, a Kentucky signee, didn't stand a chance with a measly 148.

"That's unbelievable," sophomore star Seimone Augustus of LSU said of Parker's title, according to ESPN.com. "Good for her. That's a big step for the game of women's basketball. We don't get as much publicity as the men do. Maybe this will open people's eyes. The game is changing."

Only five dunks have been officially recorded during a women's college game, three coming from Tennessee's Michelle Snow. Lisa Leslie became the first woman to dunk in 2002 during a WNBA game.

So throwing down any sort of dunk would have been enough glory for Parker. Duke freshman Brittany Hunter failed to get one down in the contest last year.

The scary part is that with that silver brace over her left knee, we haven't even seen the best from Candace Parker.

But for her, Monday night wasn't anything out of the ordinary.

"That would be my dream," Parker said with a smile and shrug, according to ESPN.com. "For 10 years from now for three or four girls entering the dunk contest and it's not a big deal."

And it might just happen soon enough.

With several high school freshman and sophomore girls already dunking, Parker's story might just become another SportsCenter highlight in a few years.

"It's not every day that a girl can dunk," Washington said, according to ESPN.com.

At this rate, it just might soon be.

The rants and raves of a Mad Man

By MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

Devil Rays surprise Yankees

Another week rolls by, and more headlines pop up. This time we've got more men's basketball tournament action, NFL info and news about the impending destruction of a team called the Devil Rays.

March Madness went south this weekend as once again, Duke and UConn are still playing. These are two teams we have seen succeed a number of times before, and frankly don't interest me anymore than watching William Shatner's price-line commercials.

The only way this tournament can really be redeemed is if Georgia Tech or Oklahoma State wins the title in a double overtime final, during which Dick Vitale breaks the record for most times "baby" is said in a single night. My estimates put Vitale's Baby-o-meter at 47,875. If he breaks the 50,000 mark on the Baby-o-meter, I predict he will spontaneously combust or the earth will open up and swallow him.

Because Dick's pact with the Devil has yet to expire, I doubt the aforementioned will happen, so I have a few measures I propose that I think could make March Madness even better. We'll start off by banning any and all teams from the ACC and Big East from the tourney. Give them their own tourney and proclaim the winner "The Champion of the Overrated, Corrupt and Boring".

guys a chance. Instead of the first round being a warm-up for real contenders, we can see little schools battle it out so that the other 470 kids at their school can come to the knowledge that they do in fact have a basketball team.

A controversial measure I would like to impose is the banning of all players over 6 feet 4 inches and only allowing one 6-foot-4-inch player on each team's roster.

Without Duke, Wake Forest, Syracuse, UConn, Pitt and Maryland, we can give the little

4 inches and only allowing one 6-foot-4-inch player on each team's roster. Watching some of these games, you'd think you were in the land of the giants.

I find it infinitely more entertaining watching little guys fly around the court trying to sink threes than I do watching Sasquatch pick up fouls like Chicken McNuggets and miss nine out of every 10 free throws as he lumbers around the court like a tranquilized Tyrannosaurus.

Another measure that should be imposed involves coaches. All coaches should be forced to wear straight jackets and masks, and be strapped to a dolly, ala Hannibal Lecter in "The Silence of the Lambs." How good do you think Coach K would be if he couldn't move? This would also have the benefit of preventing Bob Knight from the inevitable final four incident versal measure I would like to impose is the banning of all players over 6 feet 4 inches and only allowing one 6-foot-4-inch player on each team's roster.

Without Duke, Wake Forest, Syracuse, UConn, Pitt and Maryland, we can give the little

4 inches and only allowing one 6-foot-4-inch player on each team's roster. Watching some of these games, you'd think you were in the land of the giants.

I find it infinitely more entertaining watching little guys fly around the court trying to sink threes than I do watching Sasquatch pick up fouls like Chicken McNuggets and miss nine out of every 10 free throws as he lumbers around the court like a tranquilized Tyrannosaurus.

Another measure that should be imposed involves coaches. All coaches should be forced to wear straight jackets and masks, and be strapped to a dolly, ala Hannibal Lecter in "The Silence of the Lambs." How good do you think Coach K would be if he couldn't move? This would also have the benefit of preventing Bob Knight from the inevitable final four incident versal measure I would like to impose is the banning of all players over 6 feet 4 inches and only allowing one 6-foot-4-inch player on each team's roster.

Without Duke, Wake Forest, Syracuse, UConn, Pitt and Maryland, we can give the little

4 inches and only allowing one 6-foot-4-inch player on each team's roster. Watching some of these games, you'd

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30

College Night

$5-3 Games & Shoe Rental

Write for Sports.

Just do it.

E-mail
jherwitt@

Who Says You Can't Have It All?

53.2 cu. ft. of cargo space

Available with 4-wheel anti-lock brake system

Up to 130 lbs./ft. torque, 180 horsepower

30 MPG City 35 MPG Highway*

TOYOTA

MATRIX

GET THE FEELING

TOYOTA

You're lord and master of quite possibly the most versatile automobile on the planet. Matrix is an entirely new breed of vehicle—cutting edge styling, standard air conditioning, and up to 180 horsepower with available 6-speed. Matrix is designed to be whatever you want, including affordable.

TOYOTA

Visit www.buyatoyota.com for details.

*Based on EPA estimates for 2003 5-speed manual.

Sports

Baseball kicks off league play with three wins over Midshipmen

BASEBALL from page B1

most dominating hurlers in the league. "Kevin Miller has shown signs of brilliance all year, but until today, he was unable to completely shut down an opponent," Grant said. "He sure picked a good time to show everyone at the field why he is reigning Patriot League Pitcher of the Year."

The offense allowed Bucknell to jump ahead in the first inning as Stoll reached on an error by Navy's shortstop, advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt from Sam Moss '04 and ran home when Pete Wolf '04 drilled an RBI single through the left side.

In the second inning the Bison scraped up another run with dramatic baserunning after singles from Steve Stutzman '04 and Stoll put runners on the corners. As Stoll took off for second, Stutzman dashed for home and slid in safely as catcher Jonathan Johnston dropped the throw to the plate.

Navy retaliated with an unearned run in the fifth to make it 2-1, but the Bison tacked on three insurance runs in the seventh. After Moss reached on an error and Kyle Walter '06 singled, Day punched a double to right field to score both the runners. Brian Hirschberg '04 then gave the Bison an extra run with an RBI single to center.

Navy managed to put a man on base in the eighth, but Walter laid out for a terrific catch in centerfield to halt the Midshipmen's inning. Miller then retired the side in order, striking out the last two batters of the game.

The Bison combined for 12 hits in the second game, with Wolf picking up three baseknocks and Brian Day '05 and Hirschberg each picking up two.

Miller gave up just five hits and one unearned run in his nine innings of work, fanning 10 Midshipmen en route to his second win of the year.

Miller's ten strikeouts bumped his strikeout total for the year up to 30, which is fourth-highest in the league.

"Kevin Miller had his finest outing of the year," Depew said. "He was in command the entire nine innings. When you have ten strikeouts you are pitching well."

Miller and Daley have both logged an average of over six innings pitched per start for the Bison, leading the staff with 32.1 and 35 total innings pitched, respectively.

Cory Nadler '04 noted the importance of both Miller and Daley's ability to be effective deep into the games and emphasized the pressure it takes off of the bullpen, which is faced with accommodating the addition of nine-inning games to league play this year.

"When we get two complete-game quality starts out of Miller and Daley like we did this weekend it means a lot for the strength of our bullpen for Sunday's games," Nadler said. "This is especially important because of the fact that we are playing four more innings of baseball each weekend this season."

The Bison had to regroup themselves Sunday after the first game began with a shaky first inning for the squad, and a gritty comeback attempt in the bottom of the seventh was not enough to reel in the Midshipmen's lead.

Grant attributed the loss to an all-around poor start from the team.

"Defensively we weren't very sharp and Phil made a couple of mistake pitches which Navy took full advantage of," Grant said. "We were kept off balance by their pitcher's loopy knuckle curveball until the last inning."

Despite getting ahead of batters, starting pitcher Phil Futrick '06 and the defense had difficulty keeping Navy off the basepaths in the first frame. The Midshipmen picked up six runs before Day ended the inning with a dazzling acrobatic catch over the fence in foul territory.

The Bison narrowed the score to 7-2 in the third when Bunting scored Stutzman with a double to center, and Moss singled home Bunting, but the Midshipmen reestablished the seven-run lead with a two-run frame of their own in the fourth.

Matt Curry '07 relieved Futrick in the fifth and quieted Navy's offense for the last three innings of the game, allowing just three hits in his time on the mound.

"Curry's relief performance should not be overlooked just because we lost," Grant said. "He was our first freshman to throw in league competition and showed no signs of nervousness or trepidation."

Consecutive singles from Day, Hirschberg and Mahony loaded up the bases for the Bison to start off the sixth, and after Day was forced out at home, Hirschberg scored on an error to cut the lead to 9-3.

Bucknell provided some drama with a four-run rally in the bottom of the seventh, beginning with a triple from Moss and a home run to left from Walter, his second of the year. Singles from Wolf and Day and a walk to Hirschberg loaded up the bases for Mahony, who singled up the middle for a pair of RBI to make it 9-7.

Navy then sealed the win with a popup from Brad Duvall '06 and a 6-4-3 double play ball from Austin Barrett '05. The Bison managed 14 hits in the loss with Moss and Mahony each going three-for-four and Day and Wolf both registering two-hit games.

Despite the loss, Depew noted that the late-inning intensity of the offense carried over into game two.

"We almost overcame a bad start, but did produce positive momentum for the second game," Depew said. "The final game of the series was a blowout in favor of the Bison, as the hitters piled nine runs on the Midshipmen,

First baseman Brian Day '05 snares a foul popup to bring the first inning to a halt during a 9-7 loss in the first game of Sunday's doubleheader against Navy. In addition to making the great grab, Day went two-for-three in the game.

and Nadler and Nathan Mittag '07 combined to stifle the Navy batters.

Bucknell's offense ran wild over Navy, as every Bison hitter in the lineup collected at least one hit.

Sharp defense also aided the Bison in the rout, including a busy day behind the dish for catcher Bunting, who gunned down three steal attempts at second base in the first six innings.

"Tons of credit must be given to Phil Bunting for keeping Navy's attempt at a running game to a minimum," Nadler said. "He must have erased four or five baserunners in the fourth game alone."

Nadler held Navy scoreless through the first three innings, and the Bison jumped to a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the third with a single from Mahony and an RBI groundout from Bunting.

Navy fired back in the fourth with its only run off of Nadler, a solo home run off the bat of J.P. Temperilli, but the Bison regained the lead with a pair of runs in bottom of the inning.

After Wolf singled and Hirschberg doubled, Mahony sent both home with an RBI double. The Bison continued to threaten, with back-to-back bunt singles from Matt Capece '06 and Bunting, but Mahony was nabbed at the plate trying to score on Bunting's hit, ending the inning.

The sixth inning included a nervous moment for the Bison when a comebacker struck Nadler in the stomach, but the lefty recovered quickly to finish off the inning.

The Bison then attacked Navy with four runs in the bottom of the stanza, beginning when Day singled and Hirschberg launched his second homer of the year, a colossal shot over the centerfield fence. Mahony and Capece followed up with singles, and after a wild pitch moved them to second and third, both scored on a single by Stoll.

Already up 7-1, Bucknell tacked on another set of runs in the seventh when Wolf, Hirschberg and Mahony all singled to load up the bases for Capece, who knocked out a two-RBI single.

Mittag took care of Navy hitters for the final three innings of the game, picking up the save while allowing no runs and only two hits in the process.

Nadler snagged his first win of the year with his performance, giving up only one run on five hits in six innings. "It was real nice to see Cory throwing the way that he did," Daley said.

"He was in control of the game from the first pitch. After the loss in the first game we really needed him to step up and he didn't disappoint."

The offense amassed 18 hits over the nine-inning contest, with Hirschberg, Mahony and Capece combining to provide a 10-for-12 effort from the six-through-eight portion of the lineup.

Nadler stressed this type of contribution from the offense as crucial to the team's season.

"As a pitcher it is especially great to see the run support that we have been getting out of the offense thus far, and as this continues there is no reason for us not to be confident about every game that we play," Nadler said.

Leading the offensive charge throughout Sunday was Mahony, who was four-for-four in the victory to cap off a day in which he piled up seven hits and four RBI in eight at-bats. The left-fielder singled in his last seven consecutive plate appearances of the weekend to raise his season average to a league-leading .449.

"Chris Mahony hit the baseball [on Sunday] as if it were a beachball and he had a tennis racket instead of a bat," Moss said.

The offense, which has combined for a .324 batting average through last weekend, hopes to keep up the blazing pace when the Bison take on Lehigh at Depew Field this weekend in another four-game league set.

Grant expects that Lehigh will prove a tough opponent for the Bison, as the Mountainhawks have been putting up solid offensive numbers of their own and are eager to defeat the Bison.

"If we learned anything from this past weekend, it's that we cannot come out flat and unfocused," Grant said. "With Lehigh being one of our main rivals, I expect it to be a very exciting weekend, with some good baseball being played."

The showdown between the two squads begins with a doubleheader on Saturday and continues with another pair of games on Sunday. Both doubleheaders start at noon.

Second baseman Sam Moss '04 (2) slides out of the path of Brian Hirschberg '04 (15) as the rightfielder makes the catch of a shallow fly off the bat of Navy's B.J. Bickel during the sixth inning of Sunday's second game, in which the Bison dominated Navy 9-1. Hirschberg was three-for-four with a two-run homer and a double in the contest, while Moss picked up two hits in five at-bats.

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

MANAGEMENT 101 COMPANY D DOLLARS DOWN, COLLARS UP
PRESENTS

BISON POLO SHIRTS

PROCEEDS GO TO THE PLAYSPLACE

AVAILABLE IN A VARIETY OF COLORS AND SIZES FOR MEN AND WOMEN

ON SALE IN THE LC MALL
STARTING APRIL 7, BUID ACCEPTED

MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH

THE PASSION OF THE CHRIST

He died for us and rose again.
What is your response?

Join us as we honor Him each Sunday at the
MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH
Sunday Services at 10:30am and 6pm
Wednesday 6pm Community
Meal and 7pm Bible Study
1.2 miles north of Rt. 45 off Forest Hill Road in Mifflinburg.
For more info call 966-4899

Cheerleading takes first place at King's College tough opponents in Penn State Altoona and Penn State Berks to bring home a hefty first-place trophy.

CHEER from page B1

The Bison knew they had delivered a solid performance, but were overcome with excitement when the results were announced with Bucknell on top.

"After the third- and second-place finishes were announced, to hear the name Bucknell University being called out was just absolutely mind boggling," Ding said. "My feelings at that moment were indescribable."

For the team's five seniors, the win was an excellent way to finish their tenure as cheerleaders, as the program has developed into a cohesive and successful team. All of them have been a part of the team since their first year at the University, and have helped the program grow.

"When I joined the squad freshman year we didn't have the best leadership, I knew something had to be done and I was hoping to be able to take on the challenge," said Snyder, who has been a captain for three years and helped build the program.

The work put in by Snyder and the other four seniors culminated with the win on Saturday, a fitting end to their longstanding dedication.

"Our years of hard work and dedication really paid off and now we have something to show for it," Johnston said.

One addition that has also boosted the team's performances is the hiring of Walters, who became head coach during the 2002 season.

"Since she joined us we have become a much stronger program," Snyder said.

Elemental in the preparation for this competition has been the tight friendships developed between all of the team members over the course of their dedication to the sport and one another.

Langley noted that while the team's ability to cooperate as a squad is superb, she said she thinks of the group as more than just a team.

"I don't like to describe us as just a squad, I like to describe us as best friends," Langley said. "In fact, it was really special to share such an exciting moment with some of my closest friends."

Snyder agreed that the unity of the team members was crucial in bringing about this year's success.

"This year our squad has become very close," Snyder said. "We are all great friends and I think that has really helped us become a better squad. We work so well together and are able to learn a lot from each other."

Budget restraints limited the team to the one competition this year, but the success set a precedent for years to come, in which the group hopes to enter more events.

"This competition is only a starting point, we hope to participate in even more competitions in the coming year," Langley said.

Walters also mentioned the importance of the event as a starting point for future endeavors.

"We went to King's College knowing that not only were we competing against some other great schools, but we were setting an example of what to expect for the future," Walters said. "This is history."

The co-ed team captured first place in its division at the North Eastern Pennsylvania Cheerleading Challenge at King's College. There were several other victories for members of the team, including Will Ding '04 and Danielle Gutelius '05, who captured first place in the co-ed partner stunt competition.

Tennis prepares for Patriot League Tournament play game against American and Navy this weekend," Menezes said. "After losing to Colgate and Army, these two matches will determine whether we will be heading to playoffs this year."

TENNIS from page B1

On the back three courts, Pikus handled Dan Selzer rather easily, winning 6-0, 6-1.

"Matt is playing very well right now. We hope that he can keep his winning streak alive this weekend," Menezes said.

Saperstein dropped a tiebreaker in the first set before beating Joel Young, 6-7(6), 6-4, (10-5).

For the Bucknell women (10-1), their 7-0 sweep was the third time this year. Doubles teammates Samantha Berthod '04 and Veronica Brown '06 played together for the first time this year and beat Sarah Dumansky and Pamela Zeger, 9-7. Nadezda Curcic '05 and Tanya Sichko '05 captured their first win together in second doubles with a win over Kelly Parsons and Audrey Damrongsi, 8-2.

Rebecca Kral '06 and Chelsea Mills '06 rounded out the pack with their seventh victory of the season, leading Morgan Sugar-Butter and Jessica Woolfolk 1-0 when the Towson third doubles squad retired.

The doubles win for Sichko was her 100th career win in both singles and doubles.

In women's singles play, Curcic stayed perfect this spring with her tenth win of the year over Dumansky, 6-3, 6-3 in her first opportunity on court one. On court two, Brown beat Zeger, 6-3, 6-0. Sichko defeated Parsons on court three, 6-1, 7-5, as Berthod rolled past Woolfolk, 6-0, 6-3, for fourth singles. Mills remained perfect on the year in dual singles, winning her 11th this season over Sugar-Butter, 6-1, 6-2. Kral took her dual singles match to a tiebreaker, winning over Damrongsi, 6-4, 7-6(4) on court six.

On Wednesday, the Intercollegiate Tennis Association ranked the women 62nd of all Division I teams, after Bucknell improved to 10-1 with the Towson victory.

The Bison were ranked 65th in last week's computer poll, standing at 9-0 before the victory and a 5-2 loss to Colgate over the weekend.

The Bison are the only Patriot League team in the ITA's Top 75 and just one of five teams in the northeastern United States to appear in the rankings.

Bucknell will begin a string of eight matches over the next two weeks before the Patriot League tournament on April 17-18. The Bison will resume their Patriot League play this weekend with matches at Lafayette on tomorrow at 1 p.m. and Sunday at 11 a.m. at American.

CYCLING TEAM COMPETES AT BUCKNELL CAMPUS CRIT

The cycling team hosted the first annual Bucknell Campus Crit. on Saturday. Riders from more than 20 schools throughout the Northeast came to compete in the event.

MEMPHIS RIBS

Meaty St. Louis Ribs, pit-smoked for hours with Applewood, char-grilled, and generously basted with our bold-flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce. Served with Skillet Potato Cakes and your choice of Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, plus a FREE beverage.

Just $13.99
a $17.99 value

Your Choice... just $13.99!
(Weekdays-Wednesdays only)

Steak 'n' Rib House

17 N. Market St.
Salisbury
ph. 570-374-9841
291 Mill St., Danville
ph. 570-275-5110
www.bjrls.com

Chicago STEAK

BJ's 1/2 lb. Chicago Steak - our famous, specially seasoned USDA Choice Certified Premium Center Cut Sirloin. Served with your choice of Potato, Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, Honey Butter, and a FREE beverage.

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Look Your Best With A Tan From TANNING WORLD

216 St. John Street, Lewisburg
Next to Fisher's Meats

Open 24 Hours
Free Membership
Lowest Prices
Speed System Beds with NEW Lamps
New 2004 StarPower 548 Bed

Call 523-7254 or tanningworld@hotmail.com

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products - fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards - trophies - business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Sports

Women's lacrosse pulls off win against Holy Cross

By KEELEY SIDLOW
Sports Editor

The women's lacrosse team spent its weekend playing two games in Worcester and Boston. Its first game was Saturday afternoon against Holy Cross.

"The game against Holy Cross challenged our team to work through a close game. Our determination to win made us finish on top," Liz Schuster '04 said.

At the end of the first half, Holy Cross managed to score three goals in a row to end with a score of 7-7. The Crusaders also captured the first goal of the second half, which was followed by 16 minutes of scoreless play.

The Orange and Blue were able to come together and score three goals in just 1:37 minutes. The first was by Andrea Paraud '05, off an assist by Meredith Wright '04.

Wright, who was named Patriot League Player of the Week, had three goals and two assists in the contest for the Bison. The next two scores happened within 16 seconds of each other with goals from Laura Nuss '04 and Lindsey Penek '07.

With 8:35 left to play, Holy Cross player Sutton got her sixth goal of the game to bring the score to 10-9, with the Bison hanging onto the lead. Amy Hasler '04, and then Paraud scored her second with only 17 seconds left to close out the Bison victory.

At the end of the game, Paraud had racked up two assists along with her two goals and Katie Edge '07 and Tory Field '06 had both scored twice.

The Orange and Blue outshot Holy Cross 32-28, and goalie Lizzy McDaniel '06 made 10 saves for the Bison.

"We were able to push through for a victory even though we weren't really clicking. The best part was that the entire team was able to come up big when the game was on the line and that's something that we can take into the rest of the year," Hasler said.

After defeating Holy Cross, the team traveled to Harvard on Sunday.

Harvard managed to take the first four goals of the game as well as the last four of the first half to put the Bison behind 9-2. Wright and Paraud had the only goals for the Orange and Blue in the first half.

Harvard had advanced its spread to 14-4 before Hasler, Edge and Wright captured three goals in a row in the second half. Edge also got in another goal to finish out the day with three. Hasler and Wright ended up with two goals each for the game.

The Bison goalies performed well while Harvard outshot the Orange and Blue 42-21. McDaniel was able to save 15 goals while Kristin Gaines '07 also stopped two shots in the last 10:16 of play.

The women's lacrosse team continues their season with a home game against Denver tomorrow at 7 p.m.

"I am confident that this team will put up a strong fight in the upcoming competitions with Denver and LaSalle. We have the heart and desire to win those games," Schuster said.

NFL Wonderlic exam released

ORTA from page B3

next year; ripping off his shirt, turning into the Incredible Hulk and tearing down the jumbotron after mishearing a ref's call.

Now that I've pretty much beaten the March Madness topic to death, let's move on to some more entertaining news, such as the Yankees going to Japan and losing to the Devil Rays. Read that again: The Yankees lost to the Devil Rays.

Not to the Red Sox, Mariners or Astros. To the Devil Rays. That team that plays in Tampa, yet like other area franchises is named the Tampa Bay "blank." This bothers me to no end. There is no franchise named the Baltimore Inner Harbor Orioles, now that they have done the impossible.

In other news, NFL Wonderlic scores have been released, and we can now judge and Co. couldn't pull off a win with master of the universe Rudolph Giuliani in the crowd. Instead, they get hammered by a recent expansion franchise that is working on "How to Lose for Dummies."

In retaliation for this defeat, we can expect that Steinbrenner is going to buy the city of Tampa and wipe it, along with the Devil Rays and all of the other franchises, off the map. He will then destroy any and all record of the loss and wipe any and all that saw from our memories.

When Steinbrenner can figure out how to do this, anybody not living in New York is in trouble. On a lighter note, the Devil Rays can proceed with their 161-game losing streak, now that they have done the impossible.

In other news, NFL Wonderlic scores have been released, and we can now judge the intelligence of our nation's best college football players. For those of you who don't know what the Wonderlic is, it's a 50-question intelligence test all pro-football prospects take before the draft. A score of nine is literate, 21 is about average intelligence (an I.Q. of roughly 100) and a score of 50 sets off an alarm at NASA labs across the nation.

Several players scored above a 40, while many scored in the 30s and 20s.

And of course Carlos Joseph, one of my beloved Miami Hurricanes, strolls in with a score of seven, ensuring that he will never beat Forrest Gump in Jeopardy and that college is in fact an enriching and educational institution, which will teach him the value of analytical thought as he ventures out into the world to rid humanity of its many ills.

WOMEN'S RUGBY

Courtesy of Jackie Feinberg

The Bucknell women's rugby club had its first home scrimmage of the season against Scranton last Saturday. The scrimmage ended in a 12-12 tie with tries by captain Lauren Paladino '05 and Justine Grossman '06. The team will play again at home on April 17 at 3 p.m.

Duquesne University • Pittsburgh, PA • www.leadership.duq.edu/summer

Summer Sessions 2004

Now's the time to get ahead, catch up, or just take a class for enjoyment – do it for you!

School of Leadership & Professional Advancement
Courses, Workshops, Seminars, Study Abroad
Accelerated Sessions
Seven Different Start Dates, May through July

Register by fax, phone, mail or in person.
Visit www.leadership.duq.edu/summer.

Please call 1-800-283-3853 for our complete Summer Information Package.

LOW EXPENSES.

HIGH I.Q.

The markets move in mysterious ways. So do many financial companies. How else to explain the high fees and expenses they charge to manage your retirement funds? If you find this curious, call us—the company known for sound guidance and keeping costs low. For over 80 years, we've been helping some of the world's sharpest minds become smarter investors.

TIAA-CREF.org or call 800-842-2776

Find out more about TIAA-CREF IRAs
and our other tax-smart financial solutions

Managing money for people
with other things to think about.™

RETIREMENT | INSURANCE | MUTUAL FUNDS | COLLEGE SAVINGS | TRUSTS | INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT

You should consider the investment objectives, risks, charges and expenses carefully before investing. Please call 877-518-9161 for a prospectus that contains this and other information. Please read the prospectus carefully before investing. TIAA-CREF Individual & Institutional Services, LLC and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products. Please read the prospectus carefully before investing. © 2004 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund (TIAA-CREF), 730 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10017 C31472 you were out late with your friends. you sleep through your alarm. your boss asks why you are late. what do you say?

Answer the question, compare your options with others, and what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP in Delaware and various liability partnerships or, as the context requires, other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate legal entity. We are not a member firm of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited.

FEATURES

A close-knit campus...

Legacy students—chips off the old block

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

It is a scary thought that only a few decades ago, the parents of most University students were in college. They were pulling all-nighters before exams, going out and drinking on random nights of the week (only if they were 21 of course—or 18, when that was the legal drinking age), joining sororities and fraternities, and making friends that would one day turn out to be the bridesmaids in their weddings and the godfathers of their children.

A friend of mine mentioned that many parents of current students here also attended the same University.

A close friend mentioned that his parents both attended the University as students, making him a legacy. The idea of his parents walking around the academic quad and eating in the Langone Center was so strange.

The real kicker was when he said his parents met their first year of college outside of Swartz Hall.

So many Bucknellians share the experience of the University.

only to graduate, get a job, marry each other and reproduce many little "wee bison," as I fondly refer to them. Many of them, called "Bison Chips" by the University, fall in love with the University as their parents did and attend the school as a proud legacy.

But do these legacies gain the same experience from the University that other students get, or are they merely in the limelight of generations past? I spoke with a number of "Bison Chips," from first-years to alumni, as they shared with me their Bucknell experiences as legacies at the University.

Curiosity overwhelmed me as I wanted to hear what the legacies had to say. The biggest question I wanted to ask was, "Why? Why this university?" What made so many children of alumni want to attend this university?

"I decided to come to Bucknell because no other college felt like home. ... The stories that my parents have told me growing up have just enhanced my own experiences here at Bucknell," said Jennifer Bentzen '04, whose sister also attends the University.

"I came because it was the school that best met my requirements for undergraduate education," Laura Bentzen '07 said. "I love it here, the people are great, the faculty cares, it's challenging and I couldn't imagine being anywhere else for undergrad."

All legacies seemed enthusiastic about their choice to call the University their new home.

"After looking at many different schools, I realized that I felt most comfortable at Bucknell for many of the things it offered. The people were friendly and easy to talk to, the atmosphere was welcoming and full of life ... and this got me excited to jump right into the activities and groups that Bucknell had to offer," Kelly Holmes '06 said.

The wee bison said they felt the most comfortable at the University and that it was truly a place they could call home.

"My parents didn't really force me to go to this school—they always kept it open as a possibility, but it was my grandparents (who are also both Bucknellians) who were the ones who really wanted me to go here. ... It has surpassed all the expectations they put towards this school," John Kimball '07 said.

Many past Bucknellians tried not to influence their Kelly Holmes '06 enrolled in the University after looking at many different schools. Holmes said she chose to attend the school for its opportunities, not because of her parents' influence.

children toward going to their alma mater unless their child really thought that it would be the best fit for them.

"My parents were always fond of the idea of my sister and I going here, but they never pressured us," Jennifer Bentzen said. "Bucknell was right for them, but it didn't necessarily mean that Bucknell would be right for us. ... In the end we made our own decisions about Bucknell."

The other legacies agreed. "My parents didn't really promise me anything about Bucknell. They wanted me to see it, but they wanted me to make the best decision for myself, as to where I would attend college," Holmes said.

If anything, the legacy children thought that their University experience was changed for the better, considering it an advantage that their parents attended the University and gave them a connection to the school.

"The fact that people in my family share the same love for Bucknell makes me feel really comfortable," Alexandra List '07 said. "My grandparents loved it more than anything."

Many legacies visited the University as young children. "I already knew where all the buildings were and all the offices, and although I knew some of the administration already ... I guess everything combined made it feel more like home," Jennifer Bentzen said.

The legacy children are proud to be carrying on the tradition that the University holds in their families.

"I think it has changed my Bucknell experience, just because of how rich Bucknell's tradition is. The kids who go here don't really realize how close the friendships are and how they last," Kimball said. "My grandparents are still very close friends with all of their fellow Bucknellian friends and their fraternity brothers and sorority sisters."

The Bison Chips said they were happy to hear the stories as young children of the University's past and things that went on here years ago. They were happier when they found that it was the college for them that made them feel most comfortable, and happiest to pass on the tradition of the University from generation to generation.

"Children of Bucknellians all have some kind of connection, and it is fun to talk to other kids about their parents," Holmes said.

"It's amazing how small the world is, when you find out you are going to school with the children of your parents' best friends from college."

Jennifer Bentzen '04 found her home at Bucknell. After years of hearing stories and visiting campus, Bentzen decided to keep the bison family tradition alive.

Two is better than one—married faculty members on campus

By STUART CUBBON
Contributing Writer

With the beautiful spring weather and warm temperatures, it is not uncommon to see student couples walking around on campus. However, students are not the only romantically involved members of our "Bucknell family." In fact, some members of the faculty at the University take the term "Bucknell family" literally.

Some might be surprised to learn that part of the University's staff is made up of married couples. Most couples agree that there are many perks to working together at the same institution.

"We couldn't be happier here," Associate Professor of Education Abe Feuerstein said about working at the same institution as his wife, Associate Professor of Education Sue Ellen Henry.

"It is always exciting at home. We always have something to talk about because of our experiences here at Bucknell," Henry said.

Although it may be exciting for faculty members to work with their spouses, it is not always easy to find a place where two job positions are available for a couple. Associate Visiting Professor of Math Richard Weida joined his wife, Department Chair and Associate Professor of Management Nancy Weida, at the faculty of the University this year after 16 years at Lycoming College in Williamsport. He claims that the "two-body problem," which is the difficulty of finding two job positions at the same university, is the biggest problem married couples face when both are trying to pursue a teaching career.

"Almost every married couple that teaches here has experienced the two-body problem at some point in their lives," Richard Weida said. "The biggest problem is deciding whose career is dependent on working at a certain institution and who can remain more flexible in regards to where they work."

"After we graduated together from graduate school, earlier recruiting for management professors helped us decide to establish my job and then search for a position close by for Rich," Nancy Weida said.

So why are there so many married couples working at the University? Is it something in the air, or the many wonderful sunsets we get to enjoy? Associate Professor of Psychology David Evans said part of the reason is because many of the couples on the faculty were married before coming to the University. "I can see how it might be difficult for Bucknell to keep single professors on the faculty for a long time. In a small town like Lewisburg, there isn't necessarily going to be a whole lot of potential dating partners," Evans said. However, Evans met his wife, Associate Professor of Biology and Animal Behavior Elizabeth Capaldi, in 2000 while both were teaching at the University.

"I was very lucky to meet my wife here, but Bucknell does not necessarily foster married relationships. However, it is certainly very accepting of those who do have them," Evans said.

One concern about working together mentioned by some faculty is the perception that couples who work together are unable to be impartial when making decisions that deal with their spouse. Abe Feuerstein said the problem is usually easy to avoid.

"Currently I am my wife's supervisor in the education department, but I never involve myself with any evaluation process of her to make sure everything remains fair in the eyes of the entire faculty," Feuerstein said.

"When I applied to Bucknell's management department, my wife removed herself from any part of the hiring process," Richard Weida said. Students of married faculty members enjoy the sense of closeness this situation adds to the University.

"I think it is awesome that my professor is married to another faculty member. It really adds to the community feel of Bucknell," Jenna DiPaolo '07 said regarding Associate Professor of Italian Bernhard Kuhn, who is married to Associate Professor of International Relations Emek Ucarer.

"The positive aspects of the relationship between Kuhn and his wife are reflected in class as he always has a smile on his face and great mental attitude," said Steve Wolf '07, another student of Kuhn's.

Overall, married couples on the faculty at the University find their situations to be positive.

"There is nothing negative about it. We get to enjoy each other's company at home and at work," Evans said.

"Being able to work together is an asset to our marriage, because it adds to the integrated nature of our lives," Henry said. "It's really very refreshing."

"Now that I work in the same place as Nancy, I can enjoy being a more integrated and supportive member of the school's community," Feuerstein said.

The University has always prided itself on the close-knit community of both students and faculty. Since married couples have become a valuable part of the faculty has only made the community closer and stronger.

Associate Professor of Education Abe Feuerstein and his wife, Sue Ellen Henry, love working together at the University. Working in the same department gives them plenty of dinner-time conversation.

FEATURES

a sense of community

Siblings keep it in the family

By AMY WAGNER
Staff Writer

During Siblings Weekend, we had the opportunity to appreciate our siblings, whether we are the oldest, the middle child, the youngest or a twin, what would the world be without siblings? Speaking from personal experience, the world would be peaceful without them.

Imagine that you are a student at the University, and—gasp!—your little brother wants to come to college here too! Should you protest? Intercept his application? Punch him? As most of the siblings at the University have confessed, you do none of these things. Rather, you welcome him to the "Bucknell family" with open arms.

After speaking with several pairs of siblings, many of whom are twins, around campus, I learned that most of them are thrilled to be Bucknellians together and grateful to have each other here for support.

Twins Erin and Shauna Weinstein '07 said they knew they wanted to go to college together from the beginning.

"We're both capable of doing fine without each other—it's just that I would prefer to have her with me," Erin Weinstein said.

"My sister and I decided to come to the same school because we are happiest when we are together," Shauna Weinstein said. Both psychology majors and members of the lacrosse team, the Weinstein twins spend a lot of time together, but agree that being together at the University has not changed their relationship.

"I don't think we've grown apart or necessarily closer since being at college together, we've always been very close and I don't think that will change," Erin Weinstein said.

Brian and Jack Conboy '07 decided to come to the University because they both liked the campus, and they were both chosen as Presidential Fellows.

"We do not regret coming to school together at all. It made the transition from home to college easier," Brian Conboy said.

The Conboy twins are involved in different activities on campus and said they have very different interests.

"I play the viola in the University orchestra and work in the anthropology department as part of my Presidential Fellowship. Jack works in the athletics department in marketing for his Fellowship, and he also hosts a sports show on WVBU," Brian Conboy said.

Other sets of twins guessed that they would go to college separately and never expected to come to the

Some siblings, upon coming to the University, find themselves getting involved in the same organizations. Janet '04 and Carol Forney '06 (left) are both members of the pep band, while Amy '06 and Heather Eckelsen '07 (right) are both members of the Bucknell Dance Company.

University together, such as twins Kevin and Kat Allen '07.

"Honestly, it was a twist of fate that landed us both here," Kevin Allen said.

"My brother and I did not really consciously decide to attend the same school," Kat Allen '07 said.

Both Kevin and Kat agree that being at college together has brought them closer together.

"We run into each other a few times a week, but it's not like we see each other all the time. We really have our separate lives here at Bucknell."

—Janet Forney '04

"I'm glad it worked out this way because it would have been the hardest goodbye to say," Kevin Allen said.

"Since we've been here, we've never been closer," Kat Allen said.

Megan Leinen '05 said that she and her twin sister, Sarah Leinen '05, always assumed they would end up at different universities.

"We were both a little surprised that both of us chose Bucknell because up until the last minute we were both leaning towards different schools," Megan Leinen said.

"Sophomore and junior years of college we've hung out a lot more than we did freshman year, but we each still have our own stuff going on too. ... it's nice to know that [Megan] is there when I need her," Sarah Leinen said.

Carolyn Wakulichik '07 also said that she and her twin sister, Anna Wakulichik '07, did not plan to go to college together.

"Anna and I decided to come to the same school almost by accident. We each made it a point to have our own separate lists of schools we were looking at, since we've shared everything from bottles to soccer shorts our whole lives," Carolyn Wakulichik said.

Though they are both involved in very different activities around campus, the Wakulichik twins could not be happier to be at school together.

"I love the school, community and the friends I've met here. Having Anna here is an added bonus," Carolyn Wakulichik said.

While having a twin and going to college together makes for a special bond, having an older or younger sibling at school with you also creates a unique bond between siblings.

"Having a sister here wasn't my only deciding factor for attending Bucknell, but it definitely did sway my decision a lot," Heather Eckelsen '07 said.

Heather's older sister Amy Eckelsen '06 said she loves having Janet here at the University with her.

"Heather came up and visited me several times last year and fell in love with the school. We have similar tastes so I can see how she felt the same way about Bucknell as I did," Amy Eckelsen said.

Sisters Robin Meling '04 and Dawn Meling '06 also love attending the University together. Robin Meling said she and her sister have always been very close, "so when she was applying to schools I encouraged her to look at Bucknell."

"I was really excited when I decided to come to Bucknell because it meant we could hang out as much as we wanted to, as opposed to just seeing each other every once in a while on breaks and weekends," Dawn Meling said.

In the end, even if you have the same parents, grandparents, last name and share a bathroom at home, attending the same college does not mean that you will leave with identical experiences.

"We run into each other a few times a week, but it's not like we see each other all the time. We really have our separate lives here at Bucknell," Janet Forney '04 said when asked about living on the same campus as her younger sister.

Her sister Carol Forney '06 agreed.

"I have been able to shape my own experience here at Bucknell, and though I'll rarely admit it, I really don't mind having Janet at the same school as me," Carol Forney said.

Another romantic edition brought to you by ...

Dear Ms. O,

Let me just say I love your column. I read it every week religiously and have taken your advice more than once. My question is a little different from the usual ones. You see, I'm one of those Bucknell legacy kids. My parents both went to Bucknell, met here, got married at Rooke Chapel and lived happily ever after. My whole life I've been thinking that once I came to Bucknell I'd find "the one" and have the perfect life that my parents have, but it hasn't happened yet! When I meet someone it doesn't work, and I'm starting to get worried. It's not that my only reason for coming to college was to find someone, but it's almost expected of me at this point. Thanks for your help.

—Looking for Love

Dear "Looking for Love," First of all, I want to thank you for your kind words. I am thrilled to know that this column has helped you! Your flattering letter just made Ms. O's day! Now, enough about Ms. O and her ego. We are going to move on to your question.

I would definitely not panic about not having found "the one" yet. As Bucknellians, I know that we are told over and over again that many Bucknellians marry other Bucknellians. While this does happen to some people, it is not true for everyone. If you think about it, it seems logical for Bucknellians to marry each other. When people spend four years of their lives isolated in the Bucknell "bubble," they are bound to form close alliances with others, whether that be through friendships or romantic relationships. However, this does not mean that we are all limited to only dating/marrying one another. (That would be kind of depressing.)

I also hate to point out the obvious, but you are still extremely young. You are probably 22 years old or younger. You should definitely not be panicking about marriage yet. Also, just because your parents were lucky enough to find each other here does not mean that this is the only place that you will be able to find yourself a partner.

You still have so many opportunities to meet people ahead of you in your lifetime. Keep in mind that Bucknell is not the only shot that you have at "happily ever after." You have plenty more time to meet the right person. You may do that here while you are in college, or you may not meet that person until you are working in an office or going to graduate school.

As I have said many times before, I am a firm believer in fate. You will meet your soul mate when you are supposed to. So please, do not stress yourself out about this. In the meantime, just enjoy the simple pleasure of being young, free and in college. Keep your mind open and keep meeting new people, and eventually, when the time is right, you will find that special someone.

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What is the best way to get out of having to talk to someone you are not interested in or attracted to?

Welcome to

"A Cut Above Hairdressers"
A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys
WALK INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

Some siblings find themselves attracted organizations different than their siblings. Sarah '05 and Megan Leinen '05 (left) are members of different sororities. Anna Wakulichik '07 is a varsity athlete, while her sister Carolyn '07 has decided to focus on her other interests.

FEATURES

Raising funds for UNAIDS

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Although one might think it would take a trip around the world to obtain collectables from countries like India, Germany or Bulgaria, the University's recent International Auction provided a much more reasonable option. Co-sponsored by International Student Services and the International Council, the annual auction provided University and community members the opportunity to bid on such items.

"Items from all over the world are donated by international students. [This year] 15 students donated things to the auction," Director of International Student Services Paula Cogan said.

Held in Hunt Form last Saturday, the auction has seen varied success in its past few years. Last year's auction had a huge turnout with students bidding against one another for items; this year, a reduced number of visitors meant that not all the items were sold and interested buyers could simply purchase an item at its list price.

"I live in Austria and brought an item back from home. We went to a lot of effort to have people bring things for the auction, and as long as they're brought we're happy," Elena Augustine '07 said.

Despite the low turnout, all items will be sold, possibly on the Internet, so that funds can be raised for this year's charity, UNAIDS.

According to its Web site, "the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, UNAIDS, is the main advocate for global action on the epidemic. It leads, strengthens and supports an expanded response aimed at preventing transmission of HIV, providing care and support, reducing the vulnerability of individuals and communities to HIV/AIDS and alleviating the impact of the epidemic."

Though the auction is over, the office of International Student Services is still accepting donations for UNAIDS. For more information, contact Cogan.

Ashley Maliken—The Bucknellian

The University's annual International Auction, co-sponsored by International Student Services and the International Council, raises money for a different cause every year by selling items from around the world.

COME OUT AND MAKE A SPLASH

Bucknellian archives

For the past twenty years, Delta Gamma Sorority has raised money to help the blind through their largest philanthropic event, Anchor Splash. Twenty-one participating teams will compete in the Kinney Natatorium on Thursday at 8:30pm.

Visit smoldering Centralia

Underground mine fires heat up Pennsylvania's nearly abandoned town

Juliana Pietak—The Bucknellian

Visitors are free to explore the town above provided they heed the warning signs (left) and do so at their own risk. The steaming sinkholes are a common sight in Centralia as the 32-year-old fire still burns today.

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

It has been featured in the Los Angeles Times, Harper's Magazine, The Washington Post, The New Republic, Esquire, American Scientist, Business Historical Review, U.S. News and World Report, and appears frequently in The New York Times—all this attention and there is nothing there. Not bad for a smoking ghost town.

Centralia, Pa., population 14, captures the imagination and hearts of many who hear its story. Add documentaries, studies, novels, photo essays and feature-length films focused on the Centralia story to the publicity, and it is easy to see that the subject is interesting at the very least.

"It's unusual, it's dramatic with steam condensing in the vents above the fire, cracks in the road, smoldering trees, poisonous fumes," said University Associate Professor of Geology Carl Kirby. "It's also essentially a modern ghost town."

Kirby has taken his classes on field trips to the abandoned town for eleven years and currently teaches a Foundation Seminar on the coal region.

"[I take them there] to let them see the relationships between geology, environmental harm and human mistakes in attempting to recover resources and manage the environment," Kirby said.

Despite this interest, a trip through the town, located 45 minutes southeast on Route 61, is literally of blink-and-you-will-miss-it length. Where buildings once stood, all you see is what appear to be overgrown fields and barriers, seemingly blocking off roads under construction.

A closer look reveals that this is not the case. Along the side of the road are several signs: Warning. Danger. Underground Mine Fire. Walking or driving in this area could result in serious injury or death. Dangerous gases are present. Ground is prone to sudden collapse. Smoke billows from the ground around these signs, in a natural version of cheesy theatricals. If you are wearing thin shoes, you feel the ground warm under your feet in some places and begin to muse about just what is going on "down there." Stepping out of your car takes you into a world of surreal steaming sinkholes.

"It's a treat to see the wasteland and to think about what's just beneath your feet," said Mike Farley, of Burt, N.Y.

Underneath your soles lies a coal mine, part of the once-rich anthracite coal region and the main character in the Centralia story. In 1962, a smoldering fire began in a landfill in an abandoned coal pit. The fire burned slowly and caught a vein of the coal, but people never believed that this story was true, until their basement walls began to feel warm to the touch and they began to suffer from carbon-monoxide headaches.

Around 1980, a 12-year-old boy was swallowed into a 300-foot sinkhole that opened up underneath him. He was rescued uninjured, and despite this near-tragedy, the situation was left to smolder until 1983, when large fissures began to open in Route 61. The following year, the federal government allocated funds to relocate all citizens of the town, declaring it one of only four eminent domains in the country where the government has the right to seize private land.

Today the population still stands at a stubborn 14. Many families of the 14 have called Centralia home for generations.

"It's their home, their history and culture are strongly tied to the land and to coal mining," Kirby said.

They live in row houses jutting awkwardly out of the landscape. All the other buildings have burnt or been torn down, and their homes need brick side supports to hold up the narrow row house frames.

Visitors can explore the town, but must do so, as the signs state, at their own risk. Small gravel parking lots shoulder Route 61 for tourists to park amidst the smoke. A small walkway takes you through the sinkholes and into the St. Ignace graveyard, where smoke is said to rise around the grave-stones.

"The site of the old church seems like something from another planet," Farley said. "The charred remains of garbage and smoldering holes emit unrecognizable gas clouds."

I have never been able to find the old Route 61, which has been detoured and then repaved around, but if you can locate it, fissures are said to spew steam from the old roadbed.

A visit to Centralia is a short trip with a long story for those who want a truly unrivaled thing to do "in the middle of nowhere." What has often been described as hell on earth is quite literally a Central Pa. hot-spot—not bad for a smoking ghost town.

What to do in the middle of NOWHERE

Light the Night and brighten the future for those touched by cancer

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

The University will host its third-annual Light the Night Walk on April 13. The walk will begin at 5:45 p.m. and participants will depart from McDonnell Hall amphitheater.

The Light the Night Walk, a national event, was created to celebrate and remember the lives of those touched by or lost to cancer. Any monetary contributions made are donated to the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, which in turn uses them to find cures for leukemia, lymphoma, Hodgkin's disease and myeloma. The money is also used to help improve the quality of life for patients and their families.

There are currently more than 640,000 people in the United States living with various forms of blood-related cancers. The Leukemia and Lymphoma

Society, in large part because of all the money raised through events like this, is a leader in the fight against these deadly diseases. Individual walkers are welcome, as are families, organizations and companies, which can form teams to take part in the event.

There is no registration fee, but those raising $10 or more will carry one of the society's illuminated balloons, which is what has earned the event its title. Each group that carries a balloon will help to "light the night," hopefully creating a physical reminder of the goal.

In addition, dedication banners will be displayed to give everyone an opportunity to place a name or message in honor or in memory of a family member or friend with cancer. Over the past two years, the Light the Night Walk at the University has been a tremendous success. The event has raised more than $14,000 and attracted more than 600 participants, numbers that the University hopes to increase with this year's walk.

If you or your organization is interested in participating, please contact Christine Hebling '05 (chebling@bucknell.edu) or Rebecca Schofield '05 (rschofield@bucknell.edu).

Courtesy of Christine Hebling

Light the Night offers friends and family members of cancer victims the opportunity to walk to memorialize the lives of those they lost. Even in the rain, walkers are dedicated to the cause.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

April 9, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 9

Diversions and Excursions:

A&E has four entertaining reasons to count up your pocket change.

See page A12

Speech codes come under fire at forum

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

University organizations including the Conservatives Club and Bucknell Student Government sponsored the April 1 free-speech forum. Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 (left) and University Chaplain Ian Oliver (right) were two of the forum's three-member panel.

By ELISABETH SALEMME
Editor-in-Chief

A free speech forum was held April 1 to address speech codes, including the University's proposed bias-related harassment policy. The forum featured a three-person panel composed of Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70, University Chaplain Ian Oliver and Greg Lukianoff, the director of legal and public advocacy for the Foundation of Individual Rights in Education.

The event was sponsored by the Bucknell University Conservatives Club, Bucknell Student Government, the Politics and Current Events club, the department of history and Josh Fisher '04, Michael Payne, the chair of the faculty and professor of English, moderated the event. More than 90 people, including approximately 50 students, attended the forum. "Most of us here tonight feel like free speech is an important issue," BUCC President Charles Mitchell '05 said.

The discussion focused on the University's proposed bias-related harassment policy, which could replace the University's current harassment policy (See page A4 for a preview of the new harassment policy).

Lukianoff said he is skeptical about the University's proposed policy.

"If the University believes in free speech, then it would let the First Amendment stand. Bucknell's policy does not meet [First Amendment standards]," Lukianoff said.

Lukianoff said that if the words "ridicules," "condescending remarks," or "ethnic insults" are included in the University's policy, it would be a clear violation of students' rights.

"Pollock said 'ridicules,' 'annoying' and 'condescending' are not in the policy," although some of these words were included in the University's old harassment policy.

Lukianoff discussed the various cases he has dealt with through the FIRE organization, and he said that "hurling a racial epithet" is a freedom of speech often challenged in the courts.

"I am worried that the first instinct is to censor," Lukianoff said. "If you believe your ideas are powerful, beautiful and can support themselves ... then you don't need censorship."

Pollock said it is important to balance free speech with education.

"I don't pretend to have the knowledge that [Lukianoff] has, but we know Bucknell," Pollock said.

Pollock said that two years ago a task force was convened to write a policy similar to the bias-related harassment policy, because he "wasn't sure Bucknell was where it should be."

See SPEECH page A6

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

"I am worried that the first instinct is to censor," panelist Greg Lukianoff, the director of legal and public advocacy for the Foundation of Individual Rights in Education, said at the forum.

Student cited for DUI and possession of illegal drugs

By ELISABETH SALEMME
Editor-in-Chief

A University student was cited April 2 by Public Safety and Lewisburg police for driving under the influence of alcohol and for possession of illegal substances.

According to the police and Director of Public Safety Vince DeCerio, the student has not yet been charged.

"No charges have been filed yet pending results of the drug tests," DeCerio said.

According to the Public Safety Log, Public Safety pulled over the student's vehicle in front of Smith Hall after the student made an illegal U-turn. The student admitted to consuming alcohol, and he was later transported to Evangelical Community Hospital for blood-alcohol level testing.

The Union County sheriffs who were working on campus for House Party weekend arrived at the scene to assist Public Safety, according to DeCerio. The sheriffs requested the student empty his pockets, and a bag of a substance alleged to be cocaine was found. Upon a search of the student's vehicle, an open container of alcohol was found.

Public Safety searched the student's residence, and drug paraphernalia along with drugs alleged to be marijuana, hash and others were found.

According to DeCerio, the police were called in to test the drugs.

Police Chief William Neitz Jr. was unavailable for comment, but a spokesperson for the Lewisburg police said that more information regarding the drugs will not be released until the drug tests are verified.

"I can say that those persons who are using and dealing drugs on campus are naive if they believe they will not be caught, because sooner or later their activities will come to light and the will be prosecuted," DeCerio said. "The penalties for using and dealing drugs are severe—students who engage in these illegal activities jeopardize their entire futures."

EGG HUNTING BONANZA

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Area children participated in an Easter egg hunt sponsored by the Bucknell Student Government and the Class of 2007 Saturday. The event took place at Hufnagle park located on Market Street.

Evaluators say University will be re-accredited

By SARA STEFANINI
Contributing Writer

The team of peer evaluators from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools Commission on Higher Education said the University will be re-accredited. This declaration came after the eight-member team's two-day visit and during its 20-minute oral report on March 30 about its observations and recommendations for the University.

Although the team was generally positive about the University, it did have some points of criticism. It made several recommendations and suggestions, including that the University discontinue its Trustee Access Day.

The team's two-day visit was part of a re-accreditation process that the University undergoes every 10 years. In the oral presentation, team chair Roger Hull, president of Union College, assessed how well the team thinks the University meets the Middle States Commission's 14 standards and outlined its strengths and challenges.

"The team's recommendations have the force of requirements—typically in the form of follow-up reports. The suggestions, on the other hand, are non-binding," said Jerry Rackoff, University director of institutional research and assessment.

The team focused on challenges in three of the commission's 14 standards: leadership and governance, mission, and strategic planning.

The recommendations are that the faculty conduct a self-study of faculty governance; the University revise its mission statement; and the University re-initiate a strategic planning process to replace Vision 2010, Rackoff said.

The University will be required to submit follow-up reports on the progress of these changes by the end of the 2004-05 fiscal year. "In general, the observations of the team were consistent with the issues we had identified in our own self-study report," Rackoff said. The University began the self-study report in April 2002 and completed it before the team's visit.

"The faculty had already said that they wanted to examine their own [system of governance], so that did not come as a surprise," Chair of the Faculty and Professor of English Michael Payne said.

Rackoff also said the University had already been anticipating a new strategic planning process under the new president, and part of that effort will include a review of the University's mission statement. The University suspended Vision 2010 after President Rogers announced his plans to retire at the end of 2003-04.

Both Rackoff and Payne were surprised, however, by some of the specific details of the team's recommendations.

"The main [detail] is about the relationship between the board of trustees and the campus community," Payne said.

At the moment, the University has a Trustee Access Day, during which members of the board come to campus, and anyone from the community can make comments or express concerns to them.

The team recommended that this come to an end and that communication between the board and the campus community go through the presidential office.

Rackoff said the team wanted to ensure full communication between the board and the administration and "to make sure that there were no separate channels of communication that left the administration out."

Rackoff said the team's concerns are unfounded now that the new president, Brian Mitchell, will be a full member of the board of trustees. This change means that the president will attend executive sessions of the board, which were previously closed to all members of the administration.

"I think there was some concern about those details, especially because of perceptions we have had that open communication is a good thing," Payne said.

Additionally, Rackoff said the team was overly specific about the changes that the University should make and what the results of those changes should be.

"They were a bit too strong in telling us to revise our mission statement," Rackoff said. "Instead, they should have recommended that we re-examine this document and allow Bucknell to make its own decision whether revision is or is not needed."

The visiting team also said the University's governance system is more decentralized than many of its peer institutions, and its conclusion was that the University should strive to be more like those other institutions.

Rackoff said that what is important is whether the University's system works well for the University, not how it compares to others.

"Middle States examines a school's success in achieving its own mission, goals and objectives—a process that allows an institution considerable autonomy in deciding what changes to make and how to make them," Rackoff said.

Rackoff and Payne both said the team's primary concern was to make the presidential transition as smooth as possible and ensure that the next administration has a long and successful life.

Payne said there was a "bit of a precipitous

See STATES page A4

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, March 28

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male having extreme difficulty walking near 64 University Avenue. Upon further investigation, the male was identified as a student who was intoxicated. The student was turned over to a dean. A citation was issued for public drunkenness.

INFORMATION / DISABLED VEHICLE—Public Safety responded to Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium for the report of a motor coach stuck in the mud. The driver successfully freed the vehicle. Some property damage occurred.

Thursday, April 1

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Dana Engineering for the report of graffiti on the wall. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / VEHICLE DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a damage to an employee's vehicle that was caused when the door of a student's vehicle opened into it. The owners exchanged insurance information.

INFORMATION / UNAUTHORIZED FILMING—Public Safety responded to the science complex on the report of a group filming without obtaining prior authorization from the University General Counsel. The individuals could not be located in a search of the area.

Friday, April 2

DUI / ACT 64 (Drug Violation)—While on routine campus patrol, Public Safety observed a vehicle make an illegal U-turn. Public Safety initiated a vehicle stop at Smith Hall. Union County Sheriff Department was in the area and assisted.

Public Safety determined the driver was a University student who admitted to consuming alcohol, although under the age of 21. The deputy sheriff requested the student empty his pockets, which produced a bag, which contained an alleged substance thought to be cocaine.

The student granted permission to search the vehicle, and an open container of alcohol was found. The student was transported to Evangelical Community Hospital for blood-alcohol level testing.

Another University student, a passenger in the vehicle, was transported to Public Safety testing area for field sobriety testing. Public Safety searched the driver's residence and found drug paraphernalia, and substances alleged to be marijuana, hash and other drugs. Lewisburg Police responded. The driver was cited for possession of controlled substances, DUI and possession of drug paraphernalia. Criminal charges are to be issued pending verification testing of the confiscated drugs. The passenger was cited for underage consumption.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a broken window. Upon arrival, Public Safety located a window pane broken out of a front exterior door. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for possible underage consumption. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified a male student who was wearing a green wristband and in possession of a House Party mug containing alcohol. East Buffalo Township Police responded. The student was cited for an open-container violation and underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male attempting to prop up another male. Upon investigation, Public Safety identified both as University students who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Both students were cited for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Carey House for the report of someone playing beer pong. Upon arrival, Public Safety found no indication of beer pong. Upon entry, Public Safety observed a broken window pane at the front door. No witnesses or suspects were located. The incident is under investigation.

OPEN CONTAINER—While on routine patrol, Public Safety stopped on Dent Drive to assist the Union County Sheriff with a male who was identified as a University student stopped for an open container of alcohol. He was cited for an open container violation.

OPEN CONTAINER/COUNTERFEIT WRISTBAND—While on patrol, Public Safety observed a male on Fraternity Road carrying an open can of beer. Upon questioning, the male was identified as a University student. Upon further investigation, the student admitted to making a fake wristband. He was cited for an open container violation and false information.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/AMBULANCE TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of an intoxicated male. The male was identified as an extremely intoxicated visitor in need of medical attention. He was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for medical treatment and later released.

Saturday, April 3

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to South Seventh Street and Fraternity Road for the report of three intoxicated students. Upon testing, the males were determined to be students who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety was dispatched to the Gateways for a report of fireworks being discharged, which could be heard from the office. Upon arrival, a University student in the custody of the resident assistants admitted that he was responsible for discharging the fireworks. Upon further investigation, several other fireworks were found and subsequently confiscated by Public Safety. The student was cited for disorderly conduct and possession of illegal fire arms.

ACT 64 (DRUG VIOLATION) / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to a report of an underage intoxicated female. Upon arrival, three University students admitted to drinking alcohol, although under the age of 21.

While attempting to positively identify one of the above students, Public Safety observed marijuana in his dresser drawer. Permission was granted for a thorough room search by the on-call dean. Drug paraphernalia was found and confiscated. All three students were cited for underage consumption, and one was cited for possession of controlled substances and drug paraphernalia.

FIRE SAFETY VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm at Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. Public Safety determined that the cause of the alarm was due to an unknown person(s) discharging the fire extinguisher and activating the pull station. The incident is under investigation. Charges are pending.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Trax Hall for the report of a broken window. Upon arrival, Public Safety located the window and requested a custodian for clean up and repair. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / THEFT—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for the report that a male had removed a shovel from the house. This male was identified as a former Delta Upsilon member and indicated he was going to clean up the porch. The student was given a verbal warning.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION/PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, a Public Safety officer observed a male having difficulty walking near the Ward House. Upon investigation, the male was identified as a University student, although under the age of 21. The student was cited for public drunkenness and underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Fraternity Road for possible underage consumption. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified a female University student who was intoxicated, although under the age of 21. The student was cited for underage consumption.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to a BU West Mod for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects were found in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A University employee reported to a Public Safety officer that an unknown person(s) poured an unknown substance on her vehicle while it was parked on Moore Avenue. East Buffalo Township Police was notified. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded outside Delta Upsilon Fraternity for the report of a male drinking alcohol without a wristband. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the male as a University student who admitted to consuming alcohol, although under the age of 21. The student was cited for underage consumption. Fraternity charges are pending.

POSSIBLE THEFT—A University student reported to Public Safety that her North Face fleece jacket was discovered missing at Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity. The jacket also contained her BU ID and a disposable camera. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to the Farm Lot checkpoint for the report of a male consuming alcohol without a wristband. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified the male as a University student who admitted to consuming alcohol, although under the age of 21. He was cited for underage consumption.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION (NON-BU STUDENT)—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for possible underage consumption. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified one male as a legal age University student and one male visitor who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. The visitor was charged with underage consumption.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF/VANDALISM—Public Safety responded to the South Fifth Street parking extension for a report of vandalism to a University student's vehicle. Upon investigation, it was determined that a rock was thrown through the rear window of the vehicle by an unknown person(s). No witnesses or suspects could be located. The incident is under investigation.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for the report of possible underage consumption. Upon arrival, Public Safety identified a male visitor in possession of a House Party mug, although not wearing a wristband. Upon investigation, it was determined that the individual had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. The individual was cited for underage consumption. Fraternity charges are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity for the report of an intoxicated visitor who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21 years. Lewisburg Police responded. A citation was issued for underage consumption and the male was escorted off campus. Fraternity charges are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Sigma Chi Fraternity for the report of an intoxicated University student. Upon investigation, it was determined that the student had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21 years. A citation was issued for underage consumption. Fraternity charges are pending.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Rooke Chapel for the report of a male carrying a barricade. Another male was present at the time. Upon investigation, the two males were identified as a University student and a visitor who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21 years. East Buffalo Township Police Department responded and cited the visitor for theft and underage consumption. The student was cited for theft and underage consumption. Additional criminal charges are pending investigation.

TRESPASSING / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed an intoxicated visitor. Upon investigation, it was determined that this male had been removed from House Party events earlier this same date. East Buffalo Township Police responded. Citations were issued for defiant trespass and public drunkenness. The student was escorted off campus.

FIRE SAFETY VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity for a fire alarm activation caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station for no apparent reason. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION—Public Safety responded to Bostwick Dining Hall for the report of an unknown person(s) breaking dishes. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that the action had stopped and Dining Services did not want to press charges; however, it wanted Public Safety to remain in the area for the remainder of the serving time.

ALCOHOL OVERDOSE / MEDICAL TRANSPORT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall first floor men's restroom for the report of an unconscious male. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the student was intoxicated, although under the age of 21 and required medical treatment. Emergency Medical Services transported the ill student to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. Citations were issued for underage consumption and public drunkenness.

ALCOHOL OVERDOSE / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the exterior of Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity for the report of an unresponsive male who had fallen. Upon investigation, it was determined that the individual was a student who had consumed alcohol, although under the age of 21. East Buffalo Township Police responded. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus. Citations were issued for underage drinking and public drunkenness. Fraternity charges are pending.

PUBLIC URINATION—While on routine foot patrol near Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity, Public Safety observed a male urinating on a propane tank. Upon investigation, the male was identified as a student. A citation was issued for public urination.

News

House Party Weekend

"Shady Uncle Thomas Saturday afternoon at Sig Ep was an awesome show."

—Kevin Powers '06

"I liked that there were live bands at all the frats and that there were fresh faces."

—Joel Cohen '07

"The best thing about House Party is that the frats are open to everyone and not just the social elite."

—Brandon Risser '04

"Jimmie's Chicken Shack gave a great show—a little muddy, but lots of fun."

—Meghan Lithgow '05

"I like the variety of music from DJ James to Jimmie's Chicken Shack."

—Billy Duffy '06

Photos courtesy of University Fraternities

THE BUCKNELLIAN STYLE AND SUBSTANCE ...

OUR READERS ON
THE OTHER HAND ...

IN THE EMPLOYEES' BATHROOM
YOU'LL FIND MAGAZINES.

IN THE EXECUTIVE BATHROOM, A NEWSPAPER.

200 Market St.
Sunbury PA 17801
570-286-5671

The Daily Item
BLACK AND WHITE MAKE GREEN

The Daily Item

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30

College Night

$5-3 Games & Shoe Rental

News

University to release a new harassment policy

By KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

A bias-related harassment policy, written by a University-appointed task force, is currently under discussion by students, faculty and administrators. The policy specifically deals with harassment issues that significantly affect an individual's ability to study or work at the University.

"The policy is designed to help the administration figure out what they need to take action on and what they do not. It sets a fairly clear definition of what would count as harassment and what does not," said University Chaplain Ian Oliver, who is head of the task force. "What it covers is situations where there is a conflict over race, religion or nationality, when someone feels that they are being harassed on the basis of that."

The policy lays down a specific definition of what harassment is based on the level of threat felt by a victim.

"An incident comes under this policy when the person who is targeted reasonably feels that the attack creates what is called a 'hostile environment' and substantially interferes with their study or work," Oliver said.

This definition can include several things, but will probably apply more directly to common forms of harassment.

"You can imagine the examples: anonymous graffiti on your door because of your gender or race," Oliver said. "We had an incident recently of vandalism to Newman House that we think might have been anti-Catholic."

The new harassment regulations serve to not only classify bias-related harassment but to also standardize the procedural handling of the incident.

"[An incident] should get reported, investigated, and then we have three options for resolving a complaint: mediation, arbitration or formal hearing," Oliver said.

The policy replaces an earlier version of harassment regulations that failed to serve the needs of administrators.

"I think there were a couple of incidents in which the administration realized they didn't have a clear policy to fall back on," Oliver said. "They decided that it just didn't guide very well and was not specific enough."

Students should remember that the new policy is ultimately designed to draw a fairer delineation between free speech and victimization.

"We encourage as much speech as possible and that those targeted by harassment should let people know, though the perception of harassment does not necessarily mean it fits the policy's definition of harassment," Oliver said.

Several champions of free speech on campus have a positive outlook on the new policy and how it affects their cause.

"Especially because of the free speech forum we had last Thursday, I'm feeling pretty optimistic about the new policy," Conservatives Club President Charles Mitchell '05 said. "Based on what Vice President Pollock said at our forum, I think that he and Rev. Oliver both seem to realize some of the problems with the policy we have now and are trying to remove them from the next policy."

Even as a strong advocate of free speech, Mitchell also emphasized the importance of a bias-related harassment policy on campus.

"It's not an issue of whether we should not have a harassment policy, but that the current policy bans things that are not harassment," Mitchell said. "They have to continue to attack this problem, just in a different way; they seemed to grasp that."

Other students also hope that the new policy will have a more balanced standpoint on harassment.

"I think this could be good for students because it can protect you from serious harassment while still allowing people to have an opinion to a certain extent," Ravi Bhalodia '07 said.

Despite the fact that the policy will clear up many questions over incidents of harassment, it will not necessarily prevent the original problem.

"Bucknell's best defense against prejudice is still education and building community," Oliver said.

Although the new bias-related harassment policy has already been drafted, its creators note that it will still be some time before it is put into effect.

"The policy and procedures will go through the whole governance system of the University Charles Mitchell '05 said. "Based on what Vice President Pollock

PHI BETA KAPPA INDUCTIONS

Melissa Cook '04 was inducted into the Phi Beta Kappa Honor Society along with 31 other seniors and five juniors April 2.

Middle States team commends the University for its strengths reaction to the fact that we have had two short-term presidents" and that the team assumed both the terms were short because of the culture of the University.

STATES From page A1

Aside from their recommendations, the team assured the University during its oral presentation that it will be re-accredited, and addressed some of its strengths.

"They focused on the quality and dedication of our faculty, the success of the merger of computing and library services into ISR, the continuing high performance of our admissions program, and our progress towards gender equity in athletics," Rackoff said.

Garry Thaniel '04, who attended one of the team's meetings with students, said that the team was very positive about the University.

"From what I perceive, they really thought it was a quality institution, and they felt that what a lot of students do and say does affect the faculty and staff at Bucknell," Thaniel said.

In the upcoming weeks, the team will send the University a written report of its observations, recommendations and suggestions. The University will review the report, correct any factual errors and send it back to the team.

Then the team will send a corrected version to the University, and the University will have a chance to write a formal response that outlines any counterarguments or different interpretations.

Finally, the team's report, the University's response and the self-study document will be submitted to the Middle States Commission on Higher Education. The commission will conduct an independent review and determine its final recommendations on the University's re-accreditation.

Duquesne University • Pittsburgh, PA • www.leadership.duq.edu/summer

Summer Sessions 2004

Now's the time to get ahead, catch up, or just take a class for enjoyment - do it for you!

Do More...
DUQUESNE UNIVERSITY
For the Mind, Heart and Spirit

School of Leadership & Professional Advancement
Courses, Workshops, Seminars, Study Abroad
Accelerated Sessions
Seven Different Start Dates, May through July

Register by fax, phone, mail or in person.
Visit www.leadership.duq.edu/summer.

Please call 1-800-283-3853 for our complete Summer Information Package.

News

Halloween a culturally confused tradition, campus speaker claims

Courtesy of children.camden.rutgers.edu
According to Dr. Cindy Dell Clark, "Children make real-life connections between real death and the death depicted in Halloween." Clark lectured at the University April 1 as part of the children's studies lecture series.

By DREW CALVERT
Staff Writer

According to Dr. Cindy Dell Clark, a professor at Penn State Delaware County and author of two books on children's studies, the typical Halloween celebration is an example of America's topsy-turvy holiday ritualism.

In her on-campus lecture April 1, Clark explained the consequences of what she sees as culturally confused traditions of one of America's major holidays.

Clark describes Halloween as a day when "what is usually taboo is put in the forefront ... when adults get to take death and parade it outside and associate it with childhood, and so render it innocent."

Clark showed pictures, related stories and harkened back to her own childhood memories of overzealous parents draping their houses with emblems of death. Most important to her, though, was the effect this has on children.

"Children make real-life connections between real death and the death depicted in Halloween," Clark said, adding that the "innocent symbols mean more to children than adults."

Clark said the crux of the holiday is the role reversal that allows children to be grown-ups for a day. They get to go out in the dark, dress up, talk to strangers and eat candy, all of which they would not normally be allowed to do. Girls dress up as alluring figures, and boys as scary ones, and the attention they receive, as such, influences their cultural understanding.

Because children select their own costumes, they participate in important dynamics of American society—those of sexuality, domestic role, and power conflicts, Clark said this illustrates children reacting actively to culture.

Clark broadened her discussion of rituals to include the stories of Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny and the Tooth Fairy, all which teach children the capacity for faith. These other American rituals exhibit what Clark saw as a sweeping pattern of acculturation. Children are more active in the process than one might think.

"Interaction between adults and children is a two-way street," Clark said. "Adult meanings are not copied through unidirectional process."

That is, children pick up what is meaningful for them. The world of marketing, therefore, can only provide the child with something the child can make real him or herself.

Clark showed a video of a 3-year-old girl in her own home watching and singing along to Barney tapes. Clark said the girl was representative of all children she had worked with, since she would only sing along or participate in related games if her interest was genuinely piqued, regardless of her mother's prodding.

For someone who once studied young boys' baseball card-buying-habits (Clark worked for Upper Deck), this kind of information is interesting in its relation to marketing ploys directed at children.

The lecture, titled "Fools, Fairies, Ghosts and Other Profound Tricks of Child Participation in Culture," was one of a series put on by the psychology department, and hosted by Associate Professor of Psychology Chris Boyatzis. Boyatzis was excited to have Clark contribute to the series.

"Dr. Clark's lecture was a fascinating and eclectic mix of different disciplinary perspectives—developmental psychology, cultural anthropology, clinical psychology and others," Boyatzis said.

He praised her diverse intellectual approach and said it reflected the basis of the emerging field of children's studies, namely, "[a]n inter-

"Children make real-life connections between real death and the death depicted in Halloween."

—Cindy Dell Clark, professor at Penn State Delaware County disciplinary approach to understanding children and childhood."

Students of psychology, and others interested, attended the talk, leaving both impressed and surprised.

"It was definitely an original approach to the study of children within our cultural patterns. We usually don't think of our holidays as ritualistic," Katie Mulrine '06 said.

Courtesy of amazon.com

Clark, who spoke at the University April 1, is the author of two books including, "In Sickness and in Play."

NEWS BRIEFS

By Meghan Ball and Alyson Walker

Accomplice to Pelosi charged in Ted Ammon murder

There has been a second indictment in the murder case of former University trustee Ted Ammon '71. Christopher Parrino, 36, was charged March 31 with criminal facilitation and obstructing the prosecution from gaining evidence that would aid in the investigation of Ammon's murder, according to CNN.com. Parrino pleaded not guilty and will be released after posting $50,000 bail.

Daniel Pelosi was charged March 23 with a count of second-degree murder and pleaded not guilty. Pelosi had been employed by Ammon to work in his East Hampton home, where Ammon was found dead after being beaten 31 times with a blunt object in October 2001. Pelosi has been a prime suspect in the murder because of his marriage to Ammon's widow, Genesora Ammon, three months after Ammon's murder.

Parrino and Pelosi were colleagues, according to Ray Perini, Parrino's attorney. If Parrino is convicted of assisting Pelosi in Ammon's murder, he could receive a maximum of 15 years in prison. Pelosi faces 25 years to life in prison if convicted of murdering Ammon, CNN.com reported.

Ammon had been on the University's board of trustees since 1992. He started a challenge to raise scholarship money by promising to donate one dollar for every three dollars pledged. This promise, known as the Ammon Challenge, raised $76,359,000 for University scholarships. Ammon personally pledged $15.1 million to the University, the largest single gift in University history. Ammon's estate completed the payment of his gift to the University earlier this year.

University professor commended in The New York Times

Assistant Professor of Art Xiaozhe Xie was praised in a March 21 article in The New York Times. The article was about his show at the Charles Cowles Gallery in Chelsea, New York City. The exhibition will run until tomorrow.

At the University, Xie was both a curator and artist in "Regeneration: Contemporary Chinese Art from China and the US," which was on exhibit in the Sack Art Gallery from Jan. 26 to April 4. His artwork offers glimpses of contemporary life.

One particular painting noted by the Times was of a stack of newspapers, showing snippets of major events in the articles. In a series titled "The Silent Flow of Daily Life," his paintings appear almost photogenic. Xie has exhibited throughout the United States and in China. This is his second show at the Charles Cowles Gallery.

University employee retires after 20 years of work

Jean C. Christ retires after working 20 years with the University today. Christ began working with dining services in 1984 in the Refectory. She has since worked in Bostwick Cafeteria, the Bison and is finishing her career in Larison Dining Hall.

"We started about the same time, and she has always been a great, outgoing person. She has become a staple in dining services and will definitely be missed," co-worker Kay Heimbach said.

Disney Career Opportunity!

Are you ready to start building your résumé and preparing for your future career? The Walt Disney World College Program gives you the opportunity to take college-level courses for credit, network with Disney leaders and enhance your marketability in today's job market.

As a participant, you'll enjoy a social, multicultural environment with 24-hour secured housing and admission to all four Walt Disney World Theme Parks. Plus, you'll learn about next-step opportunities with The Walt Disney Company. This paid program is open to all majors and college levels. Find out more and apply online at www.collegeprogram.com.

Presentation attendance is required.

Susquehanna University
Thursday, April 15, 2004; 2:00 pm
Shearer Weber Dining Room#3,
Degenstein Campus Center

Walt Disney World COLLEGE PROGRAM Dream it. Do it. Disney.

EOE • Drawing Creativity from Diversity • © Disney

Duquesne University • Pittsburgh, PA • www.leadership.duq.edu/summer

Summer Sessions 2004

Now's the time to get ahead, catch up, or just take a class for enjoyment - do it for you!

Do More...
DUQUESNE UNIVERSITY
For the Mind, Heart and Spirit

School of Leadership & Professional Advancement
Courses, Workshops, Seminars, Study Abroad
Accelerated Sessions
Seven Different Start Dates, May through July

Register by fax, phone, mail or in person.
Visit www.leadership.duq.edu/summer.
Please call 1-800-283-3853 for our complete Summer Information Package.

Zelda's

on the park

Fabulous Coffee,
Desserts and More!

Coming Soon to South Sixth Street

Scott Stieler BU '87
Proprietor
522-0443

RENTALS

for
BUCKNELL
STUDENTS

AVAILABLE
JUNE 1, 2004

3 LARGE 2 BR APTS.
AT:
237 South 3rd &
Saint George

Excellent condition,
excellent location -
right next door to campus

(570) 966-1488

Don't just read the news.
Write the news. E-mail mball@

BIG Andy's

BAR & GRILL

Mon-Fri. 5-7 PM

Mondays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net
for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

THE Night Club VAULT

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials

Seniors: It's time to CELEBRATE and share fond FAREWELLS.... Make it MEMORABLE!

From pig roasts to an elegant cold buffet, we offer menu ideas to create your perfectly prepared celebration. We also offer a variety of favorite entrees, hors d'oeuvres & party platters to go.

If you're looking for a place to have your party or special dinner our Brynwood Room accommodates up to 125 guests and Rusty's South Room is available for dining affairs up to 30 guests.

PLAN NOW!!

For more information or reservations call us at:
Brynwood Catering: 570-524-2121 x 1

Bull Run Inn
Celebrates Seniors Night

Thurs., April 1
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.

All 21 and over are welcome!

DJ & Dancing Food & Beverage Features

Check it out at: www.bullruninn.com

The Winfield Baptist Church
"The Bible Preaching Church For the Whole Family"
(Founded 1863)

Invites both men and women of Bucknell to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 am;
Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening Worship 6:30 pm

Evangelical
Traditional and contemporary Christian music
Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thornbury
Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28 acre site 3.5 miles south of campus. Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 miles, church on the right. For more information or transportation call 524-2735 or 743-7494 (any time)

News

Students will use new ID numbers in fall

By DAVID MERIN
Contributing Writer

Bucknell University IDs will have a fresh look next fall, but this cosmetic change is not the only thing that will be different when students and faculty go to buy their books, eat lunch, or check out a library book when they return from summer break.

The real change will be the long-awaited transition from the use of social security numbers as identification on campus to a new, randomly generated eight-digit BU ID.

Students and staff frequently use their social security numbers to log in to the University's online Banner Web system.

The University had started to take precautions against identity theft in the past, not displaying the numbers as they were being entered in online. Despite this precaution, the on-campus use of social security numbers as identification meant that the risk of identity theft was quite high.

Once an identity thief has person's social security number and name, he or she can acquire such things as a credit card or driver's license in the person's name. With these, the thief can do significant damage to the person's reputation and credit.

The University first began to discuss the possibility of moving away from using social security numbers for on-campus identification during the summer of 2002. This discussion was prompted by growing concern around the country about the increase in identity theft as our society becomes increasingly digitalized.

Chaz Wattles '06 said he was relieved that the University would soon be moving away from the use of social security numbers.

"I have never been an identity theft victim, and I don't want to start now," Wattles said.

Once an identity thief has person's social security number and name, he or she can acquire such things as a credit card or driver's license in the person's name. With these, the thief can do significant damage to the person's reputation and credit.

The President's staff said that moving away from social security numbers would be in the best interest of all members of the campus community. In the fall of 2002 the Committee on Codes and Standards began to tackle this important issue.

"The Committee on Codes and Standards are to be commended for their efforts that have ranged from consideration of the most broad architectural issues of our Banner system to the details of making certain that the new ID cards work in the many venues of transactions around campus," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management.

The conversion will begin June 7, when current and retired faculty and staff will be mailed their new ID cards. During July, students going abroad in the fall will receive their new cards at home. In August, first-year and returning students will get theirs. By December 31, social security numbers will no longer be used as identification, and the conversion will be complete.

"The smooth transition we anticipate taking place this summer and fall is a direct result of the hard work and dedication of this team," Thiede said.

Although the University is discontinuing the use of social security numbers because it feels it is in the best interest of the campus community to do so, some are displeased at having to learn a new ID number.

"I have enough to memorize for my classes. I don't want to have to memorize eight new numbers," Trevor Mullins '06 said.

Social security numbers will still be used for taxation, retirement accounts, and federal and state reporting.

Campus discusses free speech

SPEECH From page A1

be." A policy was not implemented at that time.

"Particular values on my mind were inclusiveness, equality of opportunity, mutual respect and civility," Pollock said. "These factors are more important as we [the University] become more diverse."

Oliver said private universities have privileges that public universities do not. At public universities, a policy like Bucknell's current harassment policy would be a violation of First Amendment rights. Oliver said the bias-related harassment policy addresses "only the most egregious cases" and is therefore much less of a First Amendment violation.

"[The bias-related harassment] policy limits no more than some federal laws," Oliver said. Punishable behaviors, Oliver said, include those that are directed at other Bucknellians and interfere with their work or environment or that target nationality or sexual orientation.

Oliver also said that Committee on Complementary Activities, which is a group of administrators, faculty and students who have worked on the policy, debated about the policy's unintended effects.

"[The policy] is not proactive, but reactive," Oliver said. "We looked at Pennsylvania and federal statutes so that the [bias-related harassment] policy doesn't go above and beyond [the standards of those documents]. Bucknell does not have a speech code—just protection."

Pollock said when a person is targeted by harassment, his or her speech is violated.

"Their speech gets constrained just as much as the [bias-related harassment policy] protects harassment," Pollock said. "We're not trying to punish speech, but harassment."

Lukianoff countered that, saying, "Unfortunately, harassment is speech—people shouldn't be brought up on charges of harassment just by speaking their mind."

Pollock said that the University will not tolerate discriminatory harassment.

"We can't educate tomorrow's leaders if they can't deal with a multicultural environment," Pollock said.

Several students addressed the "blackface incident" that took place two years ago, when two Delta Upsilon Fraternity members dressed as Venus and Serena Williams for Halloween, and in so doing, painted their faces black. Pollock said the action taken by the University was to educate the entire fraternity and the campus community about the possible repercussions of an act such as blackface painting.

"Why the use of blackface was offensive to people on this campus was addressed in what was hoped to be an education manner," Pollock said.

Some audience members said the University has not shown equality when punishing harassment.

"If we're supposed to entrust the administration with this policy, why do some things have a small response and some have a disproportionately large response?" asked Evan Malloney '94, in reference to what he said was a lack of administrative action when "Die BUCC" was written in chalk on campus.

Richard Waller, associate professor of history, agreed and said, "It appears there have been cases where the administrators have not been fair to particular harassments."

Fisher said the problem lies within the University and in order to solve harassment issues, students much take responsibility for their actions.

"As a student body we're rotting from the inside because we don't know how to deal with racism, sexism, harassment," Fisher said. "I think we need to rejuvenate action toward students—we're in a protected community and one of the biggest problems in my mind is taking away responsibility from fellow students."

Pollock and Oliver said they stress student input regarding the bias-related harassment policy.

"I remind us that this policy isn't going to prevent people from being cut out of the University," Pollock said. "We must hear from you if this is going to be a policy that reflects Bucknell's values."

Oliver said students can voice their opinions to administrators or their BSG representatives.

"The mission of the University is education more than anything else—it is something that is developed in a community—the only way for people to grow is to talk," Oliver said. "If we don't have this, we're not a University."

summer
AT NORTHWESTERN

REQUEST YOUR CATALOG TODAY!

REGISTRATION BEGINS APRIL 12 CLASSES BEGIN JUNE 21
847.491.5250 www.northwestern.edu/summernu

NORTHWESTERN
UNIVERSITY

524-9000

Sunday-Thursday 11 am- 1 am
Friday & Saturday 11 am- 2 am

Student Special:

Large One topping Pizza $7.99
3 Medium One topping Pizzas $13.99

Party Deal:

5 or More Large Pizzas
$6 each

Wing Deal:

Medium Pizza and 10 Wings/Kickers
$10.99

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $800
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $550
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate

521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837

570-523-3244

roll-on courage

ANTIPERSPIRANT/DEODORANT

you are having trouble understanding something your professor is teaching. everyone else in the class seems to get it. what do you do? answer the question. share your opinions with your classmates. explore what makes you different. pwc.com/look

PRICewaterHOUSECOOPERS

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 133, Number 9
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elizabeth Salemme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Santi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editor
Meghan Ball '06

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '06
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRoss '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwit '06
Keeley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombek '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Adviser
James F. Lee

On-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like to pay for a nonlocal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Policymaking process needs revision

The University community gathered together to speak about speech April 1. The free speech forum was sponsored by numerous campus groups, including the Bucknell University Conservatives Club, which led the initiative for the forum. It proved that discourse between students and the administration has incredible potential.

Although the main topic of dialogue at the forum involved the University's proposed bias-related harassment policy, the purpose of the forum was to simply discuss speech codes in general. The BUCC had to put much pressure on the administration before it finally agreed to participate in the forum.

A student group should not have had to go to this extreme in order to have its voice heard about such an important issue. Administrators should not participate in an event that is vital at a University simply because they are pressured to—they should want to be actively involved with the campus community.

Holding forums prior to the implementation of policies is an excellent idea. If a forum was held by the administration about the bias-related harassment policy before the policy was sent to a legal team, proper communication and policy-making would have taken place.

However, while students and faculty could voice their opinions at last week's forum, the forum was not directly about the new policy. What people said at the forum will probably not change any portions of the policy, because it is already being legally examined.

Vice President of Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 and University Chaplain Ian Oliver were the two University representatives on the free speech forum panel. Both stressed that students should contact the administration or Bucknell Student Government representatives in order to voice their opinions about the bias-related harassment policy. Pollock and Oliver should be commended for encouraging student input, but their statements were made too late in the process for most students to have an actual impact on the policy.

At the free speech forum, there was no reason to speak about speech when student and faculty opinions will be silenced by the fact that the bias-related harassment policy has essentially been determined.

The administration constantly stresses that the University is a family. Pollock repeatedly said that one reason the University implemented the bias-related harassment policy is to foster a sense of community.

The Bucknell information flow?

Christophe Richard—TheBucknellian

Letters to the editor

Cable testing wastes valuable tuition money

To the Editor:

I could not believe my eyes when I looked at the front page of my latest issue of The Bucknellian and discovered that the University is investing time and money testing out cable access in student dorm rooms.

Does anyone truly believe that cable access in dorm rooms is a key issue that needs to be addressed for improving or maintaining the academic value provided at the University?

In February, I received a letter from University President Steffen Rogers informing me that the comprehensive fee for my daughter's tuition would increase 5.8 percent next year. Rogers's letter detailed that costs are rising and that the University is "holding costs down wherever possible" and taking "stringent measures."

Forgive me, but adding infrastructure, spending resources on testing and administering cable access do not appear to me to be in line with the letter I received about a 5.8 percent increase. I think there are many opportunities for the University students to access cable in lounges—the University should not be investing resources in nonessential activities, such as cable access in dorm rooms.

Sincerely,

Lyle Death '79

Bucknellian House Party article was misguided

To the Editor:

I recently read Aaron Hanlon's article about the revision of guidelines for House Party weekend ("House Party Regulations need revision," April 2), and I found it very ignorant and rude to place the blame of House Party weekend's downfall on the actions of "one jerk from Texas."

As an eye witness to the incident three years ago, I think it is important for The Bucknellian's staff to get its facts correct. When a current Bucknell student is assaulted by an entire fraternity, it is not uncommon for their friends to help them defend themselves. If one student, who actually started the fighting, should get injured, well he probably had it coming.

Perhaps more of the blame for such changes should be placed on the free-loading students of independent students such as Hanlon who take their participation in Greek Week for granted despite contributing nothing to the weekend.

So I hope you enjoyed your free beer this past weekend, and on behalf of the one "jerk from Texas," we accept your apology.

Sincerely,

Pete Wolf '04
and the brothers of Sigma Chi

Women continue to be objectified on campus

To the Editor:

It is impossible to turn on the television or flip through a magazine in our society without seeing highly sexualized images selling everything from cars to alcohol to cigarettes to jeans—or more specifically, highly sexualized images of women. Sex sells.

While I know that this is common, I am still offended as a feminist, woman, consumer and reasonably intelligent person capable of making a purchasing decision without a naked woman thrust in my face. I am not waging a battle against corporate America as examples of blatant objectification of women's bodies can be found right here at the University.

I am talking about fraternities using gratuitous images of scantily clad women to sell flowers (from posters seen recently on campus). What kind of messages do these posters send to men and women at the University?

Are men supposed to see this woman and be suddenly overcome with the urge to buy flowers for their girlfriends (who could never possibly be as gorgeous as the digitally enhanced female smiling in her bikini in the poster)? Are women supposed to see this woman and strive to be like her so that men will buy them flowers?

Regardless of the intent (which oddly enough was to sell flowers), we all should see this as yet another way that the female body is being hypersexualized in order to make us buy something. It does nothing but promote a culture on campus that tolerates treating women as little more than objects.

It does not stop there: Mardi Gras parties are held at fraternity houses where men wear shirts demanding that women "Show Us Your Tits" for nothing more than beads, beer or catcalls that have similar degrading and hypersexualized results for women.

Regardless of how accurate the simulation of the real Mardi Gras is, the University should not condone parties where the sole purpose is for men to get women drunk, topless and subsequently sexually harassed (or worse, assaulted) for a bunch of plastic beads.

Women should not have to perform sexual favors to get a beer at a frat party. If we continue to remain silent about the blatant mistreatment of women and the sexist nature of parties and advertisements such as these, we are supporting the continued sexual abuse, harassment and assault of women at the University. We should all be offended and ashamed of that.

Sincerely,

Emily Park '04

Kerry criticism of Bush economy undeserved

By ERIC HARRISON
Contributing Writer

Go to JohnKerry.com and check out Sen. Kerry's political agenda. It sounds wonderful. He has an answer for every question, a solution to every problem and a cure for every ailment the United States has.

But under more scrutiny, a trend begins to develop. All of the questions, all of the problem and all of the ailments have the same remedy—roll back the Bush administration tax cuts. These cuts, vehemently attacked by Democrats, are apparently the root of all evil in the United States today.

Kerry is going to fix the economy, health care, education, social security, Homeland Security, National defense and a laundry list of other political issues. Unfortunately, for Kerry and even more so for American taxpayers, the Bush tax cuts amounted to a whopping 1.2 percent of the Federal budget. It sounds as though the Kerry campaign is doing some wishful thinking.

Kerry claims Bush's tax cuts were for the wealthiest Americans and hung the middle and lower classes out to dry. While the highest income tax bracket was reduced by a staggering 6 percent, the lowest tax bracket saw a 10 percent reduction. This statistic is somewhat misleading, because more tax revenue is obviously lost from the top bracket than the bottom in this scenario.

That being said, even if Democrats revoke the tax cuts for Americans making more than $100,000, that will not even begin to cover the tab Kerry is already planning on running up. His health care reform proposal alone will cost an estimated $900 billion dollars. There is only one way Kerry is going to afford the programs he preaches—by dipping into the wallet of every American.

Kerry promises to jumpstart job growth throughout the country, and just this he week guaranteed Pennsylvania 430,000 new jobs and $1 billion under his administration

(of course, his reasoning was that the Bush tax cuts eliminated these jobs and cut state revenue). Those 430,000 jobs sound almost too good to be true. And as the cliché dictates, that which seems too good to be true usually is, and this situation is no different.

It appears that Kerry, in addition to being a senator, is a soothsayer and has foreseen an influx of immigrants from surrounding states, because that influx is the only way 430,000 jobs are coming to the Keystone state, besides Pennsylvanians working several jobs apiece that. Even if there were zero unemployment, which is for all practical purposes a logistical impossibility, there would only be approximately 320,000 new jobs in the state.

While Kerry is busy bashing Bush's tax cuts and dreaming up ways to do voters into believing he is going to somehow revamp every major political program in America without raising taxes for the working class, the economy is busy recovering.

Nine consecutive quarters of economic growth, more than 350,000 new jobs in the past six months and a growth rate among the fastest in the past two decades over the back half of last year are just some of the positive progress that has been made.

The economy is not the only place where Kerry's agenda is hazy. He promises reforms to the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, a bill Kerry thinks has failed largely in part to a lack of funding caused by, and I know the suspense is killing you, the Bush tax cuts. Ironically enough, Kerry who thrashes President Bush's educational philosophy, voted for the No Child Left Behind Act as a Senator.

Along similar lines and of immense importance to the student population is college affordability. Kerry's idea of reforming this area of American education is to create historically unpopular "Service for College" plans, in which potential college students would receive four years of college for two years of service in the military and adopt small tax credits for each completed year of college. And of course, the policy blames the Bush tax cuts for rising costs of higher education. Meanwhile, his adversary has formulated a comprehensive program to strengthen student loans, by increasing loan forgiveness for teachers, reducing interest rates for borrowers, increasing the loan limits for first year students and broadening the scope of loan repayment options.

Bush has dedicated more money ($856 million) to pay for Pell Grants, which go to students from low-income families, and more than 1 million families will now benefit from the program. Overall, there has been a 6 percent increase in total funding for student financial aid for the upcoming academic year, and almost 10 million people, student and parents alike, will have access to loans, grants and work-study programs.

The economy and education are quite possibly the two most important issues to college students everywhere because these topics can influence our lives like few other things are capable of doing. This coming election will be fought over many topics, and students, as usual, will get lost in the shuffle. But before you punch your ticket to the "anybody but Bush" bandwagon, consider the impact that decision will have on your future.

Realize that where one candidate is failing, the other is succeeding. While one man is undermining the public, another is striving to build a stronger nation, and as Kerry's leadership grows increasingly unreliable, Bush matures into an even stronger leader.

While one man is undermining the public, another is striving to build a stronger nation, and as Kerry's leadership grows increasingly unreliable, Bush matures into an even stronger leader.

There is no such thing as too much Wal-Mart

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

The last time I was in Wal-Mart I could not help but remark, "If only this Wal-Mart were bigger, I could really get some shopping done." Its selection of car tires, aftershave, women's jeans and baseball bats is just too small for my liking—if only Wal-Mart had an extra 10,000 square feet, I would truly be able to fulfill my shopping needs and desires.

If you share my lust for more for more Wal-Mart floor space and products, then you are in luck, my friend—Wal-Mart is about to get a little bigger.

If you thought the current Wal-Mart was "super," then you are sorely mistaken, my shopping enthusiast and compatriot.

Wal-Mart, big enough to shelter 100,000 refugees from a third-world war-torn nation will be shut down. But fear not, my fellow shoppers—it will be rebuilt; better, stronger, faster than ever, conveniently located down the road across from my favorite dining local, the Country Clubboard.

If you thought the current Wal-Mart was "super," then you are sorely mistaken, my shopping enthusiast and compatriot. It is not nearly as "super" as the one that will reside less than a mile north of my current Mecca and personal savior.

This new Wal-Mart fantasy play-land will have everything under the sun and more for purchase and enjoyment. Two especially convenient new products that will be available for our society's collective enjoyment are fresh fruit and happiness (available in 6- and 12-ounce containers).

While you and I see the true fabulousness of the Wal-Mart experience, some crazy liberals and deviants out of touch with reality have mentioned that Weis Markets and Foodtown are already in the supermarket business in Lewisburg and that Wal-Mart may employ illegal immigrants and be responsible for the homogenization of the American landscape.

What those fools do not realize is the awesome power of one-stop shopping combined with the irresistible force of the "rollback." What? You claim to be a true believer in the Wal-Mart way, but you are unfamiliar with the awesome and mystical power of the "rollback."

If you share my lust for more for more Wal-Mart floor space and products, then you are in luck, my friend—Wal-Mart is about to get a little bigger.

employees have clocked out of their minimum-wage job, a magical yellow orb resembling a smiley face floats around the store, cutting prices below cost in order to drive competitors out of business.

As an example, remember last week when you mentioned that you thought the price for a machete ($6.44) and a watermelon ($3.05) was a little high? Well, now thanks to the Yellow smiley face, any person who wants to work on his Gallagher act can afford to.

I absolutely cannot wait until we can all share and develop true fellowship and community in the new place to shop and incur debt, Super Wal-Mart.

Atkins diet craze promotes unhealthy body images

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

If you have been in the cafeteria recently, you might have noticed the plastic-encased flyers on each table with such essential health tips as "If you've had a heavy lunch, go light at dinner" and "Remember—one slice of bread is one serving."

Perhaps you have also been by the Bison and noticed employees crafting signs that encourage students to try the up-and-coming Atkins-friendly food. As if body image issues, unhealthy diets and eating disorders are not prominent enough among college-aged students (I will not make any unfounded assumptions about University students in particular, but I think it is fair to say that body image issues are a significant concern on campus), the University is plastering its dining venues with the wrong messages.

Broader society places enough pressure on young people to look a certain way. Both women and men (in arguably equal instances) often compare themselves to those in Abercrombie & Fitch catalogues, Maxim covers and well-proportioned peers.

The relative abundance of stick-thin women claiming fatness and guys who spend hours in the gym trying to look like Tyrese is an indication that appearance is a high priority for many University students—and appearance is greatly affected by media messages. This is certainly not a new concept.

The natural desire to be healthy and attractive should not be discouraged, but we should draw healthy lines where appropriate. On a campus full of textbook-attentive and intelligent people, there is no need to post flyers encouraging students to watch their caloric intake and diet according to the Atkins plan. Such flyers only suggest that body image is directly tied to food and eating, which is not necessarily true.

As if body image issues, unhealthy diets and eating disorders are not prominent enough among college-aged students, the University is plastering its dining venues with the wrong messages.

It is entirely possible to lead a healthy lifestyle and consume carbohydrates at the same time. In fact, eating and eating well is a very healthy thing to do. Bread, cereal, pasta and other carbohydrates are essential for human functioning, and they should not be avoided.

While I am not a nutritionist, I am comfortable suggesting that it is appropriate to eat when you are hungry. This does not mean that we should eat carelessly, but rather we should not avoid a bowl of pasta or a few slices of pizza simply because Dr. Atkins told us we should avoid them.

Likewise, if you had a "heavy" lunch and are hungry at dinner, you should probably eat at dinnertime until you are satiated. There is no need to guilt-trip yourself over a big, healthy meal. While this may seem ridiculous advice to some, there are certainly many others who could stand read such things.

Complementing healthy eating habits with exercise is also a good idea. If you are on the Atkins diet and losing weight but you still don't run a step and go to the gym, you are probably not as healthy as you could be. Gimmicky diets might allow people to shed pounds, but they do not necessarily promote health. In addition to this, spending too much time working out in the absence of adequate nutrition (including carbs) is dangerous. Exercise is good, but excessive dieting and spending hours on the treadmill is an awful combination.

If the Bison is coming out with Atkins-friendly food, please do not try it for the purpose of losing weight. Eat when you are hungry. Get exercise without going overboard. And do not judge yourself and your body by what you see on magazine covers or your dietary habits by what the latest fad/University trend suggests. It does not take an expert to realize that health is about more than just food and what we look like.

Greens fees discourage student use

By JORDY LEISER
Writer

Springtime means many things to me, but mostly it just means shorter skirts, better parties and nicer weather. Albeit the outdoor barbecues and the intramural softball take me to an emotionally better place, the most important thing to me in the spring is the fresh beginning of a new season of golf.

Last year, I did not realize how much I enjoyed the beginning of the golf season because I had been hitting golf balls in the "indoor range" of Gerhard Fieldhouse for the men's golf team all winter. When arriving home from an amazing spring trip to a Florida resort for the start of our golf season, I came back to Bucknell to eight inches of snow and a mediocre golf course.

Playing almost every day last spring, I never paid once. As a member of the golf team, you receive the special privilege of playing the Bucknell Golf Club for free ... quite a perk (picking up any sarcasm yet? Any?).

Regardless, the point I am trying to make is that I never paid $1 to play our course, and I never knew how much it costs for the average Bucknell student to play.

Last fall, discontinuing my efforts on the Bucknell men's golf team, I went to the course twice wanting to play a few holes. Is there anything greater for a man who loves the game of golf to play a few relaxing holes after class and enjoy the beautiful scenes of nature as the sun goes down behind the lights of the Lewisburg Penitentiary? Seriously, there really is nothing better than playing golf on an early fall afternoon.

You should know by now that such things are easier said than done at the University. I ran into a couple of problems which required me to sneak, yes, illegally trespass, onto the golf course so I could fulfill my wishes. The problem is that the University charges students $30 to play a round of golf at the Bucknell Golf Club.

Plus, you are only allowed to play for 18 holes; there is no nine-hole rate. If I want to play a few holes in the afternoon before it gets dark, I have to pay $30. In case you were not sure how ridiculous this price is for a student rate at a golf course in central Pennsylvania, I will enlighten you.

At the University of Florida, students who want to play golf can do so by playing at the newly revamped University of Florida Golf Course. After $4 million of renovations on the 18-hole course covering a 113-acre site on the northwest edge of the Florida campus, students pay $20 to play Monday-Thursday.

Think the weekends are expensive, or at least more expensive than the University's rates? Nope. It costs a University of Florida student $22 to play one of the best collegiate golf courses in the United States on Saturday while I have to fork over $30 every time we want to step foot on our short, par-70 course with a road driving through the middle of two holes.

I am not implying that I hate our course or suggesting that we spend millions of dollars improving something very few people on this campus use. I also know that the University of Florida Golf Course probably attracts many more students, which can help bring down the green fees for everyone. But if the Bucknell Golf Club relaxed for a second, it too would attract more students and everyone would benefit.

Golf can be addictive for many people, and addicts will do anything to satisfy their cravings, regardless of whether they can pay for it. If I somehow catch an early craving this spring and there have been no policy changes, do not be afraid if you see a guy taking practice swings out of the bunker on the 11th hole with a Halloween mask covering his face looking over his shoulder for the head pro.

Arts & Entertainment

"The Tempest" blows away conventional drama

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

THEATRE PREVIEW

How do you examine a 400-year-old classic play through a fresh lens? Just ask the University Department of Theatre and Dance. The department is sponsoring a production of Shakespeare's "The Tempest" Spring Arts Weekend April 16 through April 19.

"It's Shakespeare's last play and it exalts the magic of the theatrical imagination," said Associate Professor of Theatre and Dance, Gary Grant. "It's serious and comic moments turned a plot of many twists and turns."

In the university's production the players do just that, literally reversing traditional thoughts about the regularly studied play.

"From a production standpoint, we have explored gender and how consequential is gender in telling the story and maintaining the characters," said Sara Bradley '04, dramaturge for the play.

This exploration involves role reversals for many of the play's most pivotal roles: Prospero, the ousted ruler and male protagonist, is portrayed by a woman, Liisa Britt '04.

"We wanted to find a way to do Shakespeare," Britt said. "But we wanted to do something different, so we cast a lot of the roles backwards."

This gender shift creates a new dynamic for the play's protagonist and her relationship with other characters in the play.

"It's a fine balance between her political dynamics and maternal instincts [for Prospero]," said Jon Ginn '07, who portrays the character Ferdinand. Ferdinand has "Machiavellian political motivations, but she's also a single woman on an island with a single daughter."

"We wanted to find a way to do Shakespeare... but we wanted to do something different, so we cast a lot of the roles backwards."

—Liisa Britt '04

Likewise, Prospero's traitorous brother, Antonio, and his accomplice, Sebastian, are also portrayed not by the conventional males, but by females performers Kim Klaunder '04 and Kristen Habacht '05.

"The gender reversals have been interesting," Habacht said. "It allows you to explore areas of the character that you wouldn't otherwise. ... It adds a whole new dimension."

"You almost become a femme fatale," Klaunder said. Ariel, Prospero's captivated spirit, has been historically portrayed as both male and female, depending on the production. In the University's production, a woman, Ashi Day '04, will perform the part.

"I act as a spirit of the air," Day said. "I'm very, very powerful, and Prospero has to control me, she has to coerce me, but she also freed me, kind of like an indentured servitude."

For those concerned about the consequences these gender reversals may have on the actual text, be reassured: The production has a dramaturge on hand to combat this issue.

"I am responsible for maintaining the integrity of the text," Bradley said. "One of my tasks was going back and making changes in the script, making some minor cuts depending on how gender affected the story."

Andy Nogasky '07 portrays another critical character under Prospero's rule, Caliban.

"On a basic level, Caliban is just a savage living off instinct. He doesn't even think—he just acts freely off what he feels," Nogasky said. "But I like to think that he has two levels to him—one as a slave and one as a ruler. However, he falls into his own trapings. I also think he has a confidence problem, basing all his actions off what others tell him. ... I like to think of him

The University Department of Theatre and Dance will stage a production of Shakespeare's last play, "The Tempest," for Spring Arts Weekend. The University's version takes a new look at gender roles and nature within the supernatural play.

as a cross between Gollum and the Tasmanian Devil."

Others in the play's cast include the naïve lovers Miranda (Prospero's daughter) and Ferdinand.

"Ferdinand is ostracized," Ginn said. "You can take Ferdinand out of the kingdom, but you can't take the kingdom out of Ferdinand."

"There's a playfulness, but there's also a natural sensuality, growing up on an island," said Mallory Sweeney '07 who is featured in Miranda's role. "I drew from the idea of the divine feminine being."

The island setting also suggests links to nature in the production, evident by the sets and costumes.

"The costumes have a nature theme, tied to nature," Habacht said. "Then the court comes in wearing black velvet with deep reds and greens."

Scene change and background music in the style of world drumming also follows a natural sound provided by guest artist Stacie Fox.

"The Bucknell Association for the Arts has sponsored a guest artist, Stacie Fox," Grant said. "She does some frame drum playing which has been associated with women's rituals."

With all these inventive elements combined, the performance is sure to be a refreshing look at one of Shakespeare's most studied, yet supernatural, plays.

Tickets for "The Tempest" can be purchased for $6 at the Langone Center and Weis Center box office.

Bean dishes about life at Brown Bag Speaker Series

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

A professional baseball player, successful college graduate, published author and real-estate entrepreneur, Billy Bean seems to have done it all. Yet much of his success comes not from his list of personal accomplishments, but from the fact that he is the only professional baseball player to have publicly announced his homosexuality. After doing so in 1999, Bean saw his fame skyrocket.

"[Since his coming out], he has been working actively to dispel the myth and stereotypes that follow people of diversity," according to his Web site.

The University will welcome Bean to campus Tuesday for a number of public events. As part of the Athletics and Recreation Department's Brown Bag Speaker Series, Bean will be in the L.C. Center Room from noon to 1 p.m. to meet students and answer any questions.

Later that afternoon, Bean will sign copies of his book, "Going the Other Way: Lessons

Courtesy of www.billybean.com

Billy Bean, the only professional baseball player to publicly announce his homosexuality, will visit campus and speak in a variety of forums next week.

From a Life in and out of Major League Baseball," at the Bucknell Bookstore. A chronicle of his struggle with coming out to a professional community that had never before encountered open homosexuality, his book has been revered by critics.

Bean's visit will conclude with a lecture in the Leanne Freas Trout Auditorium in Vaughan Lit. at 7:30 p.m. Students and faculty are encouraged to attend, and hear his message about acceptance of all people, regardless of their race, creed or sexual preference.

Bean will be available after his lecture to meet with students who may have more personal questions for him. For more information regarding Bean's appearance, please contact Fran McDaniel (mcdaniel@bucknell.edu), coordinator for the Office of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Awareness.

SEVENTH STREET SPOTLIGHT

Courtesy of Melanie Wages at House of Wally

Independent artist Bari Koral brought her smart sound and sassy lyrics to the Late Night Music Series on April 2. Koral has performed alongside such prominent artists as Lisa Loeb, Jeff Buckley and Joan Osborne and was voted one of the best acts of the year by Newsday magazine.

Come Home to Lewisburg All Over Again

You'll never forget the pride you had in your community while at Bucknell. What better way to keep that tradition alive than to make Lewisburg your home all over again?

The residence of choice for many Bucknell alumni and former Bucknell professionals, RiverWoods Senior Living Community offers a safe, secure living environment with all the amenities of home. Plus, with our on-campus indoor pool, fitness center, restaurant, café, and hair salon, an exciting new lifestyle is just a short walk away! For more information on making RiverWoods your new address, call (570) 524-2711 today.

RIVERWOODS
Senior Living Community
3201 River Road • Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-2711 • Toll-Free: 1-888-791-0096
www.riverwoods.org

Seating, left to right: David Marston, Bennett Willford, Fitz Walling, John Zeller. Seated, left to right: Peg Bryan, Erma Gustafson, Jeanne Kauffman, Mary Jane Stevenson.

RiverWoods is a nonprofit United Methodist-affiliated organization proudly offering services to people of all faiths and backgrounds.

Arts & Entertainment

Choreographers' Showcase raises the bar for University's dance program

Melisa Agrimanakis '06 performs ballet to music from "Swan Lake" in the only solo dance of the evening. The Choreographers' Showcase highlighted students of many experience levels, all involved in the Department of Theatre and Dance this semester.

By JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Students graced the stage for a packed house at the Choreographers' Showcase April 1 and 2.

Perhaps the most intriguing pieces of the night were those that seemed to be more experimental, both choreographed by Kelly Knox, visiting associate professor of theatre and dance. In the final dance of the evening, "Smoke Rings," a large group performed a slightly abstract dance comprised of many group dance moves. The slightly erratic moves and large group effects combined for a more casual dance feel that seemed to characterize the term "cool."

In Knox's solo dance, "Interchange," she danced in a limber puppet-like style to the unaccompanied and improvised beat of a drum set, making the dance expressive and comical.

However, the true trademark of the evening stood in its variety, both in style and talent as the performers ranged in experience from "those who hadn't danced since they were seven and those who had been dancing all their life," according to host Heather Beck '04. As such, many of the pieces were miles away from Knox's more abstract dance. Students performed in the "Sleeping Beauty Variation," "Swan Lake Pas De Trois," "Swan Lake Solo Variation" and "Sleeping Beauty Waltz," each sweet yet stirring in the manner of traditional romantic ballet.

"Pavanne" took a darker look at this traditional style, while still seeming to be based upon it. The larger moves gave it a more fluid yet melancholy feel than conventional ballet.

Marking the breadth of variety once again was "Ama Rosa," set to salsa-like music and using formal ballet bars in artistic and innovative ways.

A group of students dances in the traditional ballet style to "Sleeping Beauty Variation." The evening's performance showcased several styles of dance, including ballet, tap and modern.

The three student performers for this dance began by using the bars for the traditional ballet-like leg lifts, but then began to make more original use of the props, moving and carrying them, climbing on the bars, and setting them at different angles.

Two distinct dances also took a different route than the other dances on the program did. "Dances From Romania" consisted of three separate dances, each in the folksy line style and making pronounced use of light footwork. In "... a more casual dance feel that seemed to characterize the term 'cool.'"

"Pursuing," choreographed by Associate Professor of Theatre Er-dong Hu, drumming and large movements opened the program on an enjoyable note.

The final component of the program lay in more jazzy modern dances, one of which was choreographed by a student dancer. "Rock your Body," composed by Beck, took a flirty take on tap with a popular tune. "Make it Happen" featured a smaller group of dancers performing a precisely loose funky tap piece.

"Boom to the Big" used a tune from "The Matrix" to display a techno sexy dance. In one of the most virtuosic and dramatic performances of the evening, several student dancers danced to the smooth show jazz piece, "All That Jazz," which featured skillful leaping across the stage by each of the student dancers.

Talent and variety were on full display throughout the evening—flaunting a semester's worth of hard work from all the students on all levels involved.

University's Opera Company delivers strong performance

By DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

CONCERT REVIEW

The Bucknell Opera Company's performance at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts on Friday featured powerful singing, but it was the excellent acting, with its depth, emotion and humor in the presentation of characters, that was most impressive. The costumes and staging were also strong, and the program's final selection featured an ingenious modern theater staging.

"The Comedy on the Bridge" was staged as the performance of a radio broadcast. Music Department Secretary Janet Clapp sat at the right side of the stage, sitting in an easy chair and listening to the radio. On the opposite side were microphones, stands, chairs and other props showing the inside of a radio station.

The performers were dressed in plain clothes, and the stage was lit to make it look like an old photograph or movie reel.

Projected behind the onstage singing and dialogue was a computer animation with rough, stick-figure drawings acting out the action of the opera. Clapp worked at a desk during the performance, drawing and erasing as images appeared and disappeared on the screen while the audience responded with laughter.

Though the characters were not in elaborate costumes or working on a traditional set they delivered comical, bantering and tangled dialogue.

Lauren Catherwood '06 was featured prominently as Josephine, the first character introduced. Zubin Mehta '06 was hilariously over-the-top in his non-singing role, portraying soldiers at either end of the bridge on which the opera was set.

The performance also featured Bryan Kitch '05 as a sound-effects artist in the radio station, creating the sound of gunshots and of shoes walking along the bridge.

The other scenes featured more onstage action and elaborate costumes and staging. The scene from Antonin Dvorak's "Rusalka" that began the program was the most intense. Cool, watery colors in the scene's beginning gave way to a fiery scenery as the interaction grew more feverish.

Sandra Maro '06, as the water nymph, was clad in a wild purple wig and a sparkling dress, draped in multicolored gauze. She sang with excellent tone throughout her range, exhibiting delicate phrasing and careful contrast between loud and soft dynamics. Her singing was especially strong as she cried out, "Oh, help me! Pity me!" in response to the witch's demands.

Brianne Wright '05 demonstrated powerful singing as the "witch of forests" Jezibaba, but the greatest strength of her performance was her aloof posture and eerie cackling as she laid out the conditions of her agreement with Rusalka and brewed the mystic potion to cast the spell.

Sarah Reese '07 saw the company for the first time Friday and said she most enjoyed the scene from "Rusalka."

"I was especially impressed by the maturity of emotion, and by how it was conveyed so effectively in a single melody," Reese said.

"The Bartered Bride" began with a very tender exchange between Jenik (special guest John Caponegro '94) and Marie (Ashley F. Hall '06). Their scene featured a conversational singing style and excellent harmony. Hall showed a delicate touch on her highest notes, neither overpowering nor too soft.

During a more bitter and intense section, Jenik tells the story of his past misfortunes. Caponegro sang very strongly and passionately here, wrenching out the cruel details.

Ben Guise '07 played Recal, the matchmaker with a very strong personality, swaggering around the stage and using his walking stick, hat and jacket as physical props. Though his singing was somewhat inconsistent in both volume and intonation, his comedic performance was exceptionally strong.

Kyle McGee '04 and Sarah Houck '06, as Marie's father and mother played their characters very convincingly as they worried over their daughter's future. They also sang well in harmony together, but it became difficult to discern the lyrics when all three characters were singing different lines at once.

The most unusual scene in the program came from Leos Janacek's opera "The Cunning Little Vixen." Catherwood and Emily Serotta '06 played talking foxes. Catherwood the male, and Serotta the female "vixen" that gives the opera its title.

Their music was the most difficult on the program, scored in a wide range with many leaps and jumps in the soprano voice, and often into the uppermost registers. Though the scene itself seemed oddly cartoonish, like something out of a Disney animation, Serotta and Catherwood both sang well and were consistent in both volume and tone.

They delivered the scenes' most serious lines, singing about the love they felt for each other at first sight, convincingly and without a hint of the silliness of two animals walking and talking.

Scott Messenger '06 thought the singing throughout the program outshined the on-stage actions.

"I'd like to see the actors exhibit a deeper understanding of their characters, so that the quality of acting can match the caliber of the vocal performance," he said.

The company's performance was high quality in all respects: competent singing of difficult music, excellent use of sets and costumes, and, most impressively, strong character exhibited in their roles by all of the performers. It was an excellent conclusion to an active and ambitious season by the company and, with only one member graduating, indicates solid performances to come in the future.

Dogwood Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
Fine Gifts
Unique Occasions
430 Market Street,
Lewisburg
524-7990

Cinema Center
Sellinggrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 314-2048
Play Dates: April 9-16, 2004
Stargate and Hatch (PG-13) 6:50, 9:20
Secret Window (PG-13) 7:00, 9:20
Hedwig (PG-13) 6:50, 9:25
Dawn of the Dead (R) 7:15, 9:30
Taking Lives (R) 9:00
Passion of the Christ (R) 8:50
Walking Tall (R) 7:00, 9:10
Lady Killers (R) 6:20, 8:45
Jersey Girl (NR) 6:15, 9:15
Home on the Range (PG) 7:30, 9:25
Scooby-Doo 2 (PG) 7:15, 9:30
The Prince and Me (PG) 6:20, 8:40
Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

MEMPHIS RIBS
Meaty St. Louis Ribs, pit-smoked for hours with Applewood charcoal, and generously basted with our bold-flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce. Served with Skillet Potato Cakes and your choice of Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, plus a FREE beverage.

Just $13.99
a $17.99 value

Your Choice... just $13.99!
(Monday-Wednesday only)

17 N. Market St.
Sellinggrove
ph. 570-574-9841
291 Hill St., Danville
ph. 570-275-5110
www.bjribs.com

BJ's 1/2 lb. Chicago Steak—our famous, specially seasoned USDA Choice Certified Premium Center Cut Sirloin. Served with your choice of Potato, Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, Honey Butter, and a FREE beverage.

Chicago STEAK

RIVERWOODS
Senior Living Community
3201 River Road • Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-2711 • Toll-Free: 1-888-791-0096
www.riverwoods.org

Seating, left to right: David Marston, Bennett Willford, Fitz Walling, John Zeller. Seated, left to right: Peg Bryan, Erma Gustafson, Jeanne Kauffman, Mary Jane Stevenson.

RiverWoods is a nonprofit United Methodist-affiliated organization proudly offering services to people of all faiths and backgrounds.

A Special Gift is waiting for you!

From April 8-18
visit our store and receive a free limited edition umbrella
(a $25 value) with a Vera Bradley purchase of $75 or more.
Hurry...quantities are limited.

Pennsylvania Mercantile
319 Market St.
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-7300

Fraternities-Sororities Clubs-Student Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works.

Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Look Your Best With A Tan From TANNING WORLD

216 St. John Street, Lewisburg
Next to Fisher's Meats

Open 24 Hours
Free Membership
Lowest Prices
Speed System Beds with NEW Lamps
New 2004 StarPower 548 Bed

Call 523-7254 or tanningworld@hotmail.com

Arts & Entertainment

Diversions & Excursions

Entertaining reasons to count up your pocket change

Jules' album proves to be a diamond in the rough

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

CD REVIEW

You've heard it all before—if you have to listen to one more acoustic pop musician, you will choke on that cappuccino and storm out of the café. Well, don't leave just yet. Gary Jules may be the artist to convince you to stay, if his new album, "Trading Snakeoil for Wolftickets," has anything to say about it.

Sounding like an Elliott Smith reincarnate when he is not channeling Art Garfunkel recently topped its musical charts. A cover of a "Tears for Fears" original, this single was featured in the movie "Donnie Darko," an independent film that has garnered an impressive cult following among scenesters and Jake Gyllenhaal fans alike. Jules' sparse, haunting revision of the original's techno-pop sound make it one of the "Trading Snakeoil for Wolftickets" highlights.

Other standouts on the 13-track album include "No Poetry," "The Princess of Hollywood Way" and "Umbilical Town," whose simple melodies flirt with com-

Courtesy of www.amazon.com

Gary Jules recently released his newest album, "Trading Snakeoil for Wolftickets." "Mad World," a single from the album, has already hit the charts in the United Kingdom.

and Nick Drake, Jules makes understated acoustic pop songs with a voice like that of Peter Gabriel. "Trading Snakeoil for Wolftickets," Jules' second release, finds the artist relying on a relaxed, stripped-down musical style that exerts at distancing itself from the rest of the musicians in the "coffee-shop rock" category.

Jules originally released "Trading Snakeoil for Wolftickets" three years ago, but it was not until this year, when Universal Records took note of his talent and signed him to its label, that it was released in large-scale distribution. Signing Jules was a smart move on the music industry's part, as his range and sincerity automatically make him a rare commodity and one of the best-kept secrets that is meant to be shared.

The United Kingdom is one willing supporter, as Jules' first single, "Mad World," has plex, underlying hooks. This does not mean "Trading Snakeoil" is composed mostly of filler. One of the most appealing features of the album is its consistency throughout its 40-minute play time.

Each song has its own story, and these stories weave together and can be listened to from start to finish. Contrary to the title of the album's second track, "No Poetry," Jules' lyrics are intelligently poetic, filled with dense metaphors and optimistic musings about the mad, mad world in which he lives.

Jules has an ear for what his audience wants, and his simple, never overbearing pop tunes are a welcome addition to the genre, especially in the post-Elliott Smith era. Smith's is certainly a tough void to fill, but Jules is perhaps the most likely contender to do just that.

SOUTH AMERICAN STRUGGLES

Courtesy of The Campus Theatre

Two critically acclaimed fact-based films, "Bus 174" and "Touching the Void," will be shown at the Campus Theatre this weekend. The films explore the violent Brazilian underworld and treacheries of climbing the Andes, respectively.

Five for Fighting battles for a hit

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

CD REVIEW

I will admit that the only song I knew by Five for Fighting before listening to the band's new album, "The Battle for Everything," was "Supernatural"—a decent song the first 10 times I heard it but it went downhill from there.

In a time when so many acoustic rock acts (such as John Mayer) are trying to break into the mainstream, it can be easy to fall into the trap of sacrificing musical ability to write catchy songs. However, on "Battle," the band seems to take a new direction, and rather than aiming for that one Top 40 hit, takes a more relaxed approach in writing 12 good songs.

The album certainly does not have one standout track, but it has a cohesive mix of well-written songs that draws from a number of influences and styles. The disc's first track, "NYC Weather Report," uses a basic acoustic riff, accompanied by a melodic harmonica and eventually builds into a pretty rocking tune once drums, bass and electric guitar are added. Singer John Ondrasik's well-placed vocals accompany the instruments quite nicely.

Similarly, in "The Devil in the Wishing Well" and "100 Years," the band approaches its songs by allowing a light musical base to escalate into solid songs, each of these using piano and small string arrangements that offer yet another pleasing element in the music.

The disc's most intriguing tracks are "Angels & Girlfriends" and "The Taste." The former, a Tom Petty-esque rock song, incorporates a heavier harmonica overlay with a simple but effective acoustic chord progression. Lyrically, the song is pure fun, toying with the idea that "Girlfriends never fall for fun / They can tie you up, make you come undone."

Courtesy of www.vh1.com

Five for Fighting made the Billboard chart with its single "100 Years." The album "The Battle for Everything" takes a new direction, drawing from many influences.

"The Taste" is the one song that seems musically out of place on the album, but is just far too good to pass up. Seemingly taken straight out of a rock opera, the song begins with a heavy vocal track over a few droning string notes before the song erupts, with Ondrasik bellowing, "I will be a happy man if you're my sacred son / I could be a dividend if you're my only one." Think Jack Black of Tenacious D, but in earnest. The results are fantastic.

In a time when so many popular artists are more concerned with fame than with musicality, it is definitely refreshing to see an act such as Five for Fighting stick to its guns and release such an album as "The Battle for Everything." At this point, they seem to be winning the fight.

"Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind" sheds light on life and love

By KATE TANITA
Writer

MOVIE REVIEW

Charlie Kaufman added "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind" to his excellent repertoire of strange, poignant movies, which includes "Adaptation" and "Being John Malkovich." There are many aspects of this movie that set it apart from most of the others playing in theaters—its interwoven and looped memory storylines, a far-fetched yet realistic plot and an interesting cinematography style reminiscent of "The Blair Witch Project," but not to that extreme.

"I thought it was a really cool movie—really intelligent. It was a more intelligent and poignant 'Vanilla Sky.' All of the actors do a really great job. I've already seen it twice and would see it again," Stacey Greenberg '06 said.

Everything about the movie, from the varying hair colors of Clementine (Kate Winslet) to the schizophrenic memory scenes, tells a story that could have been ordinary, but goes slightly wrong and takes a turn toward the bizarre.

"It's a bittersweet tale very much in the surreal style of screenwriter and executive producer Charlie Kaufman, but not quite so strange as his others, so I enjoyed it more. Jim Carrey definitely played his best dramatic role yet," Ben Sykora '05 said.

Carrey's role is not what you would typically expect from him, since this movie cannot be classified as a comedy. Even in "The Truman Show," the actor's comic nature came out full-force at times, but in "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind," Carrey plays the part of Joel—a mild, nostalgic, unassuming man who falls in love with the terribly eccentric Clementine.

The relationship itself is also not something that one would expect between two such people, despite the theory that opposites attract. During the first parts of the movie, Clementine is a bit too much of an oddity to be completely likeable, and

Joel is too scared of living to completely sympathize with her. Then a very normal breakup happens, and Clementine carries it to the extreme of having Joel erased from her memory. Joel does the same, and it is his story that the audience follows.

Kaufman does a tremendous job of explaining everyday occurrences, such as a ries, our formation, the reality of love, the role pain plays in our lives and whether it is in fact better to confront our past than to simply hide from it.

"Pain and loss are often difficult to bear. But as this movie points out, to lose your pain is to lose a part of yourself," Matt Dawson '06 said after viewing the movie.

The title of Kaufman's movie is also worth exploration. It comes from a poem by Alexander

Pope that tells of the famous romance between the fictional characters Eloisa and Abelard. The quote is taken from a much larger poem, but the relevant section is

"How happy is the blameless vessel's lot! / The world forgetting, by the world forgot. / Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind! / Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd..."

Kaufman takes this quote and rejects it, setting up a contrasting scenario in which he seems to better enjoy Alfred Lord Tennyson's, "Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all," from the famous poem "In Memoriam."

Perhaps, after viewing the movie, the most relevant question is this: How do you picture your life? Are you cherishing the moments in which you are truly happy, or are you seeing the hurt and sorrow that inevitably come with any relationship, and moreover, that come with any participation in society? Ultimately, it is up to each individual to judge the balance of happiness and sorrow in his or her own life.

heartbreak and childhood nostalgia, by extrapolating them into wild circumstances in which they are easier to understand. Of course, there is no memory-erasing company called Lacuna, yet it is presented so nonchalantly that Kaufman's created world is still wholly believable. And while the viewer is in this world, Kaufman can speak about ideas that deal with memo-

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

April 9, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 9

Features:
Heather Shaw '05 writes about her experiences in France, and French student Laure Berthon writes about her experiences at Bucknell.

See pages B10-11

This time, Daley takes it all the way with complete-game, no-hit masterpiece

Bison pick up game-one win over Lehigh with ace's no-no; come back with supercharged sweep on Sunday

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

For the second time in two weeks, Bucknell pitcher Matt Daley '04 took a hitless game down to the last batter, and this time he came away with the no-hitter intact. It only took Daley an hour and 24 minutes to nail down the seven-inning complete game no-no, as the senior ace buzzed through a Lehigh lineup that had previously averaged nearly 10 hits a game.

The performance notched a 1-0 win for the Bison, kicking off another three-for-four Patriot League series for the team. After dropping the second game on Saturday 9-6, Bucknell swept Lehigh in Sunday's doubleheader, winning 6-2 and 11-7 in unseasonably frigid weather.

After two weekends of league play, the Bison are second in the league with a 6-2 record.

The Bison hitters needed only a single run to down the Mountainhawks in the first game of the series, which they manufactured courtesy of a hit and two sacrifice flies in the third inning.

Steve Stutzman '04 led off the inning with a double, Phil Bunting '05 knocked a well-placed sacrifice fly to right, moving Stutzman to third, and Ben Stoll

'04 contributed another sacrifice airout that completed Stutzman's trip around the basepaths and gave the Bison the 1-0 lead.

Lehigh never launched anything that even resembled a threat against Daley, with only one man in the Mountainhawks' lineup heading anywhere other than the dugout after coming to the plate. Third baseman Jesse Novalis snuck his way on base twice, when Daley hit him with a pitch in the first inning and again in the seventh, but was stranded at the first bag both times.

In the seventh inning with two outs and Novalis on first, Daley induced Navy first baseman Porter Doane to loft a fly ball to centerfielder Kyle Walley '06, who easily recorded the out to put the game in the books as the fourth no-hitter in Bucknell history.

Head Coach Gene Depew called Daley's performance one of the most dominant he has ever seen.

"He was in command of the game from start to finish," Depew said. "Working with catcher Phil Bunting, he attacked Lehigh hitters aggressively and intelligently. The no-hitter is a tribute to both Matt's physical ability and his mental approach to the game."

Pitching Coach R.J. Grant also found Daley's pitching display to be awe-inspiring.

"There's not much to say about Matt's performance. I was only able to shake his hand and say 'awesome,'" Grant said. "[It was] a truly masterful performance."

Grant noted that what made Daley's effort even more impressive was that the ace did it all without utilization of his changeup.

"He struggled finding [his change-up] in the bullpen, so he decided to only throw his fastball and curve, with the occasional slider," Grant said. "When you no hit another team with basically only two pitches, you must be hitting your spot on every pitch."

Daley's 94-pitch gem included 10 strikeouts—seven of them swinging and "three of them punch-outs"—raising his season total to 43 Ks in 42 innings. He also bumped his record up to 6-0 with the win and lowered his ERA to 1.93.

The effort drew weekly accolades for Daley as the league's pitcher of the week. ECAC Pitcher of the Week and Collegiate Baseball News Louisville Slugger National Player of the Week.

The second game provided a letdown for the Bison, as a troubled first inning left them playing catch-up throughout the contest, eventually falling short in the 9-6 loss.

The Mountainhawks picked up four unearned runs off of starter Kevin Miller '04 after an error put the leadoff man on and Doane later pumped a low fastball over the centerfield fence for a two-out, three-run homer.

The inning turned out to be the deciding factor in the loss.

"If we eliminate the first inning, we win the game," Grant said.

The Bison battled back throughout the game, beginning in the bottom of the first when an RBI groundout from Pete Wolf '04 scored Stoll and a single from Brian Day '05 sent home Sam Moss '04 to cut the lead to 4-2.

After Lehigh picked up another run in the fourth, the Bison came back with a two-out rally in the bottom of the frame as Bunting doubled to send Stutzman home and Stoll lined a single to right to score Bunting.

The Mountainhawks tacked on three more runs in the sixth and seventh before the Bison cut the lead to 8-6 when Stoll led off the seventh inning with a double and Moss clobbered his first homer of the year

See BASEBALL, page B5

Track splits squads for weekend Invitationals

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Bucknell's track and field team was split for the second week in a row, competing at both the Terrapin Invitational at the University of Maryland and the Duke Invitational.

Maria Garcia '04 and Katie Pfeifer '05 led the women, while Ryan Newberger '06 and Kevin Fortkiewicz '05 led the men.

Garcia's NCAA regional-qualifying hammer throw and new official school record at Maryland was the Bison's most impressive performance of the weekend.

Garcia unofficially broke her own school record last week in winning a hammer-throw competition in her home country of the Dominican Republic. Laura Schaffer '04 also threw well at Maryland, placing second in both the discus and hammer throws.

"Our women throwers are a key part of the team and they are throwing nicely as a group," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. Competing at Duke on Friday night, Pfeifer showed why she is the Bison's top distance runner by winning the "Once again, I am happy with our men long sprinters. They are much improved since indoor season."

—Kevin Donner, head coach run a strong race in the 400m hurdles.

"The Duke track and stadium were amazing, as was the competition," Sawko said.

The men were not able to bring home any wins but still were able to benefit from the competition by producing some nice performances.

Newberger, after being out for most of the indoor season due to health problems, bare-

See TRACK, page B2

Women's lacrosse trounces Denver 23-7

Bison defeats Denver and La Salle; improves overall record to 6-4

By KEELEY SIDOW
Sports Editor

The women's lacrosse team managed to break the school record of goals scored in a game at Graham Field on April 3 against Denver. Meredith Wright '04 had five goals and six assists to accomplish a career-high 11 points. She tied her own Patriot League record and advanced to second place on the school's career assists chart with 46. Andrea Paraud '05 also set her personal best by scoring six goals.

The Bison were able to keep Denver scoreless for the first 20 minutes and 36 seconds of the game while capturing five goals, but Denver battled back. At the end of the first half the score was 9-5 for the Orange and Blue due to Emily Burman '06 scoring back-to-back goals late in the half. Paraud added another goal, assisted by Wright, with only three seconds on the clock.

Amy Hasler '04 scored her second goal of the night only minutes into the second half after one of Denver's players scored her team's sixth of the game. The Bison were able to score five goals in only 3:15 minutes of playing time.

Katie Edge '07 and Hasler both scored goals at 17:25 in the second half following Wright, who secured two goals in 18 seconds. The Orange and Blue allowed only one more goal from the Pioneers before dominating them with eight goals in the last 11:15 of play.

Laura Seiboth '04 scored her first goal of the season while Abby Brewster '06 and Shauna Weinstein '07 netted their first career goals. Weinstein's goal was the record breaking 23rd goal of the game, scored with only seven seconds remaining.

Other major scorers in the game include Laura Nuss '04 with three goals. The Bison victory can be attributed to many things, including the team's draw

See WLAX, page B2

Joclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

Katie Edge '07 keeps pace with an American player in a game several weeks ago at Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium. On April 3, the Bison dominated Denver and ended up with a 23-7 victory, improving to 6-4 on the season.

Sports

Men's lacrosse falls 13-9 in front of Hobart

By BETSY HARNER
Contributing Writer

The Bison suffered a tough loss to Hobart on Saturday at Hobart's home field in Geneva, N.Y.

Despite five goals and one assist from Patrick Christensen '05 and 16 saves by goalie Matt Baran '06, the Bison were unable to defeat Hobart, dropping the Orange and Blue to a 4-5 season record and 2-2 Patriot League record.

The Bison stayed neck-and-neck with Hobart throughout the first half in a back-and-forth shuffle that kept fans on their toes.

The halftime score of 4-4 made for an intense second half.

Bucknell started things off right 49 seconds into the third quarter with a goal by Christensen, assisted by Chris Cara '05.

Hobart was able to answer back, tying the score again until a man-up goal by Kirk Klett '07 at 7:16 gave the Bison a 6-5 edge.

This would be the last lead the Bison would have as Hobart went on a 6-0 run, taking a commanding lead.

"The game against Hobart was a disappointing loss because we were beating them 6-5 in the third quarter, and I felt that we were going to keep scoring goals. However, we had some penalties that hurt us, and their man-up team capitalized on our mistakes,"

"The team is playing well right now, but we just can't seem to get it done at the end of the game."

—Matt Baran '06

Cara said.

The Bison rallied back with two Christensen goals only 35 seconds apart in the middle of the fourth quarter, pulling them to within three at 11-8.

The Bison's hopes would be short lived as Hobart answered back with two more scores.

"The team is playing well right now, but we just can't seem to get it done at the end of the game," Baran said.

Christensen was able to score once more off of an assist by Cara late in the fourth, giving Hobart a 13-9 win.

"There was a stretch in the third quarter where our whole team sort of lost focus and Hobart took advantage of it by scoring a few key goals. Up to that point, and afterward, I felt that we played them evenly if not better. We had great goalie play from Baran again, and at times really clicked on offense. If we can put an entire 60 minutes together as a team, then we can compete with anyone in the country," Christensen said.

While the Bison were disappointed with this Patriot League loss, they look forward to tomorrow's league game against Lafayette at 1 p.m. in Easton, Pa.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian
A Bucknell lacrosse player attempts to fend off a Lehigh player while carrying the ball down the field in an earlier game at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. The Bison lost on the road to Hobart 13-9 last weekend, moving to 4-5 on the season and 2-2 in the Patriot League.

Women's tennis takes 4-3 contest over Lafayette

Men lose 5-2 decision to American over weekend

By TERI SCHLANG
Staff Writer

The women's tennis team defeated Lafayette on Saturday with a 4-3 victory, tying its current league record at one and one.

It proceeded to drop a 5-2 decision to American on Sunday, lowering its Patriot League standings to 1-2 and putting a damper on the team's chances of qualifying for the league tournament.

On Saturday, Nadezda Curcic '05 and Samantha Berthod '04 won on court two, while Veronica Brown '06 and Chelsea Mills '06 defeated two other Lafayette competitors on court three.

Lafayette's Chez Saricas and Monika Serrano overpowered Tanya Sichko '05 and Rebecca Kral '05.

Sichko tied yet another school record Saturday afternoon, recording her 102nd win and tying the overall men's and women's record. Her victory came on court four, where she defeated Lafayette's Lisa Fung-Kee-Fung 6-2, 6-1.

"What should have been a 6-1 match turned into a close 4-3 decision because Lafayette adjusted their line-up to stack against our line-up," Coach Rebecca Helt said. "They were looking to sacrifice certain spots in order to guarantee enough wins in other spots."

Lafayette's points came on courts one, five and six, where Brown, Berthod and Mills were all defeated.

"Rheanna Gaskin ['05] was the deciding match for both teams," Helt said. "Lafayette was expecting a win at No. 3 singles, but Rheanna played a very smart, well-executed match against the Lafayette senior."

On Sunday, the Orange and Blue challenged American, another Patriot League rival.

American won two of three doubles matches: Brown and Gaskin were defeated 8-4 on court one, and Berthod and Curcic were also defeated 8-4 on court two.

After tying the school record Saturday, Sichko's doubles win with Mills put her past Steve Bombberger '99 as the University's all-time leading singles and doubles champion, male or female.

The Bison's two points were recorded at fourth singles with Berthod's 6-1, 6-1 victory and Mills' 6-1, 6-2 win. American won the other four singles contests.

Curcic, who had been undefeated until this event, lost her first singles match of the spring on court three.

"The American match was closer than the 5-2 score would indicate," Helt said. "In a sport where you cannot substitute players in and out of the game, you just pray that all six players are playing their best. But it's rare that any team ever has a match where all six players are playing to their full potential on any given day."

The women's current record is 11-2 and 1-2 in league play. American is 12-7 and 3-2 in league play.

The Bison returned to league action at home against Lehigh on Wednesday.

"The players know that everyone needs to be at their best against Lehigh and Army," Helt said. "Physically, they feel strong. Mentally, they are really prepared to fight. But again, in the sport of tennis, it comes down to game day, player versus player."

The men's tennis team also competed over the weekend and lost a 5-2 decision to American.

The Bison are still searching for their first league victory, standing 0-3 in league play and 6-7 in overall play. American now stands at 3-0 in league play and 9-4 overall.

Joe Menezes '05 and Matt Pikus '07 provided the two Bison victories, winning fourth and fifth seed singles. Pikus' win was his fifth straight dual match victory and kept him undefeated in league play.

American took all the doubles points. The men return to action as soon as the weather permits; their last two matches have been canceled due to snow flurries and weather conditions in the Lewisburg area.

Pfeifer obtains personal best for 10K and an ECAC qualifying time ly missed the IC4A qualifying time at Duke in the 200m by 0.09 seconds and was a part of an impressive men's 4x400m relay contingent.

TRACK from page B1

"It looks like Newberger is rounding into the same form that made him an All-East sprinter last year," Donner said. "Once again, I am happy with our men long sprinters. They are much improved since indoor season."

Fortkiewicz also ran well, barely missing the IC4A time in the 10,000m while running a 45 second personal best.

"It was a good meet to go to," Fortkiewicz said. "It was nice to travel down south to warmer weather and the competition there was great."

Although most events went well, not everything was in the Bison's favor.

"Some of the distance heats were packed, which made it tough to run fast," Fortkiewicz said. "Luckily, I did not have any problems in the 10K, but it seemed that some of our guys in the 5K had trouble getting around people."

According to Donner, some of the field events athletes competing at the Terrapin Invitational suffered from the windy weather and unorganized officiating.

"Overall it was a nice meet for both teams," Donner said.

"We are still far from peaking, but things are starting to come together. I can't wait till this weekend to see the entire team together."

Bucknell plans to host the Bison Outdoor Classic this weekend.

The distance carnival will be run under the lights tonight, while the rest of the meet will take place tomorrow.

"A lot of people are looking forward to this weekend to better their times for Patriot Leagues," Fortkiewicz said. "A lot of very good schools are coming, which should help people run fast."

"I am excited about everyone being together at home the next two weeks," Donner said.

Women's lax wins two straight

WLAX from page B1

control which gave it an edge over Denver.

"Our team really came together against Denver. The defense was making big stops and the offense was making each stop count. It really feels good to have a big win like this. It is something that we can take with us into our league games," Hasler said.

Liz Schuster '04 agreed.

"Denver was a solid win for the team. Everyone just seemed to click and enjoy being out on the field," Schuster said.

The Orange and Blue then went on to advance to a two-game winning streak after defeating La Salle in Philadelphia April 6. In a low scoring game, the lowest for the Bison since 1999, La Salle led at the half 2-1; the only Bison goal in the first half being scored by Paraud.

The Orange and Blue were quick to tie the game in the second half on a goal by Tory Field '06 in a free-position shot.

Burman soon captured the lead for the Bison only a few minutes into the half. La Salle rebounded with two goals in a row to retake the lead with 15:24 of playing time remaining. Nuss was able to tie the game with an assist by Wright less than a minute later.

Wright then scored the game winning goal, making the score 5-4 for the Bison.

This game proved to be particularly difficult defensively, but goalie Lizzy McDaniel '06 made six saves and responded to the challenge allowing only four goals out of the 27 shots from the Explorers.

The Orange and Blue hope to continue their winning streak when they take on league rival Colgate at noon on Saturday in Lewisburg.

BIG Andy's BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials

Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All you can eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Zelda's
on the park

Fabulous Coffee, Desserts and More!

Coming Soon to South Sixth Street

Scott Stieler BU '87
Proprietor
522-0443

RENTALS
for
BUCKNELL
STUDENTS

AVAILABLE
JUNE 1, 2004

3 LARGE 2 BR APTS.
AT:
237 South 3rd &
Saint George

Excellent condition,
excellent location -
right next door to campus

(570) 966-1488

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns

Sports Editor

Hyping the wrong horse: give the lady credit not only repugnant but ridiculous.

Funny Cide—who has won two important races in his entire putrescently over-published career—managed to scrounge up a respectable win in a low-grade stakes at Aqueduct racetrack, only after dropping a clunker and a mediocre-at-best performance in his previous two endeavors.

Somehow, this was the news that Espn.com felt that horse racing had to offer the rest of the sports world last weekend.

Somehow, New Yorkers—and large chunks of the rest of the nation—still live under the delusion that Funny Cide is the most important piece of horseflesh in training.

Somehow, turf writers still manage to luted the racing memorabilia scene since last May. No one's looked to her as the savior of an attention-starved sport or splattered the exploits of her connections across countless saccharine news features.

But the fact is that Azeri might just be the best headline horse racing has had in a long time. She might be one of the most worthy headlines of any sport right now.

This mare makes a small dent in history every time she runs, yet most people wouldn't recognize her if she showed up in their back yard—jockey and all.

When it comes to garnering attention from the general public, Azeri has two knocks against her: First, she's a mare, and ladies automatically get shuffled to the second tier of racing headlines. Second, her career wasn't launched until she was almost four years old, well past the age of Triple Crown candidacy and phenom labeling.

It's too bad, in a way.

A lot of people won't ever know what Azeri has done—that she's won 15 of 17 starts, including nine Grade 1 stakes and three Grade 2s; that she strung together 11 straight wins at one point or that in 2002 she was the first female horse good enough to be named Horse of the Year since 1986.

And a lot of folks don't—and won't—know what she did last weekend, either, or realize how profound it was.

Saturday's Apple Blossom Handicap (which she'd won in 2002 and 2003) was a wickedly contested race, a tough spot for any horse, let alone one who'd been injured badly enough last fall as to be sentenced to certain retirement.

Azeri hadn't raced since Sept. 28, 2003, when she had finished a startlingly uncharacteristic third in the Lady's Secret Handicap and then came out of the effort ill and with a bowed tendon.

That was it for Azeri. Or so they said.

Early this year, the horse was shuttled to the supervision of trainer D. Wayne Lukas, a man who is at once revered and despised within horse racing circles, but is, in one of those two regards, an icon of the sport.

D. Wayne and company, under a not-so-subtle barrage of criticism, made the decision to not only return Azeri to the races but to do it in the Apple Blossom against a handful of the finest mares in training.

It seemed kind of destructive, maybe even cruel. The move could have tarnished Azeri's reputation, embarrassed her, discouraged her.

Then again, this was Azeri. It did none of the above.

Instead, the 6-year-old mare turned in another shining performance, wiring a group of lovely fillies and stopping the clock at a snazzy 1:41.24 for the 1 1/16 race.

Didn't matter that she hadn't raced in over six months. Didn't matter that she had to carry the lightweight in the handicap.

Didn't matter that she had every excuse to plod home second or third.

Horses that need to use excuses, after all, don't win 11 races in a row. Horses that don't need excuses, the ones like Azeri, are rare.

Whether she's done enough to be called one of the greatest racehorses of all time is disputable, as those things always are.

One thing is for sure, though, and that's that this horse will make it worth your while to dig far enough into the back pages of the sports section or the buried URLs of Espn.com to find out what she's conquered next.

Unless, of course, you prefer a horse who's seen more often on a beer label than in the winner's circle.

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

By JOHN HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

This nice guy finishes first

Courtesy of Reuters
Emeka Okafor led Connecticut to its second national title in six years with a 82-73 win over Georgia Tech on Monday night.

The crown sat high on his head. This was not a night for freshman. Young kids like Carmelo Anthony don't deserve something this special at 18.

The mantle for the Final Four hero returned to its rightful place Monday, in the hands of a student-athlete who will hold it this spring next to his diploma.

The trophy for the tournament's most-outstanding player went to a guy that saw the library and the basketball court as his two best friends. It has been a long, tortuous year of nightmares for college athletes. The murder of Patrick Denney at Baylor. The sexual assault scandals that hit Colorado's football program.

But when we thought everything had gone wrong, we were reassured with everything that was truly right.

And we saw it Monday night. In 40 minutes, we saw more than just one of college basketball greats. We saw a true champion.

His name is Chukwuemeka Nwobu Okafor. They call him Emeka for short, but nothing is short about this young man. Graduating in just three years, Okafor captured a national title for Connecticut on Monday in an 82-73 thumping over Georgia Tech at the Alamodome.

The score might look close. It wasn't. If it was of any importance, the Huskies could have won by 30. The Yellowjackets made it look respectable, swooshing a few long ones at the end like they were playing to win a three-point shoot-out at the local arcade.

This championship game was a joke. Okafor, however, was evidently real.

He dominated the paint with his game-high 24 points, more than any of Georgia Tech's three starting inside players combined.

He snatched 15 rebounds, more than any of his teammates. He ran over Tech's Luke Schenscher like an Australian rugby player, outscoring him 14-2 in the second half.

Yet when he heard the final buzzer, he didn't care about the trophy, the strands of net, the CBS post-game interviews or the rest of the after-party celebration.

The win was all he ever wanted.

"I watched Emeka last night on the bus," Connecticut Coach Jim Calhoun said Monday, according to the Los Angeles Times. "I wish I could have taped it for you. He wanted the 24 hours to evaporate so we could tip off."

He was everything we expected him to be, everything we wanted from a John Wooden award nominee, a National Player of the Year nominee, and now the Final Four hero.

"To me, he's unbelievable," said Richard Hamilton, the Detroit Pistons who was the tournament's most outstanding player during Connecticut's last national championship in 1999, according to the Los Angeles Times. "To do all he's done off the court, and to win a championship too? I mean, come on."

And thankfully, this top spot once again belongs to someone with the grace and character of a champion. Someone that also holds a 3.76 grade-point average in Finance with a degree coming after only three years.

"Emeka has given me great insight into someone who can focus at the task at hand," Calhoun said, according to the Los Angeles Times.

Maryland's Juan Dixon, Duke's Shane Battier, Michigan State's Mateen Cleaves and Hamilton all become heroes in April. They were veterans who stuck around school long enough to win one.

This year it's Okafor. Isn't that the way it should be?

Watching the Bruins in Westwood might make him quiver, but at least Coach John Wooden can let his 92-year-old bones rest at such a thought.

The confetti fell. The cameras flashed. The fans cheered. But we were still dazzled by his graceful fadeaways, off-balanced shots, and rim-shattering dunks earlier that night.

"I'm in awe," Okafor said later after the game, according to the Los Angeles Times.

So are we, Chukwuemeka.

The rants and raves of a mad man

By MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

NCAA Final Doesn't Live Up to Hype

Against my better judgment, I went ahead and watched the NCAA men's basketball championship game. People complain that the Super Bowl is too often a blowout. The BCS gets the same treatment. But let me tell you, this game was way overhyped.

I got bored watching Georgia Tech play right into UConn's hands, so I turned on "The Daily Show" and cranked up some Rolling Stones. The only thing that keeps me glued to college basketball games are the little questions I ask myself while watching:

I wonder if they put this on their resumes? Does that guy ever hit his head on a doorframe on his way into a room? Can he make a shot from more than two feet away from the basket? Was defense simply outlawed from basketball?

How awkward do these guys feel in class when their heads peek out a solid two feet above their classmates. Do their "tutors" get a cut?

It's the little things like that that get me through March Madness.

For me, the highlight of the game was the Tiger Woods "Caddyshack" commercial, one of the greatest commercials of all time. Woods does a superb job as Carl Spackler (quite possibly the funniest movie character of all time). With the hilarity of this commercial in mind, I began trying to think of ideas for other funny sports commercials.

What if they made a commercial where they had what looked like footage of Refrigerator Perry playing corner-back? How funny would it be to see a s e e Fridge try to s w i e l and run?

The ad could say something like "Size doesn't matter."

How about a commercial of Michael Jordan simply screwing up dunk after dunk? I'm talking 20-30 times where he just hits the rim and eats it. Then, he could change shoes to the new Air Jordans and absolutely thrash with an awesome dunk. After all, the shoes do make the player.

Or maybe they could have Lance Armstrong cycling on some desert road while a heckler drives past yelling something at such a thought.

The confetti fell. The cameras flashed. The fans cheered. But we were still dazzled by his graceful fadeaways, off-balanced shots, and rim-shattering dunks earlier that night.

"I'm in awe," Okafor said later after the game, according to the Los Angeles Times.

So are we, Chukwuemeka.

For the "extreme" sports enthusiast, we can have an ad where the deck of Tony Hawk's skateboard is

For me, the highlight of the game was the Tiger Woods "Caddyshack" commercial, one of the greatest commercials of all time.

The ad could say something like "Size doesn't matter."

How about a commercial of Michael Jordan simply screwing up dunk after dunk? I'm talking 20-30 times where he just hits the rim and eats it. Then, he could change shoes to the new Air Jordans and absolutely thrash with an awesome dunk. After all, the shoes do make the player.

Sports

Women's polo drops Harvard in ECAC Championships

By COURTNEY LUZZI
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell women's water polo team competed Sunday in Providence, R.I., to take seventh place in the ECAC Championship. In a rematch of an exciting win for the Bison earlier this year, Bucknell defeated Harvard 4-2 in overtime.

"It was a low-scoring, close game until the fourth quarter, when we stepped up and scored two big goals," Katie Webber '04 said. "Offense is something we have been struggling with at parts during our season, but this game it came together."

The team put up a fight the entire game. Cristina Behrens '06 led the way offensively with one goal and one assist. Also scoring were Meg Blitzer '05, Katie Hartigan '05 and Taylor Voeltz '07. Ashley Aiken '05 and Mandy Bynum '07 each had an assist.

The game was close as the teams finished the third quarter with a score of 2-2. The Bison defense worked hard to prevent the Crimson from scoring in the third and fourth quarters.

"We played one of our better defensive games of the season to hold Harvard to just two goals," Head Coach John Zeigler said. "As always, Mandy Bynum was sharp in the cage and she continues to improve throughout the season."

Bynum stopped eight shots, while only letting in two. She also recorded one steal.

In the fourth quarter, excitement rose as the Bison scored two more goals against Harvard, winning the game.

"We have struggled this season in the last quarters of games, and this Harvard win was an example of turning that around where we were able to outscore them 2-0 in the final quarter," Zeigler said.

The Bison are 12-15 overall and are looking forward to their next big championship weekend at Villanova.

The Bison will be hosting the USA National Team for an exhibition game today at 8 p.m.

Megan Purdy '07 prepares to throw the ball during a game earlier this season. The Bison captured their second win over Harvard during the season in the ECAC championship at Brown. The Orange and Blue went on to capture seventh place. Women's water polo will host Team USA April 9 at Kinney Natatorium.

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

NHL Playoff Preview

Eastern Conference

Tampa Bay (first seed, 106 points) vs. NY Islanders (eight seed, 91 points)
Game 1 ended after press time Thursday night

Tampa goalie Nikolai Khabibulin, nicknamed the "Bulin Wall," would have to crumble, a la said wall, if the Islanders are to have any chance at winning this series. The Lightning are not only blessed with superior goaltending, but a deep core of talented forwards and six solid defensemen. The Islanders will need an unusually good performance from supposed-star Alexei Yashin, and impressive play from their three through six defensemen, because after Adrian Aucoin and Roman Hamrlik, their defense is suspect.

My prediction: Tampa Bay wins four games to one

Boston (second seed, 104 points) vs. Montreal (seventh seed, 93 points)
Boston won game one 3-0 Wednesday night

The two biggest questions for this series are "Will Bruin captain Joe Thornton recover from his wrist injury in time to effect the series?" and "Will Bruins rookie goal Andrew Raycroft succumb to the pressure of the playoffs, or will he continue his winning ways?" After one game, it seems that the answer is yes. Boston got goals from Sergie Gonchar and Michael Nylander, both of whom were acquired from Washington late in the season. Montreal is a young team with a solid goaltender, but it is easily outmatched in this battle of two of the original six hockey teams.

My predictions: Boston wins four games to one

Philadelphia (third seed, 101 points) vs. New Jersey (sixth seed, 100 points)
Game 1 ended after press time Thursday night

These two teams battled for the Atlantic division title, and the accompanying third seed, all the way down to the last day before Philadelphia won it. Unfortunately for the Flyers, their goaltending situation is so unstable, with both goalies playing awfully down the stretch, I won't be surprised to see Bucknell's own Matt Ellis '05 in goal for the Flyers later in the series. At the other end is the ultimate playoff goalie, New Jersey's Martin Brodeur. Only the absence of team leader Scott Stevens will allow Philly to hang around and win a few games.

My prediction: New Jersey wins four games to two

Toronto (fourth seed, 103 points) vs. Ottawa (fifth seed, 102 points)
Game 1 ended after press time Thursday night

Maybe the best match-up in what may be the best first round in NHL playoff history, the two titans of our northern neighbor will renew their heated rivalry. These two have met in the postseason the last few years, with each series quickly becoming nasty and personal. This year, Ottawa is just too deep, with eight proven goal scorers and four solid defensemen. Patrick Lalime has to excel in the net for the Senators, but I think he is due. Toronto is also deep up front and on the backline, but its stars are aging and may not be able to survive a physical, seven-game series. Goaltender Ed Belfour may steal the series for Toronto. I think this one goes seven games, with three or four going into overtime.

My prediction: Ottawa wins four games to three

By Peter Hackeman
Senior Editor

Western Conference

Detroit (first seed, 109 points) vs. Nashville (eight seed, 91 points)
Detroit won game one 3-1 Wednesday night

This will be the most one-sided series this year. Detroit is too good for the upstart Predators to handle. The Red Wings' second line is better than most teams' first line, and their third and fourth lines are the perfect combination of tough grinders who can also score when given the chance. The Wings' defense may be the deepest in NHL history, boasting six complete players. The only question for Detroit is in goal, where Manny Legace needs to continue his winning ways. Nashville, sporting only two players on their roster that could make Detroit's game day roster, will get a lovely parting gift after game four.

My prediction: Detroit wins four games to zero

San Jose (second seed, 104 points) vs. St. Louis (seventh seed, 91 points)
Game 1 ended after press time Thursday night

San Jose traded away most of its veterans at the end of a disappointing season last year, but it's recovered with timely goaltending and youthful exuberance. It's won eight of its past 10 games. St. Louis is watching the proverbial window close, and I expect stars Keith Tkachuk, Doug Weight, Pavol Demitra and Chris Pronger to step up, with a surprising contribution by Petr Cajanek.

My prediction: St. Louis wins four games to three Vancouver (third seed, 101 points) vs. Calgary (sixth seed, 94 points)

Vancouver won game one 5-3 Wednesday night

In our other all-Canadian match-up, the Canucks meet the Flames. Vancouver is still finding its footing after losing Todd Bertuzzi to a suspension for his attack on Colorado's Steve Moore. Calgary is only as good as their goalie, Mikka Korusoff, and leading scorer Jarome Iginla. Goaltending tends to win playoff series, but I can't see Calgary's two stars overcoming the speed and talent of the Canucks.

My prediction: Vancouver wins four games to one

Colorado (fourth seed, 100 points) vs. Dallas (fifth seed, 97 points)
Colorado won game one 3-1 Wednesday night

This may be the other best match-up this year. Both teams are stacked with talent, although neither goalie has ever lead his team to a Stanley Cup. Colorado is without star forward Paul Kariya, but still has five of the most dangerous forwards in the league (Joe Sakic, Peter Forsberg, Milan Hejduk, Alex Tanguay and Teemu Selanne) and a solid defensive corps. Dallas will need a special performance by goalie Marty Turco and will need Mike Modano to improve on his regular season production. All the games will be competitive, but I can't figure out how Dallas can win more than two.

My prediction: Colorado wins four games to two

Bison finish three-of-four weekend with Sunday sweep over the rightfield fence.

BASEBALL from page B1

The Bison could not make up any more ground in the final two innings, taking the 9-6 loss to end the day with a split.

"We had a little letdown in game two and couldn't get the hit or the out we needed at the right time," Depew said. "Lehigh was able to do these things and got the win."

Stoll and Day both registered multi-hit games in the loss, with Stoll leading the hitters with two singles and a double in five at-bats.

After the frustrating loss, the Bison needed to regroup and adjust their mindset for the next day's contests.

Wolf noted that the team was able to find an off-the-field outlet Saturday night at a concert by Vanilla Tru—the band both he and teammate Moss are members of—which was attended by many of the players.

"Music is an excellent release for us as a team," Wolf said. "The concert allowed us all to take out some of our aggression without making mistakes on the field. You could tell that the entire team was more focused on the task at hand on Sunday."

That improved focus culminated in an offensively productive sweep for the Bison, despite the players having to endure nasty gusts of wind and occasional sprinklings of rain and snow during the games.

Depew was impressed with his team's resilience in the weather.

"I was pleased with our approach to the games on Sunday; we ignored the weather and played good baseball," Depew said.

In addition to the usual sharp hitting, the Bison benefited from the crucial effectiveness of pitchers Phil Futrick '06 and Cory Nadler '04.

"Futrick and Nadler came up huge for us this weekend," Daley said of his fellow starters. "After splitting the games on Saturday we really needed them to step up, which they did."

Bucknell jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first inning of game one. Stoll reached on a single and advanced to third on sacrifices by Moss and Walter before Wolf sent him home with a single. Wolf then scored from first when Day ripped a double down the leftfield line.

Stoll exited the game after that at-bat, but Matt Capece '06 pointed out the importance of his leadoff hit.

"Ben deserves credit for going up to the plate in the first despite his injury," Capece said. "He got the offense going and we took the lead and never gave it up."

The Bison added another run in the fourth after Chris Mahony '04 singled and then scored on a double-play ball from Austin Barrett '05.

Pete Wolf '04 fouls away a pitch from Lehigh's Ryan Dodds in the first inning of the Bison's 11-7 win Sunday. Wolf rapped out an RBI single on the next pitch, one of his five hits in eight at-bats during the second doubleheader.

Cecily Cairns—The Bucknellian

Futrick rebounded from his rough start a week ago to post an excellent performance against Lehigh, holding the Mountainhawks scoreless through his first six innings of work.

"Phil's ability to battle when Lehigh had runners in scoring position was phenomenal," Grant said. "You could see that he turned it up a few notches when he needed to get an out."

Lehigh threatened in the fifth with two on and no outs, but Futrick erased the rally with superb glove work, making a great diving catch of a foul pop and then snaring a line drive to end the inning.

The Bison put the Mountainhawks in a deeper hole with three insurance runs in the bottom of the sixth. After Stutzman walked and Barrett reached on an error, three wild pitches allowed both runners to score before another error put Walter on base and Wolf pounded a sac fly to center to score Stoll.

Lehigh managed to scrape out a couple of runs against Futrick in the seventh, but Nathan Mittag '07 came in to record the final two outs of the game. Futrick earned his third win of the year with 6.1 innings of work, during which he struck out eight batters.

Stoll, Wolf and Mahony all went two-for-three in the game, while Wolf led the team with two RBI in the contest.

In the final game of the series, the Bison cruised to a 11-7 win Sunday. Wolf pitched for 16 hits and 11 runs, with the middle of the batting order going a combined 9-for-15.

The offensive outpouring capped off a 17-run, 27-hit day for the team.

"The offense this weekend was great," Daley said. "Unlike past weekends, we didn't leave too many people on base, due to timely hitting."

The team also got another quality outing from Nadler, who did not allow any earned runs in his six innings of work.

The Bison answered a one-run Lehigh first inning with a three-run effort in their half of the frame. After Stoll singled and moved over on a Moss sacrifice, Wolf kicked off his three-for-five effort with an RBI single up the middle. Day and Hirschberg then started off their own three-hit games with singles, with Wolf scoring on Hirschberg's baseliner.

Hirschberg then kept a rundown between first and second alive long enough for Day to dash home before Hirschberg was tagged out to end the inning.

After the Mountainhawks grabbed two unearned runs to tie the game in the fourth, the Bison pounced on Lehigh starter Ryan Dodds with a triple from Hirschberg, an RBI infield single from Mahony, a walk to Stutzman and an RBI single from Barrett.

Bucknell hitters were equally cruel to relief pitcher Matt Nusinov, picking up three runs off of the new hurler before the inning was ended. Capece moved the runners over with a sac bunt before Moss was plunked in the arm to load up the bases and Walter picked up an RBI base on balls. Wolf then finished off the damage with a single that scored Moss and Barrett.

Walter, Wolf, Day and Hirschberg led off the sixth inning with consecutive singles, with Walter scoring on Day's shot and Wolf racing home on a Lehigh error. Mahony then made it a three-run inning with a sacrifice fly to score Day.

Lehigh made the 11-3 lead less comfortable with a four-run seventh inning off of Mittag, who came in to make his second appearance of the day. After timely hitting and a pair of errors plated four Mountainhawk runs, Mittag terminated the rally with a punchout of designated hitter John Zasewski.

Mittag then settled down to make quick work of the Mountainhawks in the final two innings, facing the minimum six batters over the two frames to finish off the 11-7 win.

Nadler got his second win in a row, allowing five hits and striking out six in his outing, while Mittag got his third save of the season with three innings of work.

Several Bison chipped in to the offensive outpouring in the fourth game, including multi-hit efforts from Capece, Wolf, Day, Hirschberg and Mahony.

Wolf paced the offense over the course of the day, going five-for-eight with five RBI and three runs scored in the doubleheader.

Wolf's .371 season batting average stands at fourth in the league after the series, while Mahony still leads all hitters with a .424 average.

Sunday's sweep was especially encouraging for the Bison, since it showcased the team's ability to bounce back from a tough loss and play effectively in multiple aspects of the game.

"I liked the way our team fought back to take two games on Sunday," Hirschberg said. "In both games we jumped out to an early lead, which helped the pitchers settle down a little easier. Even when Lehigh scored, we were able to answer with runs of our own in the bottom of the inning."

Day also commented on the team's resiliency.

"It was a positive sign that we could overcome a loss in the second game [on Saturday] and mentally be tough enough to take the next two to win the series," Day said.

The Bison hope to build on these positives when they travel to West Point this weekend for a critical series against Army. The Bison and the Knights occupy the two top spots in the league standings, with Army a game ahead of Bucknell.

The two teams are dominating the league statistically as well—Bucknell's .322 team batting average leads the league ahead of Army's .297, while the Bison's staff ERA of 4.32 trails only Army's impressive 3.81.

The teams will play a doubleheader today at 1 p.m. and another tomorrow at noon as they try to unseat the 7-1 Black Knights, who have beaten the Bison in six of the last eight matchups between the squads.

"We've been talking about this series since January, and it's finally upon us," Grant said. "After two weeks of solid play, we're headed to West Point to prove why we're the reigning Patriot League Champions."

PITCHING STATISTICS

Through April 4

NAME	W	L	S	ERA	APP	GS	CG	IP	H	R	ER	BB	SO	AB	WP	HBP	AVG	WHIP	K/9	BB/9	K/BB
Black, Jon	0	0	0	13.50	1	0	0	0.2	2	1	1	0	3	0	0	0	0.667	3.00	0.00	0.00	-
Corn, Matt	0	0	0	8.59	5	0	0	7.1	10	7	7	7	1	29	2	0	0.345	2.32	1.23	8.59	0.14
Cusack, Marc	0	0	0	6.00	4	0	0	6	8	4	4	4	3	5	23	1	3	0.348	1.83	7.50	4.50	1.67
Daley, Matt	6	0	0	1.93	6	6	4	42	18	10	9	43	142	2	3	0.127	0.64	9.21	1.33	4.78
Futrick, Phil	3	1	1	4.45	7	5	1	28.1	29	18	14	11	24	116	2	1	0.250	1.41	7.62	3.49	2.18
Gryskewicz, Ryan	0	2	0	22.85	5	0	0	1.1	4	3	2	0	2	8	1	1	0.391	3.23	10.38	10.38	1.00
Moss, Luke	0	0	0	13.50	3	0	0	4.1	9	12	11	5	5	23	1	1	0.500	3.00	13.50	0.00	-
Miller, Kevin	2	3	0	4.70	6	6	1	38.1	45	30	20	17	35	157	5	1	0.287	1.62	8.22	3.99	2.06
Mittig, Nathan	0	0	3	1.53	9	0	0	17.2	8	5	3	8	10	60	0	4	0.133	0.91	5.09	4.08	1.25
Nadler, Cory	2	1	0	6.29	5	4	0	18	14	8	4	8	12	68	2	0	0.206	1.22	6.00	4.00	1.50
Nadler, Cory	1	2	0	3.00	3	1	0	9	10	7	3	3	7	40	1	0	0.310	1.85	5.18	5.18	1.00
Reichart, Jesse	0	0	0	0.00	1	0	0	0.2	0	0	0	0	1	2	0	0	0.250	1.44	7.00	3.00	2.33
Wolf, Pete	15	9	5	4.32	1	0	6	126	188	126	95	85	159	771	19	18	0.244	1.38	7.23	3.86	1.87

HITTING STATISTICS

Through April 4

Name	G	GS	AB	PA	R	H	2B	3B	HR	RBI	TB	SLG	OBP	OPS	AVG	BB	HBP	GDP	SO	SF	SH
Barrett, Austin	15	4	25	27	3	7	1	0	0	4	8	0.320	0.333	0.653	0.280	2	0	2	5	0	0
Bellmont, Matt	4	1	6	6	0	1	1	0	0	1	2	0.333	0.167	0.500	0.167	0	0	2	1	0	1
Burling, Phil	20	20	60	67	13	14	5	0	1	12	22	0.367	0.313	0.680	0.233	4	3	0	13	0	2
Capece, Matt	14	5	25	28	3	7	2	0	0	0	1	0.300	0.357	0.717	0.280	2	1	1	4	0	1
Colton, Ben	4	0	5	5	0	1	0	0	0	0	1	0.200	0.200	0.400	0.200	0	0	0	2	0	0
Curry, Matt	1	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Day, Brian	24	23	80	92	17	26	4	0	2	17	36	0.450	0.391	0.841	0.325	1	9	0	9	2	0
Duval, Brad	5	1	8	11	3	2	0	0	0	0	2	0.250	0.455	0.705	0.250	3	0	0	1	0	1
Elmoff, Greg	5	1	3	6	2	2	0	0	0	0	2	0.667	0.833	1.500	0.667	2	1	0	2	0	0
Grandioso, Chris	15	7	25	25	6	10	0	1	0	4	12	0.480	0.400	0.880	0.400	0	0	1	4	0	0
Gryskewicz, Ryan	3	0	1	1	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0.000	0.000	0.000	0.000	0	0	0	1	0	0
Hirschberg, Brian	22	22	72	82	13	23	6	2	2	11	39	0.542	0.390	0.932	0.319	0	0	1	18	1	0
Kapson, Dustin	2	0	2	2	0	1	0	0	0	0	1	0.200	0.330	0.532	0.319	0	0	1	18	1	2
Kris, Ken	4	1	5	5	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0.000	0.000	0.000	0.000	0	0	0	2	0	0
Mahony, Chris	22	20	66	72	11	28	2	1	0	14	32	0.485	0.444	0.929	0.424	4	0	2	8	2	0
Moos, Sam	23	23	78	90	17	21	2	1	0	10	30	0.385	0.344	0.729	0.269	8	2	1	14	2	5
Sholt, Ben	23	23	89	97	16	28	4	0	1	7	23	0.434	0.371	0.805	0.302	7	10	1	10	2	3
Sturmen, Steve	20	20	53	62	13	16	4	5	4	2	15	0.588	0.408	0.976	0.376	8	1	0	14	1	1
Walter, Kyle	24	23	88	98	16	31	5	0	2	0	2	0.400	0.350	0.750	0.400	1	1	1	17	2	0
Wess, Evan	3	1	5	6	1	2	0	0	0	0	1	0.333	0.333	0.667	0.333	0	0	0	1	0	0
Wolf, Pete	23	23	89	93	13	33	3	0	14	36	0.404	0.376	0.781	0.321	2	0	1	17	2	0
Team Totals			785	875	149	253	39	11	9	129	341	0.434	0.376	0.810	0.322	59	17	13	139	14	21

Sports

Bucknell Sports Calendar

Men's and Women's Track and Field

Bison Outdoor Classic

Lewisburg, Pa.
Fri., April 9
All Day
and Sat., April 10
All Day

Men's Lacrosse

at Lafayette
Easton, Pa.
Sat., April 10
1:00 p.m.

Women's Water Polo

Team USA Exhibition
Lewisburg
Fri., April 9
8:00 p.m.

Men's Golf

Lafayette Invitational
Center Valley, Pa.
April 10-11
All Day
and Wilkes College Quad
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.
Tues., April 13
All Day

Baseball

at Army
Fri., April 9
1:00 p.m.
and
Sat., April 10
12:00 p.m.
and
at St. Bonaventure
Wed., April 14
1:00 p.m.

Women's Lacrosse

Colgate
Sat., April 10
12:00 p.m.

Softball

at Lehigh
Sat., April 10
1:00 p.m.

Sun., April 11
1:00 p.m.
and at Siena
Loudonville, N.Y.
Thurs., April 15
1:00 p.m.

Men's Tennis

Navy
Tues., April 13
4:00 p.m.
and UMBC
Wed., April 14
3:00 p.m.

Women's Tennis

Pittsburgh
Fri., April 9
3:00 p.m.
and
Army
Sat., April 10
9:00 a.m.

and UMBC
Tues., April 14
3:00 p.m.

Women's Golf
Big South Championship
Conway, S.C.
April 12-14
All Day

Women's Crew
Temple and Buffalo
Sat., April 10
10:00 a.m.

Baseball vs. Lehigh

April 3rd
Game One

1234567	R	H	E
Lehigh	0000000	0	0	1
Bucknell	001000X	1	3	0

Game Two

123456789	R	H	E
Lehigh	400101201	9	15	0
Bucknell	200200200	6	11	2

April 4th
Game One

1234567	R	H	E
Lehigh	0000002	2	7	3
Bucknell	200103X	6	11	1

Game Two

123456789	R	H	E
Lehigh	100200400	7	7	1
Bucknell	30050300X	11	16	5

Softball vs. Colgate

April 3rd
Game One

1234567	R	H	E
Colgate	1011010	4	7	0
Bucknell	0000020	2	5	1

Game Two

1234567	R	H	E
Colgate	0110008	10	11	2
Bucknell	1100002	4	6	0

April 6th
Game One

1234567	R	H	E
Colgate	1010602	10	9	4
Bucknell	2002002	6	9	4

Game Two

12345	R	H	E
Colgate	20273	14	14	1
Bucknell	01120	4	8	0

Men's golf opens spring season at Navy Invitational

By TERI SCHLANG
Writer

The men's golf team opened its spring season this weekend in Annapolis, Md., at Navy's Invitational. The Bison fired a 623, good for a ninth-place tie with George Washington and the University of Pennsylvania.

The Bison opened up strongly Saturday with a solid 302 and were tied for eighth place with Loyola (Md.). Towson was leading Saturday with a six-over 290, four strokes better than Methodist and Binghamton, which were tied for second at 294.

Leading the Bison to a 302 was Captain Abbie Valentine '04, who fired a one over par 72 in the opening round, leaving him tied for ninth and five strokes behind first round leader Billy Hurley of Navy, who fired a four-under 67. Hurley is one of the top-ranked amateurs in the country.

"I started out with a double on the first hole, but after that I settled down and was able to make some good swings," Valentine said. "The conditions were conducive to good scores, and I was able to knock a few wedges close for tap in birdies."

knock a few wedges close for tap in birdies."

Backing up Valentine were three other Bison all at 77 or better. Ben Pellicani '06 fired a 76. Tom Lane '06 and Charlie Waddell '07 both fired 77s. Rounding out the pack was Patrick Yingling '07 with a 79.

After the first round, the temperature dropped rapidly

"The conditions were conducive to good scores, and I was able to knock a few wedges close for tap in birdies."

—Abbie Valentine '04

and the winds picked up, making day two much more difficult than day one. The Orange and Blue fired a 321 on day two.

Lane fired a team low 78, giving him a total of 155 for the tournament, good enough for a tie for 27th place. Valentine also had a two-day composite score of 155 after shooting 83 during the second round.

Waddell fired a strong 79 on the second day, finishing his last three holes with a set of double and triple bogeys.

After a strong Saturday round, Pellicani struggled on day two, shooting 90. Yingling proceeded to close with an 83.

"Despite some tough conditions on Sunday, I thought overall the team played well, and that it is a good start to the season, but we will be looking to play better in upcoming events," Valentine said.

The tough conditions not only got the best of the Bison, but also the first round leader. Hurley struggled to shoot 81 on Sunday. Joe Kunz of Binghamton shot a two-day composite of 143, one over par and good enough to take the individual title by one stroke.

Johnson and Wales took the two-day event with a 603, three strokes better than Loyola and first-round leader Towson.

The Orange and Blue with a two-day total of 623 beat three Patriot League rivals: Lehigh with 632, Lafayette with 642 and Colgate at 667.

Much Adu about U.S. soccer

ORTA from page B3

all rubbery and he can't skate on it. The ad can then say, "With Viagra, Tony Hawk never has to worry about his board being lame." Then you can see Tony fly up off a vert ramp and there is a Viagra sticker on the bottom of his board and a shot of him smiling.

In other news, Freddy Adu made his pro debut this weekend, but there is a more important issue at stake here. How much more respect would nations around the globe have for the United States if we had a good football team. Yes I said football, not soccer, football.

The rest of the world laughs at our inability to play their game. While we can play basketball and baseball, we, as a nation, are terrible at football. Our major league for football is a joke compared to the multitude of leagues in Europe. Every little town in Europe has a club, but we reserve sports franchises to our metropolises, save for farm teams that invariably rob these boroughs and send their talent up to the major markets.

The vast majority of Americans know about only David Beckham, Manchester United or maybe even Real Madrid. Most people don't know that Ronaldo and Ronaldinho are two different people. I hope football catches on here in the United States in the next couple of years for both its geo-political value and because a few of our own sports have gone down the tubes.

It wouldn't be a good column if I didn't mention my favorite scholar athlete, Maurice Clarett. He worked out for scouts Monday and posted respectable numbers. He ran the forty in around 4.5 seconds, by no means extraordinary, but certainly not pedestrian. I still haven't been able to locate Clarett's Wonderlic exam score, however, but I'll keep you posted.

Clarett may not get the last laugh in his effort to buck the system, seeing as the NFL gets another chance in court a few days before the draft, in a last-ditch effort to prevent underage players from abusing the system in the future. My advice to college freshman athletes around the country is to not accept the illegal benefits "thrust" upon them and to actually attend college with the intent of seeking a degree, not just coasting.

So next time you're watching a basketball game and find yourself bored with watching layup after layup and dunk after dunk, ask yourself absurd, philosophical questions about the grand gladiators who battle on the screen in front of you, at least until the next witty sports commercial.

Because two is better than one

Pick up your got points? t-shirt and high quality drawstring bag $20

Pick them both up in the LC mall from 11am-2pm starting April 6th
All proceeds benefit Heiter community Center located in downtown Lewisburg

DOR-DAY'S
GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961! Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Write for Sports.

email jherwitt@

TOP TEN THINGS YOUR PROFESSORS DO TO SKEW YOU

I. THEY PUSH THEIR POLITICAL VIEWS – 70% of students surveyed say their professors express their political views in class.

II. LIBERAL OPINIONS DOMINATE – More than one third of students describe their professors as either somewhat or extremely liberal.

III. THEY DON'T PRESENT BOTH SIDES OF THE DEBATE – 42% of students report political discussions in the classroom lean to a leftist point of view, with only 18% saying they hear the conservative side of an issue. There is nothing balanced about this kind of education.

IV. CONSERVATIVE VIEWPOINTS ARE PRACTICALLY NON-EXISTENT – Only 13% of students can describe their professors as conservative. When you enrolled in college, were you expecting to only get half the story?

Classrooms are for learning. Not brainwashing.

V. THEY FORCE YOU TO CHECK YOUR INTELLECTUAL HONESTY AT THE DOOR – 31% of students report having to do an assignment which forced them to take a philosophical position they were uncomfortable with. Professors are using their influence as "teacher" to teach you what to think, not how to think.

VI. THEY MAKE YOU UNCOMFORTABLE IF YOU DISAGREE – Nearly one-third of students say they are uncomfortable expressing their opinions in class if they differ from their professor's point of view.

VII. THEY USE THEIR POWER OVER YOUR GRADE TO INFLUENCE YOU – 16% of students say they fear their grade could suffer for disagreeing with a professor's political point of view.

Grading should be based on facts. Not opinions.

VIII. THEY HINDER OPEN AND HONEST DISCUSSION – One-quarter of students say they are afraid to speak up in class if they don't agree with a professor. Professors should welcome debate, not stifle it.

IX. THEY ARE OUT OF TOUCH – Only 24% of students report their professors have the same viewpoints on issues as they do.

X. THEY DON'T IDENTIFY WITH YOU – 32% of students identify themselves as Democrat and 29% identify as Republican. But the overall ratio of Democrat to Republican registered faculty at 32 elite schools was more than 10 to 1.

Education? More like indoctrination.

IT'S TIME TO STOP THE LIBERAL DOMINATION IN THE CLASSROOM AND TAKE BACK THE CAMPUS. STAND UP FOR A BALANCED EDUCATION. LOG ON TO WWW.IWF.ORG FOR MORE INFORMATION.

Independent Women's Forum

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Political Ramblings Tough Decisions

Former Bucknellian editors-in-chief Jason Rubinstein and Peter Hackman continue their look at the lighter side of politics.

Should Bush keep Cheney as his running mate for 2004?

Jason—
If it weren't for the Democrats' recent history of cockamamie (albeit some justified) attacks against the White House and my resulting numbness to surprises, questioning Cheney's appearance on this year's presidential ticket may actually be surprising. But it is a question that comes up every four years and is worth considering.

Of course Cheney should remain President Bush's vice presidential candidate. The clearest reasons would be loyalty, unity and continuity, three reasons that would possibly explain why only five vice presidents in U.S. history have been changed after their first term.

According to a recent Gallup Poll, Cheney's approval rating is the lowest since he was elected. But does the average American even know what Cheney did last month? No. In fact, Cheney's approval rating is primarily based on the media calling attention to his connections with Enron and Halliburton over the last couple years.

The Bush-Cheney campaign can actually use the public's lack of interest in the vice president to its advantage: As the election nears, it will make known everything (positive) that Cheney does and remind the voters of his impressive political background. Let us not forget the positive public reaction when Bush announced Cheney as his running mate back in 2000. People love him.

You are not going to see any prominent Democrat calling for Cheney to resign. It is expected that, should Bush win another term, Cheney will not consider running for president in 2008. This would leave the Republicans without a publicly known leader and provide an immediate advantage for the Democrats.

And if you are still not convinced, consider that Bush's campaign will save money by keeping Cheney on the ticket. Unlike their liberal counterparts, the Republican candidates will hesitate before engaging in wasteful spending.

Peter—
Dick Cheney, charisma, integrity and all, should be dropped from the Republican ticket. Now, I may not be a "prominent Democrat" but I have two main reasons why Cheney must go.

First, he is not qualified to be president; his health concerns outweigh his years of experience skirting the law under Reagan, Bush I and now Bush II.

Second, Cheney should be dropped from the ticket now so that Bush can pick who he would like to be his successor (if hell freezes over and he beats John Kerry this fall). Bush could pick a warm, compassionate, tolerant senator, such as Rick Santorum or Pete Sessions, or a House member who cares about workers, women and global warming, such as Tom DeLay. He would never select Rep. Tom Tancredo, who wants to ship undocumented immigrants back to Mexico (he makes no distinction between workers from Mexico, Honduras or Guatemala), because George W. is so compassionate.

Of course, Bush is so strapped for money that he could not possibly afford to print a few more pamphlets. As for Cheney's approval ratings, might this be because the only things he has done during his three years in office is hold secret meetings with pollsters, hold fundraisers with conservative elites, protect Halliburton instead of our troops, and occasionally mutter "big time" after W says something?

Who should Senator John Kerry pick as his running mate?
Peter—

Democratic nominee John F. Kerry has a bevy of candidates to choose from for his vice presidential running mate. Unlike Republicans, who have selected a medically unfit, energy-sector shrill (Dick Cheney, 2000), a washed-up former football player who moonlighted as a congressman (Jack Kemp, 1996), and an intellectually challenged gaffe-machine (Dan Quayle, 1992 and 1988), the Democrats nominee will value workers over corrupt CEOs, will have useful political experience and will be mentally fit to hold the office.

Leading contenders include Sen. John Edwards, Rep. Dick Gephardt, Gen. Wesley Clark, Gov. Bill Richardson and New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer—a veritable Village People mix of political and military positions. Also in the mix are Senators Mary Landrieu (for whom I worked in 2002), Bill Nelson and Evan Bayh, along with Gov. Tom Vilsack. Any of these fine ladies and gentlemen would be an improvement over Cheney.

In the end, Kerry could pick Richardson (as the first Hispanic on a major national ticket, he would help Kerry keep New Mexico and pick up Arizona and Nevada, not to mention Florida) or Spitzer, the Wall Street crusader on behalf of investors and shareholders (who wouldn't love to see Spitzer debate Cheney over corrupt corporations).

But the choice should be Edwards. He is charismatic, moderate, energetic and not a career politician. Edwards may be from the South, but his real strength would be in the rural Midwest, where he dominated during the primaries. Plus, picking a former rival shows strength and unites the party.

Jason—
I think that Kerry should not select Edwards just to spite him. Since the beginning, Edwards has brown-nosed every leading Democratic presidential candidate—it is clear that his intent was to become the vice presidential candidate from the start, and just on the side he thought, "hey, if I become the nominee for president, that's even better." It seems that the only reason why Edwards would be a good nominee is because he made himself known in the Democratic primaries. The fact that he is not a career politician scares me. At least we knew that Cheney was medically unfit and that Quayle was stupid before they were vice presidential candidates. What will come of Edwards?

I would much rather see Kerry select someone such as Sen. Edward Kennedy or Gov. Howard Dean. The whole idea of "balancing" a presidential ticket is overrated. Kerry is a liberal, and Kennedy is more liberal—I think that works out nicely. A ticket like that would provide a close and exciting race between Kerry and Bush (and by close, I mean Kerry would be close to Nader). Even better, both are from Massachusetts... Massachusetts is the most important state, right? But in all seriousness, maybe the Democratic Party should try something unpredictable, because Kerry certainly is not.

Selecting Dean as his running mate would also be a great choice. Don't the media report that Dean is still the frontrunner in the Democratic primaries? This would imply that he remains a very popular and likable candidate.

If Kerry goes with the common prediction and selects Edwards, the only person who will be surprised is Kerry himself as the public begins asking, "Who is this Edwards?"

Internal conflict builds in Iraq

Terrorist strikes, religious extremism and open combat mark the past week

By DAVID LAROSS &
MATT HINSON
Business & Politics Editor and
Senior Writer

After months of bombings and other terrorist attacks on soldiers, Iraqi private security forces, civilians and both secular and religious insurgent groups have started pitching battles against coalition troops in the heaviest fighting since President Bush declared "mission accomplished" after the fall of Saddam Hussein's government.

Supporters of prominent Shiite cleric Moqtada al-Sadr have begun a full-fledged uprising in Baghdad and towns south. U.S. military forces, including divisions scheduled to end their tours of duty in Iraq this month, have been sent to reinforce police stations in Baghdad against raids and lingering street fighting.

The "Mehdi Army," a private militia controlled by al-Sadr, is a strong presence in the Baghdad area and has taken outright control of the town of Najaf.

Coalition forces have a presence outside the city, but as of press time they have not entered its borders. The city of Kut has also fallen into the insurgency's hands, as Polish troops were forced to pull out under heavy fire. A Bulgarian regiment of 450 soldiers in Karbala has also requested reinforcement from U.S. authorities, but has not yet received a response.

According to MSNBC, the coalition thinks that al-Sadr himself has spent much of the past week in a mosque near Najaf. There is an outstanding warrant for his arrest, thanks to his implication in the death of a rival Islamic leader last year. While al-Sadr is one of the most outspoken fighters against the new U.S.-backed Iraqi government, he was never a member of the pro-Hussein forces, which were extremely secular.

"We will attack to destroy the al-Mehdi Army," Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, a military spokesman, told CNN. "Those

An Iraqi Shiite supporter of cleric Moqtada al-Sadr celebrates near a burning U.S. Army truck in the Shuala neighborhood of Baghdad. Al-Sadr's followers made significant gains in Iraq over the past week, while the cleric himself has been walled up in a mosque in the south of the country.

attacks will be deliberate, precise and they will succeed."

Meanwhile, days after a roadside attack killed four security contractors in the largely Sunni city of Fallujah, American-led week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

forces encircled the city. They are preparing to clear out insurgents who have used the city as a base since the fall of Hussein.

The Sunnis in rebellion are completely independent of al-Sadr's insurgency, being of opposing interpretations of the Islamic faith.

Coalition troops entered the city Tuesday, going from house to house in an effort to locate people connected with last week's attacks. Coalition forces within and outside the city have come under repeated fire from rebellion members in nighttime attacks. The deadliest of these came Tuesday night, when 12

BUSINESS & POLITICS

ACLU sues over "no-fly" list

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

The American Civil Liberties Union filed a class-action lawsuit Monday against the "No-Fly" list that was produced by the Transportation Security Administration. The list was created to keep suspected security risks and terrorists off of boarding airplanes.

"Many innocent travelers who pose no safety risk whatsoever are being stopped and searched repeatedly," said the ACLU, according to CNN.com.

Since Sept. 11, 2001, airport security measures have undergone a major overhaul, adding heightened security measures to ensure the safety of airline passengers. In Nov. 2001, the "No-fly" list was created and has been in use since.

The ACLU is supporting seven plaintiffs whose names appear on the no-fly list. Some of the plaintiffs include Air Force master sergeant Michelle Green, Middlebury College student Alexandra Hay and John Shaw, a retired Presbyterian minister from Washington.

Currently, airlines are provided a list by the TSA that they check against their passenger lists. If a passenger is identified on the list or if their name is similar to one of the names that appear on the list, the passenger is questioned, searched and in some cases denied access to the flight. The seven people that the ACLU will be representing have been subjected to these questioning periods and searches, which can sometimes be terminated only through verification from the list.

There is little known about the actual process of adding and removing names from the list, according to CNN.com. Names are reported by national security organizations and TSA adds those names to their lists.

"The TSA acknowledged the name matching technology used by some airlines confuses people on the no-fly list with passengers who have similar names," according to CNN.com.

"There doesn't seem to be any reliable way to resolve the problem that those

"Many innocent travelers who pose no safety risk whatsoever are being stopped and searched repeatedly."
—ACLU press release people continuously confront," said David Sobel, general counsel for the Electronic Privacy Information Center.

CNN.com reported that ACLU lawyer Reggie Shuford said, "They [the plaintiffs] are detained, interrogated, delayed, embarrassed, humiliated in front of other passengers."

"Sometimes I have a completely uneventful experience. Other times I have been led away by police... I have been threatened by indefinite detention. I've had one officer tell another to put me in handcuffs and take me away," said one of the plaintiffs, David Fathi, according to CNN.com.

Green shared a similar story, according to CNN. "Last time I traveled, I traveled with my 2-year-old and my 3-year-old, and they actually did a search that time... So the security guard had to watch my child - my 2-year-old - and he started to run off, and I started to go after him and they were like, 'Ma'am, please freeze!' You know, and so that was very scary for me."

"I am not seeking any monetary damages but a fair and transparent process to remove my name from the no-fly list," said Green according to the Washington Post.

"As a law-abiding citizen who is a retired member of the clergy, I was shocked to discover that I have been placed on the no-fly list," said Presbyterian minister John Shaw reported the Chicago Tribune.

The Washington Post reported that one of the proposed solutions of the problem is a classification system that ranks passengers. The Computer-Assisted Passenger Pre-Screening System II or CAPPS II intends to rank all passengers through a color coded system.

Each passenger will be assigned a color depending on various factors such as the destination of the flight, whether the ticket is round-trip or one-way and when the ticket was purchased.

According to CNN, the ACLU stated, "Simply what we want, at the end of the day, is for our clients to be treated just like every other innocent passenger who attempts to fly."

Wal-Mart customers overcharged

Wal-Mart stores nationwide have experienced computer problems that resulted in some customers paying for their purchases multiple times. The error only affected credit cards purchases.

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Attention Wal-Mart shoppers: If you are one of 800,000 shoppers who used a Visa, MasterCard or debit card to pay for purchases made March 31, you had better check your bill.

A computer hardware malfunction caused many customers at Wal-Mart nationwide to be double and triple-billed.

First Data Corporation is the company responsible for handling the electronic transactions.

First Data is a Colorado-based company that transfers money from customer's accounts to retailer's accounts when purchases are made.

Spokeswoman Staci Busby said the problem was discovered after First Data printed out quality control reports. The Associated Press reported. It is still unclear exactly how many customers have been affected or what caused the computer glitch to occur.

In the meantime, extra charges discovered by First Data have been reversed, but Busby said anyone who made purchases on March 31 should still "check their statements," according to CNN.com. The erroneous March 31 charges were corrected on April 1, and Busby said the reversed charges might not show up on some customer's accounts until as late as Tuesday. First Data has also instituted additional quality control measures, according to CNN.com.

"As far as the corrections are concerned, it was First Data's system that had the problem," said Wal-Mart spokeswoman Danetta Thompson, according to CNN.com. She also said that Wal-Mart stores had posted signs informing customers about the problem and information about how to get in touch with First Data Corp., including its toll-free number, 888-893-0626.

Avid Wal-Mart shopper Jeff Bloch '05 still feels perfectly secure using his credit cards at the store.

"As long as you keep track of your expenses and manage your credit card bills appropriately, I think there's very little to worry about," Bloch said.

The Lewisburg Wal-Mart's store manager was unavailable for comment at press time.

"As long as you keep track of your expenses and manage your credit card bills appropriately, I think there's very little to worry about."
—Jeff Bloch '05

"I'll avoid the hassle—I'd rather shop someplace else that carries the same products."
—Gavin Roulier '06

"It's a reputable company. I still trust them."
—Bejan Motamedi '05

CLINTON HOME FAILS TO SELL ON EBAY

Courtesy of Reuters

Former president Bill Clinton's childhood home in Arkansas was listed on eBay last week; the auction received no bids. The house's current owner blamed an error that raised the minimum price from $45,000 to $200,000.

MISTRIAL DECLARED IN TYCO CASE

Courtesy of Reuters

The corruption trial of ex-CEO Dennis Kozlowski, who was charged with stealing from Tyco and using the money to pay for yachts, lavish houses, parties and jewelry, ended with no verdict. The judge declared a mistrial Monday after a juror holding out for a "not guilty" ruling received a coercive letter. Fellow juror Peter McEntegart later said that the jury was an hour away from a verdict.

Don't wait in line
reserve your table NOW!
Easter Brunch
Sunday, April 11
11 a.m. - 3 p.m.

Hot Buffet featuring:
Carved Steamship Round and
Dry Rubbed Slow Roasted Pig
Shrimp & Scallops Fra Diabolo
Mahi-Mahi w/ Tropical Salsa
Eggplant Caviar Stuffed Portobello Mushroom
Chicken Francaise — Lobster Corn Chowder
Traditional Brunch Entrees — Omelette Station
Cold Buffet of Salads and Fresh Fruits
Assorted Pastries, Cakes, Muffins and Cookies

Reservations:
Phone 570/523-6000
15 S. 6th St., Lewisburg

Now Hiring...
ALDI INC.
✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
✓ Flexible AM hours
✓ $9.51 an hour wage
+ Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.
110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

Welcome to
"A Cut Above Hairdressers"
A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys
WALK INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available
2004/05

1-6
Bedrooms

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

T BRYNWOOD
Rentals

FEATURES

A French student's perspective of America

By LAURE BERTHON
Contributing Writer

There is no one clear reason why I came to study in the United States. One day last year, while leaving class in my home of Tours, France, I found myself in front of a poster that proclaimed, "Study one year in an American University," and I thought to myself, "Why not?"

As a foreign language major, this was the perfect opportunity to improve my English and to experience something different. Six months later, on August 17, 2003, I arrived at JFK Airport. I was met there by other international students, including four other French girls.

After a long trip, I sat down in the Bucknell shuttle and fell asleep. I woke up suddenly as the bus driver was turning on the lights and yelling, "Welcome to Lewisburg." I looked at the others, realizing we all shared a confused expression on our faces. Admittedly, I was a little nervous, especially as I kept reminding myself that I was 4,500 miles away from home and in a place that appeared to be the middle of nowhere.

All that changed when I arrived at Bucknell. During Orientation week, I met students from everywhere and began learning more about their cultures. Step by step, I found my place on the campus, from the little community of Leiser International House to my classes and the activities I joined.

I am lovingly referred to as "the French girl" by my friends, though I am trying very hard to understand the American way of life. Life at the University is so much different from what I was accustomed to in France. I have learned what the words "graduation," "fraternities," "sororities" and "campus life" refer to and the importance they hold for American students. Back home, college and all that is associated with it is not nearly as important to students, so it all came as a bit of a shock.

Studying at Bucknell is much like coming back to high school, where classes are limited and the instructor tells you what to do week by week. It is very different from sitting in an auditorium of 500 seats, where the professor has no idea that you exist, let alone what your name is. The testing method is also different—in France, one exam determines your entire year, creating more pressure for the students.

Before coming here, the only ideas I had about the United States could be summarized as Hollywood movies, huge buildings, McDonald's, Coca-Cola and peanut butter. Now I know the spirit of Thanksgiving, the importance of Halloween and even the basic rules of football.

Most importantly, I have learned a different culture. I now know that when someone asks you "what's up," he is not really waiting for an answer and that "not much" is an appropriate response. I was pleased to see that people tried to understand me, although I occasionally had problems expressing my ideas. From the first word I said, others could tell I was not American, but that was never a problem. Some of the Bucknellians I talked to were fascinated by the fact that I came from France, while I was simply amazed that they were interested in getting to know me.

I know that on May 14, when the airplane takes off, I will look through the window and try to remember last August and the fears I had about arriving in an unknown environment. At the same time, I will also think about the friends I am leaving behind and this incredible year I have spent in the middle of Pennsylvania.

Photos courtesy of Laure Berthon

Since arriving in America in August, Berthon has had the opportunity to experience not only the University (right, Berthon on left), but also a number of major cities on the Eastern Seaboard. Along with other international students, Berthon has visited Baltimore (top) and New York City (bottom). Locally, she has taken a ride on the Hiawatha Riverboat (middle) and has explored the sights and sounds of Lewisburg.

FEATURES

Une étudiante Américaine en France

By HEATHER SHAW
Contributing Writer

I have been living with a French family here in Tours, France, since Jan. 1, and I absolutely love it.

My host family is amazing—sweet, welcoming and much more than I could have ever asked for. I have one younger host sister and three older host brothers. The brothers are in and out of the house, living here only sometimes, so it is rather hectic.

Both my host mother and father are doctors, and my host father also has his pilot's license. Two weeks ago, he took me flying on a breathtaking tour over the Loire Valley to see all of the chateaux. It was absolutely amazing, and one of my favorite things so far.

The Bucknell en France students, myself included, began the semester at the language institute of Touraine. We attended intense language classes all day long, five days a week, for the entire first month, which made us feel somewhat overwhelmed at first.

Although it was not too hard for me to adjust, I definitely felt lost at times. As you can imagine, it is very hard to live in another country with a completely different language and culture. Sometimes I thought my French was not improving at all, which was frustrating. But then I realized that I was just learning so much that I knew I had much more to learn.

I got through it all relatively easily, and despite how much I miss my friends, family and the United States, I haven't gotten homesick or experienced the culture shock everyone said I would.

In February, we switched to the University in Tours and began new classes. I am currently taking an economics class with other Bucknellians and with French students. Although it can be very tough at times to communicate through the language barrier, it is fun to work with the French students.

The city of Tours is incredible. Everything you could possibly want is here, including restaurants, cafés, bars, discotheques and jazz clubs. There are Bucknell excursions every few weekends to surrounding areas, but we also do a lot of traveling around this country and other ones as well. This weekend, the other Bucknell students and I are going to Normandy to see the D-Day beaches.

I definitely encourage anyone who is thinking of going abroad to do so. Despite any hesitations, it is truly a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity you will never forget!

Photos courtesy of Heather Shaw

Shaw has been making the most of her time in France, adapting to the cultural differences and improving her language. She has also made plenty of time for seeing the sights and enjoying time with new friends. Besides dining out (top), she has been taking in natural wonders (middle) and other historic monuments (bottom and left).

FEATURES

Something in the air

Visit the Joseph Priestley House to discover more than oxygen

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Take a deep breath and thank Joseph Priestley. Most famous for his discovery of oxygen, he also contributed to the worlds of education, religion and politics. His home in Northumberland, Pa., which has been turned into a museum, pays tribute to his remarkable life.

Priestley was born in 1773 in England and spent the majority of his life there. In 1774, while still living in England, Priestley made his famous discovery of oxygen.

"His work helped people discover that the air was not 'just one thing,'" said Andrea Bashore, Historic Site Administrator at the Joseph Priestley House.

His discovery of oxygen was later followed by his identification of carbon monoxide at his home in Northumberland toward the end of his life. Priestley also researched extensively on optics, publishing a volume titled "The History of Vision, Light and Colors."

"He enjoyed the process of finding out about the natural world and exploring [it]," Bashore said.

Priestley's Northumberland laboratory is open to the public and contains casts of the scientific instruments used in his historical experiments (the originals are housed in the Smithsonian Museum). More scientific paraphernalia, including several of his original tools, are on display in the drawing room, which acts as the museum's case exhibit room.

"It is amazing to think about what was accomplished in this laboratory and the significance of Priestley's findings to our ever-changing perception of the world around us," Mike Tomlin '04 said.

Despite his far-reaching innovation in the scientific sphere, Priestley was far from a one-dimensional man.

"He was first a minister and

Julianne Pietak—The Bucknellian (printed with permission of the Joseph Priestley House)
The Joseph Priestley House, located just fifteen minutes from the University in Northumberland, is a historic laboratory open to the public. Visitors can learn fascinating details about the life of Joseph Priestley, the man who discovered oxygen.

teacher. Then he just added levels on top of that," Bashore said.

His associates were some of the most prominent names in history—Ben Franklin, Thomas Jefferson and Josiah Wedgwood to name a few. Franklin and Priestley shared an interest in electricity. Jefferson penned his first letter from the White House to Priestley, naming him "one of the few lives precious to mankind." Wedgwood immortalized his image on pottery.

Priestley made other contributions that have proved precious to mankind in his founding of the American Unitarian Church and political ideals.

"He was a non-conformist," Bashore said. "He joined the Lunar Society in England, which was made up of the biggest industrialists of the time, and his social level rose with his scientific achievements. But, he became more outspoken within the group and this is when he became political and becomes dangerous to England... He was lampooned in the press and thought of as a star which [was] going to burn out very quickly."

These political views, including support for both the American and French Revolutions and their Enlightenment ideals, set Priestley apart as a threat to England, which soon made a retreat from the country necessary.

Priestley made other contributions that have proved precious to mankind in his founding of the American Unitarian Church and political ideals.

"He was a non-conformist," Bashore said. "He joined the Lunar Society in England, which was made up of the biggest industrialists of the time, and his social level rose with his scientific achievements. But, he became more outspoken within the group and this is when he became political and becomes dangerous to England... He was lampooned in the press and thought of as a star which [was] going to burn out very quickly."

Due to this type of reaction, Priestley left the country in 1794 for the United States, settling in Northumberland, population 100. Priestley soon began constructing the home where the museum is now located. According to Bashore, the museum is a Georgian-style home, much like those in England, although Priestley was forced to substitute wood for the original English building materials, which were not as plentiful in the United States.

Despite the substituted materials, the house still stands, and several rooms still hold varying exhibits for visitors, with the exception of the laboratory and drawing room.

The library contains Priestley's collection of books and the dining room features what would have been a typical meal for English family. The women's room details the life of an 18th-century woman, such as Elizabeth, Priestley's daughter-in-law, who lived in the house.

Life in Northumberland brought its own set of difficulties—Priestley's wife and son died soon after their arrival, and differing class and religious views continued to set Priestley apart from his neighbors.

"They had servants here and the typical middle-class lifestyle," Bashore said, "but they had a larger level of wealth than those around them... He was also one of the founders of what is known today as Unitarianism, but at the time he was largely seen as a heretic and not permitted to preach in the local churches."

Priestley died in 1804 in Northumberland after a life of accomplishment and originality. The museum tour, which is an hour long, highlights that life. For those short on time, the museum's visitor's center contains a synopsis display of Priestley's life and contributions. A 10-minute orientation video can also be viewed in this center.

"Anyone interested in the history of science and technology should definitely pay a visit; after all, it is in our very own backyard of central Pennsylvania," Tomlin said.

A visit to the historic Joseph Priestley House in Northumberland is tribute to a local star who surely did not burn out.

Another romantic edition brought to you by...

Ms. O.

I have a question that I have been wanting to ask you for a long time. I am a male student here at Bucknell and I am gay. I am also a member of one of the fraternities on campus. Where are all of the other gay fraternity men? I can't be the only gay male in the entire fraternity system at Bucknell. Why doesn't anyone else have the courage to come forward and be who they really are? Do you have any advice that you can give me?

From,
'A Friend'

Dear 'Friend,'
To tell you the truth, I am not quite sure what kind of advice you are looking for me to give. All I can tell you is that I think it is wonderful you feel you can be open with who you are. There are so many people out there, gay and straight, who are still unable to be so comfortable with their identities. You should be really proud of yourself and, furthermore, you should be happy that you have reached a place in your life where you can be comfortable with and embrace all of the aspects of your identity.

I have heard that one in every 10 people is gay. Statistically speaking, you are most likely not the only student involved in the Greek system at the University who is gay. There are probably many other students who have simply not come to a place in their lives where they feel they can be open about being gay. Even though you may not know many students who are out at the University and involved in fraternities and sororities, you are more than likely not alone.

If you have not explored the following resources, you might want to. You should feel free to contact Fran McDaniel at 7-1609 at the office of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Awareness, which is located in Roberts Hall. She can give you much better advice on this topic than I can, and she might even be able to introduce you to other students who are involved with the Greek system and are gay.

In addition, I also want to make a note that many of the Greek organizations on this campus have been working with the LGBT office and have elected to make their suites and houses "safe zones," or places where LGBT students can feel welcome and accepted. Perhaps this will help to make other students feel more comfortable about being gay and Greek at the University.

In the meantime, I hope you enjoy the rest of your time at Bucknell and continue to be proud and open about who you are. I sincerely believe that you are a wonderful example for other men and women on this campus who may not be feeling as ready to be open about who they are. By writing to me, you have made your feelings known and may have given other students the courage to be more open about who they are now that they know they are not alone.

I know that it can feel extremely difficult to deviate from the norm in any way at a school such as the University. But continue to have courage. And most importantly, continue to be open and proud of who you are.

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O, please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to The Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell:
What would the most attractive male/female look like?

Courtesy of Janice Butler
While in Nicaragua, members of Bucknell Brigade, including Josh Fisher '04, were able to meet the women who make the free-trade T-shirts. These T-shirts, currently being sold in the bookstore, are a Nicaraguan community's attempt to eliminate poverty resulting from Hurricane Mitch.

Brigade and bookstore join forces to support Sewing Cooperative

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Writer

You might not think of purchasing a T-shirt as an altruistic act, but it can be. University students are finding an alternative to sweatshops by supporting the Women's Sewing Cooperative, which is based Nueva Vida, Nicaragua.

The University has always been active in providing supplies for the Bucknell Brigade, a volunteer organization founded in response to the devastation in Central America left in the wake of Hurricane Mitch in 1998.

But now the University is lending more of its support. The Bucknell Brigade and the Bucknell Bookstore are working together to sell fair-trade T-shirts made by women in the cooperative. These short-sleeved T-shirts come in a variety of colors and sizes and have the fair-trade logo on them. The brigade is committed to helping the cooperative by increasing the women's buyer-base.

The brigade's involvement in the cooperative is relatively new, but its roots go back to the aftermath of Hurricane Mitch. At the time, many families lived along the lakeshore in Managua. During the hurricane, the lake flooded and caused devastating losses. Families lost their homes and had to be relocated, becoming part of a new urban area, called Nueva Vida, or New Life, in Ciudad Sandino, just outside Managua.

Despite the large population density, local governments could do very little to help these residents. Many families lost their jobs, resulting in an extremely high unemployment rate in the area. The Center for Development in Central America began searching for a way to fight the 80 percent unemployment rate in Nueva Vida. The organization began as a result of an idea through a marketing partnership with Maggie's Organics in Michigan. Together, they began to produce clothing, such as T-shirts, camisoles, nightshirts and shorts.

The CDCA worked to help the organize the cooperative. A revolving loan fund was created to buy construction material and machines. The women who are part of the cooperative in Nueva Vida were unemployed before becoming part of the cooperative, but still worked for months without pay to build up the foundation.

The University's involvement began last year, stemming from a desire to help the Women's Sewing Cooperative and aid the people of Nueva Vida. This is the first year the T-shirts will be sold at the bookstore.

"Last year, the Residential Colleges and the Bucknell Brigade donated money to the Women's Co-op so that they could purchase second-hand silk-screening equipment," said Julia Woodard '05, a member of the brigade. "This enabled them to do this work directly, rather than contract it out. The brigade's own T-shirts and the Greek Week T-shirts were made by the group."

By purchasing Free Trade T-shirts, you are helping the cooperative achieve its ultimate goal: raising production levels to provide full-time employment for members of the Nueva Vida community.

Show your support for those who are less fortunate and suffer from severe unemployment. The availability of jobs and resources is very scarce and a small purchase can make a difference.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

April 16, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 10

Features:

Couture Culture will present its fashion show tomorrow in the Smith Quad.

See page A8

A week of famous faces

JAMES EARL JONES

By KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

Students, faculty, alumni and local residents filled nearly every seat in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts Monday to hear guest speaker James Earl Jones declare that cultural interaction should be one of the most important goals of a society.

Jones emphasized that cultural isolation had a negative effect on societies, and that those nations that have encouraged and sought out cultural interaction have truly thrived, such as Italy in the Renaissance and ancient Greece.

"When you work at it, cultures can empower and enrich each other," Jones said. "Rising to that challenge and doing it might be our greatest legacy," Jones said.

Jones spoke of the Aztec nation as one of the great examples of cultural isolation, which led to its downfall when it could not respond sufficiently to the Spanish invasion.

"There is great danger, I believe, in cultural isolation," Jones said.

Jones also said most people cannot live in cultural isolation, even if they wish to do so, as a result of globalization and the increased interconnectedness of countries and cultures with one another.

"We are constantly exporting and importing culture through television, movies and the Internet," Jones said.

Jones said the increasing transferring of cultures is especially obvious in the upcoming generation of children, which is regularly exposed to many such sources of media.

"Children absorb culture as if by osmosis," Jones said.

Jones also said differences in culture often cause severe misunderstandings between people, and that these misconceptions can be overcome by cultural awareness.

"We have got to remind ourselves that what is considered reasonable varies from country to country," Jones said. "In some countries, it is acceptable to eat pig or dog; in others, it is not."

Jones emphasized the role of language in both culture and its communication.

"Language would have a stronger influence on culture than ethnicity or religion," Jones said. "It is language that passes it on: language, the conveyor of culture from generation to generation."

See JONES page A2

PAT TOOMEY

By DREW CALVERT
Writer

Pennsylvania Congressman Pat Toomey told a small crowd of University and community members April 8 that the only thing preventing conservatives from achieving a complete "governing coalition" in America is the U.S. Senate.

Toomey, a Republican, hopes to change that by getting elected in to the Senate in 2004.

"For the first time in 70 years, we have got complete control," Toomey said. "Are we going to seize this opportunity, or let it slip?"

The Bucknell University Conservatives Club invited Toomey to deliver a speech about civic engagement in response to the University's choice of Ralph Nader as this year's commencement speaker.

Toomey could not give his speech on campus because of a University policy that prohibits political candidates to speak in election years. Instead, he gave his talk at the Brynwood Room downtown.

"[Nader] is being paid $13,000 to come speak to us, which is 13,000 more than we are paying Mr. Toomey," BUCC President Charles Mitchell '05 said. "We do not endorse candidates, but if we did, he would be our guy."

Toomey was first sworn in as a member of the U.S. House of Representatives in January 1999, representing Pennsylvania's 15th Congressional District. He is serving his third term.

During most of his talk, Toomey attacked his opponent, Republican Arlen Specter. Toomey said Specter's more liberal conservatism is what makes the current Senate the "graveyard of good ideas," in contrast to his own "mainstream conservatism."

"Senator Specter has spent 24 years undermining everything conservatives have stood for," Toomey said.

Toomey also discussed his political agenda and potential influence as senator. He said the $500 million deficit is "too big," and he talked about the need for social security reform, stressing it would be better for people to save money themselves.

Toomey said he supports President Bush's tax plan, arguing that the tax-raising plans of Democratic presidential hopeful John Kerry and of Specter would choke off a momentous economic recovery.

When asked about his stance on civil unions, Toomey defined marriage as strictly between a man and a woman.

"I don't see why a sexual relationship outside of marriage should be a determining factor for benefits," Toomey said. Some members of the Conservatives Club disagreed with Toomey on this point, but they were happy to have the opportunity to hear him speak.

"He'll tell you what he really thinks," Mitchell said.

Toomey's visit came just two weeks before the Pennsylvania primary election, which Toomey called a "toss up." If he wins, Toomey claims it would be the "biggest political upset in Pennsylvania's history."

BILLY BEAN

By BRIANNA EVANS
Staff Writer

Billy Bean stressed the importance of being honest with the ones you love, rather than hiding the truth about yourself, on campus Tuesday night.

Bean, a former major league baseball player, spoke to an audience of approximately 100 about coming out as a gay athlete after years of living in secrecy. He said living in secrecy led him to make mistakes he now realizes could have been avoided had he been more open throughout his career.

"What I am going to share with you is a personal experience. What I am going to share is about a person—myself—who was isolated from family, friends, fans, teammates and my ex-wife because I lived in secrecy for so long," Bean said.

Bean played major league baseball from 1987 until 1995. He began his major league career with the Detroit Tigers, and went on to play for the Los Angeles Dodgers and the San Diego Padres.

Born in Santa Anna, Calif., he went from being the chosen Athlete of the Year in high school, to an All-American outfielder twice for Loyola Marymount University before joining the major leagues.

Since ending his career in the major leagues, he has remained devoted to competitive sports, traveling around the country playing tennis and basketball in organized tournaments in hopes of raising the visibility of athletes of diversity.

During his talk, Bean shared with the audience a message included in his book, "Going the Other Way: Lessons from a Life in and Out of Major League Baseball," that he "never set out to be a gay baseball player... and this isn't just another baseball story. It's about realizing that, while we may not all be alike, we can all still play together on a team."

For the last few years that Bean played in the major leagues, he lived in secret with his partner. He purposefully bought a house far from the stadium in San Diego so that he would not have to worry about surprise visits from teammates, who he believed would not be accepting of his lifestyle.

One day Bean came home to find his partner very sick and rushed him to the hospital where, within hours, his partner died. In shock and without the ability to express his grief, as no one knew of his relationship, Bean drove home, showered and went to his game that afternoon.

Later that night, his agent informed him he would be sent to the minor leagues in Las Vegas for a short period of time.

"Upon receiving my new uniform and hat in Las Vegas, I wrote my partner's name in my hat and promised I would get through that season. But somehow, I knew it was going to be my last year in baseball," Bean said.

Bean reiterated acceptance and understanding during his talk. He said that even if you think one must keep his differences secret because he believes he will not be accepted for who he is, he should have faith in those he loves.

Bean did not have such faith and, as a result, almost lost many relationships.

See BEAN page A4

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, April 4

INFORMATION / MEDICAL ASSIST—Public Safety responded to the exterior of Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity for the report of an injured male. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined the individual was a student with a head laceration. The student was transported by friends to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male carrying a beer can and urinating on a vehicle tire. Public Safety identified the male as a student under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption/public drunkenness.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to BU West for the report of a male hiding in the bushes. The individual provided false identification. East Buffalo Township Police responded. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined the male was a visitor who admitted to consuming alcohol, although under the age of 21. Citations were issued for underage consumption and disorderly conduct.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a damaged water fountain. No suspects or witnesses could be located in the search of the area. Facilities personnel responded. The incident is under investigation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / VANDALISM—Public Safety responded to Newman House for the report of vandalism. Unknown person(s) spray-painted graffiti on the garage and a shed at the rear of the building. The incident is under investigation.

ALCOHOL OVERDOSE / AMBULANCE TRANSPORT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Hunt Hall for the report that a student was vomiting blood. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the student was intoxicated, although under the age of 21. Emergency Medical Services transported the student to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. A citation was issued for underage consumption.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of flu symptoms. Student Health Services driver transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Swartz Hall for the report of a student who was experiencing some difficulty breathing. Student Health Services driver transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment, and he later returned to campus.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of an ankle injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

Monday, April 5

INFORMATION / MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that her credit cards were missing. The individual was advised to notify the credit card companies. The incident is under investigation.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Public Safety responded to the New Farm Lot for the report of a motor vehicle accident caused by a student vehicle striking another student vehicle while it was stopped at a stop sign at the entrance to the lot. No injuries were sustained and there was only minor damage to the vehicles. The drivers exchanged insurance information.

INFORMATION / VEHICLE DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to the Phi Kappa Psi parking lot for the report of damage to a parked vehicle. Upon investigation, it was determined that unknown person(s) had scratched and dented the trunk of a vehicle by walking on it. The incident is under investigation.

INFORMATION / MISSING PROPERTY—A student reported to Public Safety that his parking decal was missing from the bumper of his vehicle. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of a stomach flu. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

Wednesday, April 7

INFORMATION / REFUSAL TO MOVE VEHICLE—Public Safety responded to Stadium Road after an abandoned vehicle was reported. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined that numerous parking citations were issued and all attempts to contact the student who owns the vehicle have been unsuccessful. The vehicle has been determined to be abandoned and will be removed.

BU PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Galloway House for a fire-alarm activation caused by water flowing through the smoke detector. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined the water was coming from an overflowing toilet. Facilities personnel responded to fix the problem and clean up the water.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that his wallet was missing from his jacket, which was in an unsecured storage bin in the Gerhard Fieldhouse. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

Thursday, April 8

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a male breaking a window. Public Safety made contact with the male in front of Rooke Chemistry. Upon investigation, it was determined that the male was a student who admitted to consuming alcohol, although under the age of 21, and breaking the window. Citations were issued for criminal mischief, underage consumption and disorderly conduct (property damage).

INFORMATION / FOUND PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to the exterior of Vedder Hall after a report that fireworks had been found by an employee. No witnesses or suspects could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

SEXUAL ASSAULT—A University official reported to Public Safety that a student was sexually assaulted at an off-campus location. Both individuals admitted to consuming alcohol. The police were notified.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the Art Barn in response to the report of a student with a finger laceration. The individual was transported by Public Safety to Student Health Services for treatment.

RETAIL THEFT—An employee reported to Public Safety that a student failed to pay for two items at the bookstore. East Buffalo Township Police responded. The student was cited for retail theft.

Friday, April 9

CRIMINAL TRESPASSING—Public Safety responded to an alarm at Delta Upsilon Fraternity. Upon further investigation, Public Safety found the main entrance door had been forced open. East Buffalo Township Police responded. No suspects or witnesses could be located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

THEFT—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) had taken two pieces of jewelry from her McDonnell Hall room. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, April 10

CRIMINAL TRESPASSING—Continued—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for a report of bed sheets tied together hanging from a window. Unknown person(s) had broken into the fraternity and used these to exit the building. No suspects could be located in a search of the area. Witnesses observed an unknown male climb down the sheets before Public Safety arrived. Facilities staff responded to secure the building. The incident is under investigation.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to the tennis courts for the report of an unconscious visitor. Upon arrival, Public Safety determined that the female was conscious. She was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned home.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety for transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of her arm, which was injured when she fell at an off-campus location. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged her vehicle while it was parked in the Lower Harris Lot. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area. The incident is under investigation.

Jones discusses the importance of cultural interaction

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Actor James Earl Jones spoke to the campus community Monday night as this year's spring lecturer. Jones spoke about the necessity for cultures throughout the world not to be isolated.

JONES From page A1

Jones also noted that language can perpetuate misunderstandings or negative stereotyping between peoples, mentioning how Hollywood used the more harsh languages of the Japanese and Germans to portray them as "pretty rough fellas."

Jones cited the common use of the slang word "squat" to describe a female American Indian and the tensions this word can cause because the word has an extremely vulgar definition in several American Indian languages.

Jones, 73, is no stranger to the communication of culture and is recognized as one of the most respected and distinguished actors in America. After more than 40 years of acting experience, he has won numerous Emmy, Grammy and Tony awards, and was awarded honorary doctorates from Yale, Princeton and Columbia.

Many students thought that Jones's talk offered ample insight into a very pressing issue and good advice on how people should deal with cultural differences that are playing a larger and larger role in their lives.

"He really proved how important it is for us as Americans to take the time to learn about the backgrounds of other people, which enriches our viewpoints on different cultures and ensures that we will not misinterpret actions that may be foreign to us," Lauren Staph '07 said.

Other listeners, although appreciative of the chance to see and hear such a well-known figure, were not as impressed with the content of the lecture.

"It was a privilege to see Jones speak in person, being a cultural icon and a childhood idol of mine," Robert Hafert '07 said. "However, I felt that his lecture was not as poignant as I had hoped it would be."

The organization responsible for the hosting of Jones, the Lectureship Committee, was very pleased that such a distinguished figure was able to speak at the University.

"We wanted the one outstanding speaker that would draw the crowd, that would captivate and engage the audience, and we felt that James Earl Jones was a perfect fit," Lectureship Committee Chairperson Cori Hetherington '04 said. "Not only would his voice captivate an audience, but he would also have the potential to inspire as well."

Hetherington said that Jones' speech not only has special significance on campus, but also worldwide.

"I believe the 'Culture Quest' is important not only for [the University], but for everyone. We need to educate ourselves on the cultures of others. We need to strive to understand," Hetherington said. "As the saying goes, we need to attempt, as best we can, to envision life from another's eyes."

Students with conflicts allowed to ask to reschedule exams this semester

Faculty committee will study and review the issue for future semesters

By SARA STEFANINI
Writer

Faculty members passed an temporary exemption to the University's current exam policy at the April 6 faculty meeting. Under the exemption, students who wish to participate in University-sanctioned activities during

"I feel really torn, I want students to have a comprehensive experience, and that includes athletics, theater, etc., but I don't want students' exams to be compromised by outside activities."

—Robert Midkiff, associate dean of arts and sciences this semester's exam period will be allowed to ask their professors to reschedule their exams.

Professor of Chemistry Margaret Kastner made the first motion to allow exemption for students participating in varsity-level athletic competitions. After some discussion about possible problems and concerns, Professor of Political Science John Peeler moved to refer the proposed revision to the Committee on Instruction, which will study and review the issue for future semesters.

Professor of Biology Mitchell Chermín made the motion to exempt all University-sanctioned co-curricular activities, not just athletics, for the semester.

The current exam policy, which has been in place since 1996, prohibits students from participating in any extra-curricular activities during the exam period. The track and field team's participation in the NCAA championship is the only exemption to this policy.

Before 1996, the University avoided the problem with a short January term in which students could participate in faculty-sponsored activities before classes began in February, according to Associate Dean of Arts and Sciences Robert Midkiff.

"We saw a decline in students and faculty participating in these activities," Midkiff said, "So the faculty voted to do away with the January plan."

The faculty then had to decide whether to change the beginning of the spring semester to the beginning of January or mid-January, or to keep it at the beginning of February.

According to Midkiff, about one-third of the faculty said it should start at the beginning of January, one-third said mid-January and another third said it should start in February.

"President Adams finally split the difference and decided to start mid-January," Midkiff said.

After Adams' decision, the track and field coach at the time "spoke about the meet being during exams," Kastner said. "The faculty [exam] policy has the proviso that we would make nice for track and field."

Kastner said that until recently she was unaware that the proviso did not apply to other athletic teams.

"My impression was broader than the language that the administration has to enforce; my motion was to relax all athletic components," Kastner said.

Some members at faculty meeting, including Midkiff, expressed concerns that by allowing athletic teams to reschedule exams, other extra-curricular groups would begin to make similar requests.

"I felt compelled to say that there are other things that students ask to be exempt from besides athletics," Midkiff said. "Are we going to open it for all of them?"

Chermín said this is why he moved to exempt all University-sanctioned groups.

"I didn't think it was fair not to have any sanctioned group [in the policy]. If you're going to do it for one group, do it for all," Chermín said.

"What Professor Chermín's motion did was create a single, one-tying exemption," Midkiff said.

Kastner and Midkiff said that although most of the faculty agree with the proposal in theory, they have many concerns about its ramifications.

"My sense is that most of the faculty like to see students do well in all areas, but this is a place where those areas conflict," Kastner said.

"I feel really torn," Midkiff said. "I want students to have a comprehensive experience, and that includes athletics, theater, etc., but I don't want students' exams to be compromised by outside activities."

One of the faculty's main concerns is whether the exam policy will remain fair and impartial if they make the revision.

"Professors want to give students an opportunity to show what they have learned," Midkiff said. If professors choose to create two or more versions of the exam, Midkiff fears there will be the worry of equality.

"You become very concerned about, 'Are the two exams comparable and equitable?' Instead, some professors will choose not to create a second exam. Then they will be concerned about students talking, and that's also unfair," Midkiff said.

Additionally, Kastner said that the exemptions "would be creating a special class of students not treated equally, and this is not wonderful."

If the exam policy is permanently revised, faculty members will still have the power to decide whether to allow their students to reschedule their exams.

"I firmly believe that students have a contract with the faculty. I hope that not a single faculty member feels obligated to make accommodations," Chermín said. "I would hope, however, that my colleagues on the faculty would listen to their students before making a decision."

"Many faculty fear that they will lose all control of exam week if they allow students to reschedule. I think we can restrict it to a small number," Kastner said.

Lauren Minacappelli '06 said the faculty should make the revision and that it is fair.

"To get into Bucknell, you have to be a well-rounded person, so students should still be allowed to be well-rounded here, and if they can maintain a high G.P.A. and still go to the championship, then why stop them?" Minacappelli said.

The faculty is scheduled to make its final decision about the exam policy in the fall, after the Committee on Instruction presents its findings. The committee is composed of students, faculty and administrators. It deals with all instructional matters, such as the scheduling of classes and faculty evaluations, according to Midkiff.

Stephen Bowen, provost and vice presi-

"I didn't think it was fair not to have any sanctioned group [in the policy]. If you're going to do it for one group, do it for all."

—Mitchell Chermín, professor of biology dent of academic affairs and member of the commission, said the committee usually uses three methods to conduct research.

"The committee most often conducts a survey of practice at other institutions, so that our students are not at a disadvantage, a survey of the University's faculty and makes a recommendation based on the school's mission, which is primarily academic and secondarily athletic," Bowen said.

NEWS BRIEFS

By Meghan Ball

Pollock to serve as interim president

Vice President of Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 will be the senior officer of day-to-day affairs in the interim between the outgoing and incoming presidents. Brian Mitchell will begin his term on July 1, but he and his wife Maryjane will not move onto campus until August 1. University President Steffen Rogers will leave office May 28, five days after graduation.

Baccalaureate speakers chosen

This year's baccalaureate speakers were announced this past week. The faculty speaker will be Associate Professor of Geography Karen Morin, and the senior speaker will be Kandy Turner '04. The baccalaureate ceremony is 7:30-8:30 p.m. May 22 in the Weis Center for Performing Arts.

Morin is an associate professor of geography with a doctoral degree from University of Nebraska-Lincoln. Her research combines travel writings, studies on imperialism and the historical geography of North America, with a focus on women. In 2002, she received a Fulbright scholarship to the Russian Federation. Her speech will be on "The Place of Privilege."

Turner is an English major and the founder and co-chair of the inter-religious-council. Originally from Cabins, W.Va., she has been involved in the Multicultural Council of Presidents, Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority, the admissions office, Activities and Campus Events, slam poetry events and several theater productions. She is also the vice president of Mortar Board National Honor Society. Turner was inducted into Phi Beta Kappa this year.

Tickets for Baccalaureate are free and can be picked up in the Reservation, Information and Conference Service office on the second floor of the Langone Center.

Paper shuts down after printing offensive April Fools' issue

The Carnegie Mellon University newspaper, The Tartan, was voluntarily shut down for the rest of the semester after publishing an offensive April Fools' issue. The Tartan, as it was named for the issue, included a cartoon with a racial slur, depictions of female genitals and poems about rape and mutilation.

According to The Associated Press, April Fools' issues increasingly result in the closing of newspapers each year. Mark Goodman, executive director Student Press Law Center in Arlington, Va., said such April Fools' issues are becoming less common.

"Back in the '70s and '80s, it was extremely common," Goodman said. He attributes the decline in part to school papers becoming more professional.

Bush supports Sharon's plan to disengage areas on Gaza Strip

President Bush has come out in support of a plan by Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon for a unilateral disengagement from Palestinian areas on the Gaza strip, according to the BBC. This plan involves dismantling 21 Israeli settlements, 7,000 settlers and also means the strengthening of six settlements in the heart of the area.

While Bush has called the move "historic and courageous," many in Israel were shocked by the plan. In particular, two ultra-nationalist parties have threatened to quit Sharon's coalition. The BBC reports that in general, Israelis support any plan that might help bring an end to the violence. Palestine has also welcomed the plan. Sharon's party is to vote on the plan on May 2. The 200,000-person vote will decide whether the disengagement will proceed.

South Africa holds third democratic general election

South Africa's third democratic general election went without any incidents, according to the BBC. Polls show that the Ruling National African Congress will take its third victory. With Apartheid still a bitter memory in the mind of many blacks, voter turnout was very good. It also means that most blacks vote along the color line still, keeping President Mbeki in power.

Mbeki has been praised for 1.6 million new houses for the poor, stabilizing the economy, keeping inflation down and improving access to water and electricity. Conversely, he has been condemned for the 5.3 million people in South Africa with AIDS, a 30 percent unemployment rate and massive wealth inequality.

South Korean Parliamentary elections to begin this week

The South Korean Parliamentary elections began this week, the BBC reported. The biggest issue in these elections is the impeachment of the reformist president Roh Moo-Hyun. The vote is split between younger supporters of Roh and older conservatives. It is expected that over 60 percent turnout to vote on the 299 seats up for grabs.

The Uri Party, Roh's party, is thought to do well. The outcome will be seen as a public referendum on Roh. If the party does well, it is thought that Seoul will begin leaning toward Roh's policies. These included reconciliation with communist North Korea and more independence from Washington.

News

Summer is 2232 hours long.
Suddenly, spending 42
in the classroom
doesn't sound so tough.

Register Now!

Session 1
May 19 - June 30Session 2
July 6 - August 13BOSTON
UNIVERSITYSUMMER TERM
www.bu.edu/summer
or call 617.353.5125

Don't just read
the news.

Write
the news.

mball@

Mya's Coffee House

Delicious Hot Chocolate available
with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH

THE PASSION OF THE CHRIST

He died for us and rose again.
What is your response?

Join us as we honor Him each Sunday at the
MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH
Sunday Services at 10:30am and 6pm
Wednesday 6pm Community
Meal and 7pm Bible Study
1.2 miles north of Rt. 45 off Forest Hill Road in Mifflinburg.
For more info call 966-4899

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available
2004/051-6
Bedrooms

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

LBRYNWOOD
Rentals

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $800
622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $550
121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate

521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

News

ANCHOR SPLASH: WET AND WILD FUN

Photos by Christophe Richard

Delta Gamma Sorority held its annual philanthropy event, Anchor Splash, April 1. Teams composed of students from fraternities, sororities and other student groups participated in the competition. The men's crew team, Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority and the Arts Residential College captured first place in the men's, women's and coed divisions, respectively.

Former MLB player Bean stresses importance of honesty ships. "I built a life in the closet, which severed the relationship with my family because they couldn't understand why I had quit baseball," Bean said.

BEAN From page A1

When he quit the major leagues, Bean moved to Miami. There, he met his current partner of nine years.

In 1999, he and his partner opened a restaurant, and a local paper covering the opening wanted to mention that the owners were gay because they thought it would provide the restaurant with more publicity. Bean agreed that he would have been forgotten in his few years out of the major leagues.

A few days later, he was on the cover of The New York Times and subsequently appeared on a nationally televised story with Diane Sawyer. He is the only living former major league baseball player to publicly acknowledge his own homosexuality.

Bean said that after the story came out, everyone who knew and cared about him wanted to know what he had been doing with his life and that they were also angry that he did not tell them the truth sooner.

Now, Bean said he understands that he holds a certain responsibility, both as a former athlete and as a member of the homosexual community, to make people aware of diversity, not only in athletics, but in life.

"There are a lot of people who have walked in silence, and it's my responsibility to get the message out," Bean said. "I think you'll agree that no one should be compromised for being who they are."

Bean said he knows that if he does not spread his experience, more people will make the mistakes he did.

"I believe that all people, regardless of their personal beliefs or religious denominations, would agree that being honest with your family, and those around you, is a great foundation for living your life," Bean said. "It has been a long, hard journey for me, and I want people to learn from my mistakes, not share them."

Many members of Bean's audience said his talk will help to enhance awareness of diversity on campus. Specifically, Bean's talk was meant to target issues surrounding the difficulty of being a gay athlete in a college environment.

"It is important that we make all aspects of society open to lesbian, gay, bi-sexual and transgender people, including athletic teams," said Fran McDaniel, director of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered Awareness Office.

"When we did a campus climate survey a few years ago, one of the main pockets of homophobia was in athletics and the Greek system. We have been working very hard to change that perception with speakers that would help increase awareness. That is why we wanted Billy Bean to speak," McDaniel said.

"I give him a lot of credit for touching on a subject that is very taboo in a lot of universities," Amber Lilley '06 said. "Hopefully, at least one administrator who heard him speak will continue this dialogue for years to come."

As Bean completed his talk, he gave credit to the University for promoting gay and lesbian awareness and openness on campus.

"I was running on your indoor track this afternoon when I saw a sign that said: 'It's not a crime to be gay,' and it stopped me dead in my tracks. I was very impressed to see that on a college campus," Bean said. "I'll never forget this day because of that. This is a great school, at least from the perspective I've had."

PROTEST THROUGH ART

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

This 6-foot-6-inch Storm Trooper, constructed of more than 2,000 Bison receipts, appeared in the Langone Center Tuesday. The display was intended to be commentary on the waste of approximately 35,588 square inches of paper per day.

Come Home to Lewisburg All Over Again

You'll never forget the pride you had in your community while at Bucknell! What better way to keep that tradition alive than to make Lewisburg your home all over again?

The art of choice for many Bucknell alumni and former Bucknell professors, RiverWoods Senior Living Community offers a safe, secure living and retirement with all the amenities of home. Plus, with our on-campus indoor pool, fitness center, restaurant, golf, and horse riding, we are living it all just a short walk away! For more information on making RiverWoods your new address, call (570) 524-2711 today.

RIVERWOODS

Senior Living Community
5201 River Road • Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-2711 • Toll-Free 1-888-791-0096
www.riverwoods.org

RiverWoods is a non-profit, 501(c)(3) organization. It is not affiliated with any religious organization. It is a separate and independent entity.

MEMPHIS RIBS

Meaty St. Louis Ribs, pit-smoked for hours with Applewood, char-grilled, and generously basted with our bold-flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce. Served with Skillet Potato Cakes and your choice of Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, plus a FREE beverage.

Your Choice...
just $13.99!

(Mondays-Wednesdays only)

17 N. Market St.
Lewisburg
ph. 570-374-9841
291 Mill St., Danville
ph. 570-275-5110
www.bjribz.com

JUST $13.99

AS $18.99

Chicago STEAK

BJ's 1/2 lb. Chicago Steak - our famous, specially seasoned USDA Choice Certified Premium Center Cut Sirloin. Served with your choice of Potato, Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, Honey Butter, and a FREE beverage.

Dogwood Hill

Distinctive Floral Design
Fine Gifts
Unique Accessories
430 Market Street,
Lewisburg
524-7930

RENTALS

for
BUCKNELL
STUDENTS

AVAILABLE
JUNE 1, 2004

3 LARGE 2 BR APTS.

AT:
237 South 3rd &
Saint George

Excellent condition,
excellent location -
right next door to campus

(570) 966-1488

you come home late at night in need of a snack. you discover a slice of cake in the fridge. it's not yours. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a Delaware limited liability partnership. It is the limited partner, under the terms of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP's partnership agreement, which is a separate and independent legal entity, and is not to be an Affiliated Person or Equal Opportunity Employer.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 10
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1320
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Salemme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sande Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editor
Meghan Ball '06

Assistant News Editor
Chelsea Hetrick '07

Opinions Editor
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRosa '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwitz '06
Keeley Sclow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Julianne Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not for publication) and e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester, entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian, Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

University policy discourages political debate

Picture a university that promotes political discussion. Picture a university that encourages political candidates to speak to its students. Picture this, and now realize that it is not Bucknell.

If Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry or President Bush wanted to speak at the University, they would not be permitted to do so because of a University policy that prohibits political candidates running for office to speak at the University unless they were contracted to speak prior to their announcement to run for office. This policy should be changed and political candidates should be allowed to speak at the University.

Allowing students to bring political candidates to campus is an excellent way for students to get involved with politics and to perform civic engagement. Apathy is a significant problem on this campus, and this policy reinforces this apathy. If they hear one or two political nominees speak on campus, students will be encouraged to register to vote, fill out absentee ballots and to actually vote if they are registered in Pennsylvania.

Individuals running for office should not be brought onto campus by the administration, but by student groups.

The Bucknell University Conservatives Club is an example of such a group, as it recently tried to bring Pennsylvania Representative Pat Toomey to campus, but had to host his speech two blocks away from campus at the Bull Run Inn. However, not just politically affiliated groups such as the BUCC can bring people to speak on campus—all student groups should be encouraged to do so.

In addition, the current policy makes it virtually impossible for state representatives to speak at the University, as there is a very limited time when they are not campaigning.

Changing this policy is also good for the University. For example, Sen. John Edwards, who was running for the presidential candidacy, spoke at New York University this year. His speech brought a great deal of positive attention to that university—attention this University would like to have.

By preventing individuals who are running for office from speaking at the University, the Bucknell "bubble" is perpetuated. For example, Kerry is traveling to colleges and universities across the nation to discuss tuition—an issue that is very important to Bucknell students, and by not even considering to allow Kerry to come to the University, the campus community becomes closed off from educational opportunities.

It is possible some speakers may hold controversial viewpoints and that the University would host a speaker of whom the campus community is not proud.

However, coming together and discussing a speaker's presentation will foster sense of community. The University's current policy hinders students from learning about the opinions of others.

Being actively involved with politics and with campus life should go hand in hand. The University must re-examine its policy and allow political candidates to speak at the University.

Letters to the editor

Fraternity letter misses the point of House Party

To the Editor:

I'm writing in response to the letter ("Bucknellian House Party article was misguided," April 9) concerning the "misguided" House Party article ("House Party regulations need some revision," April 2).

I agree with the initial article. Although there is evidence of a slight alcohol problem at the University, Bucknell should not punish the majority of students for the errors of a few.

House Party should be an opportunity for the campus to get together for a weekend of parties, bands and alcohol, not an excuse to drink until the point of sickness. Nor should it be policed to the point where one slipup can cost a student an entire semester. We need to find a happy medium, and the administration needs to treat students like adults.

Wolf's response to the article exemplifies why administrators aren't treating us like adults. Wolf rambles on, stating that (presumably) the person punched "probably had it coming."

This meathead ideology that one must get into drunken fights to "get his buddy's back" is a prime example of why the administration is not giving us any breathing room.

I understand defending a friend and not getting involved in the actual fight, but these "beer muscle" tactics are why administrators are not trusting the students. This understanding is beyond the minds of some Bucknellians who go downtown and fight over stupid issues.

I wonder if Wolf even read all of Hanlon's article. Hanlon defends fraternities, discussing the unfairness of the liabilities they must accept in order to host House Party festivities.

Fraternities chose to have festivities and welcome all registered, independent and Greek. Complaining about independents "freeloading" is preposterous—you chose to be in a fraternity. Grow up and deal with the stipulations.

Yes, independents are also involved in House Party weekend and should also be held at fault if any major incident occurs during the weekend, just as fraternities are. It's only fair.

Wolf is propagating the divide between Greeks and independents. As a Greek, I'm ashamed others take this attitude toward the independent community. Some Greeks need to get over themselves and realize independents aren't independent because "they couldn't get into a good fraternity/sorority." Maybe it was a conscious choice, a resistance to the superiority mentality of a small portion of the Greek community.

If we keep acting like children, the administration will never respect us or give us the rights students at prior House Parties enjoyed.

Sincerely,

Amanda Nogic '06

To the Editor:

I was looking through The Bucknellian this week and noticed that someone was ripping on Aaron Hanlon ("Bucknellian House Party article was misguided," April 9) for freeloading this weekend by drinking free beer at Sigma Chi.

Perhaps the "burn" dealt to Hanlon will not be so satisfying to the "burner" after a click on the results of the Duke track meet, which will show Hanlon's participation and absence from House Party weekend.

Also, a quick lesson in conflict resolution: the sweet mix of testosterone, alcohol and fraternity gents does not equal letting cooler heads prevail. The obvious solution to the disturbance cited in the letter was someone getting hurt.

One more thing: you silly little independents need to find some other place to party, and leave us innocent fraternity gents to ourselves. Then we can finally delight in the company of one another.

You folks only get in the way of this, not to mention drink our beer. We have only our fraternity houses, downtown and the bar to drink at! You independents taint all three locations. Can't you please find some other place to cause trouble?

Sincerely,

Justin McKnight '04

Candidates' own Web sites provide telling information

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

Staying abreast of the important issues in a presidential election is difficult. There is effectively zero space in any national newspaper, or time on radio and television stations, devoted to the election of the president. And when you are unable to seek out information by reading or passively absorbing sound bites while sitting on your couch eating, go to the only resource for home mortgages, used bicycles and presidential election information: the Internet.

In the Information Age, one of the most important tools candidates (and pornographers) have at their fingertips is their own Web sites. Candidates now have the ability to mold their sites into great fundraising tools, as well as microphones for propaganda (I mean information) about what they plan on doing if they are elected.

Where else can candidates get this much exposure, while making sure that it puts a positive spin on everything that they have done or plan to do?

Although looking at Sen. John Kerry's, President Bush's and Ralph Nader's Web sites and examining what their platforms are would be a responsible way to begin deciding for whom to vote, it is simply too difficult.

Seriously, should a college-aged person be expected to read—no, skim—three Web sites in order to determine who should be the leader of the free world? I certainly hope not. Instead, the most efficient way to pick the candidate who should be president is to simply judge the sites based on style points. I think the famous proverb "It's better to look good than to be good" applies here perfectly.

So by looking at the aesthetics of the page along with the first paragraph of text on the main page, I will choose beyond a doubt who should be the next president of the United States.

First up is the sitting president, Republican George W. Bush (georgewbush.com). Bush's site was clearly developed to evoke some serious patriotism. Hey Bush, is it Flag Day already? This site has a great picture of the president looking very smart and composed, but it seems like his photograph was the only contribution that Bush made to the site. In the future, it would be nice to have a more personal touch. Perhaps a letter welcoming visitors to his Web site or verification that he designed and coded the site himself. Overall, a B- effort; nothing compared to his 2000 campaign site.

Ralph Nader (votenader.org), consumer activist and independent candidate, was the next campaign site on the list. Ralph comes off a little desperate for cash, which sets a bad tone for the rest of the page. The large icon depicting how much money is needed for the campaign in Indiana, a state no one cares about, is a definite turnoff.

Additionally, the page has a lot of text, which upon skimming reveals Nader is not happy about anything in the world. Advice for the future: if it cannot be summed up in one sentence, I am not voting for you. Overall, the site gets a B+, mostly because Nader needs all the help he can get.

John Kerry (johnkerry.com) is the last candidate to be examined, and his site was certainly worth the wait. Kerry's site is similar to the others with regard to format and style, but what puts it over the top is the fact that in the first paragraph it mentions not only Tom Delonge of the band Blink 182, but also Jon Bon Jovi. Because I did not read it all, I can't say for sure why they were referenced, but they both rock very hard.

Kerry: while I have no idea what you stand for, I can say this: by association, you also rock very hard. Grade: A+, enough said.

Based on this highly structured and accurate method of examination, no other candidate comes even close to rocking as hard as Kerry, and as a result, I will have no choice but to vote for him in November. Wasn't this easier than being informed? I certainly think so.

Bush campaign ads deceive voters

By JAKE PALLEY
Staff Writer

I have been told that all I can do in my articles is trash-talk President Bush. In all fairness, it is really not all that hard to do. But also, in all fairness, I will give credit when credit is due. And this is something on which I will compliment Bush: his ad campaign.

In a word, it is brilliant. So far, the series of ads has evoked images of power, strong leadership and level-headedness. Bush reasons in his ads that keeping taxes low is good because it helps keep the economy growing.

Bush is also a firm believer in keeping our troops stationed in Iraq and around the world well equipped. Bush even evoked the powerfully emotional imagery of Sept. 11, promising to keep steady leadership in times of change.

Sen. John Kerry's ads don't come close. Kerry's latest ad

We see only what they want us to see, and we hear only what they want us to hear in nice, short, sanitized 30-second prepackaged blurbs.

accused Bush of overspending and under-taxing, and I felt dumb for having watched it. The ad almost made me vote Republican.

In fact, if I were a voting citizen and had to choose which candidate to vote for based solely on advertisements, I would have voted for Bush. In fact, in the states where Bush's ads have aired, Bush has garnered more support at Kerry's expense, Reuters news reports. And it should come as no surprise.

Bush's propaganda machine is far superior to Kerry's. Bush will amass nearly $200 million just for that explicit purpose, and with that kind of money, any blinding idiot can make himself look good enough to get elected. This is a horrible disgrace because it insults America's collective intellect.

We are so busy with our families, with our friends, with our sports, with our beer, with our jobs and with our second jobs, that we simply do not have the time to take an objective look at the political landscape.

We see only what they want us to see, and we hear only what they want us to hear in nice, short, sanitized 30-second prepackaged blurbs. They feel and sound substantive, yet they are in fact the most contrived and superficial propaganda you will ever hear.

On compassion, Bush says he believes in America because he believes in the people of America. I too believe in things, things such as beliefs. It sounds good, but when you get right down to it, its profundity is somewhat lacking.

In fact, it means absolutely nothing and tells us nothing about Bush. It's a very ambiguous statement, says absolutely nothing political, states no policy and works perfectly to his advantage because it's a great sound bite.

On the economy, Bush makes it sound like tax cuts are the permanent solution to stalled economic growth. One of Bush's more eloquent quotes on his Web site is this epic advice: "Jobs are created when the economy grows." The three-million jobs lost under Bush's tenure, despite economic growth (also known as the jobless recovery) seem to have escaped Bush's vocabulary.

On strength and leadership, the ads play on the fear of Sept. 11. They ask for unquestioned patriotism and loyalty, as well as for steady leadership in times of change. The implicit message in all of this simple—a vote for a democrat is a vote for Osama bin Laden, while a vote for Bush is the only true American way. Leadership forged upon blind loyalty is no way to run a country, but that is exactly what Bush is asking for.

Bush's political machine has picked issues it knows it can win, because Bush sets the agenda and Kerry must match up against it. Gone is any kind of substantive, productive debate on the real issues. Polls taken in March, immediately after Bush's ad campaign kicked off, show that the campaign has had its desired effect. USA Today magazine reports that 55 percent of Americans still think the Iraqi war was worth it, while 58 percent still support the "war on terror."

Is America totally unaware that Iraq's supposed links to al-Qaida were nothing more than pure fabrications and lies? Does America not know that Bush weakened the real war on terror by diverting critical resources away from the hunt for bin Laden in order to prepare for the war in Iraq? Does America not know that the Bush administration is stonewalling the independent 9/11 Commission at every turn? Is America sold on tax cuts, even as the deficit soars to unprecedented and dangerous levels? And yet, is America still willing to believe that Bush is completely trustworthy? The answer to all these questions is invariably "yes."

In a political era where public opinion is shaped by propaganda machines greased by lies and deception, the election will become a war of meaningless words and diversionary tactics.

In a political era where public opinion is shaped by propaganda machines greased by lies and deception, the election will become a war of meaningless words and diversionary tactics. But for American politics, it is business as usual.

We see our country as an indestructible ship, a veritable Titanic, with Bush at its helm. With the public standing idly by, it will be far too late when we realize the Unsinkable just struck ice. I too believe in America, but I also believe that America should no longer be guided by reckless politics and 30-second TV ads.

There is an inscription in the granite walls of the Korean War Veterans Memorial in Washington D.C., meant to serve as a reminder of the costs of liberty: "Freedom is not free." This is a concept of which too many people, Americans and Bucknellians alike, have lost sight. We live the way we do because the generations before us put their lives on the line, some paying the ultimate price, to secure the well being of future Americans.

Death is an inevitable consequence of battle, and the war in Iraq is no exception. To put it in perspective, the number of American casualties in Iraq to date is less than one fifth of the number of total deaths as a result of Sept. 11 attacks. Of course, this is no comfort to the friends and family of the fallen; however, nobody is forced to be a soldier. When people registered for the armed forces, they accepted the potential consequences—including death. They accepted the responsibility of defending our nation and its people from evil and the honor of delivering the freedom we forgot to those who have never known it.

Rather than condemn our leaders and protest our military involvement in Iraq and other foreign countries, try supporting the people who are working, fighting and dying so that you have the right to express that opinion. Instead of dishonoring those who died in the line of duty by using their deaths to attack the cause they fought for, celebrate their lives and the lives they have given you.

The simple truth is that college students of all ages are going to drink alcohol. Going overboard is a problem and drinking underage is a risk; but the violation of simple rights at the University is a problem far greater than alcohol consumption.

Nystagmus is a condition in which the eyes involuntarily jerk, shake or wobble. While some experience a degree of nystagmus when they are drunk, many who have perfect vision or are under tremendous stress (say, because they just got taken into custody by an officer) can experience nystagmus.

Regardless, according to Pennsylvania law, a nystagmus test is not acceptable in court as evidence of impairment or probable cause in a criminal hearing. In fact, nystagmus tests are rarely accepted as legitimate, scientific indications of drunkenness and are highly contested in many states.

Still, the University uses nystagmus tests as grounds to give breathalyzer tests to students in custody. Incidentally, the University Public Safety officer, who is presumably not an eye doctor of any sort, was somehow able to determine nystagmus onset before 45 degrees without an eye scope or even a simple protractor. This officer is also rumored to move small automobiles via telekinesis.

The absurdity does not stop at methods of implementation. After determining that the student may have had some nystagmus onset (which is legally irrelevant) and at times used her arms to balance herself (fascinating!), the student was given a breath test.

The test indicated that, based upon her height, weight, gender and drinking habits, she probably had around three or four drinks (which she admitted to the officer from the beginning), she was given unnecessarily severe sanctions.

These sanctions include a $200 fine, required attendance at a meeting with the deans and a four-hour alcohol class, and six points. They also include the loss of the following privileges for the duration of her college career at the University: having a car on campus, living off campus and having a room pick option.

She is also now required to get special permission for studying abroad, all because she was stopped outside of a fraternity with an open container and had consumed three or four drinks while underage.

The simple truth is that college students of all ages are going to drink alcohol. Going overboard is a problem and drinking underage is a risk, but the violation of simple rights at the University is a problem far greater than alcohol consumption. Students, faculty and administrators ought to stand up for basic rights and fair sanctions that meet the severity of the violation.

Freedom is not free

By ERIC HARRISON
Contributing Writer

We are here today at Bucknell enjoying the luxuries of University life. We complain about classes, homework and projects. Our issues including having mountains of material to read and finishing off problem sets, essays and various other assignments moments before deadlines. Exams stress us out and 8 a.m. classes are our worst nightmare.

And while it often gets forgotten in the haze that is the all-nighter, we do have time for leisure in Lewisburg. Weekends are buzzing with the fervor of friends getting ready to have a good time doing whatever makes them happy. For some, it is movies with the girls; others, basketball with the guys. For some, it is a concert at Uptown, and others, a frat party. Regardless of what the activity happens to be, the basic premise remains unchanged—people are enjoying themselves.

The good times are not restricted to social gatherings and weekends. Varsity, intramural and club sports teams are able to compete in athletics with friends and foes, there are music and theater options available, students can have their voice heard in several student-run news and literary publications and there are chances to participate in volunteer endeavors on a weekly basis.

Not only do we have all of these opportunities at our disposal, but we have top-notch facilities to complement them. The Recreation and Athletics Center is filled with new equipment, we have housing amenities that at the very least are an improvement from most colleges, the food is not awful, and we have one of the best college libraries in the nation.

Now travel back in time and put yourself in the shoes of some youth from America's past. They were not living the good life, preparing for a career of their choosing; they were dying in the fight to give us that opportunity. This reality has been ignorantly cast aside by some—on this campus and abroad.

Clamors for the end of the war in Iraq and disenchantment with the Bush administration echo through the press and media outlets with increasing frequency. Such proposals have even graced the pages of The Bucknellian. It is frustrating and unfortunate that some feel the need to take their freedom for granted.

The University is not perfect by any means, and there are times when I wish I could get out of the bubble myself. However, even when I have to wake up early, have two tests in one day, a paper due afterward, go to practice and then get a fresh load of assignments, it is still better than fighting a war in the enemy's backyard.

Even when there is no hot water in the Swartz showers or heat in the rooms on a freezing cold night, I am sure it is much more comfortable than sleeping fully clothed, next to a rifle in the sand, weary of potential attacks during the night. As much as I hate an exaggerated tuition hike, it is safe to say that I would rather be paying that than paying with something far more valuable.

There is an inscription in the granite walls of the Korean War Veterans Memorial in Washington D.C., meant to serve as a reminder of the costs of liberty: "Freedom is not free." This is a concept of which too many people, Americans and Bucknellians alike, have lost sight. We live the way we do because the generations before us put their lives on the line, some paying the ultimate price, to secure the well being of future Americans.

Death is an inevitable consequence of battle, and the war in Iraq is no exception. To put it in perspective, the number of American casualties in Iraq to date is less than one fifth of the number of total deaths as a result of Sept. 11 attacks. Of course, this is no comfort to the friends and family of the fallen; however, nobody is forced to be a soldier. When people registered for the armed forces, they accepted the potential consequences—including death. They accepted the responsibility of defending our nation and its people from evil and the honor of delivering the freedom we forgot to those who have never known it.

Rather than condemn our leaders and protest our military involvement in Iraq and other foreign countries, try supporting the people who are working, fighting and dying so that you have the right to express that opinion. Instead of dishonoring those who died in the line of duty by using their deaths to attack the cause they fought for, celebrate their lives and the lives they have given you.

Let your voice be heard!

Write for Opinions.

E-mail
ahanlon@

The student was determined to be drunk in part based upon the use of her arms to balance herself. Using arms for balance! What a lush!

Stand" and an observation of the eyes. In the officer's incident report, he states that the student was "using her arms to balance." In case you have never had any experience balancing your body, whether while walking, standing on one leg or floating in a swimming pool, it is actually a common characteristic of human beings to use arms to balance.

Shockingly, even sober humans balance using their arms. It can be witnessed literally every day by observing people doing such things as walking up stairs and stretching in the gym. Still, the student was determined to be drunk in part based upon the use of her arms to balance herself. Using arms for balance! What a lush!

The officer reported that the student "showed nystagmus distinct at maximum deviation in both eyes and she had nystagmus

FEATURES

Working the runway
with student designsBY ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

With each passing decade, society is bombarded with a wide array of fashion trends and style options. The '80s brought us spandex leggings, tapered jeans and a vast selection of Day-Glo colors from which to choose. The early '90s were full of big bands, grungy-torn shirts and outlandish accessories. Each of these progressive trends is the manifestation of someone's creative genius, such as the creative genius of the designers to be featured tomorrow at the University's Fashion Show in Smith Quad.

All fashions modeled at the show are from student designs, and more than 50 anonymous designs were submitted and considered for the runway. Of those submitted, 16 were selected and produced, and will be featured in the show. These designs include women's and men's clothing and accessories.

"The premise of the show is to showcase the talent of Bucknell students, not only in design, but also in production and management," said Kelsey Cook '05, executive officer of Culture Couture and co-coordinator of the show.

Designers, after having their pieces chosen for the show, were given the option of selecting their own models. Many chose close friends, while a few recruited by surprising students they spotted walking the campus.

"We were not looking for a specific

"The premise of the show is to showcase the talent of Bucknell students, not only in design, but also in production and management."

—Kelsey Cook '05, executive officer of Culture Couture and co-coordinator of the show

'look.' The models are all very beautiful, but not necessarily like stereotypical fashion models," Cook said.

The University students selected to model have been working hard in recent weeks to prepare for the show. Isidora Nikolic '04, head of the Model Committee, has been diligently instructing them in everything they need to know about walking the walk.

"I have a design in the show and I have been working with models for couple of weeks. It was awesome to work with so many dedicated people and see everything come together," Nikolic said.

Although submissions for this year's show are no longer being accepted, Cook and others hope that interest will be spurred among other students with a passion for creative design.

Culture Couture is not the only organization to hold fashion shows on campus, and it hopes that in continuing this tradition, it will encourage camera-shy designers to expose their creations in their or other fashion shows in the future.

In addition to the designs on display, Culture Couture has recruited Flow Down Street Six, a band composed of University students, to kick off the show.

"I think they're a great group and have potential for wide-appeal," Cook said.

Whether you are interested in checking out the fashion design or musical talents of fellow University students, the Culture Couture fashion show tomorrow at 5 p.m. will provide all the entertainment you need. Check it out—maybe you'll even pick up some new ideas for your wardrobe.

STEP gives community college students a chance at the four-year experienceBY MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

Few people on campus have heard of the Student Transfer Enrichment Program. Through the program, students at the Community College of Philadelphia can take classes at the University over the summer. If they do well, they are invited to permanently enroll in the University.

"The goal of the program is to have students consider continuing their education beyond an associate's degree, which they would have received at the CCP, by providing them the residential academic experience which students experience at Bucknell," said Mary Wyeth, a University writing and teaching consultant and program alumna. Wyeth said another goal of STEP is to encourage students to transfer to Bucknell and by doing so, enhance the diversity of Bucknell's student body.

Between 12 and 17 CCP students are chosen to participate in the six-week summer semester at the University. According to Wyeth, these students are also invited to live on campus to experience a residential atmosphere, something which they do not have at their school.

The applicants are selected for STEP by the University's administration and faculty, as well as by faculty members from the CCP. Students must first qualify to apply by maintaining a GPA of 3.0 at the CCP and by having completed English I and English II.

The 3.0 minimum GPA requirement encourages many students at the CCP to keep up their GPAs so that they can apply to the program.

Since the program's beginning in 1990, more than 250 students have completed the program, and 40-50 have enrolled at the University and other four-year schools. The program is modeled after a similar program at Vassar College. The program was implemented after the University received a generous grant from the Knight Foundation in 1989. In recent years, the program's size has been reduced to about ten students per summer due to University budget constraints.

Joel Wade, current director of the program and chair of the psychology department, said the success rates are what have made STEP more and more popular with CCP every year. He said many participants have continued their higher education or attained employment after graduating from Bucknell, and only two STEP transfer students have failed to earn a Bucknell degree.

Wade also said that other students who were part of the program but did not transfer to the University have had their lives changed and that education becomes "a focus for them as a way to improve their lot in life."

The STEP program enables students from the Community College of Philadelphia to enroll in summer classes and live on campus. Successful students are later invited to apply to the University to earn bachelor's degrees.

FEATURES

Transferring—a personal choice

Students realize it is never too late to change their academic and social paths

BY LAUREN DAVIS
Writer

Think back to your senior year in high school, when you were faced with the most daunting task every college-bound student can imagine: selecting the institution where you will spend the next four, crucial years of your life. If you are reading this paper, then it is likely that your decision brought you to Bucknell.

Such was the case for Leigh Pratt '07, who recently transferred to Bucknell from Lafayette College. Conversely, Tara Fry '06 has decided to rethink her decision, and will transfer to the University of Miami in the fall. Although both women hold different perspectives on our university, both agree that deciding to transfer was the best move for them.

Pratt had enrolled in Lafayette College at the beginning of this academic year and played for the tennis team.

"The campus just wasn't the right feel for me, and the tennis team wasn't the right level and what I expected it to be," Pratt said.

Her dissatisfaction with the environment was what prompted Pratt to begin the transfer process. Pratt described repeating the application process she had gone through in high school as stressful.

"I never thought I'd be filling out more college apps and going through the process again, but it was more than worth it," Pratt said.

Though she was worried

"I never thought I'd be filling out more college apps and going through the process again, but it was more than worth it."

—Leigh Pratt '07

the transition into another college setting during the year would be difficult, Pratt knew she would be much happier at the University.

"People have been so nice here, and being a part of the tennis team helped," Pratt said.

As she nears the end of her first semester here, Pratt is certain that she could not have made a better decision.

"There isn't a single thing I liked better at Lafayette," Pratt said.

Fry's story is the reverse of Pratt's. Fry visited Bucknell during her senior year as a field hockey recruit and decided after meeting the team and viewing campus that the University was right for her.

Courtesy of Dana Pratt

Leigh Pratt '07 (right) began her college career at Lafayette College, but decided after a semester it was not the place for her.

"I thought Bucknell was really pretty and had a good reputation academically," Fry said.

As time passed, Fry, who is from a suburban Boston community, realized that Bucknell's rural setting was difficult to adjust to.

"I'm looking forward to not being in the 'bubble' setting. I feel like here I am not able to stay current on what's happening in the world," Fry said.

Fry recently visited University of Miami and described the student center as having big-screen televisions with various news fashion industry, Fry thinks that being in the urban location of Miami will allow her to acquire a more hands-on experience for her interests. She said she was pleasantly surprised by the larger, more modern campus at Miami, with its palm trees and water areas with sunbathing manatees. The environment was a stark contrast to the University's traditional brick buildings, oak trees and overwhelming squirrel population, and Fry said the different opportunities and environment of Florida were appealing to her.

Fry is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta, a sorority that is not at the University of Miami.

"I don't feel like I won't have a social life though, because there is less of a focus on Greek life as there is here at Bucknell and more of a focus on sports," Fry said.

Although Fry said she is nervous to make such a drastic change in the middle of her education, and is sad to be leaving many friends behind at the University, she said she believes that this is the right decision and is excited to make the trek south next fall.

Transferring, whether to or from the University, is a tough decision, but one that students make with their best interests in mind.

"I'm looking forward to not being in the 'bubble' setting. I feel like here I am not able to stay current on what's happening in the world."

—Tara Fry '06

Courtesy of Tara Fry

Tara Fry '06 has spent two years at the University, and although she said she has enjoyed her time here, she said she will be happier at the University of Miami.

Now Hiring...
ALDI INC.

- ✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
- ✓ Flexible AM hours
- ✓ $9.51 an hour wage

★ Please fill out applications at the store

ALDI INC.

110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

35' Bungee Run
Sumo Wrestling
Dunk Tank
EVERYTHING
For Your Next Celebration!
...Dunk Tank, Popcorn Machine, Snow Cone Machine, Pig Roasters, Grills (Charcoal/Propane)
Wide Variety of Inflatables
• Sumo Wrestling
• Rock Climbing Wall
• Obstacle Course
• Bungee Run
• 40' Obstacle Course
TENTS
TABLES
CHAIRS
WE HAVE THE TENT FOR YOU!
WEST BRANCH
RENT-ALL
Sales • Rentals • Repairs
441 N. 10th St., Lewisburg (behind Penn State Inn Off Rt. 15) • (570) 523-6221

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo
and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
~State of the Art Body Jewelry~

-Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

524-9000

Sunday-Thursday 11 am - 1 am
Friday & Saturday 11 am - 2 am

Student Special:

Large One topping Pizza $7.99
3 Medium One topping Pizzas $13.99

Party Deal:
5 or More Large Pizzas
$6 each

Wing Deal:
Medium Pizza and 10 Wings/Kickers
$10.99

Another romantic edition brought to you by ...

Ms.

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I brought my boyfriend home with me for Easter weekend to meet my family. I think he's great, but my parents weren't too impressed by him. I don't get it! He seems like a good catch to me. What should I do about this? It is really important for my parents to like the person I am dating, but I don't want to break up with my guy either. What should I do?

—Totally Confused

Dear 'Totally Confused,'

At the moment, I would say that your best option is to have a serious talk with your parents in person or over the phone. It is important to talk to them about this weekend in order to get to the bottom of this problem.

Ask them why they are having misgivings about him. Does he remind them of someone that they do not like? Did he offend them in some way? Do they object to something that he said or did to you in their presence? Perhaps their misgivings are not that serious, and you can soothe their nerves and concerns by telling them about all of the wonderful things that you love about your guy.

If the talk seemed successful, I would try to arrange another meeting. Try to make this second meeting a situation in which there is a little less pressure than such a big family holiday as Easter. Arrange to have your parents meet you for dinner at a casual restaurant, where everyone can sit down, talk and relax. Perhaps your guy will be able to show your parents his true self; the self you seem to love so much.

If your parents still do not like him after this, then I think you need to do some serious thinking. Ask yourself how important your parents' approval is to you in this situation. If you think your parents may mellow with time and grow to like your boyfriend more, then you may want to hold on to the relationship. You are going to have to weigh the pros and cons.

Also, remember that you are an adult now. While I am not telling you to completely disregard your parents' opinion, I do think you need to keep in mind that not everything you do in your life is going to be exactly the way your parents want it. They may not like every decision you make or every guy you date, and that is OK. You need to find a happy medium in which you value and consider your parents' opinions, but you can also listen to your own wants, needs and desires and know what you need to do in order to make yourself happy.

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!

What is the worst compliment you have ever received?

A haiku coupon:

Writing for Features will rock your world. Just contact amaliken@

Look Your Best With A Tan

From
TANNING WORLD

216 St. John Street, Lewisburg
Next to Fisher's Meats

Open 24 Hours

Free Membership

Lowest Prices

Speed System Beds with NEW Lamps
New 2004 StarPower 548 Bed

Call 523-7254 or tanningworld@hotmail.com

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570)524-9839

FEATURES

Classroom learning meets volunteer work

University Service Learning program gives students the opportunity to make an impact in the community

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

Going to class is an obligatory part of being a college student, but some University students do not realize it is that a lot can be done beyond the classroom to enhance a their education. One of the best ways to do this is to get involved at a local organization as a volunteer. The University Service Learning program encourages students to do this by creating classes that pairs volunteer work with classroom learning.

"The program serves to link teachers and learners to social service agencies or organizations with identified needs. Over 100 organizations in the central Susquehanna Valley have requested student assistance so far," according to the program's Web site.

Service learning gives students the opportunity to extend their arms beyond the classroom and make a difference in the local community. It has become increasingly successful at the University since its conception in 2002 and is growing larger every day.

One of the most gratifying aspects of the program for students is being able to see the fruits of their labor firsthand. This is something to which students involved with the service learning-affiliated Head Start programs can attest. These men and women, whether members of Greek organizations, sporting teams or are simply individuals driven to make a difference, give up hours of their time to local children every week.

"This semester we're sending Bucknell volunteers to three Head Start classrooms: Lewisburg, Milton and Sunbury. There are a total of 33 volunteers on a weekly basis, who this semester have given over 400 hours of their time," intern for the Service Learning office Liz Manning '05 said.

University students help outside of the Head Start classroom as well, in such programs as "Parents' Nights," during which students watch young children while parents receive training and meet with guidance counselors.

Though many of the students involved with service learning have volunteered previously in other capacities, most find the Head Start program particularly gratifying.

"The students at Head Start are

Photos courtesy of Kristine Kengor

Liz Manning '05 (right) and Rachael Garrison '05 (left) have both found their time with the Head Start program to be a rewarding addition to their academic careers.

so happy and excited when college kids visit their classrooms and pay attention to them," Manning said. "All they really want is someone to be involved with what they are doing. The kids are always very affectionate and love to sit on my lap to read or play. It's great to see their faces light up when I get there."

"They might be too young to really understand how exactly you're helping them, but you get the feeling they appreciate having all of these adults around who care about them and who are helping them to learn."

—Kristen Karas '04

Head Start is not an option only for students who have intentions of working directly with children. A political science and economics double major, Kristen Karas '04 has found Head Start to be a great way to spend her extra time while fulfilling a course requirement of interning for the local government or a non-profit organization.

"They might be too young to really understand how exactly you're helping them, but you get the feeling they appreciate having all of these adults around who care about them and who are helping them to learn," Karas said.

For those at the University who think something is missing from their education and would like the opportunity to give more to the community, the Service Learning office is always eager to find new volunteers. There are many options beyond the Head Start program, and as current volunteers will tell you, it is certainly worth the time.

"One hour a week may not be a big sacrifice to you, but to the kids you're spending time with, it really does make a difference," Manning said.

For information regarding the Head Start program or service learning, contact Manning at amanning@bucknell.edu.

T&D's Cats—lions and tigers and bears, oh my!

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

T&D's Cats of the World is a safe haven for them all, providing restful home for mistreated and abused animals and making them accessible to the public for educational purposes.

"T&D's is a great, different experience. You can hear the lions roaring in the parking lot," Sarah Gudenkauf '04 said. "As soon as you go into the outside facility, it is like a step outside of Central Pa. into someplace new and exotic—complete with lions, tigers and bears."

Owner Terry Mattive opens his heart and business to the public during T&D's season, which runs from May to September.

"When you come here, you

Enjoyment and education were the motives to open the refuge to the public in the first place. Most of the animals have been mistreated or abused by humans in the past, so Mattive and his family limit their current exposure to humans to just 40 days a year. In addition, a visit to the refuge can secure credibility for the refuge in the eyes of anyone looking to donate time or money to their cause.

Mative encourages visitors not only to visit, but to take their time to enjoy and learn about the animals under the care of the refuge.

"None of the animals we have here are domestic animals," Mattive said. "They should not be put in the hands of people, even in some states where it is legal to own exot-

The Mattive family will not turn down an animal from their care, or buy, sell or give away the animals once they are there, which is what Mattive calls the sign of a true refuge.

Rowdy residents range in size from prairie dogs to Siberian tigers, and includes Sheena, the reserve's first tiger; Bud the black bear; Simba, an African lion from the circus; and Telayna, a female Bengal tiger who brought a surprise present with her.

"She had only been here two months when I was giving a tour to some first graders," Mattive said of Telayna. "And she kept trying to get my attention. I didn't think anything of it and just went into her cage. I had never been in before. She kept nuzzling at her water dish, and I flipped it over and there was a baby tiger under the bowl."

Each animal has a story, and Mattive is eager to share these tales. Many of the animals are almost euthanized or taken to shooting ranges before finding a safe home at T&D's.

To hear their animal tales, visit T&D's Cats in Penns Creek, Pa., on weekends from May to September for an admission fee of $6. For more information, visit its Web site at www.tdscats.com.

Photos courtesy of www.tdscats.com

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

April 16, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 10

Arts & Entertainment:

John McPherson '83, creator of the cartoon "Close to Home," will visit the University tomorrow.

See page B8

Track sets six facility records

Six marks fall Saturday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium

Laura Nagy '04 gets ready to pass a Colgate runner in the 800-meter run race. Six facility records were set during the meet this weekend. Nagy took fifth in this event and set a personal record.

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Bucknell's Bison Outdoor Classic is quietly turning into a top-notch track meet. This year was no exception as six facility records fell, and countless athletes set personal bests Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

Maria Garcia '04 broke another school record in the hammer throw, while Noel Powell '04 triumphed with wins in the 100-meter dash, the 200 and the 4x100 relay, hitting the 100m standard in the latter two.

The Bison started off strong at the Distance Carnival on Friday evening, as Jen Marsh '05 ran a personal best, taking second in a hot 1,500. In first, setting a facility record, was Alison Laske of the University of Buffalo. With help from the perfect weather, more records were broken as the night progressed. Matt Seymour of American University and Bruce Hyde running untied track records in the 5,000-meter run and 10,000, respectively.

Hyde, who is taking a year off from Cornell, is the son of a 1975 University alumnus who once held Bucknell's school record for the six-mile run.

"The results at the Distance Carnival illustrate what a competitive meet this has become," Brandon Kisser '04 said after competing in the 5,000m. "The winners of the 5k and 10k helped set the pace for a lot of fast times."

The action continued Saturday as three more facility records fell. Buffalo's 4x100 team, Laura Olson of Buffalo in the pole vault and Colgate and Towson at home, the weight throw all put on dominating performances.

Laura Schaffer '04 took Garcia's lead and set personal bests in the discus, hammer and shot put. Schaffer's throw in the discus not only won, but was also only 2.0 cm from qualifying for the ECAC meet.

Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased with the weekend's outcome.

"I really thought it was a great meet, as it met all the needs for our own athletes, and it gave me a chance to evaluate everyone as we approach Patriot Leagues," Donner said. "We have a few key athletes who are struggling a bit, and hopefully as we decrease some of the training load, they will be ready to compete at the highest level."

Monique Boley '05 passed her evaluation in the 400, placing second and just one hundredth of a second in front of teammate Amy Calvo '05.

"While [Calvo] was over in Spain this fall, I didn't feel I was running well at all," Boley said. "Now she's back, and we're both in very good shape. I couldn't have done that without her around."

Other Bison with solid performances included Tom Prochilo '04 and Koran Evans '06 in the men's 800; Marsh, Jenny Stevens '07 and Laura Nagy '05 in the women's 800; Jeff Arek '04 in the pole vault; Justin Crane '04 in the 4x400; Mike Mellas '05 in the decathlon; and Danielle Todman '06 in the heptathlon.

"We had so many outstanding performances after the four-game sweep, Bucknell dropped to 7-17 overall and 3-9 in the Patriot League. Bucknell has now dropped 10 in a row after a four-game winning streak. Lehigh improved to 29-11-2 on the season, taking first place in the conference with a sparkling 10-2 record.

Siena hosted the Orange and Blue for a non-conference double-header yesterday at 3 p.m., after press time. Bucknell will return to Patriot League action this weekend with doubleheaders on tomorrow and Sunday at home against Army. Both two-game sets will start at 1 p.m.

Lehigh sweeps softball

By JOSH HERWITT
Sports Editor

After suffering sweeps by Colgate and Towson at home, the Bucknell softball team traveled to Lehigh last weekend in hopes of getting back on track, but dropped all four games in the series.

The offense combined for only five runs in the series while being shut out in the final game.

On Saturday, the Bison recorded four hits in two games, falling to the Mountain Hawks by scores of 3-1 and 4-0.

In the first game of the day, Bucknell reached base on three hits, but that amounted to only one run. Trailing 3-0 with their three outs of the game, the Orange and Blue put one on the scoreboard in the top of the seventh inning with a homerun from catcher Angela Stackhouse '04.

Stackhouse '04 blasted her fourth homerun of the season. In the third inning, Lehigh scored all three of its runs in the third inning. Bucknell pitcher Kelli Haskins '05 started off the inning well, but Lehigh found some holes in the field, hitting four singles and drawing a walk with the next five batters.

Emily Ling, who allowed just one hit in the first five innings of play, dominated the Bison with 13 strikeouts and no walks. Haskins gave up six hits over six innings, while striking out two.

In game two, Lehigh pitcher Kate Arico pitched a dominating one-hitter to leave the Bison scoreless.

She struck out three and issued no walks in the game, facing only one batter over the minimum with her one-hit game.

Stackhouse, once again, found a way to break up the no-hitter in the fourth inning with two outs.

On Friday, Stackhouse proved to be the only offense for the Bison. She went 4-5 on the day, but Bucknell still dropped both games in the doubleheader, 2-1 and 6-3.

In game one, the Bison and Mountain Hawks crossed the plate in the first inning, but that was the only offense of the game.

The Mountain Hawks came back in the bottom half of the inning when Mary Wieder hit a two-out double to score Shana Treon. Lauren Haney followed up with an RBI single to give Lehigh the lead at 2-1.

The remainder of the game was a struggle for both offenses, leaving Lehigh victorious in a 2-1 pitchers' duel. Ling pitched a complete game, striking out eight and allowing six hits.

Haskins pitched a solid game, but earned the loss anyway after giving up seven hits and striking out one.

Freshman pitcher Heather Hamasaki pitched well for Lehigh, striking out 14 Bison hitters and allowing just five hits in all seven innings.

After the four-game sweep, Bucknell dropped to 7-17 overall and 3-9 in the Patriot League. Bucknell has now dropped 10 in a row after a four-game winning streak. Lehigh improved to 29-11-2 on the season, taking first place in the conference with a sparkling 10-2 record.

Siena hosted the Orange and Blue for a non-conference double-header yesterday at 3 p.m., after press time. Bucknell will return to Patriot League action this weekend with doubleheaders on tomorrow and Sunday at home against Army. Both two-game sets will start at 1 p.m.

See TRACK, page B2

Baseball falls to Army in four-game weekend sweep

Bison slip to five games behind Black Knights in Patriot League standings, still looking ahead to postseason

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell baseball team entered the weekend one game behind Army in the Patriot League standings but now finds itself in a five-game hole after falling to a four-game sweep at the hands of the Black Knights.

The Bison opened the series with a 6-4 loss Friday, lost a 6-3 heartbreaker in the nightcap and then struggled to 12-4 and 8-4 defeats on Saturday, dropping their league record to an even 6-6.

The team still hangs on to the second place slot in the league standings, keeping postseason hopes healthy with two series left to play, but would need extenuating circumstances to catch the 11-1 Black Knights for the regular season title and earn the right to host the championship tournament.

Despite the disappointment against Army, Head Coach Gene Depew does not feel discouraged about the team's ability to bounce back during the next few weeks.

"This is too good a team to let one weekend define the season," Depew said. "The weekend was somewhat of an aberration for the Bison, as they struggled at times in all aspects of the game."

The series began April 9 with rare ineffectiveness from both the Bison offense and starting pitcher Matt Daley '04, as the hitters picked up only four hits in the contest and Daley surrendered six earned runs on 11 hits.

The Bison started off the game on a bright note as Brian Day '04 led off the second inning with his third home run of the season, a solo shot that gave the team a 1-0 lead.

The lead was quickly erased in the bottom of the stanza, as the Black Knights strung together five consecutive hits with two outs in the frame, plating four runs before the inning was terminated.

The Bison struck back with a three-run third to knot the score at 4-4 when Phil Bunting '05 led off the inning with a single, Ben Stoll '04 followed with a double and an error allowed them both to score. Sam Moss '04 added the third run of the inning when he advanced to third on a wild pitch and then scored on another error.

Daley ran into more trouble in the bottom of the third, but determinedly worked his way out of a bases-loaded, no-out situation without allowing Army to capitalize on any of the baserunners.

Both teams remained offensively subdued until the bottom of the sixth inning, when Army's Nolan Cork cranked out his second home run of the day and the next three batters reached safely. Jake Moss '06 took over for Daley to record the final three outs, but the Black Knights were able to pick up one more run as Justin Long stole home during a rundown.

Bucknell was unable to muster a rally in the seventh, leaving the final score at 6-4.

Daley was the pitcher of record with his five innings of work, taking his first loss of the year.

Pitching Coach R.J. Grant noted that Daley did not have his usual arsenal of pitches at his disposal for the game.

"Matt battled without his best stuff all day," Grant said. "His fastball was missing some pop, and his curveball and slider benefited together a bit much."

The second game of the series featured a lower-scoring scuffle between the two teams for most of the game.

The Bison benefited from a fine performance from starter Kevin Miller '04, who held the Black Knights hitless until the sixth inning and did not allow an earned run in his eight innings of work.

The Bison were in command throughout most of the contest, beginning when Pete Wolf '04 scored from second on an error by Army's shortstop to give the Bison a 1-0 lead.

As Miller stymied the Black Knights' hitters, the Bison increased the lead to a three-run cushion in the top of the sixth. Kyle Walter '06 knocked a single to right field. Day was hit by a pitch for the 10th time this season and Brian Hirschberg '04 loaded up the bags with an infield single before Chris Mahony '04 drilled a two-RBI single up the middle to score Walter and Day.

Army grabbed a run in the bottom of the inning, but the Bison held the upper hand until the bottom of the ninth.

After Miller walked the lead man, Jake Moss took over and struck out the first batter he faced but saw the lead decrease to 3-2 when a botched double play allowed Jeremy Stache to score.

The Bison came painfully close to terminating the rally when Moss struck out Matt Dinga, but the leftfielder reached safely as the wild third strike evaded catcher Austin Barrett '05.

The game then came to a heartbreaking end for the Bison when Army's Schuyler Williamson blasted a walkoff grand slam over the leftfield fence to give the Black Knights the 6-3 win.

"I went out to talk to Jake and he felt confident in his ability to get Williamson out, as he did in his previous at bat," Grant said. "Unfortunately, Jake fell behind 1-0 and [Williamson] was looking dead red and got a hold of it."

Depew was disappointed in the turn of events in the final inning.

"We had game two on Friday won but

See BASEBALL, page B4

Brian Day '05 pursues a foul popup into the stands during the first game of the series at West Point as the ball is intercepted by a spectator. Day hit his third home run of the season earlier in the game, knocking a solo shot out to left to lead off the second inning, but the Bison ended up with a 6-4 loss in the opener against the Black Knights.

Cecily Cairns—The Bucknellian

Sports

Lafayette win gives lacrosse to fourth place

Bison improve to 3-2 in the Patriot League after 19-5 route on Leopards and Cara '05 tallies 11 points

By BETSY HARNER
Writer

Bucknell easily defeated fellow Patriot League contender Lafayette on Saturday with a 19-5 victory. The Bison were unstoppable offensively and defensively with outstanding play on both sides of the field. Chris Cara '05, the nation's leading scorer, tallied a school-record tying 11 points (six goals and five assists). A true team player, Cara knows that Saturday's win was far from a one-man show.

"Scoring records don't mean that much to me. I'm just glad our team went into the game knowing what we had to get done, and we did just that," Cara said.

Pat Christensen '05 was able to score five times for the Bison, and Wes Fatchet '04 added two more goals and one assist.

Defensively, goalie Matt Baran '06 recorded six saves during his three quarters of play, not allowing Lafayette to score for more than 10 minutes of the first. Backup goalie Mark Davis '07 made two saves and allowed only one goal during the final 15 minutes of the game.

The Bison dominated Lafayette for the entire game, quickly grabbing a 6-1 lead after the first quarter of play.

"We were able to get ahead of them early by moving the ball well and finding the open man. Eventually everything was opening up and we were able to get to the goal quite easily," Cara said.

T.J. Wallace '05 scored his first career goal, and eight other Bucknell players scored, proving the Bison's ability to spread the ball around and play as a team.

Saturday's victory moves Bucknell to 5-5 overall and 3-2 in the Patriot League. The Bison are tied with Colgate for fourth place in the league, and this win has energized them as they prepare for tonight's game against nationally ninth-ranked Army. The Bison would like nothing more than to beat the defending Patriot League champions.

"This Friday is the most important game of the year, and our team must be ready to play. Army is ranked ninth in the country now, and I feel that we will be able to upset them, giving us some momentum heading into the Patriot League tournament," Cara said.

Brian Gargan '07 dodges his opponent while travelling down the field with the ball. The Bison dominated Lafayette this weekend for a 19-5 victory and are excited to take on Army today. Their record is now 5-5 overall and 3-2 in the Patriot League.

Bucknell and Army will face off on tonight at 7 p.m. in the Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

Garcia '04 sets new school record throughout the entire team. I really think we are starting to get in good position for the league meet," Boley said.

TRACK from page B1

Donner was positive about the women. "On the women's side, I would have to say that we are as balanced as anybody," Donner said. "We really do not have a weak area."

Donner said he has faith in the men's potential to improve.

"On the men's side, we do not have too many field event guys, so the ones we have are going to have to produce, and I am confident that they will. They are really improving nicely. Since the league is so strong in the distance events, we need some of our distance guys to really step it up the next two weeks. As we decrease the training volume, I am confident that they will rise to the occasion," Donner said.

Risser said that the team needs to keep pushing itself.

"We can't get complacent with where we're at right now. To take it to the next level, we need to continue to work hard in training and not be afraid to put it on the line during meets," Risser said.

This weekend, the men host Rhode Island, Robert Morris, Duquesne and Lock Haven. The women host Robert Morris, Duquesne, Lock Haven and Colgate.

"This weekend is our first scored meet, so we all are going to be ready to win this meet," Boley said. "This should be a really good weekend to get the team glued together and get some awesome marks before league."

According to Donner, the men's fiercest competition will come from Rhode Island, which tied Bucknell last year and beat them at indoors this year handily.

"We [the men] will have our hands full; however, we are ready for the challenge. On the women's side, Duquesne has the most balance of this group, and they are much improved since we saw them last in January. I expect a close meet."

Kevin Brown '07 clears the bar during the pole vault Saturday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium during the Bison Classic.

Women's water polo takes on U.S. National Team

By COURKINEY LUZZI
Contributing Writer

The women's water polo team suffered a 19-2 loss after hosting and competing against the U.S. Women's National Team Saturday night.

Fans, many of whom drove for hours to see the game, packed the stands of Kinney Natatorium.

"The crowd was also nothing like I'd ever seen before," goalie Mandy Bynum '07 said. "That natatorium can get pretty packed, but I don't even think I've seen it like that before, and the noise that was made when we scored or made a save [made it feel like] we had just won the game."

The Bison's defeat was Team USA's sixth straight victory on its 2004 Collegiate Tour. Bucknell was the halfway mark for the 13-game series, which includes some of the nation's top college programs. The U.S. team is traveling to the Midwest and East Coast before returning to California for the final five games of the tour.

"The game this past Friday was just an amazing experience," Bynum said. "I felt so privileged to play in this game with these world class athletes, and when I ever did even make a small save in the cage, it was the most exciting feeling. Even though we lost 19-2, I think that none of us have ever played that hard in our lives."

The scoring began early in the first quarter, with Team USA scoring six goals. By the end of the second quarter, the Bison were behind 8-0.

Jessica Trimis '07 earned a four-meter penalty shot at the 5:38 mark of the fourth quarter. Kelly Hofstetter '04 put the Bison on the board with their first goal of the game, and Katie Hartigan '05 scored with 4:14 left in the game, making the score 17-2. Bynum played defensively in goal, stopping several of USA's attempts to score.

"We started the game looking very intimidated to be playing the national team; however, by the second half, I could start to see the team responding to the level and stepping up our game particularly on the defensive end," said John Zeigler, head men's and women's water polo coach. After the game, the Orange and Blue had an opportunity to meet Team USA over dinner.

"You just can't get any better insofar as exposing the team to the very top in competition," Zeigler said.

This weekend, the Bison will participate in the Southern Championship before moving on to the Eastern Championship next weekend.

Women's lacrosse suffers loss to Colgate

By KEELEY SIDOW
Sports Editor

The women's lacrosse team took on Colgate Saturday in Lewisburg. Despite a career-high five goals from Laura Nuss '04, the Bison were unable to outplay the Raiders and lost 17-9.

Colgate was able to capture the first goal of the game, but the Bison answered with three straight goals.

Andrea Paraud '05 scored off of a feed from Emily Burman '06, following two goals from Nuss to get the Orange and Blue started. The Raiders then managed to get three straight goals; retaking the lead, 4-3.

Meredith Wright '04 scored one for the Bison with 8:16 remaining in the first half, to tie the game.

Before the end of the half, another shot from the Raiders put them ahead.

At the close of the first half, Colgate was leading by only one goal with a score of 4-5. Colgate proceeded to dominate the second half. It took Colgate only 3:35 to score four goals early in the second half.

Katie Edge '07 was able to score, with an assist from Nuss, to break up the stretch of Colgate goals, but the Orange and Blue were unable to put an end to their opponent's dominance.

In the next 12 minutes of play, the Raiders managed to score another four goals, increasing their lead 13-5. The Bison began to make a comeback. See WLAX, page B5

Sports Ops

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

An irreplaceable caddy

He came back to bestride his companion through the remainder of the century, as Watson moved on to the senior tour.

In the late months of 2002, the caddy began to notice cramps and spasms in his hand. Within weeks he was diagnosed with Balbar ALS. Suddenly, he was there on the end of the phone at the Mayo Clinic, telling his pal that his life was running out of strokes.

A year ago, he was still there for Watson. Edwards was there when his speech mimicked an edge of inebriation,

It's hard, sometimes, for athletes and the people who share their lives to understand mortality. As much as they can learn from winning and losing, it's hard to understand abject loss, real loss.

So when for the first time in 30 years, Edwards couldn't be there for Watson, it was left to the golfer to be the courageous one. If the sport were scripted on the premises of a preordained justice, he would have won one for the Gipper, peeled out a shining round like his 2003 U.S. Open, something bitter-sweet like that.

Bruce Edwards caddy for Tom Watson during the 2003 U.S. Open. Edwards carried Watson's bag from 1973 until last year, when the caddy was diagnosed with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis. Edwards died of the disease April 8.

When his strength was irreversibly falling away, when he had to pop 160 pills per day.

He was there, for one last little bit of glory, during last year's U.S. Open when his 53-year-old compadre ripped off a scorching opening round of 65.

He was there to caddy his last event in November, and after that he was there through phone calls, through e-mails, in any capacity he could manage despite his failing body.

He handled the odd sort of fame that the fatal disease brought him with nobility, accepting sympathy, offering his usual sagacious wisdom, signing autographs, smiling the whole time. He knew that people needed him to be courageous, maybe as much as he needed to be courageous for himself.

Courage, after all, couldn't be so much as nudge the brakes on that disease's relentless charge.

Instead, he shot the kind of round you'd expect from a guy who'd just lost his best pal.

He'll have a new caddy to haul his gear—maybe a good one—but in a way, he'll be carrying his own bags from now on.

He lost, on Thursday, the long-haired caddy he picked up 31 years ago on a whim in St. Louis. He lost a great assistant and a greater friend.

Of course, he still has the yardage book. He still has three decades of memories. And maybe in some ways, Edwards will still be on the bag for Watson. Maybe even last weekend, even during that lukewarm 76.

Maybe the fact that Edwards died with two hours to spare before his best friend opened at Augusta in his favorite major tournament was no coincidence.

After all, never was like Bruce Edwards to miss a tee time.

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

By JOE HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

A final halt for General Palmer

You could tell he was tired. Fifty years was a long time for this general.

The hair was gray, the feet hurt and the back ached. He couldn't cruise around the fairways in his private jet anymore. A cigarette from his younger days no longer dangled from his lips.

But he was still there.

His shirt out. A glove peeking out of his back pocket. His same grimace after missing a put for par or slicing a drive far right.

Still competing. Still charging for the hole. Never playing it safe.

A smile slowly emerged as he walked up 18 for the last time at Augusta National Golf Club. His army was marching there behind him, trampling trees and saying "Go for it Arnie" as they always had.

After 150 rounds at the Masters, Arnold Palmer, 70, was calling it quits.

"I'm not going to make a big, long speech today. I'm through. I've had it. I'm done. Cooked. Washed up. Finished. Whatever you want to say," Palmer said shortly after walking up the 18th hole to three prolonged standing ovations, according to ESPN.com.

The Masters has been always his home away from home. A place such rich tradition has left everlasting memories for so many of us.

So for Palmer, leaving Augusta might be harder than giving up golf all together.

"Augusta and this golf tournament has been about [as much] a part of my life as anything other than my family," Palmer said, according to ESPN.com. "I don't think I could ever separate myself from this club and this tournament. I may not be present, I may not be here, but I'll still be a part of what happens here, only because I want to be."

He was the greatest long putter. He would never putt on the same side he started—his putts were either right in or 5 feet past the hole. He attacked the game like a lion bursting out of its circus cage. He never learned how to play commercial golf.

He threw away money. He threw away tournaments.

After blowing a seven-shot lead with nine holes to play in the 1966 U.S. Open, Palmer said he never would have changed a thing.

"Nah," said Palmer, according to the Los Angeles Times. "I had a 7-shot lead. I was trying to make it 11. I did it my way."

He hasn't stopped doing things his way either. Call it stubborn, it was just Palmer at his best.

Palmer won 62 tournaments and seven majors in his 50 years on the PGA and senior tours, including one U.S. Open title and four green jackets.

But Palmer hasn't won a tournament in over 30 years. He hasn't won a major in over 40.

Still today, he remains as one of golf's most exciting players to watch. No one has ever known what it is about Palmer.

For 40 years, he has been in the spotlight of sport's biggest drama. He put golf on as a televised sport.

Palmer was golf's biggest movie star. If he didn't play, people didn't watch. If he didn't win, no one cared who did.

Golf fans won't remember his pair of 84s Friday April 9 that left him missing the cut in his 50th Masters. Only the statisticians will. This last go-around was just for kicks.

"The fact is that one of the things I wanted to do was what I did today," Palmer said, according to ESPN.com, "and that was finish 50 years at Augusta."

So as we say goodbye to one legend, Palmer, we also welcome golf's next great, Phil Mickelson, who heroically claimed the green jacket Sunday with a 31 on the back nine for a final-round 69.

Palmer will be back as an honorary starter with his army at Augusta National next year without the clubs or caddy. He will do what most seventy-year old retirees should do: sit on the clubhouse veranda with a drink, sign autographs and snap pictures with old friends.

All with a smile. And that smile will be bigger than ever, knowing that he went out on his own terms.

They tried to get rid of him two years ago. Augusta National chairman Hootie Johnson had left subtle remarks that past champions who could no longer keep up with the pack should stop playing—Masters champions over 65 would not be allowed to start. Such rude remarks hurt Palmer, but he worked to quietly change what had been said.

"That farewell was created by other people than me," Palmer said, according to ESPN.com. "I never really felt that that was the end. I was more obliging than giving up."

But this time, Palmer rightfully waved goodbye on his own accord. And that's the way it should be.

Thanks for the chills, the thrills, and the laughs, Arnie. We'll miss you.

Orta's wide world of sports

By MIKE ORTA
Staff Writer

Bonds hits 660 and 661

Phil wins the Masters. Bonds hits 660. The curse of Bartman rears its ugly head again. The NFL draft is a few short weeks away. If you hadn't guessed it already, the sports world had a pretty big couple of days, including Phil Mickelson's monumental back nine at Augusta.

I'm from Jacksonville, Fla., home of the Jaguars. Before the Jaguars though, Jacksonville had one thing: golf. Jacksonville is a golf town. David Duval went to my high school, Vijay Singh lives at the beach, and the majority of the town's building developments were planned around golf courses. The hottest tickets in town are for when the pros come to Sawgrass, which doubles as an upscale gated housing community within walking distance of the beach.

Mickelson represents every athlete who is great but will never receive his own coronation—guys like Dan Marino and Tim Brown, guys who were/are prolific in their field, but have never achieved that moment that culminates all their achievements. It's like waiting at the altar for your incredible catch-of-a-spouse: everything goes perfectly, including the music, up until it's time for them to come down the aisle. Instead of your to-be-spouse, a monkey in a tux or dress runs down the aisle and makes a laughingstock of you.

This story has been Phil's for so long that he became the embodiment of it. Everybody looked at Phil and said, "You know, Phil's got a great wife, kids, a successful career and he's got his health ... but ... I don't think he'll ever win a major."

Every sentence uttered about him until now has had, "but" attached to the back end of it.

Phil's victory gives hope. Now, maybe Jamaicans can bobsled. Maybe the Arizona Cardinals can be good. Maybe Vince Carter can stay healthy for a whole season. Now maybe the Red Sox can win the World Series!

Phil's victory gives hope. Now, maybe Jamaicans can bobsled. The Cardinals can be good, Vince Carter can stay healthy for a whole season, and the Red Sox can win the World Series! On that note, I turn to the diamond.

Mark Prior is out. He was supposed to be out for only a couple of weeks. Prior now says he's probably out for the season. I give you the return of Bartman. Instead of waiting until the playoffs to sabotage this great team, Bartman has decided to steal all hope before the all-star break.

It seems that blowing up his historic catch has only enraged the Bartman. Sammy Sosa had better watch his back, or he might wake up one morning to find out that he is guilty of jouncing, is banned from baseball for life and is being forced to tour with the abominable Pete Rose and the ghost of Marge Schott.

IN THE EMPLOYEES' BATHROOM
YOU'LL FIND MAGAZINES.

IN THE EXECUTIVE BATHROOM, A NEWSPAPER.

200 Market St.
Simsbury, PA 17091
570-266-5671

The Daily Item
BLACK AND WHITE MAG GREEN

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211

*Parties
*Open Bowling
*Mixers
*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30
College Night
$5-3 Games & Shoe Rental

Sports

Bison now second in Patriot League standings with 6-6 record

BASEBALL from page B1

gave them too many opportunities in the ninth," Depew said. "When you encourage a good team like that, you are going to get burned."

The ninth-inning dramatics turned the Bison's chance at splitting the doubleheader into their second loss of the day.

"It was a great ending if you're a baseball fan, but it was unfortunate that we let this one slip away," Grant said.

Walter led the Bison offense in the loss, collecting three baseknocks and scoring once in five at-bats.

Miller's effort was one of the highlights of the weekend for the Bison, as the righthander logged eight solid innings on the mound, surrendering just three hits while giving up a pair of unearned runs and striking out eight.

Saturday's doubleheader began unpleasantly for the Bison, as the Black Knights picked up five runs in the first before starter Phil Futrick '06 was able to record an out. After halting the damage in the first, Futrick again had difficulty in the second inning, allowing five singles and another three runs before being relieved by Tim Peacock '05 with no outs in the inning.

Grant noted that several mistakes in early innings put the team in an insurmountable hole.

"We got handled in every aspect of the game," Grant said. "Down 10-0, we tried to come back, but when you're playing a good team, they're not going to give you many opportunities to get back in the ballgame."

The Bison were able to make a small dent in the 10-run deficit in the fourth and fifth innings. After working his way out of the second inning, Peacock held Army scoreless in the third and fourth while the Bison chipped away at the lead.

Walter put the Bison on the scoreboard with a solo home run to left field in the third inning and the team cut the lead to 10-3 with a pair of runs in the fourth as Wolf reached on error and Hirschberg followed with a double. After Mahony was walked to load the bases, a sacrifice fly from Barrett plated Wolf and a single from Stoll sent home Hirschberg.

The Bison added one last run in the fifth when Walter doubled and Mahony singled him home, but Army widened the lead to 12-4 with a two-run effort in the bottom of the inning and Bucknell was unable to challenge in the final two innings.

Peacock gave the Bison five solid innings of long relief, allowing four hits and just one earned run.

Walter was the only Bison with a multi-hit game, going two-for-four with a home run and a double.

The final game of the series was close throughout most of the contest, but the Black Knights ended up on top to complete the discouraging sweep.

Army again grabbed an early lead, picking up a run in the first and then tacking on more in the second when Cork launched a two-run homer off of Bison starter Cory Nadler '04.

Grant mentioned the Army hitters' ability to use the windy conditions to their favor in getting balls out of the park.

"The conditions were the same for both teams, but you have to give Army credit for lifting the balls into the air and letting the wind take care of the rest," Grant said.

The Bison came back with a pair of runs in the fourth to slice the lead in half, beginning with another roundtripper off the bat of Walter. Then with two outs in the inning, Day, Hirschberg and Mahony all singled, with Mahony's knock scoring Day.

Barrett led off the fifth inning with a double, followed by a bunt single from Matt

Kevin Miller '04 pitches during the first inning of Friday's nightcap. Miller's performance was among the high points of the weekend for the Bison, as he held the Black Knights to just three hits and no earned runs in eight innings.

Capece '06. Walter continued his excellent day at the plate with an RBI single that scored Barrett and moved Capece to third. Capece ran home on a sacrifice groundout by Wolf to even the score at 4-4.

The tie was shortlived, as Army jumped on Nadler with a three-run fifth inning that included a two-run homer from the Knights' Kyle Scoggin. Nadler continued to struggle in the inning, loading the bases and then hitting Nate Stone with a pitch to move another run home.

"Army was the first team that was able to capitalize on every mistake that I made as a pitcher," Nadler said. "They were an extremely good hitting team."

Nate Mittag '07 came in after one out in the sixth and allowed a pair of runs, one of them inherited, but then held the Black Knights scoreless through the next two innings.

The Bison were unable to make any more offensive headway in the final three innings and ended the contest with an 8-4 loss.

Bucknell managed to collect 13 hits in the game, but often did not capitalize, leaving nine runners on base.

Depew noted that the lack of timely hitting was for the most part characteristic of the whole series.

"We couldn't get the timely hits all weekend and [Army] was able to," Depew said.

Wolf and Mahony contributed two hits apiece to the final game, while Walter finished off a strong day at the plate with a three-for-five effort, making him five-for-nine with two homers and a double on Saturday. The weekend moved the center-fielder's season average up to .377, while his home run total now stands at four.

While the losses frustrated the Bison, they also gave the team perspective on what needs to be worked on in the coming weeks.

"Army is a very solid team in all aspects of the game, but we by no means played our best," Wolf said. "Hopefully, it was a bit of a wake-up call; our defense, offense and pitching all are capable of stepping it up a notch."

Nadler expected the Bison will be able to use the experience in preparing for a possible rematch with the Black Knights.

"Neither team executed to the best of its ability this weekend, and I think that we know what we have to improve on as a team in order to defeat Army when we most likely play them again in the Patriot League tournament," Nadler said.

The Bison will continue regular season league play tomorrow at Lafayette as they work toward securing a spot in the post-season.

Grant expects that the team will learn from the sweep and continue toward the postseason.

"Obviously [the Army series was] a disappointing weekend, but productive in the sense that we know we need to get better to have a chance to repeat as league champions," Grant said. "We're going to take care of business in Easton this weekend and we're right back on track."

The two teams kick off a doubleheader tomorrow at noon and another one on Sunday at the same time.

Day thinks that the squad will be able to transfer the frustrations from the sweep into positive momentum for the season's remainder.

"We are going to use [the disappointing weekend] to strengthen our drive and determination to play better the rest of the season," Day said. "We have a great team; a few losses will not get in the way of achieving success."

Chris Mahony '04 dives to snag a line drive off the bat of Army's Justin Long, ending the sixth inning of Saturday's first game. The Bison fell behind the Black Knights 10-0 in the first two innings of the contest, eventually losing 12-4.

NFL looks for fresh faces in draft

ORTA from page B3

Kerry Wood had better watch out too, or his ERA might balloon to that of Maurice Clarret's uber-genius Wonderlic score. Wrigley Field may spontaneously combust. Bartman's wrath knows no bounds. The Bartman curse might go down in history and prove to be almost as significant as the curse of the Babe.

In San Fran, Barry blasted home-run number 660. I will admit that I'm a Barry-hater. I don't like his attitude. I don't like his lack of team chemistry. I don't like power-hitting outfielders who think they are bigger than the game, its fans and everything else. If he is a juicer, I firmly believe he should be banned from baseball for life. We have spent so much time covering his "great homerun hitting ability" that it only seems fair that he man up to the accusations.

It doesn't matter to me that "he should be presumed innocent until proven otherwise." If he doesn't like the heat and attention, he can turn out the light. All he has to do is take the test. It's not like it's the Wonderlic—all he has to do is pee and maybe give some blood.

Forget the union and the owners. If he is anything more than a spoiled man-child, he will show some honor and put an end to this discussion, which has taken so much away from what was once America's pastime.

Every day that passes brings us closer to the most popular off-season event of any sport: the NFL Draft. I am guilty of being a "draft knick." I'm a nut for this stuff: the drama of trades, Minnesota not getting its pick in on time (two years in a row no less), quarterback looking more confident than they ever will again and players getting stranded in the green room as they slide out of the top 10.

The NFL draft is a mega-marketing tool that helps fledgling franchises sell lots of tickets. If the Giants wing a trade and pick up Eli Manning, you can bet that the Chargers' ticket sales will slump as they again pass on a franchise QB. If Arizona lands Denny Green's favorite, Larry Fitzgerald, fans will brave the heat to watch this pitiful club.

NFL draft history offers some great snafus: there are the numerous Buccaneer foul-ups, including handing in the wrong selection card and picking the wrong player. Also the drafting of John Elway by the Colts, who then traded him to Denver as he threatened to play baseball, rather than play for the Colts.

Golf has a new hero, baseball is filled with villains, and football's fresh faces are just over the horizon. With the draft and NBA playoffs approaching, sports pick up steam. Then again, some would argue that golf isn't a sport, unless, of course, you're taking steroids and refuse to admit it.

Sports

Bucknell Sports Calendar

Men's and Women's Track and Field
Bucknell Quadrangular
Lewisburg, Pa.
Sat., April 17
All Day
and
Penn Relays
Thurs., April 22
All Day

Men's Lacrosse
Army
Fri., April 16
7:00 p.m.
and
at Penn State
State College, Pa.
Tues., April 20

Softball
Army
Sat., April 17
1:00 p.m.
and
Sun., April 18
1:00 p.m.
and Rider
Thurs., April 22
3:30 p.m.

Baseball
at Lafayette
Sat., April 17
12:00 p.m.
and
Sun., April 18
12:00 p.m.
and
at Towson
Towson, Md.
Wed., April 21
3:00 p.m.

Women's Crew
at Colgate
Hamilton, N.Y.
Sat., April 17
11:00 a.m.

Men's Golf
St. Peters Invitational
Jersey City, N.J.
Tues., April 20
All Day

Women's Water Polo
Southern Division
Championships
Villanova, Pa.
Sat., April 17
and
Sun., April 18

Men's Tennis
UMBC
Fri., April 16
3:00 p.m.
and Binghamton
Sun., April 18
12:00 p.m.
and at Bloomsburg
Bloomsburg, Pa.
Wed., April 21
4:00 p.m.

Women's Tennis
UMBC
Fri., April 16
3:00 p.m.
and
at Bloomsburg
Bloomsburg, Pa.
Wed., April 21
4:00 p.m.

Women's Lacrosse
at Villanova
Villanova, Pa.
1:00 p.m.
and Drexel
Wed., April 21
6:00 p.m.

Softball vs. Lehigh

April 9th
Game One

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	0	0	0	3	0	0	0	0	3	5	0
Lehigh	1	1	0	0	3	1	X			6	11	1

Game Two

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	0	0	0	3	0	0	0	0	3	5	0
Lehigh	1	1	0	0	3	1	X			6	11	1

April 10th
Game One

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	1	3	1
Lehigh	0	0	3	0	0	0	0	0	0	3	6	1

Game Two

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1	2
Lehigh	3	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	4	10	0

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL

Mondays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club
VAULT

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm - 2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net for transportation

THE STORAGE BOX
LOCATED ON ROUTE 45
WEST OF MIFFLINBURG PA 570-716-1203

5' x 10'	$29.00 mo.	10' x 20'	$59.00 mo.
10' x 10'	$39.00 mo.	10' x 40'	$115.00 mo.

OTHER SIZES AVAILABLE. CALL US TODAY FOR ALL YOUR STORAGE NEEDS.

CALL NOW FOR AMAZING SUMMER RATES!
10% Discount On Any Size!
If Prepaid for May, June, July, and August

Women's lax unable to overcome Colgate back with consecutive goals from Nuss and Burman right after one another. Colgate went on to score three more goals following the short-lived Bucknell surge.

WLAX from page B2

Goalie Lizzy McDaniel '06 was able to make 16 saves throughout the game, 11 of which were in the first half. Colgate outshot the Bison 40-26 to come out with a 17-9 win.

The Bison are now 6-5 in the season and 2-2 in the Patriot League, tied for third with Holy Cross in the standings. They play at Villanova tomorrow at 1 p.m.

WRITE FOR SPORTS WRITERS, THERE'S NEVER AN OFFSEASON.

JOIN THE TEAM.

E-MAIL JHERWITT@

Baseball vs. Army

April 9th
Game One

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	1	3	0	0	0	0	0	0	4	4	1
Army	0	4	0	0	0	2	X			6	11	3

Game Two

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	0	0	1	0	2	0	0	0	3	8	4
Army	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	5	6	5	4

April 10th
Game One

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	0	1	2	1	0	0	0	0	4	6	4
Army	5	5	0	0	2	0	X			12	12	1

Game Two

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Bucknell	0	0	0	2	2	0	0	0	0	4	13	0
Army	1	2	0	0	3	2	0	X		8	9	2

WE'RE LOOKING FOR A FEW GOOD BUCKNELLIANs

There are a few openings still available in the Fall 2004 Bucknell-in-London program until May 3rd.

Internships, London Theatre, and a close encounter with British society, culture, and the British Empire. Bucknell in London covers the cost of guided field trips in the UK and to foreign countries, not to mention a semester-long pass on the London Underground and transatlantic airfare and housing in central London (one of the world's truly great cities) included. Courses suitable to all majors.

Contact Profs. Hilbourne A. Watson or Linden Lewis as soon as possible:
Watson: 7-3568 hawatson@bucknell.edu
Lewis: 7-1775 llewis@bucknell.edu

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin, Penn
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Fraternal-Sororities
Clubs-Student
Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester with a proven Campus Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.dor-day.com

DOR-DAY'S
GREAT SUBS!
Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Welcome to

"A Cut Above Hairdressers"
A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys
WALK INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Iraqi rebels take civilians hostage; one killed

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

Over the past few weeks, approximately 40 civilians from 19 countries have been held captive by Iraqi troops, adding a new dimension to the fighting in Iraq. A coalition spokesman told Fox News that the FBI is investigating the abductions and that it would not negotiate with "terrorists or kidnappers."

The countries suffering from these abductions include the United States, Italy, France, Japan, Israel, Czech Republic, Russia, Ukraine, China, South Korea, Britain, Germany, Turkey, Bulgaria, Spain, Pakistan, Nepal, Philippines and India.

Nine Americans have been reported missing, according to Fox News. The nine, of whom two are soldiers and seven are employees of U.S. contractor Kellogg, Brown & Root, went missing after their convoy was ambushed west of Baghdad April 9.

"Only one, Thomas Hamill, a 43-year-old truck driver from Macon, Miss., is known to have been abducted. His captors have threatened to kill and mutilate him unless U.S. troops ended their assault on the city of Fallujah. The deadline passed Sunday with no word on his fate," Fox News reported.

Meanwhile, a militant group calling itself the "Mujahideen Brigade" has abducted four Italians working as private security guards for a U.S. company in Iraq, according to The New York Times. According to Fox News, the four abducted Italians previously worked for DTS Security—based in the United States—and were kidnapped in Fallujah, 35 miles west of Baghdad.

A broadcast from the Arab news station Al-Jazeera showed the four Italians on the floor holding their passports in front of armed Iraqis. The same broadcast said that they were kidnapped by the Green Brigade of the Prophet, an Iraqi insurgent coalition. According to the broadcast, the kidnappers demanded that the Italian government issue an apology for Italy's supposed insult to the Iraqis and the Muslims.

The abductors also demanded that Italy withdraw the 3,000 Italian troops currently stationed in Iraq. These troops were sent into Iraq to aid reconstruction in southern Iraq as part of Italy's support for the U.S.-led military mission in Iraq.

Soon after the broadcast, the Brigade reported that it had killed one of the hostages, Fabrizio Quattrocchi. Al-Jazeera reports that it has received a videotape of the murder, but says that the footage is too graphic to broadcast.

The Times also reported Tuesday that eight Russian civilians are the latest foreigners to be kidnapped in Iraq and that three Japanese kidnapped last week have been freed, but seven Chinese hostages have been freed.

According to CNN, Japanese citizens Noriaki Imai, Nahoko

Takato, and photojournalist Soichiro Koriyama, were confirmed released yesterday. There were public protests in Japan demanding that the government remove their troops from Iraq in exchange for the release of the three, whom the Iraqis threatened to burn alive. As of press time, two Japanese citizens remain captive in Iraq.

There have been a number of conflicts regarding the reports of the fates of these captured foreigners and these conflicts reflect the turmoil that is ensuing in Iraq. Reuters news reported that U.S. forces are now involved in the fiercest and bloodiest battles against Sunni and Shiite guerrilla forces since the fall of Saddam Hussein nearly a year ago.

Further complicating the conflict in Iraq, the kidnappings of the past week have involved countries from all over the globe—including some like Russia and China who have opposed the U.S.-led war against Saddam. Russia has refused to send any troops to contribute to the U.S. mission, but still has about 600 specialists working primarily in the oil sector in Iraq.

The New York Times reported that China has not contributed any troops to the U.S. mission and the government is unclear as to why the seven men were captured. The official Xinhua News Agency in China described the men as villagers who went to the Middle East on their own, and noted that they come from a religion with a deeply-rooted tradition in sending men abroad.

The "Mujahideen Brigade" displays the four Italian citizens taken hostage in Iraq. This picture was broadcast on the Al-Jazeera network April 13. A day later, the brigade reported that it had killed one of the four, Fabrizio Quattrocchi, in retaliation for Italy's refusal to leave the coalition.

Reuters news reported that some of the guerrillas responsible for these kidnappings have sought international publicity in order to demand that their captives' governments withdraw troops from coalition forces in Iraq.

Another group threatened to kill American Thomas Hamill unless U.S. forces stopped fighting Sunni guerrillas in Fallujah. One of the most recent abductions reported to have taken place involved Alexandre Jourdanov, a French journalist who went missing Sunday. On Tuesday, the French Foreign Ministry confirmed that he had been kidnapped, but he was soon released and has since been confirmed to be free and in good health.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Herve Ladsous told The Associated Press that there are fewer than 100 French citizens in Baghdad, most of whom are journalists, aid workers and employees of private companies.

The journalist kidnapping was confirmed just hours after France urged these citizens residing in Iraq to leave, Fox News reported.

These kidnappings are distressing events in the war that add an entirely new dimension to the conflict in Iraq. The BBC's Barbara Plett, stationed in Baghdad, said that the abductions were "an alarming development for America's coalition partners, already worried by the unprecedented violence that has taken place in Iraq this week."

Rice leads a week of high-profile 9/11 testimony

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice gave testimony to the 10-member 9/11 Commission and friends and families of Sept. 11 victims on April 8. The testimony, which the White House was reluctant to permit, was broadcast live, interrupting programming on almost every major network. This rare occasion permitted all U.S. citizens to hear President Bush's national security adviser speak publicly under oath concerning the events leading up to the Sept. 11 terror attacks.

"Now it's even more confused than it was before," said Rosemary Dillard, widow of a passenger aboard the plane that hit the Pentagon, according to The Washington Post.

Families of victims from the Sept. 11 attacks want answers, and there were mixed emotions about Rice's testimony as she joined the growing numbers of political figures to appear before the commission.

Rice is just one of many political figures who have appeared before the commission since it was created and approved by Bush in 2002. Before her hearing, the commission met with members of the current administration and members of the Clinton administration, including former President Bill Clinton and former Vice President Al Gore. More recently, the panel heard testimony from both CIA Director George Tenet and FBI Director Robert Mueller Wednesday.

"This commission, and those who appear before it, have a vital charge," Rice said in her opening statement to the commission. "We owe it to those we lost, and to their loved ones, and to our country, to learn all we can about that tragic day, and the events that led to it."

Despite claims that Rice's testimony did little to advance this goal, Rice answered questions asked by the commission with composure and confidence, and it was clear that she understood her duty to the president, the country and the families of the Sept. 11 victims.

Rice insisted that there was no concrete knowledge that could have prevented the attacks. She also admitted that the Bush administration was aware of a terrorist threat but lacked sufficient information to take action.

"There was no silver bullet that could have prevented the 9/11 attacks," she said on national television. "In hindsight, if anything might have helped stop 9/11, it would have been better information about threats inside the United States, something made difficult by structural and legal impediments that prevented the collection and sharing of information by our law enforcement and intelligence agencies."

"It will take us another five years to have the kind of clandestine service our country needs," Mueller said of the impediments to intelligence gathering, according to CNN.

Rice referenced "structural and legal impediments" several times throughout her testimony. She insisted that the nation's law-enforcement agencies were made aware of increased terrorist activity during the summer of 2001. The sharing of information and other obstacles, which the Department of Homeland Security was created to overcome, contributed to insufficient action to stop the attacks.

A second concern that was repeatedly examined throughout Rice's testimony was the involvement of White House counterterrorism chief Richard Clarke. Clarke released a book titled "Against All Enemies" earlier this year, in which he claims that Bush ignored information concerning the threat of terrorist attacks and that his administration did little to investigate potential threats. CNN.com reported that Clarke also said members of the Clinton administration turned over counterterrorism plans to the Bush administration, but that no action was taken. "Now, let's just look at the facts. The administration had done nothing about al-Qaida prior to 9/11, despite the fact that the CIA director was telling them virtually every day that there was a major threat," Clarke said, according to CNN.com. Tenet himself referenced this in his testimony. "We lacked a government-wide capability to integrate foreign and domestic knowledge, data,

"There was no silver bullet that could have prevented the 9/11 attacks."
—Condoleezza Rice, national security adviser operations and analysis. Warning is not good enough without the structure to put it into action," he said in his televised hearing.

In her testimony, Rice argued the contrary: "The threat reporting that we received in the spring and summer of 2001 was not specific as to time, nor place, nor manner of attack. Almost all of the reports focused on al-Qaida activities outside the United States, especially in the Middle East and North Africa," Rice said.

During her testimony, Rice referenced a specific intelligence document, the Aug. 6, 2001 Presidential Daily Briefing.

"This was not a warning. This was a historical memo prepared by the agency because the president was asking questions about what we knew about the inside," Rice said.

Testimony concerning the Aug. 6 presidential briefing led to the document being declassified by the White House April 10.

Also referencing that briefing, John Lehman, a Republican commissioner, said "The CIA could not corroborate what turned out to be true and told the president of the United States almost a month before the attack that they couldn't corroborate these reports. That's an institutional failure," according to The New York Times.

Although Rice remained calm and steadfast throughout her testimony, there were several clashes with members of the commission. Democrats Richard Ben-Veniste and former Nebraska senator Bob Kerrey asked Rice pointed questions, and on several occasions interrupted Rice's testimony.

At one point during Rice's testimony, Kerrey interrupted and said, "Please don't filibuster me. It's not fair. I have been polite, I've been courteous."

This statement follows Kerrey's introduction, in which he said, "Let me ask a question that—well, actually, let me say—I can't pass this up. I know it'll take into my 10-minute time. But as somebody who supported the war in Iraq, I'm not going to get the national security adviser 30 feet away from me very often over the next 90 days, and I've got to tell you, I believe a number of things..."

The former senator prefaced the rest of his discussion with a long expression of his personal concerns for Iraq prior to returning to the investigation at hand.

The true intent of Rice's testimony has been controversial, but one view held by many families of Sept. 11 victims remains consistent—that the panel's information must be used to find out what went wrong and what can be done to prevent its recurrence.

"I'm not looking for an apology, I'm looking for ways to keep this from happening again," Patricia Casazza, a widow of one of the victims of the World Trade Center attacks told The Washington Post.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

BUCC adds to string of speakers

By EMMA POST
Writer

Even if you do not exactly know what the Bucknell Conservatives Club is, you have probably heard of it. Maybe someone told you that there was an article about it in The New York Times Magazine last summer, or you attended last week's free speech forum.

The BUCC is, in fact, a well-established organization that has been recognized by organizations as varied as MTV and NPR.

Charles Mitchell '05, the president of the BUCC, said that when the club began, it consisted of an eight-person group who met in the Langone Center. Mitchell joined the club five semesters ago, when the University lacked any sort of college Republican club. Now, it has a listserve of 100 people, and its publication, The Counterweight, circulates to 3,300 people on this campus.

The BUCC's self-proclaimed mission is "to expose the inadequacies of the leftist ideas that dominate this university and to articulate an alternative viewpoint." Its main objective is to promote political awareness in an environment where, according to its mission statement, "meaningful debate and ideological diversity are often lacking."

The BUCC wants to "provide an alternative opinion to what you hear in the classroom and the media," BUCC member Brian Lehman '05 said.

The BUCC attempts to promote political awareness in a number of different ways, mainly through The Counterweight.

"Having a newspaper is the best way to do it," Mitchell said.

One of The Counterweight's main concerns is free speech at the University. In its most recent issue, "The Counterweight addressed such varied topics as abortion and Mel Gibson's 'The Passion,' giving an array of opinions in an informing, sometimes satirical manner."

The BUCC puts things on the cover of The Counterweight

Charles Mitchell '05, president of the BUCC, speaking at a recent event.

"Cooperating with dictators is neither possible nor desirable," said journalist Christopher Hitchens, addressing a crowd of students and faculty at Bucknell Hall on April 14. Advertised as a political liberal by the BUCC, Hitchens spoke on his reasons for supporting the invasion of Iraq and a more aggressive American foreign policy.

to make readers pick it up, and Lehman said the club thinks that is a good thing because "then people will talk about it."

Campus issues are on the forefront of the BUCC's agenda. Mitchell said that in order to increase political awareness,

"Cooperating with dictators is neither possible nor desirable."
—Christopher Hitchens, journalist

the club needs to address issues students truly care about.

"We try to talk about what we know, what matters to us," Mitchell said.

Some recent topics of dialogue include the University's new alcohol policy, which Mitchell calls "seriously wrong," and an administration that he describes as "insulated."

"I'm interested in talking about principles that I believe in," Mitchell said.

The club also brings political speakers to the University community, which are funded by a group of alumni. When the BUCC brought Ben Stein to discuss economics, he was greeted by a full house at the Weiss Center for the Performing Arts.

On Wednesday, the BUCC brought in Christopher Hitchens, a noted journalist and TV/radio commentator who works for Vanity Fair magazine and just wrote a new book, "A Long Short War: The Postponed Liberation of Iraq."

Hitchens spoke about the American cause in Iraq and why it is absolutely necessary. Hitchens first went to Iraq in the 1970s as a representative for the Bath party in England, and said he found himself in an "atmosphere of sheer, abject fear." Hitchens described the terrible conditions in Iraq and the Middle East, and his reasoning that Osama bin Laden is long dead.

Hitchens said he thinks that "cooperating with dictators is neither possible nor desirable," agreeing with President Bush's decision to rid Iraq of its "terrorist" regime.

Hitchens attacked many of the Americans who continue to oppose the U.S. presence in Iraq, especially those who "are glad to see [failures] because it reflects poorly on the president."

He also emphasized his belief that the al-Qaida organization was effectively defeated by the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, calling the organization "overrated." The true threat to the United States, he said, is the force of "jihad," the general concept of Islamic holy war.

Plans for the BUCC include a debate gun control with the College Democrats on April 27. Mitchell said the club wants to bring in more speakers like Hitchens. The two that the club have in mind for next year include John Stossel and Pat Sajjak, depending on financial support. The BUCC also plans to publish three issues of The Counterweight next year.

The BUCC has received considerable recognition from various organizations. For a club that was started three years ago, it is well on its way to achieving many promising future endeavors. Mitchell said he is confident that this sort of exposure is contagious and that the media "feeds on itself." Mitchell said the club's hard work has paid off, whether everyone on campus likes it or not.

"People are afraid because they're scared they're going to lose the battle of ideas," he said.

Political Ramblings

Former Bucknellian editors-in-chief Jason Rubinstein and Peter Hackman continue their look at the lighter side of politics.

Peter—
Debate over the rate at which the federal government taxes gasoline is sure to be a hot political topic this year as prices hover around $2.00 in some places. The battle between the campaign of a former Texas oilman (a quite unsuccessful one at that) and of a senator with environmental tendencies will be harsh.

For one prominent candidate this year, a proposal to raise gas taxes may become a serious albatross. In 1986, while in Congress, he introduced a bill to create a tax on imported oil. The proposal was widely panned, with members of his own party criticizing the economic logic of the plan and complaining that, if enacted, it would harm the economy and cost almost half a million people to lose their jobs. He said, "Let us rid ourselves of the fiction that low oil prices are somehow good for the United States."

He was Dick Cheney. Republicans made such a fuss over comments Sen. John Kerry made 20 years ago, when he said he would consider raising the gas tax. But Kerry didn't introduce any legislation to that effect, and he didn't even vote for anything that would raise gas taxes by 50 cents.

If you want to see gas taxes raised on consumers, you have a clear choice this November. While Kerry didn't rule it out, Cheney actually tried to make it happen. On this issue, the Bush/Cheney campaign has a record that Kerry can't match.

As for what we actually should do, there is a solution that everyone but auto CEO's, Escalade-driving rappers, and the insecure Hummer-driving nouveaux-riches can agree on. Pass a fuel efficiency tax on new vehicles. Tack on an extra $500 to a $50,000 Lincoln Navigator. I seriously doubt that a 1 percent tax will affect anybody's buying decision. Then take the revenue and use it to build and improve our nation's roads (more jobs, easier commutes, fewer accidents). Who could seriously argue with the logic of that?

Jason—
I can argue with that logic, but let me clear up an earlier mistake.

Go ahead and criticize Cheney's actions from almost 20 years ago, when I wasn't old enough to ride a bike. But it's more practical to think more recent. In 1994, Kerry indeed supported a 50-cent gas-tax increase. In fact, he was so proud of it in his effort to cut the deficit that he told The Boston Globe, "The Concord Coalition's scorecard doesn't reflect my support for a 50-cent increase in the gas tax." (The Concord Coalition criticized Kerry for not working hard enough to cut the deficit.) Kerry does have a record—a more recent one at that.

A sales tax on new gas-guzzling SUVs is futile. Some SUVs require as much gas as the consumer's expense paid at the pump alone contributes a significant amount in taxes. Charging an additional 1 percent tax may not have a big effect on buying, but those who are affected and do buy cheaper cars will no longer pay as much in gas tax at the pump, potentially canceling out the intention of the 1 percent sales tax.

Let the market price of gasoline determine what type of cars consumers buy, as it did in the early '80s. Also, consider that our dependence on foreign oil may increase over time, possibly increasing the cost of gas to unreasonable levels. Naturally, the time would come when drivers of Lincoln Navigators may decide to drive Toyota Civics. But the increased price will also have a similar effect on people already driving economy cars: They may want to make the change to more efficient hybrid-electric vehicles, which may finally generate the level of investment that we need from auto manufacturers in high-efficiency vehicles.

Peter—
The risk of being repetitive, I will point out that Kerry only talked about an increase while Cheney actually introduced a bill to create a new tax on oil. This just in: Bush's chief economic adviser recently proposed a 50-cent gas-tax increase to pay for additional income tax cuts. I wonder whom he got the 50-cent amount from. For the sake of argument, I'll concede that Kerry's position on gas taxes is no better than Cheney's, but it's hard to see how it could be any worse. Not that one would expect honesty from this administration, but I digress.

If some people change their car buying decision based on a 1 percent tax (almost no one would do this) and buy a more fuel-efficient car, then that is a good result itself. If the lost gas-tax revenue from people using more efficient cars is offset by the inefficiency tax, then the result is the same revenue with a decreased demand for oil, reducing our dependence on imports. I don't want to sound too cocky, but wouldn't that be a market-based solution to a set of foreign and social problems?

Finally, I think the mid- and late-'70s are the perfect rationale for doing something proactive before we repeat that era's energy crisis. Is that checkmate 1 smil?

Jason—
Alas, I've run out of space. But it just occurred to me that we've been wasting everyone's time, anyway. There's no point in making arguments for or against Kerry's gas policy... by the time this commentary goes to press, Kerry's position will have changed.

Seniors: It's time to CELEBRATE and share fond FAREWELLS... Make it MEMORABLE!

From pig roasts to an elegant cold buffet, we offer menu ideas to create your perfectly prepared celebration. We also offer a variety of favorite entrees, hors d'oeuvres & party platters to go.

If you're looking for a place to have your party or special dinner, our Brynwood Room accommodates up to 125 guests and Rusty's South Room is available for dining affairs up to 30 guests.

PLAN NOW!! TDYWOOD catering

For more information or reservations call us at: Brynwood Catering: 570/524-2121 x1

Cinema Center

Sellingsgrove • Susquehanna Valley Mall • 274-2949

Play Dates: April 10-23, 2004

Itchy (PG-13)	Alamo (PG-13)
12:40, 2:50, 5:10, 7:20, 9:30	11:30, 2:40, 4:50, 7:00, 9:10
Heavenly Creatures (PG-13)	Elia Encantada (PG)
11:10, 1:40, 4:15, 6:50, 9:25	11:30, 1:50, 4:15, 6:30, 8:30
Girl Next Door (PG-13)	Girl Next Door (PG-13)
12:15, 2:45	5:30, 7:30, 9:30
Passion of the Christ (R)	Walking Tall (R)
11:2, 2:5, 5:8	12:30, 4:50, 7:00, 9:10
Ladykillers (R)	Jersey Girl (NR)
1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30	12:30, 3:15, 5:15, 7:15, 9:15
Prince and Me (PG)	Scorpy-Doo 2 (PG)
12:50, 3:30, 6:10, 8:40	11:45, 2:40, 5:15, 8:10

Home on the Range (PG)
11:15, 1:20, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30

The BISON BUNKHOUSE

"A great place to stay when visiting Bucknell!"

The Bison Bunkhouse is a 4 Bedroom, 2 bath family house, fully appointed for your stay and your enjoyment. Call 570-522-0443 for reservations www.bisonbunkhouse.com

Bull Run Inn Celebrates Seniors Night

Thurs., April 1
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.
All 21 and over are welcome!
DJ & Dancing
Food & Beverage Features
Check it out at: www.bullruninn.com

Senate candidate Pat Toomey stands with members of the Bucknell University Conservatives Club. He spoke in Lewisburg after the BUCC was denied permission to bring him to campus.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY'S 6TH ANNUAL
3PM - 1AM
GERHARD FIELDHOUSE
FEATURING
GEORGE CLINTON & PARLIAMENT FUNKADOLIC
Mark D. Sennett
Beer and Wine 21 years of age and older
Black Tie Optional
Ticket Sales Begin Wednesday, March 10th
Tickets are for individuals in the GAP Center (LC 306), Brewster, LC Box Office, or on-line at www.bucc.org. Seating is first-come, first-served.
$10 for BU Students; $15 for all other BU Faculty, Staff and Guests
Tables may be reserved
PRESENTED BY THE ACTIVITIES AND CAMPUS EVENTS' TRADITIONS COMMITTEE

The Winfield Baptist Church

"The Bible Preaching Church For the Whole Family"
(Founded 1864)
Invites both men and women of Bucknell to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 am;
Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening Worship 6:30 pm
Evangelical
Traditional and contemporary Christian music
Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thornbury
Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28 acre site 3.5 miles south of campus. Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 miles, church on the right. For more information or transportation call 524-2735 or 743-7494 (any time)

Arts & Entertainment

Arts alumni make

Courtesy of Karissa Krenz

Krenz '95 goes from reading music history to writing it

BY JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Karissa Krenz has had a literal collage of creative achievement since her graduation from the University in 1995, but she is still a work in progress. Krenz graduated with a bachelor's degree in music history, but has stretched this degree to meet her interests both at the University and since graduation.

"I was a music nerd," Krenz said. "I was the only one doing [the major] when I was there. I was a singer and involved with all levels of the collegium, as well as chapel choir, chorale, opera company, the collegium involved ensembles, an a cappella voice group and a Renaissance instrument ensemble."

Her on-campus involvement also took the form of composition and concerts. Krenz performed in a composition recital her senior year with Jimmy Smith '95.

"I did a lot of composing," Krenz said. "Then I did a recital with Jimmy Smith our senior year. It was a composition recital—really wacky, off-the-wall experimental stuff."

She also spent time interacting with the various artists who took musical breaks at the University.

"I highly recommend taking the opportunity to talk to people coming in from outside. Any opportunity, whether they're speaking in a class, or doing a concert, talk to them and listen to what they have to say—they're a link to the world and what people are out there doing," Krenz said.

Listening to Krenz's advice may be worthwhile, because she is still reaping the benefits of her University connections. Tom Hamilton, a friend of University Professor of Music, Bill Duckworth, helped Krenz obtain her first job in New York City.

When she found it was time to move on from this position, a performer she had met while on campus helped her secure work as a publicist at The Kitchen, a New York theater. Even in her most recent and highly prominent position as editor-in-chief of Chamber Music magazine, Krenz benefited from contacts she made while at the University.

Krenz's job at Chamber Music for the past five years has allowed her to increase her confidence and gain experience in the music industry. Due to the intimate size of the classical music world, it is easy for those within it to quickly ascend to positions of more prestige and experience.

"At Chamber Music, I basically did everything from the ground up," Krenz said, "writing little blurbs, assigning stories, editing and copy editing, working with designers, printers and budgets. The thing about the arts is a lot of the arts world is small and not for profit, so you get a chance to do everything—you have to do everything."

But despite the laborious nature of the industry, the job has a more alluring side as well, as Krenz is quick to point out with anecdotes about her lifestyle.

"I got to go to some cool places. I covered festivals such as the Verbier Festival in Switzerland, the Banff Arts Festival in Alberta and a festival in Finland," she said. "Doing music things definitely has its perks—the travel was the biggest highlight, but running a magazine was kind of cool, too."

Since moving on from this position, the world has been an open door to Krenz, who said that it is "important to realize that nothing's ever finite. You can always take a different path, or many paths."

And it seems Krenz has been forging her own path, based on her creative ideals. Future plans include starting a classical music image consulting firm, freelance writing and designing jewelry—all are sure to stick close to her imaginative roots, using art in many forms.

"Remember your creativity," she said, "don't get lost in the 'blah' of the 'every day.' Recognize that you're an artist no matter what you're doing. By branching out, you just live a more fulfilling life."

McPherson '83 draws on dreams for success

BY JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

John McPherson '83 has engineered his route to the top of his field, laughing all the way. His cartoon, "Close to Home," adorns the pages of 700 newspapers worldwide with its humor and familiarity, and has been the content for an annual calendar and for more than 12 books.

McPherson brings this strip of achievements to campus this weekend, when he will be inducted into the Bucknell Association for the Arts Academy of Artistic Achievement. The academy seeks to honor University community members who have made significant contributions to the arts, in the form of creation, support or performance.

"He was the easy choice for us—the obvious candidate," said Jason Janago '94, a member of the Bucknell Association for the Arts. "This is someone who has had incredible success in his field even in the fact he appears in the number of newspapers that he does. Anyone who has read his comic, met or spoken to him will see that he has a very unique sense of humor—a little twisted, but always good-natured. He will always give you something to smile about."

True to McPherson's twisted nature, his story does not begin conventionally. While at the University, McPherson pursued a double major in mechanical engineering and English. "I was overwhelmed with work, that was pretty much the focus, so I didn't really have much of an opportunity to dive into activities," McPherson said.

But only a year and a half after graduation, McPherson's interests took him in a different direction. He began cartooning as a hobby, slowly progressing to monthly comics in his local newspaper. Despite his gift of humor, McPherson suffered a slow start.

See CARTOONIST, page B10

A-List Alums

A Who's Who of artistic achievement

- ◆ David Ackroyd '62 - ACTOR
Has appeared on Broadway and in guest spots on 30 TV shows and 50 films
- ◆ David Armstrong '69 - PAINTER
Local painter whose art is featured in the Wells Center for the Performing Arts
- ◆ Peter Belakian '73 - POET
Winner of the PEN/Martha Albrand Prize for Memoirs and a New York Times Notable Book, currently a professor at Colgate University
- ◆ Chris Bender '93 & JC Spink '94 - PRODUCERS
Film producers and artistic managers in Los Angeles who produced films such as "Butterfly Effect," "The Ring" and the "American Pie" films
- ◆ Mark Hafner '93 - VICE PRESIDENT
Vice President of Production, Dreamworks Films, Los Angeles
- ◆ David Hancock '84 - PLAYWRIGHT
Off-Broadway playwright and winner of several Obie awards, honoring off-Broadway and off-off-Broadway plays
- ◆ Edward Herrman '65 - ACTOR
Emmy-winning actor who has starred in 80 films and is currently featured in the "Gilmore Girls" as Richard Gilmore
- ◆ Bruce Lundvall '57 - RECORD LABEL FOUNDER
Founder and president of jazz record label, Blue Note records—Norah Jones is currently signed with this label
- ◆ Alex Lyras '93 - ACTOR
Has performed critically acclaimed one-man show in New York City and Los Angeles
- ◆ Leslie Moones '71 - CEO
CEO and president of CBS; originated the idea of reality TV with "Survivor"
- ◆ Mark Morganelli '77 - MUSICIAN
Jazz trumpet player with the Jazz Forum All-Stars
- ◆ Philip Roth '54 - AUTHOR
Pulitzer Prize-winning author of novels such as "Goodbye Columbus" and "The Human Stain"
- ◆ Matt Sloan '94 - WRITER/ACTOR
Created, wrote and performed in television series "Small Shots"
- ◆ Ralph Walte '52 - ACTOR
Portrayed the father, John Walton, on "The Waltons"
- ◆ Tim Williams '87 - PRODUCER
Head of Production at Greene Street Films in New York City, Williams co-produced Oscar-nominated "In the Bedroom" in 2001 and has since produced "Swimfan" and "Uptown Girl"

Compiled by Julianna Pietak

Arts & Entertainment

headlines nationwide

Walker '00 produces University film club and award-winning films

BY JULIANNA M. PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The University has no official film program, but try telling Jeremy Walker '00 that. "Maria, Full of Grace," his latest project, stands as testament to his drive—the film just won the 2004 Sundance Film Festival Audience Award.

Several short steps, hard work and a drive to succeed have carried Walker from his campus days as co-founder of the University's film club, Hoodwink and Hokey, to his current position as an associate producer at Journeyman Pictures. In this position, Walker operates within the New York City film world, immortalizing small budget stories on the independent film screen. While Journeyman's pictures retain an engaging storylines, there are also political underpinnings to their work.

"Our projects aren't completely commercial entertainment," Walker said. "They're pretty comparable to other New York independent film companies where you're working with independent directors on personal material. Sometimes you feel a little bit marginalized, but really it's just about taking films that you care about."

Walker's position as associate producer is much more than a name in the credits: Walker has a hand in virtually every aspect of the projects under his sway. From script to financing, casting, budgeting, scheduling, shooting and post-production work, Walker is the business-like caretaker of his multifaceted projects. Still in 18-hour work days and the uncertainty of the film world, where a project can be turned down at a moment's notice, and you have the recipe for Walker's job.

"It takes about a year to make a film, but producing allows you to interact with everybody. Film is very hierarchical, and as a producer you can interact with everyone; you're not completely focused on one task," Walker said.

Walker's latest film, "Maria, Full of Grace," may have garnered praise and accolades, but he did not begin this way. He graduated in 2000 not only with a double major in English and theater, but also with determination and an unshakable idea of where he wanted to go.

"I knew at Bucknell pretty early on that I wanted to pursue film. In terms of undergraduate education, it's great; you need to learn how to think," Walker said. "Generally speaking, my experience at Bucknell was extremely positive—setting way to help us out, and the sense of community was extremely valuable and rare."

The campus community launched Walker into his first industry internship, at Greenstreet Films, after his junior year. Connections he made at this internship and at the University helped him secure a job after graduation at Woody Allen's production company, where he worked for several years until obtaining his current position. And this may not be the end of the line for Walker.

"My aspirations are to direct, to be more creative," Walker said. "I continue to make my own short films, but no one's going to pay you to direct a film unless you can prove yourself first."

His latest, which attests to his past four years of experience, is a collaboration with another University alumnus, John Mitchell '00. And once again, these original connections are what Walker continues to stress and build on.

"My career path began at Bucknell, taking advantage of the resources there and the ways to be creative and work with these resources," Walker said. "Be self-motivated and take advantage of the things that are there. You can shape Bucknell into what you want it to be for yourself—make the effort and shape it to your needs."

Photos courtesy of www.stapulse.com
Walker produced "Maria, Full of Grace." Audience Award winner at the 2004 Sundance film festival.

Mr. Smith goes to New York

University alumnus serves as director of the Manhattan Opera Theatre

BY RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

Stop hiding behind your cubicles. Somewhere among the Fortune 500 employees and research laboratory assistants that the University pumps out at a rate of nearly 1,000 per year, there is a rare music-major-turned-opera-director, such as Jimmy Smith '95.

Smith, the director of the Manhattan Opera Theatre in New York City, credits his career in the operatic arts to his study under Professor of Music, William Duckworth, and the ability to enjoy the "free-thinking elements" of the music department.

"I realized recently, [the University] gave me a lot of ammunition to express my ideas in this young upstart company. I feel that my decision-making on what I think is valid and my sense of adventure can be attributed to Bucknell," Smith said.

While in college, Smith did not expect his career to take the direction it did. Smith, who holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in music and religion, thinks his occupation is an excellent implementation of his backgrounds in music (he played cello in the University Orchestra and held his own composition recital), dance (he took modern dance from Dana Frangione) and theater (he acted in "A Midsummer Night's Dream").

Courtesy of Jimmy Smith
Smith is able to combine his artistic interests developed while at the university. Projections, such as the one above were used in his set design for their production of Leonard Bernstein's "Trouble in Tahiti."

Smith sold his current position as director of the Manhattan Opera Theatre combined all of these interests. After starting out with the Metropolitan Opera, working in costume fitting and musical rehearsals, among other things, Smith accepted this job as opera director when a friend founded the Manhattan Opera

Theatre last year and had Smith direct the first production, Leonard Bernstein's "Double in Tahiti."

The theatre's creative team hopes to build on its current momentum, as it concentrates on presenting several lesser-known operas this year and formulates plans for more tantalizing operatic events in the coming year. These plans include a Halloween-themed performance, a fundraiser with the performance of a famous opera singer, a new opera written by a composer the theatre specifically commissioned, and the possibility of having a full orchestra by next spring.

The theatre's access to the Metropolitan Opera's resources have proven propitious as well, as Smith is currently using his former employer's Manhattan Opera Theatre to build a database for performance ideas. According to Smith, Milhaud's operas are obscure, morbid and completely fascinating.

The creative electricity in the theatre seems to be flowing, and the benefit of being on a small team of creative individuals has helped Smith to maximize his potential as a director of opera. He said that he is always suggesting new ideas for operas to his coworkers, and it is that free exchange of ideas that best helps this select group of opera aficionados to redefine the New York City opera scene.

For interested opera enthusiasts, the Manhattan Opera Theatre resides in the beautiful 400-seat Florence Gould Hall of New York City's French Institute. Smith will be pleased to answer any questions concerning upcoming events via e-mail (jrobertsmith@earthlink.net). In the coming months, the theatre also hopes to complete construction of its Web site (manhattanoperatheatre.org).

Arts & Entertainment

Dave's Double Take

A closer look at this week's hottest singles

BY DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

The University's radio station, WVBU, is always playing the best in modern rock music from both independent and mainstream artists. This week, I am taking a look at new music from some artists you have probably heard before, including a few that have not put out any new material in several years. In this batch of tunes, there is one very strong return, one disappointment and three that are somewhere in the middle. Tune into 90.5 FM, listen for these songs, and decide for yourself.

Duran Duran—"Sunrise"

This is the first new song from these British pop kings in many years, and their resurgence reminds me a little bit of Bon Jovi's return to the American music scene several years ago. Like "It's My Life," the single that launched Bon Jovi back into popular music, "Sunrise" is a driving rock song, with a thumping techno beat and intricate layers of synthesizers and guitars.

The lyrics are uplifting and positive ("Only change will bring you out of the darkness"), and the chorus is huge and anthem-like, with a rush of additional vocals joining in, "Reach up for the sunrise... Feel the new day enter your life."

The Vines—"Ride"

This Australian band broke through in 2002 with its debut album, "Highly Evolved," launching the band and its eccentric lead singer Craig Nicholls into the American rock scene. "Ride" is clicking guitars and a bouncing drumbeat, while the chorus cranks up the volume as Nicholls hollers, "Ride with me, ride with me / Whoa-oh-ohh."

After the first time through the chorus, both vocals and guitars blend into a stuttering distortion through a neat production effect. A furious, distorted guitar solo gives way to the rhythm guitar lick at the beginning, backed by handclaps before one last pass through the chorus and a sudden, unceremonious ending. "Ride" is another catchy, aggressive burst of a song, and the Vines seem ready to take the rock world by storm once again.

Marcy Playground—"No One's Boy"

Not much has been heard from singer John Wozniak and his band Marcy Playground since their 1997 hit "Sex and Candy," (their 1999 album, "Shapeshifter," did not receive much attention) but this slow, yearning ballad is a great return to the mainstream.

Courtesy of www.amazon.com

Though the instrumentals, especially the electric guitar and drums, are heavier than those in the band's earlier material, the low-register, mumbling vocals in the verse immediately sound familiar.

Wozniak exhibits greater range in the chorus, singing sweetly and wistfully, "I'm no one's boy / And I'll be all you need / If you only please." This song not only reminded me of the band's existence, but showed me how much the band's sound has matured and made me excited to hear more from their new album, which was released March 23.

Toots and the Maytals—featuring No Doubt—"Monkey Man"

There is nothing complex or experimental about this single; it is an infectious reggae groove from one of the genre's pioneers, featuring one of the most popular American rock acts playing today.

The punchy horns and jaunty, syncopated guitars recall No Doubt's earlier, more ska-influenced music, while Cwen's harmonized singing with Toots is light, breezy and tuneful.

The lyrics are indistinct, but they are not the main focus of the song—swaying rhythms, horn hooks and light easy singing make this track so enjoyable. American ska bands have been covering "Monkey Man" for years, and now Toots is making a mark in the United States with his own album of collaborations that feature mainstream American musicians.

Courtesy of www.amazon.com

Ben Kweller—"I Need You Back"

While Ben Kweller might not be a familiar face in pop music, he has been prominent in indie rock and a WVBU staple for the last two years. His first album, "Sha Sha," was a goofy jumble of juvenile rock songs and piano and acoustic guitar-based ballads.

"I Need You Back" is the first cut from his newest album, "On My Way," which finds the singer married and musing on falling in love, but lacking the loose, zany energy of his previous work. The song is based in acoustic and light electric guitars, with bass and drums subdued during the verse and chugging along during the chorus.

Courtesy of www.amazon.com

The lyrics alternately yearn and scorn the object of Kweller's love: "Hey! I need you back... To take away my pain / And then my fear." "You are free if you can sleep at night / You must be hard if you can sleep at night."

Just as the lyrics change mood, Kweller's singing veers back and forth between mid-level mumbling during the verse to yelping tenor during the chorus. It is not a bad song, but after his extremely enjoyable debut album and his collaboration with Ben Folds, a songwriter known for his comic touches, I was hoping for something more light hearted and fun.

McPherson to visit University tomorrow

CARTOONIST from page B8

"I remember sending out 160 packets of cartoons to magazines," he said, "and getting back 160 rejections. Finally, I got into Campus Life magazine; that was kind of a big break for me. I was able to start publishing and gain visibility."

lives," McPherson said.

This is not to say that cartooning comes easy to the artist, who may go through 10 or 20 cartoons a day before an idea works. Fortunately for McPherson, he loves his what he does, and so most of his ideas do "work." This enjoyment sparks his imagination and is his advice for others.

"The important thing is for you to do what you

CLOSE TO HOME JOHN MCPHERSON

"Close to Home" by cartoonist John McPherson '83 is syndicated in 700 newspapers worldwide. McPherson will sign and present on his work Saturday afternoon as part of Spring Arts Weekend. In celebration of his talent, McPherson will also be inducted into the Associations of the Arts Academy of Artistic Achievement.

If that made McPherson visible, now he dazzles. The recognizable subject matter of his cartoon, "Close to Home," makes it popular in newspapers such as the Los Angeles Times, Washington Post, Houston Chronicle, Japan Times, Vietnam News, Queen's-Caribou Observer and about 690 others—apparently, it falls close to home for many.

"I try to find idiosyncrasies in life that everybody's going to be able to recognize, but other comedians and cartoonists haven't come up with yet; things that people are going to relate to in their think you want to do, not what seems like the practical thing to do," he said. "For me, the practical thing was to be an engineer. If you do what you love, you will be much happier and thus much more successful. Follow your dreams—you don't always have to be secure."

For those wishing to meet this cartoonist, McPherson will sign copies of his books from 2-3 p.m. tomorrow in the bookstore and will give a presentation on the art of cartooning 4 p.m. tomorrow in the Gallery Theatre. Both events are free, open to the public and, naturally, close to home.

Born for the horn

Courtesy of Reuters

The Wynton Marsalis Septet will perform tonight at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts. A trumpet virtuoso, Marsalis has won nine Grammys for his 42 CDs and is the director of jazz at Lincoln Center, as well as a United Nations Messenger of Peace.

Student talent unveiled

Courtesy of Vita Litvak

The University's annual student art show premieres Friday at the Samek Art Gallery. The exhibit, featuring work by graduate students Vita Litvak, Sarah Shebaro and Dominic Nurre, can be viewed until May 4th.

April 23, 2004

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

inside Volume 133, Number 11

Business & Politics:

Profiles on the students running for Bucknell Student Government positions for the classes of 2005, 2006 and 2007.

See page A8

2004 Spotlight Profiles

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Joe Coleman

BY ALISON WALKER
Senior Editor

What does an internship program have in common with Rhode Island and SpongeBob SquarePants? Ask those in the political science department, and they will give you one name: Joe Coleman, assistant professor of political science. Coleman arrived at the University in the fall of 2002 and implemented the spring internship

See COLEMAN page A3

Jack Phillips and Katy Timer

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

BY MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

His mother tells him he was born in the same wing of the same hospital a mere two months before Prince William of Wales was born there. Jack Phillips '04 laughs at the celebrity connection and explains his dual citizenship as a Brit and American. Perhaps it is his British half that friends and acquaintances describe as reserved and diplomatic.

His room looks more like a professor's office—shelves of books

See PHILLIPS page A2

BY MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

"I love running. I absolutely love peanut butter. I'm really passionate about playing the guitar right now," Katy Timer '04 said as she curled up in a booth at the cafe.

She said "Peanuts" characters decorate her room and the cartoon nostalgia of the comic strip characterizes her smile. A sorority girl (Kappa Alpha Theta) who likes peanut butter freezes, Timer also sleeps with a stuffed Gund dog named "Muttsy" that she dressed in a

See TIMER page A2

Eric Faden

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

BY MEGHAN BALL
News Editor

French Film festivals, "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" in full costume, a marquee that lights up Market Street all the way to Weis; these are just a few of the things Assistant Professor of English Eric Faden and the Campus Theatre have brought to the University.

When Faden first came to the University in the fall of 2002, he had no intention of buying the Campus Theatre; in fact, it was the last thing on his mind. He was coming here to fill a growing demand for a specialist to teach film studies. Had it not been for three of his graduate students at University of California-Irvine who were all originally from Pennsylvania and told him to apply, he might never have even come across the country.

As if through fate, it was right around the time of his arrival that the theater was put up for sale.

See FADEN page A3

Sally Nyquist

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

As you approach the office of Professor of Biology Sally Nyquist, the map on the bulletin board certainly catches your eye. "Directions to my house," it reads, which serves as a great indicator of just the type of person Nyquist is. Nyquist is dedicated to her students and colleagues and will certainly be missed when she retires at the end of the year.

Nyquist was raised on a farm 10 miles outside a small town in Minnesota. During her childhood, she attended classes in a one-room schoolhouse and there was prepared to take the biggest journey of her life—a journey that would eventually lead her to the University.

As Nyquist's education progressed, it merged with her desire to travel. She ultimately decided to leave home and join the Peace Corps, an experience that changed her life.

See NYQUIST page A3

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, April 11	SEXUAL ASSAULT —A student reported to Public Safety that she was sexually assaulted at an off-campus location by a male she knew. Public Safety explained a course of action to the student and referred her to the appropriate resources for assistance.	Swartz Hall wearing no clothing. A complete search of the area was conducted which met with negative results. East Buffalo Township Police was notified. The incident is under investigation.	after Public Safety observed them stumbling in front of Smith Hall.
FIRE ALARM ACTIVATION —Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by unknown person(s) discharging a fire extinguisher.	INFORMATION	IDENTITY THEFT —A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) made five unauthorized charges to his bank ATM debit card at an off-campus location. The student was referred to Lewisburg Police and was provided with information on preventing identity theft.	DISORDERLY CONDUCT / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS —A student reported a disturbance outside Vedder Hall to Public Safety. Three students were cited for public.
MEDICAL ASSIST —Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of a student with a lacerated hand. The student refused medical treatment.	ASSIST POLICE —East Buffalo Township Police responded to Public Safety with a student who had attempted to purchase beer with a false identification. Citations were issued for attempt to purchase alcohol using false identification.	WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14	THURSDAY, APRIL 15
Tuesday, April 13	INDECENT EXPOSURE —A student reported to Public Safety that a male was walking around the outside of	UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / DISORDERLY CONDUCT —Two students were cited for underage consumption and disorderly conduct

Phillips brings more than poker face to BSG table

PHILLIPS From page A1

line the wall and his desk suggests a hard work ethic. The books outline every other attempt to decorate the room. They even spill over to piles on the windowsill. Bred on Dr. Stuess as a child, Phillips has grown to love reading, now owning an extensive collection of everything from Tom Clancy to his current favorite, Roger Lowenstein's "When Genius Failed," about economics. While earning a bachelor of science degree in computer science, Phillips does not limit his pursuits only to "techie" interests.

A lint roller full of green felt fuzz is the first hint to Phillips' extensive interests. The connection to the green felt poker table lead to the discovery of personalized poker chips engraved with his and his father's initials. Family ties taking a prominent place in his hobby, Phillips says his parents are his role models.

The Eagle Scout-turned-poker-fiend mixes Mozart, Radiohead, Bad Religion and Weezer for his playlist of the day—Phillips' taste in music differs as widely as the variety feeding his voracious appetite for literature.

Beyond speaking computer languages and following championship poker, Phillips desired to effect change for students. Wanting to do something tangible to better the University, Phillips began to attend Sunday Bucknell Student Government meetings to see how the organization worked. He decided to run for vice president of operations with a promise to upgrade the Web site.

Once in office, Phillips realized all of the opportunities for change. He said he "sank [his] teeth into the strategic levels" of planning. One of the first projects he worked on involved taking pictures of the parking spaces behind Fraternity Road. Two to three times a day he coordinated photographing the empty spots in order to present a case for more student parking.

Katy Timer '04 worked with Phillips on BSG, calling him her "right-hand man."

"On a daily basis, Jack would be my primary source of motivation. He always told me that his job was to motivate me and then my job was to motivate everyone else," Timer said.

Timer remembers him most for his dedication. Less than 24 hours after having his appendix removed, Phillips showed up for an appropriations review and BSG meeting. Timer says she was shocked to see him able to attend, but not surprised at all by his devotion.

"Jack has displayed extraordinary commitment to what he believes in, and passion for his causes. Both qualities have made him successful, but have also made Bucknell a better place," Vice President of Student Affairs Charlie Pollock '70 said.

Committees, committees, committees—Phillips devoted himself to not only participating in committees, but to pushing for change through his work on them. He has served on the University Council, the highest committee at the University, working with the administration and the trustees in order to envision and revise the University's goals.

On the Committee on Complementary Activities, Timer and Phillips advocated changes to the alcohol policy and several of their suggestions are part of the current policy. Phillips' particular contribution was the addition of the opportunity for students to take a arises, his first instinct is to negotiate the situation in order to come to an acceptable solution," former roommate and friend Joe Simko '04 said.

In addition to excellence in leadership, Phillips also excels academically. He has been honored with many awards, including the Bucknell President's Award for Distinguished Academic Achievement (2000-01, 2002-03 academic years) and Bucknell University's George R. Faint Prize (2003).

"My honors thesis is entitled 'Application of Genetic Algorithms to Recovering Corrupted File Streams,' and I am applying my research to breaking a simple quantum encryption trans-

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Katy Timer '04 and Jack Phillips '04 made great strides while working as Bucknell Student Government president and vice president of operations, respectively.

Breathalyzer test in order to prove innocence of underage drinking.

University Chaplain Ian Oliver clearly remembers Phillips' contributions to leader summit meetings about diversity for the Committee for Campus Diversity.

"Jack had such original ideas, such positive energy and such faith in the student body that they could overcome the conflicts and troubles of the past," Oliver said. "While some wanted to deny that there were any diversity issues on campus ... Jack had already moved on to solving the problems."

Phillips' drive encompasses every aspect of his life. From his schoolwork to co-curricular activities to being a friend, Phillips has a vision. That vision includes always offering a solution when citing a problem.

"I have great admiration for the high morals and self control which he maintains in today's world; he is candid, honest and respectful with everyone he deals with. If a problem mission protocol," a nonchalant Phillips said, not expecting everyone to understand. His friends obviously respect him and they cite his personality not his accomplishments when they honor him.

"Aside from my experiences with Jack in student organizations I am honored to say I have been a friend of his for three years now. Jack is a great friend, willing to open in mind in order to help others," BSG Congress member Ashwin Ramakrishna '04 said. "He is a great friend but more importantly is a great, intelligent person whom I am very proud to say I know."

Out of his many accomplishments, Phillips wants to remember the people and the motivations behind what he has done.

"I'm proud of the things that will endure: the friendships that I made and the education that I've received," Phillips said. "[My definition of success is] in nightmares frustrated and dreams realized."

Caring president

TIMER From page A1

University T-shirt. She said her mom is her best friend and that she just started listening to country music because of its emphasis on family and stories.

To hear her talk about life's small pleasures and laugh with a tinge of a nasal chortle, it is hard to believe that only a few months ago Timer was pounding the gavel at BSG meetings as president.

Forever associated with the title, Timer looks back at her BSG presidency as a time of tremendous growth. Self-described as a thinking introvert, Timer appreciated the challenge of being forced to lead.

Amidst the long committee meetings, the numerous proposals and endless budgets, Timer found time to create her infamous PowerPoint presentations while striving to make a connection with the students serving in BSG.

"My goal was to get other people excited about [BSG business] by motivating members to achieve change themselves," Timer said.

Timer utilized "Public Comments" time during meetings to invite deans or members of the administration to talk with BSG representatives. She desired to open communication lines between students and the administration.

"If someone, after working with me, is motivated to be a better person—whether through loving others, giving unselfishly of their time or other resources, taking a risk based on faith, I consider it a successful experience," Timer said.

Timer's BSG term has been applauded over and over again by students and administration alike.

"She truly is a giver. She has grown into a perceptive and strong leader, both comfortable at the helm as well as behind the scenes. She is concerned about results as opposed to credit," Associate Dean of Students Karl Conrad said.

Timer saw her role as BSG president as an opportunity to give something back to Bucknell and serve the community that has taught her life lessons. Servanthood and humility encompass her life beyond her duties at BSG.

Faculty noticed Timer's enthusiasm and love for life in the classroom. Working toward a bachelor of science in biology, Timer has spent extensive amounts of time with the science faculty.

"Two things really strike me about Katy. One is her attitude—she is unfailingly cheerful, helpful and motivated. It makes her a great student, a devoted member of the community and a fun person to interact with," Assistant Professor of Biology Don Dearborn said. "The other thing that I find remarkable about her is her genuine interest in exploring ideas and values. Doing this well requires intellectual maturity, and Katy excelled at it."

The positive outlook Timer possesses has cultivated an excitement for learning.

"One of Katy's attributes that has made her such a joy to have as a student is that she is almost always upbeat and positive. She works hard and takes her studies seriously—but on top of that she actually looks like she is enjoying them," Associate Professor of Biology Marie Pizzorno said. "It is that enthusiasm that has made her the kind of student that every professor loves interacting with and having in class."

Timer's love of learning has propelled her into the world of teaching. Timer will teach high school biology or chemistry in the Mississippi delta with Teach for America. Her career choice does not surprise friends.

"She is a brilliant student, has tremendous leadership skills, but more important than anything she was, and continues to be, a friend and confidante," said Lina Nandy '04, Timer's first-year roommate. "She leads a fairly public life at Bucknell, especially when she was the BSG president, but she is genuine in every sense of the word and has the kind of unadorned honesty that is endemic only to the strongest kind of friendships."

Friend Emily Demich '04 echoes Nandy's sentiments.

"She wants to listen, she wants to help, she wants to make people feel loved and appreciated. And the reason she has such a good head on her shoulders and a big heart that reaches out to others is due to the role God plays in her life. She wouldn't hesitate to say the same," Demich said.

Faith was a point Timer emphasized herself.

"My faith inspires me. I've learned a lot about my faith and it's the driving force behind why I try to serve others," Timer said.

Timer recently became a Bible Study leader for InterVarsity Christian Fellowship. She says her desire to continually grow provoked her to try something new.

"Katy is looking to make a difference in this world," Conrad said. "[She] is an amazing and talented woman who I believe will make an enormous impact in this world."

Now Hiring...
ALDI INC.
✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
✓ Flexible AM hours
✓ $9.51 an hour wage
★ Please fill out applications at the store
ALDI INC.
110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

IN THE EMPLOYEES' BATHROOM
YOU'LL FIND MAGAZINES.
IN THE EXECUTIVE BATHROOM, A NEWSPAPER.
200 Market St.
Scranton PA 17001
570-286-5671
The Daily Item
BLACK AND WHITE EDITION

News

Nyquist supports biochem major

NYQUIST From page A1

"It was a great experience to live abroad in a community where life was very different," Nyquist said. "You can't live in a developing country without it having an impact."

Nyquist lived and worked in the Philippines from 1963 to 1965. She taught general science to the people there and was part of a group responsible for designing, testing and reworking a curriculum that would be beneficial to the people they were working with.

Nyquist said it was these experiences with the Peace Corps that led her to her decision to go into teaching.

"Life in a developing country is something everyone should experience," Nyquist said.

Nyquist joined the University in 1972, and has since continued to travel abroad. She received a Fulbright scholarship in 1994 and spent her sabbatical working in India. She thinks a return trip to India may be possible during her retirement.

Stemming from all her travels, Nyquist has developed excellent relationships with many of the international students who attend the University.

Nyquist is very involved in helping with new-student orientation because she knows what it is like being in a new place and having to try to figure out how a different culture works.

"Someone who has been to these places that these students come from better understands the needs and concerns of international students. You understand where they come from and what life was like before and how difficult it can be adjusting because you have been there yourself," Nyquist said.

Recently, Nyquist was presented the Bucknell-Burma Bowl award for her support of international students. Nyquist said helps out because "it's fun, and you make good friends."

She said she especially enjoys working with the international graduate students because they have the biggest change, and many times have to fend for themselves.

Nyquist's dedication runs to all her students, and Associate Professor of Biology Marie Pizzorno said Nyquist dedicates a lot of time to talking and working with students.

"I totally enjoy the students and the classroom," Nyquist said.

"I have the chance to mentor developing scientists—it's fun."

"Dr. Nyquist is also a great cook. Frequently, she invites her students, and sometimes the entire biology department to her house for dinner. I stayed at Bucknell for two summers, so I got to enjoy many meals at Dr. Nyquist's house. She always sent me home with lots of leftovers," Rebecca Casaday '98 said.

Nyquist diligently worked to earn a prestigious National Institute of Health research grant, something that is extremely difficult to receive and something a lot of younger professors admire, Pizzorno said.

Nyquist was one of the driving forces of putting together a cell biology/biochemistry program, aimed at meeting the changing needs of students. Nyquist said many students would double major in biology and chemistry, but would not have the opportunity to take advantage of a strong liberal arts program. Biochemistry joins the two fields, and although it still has a heavy course load, it allows students to experience some of the other fields on campus.

"I think it is an exceptionally important program," Nyquist said. "We designed it so students could get training in both biology and chemistry without having to sacrifice other courses that they could take."

Nyquist said it is important to try new things, because she has benefited from being exposed to different courses as well, which she says have helped to make her teaching methods even stronger. Nyquist has not just taught biology classes, either—she has taught foundation seminars, which she said she learned a lot from and enjoyed.

Pizzorno, who will become director of the biochemistry curriculum after Nyquist leaves, said Nyquist has been extremely helpful mentor in her life.

"I can't imagine her sitting down and being retired. I am sure she will keep busy," said Pizzorno, reflecting on Nyquist's enormous amounts of energy and dedication to her students and the University.

Nyquist has to agree and does not think she will be tied down long.

"I'm sort of a workaholic," Nyquist said. "I would like to take a couple months and catch up on sleep. After that, I would love to pick up a volunteer job abroad for a short period of time."

Other than that, she does not have any certain plans, other than doing whatever she pleases.

Faden revitalizes downtown culture

FADEN From page A1

It was rumored at the time that a large Cinelplex was going to buy it and turn it into a stadium-seated theater.

"I certainly didn't need to buy the theater—I had more than enough challenges at Bucknell—but something had to be done, and had to be done quickly. When it comes to historic theaters of the Campus's significance, there are no second chances. I didn't want to live here with regret, with what might have been," Faden said.

His intentions then and now are to not continue owning the theater; rather, Faden hopes to turn it into a self-sustaining non-profit institution. It will eventually become community owned, which the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership supports wholeheartedly.

"We [both the University and the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership] consider the theater the crowning jewel in the vitality of downtown Lewisburg," said Charlie Pollock '70, vice president of student affairs.

The theater has had seven film festivals since Faden has owned it: world animation, documentary, Library of Congress, Middle Eastern and three French.

"One of my ideas with the Campus Theatre was to build an audience for different types of movies, and the festivals were one way to really highlight that," Faden said.

The first festival was the Library of Congress festival. It was sponsored by the Library of Congress at just 50 theaters in the nation. The festival included more than 40 films, all restored classic American prints. There was a live orchestra for the silent films, and actress Janet Leigh introduced the film "Touch of Evil."

"This festival received national attention, and was even mentioned at CNN.com."

"Obviously, when we program a festival, we're trying to raise the status of Bucknell, the Campus Theatre and central Pennsylvania to a regional and national level of awareness," Faden said.

The French film festival held last spring did more than just offer students a chance to view films—it actually got students involved in the process. A French class was invited to join Faden on a trip to the Library of Congress to find silent films to play before each of the features.

In the end, however, a blizzard prevented students from going on the trip to Washington, D.C.

The previous owner of the Campus Theatre was Jacqueline Stiefel; her family had owned the theater since its birth. At that time, it played only big Hollywood movies, and each one would stay in the theater for at least a month—for a maximum of 12 movies per year.

The theater has tried hard to live up to its role as "something to do" in Lewisburg. Students are to become interested in the Campus Theatre, but it was not always that way.

"When I took over at the Campus Theatre, students didn't really go. That is something we have worked on a lot, and over the past two years we have seen a huge spike in student attendance," Faden said.

Many students consider it an incredible benefit for the school (tour guides even mention it), especially for first-year students, who bring the town and the campus closer together.

"The theater is vital to Lewisburg, historically, culturally and financially. Lewisburg is inextricably linked to Bucknell; therefore, the theater is also important to the University," said Robert Kallin, vice president of development and university relations.

With all of the work Faden has done with the Campus Theatre, it might be easy to forget that he is also a film professor at the University—in fact, he is pretty much the whole film department.

Maybe that is why Kallin said, "I'm really not sure when Eric sleeps!"

Right now, the University has a film minor. Faden hopes it will soon become a film major, but he knows he cannot do it alone.

"I really hope they get someone in addition to me—you have to. You can't have film majors graduating with only the warped Eric Faden-version of film studies; with any major, you need a diversity of professors," Faden said.

One class Faden offers is a film production class, in which the class is actually a production team. This spring, the class is putting together a documentary about University traditions.

"Professor Faden is very enthusiastic about the hands-on aspects of film making," Bekah Clark '04 said.

"Ultimately we need to bring those two things together, film studies and theater. What we have here is unique on a national level, we just need to make it happen," Faden said.

Faden has also somehow found the time to make a film, putting it together with Assistant Professor of French Renee Gosson in 2002. During post-production, he was also organizing the Library of Congress film festival and in the midst of major renovations of the theater.

"The experience, especially working with Renee, was just fabulous. It shows how faculty collaboration can produce really unique distinctive work that they wouldn't be able to produce otherwise," Faden said.

So what are Faden's plans for the future, other than to develop a film major, turn the theater into a self-sustaining non-profit institution, continue renovations, make films, advise the University's film club and host more film festivals?

"I really want to sleep," Faden said.

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Assistant Professor of English Eric Faden has brought culture to both the campus community as well as the Lewisburg community by revamping the Campus Theatre and by offering free movies and French Film Festivals throughout the year.

University will miss its poli-sci prankster

COLEMAN From page A1

course offered by the political science department.

When the department discussed creating an internship program, it had two different objectives in mind. First, the program should allow students to give back to the Lewisburg community. Second, the programs would give students real-world experience to supplement their education. The department advertised a position with the internship program as an element of the job description—enter Coleman.

Coleman had control over the design of the internship course, and he wanted to achieve both objectives set out by the department.

"I wanted to make sure it wasn't just a high school community service program. I wanted it to be a course where students could learn about a particular job and/or gain skills," Coleman said.

Associate Professor Tony Massoud, chair of the political science department, said Coleman's work on the internship program was excellent.

"Professor Coleman has been instrumental in initiating and implementing the local internship program. He has done an admirable job coordinating this course and insuring that students have a meaningful experience," Massoud said.

The theme of the course revolved around ideas of civil society.

"One question raised in the course is whether or not government and public policies work better together if there is a flourishing civil society," Coleman said.

Students have internships in non-profit, community organizations and the government sectors, including opportunities with East Buffalo Township, the Union County district attorney, Heiter Community Center and Union County United Way. According to Coleman, the class often continues its discussion of these issues past class hours.

"I'm only committed to spending one hour in the class. Students 'make' me stay one hour and 45 minutes at a time," Coleman said.

Coleman is the type of professor who is willing to stay beyond class hours and help his students, according to Assistant Professor of Political Science Susan Tabrizi.

"He's generous with his time for students and also time for his colleagues. We're always in each other's offices, talking about teaching and political issues," Tabrizi said. "I couldn't ask for a better colleague." Jessica Orsulak '05 took the internship course last spring.

"Professor Coleman was definitely one of the more the animated professors I've had. He was great at helping students solve problems, especially working out internship conflicts," Orsulak said. "I think the internship course was really beneficial to students as a stepping stone into real political and community involvement. Professor Coleman helped students get real world experience."

Coleman finds it difficult to pinpoint his favorite part of the internship course.

"I enjoy all of the internship courses so much," Coleman said. "I made the students do journals this year, and I enjoy reading them so much. It's gratifying when I can see the extent to which they're making a difference in the community and building towards a career."

Coleman will be leaving the University this year to return to his home in Rhode Island.

His future plans include co-editing a book on children and their role in public policy, as well as being a guest scholar at Taubman Center for Public Policy at Brown University, where Coleman earned his doctorate.

"You can take the boy out of Rhode Island, but you can't take the Rhode Island out of the boy," Coleman said.

Coleman jokes about his educational history—every school he has attended from grammar school on has been in Rhode Island. He received his undergraduate degree from Rhode Island College, his master's degree at the University of Rhode Island, and his Ph.D. from Brown University.

Coleman will miss many things about the University.

"I'll miss everything," Coleman said. "I love my classes—both the actual subject matter and the students in them."

Coleman will miss playing tricks on his colleagues. His favorite target is Assistant Professor of Political Science Scott Meinke.

"I regularly pull pranks on Meinke, (pronounced 'main-kee') such as putting overheads of goofy things into his stack of overheads for class. One was a picture of Alan Greenspan eating his glasses. That might be what I miss the most," Coleman said.

Meinke expressed similar sentiments.

"I am not sure how I am going to go on without Joe to keep me amused," Meinke said. "Next fall, there won't be anyone to plaster my office with SpongeBob SquarePants stickers or to secretly insert ridiculous pictures of Alan Greenspan into my lecture notes. And that is a very sad thing."

Coleman is not just a prankster. Most importantly, Coleman is a teacher.

"Coleman has a real dedication to his students," Tabrizi said. "Meinke said that Coleman has been a great colleague and has influenced him for the better."

"Joe and I arrived at Bucknell at the same time, and I know my own work has been strengthened by having Joe as a colleague here. His innovative approaches in the classroom and his intensity about his teaching have been contagious, I think," Meinke said.

The internship program will continue after Coleman's departure, under the direction of Robin Jacobson. The process to apply for the course will begin in early October with a meeting of the different internship hosts and the students.

After filling out applications, students will be matched with internships, with priority given to seniors and political science majors. Once they are matched with a host, students meet with them and create a job description so they know their responsibilities and the evaluation criteria.

Lauren Scott '04, who is currently in the internship program, said that the course was worthwhile.

"Professor Coleman has set up a wonderful internship program in the community that allows students interested in state and local government to have a hands-on experience in addition to a weekly class component," Scott said. "My internship this semester with the Union County Public Defender's Office has provided me with new skills and valuable insight into the legal system that I will be able to carry with me as I head to law school in the fall."

While the program will continue, Coleman will definitely be missed. "Professor Coleman is a wonderful colleague, and his ever present laughter and enthusiasm will be missed by the department," Massoud said.

Tabrizi struggled to describe Coleman.

"Can you get me a thesaurus to find all the greatest words in it?" Tabrizi said. "He's a tremendous colleague, and I will miss him in a major way."

Coleman said he will also miss working with his colleagues and the University students. "I'm sorry to have to leave Bucknell," Coleman said.

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.

Milton, PA

570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday &

News

Transition team begins changeover

By SANDI-JO GALATI
Senior Editor

After the selection of Brian Mitchell as the 16th president of the University, the board of trustees commissioned the Presidential Transition Team to assist Brian and Maryjane Mitchell in making an effective transition to the University, beginning before their arrival on Aug. 10 and continuing afterward, organizing their schedules and transitioning to the University before arriving Aug. 10.

Chair of the board of trustees Susan Crawford '69 and Chair of the Presidential Search Committee Norman Garrity '63 created what they think to be the first Presidential Transition team in University history with helping the new president to acclimate to his new role in the campus community.

"There thought were some concerns that we were going to be the gatekeepers and decide what communications Dr. Mitchell should see and what he should not see. In, when in actuality, our goal is to facilitate what he wants to achieve according to have done and his own order of priorities order," Director of Institutional Research and Presidential Transition Team Member Jerry Rackoff said.

The appointment of a new president is also a transition for the whole University community, role of the transition team is not limited to the president. The team also wants to ensure that members of the campus community members quickly to become familiar with Brian and Maryjane Mitchell, and then help the community transition to the new leadership how to work with the Mitchells in the most effective way possible.

"It is really a question of how we can help the Mitchells get ready for Bucknell and how we can help Bucknell get ready for the Mitchells," board of trustee member and Chair of the Presidential Transition Team John Mathias '69 said.

In addition to Rackoff and Mathias, Associate Professor of Geology Mary Beth Gray '84, Professor Emeritus of Psychology Douglas Candland, University General Counsel Wayne Bromfield and Leah Cunningham '06 are current members of the Presidential Transition Team.

The team has recently decided to appoint a member of the University support staff in order to further represent the different campus constituencies. Much of the team's work so far has been to manage the overwhelming amount of correspondence Mitchell has received from members of the campus community.

"Mitchell has received an enormous volume of e-mails and letters since the announcement that he would be the next president of Bucknell," Rackoff said. "These communications made him feel tremendously welcomed by the community, but it has been impossible for him to respond appropriately to all of the individuals who wished him well."

Rackoff said Mitchell hopes he can meet everyone who took the time to contact him and thank them more directly.

In addition to the large volume of correspondence, Mitchell also received many questions he was not comfortable addressing since he had not yet assumed his position as University president. In response, Mitchell asked that all correspondence from the campus be forwarded through the transition team until his arrival on campus in early August. Mitchell also received a number of questions and requests that he cannot evaluate adequately at this time.

In response, Mitchell asked that all correspondence from the campus be forwarded through the transition team until his arrival on campus in early August.

The transition team first met with Brian and Maryjane Mitchells on March 30 to establish priorities and determine how else they would like to the best use the resources of the transition team. Proposed activities were placed in two deciding categories—those that must be completed before the Mitchells' arrival in August, and those that must be completed before the arrival of the Mitchells in August and those aspects that can wait until they are on campus.

"The transition team has been an invaluable resource and a great organization vehicle that has assisted us as we think about what first steps must be taken to get us to Bucknell swiftly and as painlessly as possible," Mitchell said.

Currently, the team is assisting the Mitchells with working several priorities: ensuring the timely completion of important administrative details, such as University identification and photos, benefits packages and registration; maintaining communications between with the Mitchells and the campus; and helping providing them with the necessary materials to learning about the culture, history and processes of the University through various documents and conversations.

"Mitchell is a proven, seasoned university president, so it is not like there is any training involved here. He understands the job. What he does not fully understand yet is Bucknell, its culture, its history, its nuances, and that is what we are hoping to expose him to by identifying people in the community who can help him with that," Mathias said.

As the student representative to the Presidential Transition Team, Cunningham spoke with Mitchell recently about student concerns, such as downtown relations, Greek life and the alcohol policy.

"I enjoyed my conversation with Mitchell because he was very receptive to student opinions and will be very receptive to working to understand student issues," Cunningham said. "One of the things I thought was really great was that he asked for advice. I told him the most important thing is to be visible on campus. It will be difficult, especially in the first year because he will be pulled in so many different directions, but student life is the crux of why students come to Bucknell."

The transition team is also overseeing the preparation of the president's house for the Mitchells' arrival. The board has decided that the public rooms on the first floor should be redecorated permanently in a Victorian décor that complements the exterior of the building. This decision will help to control future decorating costs for the president's house, and it is consistent with the University's careful attention to the rich history of its older buildings and the architectural integrity of the whole campus.

"As an historian, Brian Mitchell will appreciate a return of the interior of the president's house to the authenticity of the period architecture," Mathias said. The transition team has appointed a subcommittee of community members to help with the restoration. The decorating team will look at furniture once located in the president's house and is also considering rotating pieces from the University art collection in the house.

The Mitchells only request was that the house is able to accommodate a large volume of visitors.

"It was their preference that the house be suitable for large-scale entertainment," Mathias said. "They had something like 1,600 people in the president's house at Washington & Jefferson in the month of September last year."

The transition team expects to complete the The president's house should be completed before the Mitchells arrive. The transition team will then continue to work actively with the president through the end of the first semester.

At that point, the role of the transition team will decline, as Mitchell begins to take over his own education in continuing conversations with many members of the campus community.

"The campus community can teach us what it means to be at Bucknell, why it is special and what opportunities exist that will permit all of us who spend these next years together to say that the enormous amount of work that will be necessary to move the University forward was ultimately worth the effort," Mitchell said.

NEWS BRIEFS

By Chelsea Hetrick

Pellet-gun culprit pleads guilty

Bucknell student Joshua B. Carr plead guilty to two counts of aggravated assault, according to The Daily Item, under a plea bargain dismissing eight other charges. He faces $50,000 in fines and up to 20 years in jail for shooting at and wounding several students. Carr will testify against University student Antwan T. Kennedy as part of the deal, who allegedly also took a few shots and will face six counts. The University suspended Carr, but he has not been expelled.

Altered E. Coli may combat cancer

Researchers in the U.K. have used genetically altered E. Coli, the food-poisoning bacteria, to insert a cancer-killing enzyme into cells, according to bbcnews.com. In these tests, 90 percent of the cancer cells were eliminated. The bacteria carried purine nucleoside phosphorylase, which works with 6-MPDR, a strong cancer-killing drug. The growth of mouse tumors slowed when injected with the combination, as many cancer cells died. Many think the addition of the bacteria will also promote the body's immune system to combat the tumor.

Nazi trials begin in Italy

A military court in Northern Italy has recently begun the trial of three former German officers for killing 560 civilians according to bbcnews.com. The mass killing occurred in 1944, just after the liberation of Florence. Witnesses recalled the gathering of mainly women and children, who were shot and burned. The Italian government discovered these files 10 years ago; they had remained hidden for 60 years. The case will not continue until June; four more suspects will be tried.

Fatherless mice created

According to The Washington Post, Japanese scientists created two mice without male fertilization, an unnatural phenomenon known as parthenogenesis. They inserted chromosomes from two female mice instead of a pair from each sex. Scientists may use this knowledge with stem cell research, but will not yet try it in humans. Both insects and birds are capable of reproducing this way, though mammals cannot in nature. In order to make the procedure work, the scientists removed DNA from immature eggs and inserted it into mature eggs. The blocking of gene H19 caused gene Igf2 to increase its activity. The latter creates proteins for regulating fetus growth. This technique cannot yet be useful due to its low efficiency; only two of 598 mice carried out the full term.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY'S 6TH ANNUAL

Chrysalis

FRIDAY, APRIL 23, 2004
9PM - 1AM
GERHARD FIELDHOUSE

FEATURING
GEORGE CLINTON & PARLIAMENT FUNKADOLIC

100% D's covered
Beer and Wine 21 years of age and older
Buck's Thirst Relief

Ticket Sales Begin: Wednesday, March 10th
Tickets may be purchased at the CAP Center, L.C. 300, Bucknell, L.C. Box Office, or on-line at www.bucknellchrysalis.com

$10 for BU Students; $15 for all other BU Faculty, Staff, and Guests
*Taxes may be reserved

PRESENTED BY THE ACTIVITIES AND CAMPUS EVENTS/ TRADITIONS COMMITTEE

35' Bungee Run

Surfing Wrestling

EVERYTHING
For Your Next Celebration!

...Dunk Tank, Popcorn Machine,
Snow Cone Machine, Pig Roasters,
Grills (Charcoal/Propane)
Wide Variety of Inflatables

• Sums, Wrestling Wall
• Rock Climbing Course
• Bungee Run

• TENTS
• TABLES • CHAIRS

WEST BRANCH RENT-ALL
Sales • Rentals • Repairs

441 N. 10th St., Lewisburg Pa 17033 • (717) 523-6221

Mya's Coffee House
Delicious Hot Chocolate available
with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Totem Tattoo
Area's Finest Custom Tattoo
and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
-State of the Art Body Jewelry-

Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
-743-7830-

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Houses & Apartments

Available 2004/05 1-6 Bedrooms

Call: 570.524.2121 x3

Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

BRYNWOOD Rentals

Seniors : It's time to CELEBRATE
and share fond FAREWELLS....
Make it MEMORABLE!

From pig roasts to an elegant cold buffet, we offer menu ideas to create your perfectly prepared celebration.
We also offer a variety of favorite entrees, hors d'oeuvres & party platters to go.

If you're looking for a place to have your party or special dinner our Brynwood Room accommodates up to 125 guests and Rusty's South Room is available for dining affairs up to 30 guests.

PLAN NOW!! BRYNWOOD catering

For more information or reservations call us at:
Brynwood Catering: 570/524-2121 x 1

Domino's Pizza

524-9000

Sunday-Thursday 11 am- 1 am
Friday & Saturday 11 am- 2 am

Student Special:
Large One topping Pizza $7.99
3 Medium One topping Pizzas $13.99

Party Deal:
5 or More Large Pizzas
$6 each

Wing Deal:
Medium Pizza and 10 Wings/Kickers
$10.99

you are having trouble understanding something your professor is teaching. everyone else in the class seems to get it. what do you do? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

ANTIPERSPIRANT/DEODORANT

roll-on
courage

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP in Delaware (which is not a separate legal entity). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Opinions

THE Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 133, Number 11
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Salemme '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sarah-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editor
Meghan Ball '06

Assistant News Editor
Chelsea Hetrick '07

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRosa '05
Chris Styers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Josh Herwitz '06
Keeley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wadlinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kiddler '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombbeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Advisor
James F. Lee

On-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publication Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its advisor, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

OHRL must improve room selection process

With each successive year the Office of Housing and Residential Life has improved the room-selection process; however, there is still significant room for progress. This year has shown that the room-selection process has failed to be as fair as it should be for all students.

Every year, many students search for a way to obtain a single room. For many, that search leads them to substance-free housing—Choosing Healthy Options in a College Environment.

Students who choose to live in substance-free housing are given some of the best rooms on campus. Unfortunately, there has been an increasing number of students who have chosen CHOICE for the preferential room selection as opposed to the substance-free environment.

CHOICE has created a wonderful environment for a number of students, and it is important for these students to stay together in order to maintain a sense of community that enhances the substance-free lifestyle that they desire. While anyone who wants to live in substance-free housing should be permitted to do so, there are those who do in fact abuse the CHOICE system and who drink alcohol under the age of 21 or use illegal substances. CHOICE residents who do not abide by this lifestyle not only harm the members of CHOICE, but the campus community as a whole.

The current CHOICE-only dormitories, Kress and Harris, should remain as CHOICE residence halls, and if there is overflow of interest in CHOICE, the remainder of the CHOICE students should not be given the best, most popular singles on campus in which to live. Instead, the remainder of students should be placed in CHOICE.

blocked halls throughout the campus. The CHOICE program has provided a wonderful environment for students who choose to live substance-free, but an increasing number of students apply for CHOICE due to the preferential housing options offered. Without the complete preferential housing for all of CHOICE, only the students who are truly interested in substance-free housing will apply. In addition to this problem, the manner by which room selection has historically been done has created frustration for the majority of the upperclassmen. By the time non-block-booking rising seniors register for their rooms, all of CHOICE, quiet halls, block-booking seniors, juniors and sophomores have already chosen their rooms. This policy creates an unfair preferential treatment toward certain groups, and it has created a system in which certain sophomores will receive substantially better housing than their senior counterparts.

Seniors who block book and seniors who want to find housing alone or with a friend should be afforded the opportunity to do so before any other classes.

The OHRL has created a successful system overall; however, there is room for improvements that would better the student housing situation as a whole.

Presidential candidates should learn from local race

By CHARLES MITCHELL
Contributing Writer

It is only April, and I am already bored to tears with the presidential election. We know it is going to be President Bush vs. John Kerry, thanks to the Democrats' shiny, new, super-early primary process.

As you might guess, I already know who my guy is. It is really a no-brainer: I think that the only issue that matters right now is the war on terror, and Bush is the candidate who I think will do what is needed to beat the Islamo-fascist thugs we are up against.

Of course, that is far too simple a view. How can one side be "good" and the other be "evil," some so-called progressives are surely opining. That is cool. Frankly, I have better things to do—like whining about this coming November—than trying to explain why flying planes full of civilians into buildings full of civilians is evil, whereas killing the people responsible for that is self-defense.

Like I said, there is no way I am voting for Kerry the Frenchman (oh, is that bias-related harassment?), but that does not mean I am terribly thrilled about the prospect of pulling the lever for Bush. The reason for this is that on domestic issues, I think Bush lacks principle in a big way. The only reason he is getting my vote is that the craven Kerry lacks principle on all issues. Lesser of two evils, you know?

As an aside, Kerry seems to actually see his flighty voting habits as a good thing—they allow him to pretend he is something other than a limousine liberal who married into money and now wants to take everyone else's.

It works nicely; anytime Bush accuses him of voting against supporting the troops or cutting people's taxes or any other cool stuff like that, Kerry can trot out a vote in favor of those things, because he's done both. For example, he voted for the Iraq War itself, but against the money to feed our troops and reconstruct the country.

The problem is that Bush does much of the same on issues like spending. He talks a good game about shrinking the size of government, but according to The Wall Street Journal, the Washington bureaucracy has grown more on his watch than during the administration of any other recent president. He said everyone should be treated the same way regardless of race, taking a lot of heat in the process, but then his administration submitted an amicus brief accepting the idea that racial "diversity" is an acceptable criterion for discrimination in college admissions. There are more. In some respects, this Bush behavior is humorous—it has made the Democrats whine that he has mercilessly cut social spending and is killing little children everywhere, and in the next breath scream until they're red-faced that we are spending too much, and the deficit is too big.

But the purpose of elected office, at least I think, is not to make the other party do stupid things. It is to stand for some set of principles regarding the way things ought to work and how the world ought to be. Bush does that admirably on foreign policy, and I love him for it. If only he could do the same on issues like spending, rather than blowing in the wind with each new poll, I might be able to actually get excited about voting for him. And, at least it seems to me, he might get more respect from people across the political spectrum.

Right now, it is easy to blast Bush's positions on lots of domestic issues because if he does not have a principled basis for taking them, he also does not have principles with which to defend them. Instead, he can only say something about how a certain percentage of the American people support him or (in the case of the so-called Federal Marriage Amendment) that "this is the way it's always been." That is not convincing; that is pandering.

Apart from being unworthy of any respect, pandering is also boring. This is why I am not excited about November. But I must say I am awfully excited about Tuesday. That is when Pennsylvania's GOP primary is held, and it is looking to be a good time for lovers of principle.

As you may have read in The Bucknellian previously, Rep. Pat Toomey is challenging incumbent Sen. Arlen Specter in this primary. Specter has been in the U.S. Senate since 1980, longer than most current University students have been alive, and in those 24 years he has produced a record of nonsensical pandering that makes Bush and even Kerry look downright consistent.

Sometimes he is a moderate, sometimes he is a conservative, but all the time he is just plain annoying. The only thing he does not change to fit the prevailing winds of the moment is his arrogant attitude. The best example I can remember is from during the impeachment of former President Clinton. Specter knew the impeachment trial would likely fail and that it was not terribly popular, but he also knew he as a Republican was expected to vote "guilty."

Instead of standing on any kind of principle, he voted neither "guilty" nor "not guilty," but rather "not proven." He chalked that up to some kind of Scottish law he uncovered, despite the fact that the U.S. Constitution, which obviously governs impeachment proceedings, directs senators to vote "guilty" or "not guilty." Wimp!

Now, Specter is a Republican, like me. And a lot of people think he has got a better chance in November against a Democrat. Even Bush and Pennsylvania Senator Rick Santorum, the latter a conservative stud if there ever was one, are stumping for him on the grounds that he will help Bush win Pennsylvania.

I think that's a lame argument. I like Toomey. I do not agree with his every position (for example, I think his endorsement of the Federal Marriage Amendment is asinine), but I love that he will defend any of his positions, even when he knows the questioner does not agree, based on the principles involved.

I saw this in Lewisburg, particularly when his votes on the FMA and the No Child Left Behind Act were both challenged. I also love the fact that he had the testicular fortitude to come all the way up here despite the fact that the University administration forbade him from speaking on campus in order to help make the point that the current policy banning candidates (except Ralph Nader) from campus is wrong.

Agree or disagree with Toomey, it is clear that he has principles and is willing to fight for them. He is taking on an entrenched and very powerful incumbent, and he was willing to help us University students take on our administration's hypocrisy. He swore he would only serve three terms in Congress, and he is keeping his word. He is living proof that politics and principle need not be separate things.

Bush and that annoying senator from Massachusetts could learn a lot from Toomey. Our politics would be the better for it (not to mention more interesting), if they did.

Bush doctrine makes draft likely

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

The doctrine of foreign policy the Bush administration has been articulating over the last three and a half years—preemptive warfare—is dangerous. In fact, it is dangerous in many ways.

Aside from alienating former allies and the international community, enraging rogue states, and provoking terrorism, one of the most real problems that the Bush doctrine creates is with regard to troop commitments and troop casualties.

Since President Bush declared the war in Iraq over on May 1, 2003, there have been 548 American servicemen killed. Additionally, there are about 135,000 troops currently stationed in Iraq to quell insurgencies and "keep the peace."

This large number of troops is required to maintain the policy of the Bush doctrine, and its emphasis on unilateral action and preemption, will eventually require more troops. Where there these troops come from?

This aggressive foreign policy will require a draft. Not tomorrow, not the next day, but there will come a time if current policy continues where there will be no other choice. Even right now, troop deployment time is being lengthened due to a lack of replacements.

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and the administration continue to call a large-scale draft "unforeseeable" but there is real reason for concern. Not only are these the same people that thought Iraq would be an in and out job, but just in the last two and a half years troops have entered Iraq, Afghanistan and Haiti; all places that they had not been before. Additionally, we have standing commitments for troops in many places including the Korean peninsula and Germany.

Recruitment for the armed services is currently declining not only because of poor wages but also because of the recklessness with which the United States currently sends its troops into battle. If citizens do not think their government is making prudent decisions when it comes to going to war, they are not going to volunteer on behalf of that cause, a potentially life-giving decision. A military draft is something I hope that this country never faces, but by simply looking at the choices that the current administration has made, it does not seem out of reach to think about.

One of the most real problems that the Bush doctrine creates is in regards to troop commitments and troop casualties.

The Bush doctrine implemented over a long period of time is unsustainable. The United States' current carelessness in sending troops into harm's way will not only come back to hurt itself in the form of poor foreign policy outcomes, but also in the form of high casualties and domestic unrest.

In order to curtail the current and future damage that the country is imposing on itself, Bush needs to be voted out of office in November. By showing through the ballot that the citizens of the United States do not support sending troops into combat needlessly, future administrations will be more careful before deciding to put young men and women in harm's way for questionable goals.

Write a letter
to the editor.
Everyone's doing it.

e-mail bucknellian@

Opinions

Morning classes are part of college life

By ERIC HARRISON
Contributing Writer

Every morning, thousands of Bucknellians wake up to the siren-like sound of a squawking alarm clock. Maybe it beeps, maybe it is the radio and if you are really lucky, maybe it will be the fire alarm at some ungodly hour. But no matter what your preference, the sound of the alarm clock has to be one of the most excruciatingly painful noises ever to navigate the passages of the auditory canal.

For students at Duke University, the inevitable racket of early morning will be coming a half an hour later next fall. In a decision designed to help sleep-deprived students, the Duke canceled all 8 a.m. class sessions for the upcoming semester.

This sounds like such a good idea at first—so good in fact, that you start salivating at the mere thought of never having to set that annoying alarm earlier than 8 a.m.

If you can get past your initial delight, wipe up the puddle of drool accumulating beneath you and truly consider the implications of this decision, you will undoubtedly see how flawed the plan to end sleep deficiency at Duke actually is.

The 8 a.m. sections were all replaced with 8:30 starting times and several 9 a.m. classes were moved up to 8:30 in order to prevent overcrowding during the rest of the school day. At the absolute most, some people will be gaining a half an hour of sleep. At the same time, many others will be giving that half an hour back.

Is anyone even going to take advantage of the extra half an hour? I think not. The more likely scenario is that rather than going to bed at midnight or 4 a.m. (or whatever the time may be) as they used to, students are going to stay up 30 minutes later, knowing that they have that much more time to sleep in the morning.

Furthermore, if you push class start times back a half an hour, where does that half an hour go? It doesn't vanish; it just gets tacked on somewhere else. Consequently, at some point during the day when you used to have time to do something constructive, you are now sitting in class cursing the new schedule.

Adding insult to injury, one official from Duke advised weary students to take an afternoon nap. What a great idea! That way I won't be tired when I should be sleeping, and can do the work I should have been doing in the afternoon in the middle of the night.

The key to ending sleep deprivation among university students is not changing the earliest start time. Most collegians had to wake up much earlier than 8 a.m. to get to high school on time. Why then are we getting less sleep now?

The answer is twofold. First, there is the curriculum. It goes without saying that college is more difficult than high school. We have less class, but more work; less instruction, but harder tests and more resources, but more assignments. If administrators are so concerned with sleep deprivation, why don't they try attacking the problem at its source?

The Bucknell Handbook dictates a minimum of 40 hours per week (or 3-plus hours per hour spent in class) spent studying or doing class work. Lower that number to 35 hours per week and adjust the curriculum as necessary. What you end up with is five less hours of work for students, which theoretically translates into an extra hour (as opposed to half an hour) of sleep per school night.

This is only a hypothetical example and its inception is highly unlikely, but the idea is valid. By reducing the workload, students would, if they so chose, have more time to sleep.

This leads into the second remedy for collegiate sleep deficiency—time management. In high school, everything was planned out and structured. Contrarily, most higher-education institutions charge students with the responsibility of effectively budgeting their time.

Chances are if you are suffering from sleep deprivation, you do not manage your time very well. This is not necessarily a bad thing. Extracurricular activities of all types take up significant amounts of time. Whether you are competing for a sports team, participating in theater or working a campus job, you are sacrificing valuable hours of the day. This is a sacrifice that you chose to make. Now you have to live with the potential ramifications.

Of course, not all of our time-management issues are a result of athletics, clubs and other activities. Most people have some sort of social life and often times, in some cases too often, that social agenda supersedes the academic priorities of students. Many hours are wasted throughout the week on things with no academic relevance. Again, this is not necessarily a bad thing, but it is a choice that you make and have to live with.

What did Duke accomplish by bumping those classes back? If students wanted to get the right amount of sleep, they would. But right now there are just more important things to do than snooze. This is college and, regardless of the average hours of sleep a student gets per night, it is not going to be the healthiest four years of our life—but it may very well be the most enjoyable.

So whether your idea of a good time is studying all night for a physics exam and nailing it, hoarding the beer pong table for hours on end or getting eight hours of sleep so you can perform at your maximum physical potential, go for it. Live it up for four years; you have the rest of your life to sleep.

Letters to the editor

Campus activism looked down upon

To the Editor:

Over spring break, I traveled to Nicaragua with the Bucknell Brigade. It has been undoubtedly the best experience of my two years here. We were appreciated and supported and applauded by our peers for our efforts to learn about and change our world outside of the University.

What I have also learned in my two years, however, is that the encouragement of such activism often gets left at the University's doorstep. I am amazed, saddened and angered at how often the most socially conscious and proactive individuals and organizations on this campus are ostracized for their progressive efforts instead of being applauded.

I see an aversion to change here—a complacent attitude that upholds the status quo, no matter how unjust it is or how much it needs to be changed. This is not to say that I don't see the incredible work that is done by many University students.

Whether students and groups are working for feminist or lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender issues, human rights, economic justice, or other progressive concerns, I unfortunately see that many of them are also alienated, verbally accosted, or what may be worse, ignored.

I simply do not understand. College students were once known, and in many ways continue to be known, for their activism. We have the knowledge, the ability and the power to change society, even if it is on the microscopic level of our campus. In order to do this, you have to shake things up. You must take risks.

Sometimes you have to work outside the system. Often you must go against the convictions of your community and your closest friends, even being the daunting and difficult task as that may be.

Change is good, and it is necessary. The campus at large must appreciate, encourage and be truly proud of those who work to achieve it. Obviously, 3,500 people are not going to agree on any one issue, but without any attempts to change the status quo, we will never progress as a campus community or in the world outside of the University.

Sincerely,
Laura Romah '06

Bucknellian must guard civil liberties and free speech on campus

To the Editor:

I truly enjoyed participating in the "Free Speech Forum" held at the University on April 1. I was heartened to see that many on your campus—including Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 and Chaplain Ian Oliver, who were both excellent participants—are interested in discussing the pros and cons of the University's current harassment policies as they relate to free speech. I sincerely thank all those who came out to be a part of the discussion—particularly the members of your administration.

During the course of our discussion, both Pollock and Oliver mentioned that they have no specialized expertise in the area of the First Amendment or sexual harassment law. I would like to take this opportunity to offer my experience and knowledge in that area. If the University would like to submit its new bias-related harassment policy to me, I promise to review it and send it back with my comments.

Navigating the interplay between harassment law and free speech can be quite tricky—even for those of us who specialize in the field. For those who do not have a background focusing on the interaction between free speech and federal and state regulations, the process must be maddening.

University administrations such as yours have had to contend with the outdated or misleading information disseminated by government agencies for years, as well as the difficulties of understanding U.S. Supreme Court and lower court precedents, the influence of state contract law on the policies of private universities, and the many unconstitutional state and local laws that remain on the books.

Based on what I observed at the forum, I think the University's administration realizes that its current policies are untenable, and that it is working to improve them. I commend it for doing so, and I would be pleased to help the University improve and refine its policies to avoid future misunderstandings of students' free speech rights.

Foundation for Individual Rights in Education Co-Founder Harvey Silverglate and I became involved with First Amendment issues because of our interest in journalism. We quickly developed an appreciation of the fact that we all suffer when official power threatens free speech, in whatever form. For this reason, I encourage The Bucknellian to impress upon its readers the importance of the debate over the University's harassment policies, and the continuing necessity to be vigilant in protecting all of our civil liberties.

Sincerely,
Greg Lukianoff
Director of Legal and Public Advocacy
Foundation for Individual Rights in Education

BUCC not behind inflammatory flyer

To the Editor,

It has come to my attention that many people on campus are under the impression that the Conservatives Club is responsible for making and disseminating the yellow flyers titled "Things to know before attending Bucknell" that were passed out at Saturday's Campus Life Fair. This assumption is false.

The BUCC did not, and would not, play any role in distributing said flyers. Our role at the fair was limited to running a table like everyone else—and actually finding the people who were passing out those flyers and asking if they knew they were being mistaken for us. (They had no idea.) We were aware that some prospective students and their parents thought that the flyers were ours, but hoped (in vain, apparently), that the rumor would die.

I can understand why people might assume that the flyers were ours—they do address some issues we have raised—but frankly, doing something like that is not our kind of politics. We do what we do because we love the University, and because we think it is above some of its present policies, not because we hate the place and like making trouble.

Were that the case, it would be far easier to transfer than spend a whole lot of time and effort trying to change the University for the better. With these principles in mind, encouraging people not to come here does not make sense. What we do encourage prospective students to do is come here, and if the fancy strikes them, to make a difference.

That, I think, is something we need to (and will) make more explicit. In the interim, please know that those flyers were not ours—and that when we do see fit to protest a University policy or address an issue, we never do so anonymously (unlike, for example, those individuals who recently plastered the campus with bizarre posters about BUCC President Charles Mitchell '05 and Martin Wade '06).

We think the only principled course of action is to be accountable for what you say and do—and we certainly do not want to be associated with something we did not do, like those flyers.

Sincerely,
Dominic Rupprecht '07
BUCC Vice President for Special Events

Job well done for 'Ms. O' column

To the Editor:

I am writing to commend you, and to thank you, for an excellent response from Ms. O in the April 9 "Sex in the Bubble."

I am a co-founder of the Safe Space program designed by the Office of LGBT Awareness to help all students feel safer and more comfortable. We all work very hard to create a more accepting and friendly environment for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender students at Bucknell (and hopefully beyond).

To see The Bucknellian cite correct and useful information to a brave student through such a popular medium of communication on this campus is truly empowering. On behalf of the LGBT Office and every LGBT student here and elsewhere, I thank you for your professionalism and humanism.

Sincerely,
Alyssa Schneebaum '06

Phi Beta Kappa not given enough recognition

To the Editor:

As the parent of two University students, I always enjoy reading The Bucknellian when it arrives at our home. I find the articles stimulating, interesting and informative.

However, the April 9 edition left me puzzled. There was an entire section dedicated to sports at the University, while only one photo and blurb about the amazing students who received the Phi Beta Kappa award.

Has Bucknell buckled under the high pressures of the sports world? I send my children to Bucknell for its high academic reputation and its ability to match this with a well-rounded environment. Should The Bucknellian not reflect this? Phi Beta Kappa is huge. Give those hard-working individuals as much press as your hard-working athletes. Get your priorities straight.

Sincerely,
Mrs. Belmont P '05 '07

Alternative fair trade products are needed

To the Editor,

It is a shame that with so many resources available at such reasonable prices, there are only two venues on campus that carry fair-trade coffee products, and these are limited to one variety. It also seems strange that so few coffee consumers actually know how and under what conditions non-fair-trade coffee is produced.

A recent article in Time magazine, called "The Coffee Clash," discussed some of these issues associated with free trade versus fair trade coffee. Coffee is the second-largest import, after oil, in this country. Supply increases over the last decade have led to the impoverishment of 25 million coffee farmers in dozens of countries.

Ten years ago, Mexican coffee farmers received one-third of every dollar spent on coffee. These farmers now receive 10 percent of every dollar of coffee sold, a huge reduction in profits. Profit is only one piece of the puzzle, as many of these farmers work in horrendous conditions and work 12-15 hours per day.

The University can continue to ignore this reality in its decision to offer almost no fair trade coffee on campus. Why does it refuse to sell clothing made in sweatshops while encouraging coffee that is produced under certain conditions? The University can choose to be socially responsible on the coffee front, as

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Meet the candidates: BSG election day nears

Class government elections will be held Thursday. This supplement provides brief information on the candidates.

2005

President

Helen Britz

Activities: Alpha Lambda Delta National Academic Honor Society; National Society of Collegiate Scholars; Bucknell Student Government; served as a Congress member (2001-2); Vice President of the Sophomore Class (2002-3); Secretary/Treasurer of the Junior Class (2003), and member of the Student Affairs Committee, Student Lectureship Committee, Bucknell Cable Committee and Community Judicial Board, Alpha Chi Omega Sorority, Amnesty International, French Club.

Comments: "I have served in various capacities within BSG as a three-year member and always with a smile on my face. I have a lot of BSG experience, pay attention to student needs and am eager to convey my ideas for senior year to our class government. I have really enjoyed serving my class in the past and hope to continue doing so for the remainder of my Bucknell career. Thank you!"

Vice President

Lauren Donnelly

Activities: Philanthropy Co-Chair of Alpha Chi Omega; BSG Class of 2005 Representative; Student Assistant at Betrand Library; women's crew first and sophomore years.

Comments: "Since coming back from Spain last semester, I have really tried to become more involved in campus life. I became a representative, and have enjoyed the duty tremendously over the past three months, but now I want to do more! I have great concern for the welfare of the student body, and I will work with diligence and give 110 percent effort!"

Gordon Stransky

Activities: Member of Community Service Team; past Chairman of "Service Saturdays" community service project; Chairman of recent "Neighborhood Thaw Out" community service project.

President

Rob Glassman

Activities: Cap and Dagger; Film Club; Club Soccer; University Theatrical Productions; Tech Services at Weis Center.

Comments: "Exclamando, and that's what we're going to be... we're going to be cool."

Megan McGraw

Activities: Junior Fellow of the Global Residential College; Teaching Assistant for MGMT 242; member of the BSG Appropriations Committee; Recruitment Chair for Kappa Alpha Theta; Greek Outreach Chair for CCM.

Comments: "I want to strengthen the BSG presence on campus so that change may occur immediately when students feel that it is needed. My ultimate goal is to structure the workings of the class government so that all of my fellow students may be able

President

Adam Weinberg

Activities: Current BSG class representative; Orientation Assistant; Reunion Ambassador; intramural volleyball; basketball; and softball.

Comments: "What will I do if I'm president, you ask? To be a great leader is my No. 1 task. I'll run great events and show our class is the best. Choose your current representative, 'cause you know I got zest! Get out the vote and don't try to hide. Elect Adam Weinberg because I'm bona fide!"

Lindsey Penek

Activities: Captain of varsity soccer, varsity lacrosse and varsity track; President of Social Committee; President of Environmental Club; Attended multiple Leadership and Diversity Conferences.

Comments: "I believe I am a suitable candidate for the position of president due to my leadership experiences in academics and athletics. I believe that I will be able to serve as a strong link between the Bucknell student community and the administration. Please Vote Lindsey Penek on April 29 for president of the Class of 2007."

Vice President

Paul Darakjian

Activities: VISTA/Admissions Greeter; four years of class government in high school, including class vice president.

Comments: "I am running for vice president because I want to use my time at Bucknell to make a difference in the lives of all students. I want to address pressing issues that effect the students now, rather than later. Through cooperation and hard work I want to make our time here the best it can be."

Laura Mlynarski

Activities: VP Class of '07; Club/Varsity Wrestling; Club Lacrosse; Student worker at the alumni office; Swim instructor.

Comments: "Getting involved with BSG has been wonderful. Organizing events as well as working to make campus wide changes has been very rewarding. I'm thrilled with my position and how many of you approach me with your ideas. I appreciate your previous support and hope to represent our class again next year."

Liz Lorson

Activities: BSG Congress; BSG Community Committee Chairperson; Emerging Leaders (coordinator for '04); RHA; ACE; CCM; VISTA; Social Justice Residential College.

Comments: "I had a blast representing our class this year. Becoming the BSG Community committee chairperson gives me experience that I would love to bring to the vice president position, vice project; member and community service Chairman of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity; ODK National Academic Honor Society; member of Downtown Taskforce, Management 101 TA.

Comments: "I hope to use the experiences and relationships I've formed to make a positive impact on the decision-making process. I'm excited at the chance to work on issues that have special meaning for the senior class. Whoever wins, I look forward to a senior year that's made even better through the hard work of BSG officers and representatives."

Marissa Schmidt

Activities: BSG congressman First and Sophomore year; Vice President Junior year (first semester); Mts Residential College; Junior Fellow; Snowboarding Club.

Comments: "Serving in class government has made me more involved in the college community, and much more fun. More importantly, I'd like to see BSG and continue working on the projects that are behind when going abroad; putting a student member on the board of trustees and reinstating honorary degrees. We've all seen, in this past year, how important the student voice is, and I think it vital that we have student representation on the most important and powerful governing body of this University."

Taylor Harchak

Activities: Residential college program; U.S. Congress Leadership Conference; CCM; the Union County Red Cross; BSG.

Comments: "There are many opportunities that BSG can offer to make improve Bucknell. It's important to utilize BSG's resources to help students at B.U., and to ensure that class '05 has a great senior year. BSG is a strong organization, we have a voice as students, and that voice is BSG."

Corinne Morgan

Comments: "I've been part of the Class of 2005 congress for two years in a row, and definitely know what it takes to get the 2006 to say, upon graduation, that they had the time of their lives here at Bucknell."

Vice President

Dan Mackarevich

Activities: Bucknell Student Government Congressmen 2003-2004; Council of Greek Life (COGL) 2003-2004; Public Committee 2003-2004; Orientation Assistant 2003; Bucknell Men's Club Soccer; Intramural Soccer and Flag Football.

Comments: "You'll be seeing a lot of changes around here. Papa's got a brand new bag."

Jared Mannello

Activities: Class of 2006 Congress; Pre-Med Society; Society of Physics Students; Physics TA; Student athletic trainer; softball team.

2007 along with my dedication and excitement! I believe our class and BSG have a lot of potential and I hope to have the chance to make the possibilities a reality!"

Ana Avila

Comments: "I am running for this position because I am interested in making things happen for you. Your ideas and concerns are the most important thing to me in making a difference. I feel I possess the leadership and people skills necessary to have clear communication between you and the administration. Being an international student will allow me to provide a new outlook on issues such as, the current alcohol policy and student involvement on campus."

Raychel Maguire

Comments: "I believe that with a well-run board of representatives, our time here at Bucknell can leave a tremendous impact. We are all more than qualified, but I can promise my dedication to all of you will be far more than most. I hope you chose to elect me for the position you see me best suited to fit your needs. Thank you!"

Secretary/Treasurer

Brianna Evans

Activities: Class of 2007 Secretary/Treasurer.

Comments: "This year we danced with devils, had First Nights and made new friends, so re-elect Brianna Evans, and the laughs will never end... I have loved being secretary/treasurer of the first-year class and hope you will give me the chance to do it again."

Nicole Holbrook

Activities: Bucknell Cheerleading squad.

Comments: "Recently, our squad won first place at the NEPA cheerleading challenge. Through this experience my freshman year I have truly learned the meaning of being a team player and leadership. I have successfully balanced cheerleading and academics and learned valuable time management skills. There are any things I want to improve, including cable television in the dorms, meal credits, and working closely with administrators to continue in shaping the alcohol policy among others. With a new president coming into office, I feel this is a great opportunity to implement change."

Steven Doremus

Comments: "You need people like me. You need people like me so you can point your fingers, and say, 'that's the bad guy.' So, what dat make you? Good? You're not good; you just know how to hide. Howda lie. Me, I always tell the truth—even when I lie."

Congress

Secretary/Treasurer

Larissa Brown

Activities: BCEJ; BSG Class of '05 Congress member; Alpha Chi Omega VP of Intellectual Development; Bucknell College Democrats; former BU varsity water polo member(2002, 2003); BOF counselor 2005.

Comments: "Hi, Class of '05! As our senior year gets closer, I've been trying to become more involved around campus. I'm dedicated to everything I do and I know I would put my best effort into this position. I would love the chance to represent our awesome class and help make our last year here the best!"

Congress

Brendan Lingle

Activities: TA for Statistics and Economics Courses.

Comments: "I am running for BSG to accommodate rising seniors who wish to have great senior nights and (possibly) remember them, and am interested in helping choose the commencement speaker to represent our class next spring. Additionally, fixing the debacle of an alcohol policy we have is of utmost importance to me."

Emily Rietz

Comments: "I have been on BSG since I was a sophomore. I really enjoy working behind the scenes to get things accomplished, no matter how small they may seem. I've been abroad this semester in Spain, and being here has made me realize the value of our governing system at Bucknell. I hope to continue as an officer for the Class of 2005 and further the projects and issues that I worked to complete in the fall."

Comments: "I feel that my past experiences with BSG on campus, as well as being student government president in high school, will give me a great background to hold such a position. I hope my fellow classmates will allow me to be the one leading our class as vice president next year."

Michelle Johnson

Activities: Interservice Christian Fellowship; Junior Fellow for Humanities Res College; Chi Omega sorority; Secretary of College Democrats/Liberal Alliance; writer and copy editor for The Bucknellian, intern at the United Way; member of Bison Volunteers (volunteer at the nursing home on Saturday mornings).

Comments: "I want to facilitate change on this campus. Previously, I know students have felt that the administration has ignored them or disregarded them on issues such as Chrysalis and the alcohol policy. It's especially important to focus on this now when we have a new president coming to the University."

Joseph Becsey

Comments: "Why I want to be in BSG: See Steven Doremus—he sums it up beautifully."

Jenna Camann

Activities: Emerging Leaders Coordinator; Orientation Assistant; Curriculum Committee Representative; Vice President of History for Hill; Student Ambassador for Reunion Weekend.

Comments: "I'm running for our class congress because I want to extend my involvement and commitment to Bucknell by being a part of our student government. Though I'm involved in many organizations here on campus, I would love to be a representation of our class both the four years we are here and beyond."

J.T. Dean

Comments: "Over the past year I have enjoyed serving as your current congressman on BSG. I have helped accomplish many goals to improve the school and the Class of '07. With my knowledge, experience, and care for our university, I would continue to benefit the school community greatly with a second term. Thank you."

Jenna DiPaolo

Comments: "Being on BSG this year has been amazing. The broken goal posts, successful students, and enthusiasm on First Night convinced me that our class will definitely be remembered at Bucknell. 'The work never ends but college does' —Tom Petty. Make the most of your time here. Re-elect Jenna DiPaolo."

Loren Fishkind

Comments: "Having the opportunity to be a representative in BSG this past year has been a wonderful experience that I want to continue. Being involved in making the decisions for our class has given me the knowledge that will be beneficial for the future. I hope that I am re-elected and given the opportunity to be a '07 representative."

Carl Marchioli

Comments: "Carl Winslow had family matters; Carl Marchioli does not. Carl Malone is the mailman; Carl Marchioli is not. Carl Lewis has one nine Olympic gold medals; Carl Marchioli did not. Carl Marx was crazy; Carl Marchioli is not. Vote Carl Marchioli—class of 2007 representative."

Tom Wagner

Activities: Social Justice Residential College; Sophomore Residential Assistant; Emerging Leaders; Activities and Campus Events; Intramural flag football; VISTA; Alumni Weekend Student Ambassador; Social Director for Catholic Campus Ministry.

Comments: "By electing me to Congress I will dedicate my time and effort to help to improve Bucknell and voice the views of my peers. I also hope to bring together our class as a whole with new ideas, activities and events."

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Commentary: Getting the most out of the presidential campaigns

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

This is the first of a two-part article that will offer suggestions for what students can do over the summer to stay informed and prepared for the November election.

Summer is when many of us take a temporary reprieve from the weighty responsibilities we undertake during the school year and look for other things to fill our time. Whether it is sun-bathing on the beach, trying to make some cash or broadening our horizons through travel or internships, the summer is not totally devoid of time constraints.

While we shift gears to pursue other endeavors, the campaigning politicians are also shifting gears to increase their support for the November elections.

Since campaigns do not stop until the election, we should not stop following them. For many of us, this is the first election, or at least the first presidential election, that we are able to vote in, and it is imperative that we stay informed. There are some simple steps all of us can take this summer to keep in touch with the political world.

One of the easiest ways that we can keep up-to-date is through e-mail. E-mail requires no searching for the information you need to stay in the loop, and is delivered right to your fingertips.

As long as you have access to e-mail from your summer destination, it is a simple tool you can use to keep up with what is going on out on the campaign trails.

Almost every party has some sort of e-mail newsletter that it periodically sends out in order to keep its supporters and potential supporters informed about the most important issues in the campaign.

It is very easy to set up an account for yourself from Web sites so that you can periodically receive updates. By visiting the Republican home page (gop.com) and the Democrat home page (democrats.com), you are sometimes prompted with a pop-up window that allows you to register for e-mail updates instantly. While these updates will be biased, they also help to keep up with the major issues of the campaign.

Sometimes when visiting the page you have to click on a side-bar link to register, but overall it is a relatively simple task, and worth the trouble.

If your loyalties do not fall within the confines of the two major parties, it is also easy to access e-mail updates for independent and third-party candidates. At Ralph Nader's page, votenader.org, you can click on a link to receive updates on the Nader campaign. In addition, you can check out politics.com and examine the long list of other parties in the United States. Some of these parties have chosen to run candidates for president, while others are running candidates for other offices.

E-mail updates from major newspapers and other news sources across the world also serve as a great, quick reference to what is going on. Free updates through washingtonpost.com or news alerts from CNN.com are also great resources for finding quick headlines.

While looking at electronic services, just browsing the Web can lead you to a lot of information about candidates and what they are doing. For local and state races, your local news source should provide information on the candidates you can vote for.

CNN.com, MSNBC.com and even the British BBCnews.com have a lot of good information on the American elections that can be found fairly easily. The information changes rapidly so it is not as good of a source as actually picking up a newspaper or watching a news broadcast, but it will help to catch you up on the major events concerning the elections that happened in the last day or so.

For most of us, this is the first election, or at least the first presidential election, and it is imperative that we stay informed.

It is worth checking out the Web sites of the major parties, as well as the parties of the independent and third party candidates. All the sites are very informative and for someone who is not already committed to voting for someone in November, a few quick browses through these pages might help make up your mind. The third-party websites are often more informative than those of the major candidates, since those parties tend to be aimed at spreading information more than winning votes.

Another way to get involved in the campaign is to make a donation. Making a donation to a campaign effort is almost a sure invite to receive more information from the candidate's campaign. It requires little effort to make a donation of almost any amount to the candidates. For the presidential campaign, amazon.com has a link that allows people to make direct donations to campaigns. Howard Dean was very successful in raising awareness and funds through the Internet when he pursued the Democratic nomination.

Although there is no link for local races, do not forget that there are other races going on close to your home. During a presidential election year, some of the other races get pushed out of the way to make room for big headlines involving presidential debates and campaigning.

Many members of Congress are up for reelection in November, and they too will want your vote.

Of all the things that you can do this summer with minimal time commitment, one of the easiest and most important things to do is register to vote. Registering to vote over the summer is a good idea because once you are back on campus in the fall it will be more difficult to register.

Each state's registration process differs, but for the most part anyone over 18 can go to a local court house and register. You can also register when you renew your driver's license. Many states allow you to register to vote as you register your new license.

It is also likely that candidates will want to assist you with registering in hopes of gaining your vote in November. You can check on any of the candidates' sites and you will find a link to register to vote. Additionally, it is possible that local candidates will hold registration drives or even go door-to-door trying to get people registered. They want to register as many potential voters as they can, so making it easy for you is in their best interests.

These are just a few things that you can do during your busy summer to stay informed and involved. Next week we will examine actions that those who want to get their hands a little dirtier can take to stay involved in politics.

Bombings strike hearts of Iraq, Saudi Arabia

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

Even though it is barely three weeks old, April 2004 is already the most deadly month in Iraq since coalition troops entered its borders last March. Five car-based bombings in and around the Basra region Wednesday morning killed 68 Iraqis—including 18 schoolchildren.

"The terrorists are willing to kill as many people as they can indiscriminately," the top U.S. administrator in Iraq, L. Paul Bremer, said to MSNBC. "They seem to have killed quite a number of schoolchildren today in addition to policemen."

Meanwhile, a suicide bombing in Riyadh, the capital of U.S. ally and Saudi Arabia, killed four and wounded 148 others. The high casualties are mostly due to the serious damage dealt to the General Security building, which houses a branch of Saudi Arabia's defense department.

In both attacks, most of the casualties were civilians—the Iraq bombings took place at police stations and training centers, and struck a pair of vans transporting students to school only by bad fortune. The Saudi attack was aimed at the Traffic Department of the bureaucracy.

According to The New York Times, police found and defused five bombs before Wednesday's attack. They point to this pattern as evidence that al-Qaida is behind the strike.

Who else sends suicide bombers to blow up cars in the midst of urban centers? Who else has publicly said we are going after the Saudi state, "a serene official said to CNN, also noting that simultaneous attacks are an al-Qaida trademark."

The Saudi government has declared "total war" on terrorism in the wake of the bombing—the third such attack in the past year.

"We advise them to hand themselves over because it is better for them ... I also tell those who sympathize with them or cover for them that they are no less criminal. Everyone must stop this, or the hand of justice will reach them," Price Nayef, Saudi secretary of the interior, said to NBC.

In Iraq, The New York Times reports that Seimens and General Electric—two major contractors helping to rebuild Iraq's infrastructure—have suspended a large proportion of their operations until the situation stabilizes. Company spokesmen emphasize that they are neither shutting down completely nor permanently, but the fact remains that Iraqis will see delays in their access to electricity and medicine.

"While it's [work on the Iraq power grid] being affected, it's not shutting down. I think we're still in good shape as far as getting our equipment back up before the summer really hits us," said Jim Hicks, senior adviser for electricity for the Iraqi administration.

No one has claimed responsibility for the Iraq bombings, possibly because of the high collateral damage it created. However, multiple sources report that U.S. officials have named Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, a Jordanian militant with ties to al-Qaida, who has been linked to other bombings in Iraq and who exclusively acts against Shiite areas like Basra.

Meanwhile, open combat in Iraq still focuses on the Sunni city of Fallujah. As of press time, residents of the city who fled to avoid being caught in the fighting are being prevented from returning, as coalition soldiers inside Fallujah are still subject to attack by insurgent forces. No progress has been made in attempts to get the rebels to turn over their arms to Fallujah's local authorities.

Corrections

Last week's article, "BUCC adds to string of speakers," contained two inaccurate statements. While the club does receive funding from outside sources, including alumni and private foundations, BUCC speakers are paid primarily by University funds, not by alumni donations as stated in the article.

The Counterweight will be published three times per semester next year, not three times over the course of the year.

Terror. Religion. Money. BSG. Congress. Disney.

Talk about them all in one place.

Write for B&P.

e-mail Cstyers@

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961! Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs

www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Welcome to

"A Cut Above Hairdressers"

A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys

WALK INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails

TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3

Your appointment 523-7645

Look Your Best With A Tan From

TANNING WORLD

216 St. John Street, Lewisburg

Next to Fisher's Meats

Open 24 Hours

Free Membership

Lowest Prices

Speed System Beds with NEW Lamps

New 2004 StarPower 548 Bed

Call 523-7254 or tanningworld@hotmail.com

MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH

THE PASSION OF THE CHRIST

He died for us and rose again.

What is your response?

Join us as we honor Him each Sunday at the

MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH

Sunday Services at 10:30am and 6pm

Wednesday 6pm Community

Meal and 7pm Bible Study

1.2 miles north of Rt. 45 off Forest Hill Road in Mifflinburg.

For more info call 966-4899

Extreme Auto Works

49 S. Old Trail

Shamokin Dam

570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior

Detailing*Paintless Dent

Repair*Bumper

Repair*Windshield Chip

Repair*Leather & Vinyl

Repair*Audio & Video

Installation*Auto

Customizing*Lockout Service*

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.

promotional products • fundraising items

embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel

awards • trophies • business gifts

800-538-8009

Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009

www.tannmonproducts.com

Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!

GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER

(minimum 36 pieces)

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650

130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250

17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600

210 S 7th Street (4 Bedroom) $975

111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800

30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375

622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $800

622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $550

121 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $625

123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675

40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska

Villager GMAC Real Estate

521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837

570-523-3244

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Bin Laden tape offers "truce"

By ELLIE STEWART
Staff Writer

An audiotape was aired Thursday on the Arabic language television network Al-Arabiya, threatening revenge on the United States while offering a truce to European countries. The CIA speculated that the speaker on the tape was "likely" Osama bin Laden. Al-Arabiya has declined to answer questions as to how it received the tape, but the speaker referred to events of less than a month ago.

CNN reported that in the audiotape the speaker threatens the United States with retaliation for the death of Hamas founder Sheikh Ahmed Yassin, who was killed March 22 in a helicopter attack which was allegedly targeted at Israelis.

In addition to this killing, the speaker makes references to the Sept. 11 attacks on the United States and the March 11, 2004 attacks on Madrid as examples of the specific actions that al-Qaida has taken in response to attacks on Muslims.

The speaker offers a "truce or non-aggression pact" with any European nation that stops attacking Muslims, according to CNN.com. In addition, he gives a three-month deadline, beginning on April 15, for countries to cease these attacks.

Much like the preceding audiotapes this one shows al-Qaida's grip on the "principle of economy of mean."

"You can commandeer water attention with a $20 cassette recorder the same way you can commandeer an airplane with $3 box cutters," wrote Geoffrey Nunberg for The New York Times.

With the speaker giving European nations the opportunity to enter into negotiations, pressure was put on the leaders of these nations to declare their allegiance and enter into more formal discussions with the Osama bin Laden and al-Qaida strategist Ayman al-Zawahiri speak before the 2001 U.S. invasion of Afghanistan. Bin Laden has not been seen since Afghanistan's Taliban government fell, but the periodic release of voice recordings indicates that he is still alive and controlling al-Qaida.

United States over their policies and partnerships.

"It is completely unthinkable that we could start negotiations with bin Laden. Everyone understands that," Italian Foreign Minister Franco Frattini said, according to CNN.

President of the European Commission Romano Prodi said there would be "no negotiating under terrorist threat," and France and Germany also rejected any offer to negotiate.

"I don't think we need Osama bin Laden to start telling us how to handle our political affairs," British Prime Minister Tony Blair said, after meeting with U.N. Secretary Kofi Annan.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said this tape is a "clear reminder that we are still at war." He also said, "This is a clear reminder terrorists will use any excuse to carry out evil attacks on innocent human beings," reported CNN.

In reaction to this unambiguous reminder of war, important talks ensued between President Bush and Blair concerning the U.S.-led coalition in Iraq. Their talks showed the formation of a united front about Iraq as the coalition continues to face violent resistance from some Iraqi factions.

The leaders held a joint news conference at the White House Friday in an effort to boost public morale and support for the mission in Iraq despite the rising number of casualties.

Bush said "the stakes in Iraq are clear" and that "Britain, America and our allies can either break our word to the people of Iraq, abandon them in their hour of need... or we can help them defeat their enemies. The prime minister and I have made our choice: Iraq will be free... we will not waver in the face of fear," according to Fox News.

"Since Sept. 11, 2001, our two countries have been friends and allies standing side by side and we will continue to do so. Our plan is clear and we shall see it through. We will do what it takes to win this struggle, we will not yield, we will not back down either on us or defenseless civilians," Blair said.

Blair and Bush are also attempting to formulate a strategy to get the United Nations to issue a new resolution to address the Iraq dilemma. They are hoping that this new resolution will encourage more countries to help ease the burden on the United States and Britain.

The United States currently has 130,000 troops in Iraq and Britain has 12,000. The United States has suffered nearly 700 casualties, while the British have lost almost 60.

Blair is hoping for increased foreign aid because more British deaths in Iraq could severely affect Blair's image. The timing is also an issue because Blair will run for re-election in 2005.

Made public at such a critical time, this tape has served to assess and confirm the level of commitment that the United States can expect from its allies. While there are still issues surrounding the Palestinian territory, having Blair's support has the potential power to convince Americans and other members of the foreign community to support the mission in Iraq.

Blair and Bush are also attempting to formulate a strategy to get the United Nations to issue a new resolution to address the Iraq dilemma. They are hoping that this new resolution will encourage more countries to help ease the burden on the United States and Britain.

The United States currently has 130,000 troops in Iraq and Britain has 12,000. The United States has suffered nearly 700 casualties, while the British have lost almost 60.

Blair is hoping for increased foreign aid because more British deaths in Iraq could severely affect Blair's image. The timing is also an issue because Blair will run for re-election in 2005.

Made public at such a critical time, this tape has served to assess and confirm the level of commitment that the United States can expect from its allies. While there are still issues surrounding the Palestinian territory, having Blair's support has the potential power to convince Americans and other members of the foreign community to support the mission in Iraq.

Blair and Bush are also attempting to formulate a strategy to get the United Nations to issue a new resolution to address the Iraq dilemma. They are hoping that this new resolution will encourage more countries to help ease the burden on the United States and Britain.

The United States currently has 130,000 troops in Iraq and Britain has 12,000. The United States has suffered nearly 700 casualties, while the British have lost almost 60.

Blair is hoping for increased foreign aid because more British deaths in Iraq could severely affect Blair's image. The timing is also an issue because Blair will run for re-election in 2005.

Made public at such a critical time, this tape has served to assess and confirm the level of commitment that the United States can expect from its allies. While there are still issues surrounding the Palestinian territory, having Blair's support has the potential power to convince Americans and other members of the foreign community to support the mission in Iraq.

Blair and Bush are also attempting to formulate a strategy to get the United Nations to issue a new resolution to address the Iraq dilemma. They are hoping that this new resolution will encourage more countries to help ease the burden on the United States and Britain.

The United States currently has 130,000 troops in Iraq and Britain has 12,000. The United States has suffered nearly 700 casualties, while the British have lost almost 60.

Blair is hoping for increased foreign aid because more British deaths in Iraq could severely affect Blair's image. The timing is also an issue because Blair will run for re-election in 2005.

Made public at such a critical time, this tape has served to assess and confirm the level of commitment that the United States can expect from its allies. While there are still issues surrounding the Palestinian territory, having Blair's support has the potential power to convince Americans and other members of the foreign community to support the mission in Iraq.

Blair and Bush are also attempting to formulate a strategy to get the United Nations to issue a new resolution to address the Iraq dilemma. They are hoping that this new resolution will encourage more countries to help ease the burden on the United States and Britain.

The United States currently has 130,000 troops in Iraq and Britain has 12,000. The United States has suffered nearly 700 casualties, while the British have lost almost 60.

Blair is hoping for increased foreign aid because more British deaths in Iraq could severely affect Blair's image. The timing is also an issue because Blair will run for re-election in 2005.

Made public at such a critical time, this tape has served to assess and confirm the level of commitment that the United States can expect from its allies. While there are still issues surrounding the Palestinian territory, having Blair's support has the potential power to convince Americans and other members of the foreign community to support the mission in Iraq.

Blair and Bush are also attempting to formulate a strategy to get the United Nations to issue a new resolution to address the Iraq dilemma. They are hoping that this new resolution will encourage more countries to help ease the burden on the United States and Britain.

The United States currently has 130,000 troops in Iraq and Britain has 12,000. The United States has suffered nearly 700 casualties, while the British have lost almost 60.

Blair is hoping for increased foreign aid because more British deaths in Iraq could severely affect Blair's image. The timing is also an issue because Blair will run for re-election in 2005.

Made public at such a critical time, this tape has served to assess and confirm the level of commitment that the United States can expect from its allies. While there are still issues surrounding the Palestinian territory, having Blair's support has the potential power to convince Americans and other members of the foreign community to support the mission in Iraq.

Political

Ramblings

Is Bush too close to Saudi Arabia?

Peter—

The simple answer is yes, but since I'm not a simple-minded conservative (not saying all conservatives are, just most), I will expand with a more complete answer. The better answer is yes, but that's both good and bad.

The bad part is that the Bush family has a history of giving the Saudis unprecedented consideration and unwarranted access. The elder Bush became associates with the Saudi royal family through the Carlyle group, where the Saudis were looking to leverage investment dollars into political contacts. In an early sign of the family willingness to sell out average Americans for personal gain, George H.W. Bush served as the Saudi agent in the Reagan administration and as the Saudi protector during his four-year term.

New, Junior is going above and beyond his father's actions. If one puts any faith in Bob Woodward's journalistic credibility (after two recent examples of being too cozy with the Saudis, Bush apparently showed the Iraq war plan to the Saudi government before sharing with key U.S. officials, like Secretary of State Colin Powell).

"W" also readily accepted a Saudi proposal to lower oil prices just before the election. Lower oil prices certainly are a good thing for our economy and our country in general, but for the timing of the Saudi help to be aimed at influencing our election is horribly wrong. Why doesn't Bush ask the Saudi and OPEC to increase crude supply now, helping our economy sooner rather than waiting for October?

These two examples illustrate how Bush is too cozy with the Saudi government, directly at the expense of Americans. If it weren't so sad, I'd say it's ironic that this president, who has had such a hard time making any friends in the world community, is now going too far in the other direction, acting as though his first job is to protect and serve the Saudi Arabian royal family.

Jason—

Yes, it is ironic, but for a different reason. The irony, Peter, is that liberals will find a way to criticize Bush under any circumstances. One of Bush's heaviest criticisms has been that he has failed at foreign policy and been incapable of making strong foreign allies. Recently, the media started focusing its attention on the Bush administration's strong and healthy relationship with Saudi Arabia, and what happens? He's criticized for actually having an ally!

To make matters worse, you trace this "family corruption" back over 25 years. In doing so, you completely disregarded 12 years of two Democratic administrations, each of which were heavily criticized for worsening relations with Saudi Arabia.

Both the White House and Saudi royal family have denied allegations that lowering gas prices is politically timed with the November election. With all due respect to Woodward's journalistic credibility, it is possible, believe it or not, that there was a miscommunication or even... exaggeration. I certainly would not put it past a journalist to exaggerate; Peter, you're a journalist and you just exaggerated. Where is your journalistic credibility?

The Bush administration will act immediately and capably to bring down oil prices to help the U.S. economy. In any case, a strong and growing economy today would favor everyone, including Bush on Election Day.

Peter—

While it's true that the party out of power generally plays the role critical of the president, I must confess that Bush makes it too easy to criticize him. He failed to get any substantial international support beyond Britain for the Iraq war. In doing so, he harmed relations we need with other countries to help keep us safe. Sept. 11 was partially the result of worldwide intelligence failures, but in the post-attack environment, we've shunned the very people we should be working with to help keep us all safe. What I'm criticizing Bush for now is using an ally to help himself, not the people he is supposed to serve. In both cases, he is failing in one of his fundamental roles, even though he is failing in two opposite ways.

People have to make their own determination of credibility, but I'm inclined to believe Woodward. The Bush administration has stretched, repackaged, hidden, ignored and abused the truth too much in the past three years for me to take their word over a man who has less to gain and less at stake. Bob Woodward doesn't need to make up things for his book to be a bestseller or to improve his reputation; Bush needs re-election to finish obliterating our tax code, environment, labor rights and women's rights.

Jason—

Women's rights? Do you really want to go there? At the risk of sounding repetitive, I did not accuse Woodward of lying to sell books or to improve his reputation. Rather, I am simply saying that it's possible in a bureaucracy as great as the U.S. government that some truth can be stretched or communication errors made. I will give Woodward the benefit of the doubt and believe that what he says is what he was told. But it's completely ridiculous to interpret his book as actual U.S. foreign policy initiatives.

The question I have for the liberal critics is "What specific issue in 2004 would be OK to lower oil prices without it being interpreted as politically motivated?" The truth is that anything positive (gas price decrease, stability in Iraq, capture of Osama bin Laden) that happens from now until the election can and will be held against Bush by the left.

At the risk of sounding repetitive, I did not accuse Woodward of lying to sell books or to improve his reputation. Rather, I am simply saying that it's possible in a bureaucracy as great as the U.S. government that some truth can be stretched or communication errors made. I will give Woodward the benefit of the doubt and believe that what he says is what he was told. But it's completely ridiculous to interpret his book as actual U.S. foreign policy initiatives.

The question I have for the liberal critics is "What specific issue in 2004 would be OK to lower oil prices without it being interpreted as politically motivated?" The truth is that anything positive (gas price decrease, stability in Iraq, capture of Osama bin Laden) that happens from now until the election can and will be held against Bush by the left.

At the risk of sounding repetitive, I did not accuse Woodward of lying to sell books or to improve his reputation. Rather, I am simply saying that it's possible in a bureaucracy as great as the U.S. government that some truth can be stretched or communication errors made. I will give Woodward the benefit of the doubt and believe that what he says is what he was told. But it's completely ridiculous to interpret his book as actual U.S. foreign policy initiatives.

April 23, 2004

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

inside Volume 133, Number 11

Arts & Entertainment:

Students from the Department of Theatre and Dance put on four productions of The Tempest last weekend.

See page B8

Women's track and field wins Five-Way

Women win last home meet of season by more than 100 points; men come in second behind Rhode Island

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Bucknell's women's track team put on a dominating performance Saturday, winning by more than 100 points at Bucknell's Five-Way Meet, while the men took second to a very formidable University of Rhode Island team.

Maria Garcia '04 continued in her quest to represent her homeland, the Dominican Republic, in the 2004 Olympic Games by breaking her school record in the hammer throw for the third week in a row. Garcia's throw of 57.96 meters is only six meters from the Olympic "B" standard that she needs to attain. She has already won the hammer in the Dominican Republic's Olympic trials.

Garcia was one of 10 wins for the women's track team on the day, making it challenging for Head Coach Kevin Donner to single out any one performance.

"Our women throwers continue to impress me every weekend. Our 4x100 team qualified for the Eastern Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat out her own teammate, Ann Doty '07, in the triple jump and then recorded the fastest split of the day in the 4x400m, running 75-point.

"The team is amazingly strong and deep," Bricker said. "To win any meet by over 100 points says something."

On the men's side, Rhode Island, the 2003 outdoor and 2004 indoor Atlantic-10 Conference Track Champions proved to be too much for Bucknell.

"They are a very good team, and that is why we invite them to this meet," Donner said. "I wanted an intense meet, and we had an intense meet."

Championships, our women hurdlers really stepped it up big time and Marsh had a great double, winning the 1,500m and placing second in the 800m," Donner said.

Lauren Bricker '07, winner of the women's triple jump and a part of the winning 4x400m relay, was a perfect example of the women's team's display of depth. Bricker beat

Sports

Men's lacrosse loses heartbreaker to Army

Bison lax falls 11-10 to Black Knights in double-overtime; drops record to 3-3 in Patriot League, 5-6 overall

By Betsy Harner
Staff Writer

With a 11-10 double-overtime loss against Army on April 16, Bucknell drops to 5-6 overall and 3-3 in the Patriot League. The Bison battled throughout the entire game and into overtime.

"As a team, we did not look at Army as a game against the No. 9 team in the country. We entered the game knowing that Army is a very beatable team," Wes Fetchet '04 said.

National scoring leader Chris Cara '05 had seven points on the evening with two goals and five assists. He currently has 66 points for the season and is tied for the school's record of third-most points in a season.

Along with Cara, Patrick Christensen '05 scored three goals. Bucknell goalie Matt Baran '06 had a terrific game with 17 saves, making four of the 17 within the final four minutes of the fourth quarter.

Army began the game with three unanswered scores. The Bison fought back with goals from Cara and Patrick O'Hearn '05 late in the first quarter making it 3-2. Army scored quickly in the second quarter, but Bucknell answered back with a three-goal run scored by Kirk Klett '07, Brian Gargan '07 and Christensen that gave them the lead.

The back-and-forth dynamic of the game continued in the third quarter with two quick scores by Army. But once again, Bucknell came back to regain the lead with scores by Gargan and Fetchet late in the third to give the Bison a 7-6 lead heading into the fourth quarter.

The fourth quarter was an intense battle between the two league teams. Army was able to score first to tie the game at seven with 8:23 left in regulation.

At 8:07, Bucknell answered back with a go-ahead score by Christensen. Army tied the game again only seven seconds later. Cara scored for the Bison with 5:28 left, but again, Army answered back to tie the game at 9-9.

Christensen scored again with 3:18 left to play. Bucknell had a few more opportunities to increase their lead, but the outstanding play of Army's goalie kept Bucknell's lead to one.

"I would give their goalie some credit because we had the opportunities to take a larger lead, but he made some critical saves during the game," Cara said.

The Bison were 27 seconds away

Chris Cara '05 cuts around the goal during the Bison's 11-10 loss to Army on April 16. Cara, who leads the nation in points, had two goals in the game.

from a win when Army scored to tie the game at 10 and sent it into overtime.

"This weekend was an absolute heartbreaker. It was a solid team effort, but when it came down to the stretch, we made poor decisions. We were in a position to win, being up by one with only a few minutes left. The game was in hand, and we repeatedly gave the ball back to them," Fetchet said.

Although the Orange and Blue played extremely well, they could not hold on, and lost the game 11-10 in the sudden death double-overtime battle.

"Friday's loss was devastating to our team because we felt that we should have won that game. We played our hearts out and gave everything we had. We were winning with less than a minute to go, and Army somehow was able to score and put the game into overtime, eventually winning in the second overtime," Cara said.

"Losing a game like that to Army is tough. We really played too well in that game to have lost. But a couple of key turnovers late in the game gave Army too many chances to tie it up. We have had some very close games in the end this year, but we just can't find a way to finish the game with the win," Baran said.

Bucknell now faces a must-win game against Colgate in its last league game tomorrow. The game is at home in the Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium at 1:00 p.m.

next Saturday, or we will not make the Patriot League tournament, which would be very disappointing for our team. I feel we will be ready to play and be able to beat Colgate," Cara said.

"What we have to concentrate on now is Colgate. If we beat them we should end up in the fourth seed, playing Navy. We are showing signs of improvement on offense every week and the game against Colgate won't be different. This game's ours," Fetchet said.

Summer is 2232 hours long.

Suddenly, spending 42

in the classroom

doesn't sound so tough.

Register Now!

Session 1
May 19 - June 30

Session 2
July 6 - August 13

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
SUMMER TERM
www.bu.edu/summer
or call 617.353.5125

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
NTN Trivia Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs $9.99 4-10 pm Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm E-mail nls01@ptd.net
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

RENTALS
for BUCKNELL STUDENTS

AVAILABLE
JUNE 1, 2004

3 LARGE 2 BR APTS.
AT:
237 South 3rd &
Saint George

Excellent condition,
excellent location -
right next door to campus

(570) 966-1488

The Winfield Baptist Church
"The Bible Reaching Church For the Whole Family"
(Founded 1869)
Invites both men and women of Bucknell
to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 am;
Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening Worship 6:30 pm
Evangelical
Traditional and contemporary Christian music
Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thornbury
Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28 acre site 3.5 miles south of campus. Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 miles, church on the right. For more information or transportation call 524-2735 or 743-7494 (any time)

Cecily Cairns Classic Corner

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Wrapping up by catching up

This is the 58th and final regular installment of my weekly column. In a very short time, this newspaper will no longer come equipped with 1,500-word skeins about racehorses and minor-league baseball players.

That, of course, requires at least some level of nostalgic rambling.

I thought it might be sentimentally engaging to do a little rundown of all the oddball characters I've managed to write ridiculously wordy articles on over the years, a "whatever-happened-to?" style piece. In the interest of print space, I started with my second year of columns rather than the first.

So here, in slightly incoherent form, is the Cecily Cairns Classic Update.

Zippy Chippy (Sept. 6, 2002, untitled) hasn't lost a step. He dropped his 98th straight race on Sept. 7 last year at Northampton racetrack. Since his emotional triumph over Rochester Red Wings' outfielder Larry Bigbie in autumn of 2002, Zippy hasn't taken on opponents of the two-legged variety. Bigbie has stuck with his own species as well—after batting .303 in 83 games for the Baltimore Orioles last year, he is now the starting centerfielder for this year's slightly less inept O's squad.

Ed McCaffrey (Sept. 13, 2002, untitled) went on to start all 16 games for the Broncos in 2002, his first season back from his colossal tib-fib fracture, catching 69 passes for 903 yards. He announced his retirement from the NFL two months ago, ending his 13-year tenure of irrepressible stalwartness on the gridiron.

The Anaheim Angels (Oct. 11, 2002, "Fortunes from hell; match made in heaven"), of course, beat the Minnesota Twins in the 2002 ALCS and then knocked off the Bonds-bolstered Giants in the seventh game of the World Series that year. The Twins are still alive and kicking, having managed to repeatedly skirt their proposed execution.

The Rally Monkey (Nov. 1, 2002, "It's all about the monkey"), after crossing that fine line between endearment and repugnant campiness, succumbed to severe burnout after the 2002 season. With rumors of steroid use abound, the arborescent cheerleader fled major-league baseball and is reportedly serving time in the Bronx Zoo for unspecified crimes.

Bruce Sutter (Dec. 6, 2002, untitled), still isn't in the Hall of Fame, having again been slighted by the evil scheming of the BBWAA. He received 59.49 percent of the votes in 2004, well short of the required 75. The BBWAA did manage to bestow its blessings upon one fireman this year, though, adding Dennis Eckersley and bumping the Hall's reliever total up to a daunting three.

Raiders' lineman Barret Robbins (Feb. 7, 2003, "Bad choices: the Raiders' worst mistake") did return to join—and for good—the teammates that had so vehemently forsaken him after the roughest episode of his life. He played in nine games for the stumbling Raiders, but failed a midseason THG detection test, a bout of indiscretion that unfortunately won't do him well in the eyes of critics.

While indiscretions are the topic at hand, Denny McLain (Feb. 14, 2003, "From 60 to zero in no time flat") entered a work-release program last May, patrolled the counter of a 7-Eleven for six months and has been a free man since late October 2003. He reportedly seeks to replace racketeering with radio broadcasting as his income source of the future.

Todd MacCulloch (Feb. 28, 2003, "This is heartbreak") never left the 76ers, despite still suffering from the incurable nerve disorder that blindsided him over a year ago. He recently had surgery and has been participating in very limited workouts with the team. Dave Dravecky is a motivational speaker and runs a nonprofit organization that helps others who have suffered great loss. The Devil Rays named a yearly award after Tony Saunders, which they give to young athletes who best exemplify the ex-pitcher's courage.

Toni Smith (Mar. 21, 2003, "A Flag Worth Facing"), the self-righteous little snot who refused to face our nation's flag during the national anthem, graduated from Manhattanville College with a degree in sociology—and an unofficial minor in selfishness and idiocy—and now works for a mentoring program in Manhattan. Most of her teammates, who are likely infinitely more mature than she, refuse to contact her.

Tug McGraw (Mar. 28, 2003, "Believe it: McGraw's spirit is unflappable") died on Jan. 5, nine hard-fought months after having surgery to remove his cancerous brain tumor. His strength of character—in living and in dying—left the baseball world with much to believe in.

Through some degree of miracle, the Detroit Tigers (Apr. 18, 2003, "Who needs the W column, anyway?") opened their 2004 season with five wins in their first six games, despite just barely avoiding the notoriety of a 120-loss season last year. The 1962 Mets, then, are still relatively safe in their reign of ineptitude.

Bo Hart (Sept. 5, 2003, "Bleeding Hart in St. Louis? No way ... Bo hasn't missed a beat") finished the 2003 season with a .277 batting average, struggled in spring training and opened the 2004 season back with AAA Memphis. He was recalled on April 11 to replace an injured Roger Cedeno, and is now platooning for the Cardinals. And there are still 1,001 reasons to watch every time he gets a chance to play.

I hardly need to tell anyone what happened to the Red Sox (Sept. 26, 2003, "There's no Denning these dreams") or the Cubs (Oct. 3, 2003, "Goats in Chicago") last year. I also don't need to tell anyone that both teams' fans are still as fervid as ever—that, as always, is a given.

Greg Maddux and Mark Prior (Oct. 10, 2003, "Prior to Prior, Cubbies had Maddux") are now teammates. Maddux signed with his old team earlier this year, but has started off the season with a few rough outings. Prior is on the shelf with a host of injuries, the severity of which seems to depend on whose rumor you're listening to. He is still, of course, quite unsmirchable.

The Crawford Capital of the World welcomed home Jake Delhomme (Jan. 30, 2004, "Stable in the pocket, stable in the ... stable"), albeit without a Super Bowl ring. His Panthers lost the big game 39-32, but hardly embarrassed themselves in the process. And he still mucks out stalls.

John Henry (Feb. 27, 2004, "All the heart money can't buy") turned 29 years old Mar. 9, and is still healthy, energetic and lovably nasty. He and Cigar, the nation's two greatest living race horses, live side-by-side at Kentucky Horse Park.

The spirit of Veteran's Stadium (Mar. 26, 2004, "A Vet-riolic sendoff") still lingers in Philadelphia. The Phillies played their first game at Citizen's Bank Ballpark on Apr. 12, which—you guessed it—they lost.

Mike Johnston, Jason Szuminski and Chad Bentz (Apr. 2, 2004, "There's still time left for underdogs") all made the opening day rosters of their respective major-league clubs. Johnston and Bentz both made their major-league debut on Apr. 7, while Szuminski made his four days later.

Softball splits first twinbill, gets swept in second

SBALL from page B1

Army went back ahead after a wild pitch in the fifth, but Bucknell responded with three runs in the bottom half of the inning.

Army tied the game up at six in the top of the sixth. The Black Knights found the bat again against Williams. Knocking four hits in the inning and scoring twice. The Orange and Blue got out of the jam when Army catcher Jamie Gjurgевич was tagged out after trying to steal home.

The Bison found another run in the bottom of the sixth when Litts scored on a wild pitch with two outs.

The victory also broke a nine-game conference losing streak while marking the squad's first win at home this year.

On Sunday, Bucknell stayed close with Army in both games of the double-header, but eventually fell 12-8 and 5-4.

Williams (3-8) threw a majority of the innings in both games, giving up 12 runs in 13 innings, with only seven of them earned.

For the offense, Litts and James led the Orange and Blue attack with three hits apiece.

Pompeii was the only

Bucknell player with two hits in game two after going 0-for-3 in game one.

The Black Knights hit

Haskins hard in the first game, knocking in five runs in the first inning. Lindsey Gerheim and Nikki Posey each had two-run shots for Army, and Veronica Lauzon had an RBI-double.

Williams relieved Haskins in the second inning, giving up a home run to Lauren Gobar as the visitors went up 6-0 on the Bison. The lead became 9-0 in the fourth after a two-RBI double from Lindsay March and an RBI-single from Gerheim.

The bats finally came alive in the fifth inning for the Orange and Blue, cutting the lead to 9-5 with an RBI-double from James.

Stackhouse '04 brought home two more runs on her double and two more crossed the plate on a double from Lauren Wible '06.

Army added three more runs in the bottom of the sixth to take a 12-5 advantage. The Bison rallied in the bottom half, but it was too little too late, falling 12-8.

In game two, Army was on the attack again, this time scoring on a March single in the third inning. Christian retired the first 12 Bucknell batters she faced, but lost her perfect game in the fifth when Bucknell fought back to take the lead 4-1. Wible started the inning off with a home run.

Army got two more in the top of the fifth, added another in the sixth and got one more in the seventh on a Lisa Huntington RBI-single.

Julie Williams '06 pitches during Sunday's second game against Army. Williams pitched a complete game for the Bison in the 5-4 loss, giving up five runs—three of them unearned—on 13 hits.

Williams went the distance for the Bison in a losing effort, allowing 13 hits and five runs. The Bison will host Holy Cross tomorrow and Sunday in a crucial four-game series.

The Bison are currently behind the Crusaders for the final spot in the Patriot League Tournament with just the four games left to play.

HERWITT'S HOOPLA

BY JOHN HERWITT, SPORTS EDITOR

A hitter's worst nightmare

Every major league pitcher carries with him his own infamous "out-pitch"—a designated pitch they can go to when they need to put a hitter away. Some are better, some are worse. A good out-pitch can separate great pitchers from mediocre hurlers.

An ordinary 87-mph fastball won't get the job done when a pitcher is in a bases-loaded jam late in the game. Most out-pitches are breaking or off-speed pitches, which change direction and speed all in one 60-foot hurl.

A good out-pitch can't even be hit when the hitter expects it. But the best pitchers in the game usually have other quality pitches at their disposal, making their signature pitch all the more deadly.

Here are ten of the game's best pitches no hitter wants to see when stepping into the box.

1. Mariano Rivera's cut fastball:

With so much postseason success over the years, Rivera has become one of the game's best closers ever. And he has his cut fastball to thank for a lot of it. Since bringing his cutter to the mound, Rivera has broken more bats than any other pitcher in the game.

For left-handers, it becomes a moving chainsaw. For right-handers, the end of the bat becomes its bull's-eye.

Even as Rivera ages, hitters still can't find a way to hit this pitch with any luck.

A dominant pitch thrown by a dominant closer.

2. Randy Johnson's slider:

His mullet isn't exactly pretty, but his slider is. Add it to his 97-mph heater and this knee-buckling pitch is pretty much untouchable. Since his days in Seattle, Johnson has been one of the most feared pitchers in the game. It seems that not much has changed in Arizona.

Just ask Larry Walker.

3. Mark Prior's slurve:

One of baseball's brightest young stars, Prior came to the windy city with more than a mid-90s heater. A pitch that combines the curveball and the slider, the slurve has become Prior's signature pitch. It jumps out at hitters, often leaving them ducking for their lives, and then finds its way back over the plate just before hitting the glove.

4. Eric Gagne's changeup:

There's a reason Gagne didn't blow a save last year for the Dodgers, and it might just have to do with his changeup. Gagne's 96-mph fastball has enough steam on it to make any hitter shake in his cleats, but combine that arm speed with his 80-mph changeup and you have a pitch of beauty.

"It really is the old 'Bugs Bunny' change," says an advance scout, according to ESPN.com. "You can swing at it three times and still not hit it."

5. Barry Zito's curveball:

This Southern California native has the perfect pitch to fit his mood: mellow and relaxed. With the epitome of a twelve-to-six curveball, Zito's pitch flows just about as well as the waves out in California do.

While curveballs from other hurlers bite late, Zito's remains soft and gradual, lighter than a cloud. Hitters often try to avoid swinging at it as much as they can but usually end up taking a trip back to the dugout.

6. Billy Wagner's four-seam fastball:

Wagner doesn't fool around by trying to get hitters out with any off-speed trickery. He goes right after them with his 100-mph four-seamer. At a modest 5-foot-11 inches and 195 pounds, an arm like this comes around only once in a great while.

"You see him," said Red Sox General Manager Theo Epstein, according to ESPN.com, "and you wonder: how does that pitch come from that body?"

Who said velocity is overrated?

7. Tim Lincecum's sinker:

With Kevin Brown running to the disabled list so often, Hudson has become the game's most effective sinker-ball pitcher. Hudson's ball drops like a ton of weights, causing batters to do no better than beat the ball into the ground. This often makes for a busy night for Hudson's infield.

8. Mike Mussina's knuckle-curve:

Mussina might not have the best stuff in the league anymore, but his knuckle-curve is still a masterpiece in its own right. As the only active player that effectively throws it, Mussina hasn't let this pitch become one of baseball's dinosaurs like Fernando Valenzuela's nasty screwball.

9. Curt Shilling's/Roger Clemens' split-finger fastball:

Although Shilling and Clemens have taken over as two of today's best right-handed power pitchers, a little finesse never hurts. This pitch doesn't swing from either side of the plate. It comes straight at you like a fastball and then drops off the table.

Being able to catch up with a mid-90s fastball from these guys is tough enough. But when they add in a splitter to the recipe, hitters can't resist and go fishing in the dirt for it every time.

10. Tim Wakefield's knuckleball:

It's hit or miss with the knuckleball. Some days it's flat, becoming just another batting practice fastball for most hitters. Aaron Boone knows.

But with the right conditions, there isn't a more devastating, yet humiliating pitch in baseball. Just try hitting a butterfly with your bat.

While consistency has always been a dilemma for knuckleball pitchers, Wakefield has remained as one of the few knucklers left in the game. Still, that's enough for most hitters to handle in one season.

FEATURES

Fresh food for cheap at the Farmer's Market

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

It is cheaper than Weis, closer than the mall, a new reason to go out Wednesday and has been serving Central Pa. for over 70 years.

"The Farmers Market is one of the best parts of Lewisburg. I love the informal nature of it, all the crazy stuff they sell, and especially the cheap prices."

—Charles Mitchell '05

Located about five minutes away from the University, the Lewisburg Farmers Market is open for customers from 8:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. Wednesdays. These seven hours are full of the fresh sights, sounds and smells of the Pennsylvania harvest. Visitors can take their pick of the best produce, flowers, meat, baked goods, crafts and flea-market items that the region has to offer.

"The Farmers Market is one of the best parts of Lewisburg. I love the informal nature of it, all the crazy stuff they sell, and especially the cheap prices," Charles Mitchell '05 said.

The market has brought its cheap prices and quality cuisine to the community for more than 70 years.

Some market merchants, such as Richard Marshall of Marshall Sales & Services, which sells vacuum cleaner parts and services, have been regular vendors for more than 40 years. According to Marshall, the market originally began in an old cavalry barn.

"They used to have an auction at the back and bring a truck in and auction merchandise right out of it."

They also used to have bingo, late in the afternoon until 10:00. Later, another sizable part of the building was added on, and now there's no more auction and no more bingo," Marshall said.

More than 80 vendors, including Marshall, market their goods in the indoor/outdoor complex. Outside, regional farmers display fresh fruits and vegetables. Inside the walls of the market, you can find a smorgasbord of regional variety. Meat counters and bakeries line the walls, surrounding machinery shops and sausage-sandwich stands in the center. You can browse all the kitsch of a flea market, and then turn around and buy a homemade pretzel from a Mennonite farmer.

"The Farmers Market has the yummiest sausage sandwiches, all the produce you can imagine and fantastic baked goods, plus 50-pound bags of potatoes and raw venison," Dawn Meling '06 said. "What more could you ask for?"

Amish and Mennonite goods are another specialty of the market, where you can buy whoopie pies, shoofly pies, scrapple and stuffed pig's stomachs—all Pennsylvania originals.

The food stand is another

"The Farmers Market has the yummiest sausage sandwiches, all the produce you can imagine and fantastic baked goods, plus 50-pound bags of potatoes and raw venison. What more could you ask for?"

—Dawn Meling '06

The Farmer's Market, located a short five-minute ride from campus, offers a wide selection of produce, meats, baked goods and flea-market items for reasonable prices. The market is open 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesdays.

Farmers Market trademark and makes the Wednesday afternoon drive worth it for some students.

"Local people, the Amish and Mennonite, make fresh baked goods that are popular, and of course, there's the food at the food stand. Where else can you get a sausage sandwich and fresh french fries?" Marshall said.

The prices, direct from the farmer, cannot be matched. Starving students on a skimpy budget will find that the market suits their budgets quite well, making it a great place to stock up on food.

Perhaps the most notable characteristic of the Farmers Market is the interaction with local heritage and culture. Many vendors have frequented the Lewisburg Farmers Market since they began farming and, throughout its 70-year history, many of their relatives have as well.

What to do in the middle of NOWHERE

Local residents know to reserve their Wednesday mornings to find the "cream of the crop" before most of it is sold by noon.

"You get a return clientele most of the time," Marshall said. "A lot of people have the day off on Wednesday and seem to go to the Farmers Market to pick up goods. We've built up a business there over the years, and my brother-in-law owned the business before me."

The Lewisburg Farmers Market is only a short trip away, and offers an extensive variety of goods as well as an unique opportunity to taste the culture of Central Pa.

Burma-Bucknell Bowl annually honors University greats

By MARLEE SAYEN
Writer

For more than a century, the University has been involved with the country of Burma in Southeast Asia. Some of the individuals who were a part of establishing the Baptist mission in Burma were also pioneers in the establishment of this university.

Burma-Bucknell Bowl

The Burma-Bucknell Bowl is presented each year to honor the achievement of University faculty members.

The Bucknell-Burmese connection began when Eugene Kincaid, a Baptist missionary on leave from his post in Burma, became a charter member of the University's board of trustees and worked to support the founding of this institution in 1846.

This connection continued when Howard Malcolm became the University's first president, in 1851. Malcolm had spent time in the 1830s visiting Burma and other countries in Southeast Asia, where he helped in the Baptist mission fields.

The largest development of this time with bridging the University with the people of Burma was when Kincaid convinced a native of Burma, Maung Shaw Loo, to become the University's first international student.

Shaw Loo accepted the opportunity and arrived in 1858, graduating from the University in 1864. He continued his education at the Charity Hospital Medical College in Cleveland, Ohio, graduating in 1867.

Shaw Loo returned to Burma in 1868 as a physician and an educator and kept his connection with the University throughout the remainder of his life. Today, the University has a Shaw Loo Memorial Scholarship, awarded in Shaw Loo's honor.

The Burma-Bucknell bond grew stronger in the 1920s and 1930s, when Helen Hunt, the daughter of former University President Emory W. Hunt, established a Bucknell University Scholarship Fund. This fund made it possible for Burmese students to attend the University. Hunt traveled to Burma numerous times during World War II, volunteering with the YWCA work in Burma.

Hunt was one of the founders of the Burma-Bucknell Weekend, a weekend that allowed the Bucknellians and Burmese to understand one another. The first weekend was in 1949.

As the Burma-Bucknell weekend became more well known, visitors included such people as ambassadors to the United Nations, officials of the U.S. State Department and Burmese students and faculty from the University of Rangoon.

In 1959, the Burmese Ambassador U Win, presented the University with a handcrafted silver bowl to celebrate 100 years of partnership. Since then, the University has awarded the Burma-Bucknell Bowl Award each year during commencement weekend to the organization or faculty member, student, or staff, who has made an outstanding contribution to the further enriching the community's knowledge concerning intercultural and international affairs and issues.

Reverend Ian Oliver said the award is "one way of keeping the spirit of the Burma-Bucknell relationship alive since the military government came to power in Burma in 1962 and ended contact with the outside world."

The original silver bowl is not given away as the Burma-Bucknell Award. Instead smaller silver bowls, which represent the original, are awarded. The original resides in the Bucknell Archives in the Bertrand Library.

Burma-Bucknell weekends occurred annually until 1965. In 1962, Burma's government was overthrown, and the Asian foundation announced in 1963 that it would no longer financially support the Burma-Bucknell Foundation. In 1965, the Burmese government said that it would be the last year that it allowed students to study in the United States.

The University has kept efforts going to maintain the ties it holds with Burma.

In 1999, the University presented Aung San Suu Kyi, general secretary of the National League for Democracy of Burma, with the award of merit. Suu Kyi also delivered the University's commencement that year.

"In my own country, Burma, a university degree has become an unattainable dream for the majority of high school graduates," Suu Kyi said at commencement.

She said higher education has been disrupted many times because of the military's rejection of the 1988 nationwide movement toward democracy.

"They were expressing their total rejection of the authoritarian rule of the Burma Socialist Programme party that had dominated the country for nearly three decades. They were asking for the right to shape their own destiny through a government that would be responsible to them in accordance with the democratic tradition," Suu Kyi said.

Although the National League for Democracy won an election, the military junta ignored the results.

Suu Kyi emphasized the importance of all aspects of education, such as understanding, tolerance, friendship, not just academic achievement. These aspects are what she thinks are the basis for gaining peace in the world.

Suu Kyi was placed under house arrest in Burma in May 2003, following "a national crackdown against their party—the National League for Democracy," according to the BBC.

After being shut down by the military regime last year, the party's headquarters in Rangoon were reopened last week.

"The speculation over the pro-democracy leader's possible release has been growing in recent weeks," according to the BBC. "Burma's military government has promised fresh constitutional talks on the 17th of May as a part of its 'road map to democracy' announced last August."

It is hoped that this will lead to changes and development toward educational and social freedom for the Burmese.

This year's Burma-Bucknell award will be given May 22 in Arches Lounge.

Some recent recipients of the Burma-Bucknell Bowl Award include Nikhil Menon '03, former University International Student Adviser Susan Zingale-Baird, and the Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell club.

Helen Hunt (middle), was a recipient of the Burma-Bucknell Bowl in the early 1940s. In the years since she was honored, it has been given to many others affiliated with the University.

FEATURES

Redefining the senior prom

University Greeks organize dance for residents of Outlook Pointe Commons

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

We can all remember when we were lowly high school students dreaming about college life. Classes were easier, parties were lamer and the big event was senior prom. Whether it was an occasion you eagerly anticipated or one you dreaded with every inch of your body, it was something we all experienced.

Imagine reliving those days 75 years from now. The residents of Balanced Care's Outlook Pointe Commons, located on Route 45 recently had this opportunity, courtesy of Delta Gamma sorority and Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

"We try to have events like [the prom] at least once a month for the residents. It's nice and uplifting for them," said Gene Kuhn, the programs coordinator at Outlook.

Equipped with festive Hawaiian accessories and a play list of "golden oldies," about 30 University students made their way to Outlook April 15 to host the gala. Greeted by residents, who were lined up outside the dining hall eager to get in and get their groove on, students were pleasantly surprised with the enthusiastic display offered by the residents.

"Despite the condition of the residents and their difficulty in walking, let alone dancing, we still lassoed a few into doing the hula," Christine Gallagher '06 said. "Whether they were on the floor in the congo line, or munching on fruit punch and cheese, we were delighted to see so many genuine and grateful smiles all around the room."

Although many of the residents at Outlook have passed their dancing prime, there certainly was not a lack of energy in the room. The cheese and cracker hors d'oeuvres were thoroughly enjoyed, and some brave residents even made an appearance on the dance floor.

"The residents had a great time. They loved dancing with the students, getting dressed up in the Hawaiian theme, and all the singing. It was the topic of conversation the next day," Kuhn said.

Residents at Outlook Pointe Commons enjoyed the opportunity to kick up their heels and dance the evening away at the senior prom recently sponsored by University students.

sation the next day," Kuhn said.

To liven up the party, the men and women from the University started a conga line and performed karaoke with some of the residents.

to see the joy that the sisters of DG and brothers of TKE brought to the faces of the senior citizens ... even though we were just doing the conga line in a rec room!" Sandy Maro '06 said. Their chat-made their week."

The prom lasted only an hour, but there was plenty of time for the students to enjoy a few friendly conversations with the residents.

"I had never gone to an assisted living home before, and it was really rewarding to take place in such a unique volunteering opportunity," Katie La Porta '06 said.

Although the prom is over, there are always opportunities for others to volunteer to spend time with the residents at Outlook. As evidenced by the success of this event, the residents love to have visitors and a change of pace from their daily activities.

"Just call us up or stop by. They'd love to have you," Kuhn said.

Whether they were on the floor in the congo line, or munching on fruit punch and cheese, we were delighted to see so many genuine and grateful smiles all around the room.

—Christine Gallagher '06

"Hosting the senior prom at Outlook was a truly rewarding experience. It was really great ting of reminiscent sock hops and dances was so adorable—you could really tell "That the evening

Spring fever sweeps across campus

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Writer

Spring has finally kicked in, and the warm weather is putting smiles on everyone's faces. We are fortunate to live on such a beautiful campus—the flowers are blooming, the grass is green, the areas that surround us offer a relaxing atmosphere and there is plenty to do to enjoy the sun.

Even though Central Pa. seems to be in the middle of nowhere, there is much for students to do during the day.

Spending time with close friends or that special someone seems to be a top priority.

"Taking walks down by the river and studying at the parks down there is perfect. And going with someone special makes it even better," Karen Grabowski '07 said.

Sports and other recreational activities remain favorites among students. Whether it be going out for a run, playing volleyball, basketball or biking, you will always have fun staying active while out in the sun.

For all you musicians out there, have a jam session outside, get a few close friends together and just have some fun. A lot of students take their guitar and sit outside on the grass or on benches and strum away.

The beautiful, warm weather may stay, but it definitely does not keep the work load away. The year's end is creeping up, and professors are cramming in some last lessons for classes—it is easy to be distracted by the nice weather.

"If you feel like being productive, do some work outside while enjoying the sun. Just make sure you don't fall asleep," Anna Platt '07 said.

How ever you choose to manage your work, take a couple breaks and soak in some sun.

"Get outside as much as possible. Take advantage of all the things you can do now that you thought about all winter," Sarah Brown '07 said.

After all, isn't this what we have all been waiting for? No more snow, freezing weather and bitterness! So get out there and enjoy the gorgeous outside!

students to do during the day.

Spending time with close friends or that special someone seems to be a top priority.

"Taking walks down by the river and studying at the parks down there is perfect. And going with someone special makes it even better," Karen Grabowski '07 said.

Sports and other recreational activities remain favorites among students. Whether it be going out for a run, playing volleyball, basketball or biking, you will always have fun staying active while out in the sun.

For all you musicians out there, have a jam session outside, get a few close friends together and just have some fun. A lot of students take their guitar and sit outside on the grass or on benches and strum away.

The beautiful, warm weather may stay, but it definitely does not keep the work load away. The year's end is creeping up, and professors are cramming in some last lessons for classes—it is easy to be distracted by the nice weather.

"If you feel like being productive, do some work outside while enjoying the sun. Just make sure you don't fall asleep," Anna Platt '07 said.

How ever you choose to manage your work, take a couple breaks and soak in some sun.

"Get outside as much as possible. Take advantage of all the things you can do now that you thought about all winter," Sarah Brown '07 said.

After all, isn't this what we have all been waiting for? No more snow, freezing weather and bitterness! So get out there and enjoy the gorgeous outside!

As the weather begins to get nicer, students have begun to take advantage of the extra daylight hours. Rather than keeping couped up inside, students are studying outside.

Another romantic edition brought to you by ...

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I am a senior at the University, and for the past few weeks, I have been freaking out about everything! I am not ready to graduate! My boyfriend is also a senior, and after graduation we are going to be in completely different places with completely different jobs. I hate the fact that my college career at Bucknell is coming to an end, but I don't want my relationship to have to end too! What should we do?

—M

Dear 'M,'

You seem to be overwhelmed by all the changes you are facing in your life right now, which is completely normal and understandable. If it makes you feel any better, I can assure that you are not the only senior experiencing these kinds of doubts and fears right now. Graduation, while exciting, can also be an extremely scary time. It symbolizes the official end of childhood and the beginning of adulthood.

Keep in mind that just because some aspects of your life are coming to a close, that does not mean all of them will. Your relationship with your boyfriend is not automatically finished simply because you will not be together at the University. Think of this as a new chapter in your relationship, a chapter in which you will both learn how much you truly mean to each other.

I know that the long-distance aspect may seem a little intimidating right now, but it will get easier once you both become accustomed to your new lives and surroundings. People make long-distance relationships work all the time, and it may not be as difficult as you think. In fact, the distance may help to make your bond even stronger.

Being apart may help you appreciate each other and what you have together even more than you do now. When you do see each other, that time will be more special because you won't be seeing each other on a daily basis. I would definitely advise you to give your relationship a chance. Do not end things now. Give it some time and see how it goes before you make any rash decisions.

I also think that it is important for you to make a conscious effort to not let your fears get the best of you. Graduation from college will be the beginning of an exciting new time in your life that you will grow to love as much as you love college.

In the meantime, concentrate on enjoying your last few weeks at the University. Remember, graduation is not just an end—it is also a beginning. Be excited, and try to embrace the new experiences, people and places that you will soon be encountering.

—Ms. O

If you have a question or comment for Ms. O please feel free to e-mail her at sexandthebubble@hotmail.com or send your question to the Bucknellian mailbox at C3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Spill your guts, Bucknell!
What is your favorite thing about yourself physically?

gay? fine by bucknell!

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

You may have seen students walking around Monday morning with T-shirts in various colors, sporting the slogan "gay? fine by me" on the front. These T-shirts are part of a challenge the University and members of Friends of Lesbians, Gays, Bisexuals and Transgender people are presenting to students here to encourage them to be proactive about reducing stereotypes and phobias of homosexuals within the community.

To do this, the "fine by me" project is being employed here on campus, modeled after the original campaign started at Duke University last spring.

"To participate, all you have to do is wear a 'fine by me' T-shirt and tell your friends and classmates about the project," according to the program's Web site.

It really is that easy. The T-shirts were handed out free in the L.C. Mall on Monday, and were gone in less than two hours. Although the LGBT office was hoping for an enthusiastic response, it exceeded its expectations.

"When they ran out of T-shirts in the L.C. Mall, students were coming up to the office in Roberts. It was overwhelming," Coordinator of the LGBT Office Fran McDaniel said.

To show further support for the cause, all students who received T-shirts, as well as those who have put in an order with McDaniel, are encouraged to gather on the steps outside Rooke Chemistry Friday at noon. Any other faculty, staff or students are also welcome to join. There, donning T-shirts of every color, the student body will be a living testament to the supportive community offered here.

Since its inception at Duke, the "fine by me" project welcomes nearly 2,000 students and faculty members to its demonstrations. Those involved here at the University are hopeful that, in time, our numbers will be as strong.

"I thought that over the course of the week that we would probably get enough people to wear the 260 some shirts we had ordered, but I never, ever expected the rush we actually got," Stephanie Wright '06 said.

For people who did not get a shirt Monday but are still interested in having one, contact McDaniel via e-mail (mcdaniel@bucknell.edu) or telephone (x1609).

Arts & Entertainment

Spring Arts Weekend draws

Theatrical innovations wash ashore with The Tempest

By CATHERINE HAY
Contributing Writer

◆ THEATRE REVIEW

Featuring a set that was majestically transformed from a storming sea into an enchanted tropical island, the University's Department of Theatre and Dance hosted an amazing production of William Shakespeare's "The Tempest." Running from April 16-19, the aesthetics of the play were stunning, and the costumes and makeup transformed the students into hideously and spectacularly believable monsters, spirits and royalty.

The University's production of "The Tempest" put a new spin on the classic play by experimenting with different genders in the roles. For example, the characters Stephano, Sebastian and Antonio are traditionally played by men, but were played by women in this version. Additionally, Prospero, the Duke of Milan, was played by Lisa Britt '04.

"Being in 'The Tempest' here was fantastic. I love Shakespeare, so I appreciate every opportunity I have to be a part of it, and the gender-role experimentation, I thought, was really effective and interesting. I loved it," said Peter Kelly '07, who played the Shipmaster and Francisco.

The program included a brief plot overview of the play for those who were not familiar with the story.

"Since the play is almost certainly Shakespeare's last full work for the theater, 'The Tempest' pulls out all of the stops of his dramatic imagination and soars to marvelous heights with its music, magic, monsters, dancing, storms, outrageous humor and all sorts of theatrical special effects," according to the program.

The student performers gave an excellent rendition of the story of a ship that split in two during a storm and of the survivors who land ashore a strange island. The actors also artfully conveyed the themes of lust, love, intrigue, treachery and mystery.

"Although I had never seen 'The Tempest' before and wasn't familiar with the plot, the actors' portrayal seemed accurate," Adam Gasiewicz '07 said.

The

The University Department of Theatre and Dance put on four performances of Shakespeare's "The Tempest" last weekend. The rendition of the classic play integrated modern innovations, including gender-role experimentation.

cast featured a handful of talented first-year students, most of whom are from the Arts Residential College, as well as seniors Britt, Ashi Day, Kim Klauder, Rachel Slotcavage and Joshua Tepley, who performed for the last time during their University careers.

Associate Professor of Theatre Gary Grant, the faculty director, had the opportunity to work with the 19 skilled and dedicated actors, who rehearsed from November through early April for the performances. The payoff was clearly worth the effort, as lines

Lines were delivered artfully and with well-practiced accents. The dynamic among the cast was evident, as they formed realistic, close-knit relationships on stage.

Guest conductor highlights last University Orchestra concert

By KATE TANITA
Contributing Writer

◆ CONCERT REVIEW

The final orchestra concert for the 2003-04 school year was not at all the typical college orchestra performance. While the orchestra concerts may not be seen as the highlight of the entertainment sphere at the University, perhaps it is only because they do not get enough credit.

For someone who does not appreciate classical music, this sort of performance may never seem enjoyable, but for the person who appreciates the genre, Saturday's program was a good concert.

All the pieces the orchestra performed, which included "Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80" by Brahms; "L'Arlésienne Suite No. 2" by Bizet; "Norwegian Dances, Op. 35" by Grieg, and three movements—"Mars," "Venus" and "Jupiter"—from "The Planets" by Holst, were played dynamically, beautifully and passionately.

I had the opportunity to built a wide-ranging career in conducting, teaching and performing," according to program notes for the evening. He has won many prizes for his conducting and piano-playing skills, has been invited to be a guest conductor all over the world, and has accumulated many other prestigious accomplishments.

Hazeldine also has a great sense of humor. Before going onstage, he told me about one concert he conducted in Cyprus. The first thing that went wrong was that the orchestra had been placed too far upstage, so to get onstage he had to use the middle entrance and push through a big black curtain. Later the entire orchestra moved forward, and the next time he came onstage he walked through a different entrance. Unfortunately, there was a cement pillar hidden within the black folds of that particular curtain, and he ran into that pillar while entirely within the audience's sight. If anyone could see the concert from another angle as well (stage right to be exact) because I was working as a crew member with Performance Services that night. This led to some interesting conversations with the guest conductor, Alan Hazeldine, who did a spectacular job. His enthusiasm seemed to inspire and drive the members of the orchestra in their performance.

"Alan Hazeldine enlivens music by extracting the vivid images behind the notes. Playing under his direction was a true honor."

—Deborah Osborn '07

"I very much enjoyed the enthusiasm of the conductor, for I feel as though it enhanced the talent of the orchestra and inspired them to reach new heights in their music. It also led to a very enjoyable show for the audience members, captivating my attention entirely," Kristen Lunny '05 said.

Hazeldine "qualified in Advanced Conducting Studies from the Guildhall School for Music and Drama in 1972 and has, since then, play off such an embarrassing situation, though, Hazeldine could.

As a conductor, Hazeldine was not only appreciated by the audience, but also the orchestra.

"Alan Hazeldine enlivens music by extracting the vivid images behind the notes. Playing under his direction was a true honor; we will miss his insightful analogies, encouragement to have fun, and true love of music," Deborah Osborn '07 said.

Associate Professor of Music Christopher Para also gave him a parting gift of a sousaphone to take back to his London residence. Quite an apt gift for such a wonderfully talented, and humorous gentleman, whose presence at University will be greatly missed.

Arts & Entertainment

the curtain on student talent

Student artwork reflected in showcase

Work by student artists is now on display for the Samek Art Gallery's Student Art Show. Mediums in the display include photography, painting, etching, sculpture and innovative digital installation artwork.

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

It may have taken more than a week to set up and an entire school year to create, but the Annual Student Art Show, which will be displayed in the Samek Art Gallery until May 4, was well worth the wait.

After months of imagining and creating these art pieces during long hours in the Art Barn or the Art Building, student artists were finally rewarded with the chance to see their pieces displayed in the gallery. The show's opening night Friday was very successful, as many faculty and students showed their support for friends and fellow artists at the catered event.

"This is my favorite time of year, getting to see everyone's artwork," Lauren Gerstenmaier '05 said.

The diversity of the works is astounding, with a multitude of media represented. Photography, oil and acrylic painting, etching, and printmaking are just a few examples of the variety of works on display at the show.

"I thought [the staff] did a great job of curating and blending the pieces. They were very sensitive to the artists' needs," Martine Worrall '04 said.

Worrall, along with the rest of the students in her Graphic Design class, has many works on display. Some of these include brochures and recently submitted posters for the University's numerous literary magazines.

In addition to the typical two-dimensional painting and photographic representations, several sculptures from this year's sculpture classes were placed throughout the gallery.

Another fascinating and unusual piece in the show is the digital installation artwork, in the project room of the gallery. White sheets were stretched on the floor of the room to blend with the walls, and then short films created by the Digital Media class are projected simultaneously onto three walls and the floor of the room. The students involved in the project were excited to see their work come together after spending an entire week working on its conception.

"I think it's really cool to see it projected, especially onto the floor," said Gerstenmaier, who is also a digital-media student involved in shooting a few of the projected films.

Not only are these various forms of art on display, but so are students' curatorial abilities. The spring semester's Gallery Practices class, taught by Samek Art Gallery Director Dan Mills, is using the glass display cases in the entrance hallway to show an exhibit it curated.

The art department's graduate students are also featured prominently in the exhibit. Sarah Shebaro's print-making and bucolic, mixed-media paintings garnered a great deal of attention. Vita Litvak's digital inkjet prints of various sizes depict the middle of nowhere (aka: Lewisburg). Dominic Nurre, a sculpture teaching assistant, even shared a little wall space with his provocative, untitled work—a folded piece of white paper with "Paper, type, tape, incision," listed as its sources.

Students should visit the gallery while the student art show is still on display and see what all the art students have been spending this school year creating and designing. For gallery hours and more information, see the Samek Gallery's Web site at www.departments.bucknell.edu/samek_gallery/.

Award-winning students recite original poetry

By DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

The works of several of the University's finest creative-writing students were featured in a fiction and poetry reading April 16 in Bucknell Hall. These students received prizes in Stadler Center for Poetry and West Branch literary magazine creative-writing contests.

The readings alternated between prose and poetry selections, with introductions to each winner provided by assistant professors of English Shara McCallum, who is also the director of the Stadler Center, and Paula Closson Buck, who is the editor of West Branch.

A booklet containing the winning entries and comments made by the selection committees, was distributed to all attending the reading, allowing members of the audience to follow along as the readers recited their work. More than once, I was so caught up reading from the booklet that I forgot to pay attention to the readers themselves.

The first author featured was Tyler Mills '05. She was a co-winner of the Stadler Center Prize for poetry. Her poems were characterized by an emphasis on art and music, with such titles as "Chicago in Oil on Canvas," "Shostakovich String Quartet" and "Sketchbook Nudes." Her winning entry, "Sunday Afternoon in the Kitchen (After Seurat)," ably combined both of these elements, using bits of rhythm and music to illustrate the pointillist style of artist Georges Seurat.

In addition to the prominent musical and artistic themes, her works drew upon historical and cultural references, such as the Holocaust, Norse mythology and, in her other winning poem, "The Whydah," the wreck of a pirate ship. With this broadly diverse spectrum of influences, all her poems exhibited a musing, thoughtful quality.

"The Reading," a short story by Paula Harrison, a University employee and non-traditional student, won second place for fiction in the West Branch contest. Her story focused on the relationship between two sisters, Madison and Lauren, and Madison's revelation to her sister that she is a lesbian.

The title of the story alludes to a tarot-card reading that Madison's lover, Jane, performs near the end of the story. Harrison captured the awkwardness of interaction that Lauren felt in meeting Jane and the confusion and uncertainty that stems from such surprising news.

The reading's only two-time winner, Sarah Shepherd '06 was the other co-winner for poetry in the Stadler Center contest and the second-place winner in the West Branch contest. Her poems were filled with physical language and imagery; parts of the body—fingers, legs, lips and, more broadly, skin—were featured in nearly all of the works she read.

She said at the beginning that most of her writings were personal recollections of events in her own life, particularly interactions with members of her family. Her poems were darker than Mills', but this dark tinge gave the events they described even greater weight and significance.

Carrie Nugent '06 was not sure what to expect coming to a poetry and fiction reading, but was surprised by how much she enjoyed it.

"I was especially impressed with how [the writers] were able to capture one specific moment in time," Nugent said.

Stephanie Malenich '05 and Rachel Trusheim '05 were both winners for their short stories. Malenich's "The Red Door in Elvira" won first place in the West Branch contest, and Trusheim's "Al Fine" was the winner for prose in the Stadler Center contest. Because they had to read selections from or abbreviated versions of these stories, I found it difficult to get a sense of the overall quality of their works.

The musical elements of Trusheim's story struck me immediately—the protagonist in her story is the director of a professional orchestra, and there were numerous references to orchestral works and musical terminology.

Malenich's story focused on two young orphaned girls living in a small town. The events in the story took place soon after their mother's death. The selections she chose to read exhibited very detailed and colorful language, but did not give a strong sense of the story's sequence or the development of its characters. Both stories made me wish I had heard the authors read more and not depended on the printed version of the texts so much while they were reading.

Brett Detrick '06 resisted the temptation to read out of the booklet while the writers were reciting their works.

"I think it's better to watch them read and to listen to what they're saying," he said.

The evening's last poet was Becca Wadlinger '06, who won first prize in the West Branch contest. Her poems were alternately morbid and hilarious. Her winning entry, "Copacabana," was a harsh illustration of domestic strife, with a mother losing her sanity and a father lashing out violently. Other notable works blended images of brutality with more gentle ones in describing catastrophic events.

Other poems, such as "The Count," with its reference to Sesame Street Count von Count ("Two batty-bat, ah-ah-ah!"), and "Cleaning the Aquarium," were equally effective in creating memorable portraits through their use of humor. Wadlinger's poems were certainly the most eccentric of the evening, but no less richly crafted than any of the others.

Both contests and the subsequent reading are to become annual events, though this year's winning entries will be difficult to surpass. The entire showcase was a major success for the Stadler Center, West Branch magazine and for creative writing at the University.

Arts & Entertainment

Taylor Mali wows the crowd at poetry slam

BY MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

POETRY REVIEW

A performer, a thinker, a thought-provoker, a slam legend—Taylor Mali filled Seventh Street Cafe with his smooth voice and powerful poetry Saturday night. Mali performed for a full crowd, delivering poems about dogs, students, politics and death.

Taylor Mali recently visited the University to perform at a student poetry slam. Mali has won four national slam competitions in the team division.

Mali excitedly took the stage in his return visit to the University, congratulating the campus on its dedication to the slam poetry movement and to professional slammers. The last time Mali visited, he "blew everyone away—he made us laugh, he made us cry," President of the Slam Committee Erin Lion '05 said. Some students specifically came to the event on the basis of Mali's prestige in the slam world.

"Taylor Mali is one of the two slam poets in the country who has anything that resembles talent," Eric Bundy '05 said. "In the world of poetry, there's Saul Williams and there's Taylor Mali."

Mali's resume includes appearances on the original HBO series "Russell Simmons Presents Def Poetry," four national poetry slam wins in the team division, commercial voice-over work and nine years of teaching.

To an enthusiastic crowd of ardent fans and first-timers, Mali spouted the poetry of love and dogs in "Falling in Love is Like Owning a Dog." "The Impotence of Proofreading" curled everyone's lips into smiles as Mali humorously cited the pitfalls of using a spell-checking program. Double entendres sprinkled throughout, and every student could identify with at least one of the mistakes common in papers.

The subject dearest to his heart, education, surfaced in several of the poems. "Like Lilly Like Wilson" chronicled the struggle for an eighth-grade student to stop saying "like" and her change of viewpoint after researching a paper.

Not all of Mali's slams were humorous, however, as he did reach somber moments remembering his father. Mali used a recording device during his performance to tape a hymn that played while he slammed about his family's gathering at his father's deathbed. The sober reflection left the audience silent.

"What I Make" brought down the house as a finale. The audience's lips buzzed about the poem before Mali had even mentioned it. In a generation motivated by success and money, Mali's poem heralded the effects of a teacher on a student's life. "I make kids work harder than they ever thought they could / I can make a C+ feel like a Congressional medal of honor / and an A- feel like a slap in the face. / How dare you waste my time with anything less than your very best," Mali slammed.

"Mr. Mali is very talented and is an inspirational asset to slam poetry," said Emily Ostrom '04, who plans to teach high school English and German. "I'm only left to wonder if he slammed when he taught."

Mali said he did not slam as a teacher, though he considers his poetry a type of teaching. Poetry "is a form of instruction and entertainment," Mali said. "Now my students are not just in the seventh grade."

The Godfather of Funk will rock out at Chrysalis Ball

BY JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

He is the self-proclaimed "Godfather of Funk," and he is coming to turn the Chrysalis stage on its psychedelic head. "Dr. Funkenstein" George Clinton and the Parliament Funkadelic will perform at the University's annual Chrysalis ball tonight from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the Gerhard Fieldhouse.

Clinton has forged his funky way through the past three decades of music. With the band The Parliaments, Clinton began early in his career to experiment with the rhythms and harmonies in his music, linking them to the psychedelic movement raging in other sectors of society during the late 1960s.

In the early 1970s, Clinton formed the comparable group, The Funkadelic, giving birth to a number of concept albums with funky dance beats, strange sound effects and guitar distortion. Clinton's solo career thrived during the 1980s, adding up to a career total of 40 R&B hit singles and four national No. 1 hits.

"He's a funky fun twist on Chrysalis," said Kari Conrad, associate dean of students and director of Campus Activities and Programs. "George Clinton might not be the first name that you think of for a formal event, but we're really excited."

Clinton's exciting and eccentric music has garnered him the honor of induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Lifetime Achievement Awards from both the NAACP and the Black Music Awards. His such as "Atomic Dog," "Mothership Connection," "Flash Light" and "Bootsy Body Ready for the Plush Funk" have become synonymous with the funk feel. Clinton will soon be able to add another accolade to this list.

"Most of the famous blues and funk people are coming together for a huge MTV award—kind of like naming him the 'king of funk,' a lifetime achievement award," Conrad said.

Clinton was chosen as the headlining act for Chrysalis after the University canceled its contract with James Brown due to his recent legal problems.

"The students all got together and tried to come up with alternatives, someone that would be just as exciting and entertaining," Assistant Director of Campus Activities and Programs Kim Henry said. "He's more funky and we're very excited about that."

The Parliament Funkadelic rose to the top of the list of possible headlining acts after a selection process involving several facets of the University.

"Obviously we get a number of different things, student input and who have they heard is especially important for Chrysalis," Conrad said. "In the past we've had the Cherry Poppin' Daddies and K.C. and the Sunshine Band. We wanted to spark the interest in Chrysalis with a bigger band. ... you really can't get too much better than George Clinton for an event like this."

George Clinton and the Parliament Funkadelic will follow a performance by the danceable '80s and '90s cover band, Like Totally Awesome.

For more information on George Clinton and the Parliament Funkadelic, visit Clinton's official Web site at www.georgeclinton.com. Tickets for the event can be purchased online or at the bookstore, the CAP Center, the Weis Center or the L.C. Box Office.

Funk music pioneer George Clinton has had over 40 hit singles. Clinton is set to perform with his group, Parliament Funkadelic at this year's Chrysalis Ball.

Wynton Marsalis Quartet provides two magic hours of music

BY CATHERINE HEVERLING
Arts & Entertainment Editor

CONCERT REVIEW

Entering the Weis Center for the Performing Arts Friday, it was hard to believe that the building was part of a college campus. The auditorium was filled with audience members of all ages, including college students, music professors, professionals and parents with aspiring young musicians.

Few seats were empty as the University welcomed the Wynton Marsalis Quartet, whose namesake is recognized as one of the world's finest trumpet players. The quartet featured Ali Jackson on drums, bassist Carlos Henriquez and pianist Eric Lewis.

The quartet began its performance with Coleman's "Sadness," featuring a haunting accompaniment of descending and ascending scales by the bass and a clear, sincere trumpet melody. After the piece, Marsalis told the audience that now that "Sadness" had been completed, "We're going to get happy."

The next piece, entitled "Free to Be," consisted of conflicting trumpet, bass and piano melodies held together by the drum beat. During the middle of this song, the audience received its first ear-full of Marsalis' high notes.

"The music was incredibly energizing and Marsalis is a fine musician," Judith Barnett, '07 said.

Following this period of impressive horn playing, Marsalis took a stroll behind the ensemble, turning the focus to the other members' talent. The spotlight passed over the three remaining musicians as the plucking of the bassist's strings, the drummer's improvisational variations and the pianist's freestyle solo resonated.

The following songs, "Me and You" and "A Thing Called Love," had a more casual feel to them. At the beginning of "Me and You," Marsalis set down his horn and began to clap a jazz beat, which was then added to by the drummer's hand-clapping.

These two songs set the tone for the fifth song, "Big Fat Hen," the standout piece of the evening. Marsalis began the song by blowing through his horn and producing sounds that can only be described as "clucks." The drummer set the fast tempo with the help of a cowbell, and the quartet went wild.

Marsalis picked up the curious hat that had been sitting on the stool beside him and waved it back and forth in front of the trumpet's bell, creating a unique sound with a strange echoing resonance. Marsalis then crammed scales into one beat's time, almost attempting to match the low-octave glissandi by Lewis on piano. Watching Lewis's hands was like watching a flipbook as they played dissonant, repetitive chords, making his melody sound like a fast-paced scherzo. The song began to wind down, and Marsalis ended the song from backstage, beginning the intermission.

"It was a wonderful opportunity to see such a celebrated jazz performer. He is brilliant and charming, and the other members of his quartet are equally phenomenal musicians."

—Ashley Stanford '07

Marsalis continued his unusual horn maneuvers in the second half of the program. In the piece following intermission, Marsalis utilized his mute to manipulate the horn, creating a laughing sound. He heavily tapped his feet on the stage to add a fifth instrument to the quartet. Lewis added a bit of flare to the piece with the piano as he began playing each passage a fraction of a beat after the bass and drum. Marsalis ended the piece with a soft snoring note that faded to nothing.

Before the final piece of the evening, Marsalis invited a young musician to come on stage and perform with him. Marsalis, host of the "Jazz for Young People" concerts, said he likes to invite young musicians to perform with him. Marsalis himself, at a young age, met jazz legend Dizzy Gillespie. The performance of the young musician who played alongside Marsalis shows great promise that someday he too will be telling an anecdote on stage about how he met jazz legend Wynton Marsalis. The night ended with a piece entitled "The Magic Hour," which lent its name to the quartet's debut CD, released March 9. Marsalis said the song was inspired by a friend's reference to the hour before his children go to bed—an hour which he referred to as "the magic hour."

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

The piece featured the four basic rhythmic attitudes of jazz: swing, to represent the children's hyperactivity before bedtime; the blues, when the parents try to calm the children down; Afro-Hispanic groove, when the children are calmly getting settled into bed; and a final ballad or bedtime story. The piece provided a perfect summary of the evening's entertainment and gave the audience one last taste of the flavors of jazz.

The quartet received an enthusiastic standing ovation and returned for an encore. There was a unanimously positive reception of the performance from the crowd—such phrases as "one of a kind," "a money's worth" and "creative genius" poured out of every corner of the auditorium.

"It was a wonderful opportunity to see such a celebrated jazz performer. He is brilliant and charming, and the other members of his quartet are equally phenomenal musicians," Ashley Stanford '07 said.

The performance provided an excellent night out for those in and around Lewisburg. The musicians' passion, spontaneity, gusto and sheer talent made for two magic hours of worthwhile entertainment.

THE Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

April 30, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 12

Business & Politics:

New Bucknell Student Government class officers and congress members have been elected.

See page B10 for the results of yesterday's election.

People of the Year

RICHARD FERRARO

DEAN OF STUDENTS

BY JASON RUBINSTEIN
Senior Editor

Some students may claim the University administration works on a 9 to 5 work schedule, not allowing administrators to be receptive to student needs. If referring to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro, such critics would not be incorrect. Ferraro does hold a 9 to 5 work schedule—9 a.m. to 5 a.m.

Those who know Ferraro and his natural tendency to go above and beyond the call of duty cite his response to e-mails at peculiar hours, attendance at unfortunate student hospitalizations, chats with students downtown Friday nights or directly communicating with students during one of the many forums he has hosted.

"I know no one at this university who works harder," Vice President for Student Affairs Charles Pollock '70 said. Pollock, who is the immediate supervisor to Ferraro and oversees the entire student affairs division, said perhaps one word describes Ferraro best: "compassionate."

Kari Conrad, associate dean of students, also recognizes Ferraro as going above and beyond.

"Are students comfortable with seeing Dean Ferraro on downtown streets every weekend? Perhaps not, but he is out there to have a better pulse of the student body; he's not out there to bust people," Conrad said.

His openness with students and desire to have an intimate knowledge of what is going on leads to his trait most respected by students: He is an advocate for the students, even if that means making unpopular decisions at times or causing tension with fellow administrators.

"Ferraro, and his staff, works behind the scenes and is not given credit by students for pushing for things that are in their best interest," Associate Dean of Students Gerald Commerford said.

One of the most significant events for most students this year has been the implementation of the emergency alcohol measures and the subsequent modified points system. In filling his usual role, Ferraro acted as an advocate for students in a time when many students felt alone.

"The emergency alcohol policy put him in a tough place; it took the issues he normally deals with out of his hands, yet he continued to try and help the students regardless," Bucknell Student Government Vice President of Operations Duff Weber '05 said.

Immediately after learning about the emergency measures, Ferraro, aided by BSG, the Committee on Complementary Activities and Commerford, among others, began focusing on modifying the policy to replace the emergency measures with a more fair and justified policy.

"After implementation of the emergency alcohol policy, Dean Ferraro was the quickest to offer forums to explain the policy; he was very giving of his time," former BSG Vice President of Operations Jack Phillips '04 said.

While modifications to the point system were underway prior to implementing the emergency measures in mid-fall, they were completed under the emergency

See FERRARO, page A3

CHARLES MITCHELL '05

UNIVERSITY STUDENT

BY ELISABETH SALEMME
Editor-in-Chief

Charles Mitchell '05 said his hero is his late grandmother because she fought for what she believed in.

"In some respects, I think I am her son. We are very similar in personality," Mitchell said. "What she did in her life is so much more important than politics. It was so much more important than anything Bush ever did."

As president and one of the founders of the Bucknell University Conservatives Club, Mitchell has fought for what he believes in perhaps more than any other figure on campus. He has accomplished more this year than what most think is possible for one person.

"He believes in what he's doing, and that's why he does it. Period. There is no story beyond that; there is nothing else to know," friend Michael Boland '03 said.

Friend Charissa Reimer '05 agreed. "I find him to be extremely intelligent, articulate and extremely passionate about his views. He is not one to compromise or back down, but insists on always taking a firm stance and fighting for what he believes in," Reimer said.

Mitchell is one of the primary reasons the BUCC has become the force on campus that it is today. Mitchell said the club began as eight people sitting in a room in the Langone Center, who had "no idea what it was going to be."

"At that point we didn't have the resources to do terribly much. I became the first editor of The Counterweight on a whim. Basically, they needed somebody, and I didn't know what I was doing, but I decided I would give it a shot," Mitchell said.

Mitchell's attempts have proven extremely successful, as The Counterweight is now a well-read publication at the University that is published six times per year. It, as well as the BUCC, was recognized by The New York Times Magazine last summer.

"The reason [the BUCC] is what it is, is because we have so many hard-working people ... I am amazed by the incredible number of people we have who dedicated their scarce time," Mitchell said. "If it was just one or two or three people, we wouldn't be where we are. ... That's the best thing that I've gotten out of

See MITCHELL, page A2

And all that jazz...

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

The University Jazz Band improvised on a program of classic tunes last Sunday afternoon. The concert featured guest artist and world class trumpeter, Dale Orris.

Special News

Best of

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday,
Sept. 7, 2003

CHECK ON THE WELFARE—Public Safety responded to Larson Hall to check on the welfare of two students. Upon investigation, the two individuals were found to be all right and no further action was necessary.

Sunday, Sept. 14, 2003

VANDALISM—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) threw an orange and broke her window at Swartz Hall. A work order was placed to repair the window. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, Oct. 4, 2003

THEFT—While on routine patrol, Public Safety observed a male walking with a traffic cone behind Vedder Hall heading toward Smith Hall. Upon investigation, the student admitted to taking the cone from the construction site behind Vedder. A citation was issued for a property violation.

Saturday, Oct. 18, 2003

INFORMATION / FIRE—Public Safety responded to a fire alarm activation in a BU West Mod caused by unattended cooking. The residents in the Mod were still present and did not know who had left the food cooking on the stove. Citation issued for failure to evacuate a room during a fire alarm.

Tuesday, Oct. 21, 2003

INFORMATION / TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT / ACCIDENTAL ACTIVATION—Public Safety responded to Marts/Freas/Vaughan Literature for a fire alarm activation, which was caused by a student who accidentally activated a pull station with no malicious intent.

Friday, Oct. 24, 2003

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—A student reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) damaged his vehicle by walking across the hood while the car was parked at the rear of Leiser House. The incident is under investigation.

Friday, Nov. 14, 2003

ALLEGED ASSAULT—A Lehigh University soccer fan reported to Public Safety that a student had assaulted another Lehigh fan by throwing a T-shirt at him. Upon investigation, the student admitted to throwing the shirt. The visitor then decided not to press charges.

Wednesday, Nov. 26, 2003

FOUND PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a shopping cart found during room inspections. The CVS store was notified and criminal charges are pending.

Saturday, Jan. 17, 2004

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / POSSESSION—Public Safety officers responded to McDonnell Hall for the report of hard liquor in a room. Upon arrival, Public Safety officers identified two students who admitted to consuming alcohol, although under the age of 21. Public Safety Officers confiscated 10 bottles of liquor, one bottle of wine and 62 cans/bottles of beer. Both students were cited for underage consumption and possession of alcohol.

Tuesday, Jan. 20, 2004

INFORMATION / RECOVERED STOLEN PROPERTY—Public Safety officers responded to Gateway Viddinghoff for the report of a fire alarm activation caused by burning food that had been extinguished with a fire extinguisher. Public Safety officers observed a KFC picture believed to be taken from the local store. East Buffalo Township Police Department was notified and advised they would respond the next day. Charges are pending.

Monday, Feb. 9, 2004

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that there was a water leak in the Computer Center. Upon investigation, Public Safety determined the cause to be a toilet clogged with paper and with the flushing mechanism tied together, preventing the water from shutting off. Several rooms received extensive water damage. The incident is under investigation.

Saturday, Jan. 24, 2004

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Public Safety officers responded to a fire alarm activation at Swartz Hall. Upon arrival, Public Safety officers determined that the resident of the room fell asleep while making popcorn. Student cited for disorderly conduct and failure to vacate the room during a fire alarm.

INFORMATION / PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety Officers responded to Harris Hall for a fire alarm activation caused by a broken sprinkler head, which caused water damage in the building. Upon investigation, Public Safety Officers determined that a student was throwing darts and accidentally hit the sprinkler head. Facilities will assess the water damage. A citation issued for disorderly conduct. The student will be

Thursday, Feb. 12, 2004

SUSPICIOUS PERSON / APPROPRIATE USE VIOLATION—Public Safety responded to Bertrand Library for the report of a male who was viewing on a computer information that violates the University's acceptable use policy. Upon investigation, Public Safety identified the male as a visitor. Public Safety explained the acceptable use policy and requested the person to leave campus. He left without further incident.

Saturday, March 27, 2004

INFORMATION / UNAUTHORIZED ENTRY—Public Safety responded to the Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium for an alarm activation caused by two students entering the unsecured band practice space. The individuals are authorized to use the space. The students advised that the door frame was broken. The Physical Plant was contacted to repair the door so that it may be properly secured. Because the students were on the authorized list for use of this space, the officer did not charge them for trespassing. Vehicle citations were issued to one student for failure to display a decal and to the other for failure to register a vehicle.

Saturday, April 3, 2004

INFORMATION / THEFT—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for the report that a male had removed a shovel from the house. This male was identified as a former Delta Upsilon member and indicated he was going to clean up the porch. The student was given a verbal warning.

Friday, April 9, 2004

CRIMINAL TRESPASSING—Public Safety responded to Delta Upsilon Fraternity for a report of bed sheets tied together hanging from a window. Unknown person(s) had broken into the fraternity and used these to exit the building. No suspects could be located in a search of the area. Witnesses observed an unknown male climb down the sheets before Public Safety arrived. Facilities staff responded to secure the building. The incident is under investigation.

Mitchell and BUCC bring issues to light

MITCHELL From page A1

being here." This year, Mitchell has led the BUCC to many accomplishments, including bringing Reginald Jones, Scott Rutter, Ben Stein and Christopher Hitchens to speak on campus, and bringing Pat Toomey to speak off campus.

Mitchell and the BUCC also held a rootbeer kegger to protest the emergency alcohol policy, sponsored the free speech forum, challenged the University policy that prohibits political candidates from speaking on campus and held a debate about assault weapons with the College Democrats Tuesday.

"We focus on what matters on this campus. We focus on everybody's individual rights and I think that's why we have been successful to the degree that we have, because it catches people by surprise. People don't expect us to talk about what we talk about," Mitchell said.

Mitchell said his goal and the goal of the BUCC is to supply the kind of ideas that are underrepresented at the University.

"I don't like the name conservative... I don't think exactly what we're doing is conservative. We are not fighting for the status quo; take one look at what we say and do," Mitchell said. "The ideas of liberty, of individual rights, of skepticism, of authority—those are the ideas we have about the government. Your individual rights matter, and we take that philosophy and we try to apply that to the campus."

Professor of History Leslie Patrick said that while the BUCC lacks the campus community "liberal," "apathetic" would be a more appropriate description.

"Through [Mitchell's] efforts and the BUCC, students, faculty and administration have had numerous opportunities to argue, debate and learn—something that one would hope remains central to the mission of this university," Patrick said.

Mitchell said he feels accomplished when members of the University community recognize him or the BUCC for their unrelenting efforts.

"When we had the rootbeer kegger outside for the old alcohol policy, it was really nice when professors were walking by and a lot of them came up to me and said, 'I think you guys are doing a good job. I'm as far from you politically as you can imagine, but you're doing a good thing, and that's important,'" Mitchell said. "I see this [faculty support] with other things too, like the free speech forum. The fact that the faculty would be interested is great. I think people are starting to understand why we do this."

While Mitchell and the BUCC have not brought about significant change to University policies, they have encouraged a change in thinking by administrators, faculty and students.

Mitchell points to the speech code as one of the BUCC's most obvious achievements, saying that even though the school still has a code, the administration would not enforce it because "there would be a firestorm."

Mitchell said one of his most important achievements at the University has been to realize that "getting all A's is not the most important thing—it is not even close."

"The most important thing to me about college is the personal relationships you develop. The best thing I have done for myself is to learn how to relate to people," Mitchell said. "Often times I worry about my friends and the people I love, then I worry about the BUCC and then in my spare time I worry about my classes."

While Mitchell said his schoolwork is lowest on this priority list, he still maintains a 3.9 GPA.

Patrick used the word "conviction" to describe Mitchell.

"In addition to his busy schedule as an activist, he continues to be intellectually engaged and successful in courses," Patrick said.

Mitchell has also attained a number of personal successes.

He has been invited to appear on television four times and appeared twice, he has been invited to speak on the radio five times and spoke four times, and he has written stories for the Washington Post and Philadelphia Inquirer.

This year, Mitchell was invited to attend a Geostategic Correspondent Course in Prague and to address "Wednesday Wake-Up Club Breakfast" in Washington, D.C. Mitchell will intern in the summer at the Heritage Foundation, a think tank whose mission is to formulate and promote conservative public policies.

Mitchell is the recipient of a Conservative Political Action Conference scholarship; he was named junior fellow at the American Academy of Political and Social Science, an honorary award for students in those disciplines; he received the Ronald Reagan Future Leaders Award from the Phillips Foundation; and he is a nominee for the PEN/Newman's Own First Amendment Award.

"While his work in the BUCC is probably the most visible impact he has made on Bucknell, more important is the personal impact that Charles has made on individuals," Reimer said. "Charles is not only a listener, but will take time out of his busy schedule to find out how you are really doing. He is intuitive and able to offer sound advice... The real Charles is caring and compassionate."

Mitchell and the BUCC have been at the center of much controversy this year, and Mitchell has been criticized harshly.

"There is the misconception that Mitchell and the BUCC like to be in the limelight—that I like being the center of controversy. That is not true. I don't view myself as a success by virtue that people are mad at me. I always question myself when people are critical," Mitchell said. "I hate dealing with stuff like the administration refusing to participate in our forum, or in the beginning of last year when people called me a racist. I cannot think of anything that hurts me more than that, and I don't like being hurt."

Mitchell's girlfriend, Denise Chaykun '03, said Mitchell is one of the kindest people she knows.

"He goes out of his way to be pleasant, even when people are mean to him—he goes out of his way not to do the same thing back," Chaykun said.

Mitchell said that, contrary to what many may think, he does not want to be a politician, because "too often politics is not about principles. It is about getting re-elected and getting money, and I don't care about that stuff." He said he wants to work for a nonprofit company once he graduates.

"If I work at a nonprofit, I can fight for all the ideas I believe in. I can do the stuff that makes my blood flow all day and they will pay me to do it," Mitchell said.

While many may think

Charles Mitchell '05 and the BUCC held a "rootbeer kegger" behind the Langone Center in response to the administration's implementation of the emergency alcohol policy in November.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

like being hurt."

Mitchell's girlfriend, Denise Chaykun '03, said Mitchell is one of the kindest people she knows.

"He goes out of his way to be pleasant, even when people are mean to him—he goes out of his way not to do the same thing back," Chaykun said.

Mitchell said that, contrary to what many may think, he does not want to be a politician, because "too often politics is not about principles. It is about getting re-elected and getting money, and I don't care about that stuff." He said he wants to work for a nonprofit company once he graduates.

"If I work at a nonprofit, I can fight for all the ideas I believe in. I can do the stuff that makes my blood flow all day and they will pay me to do it," Mitchell said.

While many may think

People of the Year

Ferraro goes above and beyond as a student advocate

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Ferraro spoke to students during a forum held in late November regarding the emergency alcohol policy. Ferraro said he tries to balance his conscience with students wanting to make decisions.

FERRARO From page A1

measures.

"Through all that, Dean Ferraro was the steady captain, marshaling the system to its current state," Pollock said. "And with the emergency measures themselves, he was a key voice of balance in the final set, after some even more stringent measures had been considered."

And Ferraro was successful. During a hard-alcohol ban that some thought would last forever, the administration announced March 1 that the emergency policy would be replaced by a modified points system. Many would claim that the modified system the University has today is better than the system prior to the alcohol ban. The system serves students in an educational and regulatory sense, and provides graded levels for different risks.

"The emergency measures were meant to be short term," Ferraro said. "Paradoxically, they may have helped because everyone focused on the alcohol policy, helping to modify it."

From the start of the alcohol measures, Ferraro was concerned about sending anyone away on a first offense, but does admit that sometimes short-term suspensions can be helpful, allowing students to take some time away and cope with any alcohol issues.

Ferraro said one of his four primary goals upon coming to the University in the fall of 2000 was getting the alcohol situation under control. Upon entering his position, the University was ranked at the top of The Princeton Review's list for hard alcohol and was above the national average in binge drinking.

The original points system was executed in Ferraro's second year as dean. Before that system, the University alcohol policy was essentially determined on a case-by-case basis. Ferraro contentedly recognizes the progress since, and cites only a single, short-term regression in the fall.

"Our progress is good. This came home to me at a conference where I shared a paper describing Bucknell's treatment of alcohol issues. There were 35 schools present, and many came up to me afterward asking for advice," Ferraro said.

The other three goals Ferraro identified in the fall of 2000 were addressing volunteerism in a serious manner, implementing the Plan for Prominence for Fraternity and Sorority Affairs, and allowing for more diversity. Ferraro is also pleased with his office's relationship with students.

"The Dean of Students office has evolved. While this office has always been concerned about students, I feel we know a lot more students individually and communicate with them directly," Ferraro said.

For the future, Ferraro hopes to expand the Residential College system to provide a choice for upperclassmen in addition to the Greek system, and at the same time work with fraternity and sororities to help with recruiting.

While he does not oppose off-campus living, he does want to be prepared in the event that students are required to live on campus, in which case he would like to see University apartment housing, or "really nice townhouses," as he describes it.

According to Weber, Ferraro reviewed the trustee's plan for off-campus living, and carefully considered the pros and cons to get an accurate and balanced view of the overall situation.

"He presented the case without bias, which is tough because he is in the middle of some big issues," Weber said.

Presenting arguments without bias and always trying to do what is right is something familiar to Ferraro, according to many who work with him.

"He tries hard to make students happy and uses a balanced voice to come up with a sound plan. He gets beat up terribly in the process, but if that's not commitment, I don't know what is," said Shauna Irwin, assistant director of fraternity and sorority affairs.

"Ferraro operates on a highly principled background, often having to make unpopular decisions in an un-thanked and difficult job," Phillips said. "He is truly concerned about the safety of students. Unfortunately, many students don't appreciate it."

But like anyone in a top-level administrative position, Ferraro is often involved in controversial issues and must make unpopular decisions. Ferraro himself even admits that there were some nights he would have rather gone without, specifically citing the blackface incident, in which two students dressed up as Serena and Venus Williams.

"When he has been criticized as not looking out for a particular group's interests, it has always been for an action sin-

"Dean Ferraro is cursed with the toughest job on campus. He is in a constant tug of war between students and the administration."

—John Siwicki '05
BSG president

cerely meant to protect another group's interests," Pollock said.

"Dean Ferraro is cursed with the toughest job on campus. He is in a constant tug of war between students and the administration," said John Siwicki '05, president of Bucknell Student Government. "Dean Ferraro goes to bat for students on a daily basis and is not recognized for it enough."

Seeing Ferraro jogging around campus may even be an indicator to students that he was recently in a difficult position.

"One always wants to be loved, but I'm realistic in the sense that that doesn't always happen," Ferraro said. "People may eventually understand certain choices that had to be made, but if not, and my day doesn't get any better, I will just put on my running shoes."

Ferraro's staff stresses that he is often in a difficult position, but works in the best interests of students.

"His willingness to be on the chopping block for a number of unpopular issues is most respectable; he is always standing up to make the right decision, even if it will be unpopular with students," Conrad said.

Nevertheless, Ferraro said he has difficulty imagining himself as an administrator and is often confused that the term "administration" in part refers to him. After studying at the American Academy in Rome as a Fulbright Scholar, Ferraro returned to Wisconsin, interested in starting out as a teacher. Due to union complications preventing him from being a teaching assistant, he volunteered to teach free, when he was informed of TA positions in the administration. Known there as "baby deans," Subsequently, Ferraro both taught and administered at Wisconsin, William & Mary, Emory and Columbia, until coming to Bucknell.

While Ferraro would look forward to being a vice president for student affairs in the future, he enjoys his job at the University and said he thinks that once its full potential is tapped, it can be one of the very top schools in the country.

"I love my job. My wife, Mary, loves it here too," Ferraro said.

Mary is working to get her master's in social work, and Ferraro jokes that he looks forward to free counseling to get over his workaholicism. Ferraro is also the father of two adopted sons: David, 26, works in Banking in Charlotte; and Matthew, 22, goes to school in Bloomsburg.

When not working or going to the gym, Ferraro pursues his passion for Civil War history and is a Renaissance historian by trade. He and his wife also like to travel, and look forward to going back to Spain one day.

Whether it is a big grin under his now-extinct mustache, cracking up over a sophisticated word he uses that no one else understands, or telling stories of ridiculous encounters with downtown residents, Ferraro is well-regarded by students and colleagues for his good-humored personality and laid back sense of humor.

More than anything else, Ferraro cares for the welfare of students and enjoys his time spent with them. He reflects on a particularly memorable story when he invited 125 resident assistants to his house and they all had to gather inside once it started pouring. His crowded house reminded him of a lifeboat, and some students played the piano and sang while others ignored the rain and played volleyball in the front yard.

"It reminded me of the indestructibility of youth," Ferraro said.

"Selecting Dean Ferraro as Person of the Year is a wonderful and appropriate statement in acknowledging his extraordinary commitment to the best interest of students," Pollock said.

Fisher active with countless campus organizations and a member of the Bias-Related Harassment panel. Fisher has defined himself and made himself known throughout the University community.

FISHER From page A1

To relieve the stress built up by his participation, the already active student bikes, sometimes as far as State College, plays ultimate Frisbee and even draws as an outlet.

Adding to the range of his involvements within the campus community are his academic contributions to both the anthropology and physics departments, in which Fisher double majors. His campus reputation is not relegated to the conversations of students—many of Fisher's leading admirers come from within the faculty community.

"I think he's a real intellectual, he loves ideas and he's passionate about anthropology and anthropological theory. He's a delight to have in class and to have a dinner conversation with," said Ned Searles, visiting associate professor of sociology and anthropology. "I think maybe he has a maturity and intellectual curiosity that's not shared by a lot of his peers."

Fisher's intellectual and anthropological interests are not limited to the page. Several focus areas, both close to home and abroad, give him the real-life experience to make a difference and change lives.

One cannot meet Fisher without also being introduced to Nicaragua. Fisher's Nicaraguan experiences began and grew through his time with the Bucknell Brigade.

Fisher first participated in the Brigade as a sophomore, returned his junior year and was made a student leader his senior year.

"On campus, we have all these political dramas and nothing ever gets done," Fisher said. "The brigade actually does something—we fund an entire medical clinic in Nueva Vida."

Fisher never talks about the cause of the brigade as a charitable condescending mission. Any conversation on the topic makes it apparent that Fisher has learned just as much from the Nicaraguans as he has given to them.

"A lot of personal vignettes have to do with how poor and how important the work of the Bucknell Brigade is in helping to lift the Nicaraguans of Nueva Vida... Josh sees that as only a partial function. He wasn't condescending to these people—he was seeing them as survivors and as interesting and informative people," Searles said of Fisher's excerpts of his Nicaraguan travels.

In speaking of Nicaragua, Fisher reiterates the sentiment that going to "the last place you'd expect to go" allows you to come back to the University with a fresh set of eyes, seeing the campus through the lens of a new experience.

This revitalized view has allowed Fisher to see the campus in a different light as well. For his honors thesis in anthropology, Fisher took on University culture, producing a study and video of the campus.

"I did an ethnographic film with an appendix," Fisher said. "It was a huge project—over 100 pages about the social canvas of privilege and fitting in... I did 60-70 interviews with Bucknellians."

This may have been uncomfortable for some, but for Fisher, it is not out of character to take a critical look at any place he is in.

"He's a mindful person who challenges people to experience whatever it is they are in the middle of," said Dr. Don Stechschulte Jr., Director of Student Health Services and an original Bucknell Brigade member.

As part of this challenge, Fisher takes up a range of campus issues outside of his academic research. His heavy list of involvements attests to his activist nature, a role for which Fisher may be most well-known. But Fisher is careful to point out that "political dramas" will not solve any problems on campus.

"Campus politics imply that you're just trying to convince people on the other side," Fisher said. "It's important to stop yelling and just actually listen... it's much less about trying to prove a point than actually learning something."

In the listening silence, people notice and goals are achieved.

"He was always a very good writer," said Geoff Schneider, associate professor of economics and adviser for the Bucknell Caucus for Justice. "He has gotten more creative in the way he forms issues and communicates issues and thoughts. He's always articulate and gets the work done when it needs to be done... Josh's work with the caucus has been instrumental and has improved Bucknell since he's been here. He has improved the climate for workers as well—he's already made a difference."

Fisher has been an instrument of conversation and change, but he is quick to pass recognition to those around him, acknowledging faculty, members of FLAG&BT, non-traditional students and Conservatives Club President Charles Mitchell '05 during his interview. What Fisher may not realize is the amount of reciprocal admiration that stems from his associates.

"I think he's brilliant," said non-traditional student Zabrina Ashton '05. "If you're going to hear about one student after they leave this university, you're going to hear about him. He's going to try to change the world and is probably going to succeed in many ways. My money's on Josh."

For Fisher, changing the world begins with two places that are familiar, but personally influential. He plans to continue graduate studies in cultural anthropology at the University of Oregon next year, with the goal of eventually becoming a professor in this field. As part of this program, he will have the opportunity to return and work hands on in the first, Nueva Vida, Nicaragua, a place that has already put its stamp of Fisher's life and attitude.

The other? It only takes one point to pop bubble and consider Bucknell burst.

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

The speech code at the University is one of the things Charles Mitchell '05 has fought against in the past year. The BUCC, along with other campus groups and individuals, sponsored a Free Speech Forum, held in March.

In Memoriam

Louis J. Casimir Jr.

PROFESSOR EMERTUS

Courtesy of Office of Communications

Former University Professor Louis J. Casimir wrote his own obituary.

Long-time friend and colleague Michael Payne, professor of English, said Casimir's self-written obituary signified his sense of humor.

"Lou's typical reaction to ceremonial writing (including obituaries) was to greet them either with disdain or with the bemused mockery of his beloved Mark Twain," Payne said.

Casimir led a committed life to both students and faculty.

"For years after his retirement, he could be met on the porch of Cafe Latte by many of his former students and colleagues who remembered well his daily haunts and who sought him out there. During his final years, when cancer claimed his voice, he communicated, nevertheless, by the warmth of his personality and by what he could write on his clipboard," Payne said.

Casimir's life was full of innovative accomplishments and will be missed by the University.

The following is what Casimir wanted published:

Louis J. Casimir Jr. bought the farm Thursday, Feb. 5, 2004, having lived more than twice as long as he had expected and probably three or four times as long as he deserved.

Although he was born into an impecunious family, in a backward and benighted part of the country at the beginning of the Great Depression, he never in his life suffered any real hardships.

Many of his childhood friends who weren't killed

Former University Professor Louis J. Casimir wrote his own obituary. Chair of the Faculty and Professor of English Michael Payne said Casimir's self-written obituary signified his sense of humor.

or maimed in various wars became petty criminals, prostitutes, and/or Republicans.

He survived three years overseas in an infantry regiment in excellent health, then university for four years on the GI bill, and never thereafter had to do an honest day's work.

He was loved by good women, had loyal friends, and all his children were healthy, handsome and bright.

For more than six decades, he smoked, drank and ate lots of animal fat, but never had a serious illness or injury.

His last wish was that everyone could be as lucky as he had been, even through his demise was probably iatrogenic.

He was preceded in death by his wife of 43 years, Judy.

He is survived by his brother Jack of Houston, Texas; and his children, Randall Kent of Brunswick, Ga., Louis John III (Trey) of Lewisburg, Thomas Bettis of Lewisburg and Edith Austin Wheat of Austin, Texas. Lou was a daredevil: his last words were "Watch this!"

A memorial service and barbecue will be held on Labor Day at Lou's place.

Donations may be made in Lou's memory to the Union County Public Library, 205 Reitz Blvd., Lewisburg, PA 17837.

Funeral arrangements were by Shaw Funeral Home, Milton.

Editor's note: This obituary was provided by the family.

John Throssel

"GOOD LUCK JOHN"

His mantra "Good luck to you," evolved into his moniker, "Good Luck John."

By ALYSON WALKER
Senior Editor

John Throssel, better known to students as "Good Luck John," died July 23 in an area hospital at the age of 73.

Throssel had been a well-known member of both the University and Lewisburg communities. Generations of students have had long discussions with Throssel, who was once referred to as "Bag Man," due to his ever-present paper bags, often filled with reading material. Others remember his smiling face as he wished them a good day, and his mantra "Good luck to you," evolved into his moniker, "Good Luck John."

Services were led by Andrew R. Morgan, pastor of St. Paul's United Methodist Church in Lewisburg, which Throssel attended. Other remarks were made by MacKenzie Scott, pastor of First Baptist Church; Ian Oliver, University chaplain; and Brian Vasey, pastor of Beaver Memorial United Methodist Church.

Oliver stated that although new students were at first put off by Throssel, they would soon see his kindness and be drawn to him.

"He told me that he decided to say 'good luck' because it was a greeting everyone could accept, regardless of religion or culture," Oliver said at Throssel's service.

Throssel was a spiritual and peace-loving man. He played the organ at St. Paul's United Methodist Church, and many of his talks were to encourage religion and peace. He often spoke to students and community members about wanting to minister in Israel.

"John longed for and prayed for peace, not just peace in the Middle East, but peace in our own community. John loved this community and he loved the people of this community. His love was seen in so many simple ways, like standing on the corner and offering an encouraging word or 'Good Luck' to people as they walked by," Morgan said at the memorial. "His love was seen in how he joined so many different places for worship and praise. But John's love and concern for us went much deeper. John was interested in seeing people come together. He wanted to see people in our community and in our world genuinely liking one another and working with one another to serve God and each other."

Throssel had to depend on the support of the community. When he was residing in Mifflinburg, townspeople would give him rides to and from Lewisburg, and, later, it was the townspeople who noticed Throssel's failing health, according to Morgan.

Art Moser, mail services supervisor, took Throssel into his home, until health problems made it necessary for Throssel to enter a nursing home.

Morgan said Throssel always wanted a home of his own; housing had always been an issue for him.

"John never stopped dreaming of and longing for a place to call his own ... a place where no one told him what to do and where he could gather together resources for his ministry in Israel and his orphanages and schools," Morgan said at the memorial service. "John has this permanent home. It's not in Lewisburg, and it's not even in the nation of Israel—it's even better than that, for it is in the kingdom of God."

Nicholas C. Dattilo

BISHOP, DIOCESE OF HARRISBURG

By KIM DUNLAP
Staff Writer

Bishop Nicholas C. Dattilo, 71, died March 5 at the Holy Spirit Hospital in Camp Hill, Pa. The bishop had been hospitalized since early February due to several severe health problems, including diabetes and heart and respiratory complications.

Dattilo, who served as the Roman Catholic Bishop of the Diocese of Harrisburg for 14 years, oversaw 89 parishes in 15 counties, including Lewisburg and the University.

The bishop made his first visit to the University in February 2003.

"He visited every parish in the diocese. That was a goal of his, and he achieved it," said Reverend William Weary, of St. Joseph Roman Catholic Church in Danville, according to The Daily Item.

During his visit, the bishop gave mass and spoke to several members of the Catholic Campus Ministry.

Patricia Hohl '06 was one of many who met Dattilo when he visited.

"He emphasized the importance of youth and the church, which is particularly poignant for Bucknell," Hohl said.

Jennifer Malcolm '04 said she could tell Dattilo spoke with compassion.

"I enjoyed his homily at the mass because he really had great things to say. ... It was very inspiring," Malcolm said.

Many agreed that they were warmed by their meeting with Dattilo and that he was a truly likeable individual.

"I had a wonderful feeling of comfort when I was around him. ... It made you feel good—just being with him," University President Steffen Rogers said.

"I spoke with him before and after the mass. He was just a very genuine person—so nice, so sweet and definitely very funny too," Malcolm said.

University Catholic Chaplain Martin Morgan said that University students were not the only people affected by the bishop's visit—Dattilo himself enjoyed the trip.

Dattilo supported the University though none-tary contributions to CCM from the Harrisburg diocese, as well as through personal support.

"At times when he wasn't dressed up as a bishop, he was always found wearing his Bucknell T-shirt. ... He loved Bucknell and was really touched by his visit," Moran said.

"He's a huge Bucknell enthusiast. He was very proud of the Catholic program here on campus and of Father Moran and all he has done. He was pleased that students were returning to religious life. He saw Bucknell as a model for how things should be in the future," Rogers said.

The Bishop strongly reinforced CCM at the University.

"He was our biggest supporter. ... He was supportive not only personally but also financially and professionally," Rogers said.

"Bishop Dattilo has defended keeping a full-time priest on our campus to serve our students as well as developing inter-religious dialogue and understanding in our area," University Chaplain Ian Oliver said.

Dattilo also made extensive efforts to personally keep in touch with student CCM members at the University.

"He sends all freshman a personal letter welcoming them to the diocese. Many of us didn't know him one on one, but he really reached out," Hohl said.

Dattilo was known for his kind and giving personality and for his dedication to those within the diocese. Dattilo worked to consolidate parishes, relocating priests to the most thickly settled areas to serve more people. He also organized the construction and finance of a new diocesan hall and a new retirement home for priests.

The bishop's motto, emblazoned on his coat of arms, was a Bible passage: "Love life and do good."

"He had an ability to look at the worst of situations and bring some good out of it," said Ronald Lengwin, a close friend of Dattilo's.

"He will be missed," Oliver said.

Dattilo was born in New Castle and received his seminary education in Pennsylvania. After serving as pastor and vicar in several areas, Dattilo was named the Roman Catholic Bishop of the Diocese of Harrisburg by Pope John Paul II in 1989. His funeral was held at the Good Shepherd Church in Camp Hill on March 12, and 1,100 people attended.

Courtesy of Chris Heisey

Jill Wasiowich '02

FORMER UNIVERSITY STUDENT

By MEREDITH ATKINSON
Staff Writer

Jill Wasiowich '02, "a brilliant student with a fine personal record on campus," according to Dean of Students Richard Ferraro and a sentiment echoed by those who knew her, passed away June 14.

"She passed away due to a long-term illness, which had been diagnosed at age 16," Ferraro said. "She was heroic in trying to deal with this illness, but in the end succumbed."

Wasiowich was from Wayne, New Jersey, and died peacefully at her home. Before attending the University, she graduated from Wayne Hills High School. After graduating magna cum laude from the University, she worked as an editorial assistant for Pearson Education.

Before her death, Wasiowich left an open letter in which she listed some of the ways she tried to live her life, and other wisdom that she accumulated in her lifetime. Among those, she suggested that everyone should "find something to be passionate about ... always be honest with yourself and others ... learn to laugh at yourself ... and don't spend life working, but instead, travel, go places, do things and see things..."

Wasiowich also encouraged people to "learn to say you're sorry ... accept apologies and forgive people ... stop worrying ... and be an optimist..."

"Jill was a sister who truly embodies the Chi Omega spirit. She was an amazing sister and friend to so many people. She a very strong person, and it showed through in everything she did. She touched everyone's lives in such a positive way and she is truly missed."

—Marie DeAngelo '04, former Chi Omega president

Wasiowich ended her letter by saying, "I also feel that if I have made such a difference in so many people's lives (which I still don't understand how), then I must have done something right. Unfortunately, I'm not sure how I did it, so I can only guess at what has made me who I am."

Wasiowich was a sister of Chi Omega, and according to the women in her chapter, she made a profound difference in many lives. Many remembered her as an energetic, kind and positive person.

"Jill was a sister who truly embodies the Chi Omega spirit. She was an amazing sister and friend to so many people. She was a very strong person, and it showed through in everything she did. She touched everyone's lives in such a positive way, and she is truly missed," Chi Omega president Marie DeAngelo '04 said.

Chi Omega sorority sister Jill Wasiowich (center) was "a brilliant student with a fine personal record on campus"

Courtesy of Chi Omega Sorority

Wayne E. Manning

PROFESSOR EMERTUS

By JULIE LESKO
Staff Writer

Wayne E. Manning, University botany professor emeritus, passed away on Feb. 8 at the age of 104.

Manning was born April 12, 1899 in Toledo, Ohio, and according to long-time friend and colleague Professor of Biology Warren Abrahamson, "enjoyed roaming the nearby woodlands to study birds, moths and mushrooms."

Manning's passion for botany was evident at a young age when he and four others formed a nature club. He began his University career in 1945, and up until his retirement in 1968, Manning developed a living plant collection of over 400 species for the University. This collection is housed in the Biology building's greenhouse. During his retirement, Manning served as a guide to visitors at the greenhouse.

Manning and his students developed the Wayne E. Manning Herbarium, the University's preserved plant collection of over 22,000 specimens.

Abrahamson witnessed the personal connection Manning made with students.

"He was known as the professor who took students under his wings and guiding many to careers in the sciences and health professions," Abrahamson said.

The guidance offered by Manning emulated the ideal relationship between educator and student.

"Wayne was one of the Bucknell faculty members whose example became our 'Teacher-Scholar' model," Abrahamson said.

Manning's students were inspired by his dedication to his field.

"I wanted to be just like him 'when I grow up.' He was a vibrant but low-key teacher who was able to instill his love of his subject to his students. As my favorite teacher, there will always be a part of my heart that is just for him," said Julie Smith '47, a professor of women's studies at Gettysburg College.

Smith was the first University student to enter Manning's classroom when he arrived from Smith College in the summer of 1945.

"Wayne's ability to share his love of botany inspired a generation of students. An internationally recognized scholar—his research and over 40 publications on the walnut and hickory family remain as seminal works on the anatomy and taxonomy of this family," Abrahamson said.

Manning's contributions to botany were also honored by a walnut species named in his honor—Alfarao manningii.

"At his 100th birthday dinner given for him at Bucknell, my husband ... and I were able to visit with him, and despite the difficulty of making myself heard above the crowd, I know that I was able to assure him that his inspired teaching helped shape how I see the world," Smith said.

"He was a remarkable man, and I was privileged to be one of his students. His passing saddens me, but he certainly lived a full life," Smith said.

Courtesy of Office of Communications

IN THE PAST YEAR, THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY HAS SUFFERED A NUMBER OF LOSSES.
THE BUCKNELLIAN HONORS THEIR MEMORY.

Nancy Suddath

BISON EMPLOYEE

Suddath was a "good friend, good neighbor and loving mother."

By KAREN GRABOWSKI
Staff Writer

A picture of the late Bison employee Nancy Suddath sat at the entrance of the eatery in memory of the "good friend, good neighbor and loving mother."

"Nancy was so full of life," Bison employee Bobbi Earnest said. "She was 70 years old, but she acted like she was in her 40s."

Earnest worked with Suddath for two years and remembers her the most for her sense of humor.

"She was a prankster," Earnest said. "She used to pull pranks on her two sons all the time. She was also a flirt and teased several of the young males and other students. She had a lot of good friendships with students."

Suddath is survived by her two sons, but her maternal influence touched those at the Bison as well.

"She was like a mother figure to most of [the Bison staff], so it makes it even harder," Earnest said. "She was a wonderful lady. I miss her. We all miss her."

THE YEAR 2003-2004 IN REVIEW

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Performances

This school year brought music and entertainment from a number of different genres and styles, varying from pop artists to student showcases.

Melissa Pauling—The Bucknellian

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Beginnings and Endings

This year brought about many drastic changes. University President Steffen Rogers will retire in May and will be replaced by Brian C. Mitchell. The University was considered to be in an "emergency state" and an emergency alcohol policy was implemented by the administration in November, later to be replaced in March by a revised points system. Delta Delta Delta Sorority was suspended by the University until the fall and Delta Upsilon Fraternity was suspended by its national chapter until the fall of 2006.

Courtesy of Fahima Chowdhury

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Famous Faces

Ben Stein

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

James Earl Jones

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Many well-known figures have spoken on campus throughout this year. Each new speaker adds a unique voice to the discourse of the University.

John Updike

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Ralph Nader

Courtesy of Reuters

Mitch Albom

Alyson Walker—The Bucknellian

Cecily Cairns

Sports Editor

There's a legend that runs among the charmingly arrogant circles of Mercedes ownership.

It promises that if you put a million miles on a Benz—any Benz, so long as you do it with the original engine—the manufacturer will give you a brand new vehicle free of charge.

There aren't a lot of cars that ever get that far. Mine, a little hand-me-down 1987 300-series diesel, has 196,226 and change on the odometer.

Somewhere around 180,000 miles, it stopped looking like a $70,000 car. The engine started leaking. Warning lamps jolted alight on the dashboard. Little freckles of rust started corroding their way through the slick white exterior panels.

When the leaking wouldn't stop, the Mercedes service station told my dad to scrap the whole machine. It wasn't even worth the cost of fixing it.

Sell the parts that work. Leave the rest to fester in some vehicular graveyard. Maybe keep the hood ornament, the little three-pointed star, a symbol that, in the world of cars, promises a perfect ride, unwavering performance and unending durability.

What seemed like a million-mile investment came awfully close to putting out five years ago, before it even hit the 200,000-mile mark.

It goes that way, sometimes.

The truth is, my college experience—which, I suppose, is the designated subject of this little pseudo-memoir—at times seemed about as unsalvageable as the Mercedes dealership felt my car was five years ago.

The car is a little easier to talk about.

The truth is, I didn't want to write this senior reflection. I asked on its roster long after I became an athletically useless commodity.

I was lucky to have had an athletic trainer who was willing to aid me in my quest to nail this demon of an injury, even as medical specialist after medical specialist showed me the door, even when all he could do was listen to me talk my way up the same dead end street over and over.

I was lucky, in this last semester, even as I watched the life drain out of my own athletic dreams, to have found in sports journalism a new sense of purpose, a new end to which I could dedicate—perhaps a little too much—my every effort.

I was lucky, when I most needed something to latch on to in the waning months of my college tenure, to have had the privilege of tagging around after a baseball team that had the character to tolerate my eccentricities and the class to humor my efforts at affording it obsessively thorough newspaper coverage.

I was lucky—really lucky—to have a set of parents who were willing to support me, even when insoluble heartbreak reduced me to a temperamental wreck, even when I probably wasn't a whole lot of fun to support. I was lucky that they were willing to keep sending me back to this place even when I complained about it and, less, lucky that they realized what I was really realizing in recent weeks—that these last two years, even in their imperfection, were still invaluable.

I was lucky that five years ago my dad realized something similar about a little diesel 1987 Mercedes-Benz, with 180,000 miles in the tank.

The car didn't get scrapped. It kept its star.

Sixteen thousand miles later, that Benz still caddies me back and forth from home to campus and anywhere else I've found fit to travel.

The rust freckles are more like craters now, the air conditioner is caput and the cruise control lever has been reduced to decorative purposes only.

But it's still a Mercedes. I still get to watch the road behind that perfectly dimensioned three-pointed star that sits atop the grill.

That it isn't perfect anymore doesn't make it unsalvageable. And in the end, when my old Benz and I tool out of here in three weeks, I'll have found in this place quite a lot that I'll miss—and appreciate—during the next 803,774 miles.

Jason Rubinstein

Former Editor-in-Chief

This is the worst week of my life. Forget about the major projects and reports that are all due today; that is not what I am talking about. Life as I know it is coming to an end, literally.

Not only will I be leaving this lifestyle that I have grown accustomed to over the last four years, but in just over a month from now I will be awoken at 5 a.m. each morning by a Marine drill sergeant, prohibited from using a computer or cell phone, and told what clothes I will wear each morning. This last full week of class will be followed by a very quick May, and afterward I will be entering Officer Candidate School for the U.S. Navy.

I now realize that everything I have always planned on doing is not done. And as I reflect back on my four years here at the University, I realize that it has been only downhill since freshman year. Yes, we have been graduating since the day we first enrolled.

So let me start out with a word of advice: Nothing beats freshman year. It is not just me who thinks that. Almost everyone I have spoken to seems to agree. Despite more-exciting classes, fraternity membership or extracurricular involvement in upper-class years, your first year here will stand alone as the best. On that note, I do thank all my friends freshman year who made these memories possible.

And then comes senior year (I think I skipped two years, but I do not remember much from them anyway). Here is another bit of advice: Do not put off accomplishing any of your goals to senior year. If you thought your first three years went by fast, you are in for a big surprise your final year. I truly am saddened by the things that I have not accomplished but had always hoped to accomplish while in college. If I could only start all over again.

This sadness is, of course, mostly overcome when reflecting on what I have accomplished, who I have met and where I have gone during my four years here. I cannot thank enough those who have helped me to become a better person and helped me experience so much while I have been here.

I would like to acknowledge three distinct people who have most positively and significantly affected my overall experience at Bucknell, whether it is social, academic or extracurricular.

Sarah Wilson '04—I met you over AOL Instant Messenger the summer before arriving at the University, and I can say you have been one of my most dependable friends ever since. We have been through a lot over the last four years, and as the first Bucknellian I ever spoke to, all I can say is that I hope you will be one of the last.

Professor Knisely—Just as I was on the verge of considering changing majors, you taught thermodynamics in the fall of my sophomore year. Your passion for teaching and great sense of humor inspired me to remain as a mechanical engineering student. I have been honored to be your student twice more since that first class.

This is the worst week of my life. Forget about the major projects and reports that are all due today; that is not what I am talking about. Life as I know it is coming to an end, literally.

Rachel Laskow '03—I can blame you and only you for my level of involvement in The Bucknellian. Lucky for you, I enjoyed every minute of it. You have been a great friend, inspiration and fellow editor, and I owe you for my experience with and lessons learned from The Bucknellian.

And, finally, to all those who have asked me if I am excited about graduation: Not simply put, I think that I could be here for another couple years. I guess that is the problem with life in general: You do not know how to make the best of it until it is all over.

Do not get me wrong. I have had an amazing time here at the University. While I cannot honestly say that I knew this was the place for me from the moment I stepped on campus, it has been a thrilling four years.

But I guess this is the way college ends, not with a bang, but a whimper.

freshman challenging his opinion was not to resent, disrespect or ignore me; instead, he helped me, talked with me and demonstrated how people who are confident in themselves and their abilities react to situations like this.

These adults gave me an early example of how leaders should act when confronted by others. Their confidence and respect has become only more praiseworthy after I have seen how easy it is for insecure or temperamental leaders react to similar situations.

Two students who have made a resounding impact on me during my time here are Aaron DeKosa '03 and Andrea Dill '03. When I returned from six months of campaign work in the spring of 2003, I came back to my job as an Opinions editor for this paper.

Over the two campaigns I worked on, I had an opportunity to recruit and lead hundreds of volunteers and to see how successful, world-class leaders run organizations. I thought of myself more as a leader than before and was looking forward to another three semesters of working for the paper.

Toward the end of the semester, then Editor-in-Chief Jason Rubinstein '04 announced that he was stepping down and that there was going to be an election for a one-semester term as EIC. I had no inclination to run until DeKosa and Dill both asked me to think about running. They talked with me candidly and allowed me to explore whether I wanted the job.

In the end, I did want the job and they supported my bid fully, leading to my chance to lead this paper last semester. Without their confidence, I never would have had what I easily consider the best semester here. My only regret is that they graduated that spring and did not get a chance to see and live my term.

There are others who deserve their own discussion, but space is short. Ahmad Hassan '05 has been a great friend of mine for the past three years; Kathy O'Heir '03 is the only person I have ever met who puts a smile on my face every time I see her, although Ashley Malliken '06 comes close; Jason Rubinstein '04 was a great leader of this paper and an even better help to me last semester; finally, Michelle Dombek '05, who was the associate editor last semester, was invaluable in helping us achieve greatness and helping me see how I could be better.

So what I have learned here? Character matters, many times more than anything else, and it is the hardest thing to fake. It is an ongoing process, to be improved everyday.

Real leaders are never intimidated by others, never seek to put someone down to elevate themselves and are always on the lookout for good ideas and passionate people. They take the blame and pass the credit, not the other way around.

Trust your friends, especially if you have exceptional ones. And do not just hope for great friends—surround yourself with great people whenever possible.

Life here is good, even with problems and frustrations. There are good people all around and all one has to do is look for them. And in the end, life is all about people, not money, titles, plaques, cars, resumes or anything else we spend our time burnishing and worrying about. Life is just about people, and the quality of the latter will dictate the quality of the former.

THE Bucknellian

SECTION B

April 30, 2004

inside Volume 133, Number 12

News:

The University is likely to implement a mandatory alcohol education class for first-year students next year.

See page B3

University President Steffen Rogers and wife Athena say 'Goodbye'

BY MELINDA KUMMER
Managing Editor

Although their term as president and first lady of the University is ending, President and Mrs. Steffen Rogers remark fondly upon the time they have spent here. Students made their time here particularly special, and they see students as "the heart and soul of the University." President Rogers said that he and his wife tried to center their activities "around student events" during their term.

Commencement presents a special occasion to interact with students, and is a special day for both Rogerses.

"Commencement day of the year," President Rogers said.

Mrs. Rogers agrees and said she felt satisfaction at the "sense of completion and growth" on Commencement day.

"It's the one day everyone sees me and smiles," President Rogers said.

One of their favorite memories was greeting students from the top of their porch for First Night. Though it was not possible for them to stand at their usual post this year due to structural unsoundness, the Rogerses enjoyed seeing the students gathered round.

Another University community gathering they take pleasure in is the first few days of orientation.

Shaking hands at orientation is a highlight of the year for the Rogerses.

"I'm impressed by that day. I see such an array of emotions," Mrs. Rogers said.

The welcoming of new students to the Bucknell family appeals to Mrs. Rogers' maternal sense.

She has said at more than one welcoming speech that she desires to be seen as the campus "mom."

Working with University staff and visiting the Bucknell Brigade in Nicaragua was a positive experience for the Rogerses.

Beyond taking time to visit South America and the student service projects, the Rogerses also took time to visit such academic locations as the Bucknell in London and Bucknell in France programs.

Sept. 11 was a difficult time to lead the University through, but President Rogers said he was especially encouraged by the campus communities' efforts to comfort one another.

"It was a moment of pure Bucknell," President Rogers said.

Seeing the members of campus' reaction to the tragedy and their inclination to cling to one another for support and comfort warmed the Rogerses' hearts.

On the lighter side, the Rogerses remember students playing on their swing set in the yard. Some students started to swing and then decided to ask President Rogers if he would give them a ride in his sports car. The president obliged the eager young men.

"We're all a little spoiled at Bucknell," President Rogers said.

Other students who were also attracted to the swing set, later sent a letter to Mrs. Rogers asking her to provide them with a ping-pong table. She happily arranged for the delivery of a new ping-pong table, commenting on how glad it made her to bring happiness to the students.

Students Christmas caroling before fall finals in 2001 were greeted at the president's house with fresh-baked cookies. Mrs. Rogers coincidentally happened to be baking her prize-winning recipe when the students came by to serenade for the neighborhood.

Mrs. Rogers particularly remembers receiving a letter of appreciation from a student who was awarded a scholarship enabling him to attend the University. A few years later, the student requested that he use the letter in a speech he was giving. Mrs. Rogers proudly produced the letter for him.

"I never throw away a letter," Mrs. Rogers said.

Among

the area attractions they will miss are BJ's Steakhouse and The Fence. Just mentioning BJ's steaks makes their mouth water, and drive-in food at The Fence reminds them of their '55 Chevy convertible.

"It makes us feel young," President Rogers said.

The Rogerses will miss Lewisburg events, such as the annual Fourth of July parade and the Victorian parade. The small-town atmosphere in Lewisburg has helped make them feel at home.

"We came and were made to feel so welcome," President Rogers said. "We've made lifelong friends."

The Rogerses plan to retire to their house on the Finger Lakes.

While the Rogerses will always be able to return to their memories of the University, they will not be abandoning all their tangible ties to campus.

They look forward to returning to visit their niece, who will be attending the University as part of the Class of 2008.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Courtesy of Public Relations

Peter Hackeman

Former Editor-in-Chief

These past few weeks, as I tried to find a coherent and succinct way to reflect on my time here, I have come across stories of people I want to share. A couple of the stories involve people I don't know, while the others are people that have made a lasting impression in my life.

Last weekend, the 2004 NFL draft occurred. Eli Manning was expected to be drafted first overall by the San Diego Chargers. Manning, the younger brother of current star Payton and the son of former star Archie, comes from a highly respected, all-American family, known for its humbleness and respect.

Instead of being honored by the Chargers' interest in him, Manning decided to punt. He said he did not want to play in San Diego, then threatened to sit out the whole season rather than sign a multi-million dollar contract to play a game he claims to love.

Contrast this with the tragic story of Pat Tillman. Tillman was thought to be too small to play college football and too small to make in the NFL, until the hometown Arizona Cardinals drafted him in the waning rounds, and he went on to not just make the team, but lead it in tackles his second season.

But these sports accomplishments are not what make Pat Tillman. He turned down a generous contract from the St. Louis Rams, instead deciding to stay with Arizona for a third of the money. He literally gave up $6 million to stay with a team that had believed in him. For Pat Tillman, loyalty is worth at least $6 million.

Tillman then walked away from the remaining years on his contract to enlist in the military after Sept. 11. He joined in the Army, specifically the Army Rangers, one of the most dangerous assignments possible. He refused media requests, and asked his family and friends not to talk about his decision. From what we later learned, he did not want anyone to think he was doing anything special.

Tillman was killed last week, serving our country. His life and the way he lived it are finally getting the celebration it deserves. Tillman's life profoundly touched those around him and will affect those of us who never knew him. These two men, who acted so differently, clearly illustrate the choices and options we face when living our life.

My story over the past four years here is best told by the people around me. I will spare you the Eli Mannings I have encountered and focus just on the people striving to live like Tillman. This is my story.

I leave here this May a different person than when I arrived four short years ago, owing much of that transformation to the people surrounding me. The growth of a person, like the growth that surrounds us in nature, is due not to the efforts of the person alone, but to the combination of circumstances around it.

There are too many contributors to my evolution to list here, to name, to even remember. Some of the more poignant stand out for me and deserve to be recognized.

Blythe Sanford '01 interviewed me when I was 17-year-old prospective student. Our 20-minute conversation seemed no more special than any other during that time in my life, and I remember nothing of it, save for the Post-it Note marking an in-progress interview she left on the door.

Fast forward through the rest of my high school career, by the waiting list notices, past the one acceptance which both shocked and sustained me, beyond the pedestrian summer of anticipation and to my first days on campus. I kept out this woman to whom I knew I owed so much.

Peter Hackeman—The Bucknellian

She, doubtlessly having done more interviews than I, remembered only one thing about our conversation. She said I had great character; I doubted that anyone could come such a conclusion so quickly.

I did not agree with the conclusion, but I thanked her and promised myself that I would work, think and grow so that I might become the person she saw one afternoon in March. I leave here still hoping, still looking to improve, still searching to become a person with great character. I hope I have done her proud.

Through a minor role in Bucknell Student Government and the desire to become as active on campus as possible, I became a student member of the University Planning and Budget Committee. The recent history of students on the committee was meager at best, and I was essentially ignored the first meeting there.

I sought two of the senior administrators on the committee who surprised me by what they said: Keep coming to the meetings, learn the budget, know your facts, be respectful and responsible, but do not be afraid to speak up. I have rarely needed encouragement to voice my opinions, so this was all I needed to become something more than a token seat at the table.

Soon after, I was in a debate with a committee member over the size of faculty pay raises. I argued for one number, he advocated for another, and to my surprise, the committee's recommendation was closer to my figure than his.

I felt good about myself, for making a difference and helping to keep student costs down, while being respectful. I had earned the respect of the committee members and would be able to continue to bring the student perspective to these deliberations.

The next day I found out that the professor was Michael Moor, the Oxford graduate from the economics department, a man who knew more about higher education economics and budgeting than I could ever hope to learn. To my shock, his reaction to an upstart, great friend of mine for the past three years; Kathy O'Heir '03 is the only person I have ever met who puts a smile on my face every time I see her, although Ashley Malliken '06 comes close; Jason Rubinstein '04 was a great leader of this paper and an even better help to me last semester; finally, Michelle Dombek '05, who was the associate editor last semester, was invaluable in helping us achieve greatness and helping me see how I could be better.

So what I have learned here? Character matters, many times more than anything else, and it is the hardest thing to fake. It is an ongoing process, to be improved everyday.

Real leaders are never intimidated by others, never seek to put someone down to elevate themselves and are always on the lookout for good ideas and passionate people. They take the blame and pass the credit, not the other way around.

Trust your friends, especially if you have exceptional ones. And do not just hope for great friends—surround yourself with great people whenever possible.

Life here is good, even with problems and frustrations. There are good people all around and all one has to do is look for them. And in the end, life is all about people, not money, titles, plaques, cars, resumes or anything else we spend our time burnishing and worrying about. Life is just about people, and the quality of the latter will dictate the quality of the former.

News

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

Sunday, April 18.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of an arm injury. A Student Health Services driver transported the student, who later returned to campus.

ALCOHOL OVERDOSE / AMBULANCE TRANSPORT / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of an unresponsive female. Public Safety determined an underage visitor was intoxicated. The individual was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment. East Buffalo Township Police responded. Citations were issued.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—Public Safety responded to the Smith Quad for the report of an intoxicated male attempting to enter buildings. The highly intoxicated male was a student who was cited for public drunkenness and turned over to a dean. A citation was issued for public drunkenness.

DISTURBANCE—A visitor advised Public Safety that two females were fighting at a nearby, off-campus location. Lewisburg Police was notified. Public Safety restrained the visitors until the Lewisburg Police, Milton Police and East Buffalo Township Police arrived. Lewisburg Police is investigating the disturbance. Charges are pending.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—An employee reported to Public Safety that unknown person(s) tampered with the John Deere Gator 6x4 parked behind the Gerhardt Fieldhouse. The incident is under investigation.

ACCIDENT / HIT & RUN—A student reported to Public Safety that a friend witnessed a van back into her car while parked in the Trax lot. Public Safety noted damage to the left side of the rear bumper. Lewisburg Police responded. The incident is under investigation.

Monday, April 19.

INFORMATION / FOUND PROPERTY—Public Safety

responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a firecracker that was found outside the building. The firecracker was confiscated by Public Safety.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of an unknown medical condition. The individual was transported by Student Health Services and later returned to campus.

Tuesday, April 20.

INFORMATION / UNAUTHORIZED VISITOR—A student reported to Public Safety that an unknown male was using a women's restroom in Roberts Hall. The Office of Housing and Residential Life was contacted and responded.

INFORMATION / FOUND PROPERTY—Public Safety responded to Gateway Kalmann-Pesner for the report of a knife found in the stairwell. No witnesses or suspects were found in the area. Public Safety confiscated the knife.

Wednesday, April 21.

INFORMATION / SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Public Safety was stopped by an employee who reported a suspicious male behind the Seventh Street Cafe. Public Safety stopped him and requested ID. The male was identified as a visitor who was looking in the recycling bins for aluminum cans. Public Safety explained the University policy and escorted the male off campus.

Thursday, April 22

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS / UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION / AMBULANCE TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to Edwards House for the report of an ill male. Upon arrival, Public Safety encountered an underage intoxicated male student.

The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned to campus. Lewisburg Police responded. The male was cited for public drunkenness and underage consumption. An uncooperative female resident of Edwards House was cited for underage consumption, using obscene language and failure to comply.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—A student contacted Public Safety and requested transportation to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment of an ear infection. A Student Health Services driver transported the individual, who later returned to campus.

Friday, April 23

INFORMATION / MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—An employee reported to Public Safety that while driving a University vehicle, he backed into a parked vehicle in the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity parking lot. There were no injuries, and the vehicle damage was minor. The owner of the parked car signed a form indicating that he did not want any compensation for damages.

INFORMATION / PROPERTY DAMAGE—Public Safety responded to Vedder Hall for the report of a broken window. No witnesses or suspects were located in a search of the area.

Saturday, April 24

AMBULANCE TRANSPORT / PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS—A Public Safety responded to the Gerhard Fieldhouse for the report of an unconscious male. The student was transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room and later returned to campus. East Buffalo Township Police responded. Citations were issued for public drunkenness.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety responded to an incident where cigarette ashes were accidentally blown into a student's eye. Public Safety transported the individual to Evangelical Community Hospital emergency room for treatment and later returned the student to his campus residence.

UNDERAGE CONSUMPTION—Public Safety responded to Smith Hall for the report of students playing beer pong. Two cases of beer were confiscated from the room. The students were cited for underage consumption and the presence of alcohol in a room.

Myers '01 injured in Iraq

By DAVID MERIN
Writer

Despite what the media portray, Lt. David Myers '01, a Marine in Iraq, said he thinks the United States is in Iraq for the right reasons. Myers was stationed in Fallujah until the beginning of April, when he was injured by an explosion. Now he is back in Iraq.

Myers and other Marines were on foot when he noticed a wire on the ground and alerted them there was a bomb nearby. As they were backing up, the bomb exploded. Myers suffered the most from the explosion and was airlifted to a hospital in Baghdad for surgery.

The most serious injury to him was caused by shrapnel to his face and eyes. While in the hospital, despite his injuries, Myers wanted to recover and return to Fallujah.

"Dave does not want to come home. He wants to go back to lead his Marines," his sister Jen Myers said.

Over the last few weeks his vision has recovered enough to go back to fighting in Fallujah. Declining the opportunity to return to the United States to receive more corrective surgery and treatment, Myers has chosen to go back to Iraq. Myers was reunited with his Marines in Fallujah April 19.

"As much as we tried to persuade him [to come home], he strongly believes that he needs to be with his Marines to finish their mission. He believes that they arrived in Iraq as a team and he'd like to return them to Camp Pendleton as one," Jen Myers said.

Myers' family went to visit Dave Myers in Germany while he was recovering, and said that while his eyes were red and swollen, his spirits were bright. In fact, Myers was even able to joke about the situation.

"After an appointment or two with some doctors, I am confident I'll be able to stick the 'magnifying glass' on par with Derek Zoolander or Hansel. I'm not too sure I'll be able to turn right though because my right eye is still a bit blurry; I might even fall off the catwalk. ... However, my biggest concern as of late has been my fine young men down in the fight," Myers said.

There were many other wounded soldiers in the hospital, and Myers' family said that while it was surreal to see so many who had just been amidst the fighting, it was inspiring as well.

"So many of them had looked death in the face—had been shot, hit by bombs, shrapnel and worse, and yet each of them had such a positive resolve and attitude. Each of them had a story and those who spoke said the same thing Dave says—that they want to go back and finish what was started," Jen Myers said.

Steve Wolf '07, a member of ROTC at the University, also said the men and women in Iraq are courageous.

"It's always a tough thing to have to get called over to battle, but once you're there, you have to believe in the cause. Despite injuries or any other setbacks, it is a soldier's job to fight. David has gone above and beyond his call of duty in returning so soon, and those of us here are thinking about him very much," Wolf said.

Myers has gained great insight into the war because of the time he has spent fighting. He has experienced it firsthand and therefore understands what the United States is really dealing with. He has seen the enemy and believes wholeheartedly in the cause.

"If ever the question comes up as to why we are here just understand that it is not Fallujah, Iraq and Afghanistan it would be somewhere in America. This fight is an extension of 9/11—never forget that," Myers said.

Myers said he wants people to know that he thinks the media distort what is actually happening in Iraq. Despite his personal setbacks, he is ready to fight again because he believes that the United States is making progress in Iraq.

"When the reports of American casualties come across, please also know that while we are dishing it out in a vicious way, our successes are not often reported. ... God bless America, my Marines and all of you," Myers said.

CASH FOR BOOKS

Bookstore Bucknell University

Wednesday
May 5 thru

Friday
May 14

Wed-Fri, May 5-7 ... 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
Mon-Thu, May 10-13 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
Friday, May 14 9:00 a.m. to 11:30 a.m.

Register Now!

Session 1
May 19 - June 30

Session 2
July 6 - August 13

BOSTON
UNIVERSITY

SUMMER TERM
www.bu.edu/summer
or call 617.353.5125

News

FASHION EXPOSE

The Couture Culture Fashion Club held its first fashion show April 9 in the Smith Quad. All fashions modeled in the show were student designs.

By SARA STEENINI
Writer

The University is considering introducing a mandatory alcohol-education program for the Class of 2008. Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said the decision should be finalized in about a week.

A subgroup of the Committee on Complementary Activities composed of students, faculty and administration designed the program, which will not count for academic credit.

According to Ferraro, each of the four classes, or workshops, will focus on a specific topic.

The first would focus on the relationship of alcohol and biology, dealing with such issues as absorption rates, alcohol proof and the different effects of alcohol on men and women.

The second class's aim will be to help students develop a better understanding of the University's alcohol point system. Ferraro said that the point system is complex because it deals with a number of different issues.

"Having a chance to talk through those issues would be much more helpful for students, for it would help them understand how to use the system," Ferraro said.

The relationship between alcohol and the community will be discussed in the third class, according to Ferraro. Town/gown and assault issues and the interaction between alcohol and academics are some of the topics for this class.

The fourth session would involve tests to see what the students learned, and a discussion of resources available on campus.

The classes will have supplemental work, such as articles to read or short reaction papers, but should not be overly demanding.

Ferraro said the University has been considering the idea of creating an alcohol education program for first-year students for three years, and that some faculty members have been making similar suggestions since the 1980s.

According to Susan Tabrizi, assistant professor of political science and member of CCA, CCA has been discussing it for the past year.

Ferraro said it is important to have a fair and balanced sanctioning system, but sanctions are only reactive.

"The idea was to try to take a tack that would allow us to be proactive, or preventative, so that we could deal with issues related to use and abuse in a good and anticipatory way," Ferraro said.

Tabrizi said a sanctioning system that punishes students for alcohol policy infractions is only part of the equation.

"Our overall goal was to provide students with the resources that they need, that they may not be coming to college with initially, to help them to make safe and responsible choices about alcohol," Tabrizi said.

Ferraro said that in the past, the administration assumed that students received an extensive alcohol education in high school. Instead, the administration discovered that high-school alcohol education tends to focus heavily on issues related to DUIs, but less on the broader, more basic issues, such as the relationship between intoxication and violence, and the dangers of alcohol poisoning.

Because only a small portion of the alcohol-related issues that the University deals with involve DUIs, Ferraro said having a broader knowledge of alcohol use and abuse is important.

"One of the things that we found out that was surprising

"Whenever you're dealing with alcohol and its use and abuse, there's not one magic bullet."
—Richard Ferraro, dean of students

was that the number of students who come to college and have tried alcohol in high school is probably about 85 percent, so there's a lot of applied experience ... but there's not a lot of background knowledge," Ferraro said.

Student Chair of CCA Gary Thaniel '04 said that the University needs a more structured and informative program. According to Thaniel, the mandatory first-year student program Choices and Challenges is not effective in preventing alcohol abuse.

The new program's goal is not to stop students from drinking, but to teach them how to make educated decisions and be aware of the dangers of alcohol abuse.

"One of the things we're concerned about is when people talk about binge drinking (which is another way of saying heavy and rapid drinking), they are essentially talking about almost unconscious and reckless activity. So we're hoping that by having a class, we will cause people to pause, think over what they're doing, and get in a safer, more thoughtful area," Ferraro said.

Thaniel said that in developing the program, the subgroup of the CCA hopes to teach first-year students how to drink responsibly to help avoid the consequences of another emergency alcohol policy.

After all of the alcohol-related incidents that occurred this year, Ferraro said that it seems to be time for the University to "tackle this issue so that we can give our students the best chance to be successful and happy."

The past year's incidents are not the only reason the University is considering introducing this alcohol education program, according to Tabrizi.

"These ideas have been batted around for a while, it's not a knee-jerk reaction to a few isolated incidents," Tabrizi said.

The program is designed to have small, discussion-based classes with about 20 students.

"It's hard to personalize this type of discussion when you're in a large, 300-person hall, and someone is talking at you rather than talking with you, so I think the extent to which students are able to be a part of the discus-

NEWS BRIEFS

By Chelsea Hetrick

BSG president is 'confident' students will have cable

Select students have reaped the benefits of free cable testing since last month, but this period ends in the next week. After technicians work out all of the kinks and improve any weak areas, the test results will be reviewed.

"The preliminary cable report is generally positive, and I am confident students will be enjoying cable in their dorm rooms next fall," Bucknell Student Government President John Swicki '05 said.

Public Safety information cards now mandatory

Public Safety is now required to give all students stopped a card listing their rights and the procedure that the officers must follow. Cards state that the officer is required to give a Field Sobriety Test, which may be waived by the student in favor of a Breathalyzer test. If the accused fails the Field Sobriety, the Breathalyzer test will be given.

"I (you) may refuse both the Field Sobriety Test and Breathalyzer Test; however, I (you) will be considered intoxicated and subject to the maximum sanctions allowed by University Policy. Moreover, the dean on call may be summoned to initiate formal action against me (you)," the card reads, according to an e-mail sent by Bucknell Student Government.

Ligare to replace Payne in July as faculty chair

Associate Professor of Physics Martin Ligare will take over for Professor Michael Payne as the elected chair of the faculty in July. The Faculty Counsel nominated Ligare, and elections were held earlier this month.

"The foundation of Bucknell's strength as a university is the strength of its faculty," Ligare said. "Although the official powers of the chair of the faculty are not great, I will work with the administration, students, staff and board on behalf of my colleagues to make sure that the potential contributions of the faculty to the University are fully realized."

He said he looks forward to working with President Mitchell in the coming months.

Alcohol education class for first-years a possibility for fall

By SARA STEENINI
Writer

The University is considering introducing a mandatory alcohol-education program for the Class of 2008. Dean of Students Richard Ferraro said the decision should be finalized in about a week.

A subgroup of the Committee on Complementary Activities composed of students, faculty and administration designed the program, which will not count for academic credit.

According to Ferraro, each of the four classes, or workshops, will focus on a specific topic.

The first would focus on the relationship of alcohol and biology, dealing with such issues as absorption rates, alcohol proof and the different effects of alcohol on men and women.

The second class's aim will be to help students develop a better understanding of the University's alcohol point system. Ferraro said that the point system is complex because it deals with a number of different issues.

"Having a chance to talk through those issues would be much more helpful for students, for it would help them understand how to use the system," Ferraro said.

The relationship between alcohol and the community will be discussed in the third class, according to Ferraro. Town/gown and assault issues and the interaction between alcohol and academics are some of the topics for this class.

The fourth session would involve tests to see what the students learned, and a discussion of resources available on campus.

The classes will have supplemental work, such as articles to read or short reaction papers, but should not be overly demanding.

Ferraro said the University has been considering the idea of creating an alcohol education program for first-year students for three years, and that some faculty members have been making similar suggestions since the 1980s.

According to Susan Tabrizi, assistant professor of political science and member of CCA, CCA has been discussing it for the past year.

Ferraro said it is important to have a fair and balanced sanctioning system, but sanctions are only reactive.

"The idea was to try to take a tack that would allow us to be proactive, or preventative, so that we could deal with issues related to use and abuse in a good and anticipatory way," Ferraro said.

Tabrizi said a sanctioning system that punishes students for alcohol policy infractions is only part of the equation.

"Our overall goal was to provide students with the resources that they need, that they may not be coming to college with initially, to help them to make safe and responsible choices about alcohol," Tabrizi said.

Ferraro said that in the past, the administration assumed that students received an extensive alcohol education in high school. Instead, the administration discovered that high-school alcohol education tends to focus heavily on issues related to DUIs, but less on the broader, more basic issues, such as the relationship between intoxication and violence, and the dangers of alcohol poisoning.

Because only a small portion of the alcohol-related issues that the University deals with involve DUIs, Ferraro said having a broader knowledge of alcohol use and abuse is important.

"One of the things that we found out that was surprising

"Whenever you're dealing with alcohol and its use and abuse, there's not one magic bullet."
—Richard Ferraro, dean of students

was that the number of students who come to college and have tried alcohol in high school is probably about 85 percent, so there's a lot of applied experience ... but there's not a lot of background knowledge," Ferraro said.

Student Chair of CCA Gary Thaniel '04 said that the University needs a more structured and informative program. According to Thaniel, the mandatory first-year student program Choices and Challenges is not effective in preventing alcohol abuse.

The new program's goal is not to stop students from drinking, but to teach them how to make educated decisions and be aware of the dangers of alcohol abuse.

"One of the things we're concerned about is when people talk about binge drinking (which is another way of saying heavy and rapid drinking), they are essentially talking about almost unconscious and reckless activity. So we're hoping that by having a class, we will cause people to pause, think over what they're doing, and get in a safer, more thoughtful area," Ferraro said.

Thaniel said that in developing the program, the subgroup of the CCA hopes to teach first-year students how to drink responsibly to help avoid the consequences of another emergency alcohol policy.

After all of the alcohol-related incidents that occurred this year, Ferraro said that it seems to be time for the University to "tackle this issue so that we can give our students the best chance to be successful and happy."

The past year's incidents are not the only reason the University is considering introducing this alcohol education program, according to Tabrizi.

"These ideas have been batted around for a while, it's not a knee-jerk reaction to a few isolated incidents," Tabrizi said.

The program is designed to have small, discussion-based classes with about 20 students.

"It's hard to personalize this type of discussion when you're in a large, 300-person hall, and someone is talking at you rather than talking with you, so I think the extent to which students are able to be a part of the discussion is great for airing any questions, concerns, disagreements, what have you," Tabrizi said.

If the University does decide to introduce the education program, Ferraro and Tabrizi do not expect it to instantly bring an end to alcohol abuse.

It will complement the University's existing programs, such as the alcohol point system, in addressing the issue and raising awareness. Ferraro said that the program will be a small but significant component of the entire program.

"Is an educational offering on alcohol a panacea? Is this a cure-all? No. Whenever you're dealing with alcohol and its use and abuse, there's not one magic bullet. It takes a variety of approaches, for different effects appeal to different people," Ferraro said.

Other measures that the University takes to raise awareness about alcohol abuse are the 21st birthday card, an alcohol diversion class for students who have had problems with alcohol and handbooks for students and faculty, Ferraro said.

Ferraro said faculty members encourage the effort to go beyond sanctions and provide students with education. And University parents are supportive of the program, according to Thaniel and Ferraro.

"The Parents Board loved it," Thaniel said. "I think that students will be receptive to it because they recognize that there's a big transition from high school to college, so the education is helpful."

Despite the positive reaction from some members of the community, students have had mixed feelings about the program. According to Ferraro, students are excited about the program.

"Students with whom we have spoken really liked the idea because they really want to be preventative, instead of having bad things happen and then have to react to them," Ferraro said.

Other students, such as Sallie Garfield '04, said they recognize that the program's success is contingent upon its structure.

"It should address issues that students are going to be confronted with realistically in college, because I think that it's always good to be informed," Garfield said.

Gus Campbell '04 said he thinks the program is not necessary and that it will not be effective.

"I think that it's ridiculous because they already have too many meetings about alcohol," Campbell said. "Mandatory classes will just be a nuisance."

Ferraro said that in the future, the University hopes to introduce a system in which older students are assigned as peer leaders to incoming first-year students, and administrative or faculty members leading alcohol education courses.

"We think students learn a lot from their own peers, and having a combination of the elders and the peers," Ferraro said. "You get a combination of experience, which is valuable, and also proximity. It's more powerful than having just an elder do it, or having just a peer do it."

MARCO'S

Enjoy Parent's Weekend with a Taste of Mediterranean
Cuisine in Historic Danville
Serving Lunch and Dinner
Monday-Thursday 11:00am to 9:00 pm
Friday-Saturday 11:00am to 10:00pm
Closed Sundays

LIVE Music Monday & Tuesday
Evenings
282 Mill Street, Downtown Danville
Call for reservations: 275-8122

Fabulous Coffee,
Deserts and More!

Coming Soon to South Sixth Street

Scott Stieler BU '87
Proprietor
522-0443

The Winfield Baptist Church
"The Bible Reaching Church For the Whole Family"
(Founded 1869)

Invites both men and women of Bucknell
to worship and fellowship

Sunday Services: Sunday School: 9:15 am;
Morning Worship 10:15 am; Evening
Worship 6:30 pm

Evangelical
Traditional and contemporary Christian music
Biblical preaching by Dr. John Thornbury
Addressing today's issues

Located on a 28 acre site 3.5 miles south of campus.
Take Rt. 15 South to Winfield, turn right on 304, travel 1/4 mile, church on the right. For more

Opinions

The Bucknellian

Volume 133, Number 12
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editors-in-Chief
Brent Butler '06
Elisabeth Salemm '06

Managing Editor
Melinda Kummer '05

Director of Sales
Kristin Stangl '05

Senior Editors
Jason Rubinstein '04
Sandi-Jo Galati '04
Peter Hackman '04
Alyson Walker '04

News Editor
Meghan Ball '06

Assistant News Editor
Chelsea Hetrick '07

Opinions Editors
Aaron Hanlon '04
Kevin Brown '06

Business & Politics Editors
David LaRoss '05
Chris Stivers '05

Sports Editors
Cecily Cairns '04
Kreley Sidow '07

Features Editors
Ashley Maliken '06
Rebecca Wandinger '06

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Juliana Pietak '04
Catherine Heverling '07

Photography Editors
Adam Wilcox '06
Tyler Kidder '05

Assistant Photo Editor
Jaclyn Carr '05

Chief Copy Editor
Michelle Dombeck '05

Advertising Managers
Joshua Mayer '04
Davaish Malhotra '06

Advisor
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorial of The Bucknellian reflects the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editors-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 400 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

PUBLISHING INFORMATION

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian, Subscriptions, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

ADVERTISING POLICY

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2004 The Bucknellian

THE Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Alcohol education should involve peer leaders

This year has seen the destruction of a University alcohol policy that was doomed before it was even implemented. Next year, the administration will attempt to preemptively cure alcohol problems before they begin by implementing an alcohol education program for first-year students.

An alcohol education program has potential for success; however, the administration must be wary of how the program is executed. There are certain guidelines that should be followed in order to ensure that the series of classes in the program is productive for students as opposed to it being hours of wasted time. It is essential that these classes are taught and led by people students can relate to and respect. First-year students are much more likely to listen to their peers than to an administrator or a faculty member. In addition, first-year students will feel much more comfortable asking questions and approaching people without an authority figure present. In order for this program to be a success, the education must be as interactive as possible.

To maintain this interactive relationship, senior education majors or fraternity and sorority members who would like to take on a service project would be perfect candidates to provide this alcohol education for the first-year students. This type of relationship between upperclassmen and first-year students will be beneficial to everyone in the University.

The respect first-year students feel toward the upperclassmen will translate into more students listening to what is said in these important meetings. The talks should focus on the biology of drinking and the University point system. Many first-year students are unaware of simple rules to follow while drinking. A fair amount do not know that eating before going out drinking or having other fluids besides alcohol between their drinks will help them from becoming dangerously intoxicated.

These classes must be taught so that the first-year students can feel like they are spoken to, not spoken at. People who do not know how to talk to students should not teach these classes, as those people could potentially lose the capability to be able to communicate with students in the future.

This next year provides the University with its first attempt at this new first-year alcohol education. Perhaps it would be helpful for students on boards such as the Panhellenic Council and the Interfraternity Council to meet with administrators and discuss what really happens when students drink.

It appears as though many administrators are disillusioned about many aspects of drinking on campus, and students from these groups can explain what the popular "dangerous drinking games" really are, and what the problematic binge-drinking trends have become. This way, the classes can be constructed and geared toward what is likely students will experience. While the administration is focusing on teaching students, it should be challenged to learn as well.

This education policy has the potential to save lives and help students prevent making grave errors. The administration must make sure that it takes advantage of this opportunity with careful planning.

Letters to the editor

Ultimate frisbee team doesn't receive deserved attention

To the Editor:

I am writing in order to shed some light on ultimate Frisbee at the University. The men's ultimate team, the Mudsharks, is ranked 27th in the nation out of hundreds of other schools. This is the highest we have been ranked in recent history.

From the women's side, the Peacefrogs are ranked at an equally solid 31st. This year has been amazing, with the men's record standing at a solid 18-7 and the women's at 15-7.

At sectionals, the start of the national tournament series, both the Mudsharks and the Peacefrogs placed second overall, and moved on to regionals, which is just one step below the national tournament.

I am disappointed that no one from the University or The Bucknellian has noticed the success of these well-performing club teams.

Neither team has received any attention, and with a spectacular season such as both teams are enjoying, I hoped every week to find a small article about the team in The Bucknellian. Each time, I was disappointed.

I do not think we should be front-page news, not by far. However, in a school of athletes of all levels of ability, I had hoped that ultimate Frisbee would be appreciated for the intense sport that it is. Instead, ultimate Frisbee seems to have become an outside sport, deferring little to intramural teams and receiving zero attention from its school. If this is a school of athletes, then there should be support of all athletes, varsity, club or intramural.

Sincerely,

Tomek Kott '06

Catalyst prints lies regarding the Bucknell Conservatives Club

To the Editor:

The recent edition of The Catalyst (Vol. 21 No. 3) contained two lies regarding the Conservatives Club. Since there will be no more issues of The Catalyst this semester, I felt it necessary to address this issue in The Bucknellian.

The article on page 14 asserted that "BUCC members defaced The Catalyst and threw away copies." This sentence was followed by a footnote, which stated, "Later, Charles Mitchell '05, president of the BUCC, apologized for this act."

The situation described above simply never happened. No BUCC members have ever defaced or thrown away any copies of The Catalyst or any other publication. To clear any confusion, one incident occurred in the fall semester where one first-year member of the BUCC, not yet aware of what was appropriate or inappropriate, inserted some fliers for one of our lectures into approximately 10-15 copies of The Catalyst in Coleman Hall. When Mitchell found out about this, he promptly contacted Josh Fisher '04 on the Catalyst staff and apologized, noting that the problem had been remedied and would not happen again. It is clear in this incident that no copies of The Catalyst were defaced, and certainly none were thrown away.

The second lie contained in the article implies that the BUCC is not "organic," that it is the puppet of off-campus foundations such as the Leadership Institute and Young America's Foundation.

While it is true that these foundations exist to help fund lectures and other events, their support is a rather small portion of our annual budget. Of the roughly $41,000 that the BUCC spent in the past year, only $6,600 came from groups such as LI and YAF. BUCC members work hard to make contacts with alumni and sell Counterweight subscriptions. These activities have no bearing on our eligibility for Bucknell Student Government Student Activity Fee monies.

Debate and exchange of ideas are outstanding and noble ventures in any context, especially on a college campus. However, lies undermine the opportunities of learning and growth offered by debate. Furthermore, The Catalyst's practice of leaving such articles unsigned is particularly cowardly. The right to freedom of speech carries a responsibility to be held accountable for what is said.

Sincerely,

Matthew M. Gabler '06
Secretary-Elect
Bucknell Conservatives Club

University makes it difficult to fulfill religious obligations

To the Editor:

House, home of Catholic Campus Ministry, has been victim to over the past three years—from breaking garbage cans, to spray-painting profanities on the building. Yet, while campus-wide e-mails are sent out by University administrators encouraging free speech, nothing is said about the frequent hateful attacks on that symbol for Catholicism, and the home of the University's Roman Catholic priest.

While these attacks come from students (one would assume), the University and its Activities Committees (seem to) actively promote an agenda contrary to its religious groups on campus.

Whether it is scheduling major events during religious services, or giving no time for the 1,400 Catholic students and faculty to go home to be with their family during Good Friday and Easter (the most holy day in the Catholic faith), the University makes it increasingly difficult for students to balance religious obligations with the busy life of a college student. We attend the University not just for its stellar academic program, but also because of its strong encouragement to nurture the whole person, including the spiritual component.

For example, just this Sunday the freshman class picnic was scheduled at 4 p.m., the same time as Catholic Mass. As the semester winds down and homework increases, the University should not make attending religious services even more difficult for University students.

I am sure those of other religious traditions, such as our Jewish and Muslim friends, share the same sentiments when the University schedules events at the same time as their religious services and holidays. This practice is even more troubling in light of the alarming levels of vandalism that Newman

Sincerely,

Dominic Rupprecht '07
Secretary/Treasurer CCM

Write for ops next fall.

e-mail kbrown@

US is in Iraq only because of oil

By JAKE PALLEY
Staff Writer

Shortly before the United States invaded Iraq in 1990, Former President George Bush gave a nationally televised address to inform the American people of his decision.

"The stakes are high. Iraq is already a rich and powerful country that possesses the world's second-largest reserves of oil and over a million men under arms. It's the fourth-largest military in the world. Our country now imports nearly half the oil it consumes and could face a major threat to its economic independence," former President Bush said in his speech.

In the same speech, former President Bush said, "let me be clear: The sovereign independence of Saudi Arabia is of vital interest to the United States."

Former President Bush gave this speech on Aug. 8, 1990. Nowhere in his speech did he cite weapons of mass destruction, terror or installing a democratic government as a reason for going to war with Iraq.

Instead, the rationale he used to underwrite the Persian Gulf War was motivated by pure economics. Think of it this way: Saudi Arabia has one quarter of the world's proven reserves, and a roughly one-fifth of America's imported oil at the time came from Saudi Arabia. If Saddam Hussein had been able to disrupt the Middle Eastern oil supply in 1990, oil prices would have skyrocketed and the U.S. economy would have tanked. A stable oil supply is therefore crucial to our economic survival.

That is why former President Bush said, "the sovereign independence of Saudi Arabia is of vital interest to the United States."

States."

In other words, the independent supply of Saudi Arabian oil is vital to our interests. Under this strategy, we were ready to sacrifice blood for oil.

Fast forward to today, and the United States' economic security depends on the same Middle Eastern oil the United States depended on 14 years ago, just as the United States' foreign policy today is shaped by the same people. (Vice President Dick Cheney, Secretary of State Colin Powell, National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice and others have served for both Bush administrations.)

Nothing has changed except the rhetoric used to justify our second war with Iraq. In 2002, President George W. Bush's State of the Union address justified the United States' intervention in Iraq on the basis of terror and weapons of mass destruction. Bush said Iraq is an essential theater in fighting the war on terror. When these claims turned out to be bogus, the Bush administration had to come up with a new way to justify an unjust war. In last week's press conference, Bush did just that.

"A free Iraq is vital because 25 million Iraqis have as much right to live in freedom as we do. A free Iraq will stand as an example to reformers around the Middle East ... Above all, the defeat of violence and terror in Iraq is vital to the defeat of violence and terror elsewhere, and vital, therefore, to the safety of the American people," Bush said.

Unfortunately, this justification is no more valid than the last. Since the war began over a year ago, the terror alert index is still elevated. Thousands of Iraqis have been killed in the warfare. About 700 Americans have died, most of them after major combat was declared over. Meanwhile, hundreds of billions of dollars will be spent in order to build a facade of democracy.

When sovereignty is passed back to Iraq June 30, the transfer will be in name only. The Guardian reports that any law, regulation, order and directive issued by the Coalition Provisional Authority shall remain in force. Further, foreign companies are allowed to own 100 percent of Iraqi assets (except in natural resources), and to take 100 percent of their profits out of the country, depriving Iraqis of much needed funds to rebuild their ruined infrastructure.

Finally, the United States will become more entangled in Iraq's future than Bush has ever publicly admitted even after June 30 has come and gone.

"U.S. engineering bases" in Iraq, capable of housing the 110,000 soldiers who will be posted here for at least two more years," according to The Guardian.

That, in conjunction with what is now the world's largest U.S. Embassy located in downtown Baghdad, means the United States is there to run the country behind the facade of democracy it created.

So here it is. America is occupying Iraq for oil. There is no altruistic purpose beyond that. Former President Bush explicitly said that much in 1990, and the current President Bush has not offered one convincing, consistent alternative. Do not kid yourself—we are sacrificing our blood, our reputation and world security for oil. Then again, we all need a little oil. So the question now is, are you OK with that?

Government involvement in the institution of marriage is unnecessary

By AARON HANLON
Opinions Editor

Yesterday I was fortunate enough to see actress Camryn Manheim on CSpan squawking on one of her political power-rips about all the rights that the evil Bush administration takes away from the individual. In spite of the fact that Manheim is about as knowledgeable of political philosophy as Anna Nicole is of the physiology of her TrimSpa diet, there is always something to be gained from discourse.

Amid her rants and raves, Manheim stumbled over a good point: the government really does tell us whom we can and cannot marry. This creates a situation in which the government discriminates against homosexual marriages on the basis of gender.

The debate over homosexual marriage is currently structured around two basic views: Either governments are wrongfully discriminating against homosexuals by not letting them marry because they are homosexuals (while letting heterosexuals marry), or governments are rightfully discriminating against homosexuals because the definition of marriage itself does not accommodate same-sex unions.

With the debate set up this way, marriage for same-sex couples is characterized as a homosexual-rights issue. While this sounds perfectly fine, it is a terrible way to evaluate the situation. Whether you like it or not, most Americans have serious problems with homosexuality. The basis for these problems include anything from the moral/religious to the practical.

Because homosexuality is such a contentious issue, and the homosexual lobby is given unnecessary momentum by current governmental discrimination with regard to marriage, I offer a third way to frame this debate.

Fundamentally, marriage is a religious phenomenon—a spiritual union between man and woman. Practically, it is a social union, ideally between man and woman, for the purpose of producing and raising children in an environment that is naturally preferable. These are my views, but not necessarily the views to which everyone adheres. Individual freedom allows for alternative views. Regardless, we all have the right to think what we want about the morality and/or effectiveness of homosexual unions.

Because homosexuality is in effect defined by sexual preferences of a particular sex or gender (that which is identical to one's own, of course), the state essentially discriminates against people on the basis of gender in addition to homosexuality when they tell a man he can marry a woman but not another man. Homosexuality is largely about gender.

Currently, the government has a hand in all marriages, making marriage a public event. This means that those of us who think of marriage as a sacrament or spiritual event must jump through hoops to get marriage licenses and registrations with the state, and those who believe in the moral equivalence of same-sex unions cannot obtain such a license at all.

If we eliminate the government from marriage, it solves all of these problems. Religious marriages can go on as they have, albeit without tax breaks and financial benefits. Simultaneously, the homosexual lobby would no longer have grounds to complain about discrimination, because they would be free to marry in private ceremonies similar to those of religious marriages.

Certainly, privatizing marriage would cause logistical difficulties at first with finances, arbitration, taxes and other issues in which marriage and the state coincide—but the principle of allowing individuals, via religion or otherwise, to define marriage without the government's involvement is infinitely important.

Some conservatives might argue that privatizing marriage might facilitate situations in which marriages and families could become less ideal (perhaps same-sex couples will "marry" and raise children), but it is important to consider that this is already occurring. State-sponsored marriage means nothing more than tax breaks and the like. The most important parts of marriage occur in the private sphere. The government's involvement in marriage does nothing but discriminate needlessly.

A graduate student reflects on six years at the University

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The fall of 1998 seems like a hazy memory at best to me, but that was when I first rolled into Lewisburg. Nearly six years later I am finishing up a master's degree to add to my bachelor of science, and while I have seen all kinds of changes to the University, some things still remain the same. Therefore, I have decided to rate the good, the bad and the beautiful about Bucknell.

Each category is rated on a scale of zero to four diamonds, with four as the best.

Computers on campus: ♦♦♦♦

Going from a few virus-infected 225 megahertz labs to Pentium IVs in labs galore in less than six years cost money, and the University was willing to put up the bucks. Finding a functional computer at 7 p.m. Sunday or during finals has never been so easy.

The new athletic facilities: ♦♦♦

Take a stroll around the new recreation center or out to the Mod fields if you do not know what I am talking about.

People driving to the Gerhard

Fieldhouse: No diamonds

The University is known for its ridiculous students, but this is just too ridiculous.

Fro-yos: ♦♦♦

At first I hated everything fro-yos stood for, but then I realized some of them do offer substance of mind. See them working it on the stair-masters, drinking like a sailor Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, and watch them attack the frozen-yogurt machine when the sun comes out. Can you say "Eye candy?"

Boastwack Cafeteria: ♦♦♦

For anybody who remembers the old cafeteria, the new one is a huge improvement: you can actually get pasta without waiting in a 50-person line for pork chops. The only downside is dealing with the occasional rowdies and Birthday night on Wednesdays.

Political Activism on Campus: ♦

The Counterweight and Catalyst have done wonders for making students and faculty aware of major issues more so than any other outlets I have witnessed. However, let's face it: we care more about alcohol than the war in Iraq or the economy.

The Counterweight: ♦♦♦

I would give four stars, but the talent, or maybe shock value, has definitely been on the decline. Nonetheless, it has the guts to say to the administration what needs to be said. Plus, most of its arguments are well-argued, even if I do disagree with some of them.

Campus Aesthetics: ♦♦♦♦

Do not doubt, this was the single biggest improvement to women's athletics in our nation's history. The University's interpretation of Title IX: ♦♦

Some of the administration moves, like cutting the wrestling team, were pretty spineless. Overall, they seem to do a decent job at making sure the women are well-funded.

Telling the truth: ♦♦♦♦

Honesty is the only way to go.

Media bias misunderstood

By KEVIN BROWN
Opinions Editor

One of the obstacles to real political debate these days seems to be the insistence by both the right and left that the mainstream media are biased against their own viewpoint.

While conservatives have been playing this line for years, liberals who are quick learners, have also been using this line of thought lately to explain certain stances taken by the press on a variety of issues. This futile and pointless debate detracts from potentially stimulating discussions about what is actually going on in the news, and the myth of the liberal or conservative bias of the news needs to be dispelled to allow a more real and dangerous bias to be brought to light.

If the press truly has a liberal bias, then the following current popular news topics need some explaining. The lack of debate and objection to the Patriot Act in the fall of 2001, the fact that the cover of every newspaper for almost a year was about former President Clinton's love life, the lack of enthusiasm for verbally berating President Bush about sending the United States into war without weapons of mass destruction existing in Iraq, and lack of objection to Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney appearing before the 9/11 Commission together and for only one hour.

If the press truly and vehemently possessed a liberal bias, why have these issues not been given the appropriate amount of attention? The same can be said regarding what a conservative press would concentrate on. Would there have been nearly as much coverage of Bush's alleged DUIs or cocaine habit, the questionable need to sacrifice U.S. lives in Iraq and Dan Quayle's intelligence?

Fortunately, there is an easy and simple explanation for all of these issues getting the large or small amount of press that they have in the news. The bias of the mainstream corporate media is its sensationalism. When a newspaper shows the problems facing the United States in Iraq, it is not because it is trying to discredit Bush—it is because people are dying and that sells newspapers.

Think about it—how many people will buy a newspaper if the title is "Everything is just super," when the one next to it says "Life as we know it may end." Stories are hyped up to sound interesting, and things that do not actually affect many people are given a lot of space.

For instance, people are murdered in the United States every day, but murders receive serious attention from the national press only if someone famous is the killer or the victim, or if the crime is done in a particularly gruesome way. But as the saying goes, "if it bleeds, it leads."

It is also important to keep in mind that the corporate media are just that—corporate. The media are businesses trying to sell as many advertisements as they can to generate a profit. If putting a picture of an injured soldier on the cover of a newspaper will sell more than a newspaper with a picture of a smiling child sitting in a field surrounded by daisies and butterflies, then the injured soldier will be on the cover 10 times out of 10.

All of this is not to say that political views do not appear in the press. Most major newspapers have an editorial page that takes up the issues of one end of the political spectrum or the other. And on television, there are popular shows such as "The O'Reilly Factor," "Hannity and Colmes" and "Hardball" that each take a certain slant.

But these editorials and shows do not infiltrate the rest of the news with a bias—they exist as entertainment and as a way to enliven public debate. Additionally, alternative news offers people politically slanted articles as their defining element. When reading the Nation or American Spectator, it is important to be aware that they intend to have a political bias.

Disregarding what the media report because you have been told that they are liberal or conservative is a bad way to go about becoming informed about national and international affairs. Realizing that the media do contain actual bias—including most importantly, but not limited to, sensationalism—is a good thing to keep in mind. In order to be a well-informed citizen in a democracy, there are three things to always keep in mind when trying to become educated on current affairs:

First, television is an inferior medium for learning about what is going on. Its lean toward sensationalism is greater than other media because of the sound-bite and rapid-fire format. Second, everything you read should be read critically. And finally, read many sources, including international newspapers such as the BBC online or the United Kingdom's Guardian. Reading a variety of sources will make it easier to determine what news is important, and make sure what you are reading is accurate.

By realizing the true biases of the media, each citizen can be a more effective in absorbing and understanding the truly important news of the day and as a result broaden the scope of political debate.

Telling the truth to a dean or Public Safety officer: ♦

I have only been called into Public Safety once, when I was only a witness and had no need to lie, and I have never made it before a dean, but I have seen countless friends get the book thrown at them for fessing up to their misdeeds, while others walked clean when they lied like dogs. Speak vaguely with selective recall.

Students who get busted by Public Safety: ♦

If there is even a remote chance you're guilty, run like hell. Not only will your BAC drop, but in the unlikely event you are tubby or you sprain an ankle, you can always say you were frightened, confused and frightened or just out for a jog.

Graduation: ♦♦♦♦

I have missed only one in the last five years. It is the real House Par and a heck of last burrah for many. I am expecting another barn burner this year. Hope to see you there.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Write for The Bucknellian.
It's where the action really is.

E-mail bucknellian@

WE'RE LOOKING FOR A FEW GOOD BUCKNELLIANs

There are a few openings still available in the Fall 2004 Bucknell-in-London program until May 3rd.

Internships, London Theatre, and a close encounter with British society, culture, and the British Empire. Bucknell in London covers the cost of guided field trips in the UK and to foreign countries, not to mention a semester-long pass on the London Underground and transatlantic airfare and housing in central London (one of the world's truly great cities) included. Courses suitable to all majors.

Contact Profs. Hilbourne A. Watson or Linden Lewis as soon as possible:
Watson: 7-3568 hawatson@bucknell.edu
Lewis: 7-1775 llewis@bucknell.edu

BIG Andy's
BAR & GRILL

Half Price Appetizers and Daily Specials
Mon.-Fri. 5-7 PM

THE Night Club VAULT

Mondays - All you can eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
NTN Trivia

Tuesdays - All You Can Eat Ribs 4-10 pm $9.99
Free Pool & Karaoke 9pm-1am

Wednesdays - All You Can Eat Wings $5 4pm-10pm
Houseband 10pm-1am Open Mic 11pm-12pm

Thursdays - All You Can Eat Steak $12.99 4pm-10pm
Karaoke Night 9pm-1am DJ 1am-2am

Fridays - All You Can Eat Crab - $17.99
Hip Hop DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 cover - ID Req'd

Saturdays - Prime Rib Special 4-10 pm $14.99
All Request DJ 10pm-2 am: $5 - ID Req'd

Sundays - Weekly Dinner Special 4-10pm
The Vault Open from 10pm-1am

E-mail nls01@ptd.net for Transportation

Located @ 14 South Front St. Milton, PA only 5 minutes from Bucknell! Call 570-742-8100 for directions

Summer is 2232 hours long.
Suddenly, spending 42
in the classroom
doesn't sound so tough.

Register Now!

Session 1
May 19 - June 30

Session 2
July 6 - August 13

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
SUMMER TERM
www.bu.edu/summer
or call 617.353.5125

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Speaking, listening and giving BSG's year in review

Eric Graham—The Bucknellian

Bucknellian archives

"I will be the representative voice of the students. I will open up lines of communication about issues like cable and the alcohol policy. That's my job."

—John Siwicki '05, BSG president

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

The Bucknell Student Government is the voice of the students. It is the responsibility of the BSG to represent us and vocalize our needs and concerns while striving to do everything in their power to meet the changing needs of student life. Here is a look back on some of the major events of 2003-04 that illustrate BSG's commitment to making a difference and improving the lives of students.

As a representative body, BSG initiates a number of projects each year on the behalf of the students. This year there have been many causes that BSG as a whole and individual classes have sponsored and participated in that benefit people inside and outside of the university.

For 2003-04, members of the Class of 2007 wanted to make a solid effort to address problems of poverty and to help the less fortunate locally and around the globe. The Class of 2007 contributed to the United Way, which will help programs in the greater Lewisburg area. The class also participated in the Oxfam Hunger Banquet, read for the AIDS quilt and contributed supplies to the Bucknell Brigade. Finally, the class raised funds as part of a class picnic to provide donations to Heifer International, an organization focused on aiding the development of third world countries.

The Class of 2005 was also driven by a cause. The class worked with Assistant Deans of Students Amy Badal and Dan Remley to make contributions to the fight against cancer. Part of the proceeds from a sandal sale conducted by the class was donated to Bucknell's Light the Night Walk, which benefits the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society.

"There are more than 640,000 people in the United States suffering from blood-related cancers," Class of 2005 President Dave Caribardi said. "After doing a significant amount of research, the Class of 2005 found no better way to contribute to the community than by donating proceeds to the Lymphoma and Leukemia Society, a leader in the fight against blood-related cancer."

Liz Lorson '07, BSG's community service chair pointed out some of the other contributions BSG has made as a whole to benefit the children of Lewisburg. In December, BSG contributed to a Christmas party that was held for Lewisburg children and children in the surrounding community. Most recently, BSG worked with other campus organizations to sponsor an Easter-egg hunt.

"BSG put out $600 to buy candy to fill 2,000 eggs, as well as some extra prizes. It was a huge success this year," Lorson said. "We had an Easter bunny, and Bucky the Bison there so people could get pictures, and they started the event off."

Lorson said Omicron Delta Kappa, the Class of 2007 Congress, and Calvin and worked with BSG to help plan events and run the hunt.

Besides working for the community, BSG has worked to make a number of changes on campus. In fall 2003, BSG started making internal changes to try and open lines of communication with students, an example of which is the decision to hold the BSG presidential debates in the Bison. In front of a packed Bison last semester, then presidential candidate John Siwicki '05 outlined his plans for the future of the BSG and the University.

"I will be the representative voice of the students," now BSG President Siwicki had said. "I will open up lines of communication about issues like cable and the alcohol policy. That's my job."

As predicted, these two issues became two of the major issues Siwicki and his new administration were immediately faced with once taking office. In fact, the emergency alcohol policy was being brought into effect just as elections results declare Siwicki the winner.

On the alcohol policy, the BSG played an important role in designing new measures to replace the emergency policy. Members of BSG worked closely with members of the administration and the Committee on Complementary Activities to try to develop a policy that was fair in the best interests of the students and University.

BSG also played a key role making the current cable trials possible. Cable television has been a project of the BSG for years, and in fall 2003, the University was finally able to assess what road blocks remained and how they could be best overcome. After running the trial period, the BSG and administrators will be able to have a good sense about what further action must be taken to extend services to the entire campus.

BSG has been involved in voicing student opinion on campus speakers and performers. BSG has been involved in sponsoring some of the big names that have come to speak on campus, such as Ben Stein. The BSG has also looked after student interests, responding with a student survey when James Brown's arrest was reported and trying to gauge student support for having Brown perform at Chrysalis.

BSG, which has been voicing student opinions, has also been involved in helping students have the opportunity to voice their own concerns. BSG sponsored forums throughout the semester, but most recently it helped to support the free-speech forum. Students were able to come and share their views, as well as hear the views of other members of the University community express how free speech affected college life.

BSG has worked this year to support the Lewisburg community and people around the world. It has also worked to meet the changing needs of University students. As a new group of representatives are elected, expectations grow higher for representatives to continue their progress and go to even further lengths to ensure that the voice of the student is clear and heard, especially as the University prepares for its new president.

Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

"BSG put out $600 to buy candy to fill 2000 eggs as well as some extra prizes. It was a huge success this year."

—Liz Lorson '07, BSG community service chair

Bucknellian archives

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Alumni profile: Yoshi Maisami '01

A partnership of two childhood friends is ready to launch a new approach to online social networking

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

Graduating from college means leaving friends behind. Juniors stay behind as seniors leave for the real world, and new careers can send former roommates to different continents a week after Commencement.

"It happens to everybody. You fall out of touch with people you used to see every day," Yoshi Maisami '01 said.

Although he has retained an active connection with the University as a member of the alumni board of directors, Maisami is doing more than reminiscing. He is outlining one of the main problems he plans to help solve with a new business that he and his childhood friend David Naffis are preparing to unveil.

The firm, named Can You Connect, is what the partners call a "social networking service." Based at www.canyouconnect.com, it will feature a broad array of free programs and databases designed to help people find new contacts in their personal and professional lives, and stay in touch with the ones they have already made. The service begins May 10.

"We've developed a service that we believe will ultimately redefine the social networking landscape."

—David Naffis,
CYC co-founder

On the surface, CYC is similar to services already on the market, such as Friendster, Myspace and LinkedIn. Like those, its basic function is the ability to keep a database of personal acquaintances, friends and family or business contacts, and to see who those people know.

"It's degrees of separation," Maisami said. "We're using that simple phrase to capture all the aspects of social networking."

Maisami and Naffis are doing everything they can to make CYC as different from the competition as possible.

"We're not trying to beat them at their own game," Naffis said. "We're playing a new game."

This is not the first business that the two have collaborated on in the three years since graduating from college, but it is the first idea to go beyond the planning stages.

"We grew up together, always brainstorming on ideas and that sort of thing," Maisami said.

"This is the first one where we've realized that it's worth taking the risk."

And it is definitely a risk. While they have had some recent success finding investors, the two paid for everything out of their own pockets. The expenses range from Web servers to the salaries of the programming staff that wrote the code for the system. Earning the money to keep CYC going keeps them busy.

"We've been working on this since last summer and holding onto our day jobs at the same time. Between the two, we're up until one or two in the morning working on this thing. It's a small nightmare, but it's worth going through ... for me, entrepreneurship is in my blood. It's part of who I am," Maisami said.

Even after CYC launches, the two will continue their day jobs, at least for the time being. The service is planned as a profitable business, but it will not start off that way; like most Internet firms, it will need to become prominent enough to attract outside funds before it can show a profit.

While Naffis is technically the chief executive officer of CYC and Maisami is the president, they think of themselves as equal partners.

"We complement each other so well that there's no point to trying to rank us; my strengths are his weaknesses, and his strengths are my weaknesses," Maisami said.

Their brain-child is a networking site built around group of personal and professional contacts, which can be kept separate to help the users customize how they use CYC.

Other services "ignore the fact that I have separate groups of friends and I have business contacts that I may not want to expose to some of my more unruly friends," Naffis said.

At the same time, networks of business contacts can be useful for purely professional reasons.

"There's a saying that 'it's not what you know, it's who you know,'" Maisami said. "Professional networking helps you leverage that, and find connections that you might never have known existed that can help advance your career."

What makes CYC different in function is the way it allows its users to interact with their contacts. The lists of features includes e-mail, Web hosting and file storage, instant messaging, day-planning calendars, message boards, a Web-log system, groups that link people with similar interests and video chat. The team has registered no less than nine patents for these programs.

Yoshi Maisami '01 (left) stands with his friend and business partner, David Naffis. The two are preparing for the launch of their online social networking service, Can You Connect, in mid-May.

"Through the site, you can interact with people in just about any way you can think of," Maisami said. "Talk with friends, plan meetings, networking with anyone you know and anyone they know ... you can even talk to your grandparents through video chat."

The computer programs that govern the system were written from the ground up by a team of programmers and Web designers employed by Maisami and Naffis.

"I lack the time necessary to do the actual coding because of my day job, but I am responsible for the design, technical details, and architecture of the system," Naffis said.

Meanwhile, Maisami, whose degree in management and economics sent him into jobs in financial services after graduation, has been more oriented toward finding investment for their new business.

Maisami is now looking for investors for CYC. Since the service will free to the "general public," its revenue must come from other sources, the partners declined to say what their plans for those sources are, citing the need to keep information about their business plan from competitors.

Both entrepreneurs are looking forward to the launch date, because of what it means for them personally and to see how people benefit from their service.

"We've brought together a group of exceptional people from different areas of the business world and we've developed a service that we believe will ultimately redefine the social networking landscape," Naffis said.

In technical terms, CYC is almost ready for its unveiling. The code has gone through a number of test releases, a mailing list is set up for alerts on when the site is open for business and all the files are being transferred to a professional-level server in preparation for heavy traffic.

"We're going international, starting May 10. We have to be ready for a lot of hits," said Maisami.

Commentary: Getting involved in the campaigns, part II

By CHRIS STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

Have you registered to vote and think you are well-informed on the issues that characterize this year's election, but are looking for some way to become more involved? There are numerous ways to get your hands dirty in politics and to become active if you choose to pursue them. Especially with the presidential race, there are plenty of opportunities for someone interested in politics to stand up and actually get involved.

The first of these is to stop limiting yourself to simply watching political get-togethers and instead go out and attend these events. Candidates for all offices will be traveling and making appearances all over the country. The recent visit of Rep. Pat Toomey to Lewisburg is a great example of a candidate traveling and trying to connect with as many potential supporters as possible.

Usually it is easy to keep track of the candidate's movements through the Internet or by contacting the campaign office. To actually attend an event where you can meet or hear some of these candidates speak is a great way to get involved.

Another opportunity to get involved is by attending Commencement. Although Ralph Nader will not be campaigning or giving his

The bigger the election, the more resources are going to be required and the more people are going to be needed.

If just going to hear someone speak is not enough to satisfy your political appetite, then rallies, debates and other get-togethers may be another option. Each of these events require a bit more participation than just attending and listening to a candidate speak. By attending a political rally, you can show your support by cheering for candidates and making them know which of their decisions you support or oppose. Debates have the potential to be even more interactive—depending on the level and the type of debate, attendees may actually be able to pose questions for the candidates to answer.

Another way to meet up with fellow supporters is to attend a meet-up. Meet-ups are events that are coordinated over the Internet. Visit the site of the party or candidate you support—many national candidates have meet-ups where you can select a local location and get together with other people that share similar political views.

If you want to go further than just showing support for a cause, you could also demonstrate against something. Participating in demonstrations and marches are good ways to help capture the attention of candidates and bring issues to the forefront.

For those who are extremely dedicated to a candidate's cause, volunteer or apply to be part of a campaign. Although not all spots on a campaign are paid, non-paid positions provide experience in politics. The people that you meet by participating in a campaign can help to expose you to future job opportunities, and you might find some ways of getting more involved either in future campaigns or in the governmental sector.

In general, the bigger the election, the more resources are going to be required and the more people are going to be needed. It is not too late to consult any of the candidates' Web pages, where they have contact information for resumes and applications.

Getting involved on a campaign can happen at many levels. There is the process of getting the candidate's name on the ballot. For most races that are only Republican and Democrat, there is not quite as much work involved in getting names on the ballot as there is for many of the third-party or independent candidates. For third parties it is often a struggle to get enough signatures to meet some of the very large signature requirements in many states, and volunteers can help by going out into communities and collecting signatures.

In addition to trying to get names on the ballot, campaigns need to spread their message and make money in order to run events and meet costs. All campaigns—from the local level to the presidential—rely heavily on fundraising. Local sections of parties hold and organize events that people can pay to come to or make donations at, and the funds raised at these events go to support the candidate's campaign.

Yet another way of getting involved is to write letters to newspapers. Any publicity that parties can get through people writing letters helps to boost recognition for candidates. Also, calling into talk shows is another way to help. Many times, talk shows discuss political topics and it is a way to promote a candidate.

There are many ways to stay involved with politics and the election process over the summer. All can do their part, whether through easy things like registering to vote, or more complex responsibilities like managing campaigns.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

Students hold debate on assault weapons ban

Former BUCS president Denise Chaykun '05 speaks at Tuesday's debate as the College Democrats listen. Both clubs argued along party lines, and the debate drew a sizable crowd.

By CHRISTOPHER STYERS
Business & Politics Editor

The Bucknell University Conservatives Club and the College Democrats/Liberal Alliance squared off Tuesday to debate the issue of gun control, or more specifically, the Federal Assault Weapons Ban.

Assistant Professor of Political Science Joe Coleman, who moderated the event, prefaced the debate with a brief overview of the debate's subject matter and the structure the debate would follow.

President Bill Clinton signed into law a ban of assault weapons in 1994. Weapons covered under the ban included weapons as varied as hunting weapons and grenade launchers. This ban will expire in September, which raises questions about the future of the ban and what changes may be made when the ban expires.

The College Democrats opened the debate, and each side was given an opportunity to respond and argue its points. Each speaker was permitted seven minutes to state his or her argument.

"We have the right to bear arms, but do not have the right to bear nuclear weapons, missiles or assault weapons," said Denis Kennedy '05, who began the debate.

Kennedy said the College Democrats were not against the right to bear arms, but likened the situation more to restrictions placed on free speech.

"I cannot go into a theater and yell fire," Kennedy said.

He said the same idea applies to deadly weapons and that there should be restrictions placed on firearms that go beyond the scope of the specific language of the Second Amendment.

In turn, College Democrat Ben Sirolly '07 said the ban was important and that it has made a significant difference in decreasing the number of crimes committed with assault weapons.

"This law matters more than most because it stops the importation and manufacturing of assault weapons," Sirolly said.

He also said the ban did not intend to get rid of defensive weapons.

"What we are getting rid of are offensive weapons, not defensive weapons," Sirolly said.

His arguments elicited a number of questions and responses from BUCS member Corey Langer '06. The College Democrats and the BUCS had a number of unopposed statistics that raised questions to the reliability of the statistical information.

Langer questioned the College Democrats' assertion of the deadliness of assault weapons, asking whether knives, clubs and hands should be banned because of their capacity to kill in the right circumstances.

Denise Chaykun '04 said the ban and other legislation will not stop the use of assault weapons.

"You can make as many gun laws as you want, but it doesn't mean that people are going to follow them," Chaykun said.

College Democrats member Ross Hays '07 said the goal of the legislation was to provide reasonable protection for all citizens.

"Just be reasonable. That's all we ask for," Hays said.

The debate went back and forth as both groups presented their cases, such as the sniper shootings in Maryland and horrible events such as the Columbine high-school shooting.

The Democrats concluded with Katy Simison '07, who said there was a need to strengthen the ban and continue to keep dangerous assault weapons out of use. She said the bill does not eliminate all weapons, and from the weapons remaining there is sufficient choice of weapons for protection and sport.

BUCS President Charles Mitchell '05, who gave the closing argument of the debate, concluded with a strong message that brought into question some of the arguments of both sides.

"There is no such thing as an offensive or defensive weapon. Any gun can kill someone," Mitchell said.

Mitchell reiterated Langer's earlier point that it would be impossible to outlaw knives and things like weightlifting that make people even more dangerous.

"Guns save lives," Mitchell said, citing personal experience and matching tactics used by College Democrat presenters.

"The Second Amendment does not exist for hunting," Mitchell said.

Mitchell said the right to bear arms was an important check on the government and an important safeguard for Americans.

"I think that this type of event is something we should see more of," Brian Lehman '05 said. "I am really glad we could have this. I know we don't have too many opportunities to debate, so something like this is great," Chaykun said.

Coleman also expressed his approval and excitement to see such an event take place.

"I think both sides did an admirable job," Coleman said. "I am particularly excited that groups like the College Dems and BUCS are willing to stand up for what they believe in. I think universities should be contentious places where students ask and wrestle serious questions."

College Democrats members (left to right) Katy Simison '07 and Ross Hays '07 and former president Denis Kennedy '05 wait for their turn to argue. Kennedy gave the opening argument of the debate, comparing assault weapons to tactical military weapons like missiles.

Specter holds seat against Rep. Toomey

By DAVID LAROSS
Business & Politics Editor

Pat Toomey almost had the perfect upset. Not only did his primary election campaign against a four-term incumbent senator get national attention, the little-known U.S. representative, a hard-line conservative in a politically divided state, came within 15,000 votes of unseating a moderate, well-known Republican endorsed by the president.

Toomey received 49 percent of the vote cast Tuesday, or 509,507 votes to Sen. Arlen Specter's 526,120, according to The Associated Press. The race was the closest election victory for Specter since he was elected in 1980 with less than 50.5 percent of the vote.

Toomey attacked Specter for his moderate record, calling him "too liberal" in campaign ads and speeches and labeling himself "a real Republican." Specter is widely recognized as one of the most centrist Republicans in the Senate. Specter is willing to break with the party line on major issues including tax cuts, abortion, government spending and the Clinton impeachment.

Specter ran on his experience and seniority in the Senate. He emphasized that, as a chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, he would have much more power to advance Republican goals than Toomey could in his first term, and possibly throughout his career.

Both President Bush and Pennsylvania's other senator, Rick Santorum, backed Specter, likely in preparation for a presidential campaign that will need to appeal to moderate voters in such swing state as Pennsylvania. Bush lost the state in 2000 by 5 percentage points.

Toomey was confident when voting closed Tuesday night. "We're going to be a part of the biggest upset in Pennsylvania history," Toomey said at an Allentown rally, according to CNN.

Specter was more subdued, waiting until his opponent had conceded the race to begin looking toward November.

"Now is the time, now that we've settled our family disagreement in the Republican party, to unite for victory in November for the president," Specter said to The New York Times.

Specter will face Joe Hoeffel, a Democratic congressman from suburban Philadelphia, in the November election. Specter is favored, but Hoeffel and his supporters take confidence from the negative tone of the Republican primary and Specter's close brush with defeat.

"This primary has demonstrated that Arlen Specter is not the senator that he used to be," Hoeffel said to the Times. "He used to be a moderate maverick, but he is neither of those things."

Toomey has declined to run for re-election in the House. His old seat in the 15th district is now open, and voters will choose between Republican Charlie Dent and Democrat Joe Driscoll to fill it in the fall.

Sorber '02 qualifies in Democratic primary

Two years after he made local headlines by running for mayor of Lewisburg in his senior year, Nate Sorber '02 returned to electoral politics Tuesday.

He ran a successful write-in campaign in the Democratic primary for the Pennsylvania state House of Representatives in District 117, in the northeast of the state.

The campaign started as a standard primary effort, but was derailed shortly before the election.

Sorber had to collect 350 signatures from registered Democrats in the area in order to get onto the ballot. He gathered the necessary signatures, but they were challenged by the district's incumbent Republican.

Lacking the funds necessary to meet the challenge in court, Sorber was forced to withdraw his name from the ballot.

"It was very close to the election; he was literally whittled out on the ballot," said John

Look Your Best With A Tan

From
TANNING WORLD

216 St. John Street, Lewisburg
Next to Fisher's Meats

Open 24 Hours
Free Membership
Lowest Prices
Speed System Beds with NEW Lamps
New 2004 StarPower 548 Bed

Call 523-7254 or tanningworld@hotmail.com

St. George Student Rentals

2004-2005 School Year

One 2 & one 3 Bedroom Unit Left

Rent now and receive your first 2 months free off the one year lease

Includes: Off Street Parking, Stove, Refrigerator, Dish Washer, Refuse Removal, Water Sewer

Call Brad or Wanda
922-1205 or 898-8530

MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH

THE PASSION OF THE CHRIST

He died for us and rose again.
What is your response?

Join us as we honor Him each Sunday at the
MIFFLINBURG ALLIANCE CHURCH
Sunday Services at 10:30am and 6pm

Wednesday 6pm Community
Meal and 7pm Bible Study
1.2 miles north of Rt. 45 off Forest Hill Road in Mifflinburg.
For more info call 966-4899

DOR-DAY'S

GREAT SUBS!

Subs and Cheese Steaks for every occasion since 1961!
Experience the Legendary taste of Dor-Day's Original Subs
www.DorDays.com or call: 570-524-7481

Welcome to
"A Cut Above Hairdressers"
A UNISEX SALON

633 N. DERR DRIVE next to Wendys
WALK INS WELCOME

Hair cuts, styling, colorist and Nails
TANNING in a Safe environment

Hours M-T-W 9-8: T-F 8-8 Sat 8-3
Your appointment 523-7645

Fraternities-Sororities
Clubs-Student
Groups

Earn $1000-$2000 this semester
with a proven Campus
Fundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our free programs make fundraising easy with no risks.
Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program!
It works.
Contact Campus Fundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit
www.campusfundraiser.com

Extreme Auto Works
49 S. Old Trail
Shamokin Dam
570-743-4696

Exterior & Interior
Detailing*Paintless Dent
Repair*Bumper
Repair*Windshield Chip
Repair*Leather & Vinyl
Repair*Audio & Video
Installation*Auto
Customizing*Lockout Service*

Two years after declining to run for re-election as governor of Minnesota, former wrestler, talk show host and Harvard professor Jesse Ventura is publicly considering running for president in 2008.

BUSINESS & POLITICS

NEW BSG CONGRESS AND CLASS OFFICERS

Photos from left to right: Class of 2005 President-elect David Caribardi (right), Class of 2006 President-elect Rob Glassman (center) and Class of 2007 President-elect Adam Weinberg react to the results of yesterday's elections. All three presidents said they are honored to accept their positions and are eager to effect positive change for the benefit of their classes.

Bucknell Student Government held its annual elections for the class councils and congress seats yesterday. For the Class of 2005 election, 293 students voted; 297 students voted in the 2006 election and 548 students voted in the 2007 election.

Only a semester after he took the position in a special election, David Caribardi defended the Class of 2005 presidency from three challengers. "We're coming into our senior year and I would really like to get us a good Commencement speaker," Caribardi said. "I want to make sure we leave a good mark on Bucknell before we depart."

Gordon Stransky won a five-way race for senior class vice president, and Larissa Brown ran unopposed for secretary/treasurer. Helen Britz, Taylor Harchak, Brandon Lingle, Corinne Morgan, Matt Picerno, Jen Pusty, Emily Rietz, and Marissa Schmidt will make up the 2005 class congress.

For the Class of 2006, Rob Glassman won the presidential race, Dan Mackarevich won for vice president and David Seal will be secretary/treasurer. Joel Buckman, Michelle Johnson, Jared Mannello, Megan McGraw, Christina Barker, Tom Cassidy, Kristin Khanna and Mike Rice-Sheeh are the new Class of 2006 congress.

"I would like to unite the various groups within our own university. I want the jocks to hang out with the theater crew and the non-parties to hang out with the parties. I want unification," Glassman said.

The Class of 2007 saw the most contested races in every position, with four presidential candidates, six students running for vice-president, four for secretary/treasurer and 12 running for class congress.

Adam Weinberg was elected as 2007 president, Laura Mlynarski as vice president and Brianna Evans as secretary/treasurer. Ana Avila, Paul Darakjian, J.T. Dean, Jenna DiPaolo, Loren Fishkind, Nicole Holbrook, Liz Lorson and Doug Murphy won the congress race.

Weinberg was shocked to hear the news that he won the election. "I want to get everyone involved in class activities and community service," Weinberg said.

Pro-choice march brings 500,000 to Washington

By MICHELLE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Between 500,000 and 800,000 abortion-rights supporters gathered Sunday in the nation's capital to protest recent policy decisions that they consider to be detrimental to women's rights. The Women's Resource Center provided buses to take 57 University students down to D.C. for the march.

"It was the biggest march I've ever seen," said WRC Director Molly Dragiewicz, who lived near D.C. while she was attending graduate school.

The rally was intended to be non-partisan, but there were many outspoken criticisms of the current administration. President Bush's policy of banning the distribution of federal money to family-planning groups abroad that promote or perform abortions and the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act are two sources of outrage for abortion-rights supporters, who say the act is so vague that it could outlaw even medically necessary abortions after the first trimester, reported CNN.

Officially referred to as the March for Women's Lives, the protest was the first of its kind in 12 years.

"We didn't have to march for 12 long years because we had a government that respected the rights of women... The only way we're going to be able to avoid marching again and again is to elect John Kerry president," Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.) said. Clinton was one of many celebrities who attended and spoke at the march.

Ashley Judd, Whoopi Goldberg, Cybill Shepherd, as well as comedians Ana Gasteyer and Kathy Najimy were all in attendance. Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, Ted Turner and many performers and artists also participated.

Feminist Gloria Steinem, 70, was present as well. Several of the celebrity women brought their children with them on stage. Shepherd and her daughter, Ariel, stood together as Shepherd proclaimed her disbelief that she had to come back to D.C. yet again to march for women's rights.

The seven national organizations that sponsored the event were NARAL, the American Civil Liberties Union, Feminist Majority, Planned Parenthood Federation of America, the National Organization for Women, the National Latina Institute for Reproductive Health and the Black Women's Health Initiative.

A large delegation also came from Capitol Hill, including Nancy Pelosi, who is the Democratic leader of the House, and Terry McAuliffe, the Democratic Party chairman, according to The New York Times.

In addition to these sponsors, several religious groups proclaimed their abortion-rights stance. The Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice and Catholics for Free Choice made their presence known. Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, Unitarian Universalists, as well as Reform and Conservative Jews have members in the Religious Coalition that support a woman's right to choose, according to the RCRC Web site.

"You will hear our pro-choice voices ringing in your ears until such time that you permit us to make our own reproductive choices," said Francis Kissling, of Catholics for Free Choice, reported CNN.

Many anti-abortion marchers came out to express their views.

"We protested in conjunction with the Silent No More Awareness Campaign, which is a coalition of women who have had abortions in the past and are now speaking out about the horror they experienced. They are very brave women who publicly held signs that said 'I regret my abortion,'" said Kathleen Pannell, vice president of Millersville University Solutions for Life.

Pannell said Solutions for Life went to act as a "buffer" between protesters for abortion rights and these women because of the cruelty that has been directed toward them in the past.

"I witnessed some very hurtful words being said to these women," Pannell said. "It was sickening. People were yelling things like 'So just have another kid!' and 'Guess what? I don't regret your abortion!'"

Pannell did not agree with all the tactics used by anti-abortion protesters.

"There was one man who was yelling offensive, inappropriate and unrelated things in a megaphone. He tarnished our entire group," Pannell said.

One anti-abortion protester had a sign that said "God Hates You" in bold, capital red letters, and others had pictures of 8-week-old fetuses.

"Though some counter-protesters did display graphic images, the majority of us opted for less confrontational, but equally effective, messages such as 'Women Need Love, Not Abortion,'" Pannell said.

protesters for abortion rights answered with chants of "Pro-life, that's a lie, you don't care if women die," and "Not the church, not the state, women will decide their fate." Some marchers screamed obscenities at protesters against abortion on the sidelines.

Both sides reported things such as hard-boiled eggs and dyed-filled eggs being thrown at them during the course of the march. Police on horseback and in riot gear lined the march route to prevent any altercations.

Many abortion-right marchers said abortion was not the only issue they were addressing.

"I think it was particularly important to be at the march because, especially now, under the Bush administration, women's reproductive rights are under attack. That includes all reproductive rights, not just abortion," Margaret Fairfield '05 said.

Fairfield also said anti-abortion and pro-abortion rights supporters should be wary of the recent Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act because of its rigidity and lack of exceptions in certain cases.

Fairfield was particularly concerned about mothers who might find out their babies are dead, but are unable to have abortions and must wait until their bodies realize they are no longer carrying a live child before spontaneously aborting the fetus. This situation can be emotionally damaging because "people are still coming up to the mother and asking her things like when she's due," Fairfield said.

"It was nice to see so many other people who share my beliefs. I grew up in an area where the Mormons are considered liberal, so the pro-choice community in Alaska is pretty small," said Fairfield, who is originally from Alaska and marched with more than 70 others from her state.

One thing that both sides seemed to agree on was the need for more support for women. Kathryn MacNeil is an abortion-rights supporter from Penn State University who went to the march with the college's Feminist Majority Leadership Alliance.

"Women need to be counseled before and after having an abortion. They should have all options explained to them. Unfortunately, that doesn't happen," MacNeil said. "Part of what feminists are fighting for is to provide women with all the knowledge they need to make the decision that would be best for them."

MacNeil said she simply could not imagine what it would be like to not have the option of abortion open.

"I'm certainly not 'pro-abortion,' but it's a personal decision," MacNeil said.

Pannell said expectant mothers need to be provided with such services as daycare and better healthcare so that women do not think abortion is the only option.

"Society has failed women. There's no reason why a woman should have to choose to kill her baby," MacNeil said.

Bush was at Camp David for the weekend, but Taylor Gross, a White House spokesman, issued a statement:

"The president believes we should work to build a culture of life in America. And regardless of where one stands on the issue of abortion, we can all work together to reduce the number of abortions through promotion of abstinence education programs, support for parental notification laws, and support for the ban on partial-birth abortions," The New York Times reported.

An official count of the protesters cannot be obtained because the United States Park Police stopped providing estimates after disputes over previous marches, according to The New York Times.

Michelle Johnson—The Bucknellian

Above: Pro-choice protesters approach the Washington Monument. Hundreds of thousands of men and women came to Washington, D.C., to voice their support for "reproductive rights" amid fears that the Bush administration will further restrict abortions.

Below: Pro-life protesters line the sides of the route the March For Women's Rights used in Washington. Methods of demonstrations on the pro-life side varied from silent prayer to outright harassment and disruption of the march.

Gregory A. MacNeil/Jefferson

THE Bucknellian SPORTS

April 30, 2004

inside
Diversions:

Volume 133, Number 12

Find a relaxing, quiet place on campus to study for this year's final exams.

See page D4

ATHLETES OF THE YEAR

Female Athlete of the Year

Maria Garcia '04, track and field: Garcia has broken her own outdoor school record four times in the hammer throw during her quest to qualify for the Olympics as a representative of the Dominican Republic.

See feature on page C8.

Male Athletes of the Year

Matt Daley '04, baseball:

Daley strung together six consecutive wins, including a 29-inning streak without allowing an earned run. During that streak he notched a no-hitter and a one-hit, nine-inning complete game shutout.

See feature on page C10.

Chris Cara '05, lacrosse:

Cara led the Bison—and the nation—in points scored as he helped the team vie for a spot in the Patriot League tournament.

See feature on page C9.

Male Rookie of the Year

Chris McNaughton '07, basketball: McNaughton hit 66.4 percent of his shots from the field during his first year with the Bison, earning himself a share of the team's MVP honors. The 6-11 center also averaged 11.8 points and 5.5 rebounds per game.

See feature on page C6.

Female Rookie of the Year

Mel Buczek '07, track and field:

Buczek vaulted her way into the record books, breaking Bucknell records for both the indoor and outdoor pole vault.

See feature on page C7.

ALSO INSIDE:

Women's lacrosse

Women's lacrosse clinches a postseason spot with 14-9 win over Lehigh at Graham Field.

Page C2

Cecily Cairns Classic Page

Best of the Cecily Cairns Classic Corner and other highlights from three years as a Bucknellian sports editor.

Page C3

Track and Field

Track and field competes at Penn Relays and TCNJ Invitational; teams look forward to Patriot League championships at Army.

Page C4

Sports

Men's lacrosse clinches

Bison win secures No. 3 seed in league tournament

By BETSY HARNER
Writer

Bucknell's final regular season game was a must-win situation. In order to enter the Patriot League tournament, the Bison needed a win against fellow league contender Colgate. With excellent play on both sides of the field, the Bison were able to attain their playoff goal with a 6-5 win over Colgate.

"This was a huge win for us being able to pull out the win at the end. We came into the game knowing it was a must-win for us to make the tournament. Everyone played with their heart and it showed," goalie Matt Baran '06 said.

The Bison offense started strong with goals by national scoring leader Chris Cara '05 and a score by John Salvesen '05 off of an assist from Patrick O'Hearn '05 with just under five minutes to play in the half. The Bison would finish the second quarter with a 5-2 lead.

Bucknell relied heavily on its defense in the second half.

"Colgate did not want to slide to our best finisher, Pat Christensen '05, and our offense got a little frustrated with that in the second half. We had trouble putting the ball in the back of the net that half, but give our defense credit who came up huge for us," Cara said.

Even with the outstanding play of the Bison defense, Colgate was able to tie the game at five with 10:40 left in the game. The Bison would tally only one goal in the entire second half, but it would prove to be enough. The final Bison goal came from Cara with 5:39 left.

Women's lax heads to postseason

By KEELEY SIDOW
Sports Editor

The women's lacrosse team closed out its regular season with a win against Lehigh on Saturday. The game was played at home on Graham Field and the Bison came out with a 14-9 victory.

Lehigh was able to start the game on top, scoring two goals within the first three minutes. It was not until the Orange and Blue were down 3-1 that they began to rally, scoring five goals in a row. Andrea Paraud '05 started the scoring streak with an assist by Meredith Wright '04. Wright then scored, followed by goals from Amy Hasler '04, Laura Nuss '04 and Abby Brewster '06.

After 10 scoreless minutes following a red card for a Lehigh player, another goal from Paraud followed a Lehigh score. The Bison led 7-4 at the end of the first half.

Lehigh managed a slight rally in the second half, coming within two goals of Bucknell. The Bison did not let Lehigh's chance last long, scoring a string of three goals within 41 seconds. Emily Burman '06 scored followed soon after by goals from both Hasler and Tory Field '06.

Goalie Lizzy McDaniel '06 made nine saves during the game. Paraud earned four goals, Nuss three, and Wright and Hasler both scored two.

The win secured the third seed in the Patriot League tournament this weekend. The Bison will play American University in the first round. The tournament is hosted by Colgate.

Water polo seventh at Easterns

By COURTNEY LUZZI
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell women's water polo team took seventh place in the Eastern Championship last weekend and finished its season at 16-18 overall.

"The offense helped us out in the first half and the defense was able to finish them in the end. I commend our defense for playing such a great game holding Colgate to only five goals," Baran said.

The result of this commendable play was the 6-5 win.

"After having so many close games this season resulting in heartbreaking losses it was great to come out on top against Colgate, especially in a game that had such large implications," Salvesen said.

With this game behind them, the Bison look forward to playing in the Patriot League tournament this weekend in Annapolis, Md.

"I know everybody will be ready to play in a great environment at Annapolis," Cara said. The team has worked hard to reach the playoffs, and it is confident in its ability to play and win a team.

"We have the momentum now going into the tournament and we all feel that we can beat Hobart," Baran said.

With their conference record of 4-3, Bucknell holds the No. 3 seed entering the tournament. The Bison will play No. 2 seed Hobart while Colgate will face the No. 1 seed, Navy.

"It is great that now we get a second chance to take on Hobart, this time in the Patriot League tournament. They are a team I know we should have beaten and I know we can beat. Our team has really come together offensively and defensively at the right time to make a run for the Patriot League title," Salvesen said.

Michigan scored first at the 5:01 mark. Blitzer scored at 5:11 with an assist by Hofstetter. Blitzer's goal set a new Bucknell record for single-season goals scored with 62 for the year.

Michigan entered the second quarter with a lead of 3-1. The Wolverines scored again in the second quarter, followed by a goal by Cody Keffer '05. In the next 11:32, Michigan would make eight more goals. Adrienne Fischer '07 brought the score to 12-3 with her four-meter penalty shot in the final quarter, before the Wolverines struck three more times and finished with a win of 15-3.

The Bison competed against fifth-seeded Princeton for the third game of the tournament. The Tigers finished the first quarter with a lead of 2-0. Despite Bynum's efforts in the cage, Princeton scored three more times in the second quarter.

Hartigan put the Orange and Blue on the scoreboard with her shot 1:06 into the second half. With an assist by Hofstetter, Keffer brought the score to 5-2 during the third.

The Tigers retaliated with two more goals. Daniela Faas '05 concluded the Orange and Blue's scoring with an assist by Susan Kingerski '07, but Princeton increased the final lead to 9-4.

On Sunday, the Bison were re-energized and ready to compete against the George Washington Colonials, who had defeated the Bison three times earlier this season. The scoring began 22 seconds into the game with a Colonial goal. Blitzer tied the game less than two minutes in.

Despite six man-up opportunities, George Washington only scored once with 4:29 left to go in the first. Both Keffer and Sullivan retaliated with a goal at the 2:46 and 3:16 marks, giving the Orange and Blue a 3-2 lead.

After four minutes of intense defense from both sides, George Washington tied the game. Blitzer used a man-up situation with a pass from Keffer to take the lead again, until the Colonials struck with only 34 seconds left in the half.

The Bison's only goal of the third quarter came from Taylor Voeltz '07, which was made at the 2:49 mark. George Washington tied the game until the Bison struck again three minutes later, thanks to Sullivan.

The score stood at 6-6 with only 1:43 left in the game. With 32 seconds left on the clock, the Bison called for time-out with possession of the ball. The Orange and Blue won the game when Jensen found Jessica Trimis '07 for the win.

Bynum finished the game with 14 saves, a season high. She achieved the highest single-season mark in program history with a .560 save percentage.

With a win over George Washington, the Bison earned a seventh-place finish in the Championship, the highest they have ever received.

"Beating rival George Washington was an excellent way to finish a great season," Ziegler said. "We had come so close the three prior meetings this season, but it was a true team effort beating them at the most important time of the season. So many different members of the squad really stepped up in this game."

The Bison are already looking forward to next year.

"The whole team came together during these championships. When we played against George Washington, it was a team effort, where individuals stepped up and made it happen," Faas said. "I think we can be very proud of what we have accomplished."

"Winning our last game against George Washington was a great way to end the season," Keffer said. "I know we are all looking forward to the advances we can make for next year."

Men's golf fourth in league tournament

By TERI SCHLANG
Staff Writer

The men's golf team competed in the Patriot League golf championship Saturday and Sunday at Colgate's Seven Oaks Golf Course, and, despite horrible weather conditions, managed to finish in fourth place, only three strokes out of second.

Army ran away with the team title, firing a 930 (320-302-308) composite, 13 strokes ahead of first day leader Lehigh at 943 (316-313-314). Army's second round 302 helped ensure its victory. The Orange and Blue shot a three-day composite of 946 (319-311-316), while Navy jumped in between Lehigh and Bucknell at 944 (317-308-319).

Billy Hurley of Navy took the individual title, finishing with a seven-over 223 (76-71-76), six strokes ahead of D.J. Reeves of Army 229 (79-72-78).

Charlie Waddell '07 finished in sixth place, shooting a three-round 235, just one stroke out of a tie for third. Waddell also earned All-Patriot League honors and was the lone first-year student of the tournament.

"I would have liked to have had a better first round," Waddell said, "but I am looking to build on this finish and carry it into next week and eventually next year."

Past recipients of All-Patriot League honors include Abbie Valentine '04 and Tom Lane '06. Lane was the lone first-year student in last year's Patriot League Tournament.

This year Lane finished in 12th place with a three-round 237 (81-78-78), while Patrick Yingling

'07 (79-76-83) and Ben Pellicani '06 (79-79-80) were right behind him tied for 13th with 238s.

"This weekend was a let down for us—we went into it expecting to win," Lane said. "We have the deepest team in the Patriot League. We just weren't all playing well at the same time. I know that, personally, I didn't carry my weight. A few guys stepped up and they couldn't make up for those of us who didn't play well."

"The Championship put a cap on a spring season full of sky opening down pours and galing winds," Yingling said. "Our scores weren't the lowest we have ever had, but no team lit up the course this weekend."

Valentine, Bucknell's No. 1 player, struggled in the rough weather conditions, shooting 247 (83-80-84), three of his highest Bucknell career rounds.

Alex Dolle '05 could not follow up his career-best 67 earlier in the week at the Saint Peter's Invitational. Dolle finished tied for 36th with 254 (86-84-84). Dolle helped lead the team to its second victory of the 2003-2004 season at Saint Peter's, which, before the Bison Invitational earlier in the year, had not been accomplished since 1987.

The team composite of 291 at the Saint Peter's Invitational tied the school's 18-hole record, which was set this past fall at the Bison Invitational. The Bison finished four strokes ahead of their next competitor, Fairfield University.

The men returned to action yesterday and today at the Patriot League/Ivy League Tournament in Atlantic City, N.J.

The BISON BUNKHOUSE

"A Great Place to Stay when visiting Bucknell!"

The Bison Bunkhouse is a 4 Bedroom, 2 bath family house, fully appointed for your stay and your enjoyment.
Call 570-522-0443 for reservations
www.bisonbunkhouse.com

Cecily Cairns Classic Page

Six semesters of life in Section B

By the numbers

Sometimes there's a fine line between being a baseball fan and having obsessive-compulsive disorder. Baseball fans keep track of everything that can possibly be quantified. Everything. And after we keep track of it, we add it, multiple it and exponentiate it into all sorts of statistical amalgamations. In the spirit of baseball nerdism, I thought it might be fun to round up a few of the vital statistics from my career as a Bucknellian sports writer/editor.

So here's a numerical compilation of my achievements and records.

Issues, career: 72
Articles written, career: 125

Average no. articles/semester: 20.2

Most articles written, semester: 38 (Fall 2003)

Average No. articles/issue: 1.72

Highest article avg., year: 2.54 (2003-2004)

Most articles, single issue: 6 (Oct. 31, 2003)

Most words, single article: 2,179 (Feb. 14, 2003)

Non-existent words used, career: 117

Typos, career: 42.6

Least typos, semester: 6

Typo shoutout articles, career: 3

Perfect articles: 1

Most consecutive articles using the word "moniker": 4 (Spring 2002)

Number of articles mentioning or alluding to Mark Prior: 9

Highest Mark Prior-mentioning rate, single year: 37.5 percent (2003-2004)

Articles about horse racing, career: 10

Longest streak without a horse racing article: 6 articles

Slices of office pizza eaten (out of a possible 12,375): 4

Most consecutive hours without sleep (before this week): 56

Miles traveled following the baseball team around: 1,135.7

Gallons of diesel expended during baseball travels: approx. 37.7

Entire layouts redesigned on a Thursday night after Quark deleted them five minutes before press time: 1

Letters of appreciation from professional athletes: 2

Articles that completely switch subjects midstream: 1

Sportscenter catch-phrases coined: 1

Super Bowl prediction accuracy: .667

World Series prediction accuracy: .500

Issues missed in the last six semesters: 0

Cecily Cairns
Sports Editor

Sept. 5, 2003, on the indefatigable Bo Hart:

Watch him during batting practice. Watch him in the on-deck circle. Watch him in the field, where his glove still devours potential base hits like a cichlid in a tank of hatching minnows, or on the basepaths, where he still thunders from bag to bag as though his mortal existence depends on his reaching safely.

Whatever his role, he's operating on all available voltage every single game—his fervor is such that when he's in uniform, the general atmosphere feels like the Energizer factory exploded on the field. Watching him is aerobic exercise.

March 5, 2004, on the execution of the Barmen Ball:

Shock tubes and detonators aside, last Thursday's ritualistic destruction of the ball—a ball that touched off unspeakable anguish in the North side of Chicago last October—managed to achieve some level of all-pervasive relief among those who suffered at its whims last fall.

The soft hum of electricity poisoning itself to strike. The final, whimper of a hope filled by the condemned ball in its final millisecond of life. The blinding flashes of death-delivering light. The remains, a nonillion shards of baseball scattered asunder in the bullet-proof tomb.

April 26, 2002, on the lack of on-campus respect for Christy Mathewson:

All of this seems to prompt the same question over and over again: "Who the heck was Christy Mathewson?" followed by several variations of that question, including, "Why is our football stadium named after some lady?" It may seem a benign inquiry to the average student, but from the perspective of a connoisseur of baseball history, to reveal such ardent disrespect for a man who revolutionized the sport of baseball is to commit something just short of blasphemy.

Feb. 7, 2002, on the Raider's lack of compassion for Barret Robbins:

But the fact is, the biggest game of their life is over and they blew it. They blew it over the clock but ticked zero, in the locker room, when faced with a decision to assume the worst about their teammate or hold back their speculation long enough to realize that something wasn't right. They chose to attack.

Sept. 13, 2002, on Ed McCaffrey's return to the NFL after fracturing his leg:

However long it lasts, McCaffrey's return has been, and will continue to be, a pleasure to witness. No one in the league is more dependable, more hard-knocking or easier to cheer for than Easy Ed. He's indefatigable—unflinching, really—and for that reason he is in some ways indestructible.

If his metaphorical bee is lurking behind every snap, every hit, every cut of every route, brandishing its wicked stinger like a bayonet on a loaded rifle, you'd never know it by looking at him.

Maybe it's because he possesses a courage that could outgun any antithesim on the market.

Nov. 22, 2002, on Wheaties:

Simply put, there's nothing quite like seeing your image superimposed on a blindingly vibrant orange cardboard box, staring down at you from the top shelf in aisle 12 of Acme Supermarket, sandwiched between Tony the Tiger and Count Chocula.

Jan. 30, 2004, on the surplus of happy endings in the NFL:

It's as though way back in the early years of the 20th century, the Great Creator accidentally dropped a jar of highly concentrated, super-happy endings over certain patches in the planning grounds of popular culture. Half of the contents were left to infiltrate deeply into the soil of the National Football League, where they would remain dormant until some sort of tectonic shift transpired in the waning years of the century, allowing them all to rise to the surface and spew upon us a steady stream of almost surfeitly pleasant football fairy tales. (And the other half of the jar's innards? Well, hell... how else can you explain Walt Disney Pictures?)

Oct. 10, 2003, on Mark Prior:

...all he's done since then is chew his way through major-league lineups like a termite in a Linkin' Log factory, with the trail of sand behind him spelling out a line of statistics that includes a 2.74 career ERA and 392 punchouts in 328 innings.

His delivery is velutinous. His poise is veteran, and so is his command. He throws a devilish breaking ball. He's intense. He's unbesmirchable.

And he's smart. Smart enough, at least, to realize that pitching opposite of Maddux was a fine opportunity to absorb the professionalism that the future Hall of Famer, even in the twilight of his career, still emanated.

Feb. 13, 2004, on the month of February:

The first count against it is that it houses the most invidious holiday on the calendar. And if the cutesy contrivances of Valentine's Day don't reduce you to an unalterable state of petulance, the Weather Channel's perpetual screening of irritatingly plucky chipmunk clouds regurgitating little animated snowflakes is enough to flatten anyone's demeanor.

Oh, sure, there's a sense of valor in trying to extricate your car from perilous entrapment in the icy fortress of snowdrifts that flank its every dimension, but once you resign yourself to the fact that none of the three points on the Mercedes-Benz star is intended to denote great performance in the snow, the whole endeavor reduces to abject futility.

And then there's the matter of leap year. How can anyone trust a month that doesn't even commit to an annually consistent number of days?

April 5, 2002, on Hall of Fame racehorse Cigar:

He didn't have to win in Dubai—he had plenty of excuses. He had plenty of excuses not to win 16 races in a row. Plenty of excuses not to become the Hall of Famer that he will soon be. He had excuses not to win any races at all, or even run in any races, for that matter. He had a good excuse to die right where he stood in that field back in 1991. But he didn't take any of them.

Cigar never needed excuses. Only chances.

March 26, 2004, on the implosion of Veterans Stadium:

Old ugly Veterans Stadium, like so many of its old ugly contemporaries, will soon be a new ugly parking lot.

Maybe it's not that sad for Philadelphia fans. Maybe that new ballpark is prettier, safer, more amenable, campier.

Still, no matter how pronounced the superiority of the new facility, there will always be a lot worth remembering—good, bad and in between—sealed underneath the roadpaint grids and oil stains of its parking lot.

Oct. 3, 2003, on the Chicago Cubs' pennant drive:

A grizzly starting rotation may finally give the Cubs the advantage over the little ungulate's nasty hex. Cubs pitchers are terrifying. If they don't get you from the mound, they'll mow you down elsewhere (just ask Marcus Giles, Paul Wilson or Hee Seop Choi).

It's a commonly stated credo that great pitching beats great hitting, but God only knows whether great pitching can triumph over stubborn billy goat ghosts.

If I had to put my dollar somewhere, it would have to be against that wily goat.

Everyone knows Ol' Murphy can't hit the shurve worth a damn, anyway.

BEST OF THE CLASSIC CORNER

than Easy Ed. He's indefatigable—unflinching, really—and for that reason he is in some ways indestructible.

If his metaphorical bee is lurking behind every snap, every hit, every cut of every route, brandishing its wicked stinger like a bayonet on a loaded rifle, you'd never know it by looking at him.

Maybe it's because he possesses a courage that could outgun any antithesim on the market.

Nov. 22, 2002, on Wheaties:

Simply put, there's nothing quite like seeing your image superimposed on a blindingly vibrant orange cardboard box, staring down at you from the top shelf in aisle 12 of Acme Supermarket, sandwiched between Tony the Tiger and Count Chocula.

Jan. 30, 2004, on the surplus of happy endings in the NFL:

It's as though way back in the early years of the 20th century, the Great Creator accidentally dropped a jar of highly concentrated, super-happy endings over certain patches in the planning grounds of popular culture. Half of the contents were left to infiltrate deeply into the soil of the National Football League, where they would remain dormant until some sort of tectonic shift transpired in the waning years of the century, allowing them all to rise to the surface and spew upon us a steady stream of almost surfeitly pleasant football fairy tales. (And the other half of the jar's innards? Well, hell... how else can you explain Walt Disney Pictures?)

Oct. 10, 2003, on Mark Prior:

...all he's done since then is chew his way through major-league lineups like a termite in a Linkin' Log factory, with the trail of sand behind him spelling out a line of statistics that includes a 2.74 career ERA and 392 punchouts in 328 innings.

His delivery is velutinous. His poise is veteran, and so is his command. He throws a devilish breaking ball. He's intense. He's unbesmirchable.

And he's smart. Smart enough, at least, to realize that pitching opposite of Maddux was a fine opportunity to absorb the professionalism that the future Hall of Famer, even in the twilight of his career, still emanated.

Feb. 13, 2004, on the month of February:

The first count against it is that it houses the most invidious holiday on the calendar. And if the cutesy contrivances of Valentine's Day don't reduce you to an unalterable state of petulance, the Weather Channel's perpetual screening of irritatingly plucky chipmunk clouds regurgitating little animated snowflakes is enough to flatten anyone's demeanor.

Oh, sure, there's a sense of valor in trying to extricate your car from perilous entrapment in the icy fortress of snowdrifts that flank its every dimension, but once you resign yourself to the fact that none of the three points on the Mercedes-Benz star is intended to denote great performance in the snow, the whole endeavor reduces to abject futility.

And then there's the matter of leap year. How can anyone trust a month that doesn't even commit to an annually consistent number of days?

April 5, 2002, on Hall of Fame racehorse Cigar:

He didn't have to win in Dubai—he had plenty of excuses. He had plenty of excuses not to win 16 races in a row. Plenty of excuses not to become the Hall of Famer that he will soon be. He had excuses not to win any races at all, or even run in any races, for that matter. He had a good excuse to die right where he stood in that field back in 1991. But he didn't take any of them.

Cigar never needed excuses. Only chances.

March 26, 2004, on the implosion of Veterans Stadium:

Old ugly Veterans Stadium, like so many of its old ugly contemporaries, will soon be a new ugly parking lot.

Maybe it's not that sad for Philadelphia fans. Maybe that new ballpark is prettier, safer, more amenable, campier.

Still, no matter how pronounced the superiority of the new facility, there will always be a lot worth remembering—good, bad and in between—sealed underneath the roadpaint grids and oil stains of its parking lot.

Oct. 3, 2003, on the Chicago Cubs' pennant drive:

A grizzly starting rotation may finally give the Cubs the advantage over the little ungulate's nasty hex. Cubs pitchers are terrifying. If they don't get you from the mound, they'll mow you down elsewhere (just ask Marcus Giles, Paul Wilson or Hee Seop Choi).

It's a commonly stated credo that great pitching beats great hitting, but God only knows whether great pitching can triumph over stubborn billy goat ghosts.

Sports

Sweep ends baseball's drive for tournament berth

Bison drop four games to Holy Cross in final weekend of league play; miss chance to defend championship

By CECILY CAIRNS
Sports Editor

The Bucknell baseball team's once-promising season came to an end short of postseason qualification after the Bison were swept by Holy Cross this weekend. After a shutout and an agonizing extra-inning loss Saturday, the team fell a run short in Sunday's opener and then lost the second game in a driving rain to conclude a bipolar season of league play.

The last game was the Bison's 13th loss in the past 14 games, dropping the team's record to 7-13 in the league and 17-22 overall.

It was a discouraging end for a team that had been so successful over the first half of the season.

"The last three weeks of the season were a real challenge for the players and coaches," Head Coach Gene Depew said. "It is very frustrating to not be successful when you expect to be."

Starting pitcher Cory Nadler '04 noted the difficulty in explaining the Bison's unpleasant second-half trend.

"I don't think it is possible to explain how a season can take a 180-degree turn from complete confidence in our ability and the feeling of being able to go out and win every game, to wondering when we will win again," Nadler said.

The Bison struggled to get on base during the first game Saturday and were unable to plate any runners during the 2-0 shutout.

Starting pitcher Kevin Miller '04 gave the Bison another solid outing, allowing only four hits over a seven-inning complete-game performance.

"Kevin pitched a great game," Pitching Coach R.J. Grant said. "He was a bit wild in the early innings, but escaped with relatively no damage. The last three weekends, Kevin has pitched very well, but we have been unable to give him the necessary run support."

A walk and an RBI single in the first inning gave Holy Cross the early lead, but Miller kept the Bison in contention as he held the Crusaders scoreless for the next three innings.

A pair of base hits allowed the Crusaders to open up a 2-0 lead in the fifth inning, which they would hold for the remainder of the game.

Holy Cross' Jim McCloud kept the Bison's offensive output subdued throughout the contest, facing only 23 batters in his seven innings of work. Bucknell did not have more than one runner on the basepaths during any inning.

Miller took the tough loss after putting in seven innings of work while allowing a pair of runs on just four hits and striking out six Holy Cross batters.

The second game featured an exuberant three-run rally in the bottom of the ninth to push the contest into extra innings, but the Bison lost a heartbreaker in the 11th after the Crusaders plated three runs with two outs in the frame.

Nadler delivered another superb performance as the Bison's starting pitcher, holding the Crusaders hitless through five innings and keeping the basepaths clear through his first 4.2 innings.

While Nadler stymied the Crusaders, the Bison seized a 1-0 lead in the fourth inning when Steve Stutzman '04 drilled a double to left center and Ben Stoll '04 sent home the run with an RBI single.

Holy Cross' Tom Potvin broke up Nadler's no-hitter when he led off the sixth with a bunt single, and the Crusaders scraped up a pair of runs with a single, an error, a walk and another single.

The Bison threatened in their half of the frame when Brian Hirschberg '04 pounded out a double to lead off the inning and Chris Mahony '04 poked a single into right field, but Hirschberg was called out on a close play at the plate.

Holy Cross picked up another run in the seventh before Phil Putrick '06 came in to relieve Nadler.

A Crusader run in the top of the ninth opened up a 4-1 lead, but the Bison orchestrated a rally with one out in the final frame, beginning with a walk to Evan Weiss '05 and an error that allowed Stoll to reach. Sam Moss '04 drilled an RBI double down the right-field line to narrow the deficit to 4-2, and Pete Wolf '04 plated the tying runs with a clutch two-out, two-strike single past Holy Cross' second baseman.

Putrick continued to hold the Crusaders at bay, opening the 11th inning with a flyout and a strikeout. The Bison nearly closed down the inning when Stutzman's throw beat Ed Turner to first base, but the umpire ruled first baseman Greg Ekimoff '05 off-the-bag, allowing Turner to reach and prolong the inning. Holy Cross capitalized on the call with a two-RBI double and an RBI single to take the 7-4 lead.

Sam Moss '04 slides home during the rain-shortened second game of Sunday's doubleheader. Moss was on the play, but went three-for-four in the game with an RBI and a run scored.

The Bison were unable to generate a rally in the bottom of the 11th, taking their second loss of the day and dropping them into a four-way tie for the final slot in the postseason.

Putrick took the loss despite not allowing an earned run in his four innings, while Nadler got a no-decision in his 6.1 innings of work.

Sunday brought dismal weather and another offensive struggle for the Bison, as the Orange and Blue lost a 3-2 battle to the Crusaders despite an admirable performance from pitcher Nate Mittag '07 in his first collegiate start.

Mittag held the Crusaders scoreless through the first three innings while the Bison hitters grabbed a 1-0 lead in the second inning.

The run came without a hit from the Bison, as Wolf was plunked with a pitch to lead off the inning. Mahony drew a walk. Day was hit by a pitch and then a wild pitch allowed Wolf to dash home.

Holy Cross grabbed a run in the fourth with a single and a double, but the Bison came back with another run in the bottom of the fifth. Steve Stutzman '04 led off the frame with a double into the gap in right center, moved to third on a sacrifice bunt from Phil Bunting '05 and then scored on an RBI single from Stoll.

The Crusaders fired back in the sixth inning with a walk and a pair of RBI singles to make the score 3-2, which would stand as the game's final tally.

Mittag was charged with the loss, giving the Bison 5.1 strong innings of work while allowing five hits and striking out four.

"I can't say enough about Nathan Mittag's performance," Grant said. "Nathan pitched like a veteran. He kept Holy Cross baffled through five innings, but once again, our bats went cold and we were unable to scrap out enough runs to get the win."

The Bucknell bats came alive with 14 hits and eight runs in the final game of the series, but the Bison fell short in an odd rain-abbreviated contest.

The Crusaders opening with a one-run first inning, but the Bison made the lead short-lived with a run of their own in the bottom of the frame. Stoll and Moss led off the inning with singles, and Stoll cruised home on a balk from Holy Cross' starter Jason Lynch.

As Bucknell starter Tim Peacock '05 held the Crusaders scoreless over his next three innings of work, the Bison jumped on Lynch for a pair of runs in the third inning.

Moss led off with a long double to center field and Wolf sent Moss home with his second single of the game. After an infield single from Mahony put runners on first and third, Hirschberg added the Bison's third run with an RBI single to left.

Holy Cross claimed a 5-3 lead when they struck for four runs in the fifth inning, but the Bison fought back with a five-run effort in the bottom of the inning as a steady rain began to develop.

Wolf walked with one out in the inning and Mahony followed with a single before Hirschberg drew a base on balls to load the bags. Stutzman sent home the first run with a single and Mahony scampered home on a wild pitch for the inning's second run before a balk plated Hirschberg to give the Bison the lead. Bunting added to the lead with a single to left and Moss dropped an RBI single just inside the rightfield line to complete the scoring.

Holy Cross regained the lead in the top of a rain-drenched sixth, but the game was called when Crusaders' shortstop Ed Turner slipped in the messy conditions while trying to field a grounder at the start of the Bison's half of the inning.

The early end would have reverted the score to 8-6, where it stood at the completion of the fifth, but the umpires chose to delay the game rather than terminate it. After a 30-minute delay, the teams returned to the sloppy field for one more half-inning, allowing the Crusaders' sixth-inning damage to stand as the Bison were retired in order.

After the Crusaders picked up their three outs, the game was made official, leaving the Bison with a six-inning 9-8 loss.

"It was a humiliating way to end a disappointing season of Bison baseball," Grant said.

Grant gave credit to the Crusaders for their tenacious effort as they moved from last place in the league to playoff contention with their four hard-fought wins.

"It was ironic that we lost to a Holy Cross team that embodied everything we stood for in 2003," Grant said. "They got runners on, bunted them over and played for the base hit. Their pitchers shut down the opponent, their hitters didn't try to do too much, they had good energy in the dugout and most importantly, they showed character when they faced adversity."

The sweep guaranteed no postseason appearance for the Bison, who had started league play with six wins in their first eight games. The last four losses capped off a second-half skid marked by misfortune and frustration.

"When things are going well you make plays and get hits; when things are not going well, nothing is easy, you almost make plays, get hits except when you really need them and catch bad breaks from umpires' calls to weather," Depew said.

Despite the struggles, Depew is looking ahead to next year, when the Bison can start a new run at the league tournament.

"I think these things even out over time so I hope next year will be a very positive one for us," Depew said.

Grant also expects that the adversity will ultimately provide a useful learning experience for next year's squad.

"Winning can never be expected or taken for granted, so while this season was tough to endure, we learned some tough lessons that will prepare us for the 2005 campaign," Grant said.

The Bison will finish up the season with four non-league contests, including a three-game series at Pace and a single game at home Tuesday.

The first two games of the Pace series will be played as a doubleheader tomorrow, followed by a single game Sunday.

Men's crew defends Patriot League title

By KATE WOOD AND FRANK ROSENTHAL
Contributing Writers

This weekend at the Patriot League championships in Worcester, Mass., the men's varsity lightweight eight defended its gold medal, beating Army, Lehigh and Lafayette.

The varsity heavyweights placed fifth out of six in their heat. At home, the novice and junior-varsity fours raced against Susquehanna and Penn State. The novice boat won with open water, while the junior varsity came in third.

"It was really great to come back and defend the title," Steve Patak '05 said. "All of the hard work we have put in throughout the season is starting to pay off."

The women's crew team had a successful weekend at the Patriot League championships. The novice four took the gold medal in its division, beating four other crews with open water. The novice eight boat came in second, to Navy, in the final, beating Lehigh by 1.3 seconds.

The varsity open weights placed third in their final. The varsity lightweight came in second in the semifinal, but they finished last in the final due to rudder problems.

"It was really great to come back and defend the title. All of the hard work we have put in throughout the season is starting to pay off."

—Steve Patak '05

EDITOR'S NOTE:

LAST WEEK'S COLUMN BY JOSH HERWITT '06 WAS VERY SIMILAR TO ONE THAT APPEARED ON ESPN.COM. THE BUCKNELLIAN SINCERELY APOLOGIZES FOR THIS OVERSIGHT. AS A RESULT, HERWITT HAS RESIGNED HIS POSITION AS SPORTS EDITOR AND WILL BE TAKING A LEAVE OF ABSENCE FROM HIS POSITION AS A WRITER.

Track competes at Penn Relays, TCNJ

Bison men and women prepare for Patriot League championship meet

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

The track team made its final preparations last weekend before entering the championship portion of its season, competing at the prestigious Penn Relays, Lions' Invitational at the College of New Jersey and Cornell's Big Red Outdoor Invitational.

New school records by Maria Garcia '04 and Mel Buczek '07 were the highlights at Penn. Garcia won the hammer, throwing 60.55 meters (198'9") while Buczek finished third in the pole vault, clearing 12'7.5".

Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased with most but, not all, of the weekend's performances.

"Maria obviously competed, great along with Mel in the pole vault and Ann Doty '07 in the triple jump," Donner said. "Greg [Costello '03] ran a very solid 5k and placed high. Our relays did not perform how we wanted. Penn is always a learning experience with great competition, while TCNJ looked solid, as we used it mostly as a tune-up and to determine roster spots for leagues."

Army hosts the Patriot League Outdoor championships beginning this afternoon.

The women look poised to bring home another Patriot League title. But last year after winning their indoor title the Bison were surprised by both Army and Navy and finished third.

"It will be much tougher than indoors [again]," Donner said. "We are the target based on indoors, and Army and Navy seem much improved."

Jamie Lilien '04, a multi-event athlete, said she thinks the women are ready and that does not want to lose her last opportunity to bring home the cup.

"After last year's outdoor league meet, our team did get a wakeup call," Lilien said. "However, our team this year is not the same as last. As shown indoors, we've come to play, and there are no soft athletes here."

Donner said it is extremely important for the women to get a good start in the team standings if they want to compete for a title.

"We need to go into the meet hungry and get off to a fast start on day one," Donner said. "They feed off of each other's energy, so day one is very big for us."

The Bison enter the meet with five individuals and one relay ranked first in the league: Tolu Fayanjuola '05 in the 100m, Katie Pfeifer '05 in the 10,000m, Buczek in the pole vault, Garica in the hammer, Doty in the triple jump, and the 4x800-meter relay.

Assistant Coach Bob Schanbacher has high expectations for the team and his throwers.

"We hope to do well," Schanbacher said. "We expect to score points led by Maria plus seniors Laura Schaffer and Erin Lee, junior Angie McFarland and freshman Marjorie Grap."

Lilien expressed the seniors' desire and elicited the value of the team to the Bison.

"I came into this program four years ago and was given the opportunity to be on the best team in the Patriot League," Lilien said. "We have always known that we have the best athletes, the depth and more importantly, the heart to win. Each athlete on this team, including myself, wants to bring home the cup, because the truth of the matter is that it belongs to us. Bucknell is its home."

The men will have their work cut out for them, as indoor proved that Navy is as formidable as Army. Navy won the indoor title by two points in its first full-team performance, ending Army's 10-year reign as champions. Third place is no guarantee for the Bison.

"Four teams could potentially finish third," Donner said. "Obviously Army and Navy are the favorites, with us, Lehigh, Lafayette and American as the dark horses. American has the heavy hitters in the distance events and could potentially score a lot of points."

"We are in a tremendous battle for third place," Assistant Coach Mario Wilson said. "With Army and Navy such bitter rivals, I doubt that either team will rest on their laurels. This will make it difficult to get points. The dark horse will be American, who can really attack the distance events if they try. We are well-rounded, but need to be firing on all cylinders to be successful."

The men bring only one athlete or relay ranked in the top three to West Point, as Costello currently sits first in the 10,000m.

Late-season improvements will be important, such as Dan Frake '06 breaking into the school's top 10 list with his hammer toss at Cornell last weekend, but ultimately overall team consistency will be paramount.

"We just need to come and compete with good performances across the board," Donner said.

you were out late with your friends. you sleep through your alarm. your boss asks why you are late. what do you say? answer the question. compare your opinions with others. explore what matters at pwc.com/lookhere.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Male Rookie of the Year

Chris McNaughton '07 earns The Bucknellian's Male-Rookie of the Year award for stellar first-year season

By PIERRE HERNANDO
Staff Writer

"Exciting prospect who has the potential to make an immediate contribution ... true back-to-the-basket big man ... led the German Under-20 team to a national championship in 2002."

The season had not yet begun, but the online player profile for the 6-foot-11-inch, 235-pound center seemed to say enough to paint a very bright future for Bison fans. Chris McNaughton '07 emphatically backed up his reputation by having one of the best years by a first-year student in Bison basketball history.

"He was expected to help us. His consistency for any freshman was tremendous. He has a feel for the game that only comes along once in a while. We've also only had him a year, but Chris can be one of the best we've ever had. He has skills, anticipation, footwork, and can run, plus he is motivated and competitive." Head Coach Pat Flannery said.

"Chris is constantly working out to better his game. I think that he has a world of potential and could become one of the greatest players Bucknell basketball has ever had. He was a workhorse at practice. Even though all of our big men are exceptional, Chris gave them all fits at some point or another," Charles Lee '06 said.

Shooting a blistering 66.4 percent from the field, the crafty McNaughton, who finished just three field goals shy of qualifying and ranking third in the country in field goal percentage, finished his opening campaign with averages of 11.5 points and 5.5 rebounds. Those numbers were, respectively, ninth and fifth in the Patriot League. McNaughton, a native of Leutershausen, Germany, was also selected to the League's All-Freshman team.

How did a member of the German Under-20 National Team end up wearing a Bison uniform?

"We have friends overseas. Contact started and as the process went along, we realized that he had some stateside relatives in West Virginia. He wanted an academic setting and we really felt he could help right away. Chris was an instant hit with our coaches, players, and everyone that met him," Flannery said.

Adjusting to the American way of life helped him out on the basketball court, where he also learned to adjust to a different type of game.

"The adjustment wasn't too bad for me, as I found instant friends in the team who helped me on and off the court. That made it a lot easier for me, especially since I was coming from a different country and wasn't 100 percent sure what to expect. The competition level here is certainly very high, especially after opening at Michigan State, which was one of the greatest experiences of my life. I got a pretty good idea of how the game is played here—very athletic and fast," McNaughton said.

He first took the court Nov. 14, 2003, in an exhibition game against Big Apple Basketball. He was the second-leading scorer that day, but no one would have predicted that his output that night would be a constant all season. McNaughton poured in 14 points, hitting all five of his field-goal attempts and all four of his free throws. He also collected eight boards—all in just 16 minutes of play.

McNaughton played sparingly in the season opener against the powerhouse Spartans, playing only 8 minutes, but made sure that would be the last of it by putting together a personal string of six consecutive contests with double figures in scoring.

The first of the six was against Yale, where McNaughton connected on 5 of 6 field goals en route to a 12-point, 7-rebound outing. Finding a niche on the team started that day.

"After much playing against Michigan State, the Yale game certainly gave me a lot of confidence and helped me find my role on the team," McNaughton said.

During that six-game stretch, McNaughton hit 80 percent of his field goal attempts, connecting on 36 of 45 shots, and scored 20 points twice, 22 and 20, against Northwestern and Pennsylvania, respectively.

The Orange and Blue received 19 double-figure scoring games from McNaughton. He had two double-digit rebounding games—10 against Lafayette and 11 against Holy Cross in the Patriot League tournament.

His affect on the team was significant. McNaughton's inside presence helped open up the outside game, in particular Kevin Bettencourt '06 and Lee. This helped the Bison to almost completely erase a 3-11 start. McNaughton scored 15 points on 7 of 8 shooting in a Jan. 17 game against Navy. That began a stretch of 10 wins in 11 games for the Orange and Blue, with the last win coming against Army Feb. 22.

"Since Chris was such a scoring threat inside, people had to respect him and bring doubles and focus on him a lot. Once they would leave me or Kevin to go help, then things really opened up for us. We had a nice inside-out game with Chris inside and great guards on the perimeter," Lee said.

"I think the whole team just needed some time to get used to each other. We are all very young with a lot of confidence. We knew we were better than our record (indicated), and at some point it just kicked in," McNaughton said.

McNaughton and Bettencourt won the Benton A. Kribbs Memorial Award for Outstanding Contribution on April 19. A team vote resulted in the two sharing most-valuable-player honors.

"Chris was great. I knew he was good, but I never knew he would make this kind of impact on our team as quick as he did. He provided a great post presence for us, which was much needed. He kept defenses honest with his solid performance from the inside. He has great mobility, athleticism, and strength for a freshman with his height. It was very impressive to see. I'm glad that he's on my side for three more years," Abe Badmus '07 said.

The 15-point loss to Lehigh at the Patriot League tournament left a bitter taste in everyone's mouths. "We all wanted to get Lehigh so bad. Losing to them in the semi-finals was probably the most disappointing loss this season. We expected much more from that game, but just didn't get it done that day. Working hard all year for that moment and then not being able to play well when it counts was very disappointing. I think we can all learn from it," McNaughton said.

With a young nucleus, the men's basketball program is in good spirits. After finishing strong and salvaging a potentially disastrous season with a 14-15 record, the Bison are looking ahead to a strong future. Lofty goals are not a surprise, but an expectation, for players and coaches alike.

"I feel that we can do whatever we want to do. If we want to win championships and go to the tournament, then we can, if we all take that extra step in order to get better. We can't be complacent and stay where we are," Lee said.

"I'm always excited. Having some guys that showed their ability this past season allows you to make plans and look forward to achieving goals. This group will work hard this off-season and that will make us better. There is a lot of potential. We must work harder than ever," Flannery said.

McNaughton knows his future is bright. Many helped him get acclimated in his initial season, and now he must make the most of his opportunities to capitalize on the potential that is readily apparent, both for him and the team.

"We had a superb senior class, who were always there for the team. Davorin [Skornik '04] pushed me a lot playing against him every day. He was also my best friend of the court. Coach Flannery had a lot of faith in me early in the year and always gave me a lot of confidence, which made it easier for me to find my role. I'm certainly capable of averaging 20 points a night, but the team needs me as a rebounder and as a solid presence on defense. I need to work hard over the summer to extend my game. I am always going to give my best for the team. We will see what happens," McNaughton said.

"He has a feel for the game that only comes along once in a while. We've also only had him a year, but Chris can be one of the best we've ever had."

—Pat Flannery,
head coach

Compiled by Adam Wilcox—The Bucknellian

Female Rookie of the Year

The Bucknellian names Mel Buczko '07 Female Rookie of the Year

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Bucknell's indoor and outdoor pole-vault record holder Melanie Buczko '07 has been selected as The Bucknellian's female rookie athlete of the year by the sports editorial staff.

Buczko made her presence known immediately as she set the indoor pole record (12'3.5") at the Bison Opener Dec. 6, 2003. She followed by winning the Penn State Octagonal, Bucknell Octagonal, Rhode Island Invitational and the Patriot League Indoor Championships, while raising her indoor school record to 12'9.5".

Assistant Coach Mario Wilson noted the importance of Buczko's determination and talent in her success at a difficult event.

"Attitude and athleticism are the two combinations that I believe help with success in the pole vault," Wilson said. "Melanie wants to be the best and drives herself very hard. At the same time, she is a great athlete blessed with speed and coordination learned at an early age from gymnastics."

Buczko took full advantage of her gifts by winning the 60-meter hurdles at the indoor Patriot League championships, which helped earn the Bison another league title.

"Melanie was able to win two events in the span of 20 minutes," Wilson said. "Her goal all along was to win, and she didn't let the time factor interfere with her desire to win."

Buczko's performances were among the many dominant efforts from the women's track and field team's dominance during its blowout victory in the indoor league championships.

"Of course, it was easier for any athlete on the team to do well because the atmosphere was similar to a piranha feeding frenzy," Wilson said.

"Most of Melanie's teammates were having success, and it took much of the pressure off the team."

Shin problems have kept Buczko fairly quiet this spring, but she managed to claim the outdoor pole-vault school record last weekend at the prestigious Penn Relays. Her vault of 12'7.5" was almost 8 inches above the previous school-record mark and qualified her for the NCAA Regional meet.

"Melanie has had injuries all year long, but this is no different for any athlete that is trying to be better than they were before," Wilson said. "Mel has dealt with shin pain since high school and will continue to deal with the pain until she has some time to rest."

The injury has hindered Buczko's training. "The unfortunate thing about track and field is that there are back-to-back seasons with only spring break separating the two. Mel has been on the fringe of a stress fracture since January. This has caused her to miss some competitions and has altered her practice routine. The time spent injured has prevented Mel from being consistent in training and competition," Wilson said.

Wilson expects that the shin problems will not prevent Buczko from having an impact at this weekend's Patriot League championships.

"Concerning the Patriot League Championships, however, I don't think that Mel will let any pain stand in her way of being successful," Wilson said.

Female Athlete of the Year

Bison thrower Maria Garcia '04 has Olympics in sight

By EVAN HONEYFIELD
Senior Writer

Maria Garcia '04, the school-record holder in the hammer throw, has been selected as the female athlete of the year by the Bucknellian sports editors.

By Garcia's standards, her indoor track season was less than stellar as she placed fourth in the 20-lb weight throw at the Patriot League Indoor Track and Field Championships and barely qualified for the ECAC meet.

Although she set the school record early in the season, her teammate Marjorie Grap '07 took it away.

her fourth Patriot League hammer title in four years. "She has the heart of a champion," Assistant Track Coach Bob Schanbacher said.

"Maria keeps improving because of four years of hard work and a great throws coach to help her out," Head Coach Kevin Donner said.

For Garcia, the motivation to improve is more than just about personal pride or even school pride—it is about national pride. Garcia, a native of the tiny Dominican Republic, would like to represent her homeland in the Athens 2004 Olympic Games.

In March, Garcia traveled home to win the hammer throw at the Dominican Republic's Olympic trials. She still needs to achieve the Olympic B standard in order to compete in Athens.

Olympic motivation has Garcia pushing herself harder than ever.

"She has committed to total preparation beyond any previous season," Schanbacher said. "She lifts more aggressively, is more technically focused, and she realizes her time in athletics is now. Her NCAA eligibility and her chance to compete in Athens are timed perfectly."

Garcia's best throw of the year was last weekend at the Penn Relays, where she threw 60.55 meters, 5.40m better than her school-record-setting throw from the spring of 2003. The Olympic B standard is 64m, putting her approximately 11 feet shy of her dream.

The hammer is actually a nine-pound ball on the end of 119.5cm of wire, and requires a blend of speed, technique, power and balance.

"She has had this sense of balance all four years," Schanbacher said. "She also understands body sequences and has a great kinesthetic sense. What that basically means, she knows the sequential order of motions necessary to be consistent and [for] long throws."

Although her physical talents aid her performances, her mental preparation and focus are what push Garcia past equally talented opponents.

"It is hard to explain, but some athletes can go to a higher emotional level," Schanbacher said. "During my four years with Maria, many times we have tried to control emotions to allow good things to happen. This year she has used her emotions to effectively perform and still listen and adjust technically. It may sound easy, but effective emotional control during competition is a high wire act. You will rarely see Maria casually talk during competition. This is not because she is not friendly. She is seeking emotional isolation."

Currently Garcia ranks 15th in the NCAA. More importantly, she is 10th in the East Region, the toughest region in the nation for the hammer throw.

As an ECAC and NCAA Regional qualifier, Garcia is guaranteed at least two more chances after this weekend's Outdoor Patriot League Championships to hit the mark. She will get a third chance if she makes it out of the region to Nationals in Austin, Texas. If she does not hit the mark at those venues, she will have until Aug. 9 to chase the standard.

The frustration showed on Garcia's face. Fast-forward to this spring, where Garcia is thriving in the open-air arena of the throws circle. Four weekends in a row, Garcia has entered the circle, and four weekends in a row she has left the circle with a new school record in the hammer throw.

This weekend she heads to West Point in an attempt to bring home

Male Athletes of the Year

The Bucknellian names Chris Cara '05 one of its Male Athletes of the Year after high-scoring junior season

By AINSLEY MALONEY
Staff Writer

The only thing that is not big about Chris Cara '05 is Cara himself. With a bench press of over twice his weight, an attitude so fiery his teammates call him "Spicy Meatball," and a name so big it sits at the top of a national ranking, Cara has managed to pack a lot into his 5-foot-7-inch, 170-pound frame.

Teammates agree that what Cara lacks in his height he makes up for in his strength. Together, these qualities seem to make the perfect combination for a key attackman whose job is to maneuver the field easily while blowing past solid opponents.

"Chris has exceptional physical abilities [such as] quickness of foot and hand-eye coordination," Head Coach Sid Jamieson said. "He also has the strength to have his way with most defenders; a coach wants a Chris Cara on his team."

Ever since Cara started playing lacrosse at the collegiate level, he has taken the entire lacrosse community by surprise. After starting in the first game of the season his first year, Cara continued to build a reputation strong enough for Patriot League coaches to vote him Patriot League Rookie of the Year as the season came to a close.

From first to junior year, Cara's name has progressively made its way up the score charts—and it seems that once his name hits the top, it quickly searches for new charts to climb.

Cara's name first appeared at the top of the charts his freshman year as the leading scorer on the Bison squad, breaking a 26-year-old freshman scoring record with 56 points. In his sophomore year, his name jumped to the top of the Patriot League charts as the leading scorer among players from all eight schools.

Now, as a junior, Cara's name continues to remain restless and has taken a giant leap from the Patriot League charts all the way up to the national ranks—Cara is currently the leading scorer in the entire nation with a total of 74 points in 13 games.

With a combined 36 goals and 38 assists, Cara is in a steady 17-point lead over Syracuse senior Michael Powell.

Cara said he never had a goal of making it to the top of the national charts; his stats just landed him there. This does not seem surprising since most of Cara's focus is on his team's success, with his individual successes simply a by-product of these efforts.

"I don't ever focus on how many points I want to score in a game. I just want our team to win," he said. Cara's lack of selfishness and his dedication to the team can be seen on the field, as well as in his attitude off the field—both of which are encouraging to the other teammates.

"Chris displays his leadership skills through his play," Ross Albers '05 said. "When Chris is scoring and making big play, the other guys on the team want to step up their game as well."

According to Patrick Lenhart '06, Cara's "spicy" attitude off the field is a contagious vibe.

"Spice" is just one of those kids that can get the whole team riled up in seconds," Lenhart said. "He is a high-powered machine fueled by his love of the game."

Despite the fact that Cara has either scored or assisted in more than half of the team's goals this season, he will not allow himself to take most of the credit.

"Without my teammates I would be nothing," he said. "The offensive guys really do a great job in finding me when I'm open around the crease. [They] also help me by letting me do what I do best, which is to make and create situations that will benefit our team."

Cara not only gives credit to the players he works with to score points, but also the defensive players who help prepare him for games during practice.

Playing against great guys such as Blaise Fletcher '04 every day has helped me out a lot because I am used to playing against very good defensemen day in and day out," he said.

With the help of his coaches and teammates, leading the nation in scoring is just one of Cara's many accomplishments of the season.

On April 10 in a game against Lafayette, Chris managed to raise his career high single-season point's record to 11 with six goals and five assists, tying the school record and also tying the amount of points scored in a Division I game this season. Consequently, Cara was awarded the Patriot League Men's Offensive Player of the Week.

A repeat stellar performance came at a time in the season when the Bison needed

Carra the most. The team was up against Colgate in a game in which it had to win in order to receive a berth to the Patriot League tournament; a loss would end its season completely.

As a "marked man," Cara found himself guarded more heavily by his opponents. According to Patrick Christianson '05, Chris has amazing field sense and can find an open man virtually anywhere.

"Chris is an extremely hard player to contain," Christianson said. "If defenders give him any room with the ball, he'll make them pay [with an assist]; if they play him tight, he just beats them to the goal."

Cara proved Christianson right. He led the team with five of the six points with four goals and one assist to beat Colgate 6-5. Cara's final goal came in the last five minutes of the game, breaking a 5-5 tie to secure a tight victory.

"Chris's performance really stood out this weekend as the team needed to ride on his shoulders," Jamieson said.

Along with the win, Cara's first-quarter assist to John Salvesen '05 allowed him to break the school's single-season assist mark with his 38th assist of the season—one more than Pete Von Hoffman's record set in 1979.

The Colgate game is only one example where Cara's personal success was simply a by-product of his determination to bring his team to victory—and also a chance at the Patriot League Championship.

"We put the ball to Chris's hands to win the game for us, and he did just that," Salvesen said. "When Chris was needed the most—when the game was on the line, when our season was on the line and Chris came up huge."

After the game against Colgate, Chris was named the Patriot League Men's Offensive Player of the Week for the second time in three weeks. The victory gave the Bison a berth to the Patriot League Tournament and No. 3 seed.

The Bison now face No. 2 seed Hobart in a game today. Top seed Navy will also face No. 4 seed Colgate, with the winners playing for the championship on Sunday. The winner of Patriot League tournament will then advance to the NCAA tournament.

Despite leading the country with 74 points, Cara is just five points away from the Bucknell and Patriot League record for points in a season, which is currently held by former Bison star Justin Jockey.

Furthermore, his 38th assist was also the 99th of his career—one more and he will become the second player in University history and third in Patriot League history to reach the 100-assist plateau.

Cara's chances of breaking these records rest only in the next few games. As is his nature, Cara puts his personal interests aside in light of the success of the team.

"If we beat Hobart on Friday I should have a good chance of breaking the records, but it isn't that important to me," Cara said. "I would much rather not break the record and win the Patriot League Tournament."

Cara's ability to have records in both goals and assists is unique in that most lacrosse players are usually good at one or the other. His teammates do not doubt his ability to break either record, nor do they think he will choke under the pressure.

"I've seen Cara in the zone, and it's scary," Fletcher said. "Once he's there, no one can stop him."

According to Jamieson, Cara has the model story of a Division I student-athlete.

"When you have an All-American caliber player, the best thing you can do as a coach is to provide a frame for your athlete to be able to paint his own picture within the context of the frame," Coach Jamieson said. "Chris is an 'all-business' person and player who excels in everything he does."

Just Tuesday, Cara was selected by Patriot League coaches as the 2004 Patriot League Offensive Player of the Year, while teammate Fletcher earned the Patriot League Defensive Player of the Year. Cara and Fletcher were also both named to the All-Patriot League First Team, which will be Cara's third-straight appearance on the All-Patriot League squad.

It is hard to imagine where Cara's name will appear next.

While recalling some memories from the season, Salvesen brought up a time after a game when a few kids came over to Cara and asked for autographs.

"These kids idolized him," Salvesen said. "It was pretty crazy to see them asking for his autograph."

Some would call the kids innocent; I prefer the word "smart."

Still Time to Rent for 2004/2005

- 38 S. 5th St (4 Bedroom) $1650
- 130/132 Brown Street (4 Bedroom) $1250
- 17/19 N 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $600
- 210 S 8th Street (4 Bedroom) $975
- 111 S 7th Street (2 Bedroom) $800
- 30 S 5th Street (5 Bedroom) $1375
- 622 St Catherine (3 Bedroom) $800
- 622 St Catherine (2 Bedroom) $550
- 121 S 4th Street (3 Bedroom) $625
- 123 S 4th Street (2 Bedroom) $675
- 40 S 6th Street (3 Bedroom) $1100

Call Linda or Duska
Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

EVERYTHING
For Your Next Celebration!

- ...Dunk Tank, Popcorn Machine, Snow Cone Machine, Pig Roasters, Grills (Charcoal/Propane)
- Wide Variety of Inflatable
- Sumo Wrestling
- Rock Climbing Wall
- Obstacle Course
- Bungee Run

WE HAVE THE TENT FOR YOU!
WEST BRANCH RENT-ALL
Sales • Rentals • Repairs
441 N. 10th St., Lewisburg (off of Park Ave) 17837-10 • (570) 523-6221

Houses & Apartments

All units:
Close to campus.
Off street parking.
24/7 maintenance.
Most with washers & dryers.

Available 2004/05
1-6 Bedrooms

Call: 570.524.2121 x3
Office: 611 Market St., Lewisburg

T. BRYNWOOD
Rentals

The Inn at New Berlin
GABRIEL'S RESTAURANT
Wine Spectator Award of Excellence

Brunch & Dinner
Wednesday through Sunday
Lodging ♦ Gifts

Rt 15 south 4 miles to Rt 304 west 7 miles,
15 minutes from Lewisburg

570-966-0321 ♦ 800-797-2350
www.InnAtNewBerlin.com

Dogwood Hill
Distinctive Floral Design
Fine Gifts
Unique Accessories
630 Market Street,
Lewisburg
524-7930

RENTALS
for
BUCKNELL
STUDENTS

AVAILABLE
JUNE 1, 2004

3 LARGE 2 BR APTS.
AT:
237 South 3rd &
Saint George

Excellent condition,
excellent location -
right next door to campus

(570) 966-1488

Discover a new you at RidgeCrest Salon.

Now open to Bucknell students and alumni, RidgeCrest Salon at RiverWoods offers a full range of services in a relaxing, inviting atmosphere. Both men and women are welcome!

- Full-service salon
- Nail care and styling
- Extensive product selection
- Discounted prices

Bring this ad to RidgeCrest Salon today and receive $2.00 off any salon service! For more information or to make an appointment, call (570) 522-1830.

RIVERWOODS
Senior Living Community
3201 River Road • Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-2711 • Toll-Free: 1-888-791-0096
www.riverwoods.org

RiverWoods is a nonprofit United Methodist-affiliated organization proudly offering services to people of all faiths and backgrounds.

Male Athletes of the Year

Bucknellian Male Athlete of the Year Matt Daley '04 terrorized batters with string of dominance

By Cecily Quinn
Sports Editor

He earned him a substantial list of weekly honors which included two Patriot League Pitcher of the Week distinctions, a Collegiate Baseball News Louisville Slugger Player of the Week title and ECAC Pitcher of the Week selection.

That list is telling of how much the hunter had accomplished within the first few weeks of the season.

"Matt had an amazing first half of the season," Bucknell Pitching Coach R.J. Grazioplene said. "He made it look easy almost every time out. To have control of all three pitches for four starts in a row is very rare."

Over the course of the past several months, Daley has been rated in a lot of ways—enough that he has been pursued by several major-league organizations, any of which could select him in this June's first-year player draft.

The possibility of a major-league career is relatively new for the 6-foot-2-inch, righty from Garden City, N.Y.

Just over two years ago the pitching career was virtually nonexistent when he appeared in his first start on April 15, 2002, forcing him to play on the shelf for his entire sophomore season.

Through the recovery to make a strong relief contribution to the Patriot League champion Bison, it was until the ensuing months that he solidified his status as one of the league's most talented prospects.

During the team's sign-out period, Daley's work against the Yankees promoted him to the starting rotation. He was named the 6.33-batted ball pitcher of the week in the Central Illinois Collegiate League, an opportunity that the pitcher was quick to accept.

"I realized that it was absolutely worth it so I dove at it almost immediately," Daley said. "I tore up CCLL hitters with 39 strikeouts in 32.1 innings from the bullpen, holding batters to a .131 average and not surrendering a single earned run."

It was at the league's mid-season all-star game that the league's mid-season all-star pitcher was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

He was named the league's mid-season all-star pitcher.

Win - Daley (5-0)

struck out

out swingin

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

000 000 000 000

THE Bucknellian Diversions SECTION

April 30, 2004

What to do
in the middle
of NOWHERE

Making the most of your time... in the bubble

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

There is something to do in the middle of nowhere, and I have found it. The multitude of memories other seniors and I carry attests to that fact. This time of year lends itself to nostalgia, so I took it upon myself to ask fellow future alumni what they are glad they took advantage of in the past four years. With a little bit of sap and a lot of sincerity, here is a top 10 to break you out of your "middle of nowhere" doldrums.

10. Scenery

One of the most satisfying parts of finding what to do in the middle of nowhere has been seeing the middle of nowhere. The simple walks and drives I have taken and observing the beauty around me have been without equal for their charm and simplicity. This can be as simple as a stroll through Lewisburg in the fall or driving down any number of the plentiful side roads to see where the adventure ends up.

"I'm glad that I took the time to roam Lewisburg unencumbered by books and bags, with no destination and just my thoughts," Sarah Gudenkauf '04 said. "I wish I had taken more time to sit by the river and explore the back alleys of Lewisburg's side streets."

So drop off your books, take your camera and, whether it is a walk through Lewisburg or a drive out Rt. 45, take advantage of the simple scenery that the middle of nowhere has to offer.

9. Dive into local culture

Do not simply live in a place—immerse yourself in what is truly Central Pa. Events such as the Bloomsburg Fair and the Lewisburg Farmers Market easily display and introduce the tangibly real society that exists here, and students who have gone favored their experience.

"I'm glad I went to the farmers market," Jack Phillips '04 said. "I think it blends the Central Pa. culture with cheap goods."

Such places are an opportunity beyond clear-cut description, but have a real-life, small-town quality is essential to a full understanding of the region we call home for four years.

It may not be Washington or Philadelphia, but Central Pa. has its own range of historical attractions that contribute to the wealth of its heritage. Whether the home of an innovative scientist, a burning mine fire, the birthplace of a national sport, a local region experience, the oldest brewery in the United States or an amusement park that has been entertaining for generations, many of Central Pa.'s current attractions are a reflection of its past.

One common thread tying most "things to do in the middle of nowhere" is the fact that all either celbrate or continue a rich history. Part of experiencing the present is to be aware of the past, and in the Lewisburg area, there are many forums for this past to be explored.

Plunge headfirst into this unique area; taking Central Pa. for what it is rather than what it is not.

8. Take up a cause

College is a forum for expression of thoughts and ideas. Within the boundaries of our own surreal little world, it is possible to make a difference. Take up a cause and explore your beliefs in an environment that fosters this exchange of ideas. Those who do are able to change, develop or support already existing values and change the campus milieu, benefiting them as a student and person.

"I'm definitely glad I was politically active," Denise Chaykun '04 said.

This does not refer to political finger-pointing or bickering as much as exchanging ideas with similar and different minds and using these ideas to accomplish a goal, which, in a small community such as ours, has the potential to be substantial.

7. Love Lewisburg

You live in Lewisburg, so why not love it? Most of the borough's attractions are within walking distance of campus and leave an impression most seniors will not forget.

No Bucknell education is complete without a trip to the Lewisburg Freez, situated a short step away on Rt. 15. A senior told me this my first year, and I did not believe her—it is an ice-cream place. How exceptional can it be?

Three years later, this simple ice-cream stand has been a beacon of hope for me and for other students struggling to make it through the dreary winter months to those sunny Freez-filled ones.

The Campus Theatre offers opportunities unmatched for a theater in a small town such as Lewisburg. Film festivals, foreign language films, arts films and commercial feature films can be alternately viewed, depending on the weekend. The decor of the theater, combined with the comfy seating, available on its specialty couches and armchairs, make it a truly special experience.

"I am glad I took advantage of the campus theater," Katie Kleissas '04 said. "It has really great flicks and film fests you can't always get in the regular movies."

Other ventures within arms reach of the university include the abovementioned Lewisburg Farmers Market, antique shops and even a small variety of restaurants for dining out. Get some exercise, take a walk and benefit from all that this town has to offer.

6. Enjoy ACE events

Those who say there is nothing to do here have never met the sleep-deprived members of Activities and Campus Events, ACE, through the CAP center, pools its efforts toward providing something for that grade at the University.

Events such as comedians, game shows, concerts, BU After Dark and Bingo combine for a University culture of entertainment that is yours for the taking.

"One thing I enjoyed about Bucknell was the multitude of free and fun activities offered by ACE on the weekend," Katy Timer '04 said. "My favorite activity from ACE was definitely Bingo—there's nothing like 300 college students sitting in the cafeteria on a Friday night and yelling because someone got Bingo."

ACE offers such events every weekend for the student's benefit, so use them for yours.

5. Take a break

Earlier this year, a group of friends missed the Bloomsburg Fair because they "had too much work." Six months later, this same group admittedly does not remember what work they did or what grade this work accomplished, only that they never got to experience the Bloomsburg Fair.

Take a break from the grind that is work. Learning is more than the drudgery that keeps you up long nights. Learning also takes place outside the classroom in taking advantage of the incomparable resources, both human and educational, within the easy access of our campus "bubble."

"I should have spent more time with friends and less time with homework because you remember the things you did with your friends. You never remember that test grade," Meghann Peace '04 said.

This is not to advocate neglecting work—after all, our studies are the reason we pay $37,000 a year to go here. But do take advantage of the learning and memories that happen outside the classroom when you are not looking for it. Back up your work with life experience to enforce it. Four years later, these will be the memories with a lasting hold.

4. Make the most of departments

Concerts, sporting events, lectures, plays, forums, recitals, exhibits, speakers, games—the list would constitute this whole article if I allowed it. Take advantage of these events, all involving and sponsored by fellow Bucknellians and all unique in the variety and quality they provide.

"I regret not having gone to more of the sponsored lectures. There were so many that looked interesting, but I usually didn't go because of homework. Now I think that I might have learned more from them," Peace said.

Departments of all natures—athletics, music, humanities, theater, dance and student organizations—sponsor events within the 1-mile radius we call Bucknell. Even in a metropolitan area, it can be hard to find such a broad range of opportunities within such a small area.

3. Take advantage of the University's biggest resource—its people

You may not forever remember the chapters of your textbooks, an equation or the list of dates you had to memorize for a liberal-arts class. You will remember the names of the people, both professors and peers, who influenced your college experience.

Take advantage of this resource; college is truly a meeting of minds, so do not be afraid to talk to the best of them. Speak with your professors and use them as a resource—they can provide both academic and real world knowledge that is unmatched and undervalued. Also, use your time here as a forum for unmitigated talk—express your ideas and take in those of others. The college environment of minds eager and willing to learn should be unmatched for the opportunity it avails.

As corny as it may look on paper, the friendships you establish here at school have the potential to be life-long relationships. Build associations here that will live in your memory and keep ones worth telling your kids about.

2. Make nowhere somewhere

Bottom line, no better statement sums it up. The opportunities and occasions sit there waiting to be unearthed, and all you need is the initiative to find them.

"The Freez, late night Co-store trips, Campus Theatre, spring days lying on the quads reading and playing, picnics on the quad, sunsets on the quad, talking on the steps of the gateways about the rest of our lives, Wing Night at the Hotel, classes on the quad, ordering Vennari's and Chrysalis," said Dana Lukens '04 in a list of her favorites.

Hers and the general list continue—this could have been a top 20, 40 or 100 list of "what to do." By limiting these opportunities, you only limit your capacity to learn through the package deal that is the college experience.

1. It's up to you

In one final piece of senior advice, I give you this: do not allow your four years to disappear without having taken advantage of all the resources this community has to offer—this may be the largest and most regrettable waste that takes place here.

Find everything there is to do "in the middle of nowhere," then come up with your own personal No. 1—there is something to do in the middle of nowhere, and you can find it too.

gay? fine by me. A STUDENT AND FACULTY DEMONSTRATION

Courtesy of Public Relations

A group of University students, faculty and staff gathered together April 23 on the steps of Rooke Chemistry Building to show their support for the 'gay? fine by me' initiative project. Even those without the T-shirts showed their dedication to the cause by taping printed statements across their shirts.

Diversions

Summer

Endless opportunity for undergraduate research

University students remain on campus to broaden their academic horizons

By ASHLEY MALIKEN
Features Editor

As students across the University are beginning to realize, the academic year is quickly winding down. Those last few projects postponed time and time again are due, and finals are bearing down like an 18-wheeler on Route 80. But beyond the stress and turmoil of last-minute assignments and exams is the question of how to spend the summer.

There are many options available to the college-aged individual. Most will return to their hometowns and take on summer jobs such as waiting tables at local restaurants or saving lives at pools or beaches. Others opt for the less proactive approach, and will spend their summer days catching up on "Friends" reruns. If you are like some University students who are not content to waste away in a pointless job or perpetually vegetate in front of the television, perhaps summer research would be a more appropriate alternative.

Undergraduate research is one of the University's greatest selling features, and yet it seems that only those who participate understand the wealth of opportunities available here. Each department has innumerable research projects for students to become involved with, many of which are available during the academic year as well. For students willing to spend their summer in the little town of Lewisburg, they have the option of a paid stipend or course credit as compensation for their time spent.

"I didn't want to stay at home this summer, and felt like it was time for me to get a 'real' summer job. This research is the best summer job I could think of. I get great pay, lots of hours, and more importantly it's much more interesting than serving food," Louis McLane '06 said.

McLane, a physics major, will spend his time this summer working with Associate Professor of Physics Tom Solomon through the Research Experience for Undergraduates program. Though his research topic of chaotic mixing may not mean much to the non-physics student, McLane is looking forward to the experience.

"I hope that experience with real-life physics research will give me a better understanding of what a research scientist's job is like. Also, this experience is a good chance for me to see if this really is what I would like to do for the rest of my life," McLane said.

Physics major Elizabeth Baker '06 will also spend her summer at the University, doing research with Assistant Professor of Physics Katharina Vollmayr-Lee.

"I will be doing research for the physics department on the motion of particles in a glass," Baker said. Though no definite schedule has been set for either student, students generally do their research during a 40-hour work week, and then have the weekends at their leisure.

"I have heard that ice-cream socials and baseball games are held with the biology and chemistry students every two weeks," Baker said.

Baker has done research in the past at The College of Wooster in Wooster, Ohio, and hopes that this summer's experience will expose her to another facet of physics.

"I only studied one field of physics last year, and one that most people are not aware of: self-organized criticality. I do not want to become so narrow-minded that I can only talk of one tiny branch of physics out of hundreds," Baker said.

Both researchers will be housed in the Gateway complex along with other students involved in similar programs. This includes not only physics students, but a number of other majors including psychology.

Ken Taga '05 will be remaining at the University this summer to do research with Associate Professor of Psychology David Evans. Though he is not yet certain exactly what his research will entail, Taga is looking forward to the experience.

"Commuting by New York City subways in my business casual attire last summer gave me enough motivation to test the waters of academia before ruling out an academic career, so doing research and still being able to enjoy the summer was a highly appealing prospect," Taga said.

Unlike the other two researchers, Taga will be earning academic credit for his time spent. As for downtime, he plans to enjoy the local area as much as possible.

"It seems like there are a lot of opportunities to enjoy the outdoors around here, so I'll try to do some camping and hiking to supplement my ultimate Frisbee addiction," Taga said.

For those who are not satisfied with mindless summer jobs and long, lazy afternoon naps, perhaps summer research is something to keep in mind for next year. No matter what your major or area of interest may be, there is undoubtedly a faculty member somewhere on campus looking for someone like you as an assistant. So when next spring rolls around, keep your eyes open and your ears to the ground.

Courtesy of Carrie Nugent

These pictures on chaotic mixing were obtained from Professor Solomon's lab last summer by other students undertaking summer research. The images were created in a dilute hydrochloric acid solution with fluorescent dye being mixed by magnetohydrodynamic forcing. This summer, Louis McLane '06 will continue the research that was conducted last year.

A new side of Lewisburg emerges when the school year ends

By AMY WAGNER
Writer

Contrary to popular belief, there is plenty to do in Lewisburg and the neighboring towns, especially during the summer season. A number of students remain on campus throughout the summer months. Some will work in the Admissions Office, do research for professors, or take classes.

All of these students will have the entire summer to explore the town and the area surrounding the University. To help them in their quest for local summer fun, we have asked University students who live locally what they enjoy doing during their summers.

"Lewisburg comes alive in the summer time. All the kids are out riding their bikes while their parents walk the dog, and conversations with friends can be found on every street corner. Growing up in downtown Lewisburg has been a great experience. Being able to go to college in my hometown is one of the best things Bucknell had to offer to me," Lewisburg High School graduate Chris North '07 said.

Chris and his brother Chad North '06 suggested several activities for students to check out during the summer. One suggestion was that students here for the summer get a job in a local shop during the evenings, as summer semester students only take two classes. For entertainment, the North brothers recommend such activities as Campus Theatre movie showings, trips to Knoebel's Amusement Park, and the weekly Wednesday night "Music in the Park" events.

"Every Wednesday starting in June, there is 'Music in the Park' in downtown Lewisburg, where local musicians come and play a concert for the community," Chris North said.

"Lewisburg comes alive in the summer time. All the kids are out riding their bikes while their parents walk the dog, and conversations with friends can be found on every street corner."

—Chris North '07

There are several events that Lewisburg and its surrounding towns host throughout the summer that may be of interest to students remaining on campus. "There is a theater troupe that performs Shakespeare in Hufnagle Park in the gazebo in August; also, for a whole week in the beginning of August, there is the West End Fair. Held a few miles from Lewisburg, right past Mifflinburg, the fair offers rides, food, games and many trinkets and presents to buy!" Lewisburg High School graduate Flor de Liz Perez '07 said.

There are other fun events in the Lewisburg area, as other University students who grew up locally describe.

"Lewisburg is not a city, and it can't offer the variety of activities some students are accustomed to. Though the small town can't offer dance clubs and excitement at every corner, it can offer a perfect sky for star gazing, the annual Float Your Fanny on the Susquehanna summer tube ride, and a chance to experience life in a small town," Katie Urosevich '07, another graduate of Lewisburg High School, said.

Chris North said the summer events in Lewisburg help keep it quaint, and several Lewisburg residents recommend attending the fantastic Fourth of July Celebration, which offers a parade, fireworks, and multiple speakers.

Other local, enjoyable treats include the famous Lewisburg Preez ice cream, or Italian ices from Rita's, both located on Rt. 15. For those students who are willing to travel a bit farther than Lewisburg to seek summer fun, some local residents recommend enjoying the natural beauty Central Park has to offer.

According to Kelly Aderhold '07, who hails from Montoursville, Pa., the World's End State Park, located in Forkville in Sullivan County is a great place to visit on a warm summer afternoon.

Courtesy of Evan Honeyfield

The R.B. Winter State Park, located just 18 miles west of Lewisburg, is a great place to go hiking or have a picnic while enjoying the summer weather.

"I love to go hiking out there; it's the perfect escape when you're stressed out," Aderhold said.

Other opportunities for students to get out and enjoy the sunshine include the R.B. Winter State Park, which offers fishing, hiking, swimming and picnicking. The R.B. Winter State Park is in Union County, only 18 miles west of Lewisburg. Another chance for students to enjoy a summer day is a visit to Knoebel's Amusement Park, in Elysburg, Pa., about 35 minutes from campus. Knoebel's offers amusement park rides, picnic areas, swimming and water slides. Another outdoor opportunity is Canoe Susquehanna, a group that offers canoe trips throughout the summer.

If University students remaining on campus still want more options, check out www.nyLewisburg.com or www.visitcentralpa.org for more information and suggestions.

Mya's Coffee House
Delicious Hot Chocolate available with white chocolate too!
Scrumptious Soups
Delectable Desserts
Served in a warm and cozy atmosphere
10-10 Monday-Friday; 12-10 Saturday;
4-10 Sunday
523-4999

Now Hiring...
ALDI INC.
✓ Cashier Needed 15-18 Hours per Week
✓ Flexible AM hours
✓ $9.51 an hour wage
+ Please fill out applications at the store
ALDI INC.
110 E 8TH AVE
SHAMOKIN DAM, PA 17876

Totem Tattoo

Area's Finest Custom Tattoo
and Body Piercing Studio
Unique Designs to choose from
~State of the Art Body Jewelry~

Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
743-7830

Diversions

Unlimited

Courtesy of Melinda Kummer

The Bath Sweet Shop overlooks the seasonal market and is located in the heart of Bath. The shop offers a wide variety of traditional British candy, sure to satisfy any sweet tooth.

By CHISATO FUKUDA
Writer

It is important for us to open our eyes and see the world, broaden our perspectives, create new visions and explore what is out there. One of the best ways to do this is through travel. University students are taking advantage of this summer and spending time overseas to learn and explore the lifestyles of other cultures.

Lauren Lombardo '05:

Lombardo is going to Bath, England, this summer to nanny for a professor teaching for the Advanced Studies in England program. Her stay does not consist of taking classes. Lombardo spent last semester in Bath through an academic program offered at the University, and is extremely excited to return to her "favorite city in the world."

Due to her past experience, the idea of spending this summer in England seemed like a great opportunity. Although she is not taking classes, going to Bath for a different reason seemed just as intriguing and satisfying.

"I adore children, so being a nanny seemed like a perfect way to spend the summer in the city I love," Lombardo said.

The idea of leaving home and spending months abroad has its pros and cons. It allows for further personal growth, helps broaden perspectives and increases interaction among people in the world.

"The biggest advantage of going away for the summer is to see my friends back at Bath, England. I have made friends during my stay there last semester and it is great to know that I can go back this time to see them again," Lombardo said. "I've also been offered a chance to play a volleyball tournament in Holland with the University of Bath volleyball team, which I was a member of last semester, so that is another big plus."

There are some disadvantages to her summer plans, but Lombardo seems to be sad about missing only one thing.

"The only disadvantage is that I am missing a good deal of my friends' 21st birthdays this summer. Although this is unfortunate, I'm sure I'll be able to make it up to them once I get back home," Lombardo said.

You cannot leave home to stay abroad without an objective. Lombardo has one main goal in mind, and that is to be a great nanny while having fun.

Kate Breitenbach '05:

Breitenbach is going to participate in the Bucknell Northern Ireland short-term study abroad program. She traveled throughout Northern Ireland last summer, participated in the program at Bath and traveled around other parts of Great Britain and Europe during the fall semester of 2003. Participating in the Northern Ireland program again, given its schedule and timing, seemed to be ideal for Breitenbach, giving her the opportunity to take courses toward her studies in psychology and broaden her perspective.

"The Bucknell Northern Ireland Program is about a month long, starting in mid-May and ending in mid-June," Breitenbach said. "I had a great experience traveling around Northern Ireland and absorbing the culture. I earned course credit that counted towards my psychology major and I was home in time to start my full time summer job. For me, the timing is perfect."

Breitenbach seeks to utilize her past experiences in studying abroad and take a leading position in pursuing her goals.

Students turn into globetrotters

"This year, as the TA of the program, I hope to help share the Northern Ireland experience with this year's group of Bucknell students. I eagerly look forward to reliving all aspects of the program: the prominent speakers, the historically rich culture and the beautiful landscapes Northern Ireland," Breitenbach said.

The knowledge Breitenbach seeks to attain during this trip regards the political and cultural standpoint and dilemma Northern Ireland faces today.

"I have expectations in gaining a greater understanding of the historical sectarian conflict in Northern Ireland, and continued insight into the peace and reconciliation process underway today," Breitenbach said.

Breitenbach also speaks highly of this program and believes it offers a great deal of learning opportunities.

"This program offers insight into a culture of conflicted past and promising future. Students who attend this program are moved emotionally and intellectually, gaining knowledge of Northern Ireland, its conflict and its continual movement towards resolution," Breitenbach said.

Lauriann Kress '05:

Kress will also be going to Northern Ireland, participating in the Psychosocial Aspects of the Sectarial Conflict. She has traveled to Italy and France, but this summer will be her first time in Ireland.

The program, which is headed by Assistant Professor of Psychology Bill Flack and Associate Professor of Psychology Kim Daubman, leaves May 18.

"Students are placed in community organizations such as schools and businesses to engage in conversation with people who are faced with issues of the region on a daily basis," Kress said.

The program is short term, allowing students to engage in other activities back home or in other places, rather than spending the entire summer participating in the program.

"With other academic requirements such as student teaching, it would have been difficult to spend an entire summer abroad. This program allows me to learn about and interact with a different culture while still enabling me to remain at Bucknell all semesters and have part of the summer to myself," Kress said.

The advantages of being away for the summer allows for the exploration of a new area.

"It will be exciting to live in a new environment, explore a new country and try out all there is to do," Kress said.

Despite losing some quality time with family, Kress thinks her time overseas will be exciting and well worth experiencing.

"It makes the summer busier, so I won't have as much time for family. But I'm so excited and I'm sure the experience will be worth it," Kress said.

Kress has several goals in mind for this summer.

"I plan to learn more about the social interactions that take place in Northern Ireland and learn more about the politics of the country. We are also planning to take several day trips/week-end trips, so I will get to see some of the more tourist locations," Kress said.

Courtesy of Lauriann Kress

Students spending a summer in northern Ireland get to see the effects of a secular conflict first hand.

Kress said her love of travel and seeing different parts of the world will lead to a greater knowledge and appreciation for the differences and similarities that exist in this world.

"I think the program help me gain a broadened perspective of the world," Kress said.

Earn money through seasonal employment opportunities

By LAUREN DAVIS
Writer

The return of flip-flops, cramming for final exams and finishing up papers can only mean one thing—summer is right around the corner. Many students look forward to summer as a time when they no longer have to worry about academic work, and instead devote their time to earning money to finance next semester's fun. Some students chose to go home and find jobs, while others chose to live and work away from home. Still others decide to stay on campus.

Kevin Mathes '07 will work this summer for the Admissions Office. While many students who work at the University during the summer live on campus, Mathes is lucky enough to be able to live with a friend nearby. Mathes is currently an e-mail intern for admissions and will continue this job through the summer, working six to eight hours a day.

"I answer prospective students' questions and provide them with any information they need about Bucknell," Mathes said.

Mathes is looking forward to summer for several reasons besides working on campus.

"[I can't wait to] see my family every now and then, hang out with friends, see what's happening in Lewisburg, go see movies, basically do regular summer stuff," Mathes said.

Devon Chatley '06 will be a waitress at California Pizza Kitchen, near her hometown of Ross, Calif., as well as interning with New Line Cinema in downtown San Francisco. Chatley has worked at California Pizza Kitchen for three summers, and started as a hostess.

"Last summer I went through some pretty rigorous training to become a full-time waitress," Chatley said.

The internship with New Line Cinema is once a week, and Chatley will have to make the 45-minute commute from her suburban community to the Financial District of San Francisco.

"I'm hoping to one day live and work in downtown San Francisco, so I think this internship will be a great opportunity for me to experience what's out there," Chatley said.

In her spare time Chatley plans on horseback riding and spending time with her friends from high school. She is excited besides working on campus.

"[I can't wait to] see my family every now and then, hang out with friends, see what's happening in Lewisburg, go see movies, basically do regular summer stuff," Mathes said.

Devon Chatley '06 will be a waitress at California Pizza Kitchen, near her hometown of Ross, Calif., as well as interning with New Line Cinema in downtown San Francisco. Chatley has worked at California Pizza Kitchen for three summers, and started as a hostess.

"Last summer I went through some pretty rigorous training to become a full-time waitress," Chatley said.

The internship with New Line Cinema is once a week, and Chatley will have to make the 45-minute commute from her suburban community to the Financial District of San Francisco.

"I'm hoping to one day live and work in downtown San Francisco, so I think this internship will be a great opportunity for me to experience what's out there," Chatley said.

In her spare time Chatley plans on horseback riding and spending time with her friends from high school. She is excited for summer and said she cannot wait to be home.

"I love California. I desperately miss the warm weather, as well as the urban environment," Chatley said.

Nicole Chapdelaine '06 will also be working in a sunny environment at the Marriott Beach and Golf Resort in Hilton Head, S.C. Because she is not from the area, the Marriott will be providing housing for her at a small rental fee.

"I will live with my friend and I think two other people who will also be working there for the summer," Chapdelaine said.

Chapdelaine will be a waitress at one of the outdoor restaurants at the resort for six to eight hours a day. Chapdelaine is excited to start her job and anticipates earning a lot of money. Fortunately, the resort let her choose her own starting and ending dates, so she will be able to go home to visit her family as well. Chapdelaine will be spending a lot of time on the beach with her friend from home who is also working at the resort.

"I wanted one last summer to have fun and earn money before going abroad next year," Chapdelaine said.

Courtesy of longbeachlocal.com

For students seeking summer employment, restaurants are great places to make money. Devon Chatley '06 will be working at the California Pizza Kitchen in her home state of California.

Diversions

Studying? Find a favorite spot to hit the books

On campus or off: Try these spaces to get some real work done

Bertrand . . .
going downstairs:

The beanbag chairs in the basement beneath the stairs are comfy ways to escape the confines of your room. The quiet of the library encourages uninterrupted work. Just beware—it's easy to fall asleep.

Bertrand . . .
going upstairs:

Leather couches pamper students who are willing to brave the stairs upwards. The perfect place for an afternoon cram, the top level of the library is in its own world above campus.

The English Library:

Not a particularly well-known spot on campus, the English library is a hidden treasure. The wooden furniture will keep you from sleeping, but the soft light and shelves of bookcases will bring out the bookworm in you.

Dunkin' Donuts:

24 hours a day of pure donut bliss—this corner of sweetness houses everything a weary studier could want. Distance from campus is the perk for upperclass students and the downfall for first-year students without cars.

Mya's Cafe:

The funky style is sure to lift downtrodden spirits. With affordable, yummy Italian sodas (and a host of other menu items), Mya's will relax and refresh.

Fresh Air:

Taking advantage of the springtime temperatures can help clear a clouded head. Try a bench on the quad for an academic feel or wander around to find a cozy spot in the shade.

Synopses and photos by Melinda Kummer

A final romantic edition brought to you by ...

Ms.

Love and the Bubble

Before I get to this week's question, I just wanted to say a few last words. As I will be graduating this year, I will not be writing the Ms. O column for The Bucknellian anymore. This has been a wonderful experience, and I would really like to thank the University students, faculty and parents for their support. I have received so many great questions, stories and encouraging comments, and without these, the column could not have been such a huge success.

So without further ado, I would like to present the last installment of the "Ms. O" column! Enjoy!

Editor's Note:

For those of you who have been wracking your brains this year trying to figure out who the elusive Ms. O is, today her secret is revealed: She is none other than University's own Kerri Kloofain '04. The next time you see her around campus, thank her for all the wonderful advice she has given.

Dear Ms. O,

Recently, my boyfriend asked me a very troubling question. He wanted to know if I had ever cheated on him before. The problem is that I have. I was afraid to tell him the truth because I thought that he would break up with me, but now I am afraid that he already knows, or that he will find out. I regret cheating on him and I do not want that to be the cause of our break up. What should I do?

Sincerely,
A Cheating Heart

Dear "Cheating Heart,"
I hate to tell you this, but it is time to fess up to your guy about your fling. He has a right to know, and at this point, it sounds as though he might already know. It sounds as though he is giving you a chance to tell him on your own before he confronts you with whatever information he has. I cannot imagine what else would motivate him to ask you if you had ever cheated on him if he did not already suspect something.

You need to sit him down and tell him what happened. I think you realize now that your actions have repercussions and you have the power to hurt people. He will probably be extremely upset, hurt and angry. Tell him you understand why he is so upset and you regret what you did. Be truthful about your feelings. Tell him how much he means to you and ask for his forgiveness. With luck, your boyfriend will be able to forgive you.

I would then give your guy some space to think about all the new information he has just found out. Give him a couple of days to himself before you try to talk to him again about how sorry you are. When you do talk to him, tell him you understand you will need to earn his trust again.

Be sure to tell him what an important lesson this whole experience has been for you. Stress how important he is to you and how you do not want to lose him. After that, the only thing you can do is promise you will never cheat again. You then need to stick to that promise. Most importantly, let this situation be something that you learn from not just for this relationship, but for future relationships as well.

—Ms. O

Diversions

Celebrating culture

Town arts festival brings the community together

By KATE TANTIA
Contributing Writer

Saturday was the perfect day for the Lewisburg Arts Festival: It was neither too hot nor too cold, and the sun was just intense enough to give you a tan.

With the trees in bloom and a slight wind, there was a soft snow of white petals as you walked along the streets to the plinking of a bluegrass banjo or the resounding bass of the tuba quartet.

For a small town in the middle of Pennsylvania, there was a surprisingly large number of talented people selling their wares—and not all of it consisted of the usual "country-esque" kitsch. The festival offered a wide variety of talent—and food.

There was a full range of types of booths—from the interesting to the strange. The oddest booth was the quilted wreaths. I know Pennsylvania has a thing for quilts, but quilted wreaths? Another strange craft was the feathers with people's faces painted on them.

I bought only one thing at the festival, besides what I ate—a collection of three photographs from Pat Little's stand. His work is incredibly intriguing in its simplicity: he takes pictures of objects so close up that the viewer cannot even tell what they are anymore. A close-up of a kiwi looks like five black dots on a green background. Other favorites included

The annual Lewisburg Arts Festival was held last weekend. The festival welcomed artisans of many crafts, including quilters, weavers, potters and painters. Held on a beautiful day, the celebration was well-received by the Lewisburg community.

There were couples walking around in the sun holding hands, dogs straining on leashes and babies sleeping in the shade—people seemed to be genuinely enjoying the small town life that Lewisburg has to offer.

Makishi's puzzle box booth, the Medieval Encampment, the Pet Parade and, of course the food.

I am vegetarian, so I went straight for the portabella mushroom pita wrap stand, but I suppose that the "Pitt beef with onion" stand was good too.

The fresh-squeezed lemonade was more sugar water than lemonade, and the most popular was the funnel cake stand—always a classic, and very hard to do badly. The food was not exactly cheap, but it was worth it to spend lunch there.

The best part of the festival was the ambience. There were couples walking around in the sun holding hands, dogs straining on leashes and babies sleeping in the shade—people seemed to be genuinely enjoying the small town life that Lewisburg has to offer.

Well past their dancing days two elderly couples were still giving old age a run for its money and clogging—that was what the festival was about, more about life than it was talent, from the tiny babies to the old men and women.

It seemed that all of Lewisburg was there that day too, packed onto the normally quiet Market Street. For some reason, the University's undergraduate population was underrepresented—there were more professors than students. More of us should have ventured out to take advantage of this event.

Annual Black Arts Festival celebrates campus diversity

Courtesy of Christina Barker

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The Black Arts Festival Committee wanted its yearly celebration to be bigger and better this year, and its carnival this weekend both lived up to and surpassed that goal. The Black Arts Carnival ran April 20-25 and included a weekend's worth of events sponsored by a variety of organizations.

"This is the third year since we revived it—a couple decades ago it was a tradition ... each year it evolves and accommodates to the theme and what the committee thinks is appropriate," committee chairperson on J.C. Ortiz Calcano '04 said.

This year's theme, Carnivale, was colorful, exciting, historic and inclusive. This inclusiveness allowed the committee to incorporate new events and organizations into the planning process.

"We wanted to be inclusive of other student organizations, not necessarily organizations that have to do with the African-American community," Ortiz Calcano said. "In the selection of the theme, we were hoping it would be a big enough umbrella for other things to fall under."

Events included in the celebration ran the gamut from educational to pure entertainment and everything in between. The Turkish Student Association and Friends of Lesbian and Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered people in particular were highly influential in the planning process.

The weekend was capped off by the Carnival procession itself, Sunday afternoon in its rain location, Davis Gym. Ortiz Calcano said, "We made actual Carnival masks; we pre-made 50 of them ... it was very successful—very few are left over."

A drum circle used African rhythms to introduce students to the music of the Caribbean.

"It let them let loose and add their own rhythms and have fun," Ortiz Calcano said.

"We wanted to be inclusive of other student organizations, not necessarily organizations that have to do with the African-American community. In the selection of the theme, we were hoping it would be a big enough umbrella for other things to fall under."

—J.C. Ortiz Calcano '04

Productions—they brought in singers and steel pan, dancers, drummers and stilt walkers," Ortiz Calcano said. "The performers were really good, especially the dancers."

Carnivale has its historic roots in Europe but has moved in influence to Caribbean culture. The first two events of the weekend, the Caribbean lecture over lunch by Associate Professor of Sociology Linden Lewis and the film "Dance Hall Queen" sought to inform attendees about Caribbean culture.

"The film gave insight on Caribbean culture and a sense of how Caribbean people think. It was also a fun movie for people to watch," Ortiz Calcano said.

The Black LGBT History Garden ran continuously throughout the weekend, appearing in different areas on campus. The garden was composed of posters relating to black LGBT artists and was designed to increase awareness of this cause.

Traditional entertainment also helped to foster awareness through art. The Craft Center sponsored a Mask Creation workshop Saturday afternoon that allowed students to experiment with creating their own carnival masks.

"Every year the Craft Center has a material art component to add to the festival," Ortiz Calcano said. "We made actual Carnival masks; we pre-made 50 of them ... it was very successful—very few are left over."

A drum circle used African rhythms to introduce students to the music of the Caribbean.

"It let them let loose and add their own rhythms and have fun," Ortiz Calcano said.

Tyler Kidder—The Bucknellian

The Jelani Talent Showcase combined the talents of several student groups. The performance was part of last weekend's Black Arts Carnival. The carnival also had a drum circle and a procession, among other events.

and dancers from the hip-hop workshop. Jelani differed from its typical step style and performed a Latin dance, in addition to some dances more characteristic of the group.

Following the performance was the combined Jelani After Party and Player's Ball, held in the Terrace Room to the dance blends of DJ James.

"There were Caribbean/African decorations, a soul-train line, limbo contest and they even named a king and queen," Ortiz Calcano said.

Several independent annual events, such as the Diversity Dinner and Chrysals with George Clinton, were also included in the weekend under the Carnivale theme. All together, it was a weekend that met and exceeded expectations—setting the standard for festivals to come.

"Especially, new students should be exposed to events that are high quality, to be an example," Ortiz Calcano said. "Bucknell isn't necessarily all about work; if you try, you can make it something really special ... it raised the bar for people to follow after us to make them strive for higher standards."

Courtesy of Christina Barker

Jaclyn Carr—The Bucknellian

Diversions

Symphonic Band concert tells musical tales

By CATHERINE HEVERLING
Arts & Entertainment Editor

There were no poofy dresses, no guitarists trying out the new "diaper" look, and it did not feature the "Godfather of Funk." But the University Symphonic Band concert, which was held at the Weis Center for Performing Arts on April 23, did have a drummer boldly sporting suspenders, featured "The Authority on Early American Music" and exhibited some of the best student musicians found on campus.

The concert's program informed the audience that the evening's performance would be divided into three distinctive parts. The first phase of the concert was titled "Part I: Musical Tales," featuring three pieces that narrated stories through the music.

The first of these pieces, Weinberger's "Polka and Fugue," was taken from "Schwanda the Bagpiper," an exciting opera involving the lives of a robber, a musician, a queen and a wicked magician. The piece had pronounced dynamics parallel to the plot-line of the opera, and several simultaneous melodies coming from all corners of the stage demonstrated the confusion and bustling within the story.

The second piece in Part I of the concert was based on a poem by Scottish poet Robert Burns, "Tom O'Shanter." Upon hearing the song, it was clear that, save a bagpipe, it was meant to reflect its Scottish setting. The piccolo sang out a cheery Gaelic melody and the band fluctuated tempo and volume dramatically to produce a haunting air, as the story told of a witch chasing a drunken farmer and his beloved mare. The band exploded at the conclusion of the piece, as the witch finally snatched the mare by her tail.

The final piece in the story-telling section of the concert was the well-known "Pied Piper of Hamelin." In preparation for this piece, Professor of Civil and Environmental Engineering Aarne Vesilind was called upon to narrate, and the artistry of Alison Louttit was projected on the screen backdrop of the stage. All facets of the production were in sync and on cue as Vesilind read a version of Browning's famous tale, illustrated by the sketches on screen, and the ensemble played the complementary piece by Robert Jager. Overall, the presentation of the musical tale was effective and memo-

The University Symphonic Band's spring concert was April 23. The concert featured a wide range of pieces and featured as guest conductor "the authority of early American music," Rick Benjamin.

table.

"Part 2: Duos and Trios" featured two songs, one spotlighting two talented clarinetists and the other requiring the skill of three adept trumpeters. The first of these pieces was Mendelssohn's "Concertpiece No. 2."

The song featured 30 outstanding musicians accompanying two clarinetists—Wesley Baker '05 and Christian Hubicki '07. The clarinet soloists hurdled complicated rhythms and difficult scale passages with ease. They demonstrated their ability to collaborate in harmonizing passages and their individual skill in independent yet complementary passages.

The rest of the band took the stage for the second piece, Leroy Anderson's "Bugler's Holiday," featuring student trumpeters Caroline Myers '04, Kyle VanBuskirk '07 and Mark Veillette '05. The piece, a reputed challenge for trumpet players, demands rapid articulation from the musicians and a strong connection between the three performers and between performers and concert band. The entire band commanded the piece well and managed to keep up with its unrelenting pace.

The final portion of the concert, "Part 3: Vintage Band Music," welcomed celebrated musician Rick Benjamin. Benjamin leads his own celebrated ensemble, the Paragon Ragtime Orchestra, which performed at the University last month. At this point in the program, Associate Professor of Music William Kenny passed his baton on to Benjamin, whom he called the "authority on early American music."

The first piece that Benjamin led the band in performing was Harry L. Alford's "The Peacemaker: Theodore Roosevelt," a strong patriotic march dedicated to the 26th president and Noble Peace Prize winner, who brought an end to the Russo-Japanese War. The march included strains from the Russian and Japanese anthems and an original melody by Alford, dedicated to the song's namesake.

The band took a break between marches by performing "After Sunset," an intermezzo by Arthur Pryor, a remarkable conductor who wrote an impressive 700 band pieces. The slow, thoughtful song featured a few quicker passages and a simple soft melody. It provided a nice change of pace before Sousa's "The Red Man."

The selection, composed in 1911, was written in homage to the United States after Sousa and his band toured the world. Benjamin described the piece as "beautiful and noble," and its simple, strangely familiar melody reflected exactly that.

The final piece of the evening was Alford's "Roll 'Em Up," a piece composed with Alford's motto in mind—"Anything can be a hit if there are enough drums in it." Invited to take on the piece's drum characteristic solo, of the 20s, was Kerry Meads.

Meads entered the stage dressed for the part, in suspenders and carrying a whistle in his mouth. Meads added a unique dynamic to the band by playing a drum set, which had been rigged up with all sorts of sound makers and, of course, a whistle. The piece clearly displayed the fun all the musicians were having on stage and invited the audience to be included in the performance.

"Dr. Kenny has a talent for choosing pieces that are just as pleasing to perform as they are to listen to. I've always enjoyed the creative flair that he's added to our performances. Many of our pieces tell stories—one of my favorites being 'Tom O'Shanter,'" alto saxophone player Janin Polcovich '06 said. "Playing pieces of great historical value with Professor Benjamin was also an honor and privilege. There's always something special about our performances and I've enjoyed my time with the ensemble very much."

The symphonic band concert was more than just a typical performance. The ensemble went to great lengths to present each piece with a purpose, whether by giving some background to the piece, including solos by exceptional performers or adding other media to make each selection more than just "a song." The evening was a wonderful exhibition of the creativity and abilities of the many fine musicians that help make up our well-rounded campus community.

Hanson is mmm-back

By RACHEL HOFFORD
Staff Writer

They have outgrown the "Mmm-Bop" jokes and the long hair, but have they grown musically? The Hanson brothers aim to prove that they have with the completion of their third extended-play album.

Released April 20, the new LP, "Underneath," should prepare them throughout the coming months to re-conquer the pop-rock throne they usurped almost 10 years ago with their pubescent voices and exuberant pop tunes.

While it has been nearly a decade since the Hanson brothers ruled the charts with their catchy melodies and graced so many teenage girls' bedroom walls in glossy poster form, it has also been nearly four years since their last album, "This Time Around."

Released in 2000, this album presented a more well-developed version of their pop-rock sound. But while musically solid and more mature than their debut, "This Time Around" did not gain the same level of fame that "Middle of Nowhere" or its string of radio hits did.

Hanson, the '90s group made popular by its debut hit, "Mmm-Bop," recently released its third extended-play album. The album, "Underneath," features an original single by the band, titled "Penny and Me."

Whether this is due to the maturation of Hanson's mostly female fan club, or a shift away from poppy, beta-endorphinally-charged music in the mainstream U.S. music scene, it is not certain. However, its newest album has already received a warm reception from both critics and fans since its release earlier this month.

Hanson seems to have no intentions of changing its musical style, which is heavily influenced by such classic acts as the Beach Boys and The Beatles, to suit the whims of the music industry. "Underneath" rocks a little harder than previous efforts, but the overall result is typical Hanson: clean melodies and harmonies, instrumental precision and lyrical insight uncommon for musicians as young as they are.

The first single, "Penny and Me," was written collaboratively by the band. It has already reached No. 2 on the Billboard Charts. Expect to hear even more from the band over the summer with songs "Get Up and Go," "Deeper" (with backing vocals from fellow wunderkind Michelle Branch), "Lost Without Each Other" and "Underneath," which the band wrote with Matthew Sweet, to be follow-up singles, according to Rollingstone.com.

The band also plans to organize a summer tour of the U.S. to promote its new album.

Can Hanson pull off another 1997, and have everyone humming its songs by the middle of the summer? Maybe not, but at least the band's fans will have more than nostalgia to rely on for proof that Isaac, Taylor and Zachary are extremely talented pop-rock musicians.

MEMPHIS RIBS

Meaty St. Louis Ribs, pit-smoked for hours with Applewood, char-grilled, and generously basted with our bold-flavored Memphis BBQ Sauce. Served with Skillet Potato Cakes and your choice of Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, plus a FREE beverage.

Just $13.99
a $17.99 value

Your Choice... just $13.99!
(Mondays-Wednesdays only)

Chicago STEAK

BJ's 1/2 lb. Chicago Steak—our famous, specially seasoned USDA Choice Certified Premium Center Cut Sirloin. Served with your choice of Potato, Salad, freshly baked Cornbread and Sourdough Bread, Honey Butter, and a FREE beverage.

17 N. Market St.
Sellington
ph. 570-374-9841
291 Mill St., Danville
ph. 570-275-5110
www.bjribbs.com

Local country band bridges nations

University employee travels with Front Porch Country Band on cultural exchange to China

Lewisburg, Gathman composed music for 20 years before forming the band to perform his pieces.

Despite its country name, the band also plays rock 'n' roll and ballad-like music. It has released one CD and several singles since its formation, and is currently compiling a second CD. The music of the Front Porch Country Band has achieved success both over the airways and online.

According to a press release for the band, its "original American country songs ruled the worldwide top 40 country charts on global internet giant

"Music is the universal language. There are no language barriers when it comes to music."
—Joe Gaughan

By JULIANNA PIETAK
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The Front Porch Country Band is taking the term "world music" to a whole new level. The local, six-member band will tour China, sponsored by the U.S. China Foundation, May 2-17.

The foundation, which recently sponsored President George H. W. Bush, states its purpose is "to facilitate exchange between America and China in such areas as politics, economics, finance, law, education, culture, media, science and technology." The band's tour will act as a cultural exchange to further these goals.

"I think it's something they want to use to turn people to this music and enhance their culture by being able to bring this music to them," band member and University employee Joe Gaughan said.

The band has existed for the past several years and was formed by Rick Gathman, who runs the U.S. Agency in MP3.com, scoring 12 worldwide No. 1 originals.

Gaughan, the band's keyboard player, works for University facilities. All other members hail from the Susquehanna Valley area.

Their trip will take them far from this small neighborhood, however. Eight concerts will be played in several major Chinese cities, including Beijing, Shanghai and Nimbo, as part of Bassist Kim Reichley (left), guitarist John Jolin (above) and the other members of Lewisburg's Front Porch Country Band will perform eight concerts in Beijing, Shanghai and Nimbo this May. University employee Joe Gaughan, who plays keyboard for the band, works for University facilities.

the cultural exchange. "They're all these big, giant places," Gaughan said. "It has to be on a large scale to be worth it and accomplish our goals."

Gaughan and the other performers combine individual experiences for a compilation of impressive experience. All members have opened or toured with national performing groups.

The tour is just the next notch on a list of musical opportunities for Gaughan, who has been playing keyboard since his childhood.

"Music ran in the family. My second cousins were involved in the Big Band era—The Dorsey Brothers," Gaughan said. "I've traveled around the U.S. playing ... I played with The Coasters and The Odells in the '70s, after they were big but were still doing tours."

Other band members contributing to the exchange are Ambrose Campana on guitar, Michael Hudson on drums, John Jolin on guitar and vocals, Kim Reichley on bass and vocals and Angela Springman on vocals.

Despite the cultural and language barriers, Gaughan said the band will be successful in its Chinese tour.

"Musical is the universal language," he said. "There are no language barriers when it comes to music ... Afterwards, we're still pursuing the next step in making the upcoming CD and also looking into doing similar type things in other countries and exposing people to music."

More information is available on the band's Web site, www.frontporchcountryband.com.

Global care at Earth Day fair

Students expressed their creativity celebrating Earth Day on April 22. That afternoon, students got the chance to show their love of nature and hug a tree on the quad (right). Saturday afternoon, several events were hosted in the Smith Quad as part of the Earth Week Closing Ceremonies, including tie-dyeing (left) and a performance by a University band, Love Gravy. All events were sponsored by the University's Environmental Club.

Photos by Tyler Kidder

CONGRATULATIONS PETER HACKEMAN

Whether you were being a great kid or and accomplished student; playing swarmball soccer or goal tending in a championship game; asking why or wanting to change the world; being a son, a grandson, a big brother, or a friend... you have approached life with curiosity, vigor, and enthusiasm. We are proud of you and wish you the best as you pursue your goals and dreams now and forever.

~ Papa, Grammie Cooper and William

Igniting Creative Ideas

On Fire Promotions

by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products • fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards • trophies • business gifts

800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproductions.com

Bring in this ad for one
FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL
ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

524-9000
Sunday-Thursday 11 am - 1 am
Friday & Saturday 11 am - 2 am

Student Special:
Large One topping Pizza $7.99
3 Medium One topping Pizzas $13.99

Party Deal:
5 or More Large Pizzas
$6 each

Wing Deal:
Medium Pizza and 10 Wings/Kickers
$10.99

Wash Tubs Laundry

-Linen Supply Service-
On Campus Delivery and Pick Up!
-Dry Cleaning and Folding Laundry Services-
Call to start your service now!
(570) 524-9839

Seniors: It's time to CELEBRATE and share fond FAREWELLS.... Make it MEMORABLE!

From pig-roasts to an elegant cold buffet, we offer menu ideas to create your perfectly prepared celebration. We also offer a variety of favorite entrees, hors d'oeuvres & party platters to go.

If you're looking for a place to have your party or special dinner, our Brynwood Room accommodates up to 125 guests and Rusty's South Room is available for dining affairs up to 30 guests.

PLAN NOW!! BRYNWOOD catering

For more information or reservations call us at:
Brynwood Catering: 570/524-2121 x1

Diversions

The Last Hurrah

Be sure to catch these end-of-the-year events before hitting the books during finals

Student dancers expand program with company performance

By Dave Allen
Senior Writer

The Bucknell Dance Company will present a remarkable diversity of styles at its spring performance tonight and tomorrow at the Weis Center for Performing Arts, with pieces choreographed by prestigious guest artists, University professors and senior members of the company.

Er-dong Hu, associate professor of theatre and dance and director of the company, wants this performance to serve as an invitation to students who might not be aware of the strong interest in dance at the University. He said the company is another part of the dance program and that it is a student-run organization with auditions open to all students.

"There are a lot of dance students—they are taking classes, they perform in the company and at Choreographer's Showcase, they do work around the department [of theatre and dance]. They are all working to advance the program here," Hu said.

The company welcomes guest artists Camilo Andre Rodriguez and Beth Hirschhaut-Iguchi as choreographers for this performance. They hail from opposite coasts of the United States and are experts in diverse dance styles.

Rodriguez is a member of the New York-based Grand Divas, which features male ballerinas performing on pointe in roles originally designed for female dancers. He has choreographed a contemporary ballet piece for the company.

Hirschhaut-Iguchi, a Los

The University Dance Company will present its final performance of the year tonight and tomorrow at the Weis Center. The program includes performances choreographed by both University professors and students, as well as guest artists.

Angeles-based professional jazz dancer and a former professor at the University of the Arts in Philadelphia, has created a piece in a cool, contemporary jazz style, with dancers in street clothes performing pedestrian movements that reflect individual personalities.

"Ladies Who Lunch," a piece choreographed by Visiting Professor of Theatre and Dance Kelly Knox, features live music by Two Past Midnight, the University's coed a cappella group.

Erika Staaf '04, a member of Two Past and the dance company, arranged music from Bizet's opera "Carmen" for this piece, which features off-kilter, slightly dissonant departures from the famous melodies. The dancers are in formal costumes, and their elaborate dress contrasts with the performance of less elegant movements. Knox describes the motion on stage as "a cross between athletic and gestural movements."

"It's a modern piece with a comic edge. It does things you might not expect to familiar music," Knox said.

Hu said Knox has accepted a full position with the University dance program and will begin a tenure-track position in the fall. "She brings a lot of enthusiasm and fresh ideas. This is a new future for her to come in and contribute to the program," Hu said.

Company members Staaf, Vanessa Hull '04, Janan Hatem '04 and Victoria Willers '04 exhibit their great talent in choreographing their own pieces for the performance.

Staaf's piece, "Playful Unrest," is set to the score to the movie "Unstrung Heroes" by composer Thomas Newman. Staaf describes the music as "energetic, with lots of unusual instruments and heavy percussive beats." The piece features six dancers, and is divided into four sections, each one reflecting a different emotional state.

"The piece is like a peek into the life of figures who are sort of secluded from the hassles of everyday life as we know it, but still experience ups and downs and a full range of accompanying emotions," Staaf said.

"Mei Xiang (Beautiful Smell)," a modern piece choreographed by Hull, uses stage space and props to illustrate scenes of personal interaction. Large paper-lined screens serve as lenses through which the dancers' motions are viewed. The music accompanying the piece is a Bach cello solo performed by Yo-Yo Ma, and the dancers partner up throughout the piece to express the development of relationships.

"I like to think of the individuals in this piece as embodying both a sense of feminine beauty and commanding power," Hull says.

The piece choreographed by Hatem is titled "Striking Accord." It is a ballet piece set to the music of ambient composer and musician Enya. From her description of the piece, it sounds like a freely composed work, with the significance of the movements coming from the dancers' internal conceptions of beauty and their own memories.

"[The dancers] must constantly be aware of each other, and while they are each inspired by their own emotion, they must find a way to bring it all together and work together in the unity that makes this piece so powerful," Hatem said.

Willers worked with Hu to choreograph a performance that will feature the company's seniors. The piece is in a modern jazz setting, accompanied by music from The Beatles. Hu and Knox are featured as dancers in the piece, in addition to company dancers.

"It reflects on time spent as seniors, and on the breaking away of the group," Willers said.

A tremendous amount of hard work has gone into creating this weekend's performance, and this effort, combined with the tremendous talent of the professors, choreographers and performers will make it the crowning event of an excellent season for the University's dance program. Many dancers, all with different levels of experience, will have the opportunity to showcase their skills.

The concert is today and tomorrow at 8 p.m. Tickets are $6, and are available at the door, the L.C. Mall and through the University box office.

Diversions

Putting the fun in funk

The Godfather of Funk, George Clinton, grooves at the Chrysalis Ball

Tyler Mills—The Bucknellian

By Rachel Hofford
Staff Writer

What the funk? Despite a tragic turn of events that prevented James Brown from performing at Chrysalis this year, George Clinton and the Parliament Funkadelic made sure all got their groove on at the formal event Friday evening in the Gerard Fieldhouse.

Before Clinton's anticipated arrival, the cover band Like, Totally Awesome started off the festivities with a mix of '80s and '90s pop-rock cover songs. Dressed in drag with blond and brunette wigs, the band attempted to fire up a rather small and sedated crowd for the first hour of the event.

By the time Parliament

Funkadelic arrived, more students filtered in past University President Steffen Rogers and his wife, Athena, who were also in attendance, and the dance floor stretched quickly toward the entrance.

The growing audience was forced to wait even longer before the man of the hour made his appearance. The Parliament Funkadelic took the stage first, cranking out a few tunes to prepare the audience for the esteemed Godfather of Funk. One member of the group brought an unusually large quantity of funk himself by wearing what appeared to be a diaper or loincloth and nothing else.

If there was any doubt about the funk supremacy of Clinton, all concerns were dispelled as he arrived on stage with his patented, multi-colored dreadlocks partially tucked under a baseball cap, slapping people's hands and moving around like a 20-something rock star instead of the 60-something funk musician he is.

The audience clearly appreciated—and reciprocated—his energy level and showmanship.

"He was funkilicious," Jenna Tague '04 said after the concert. Playing a selection of songs that only the funkiest of all could pull off, including the first number, "Lil' Jon & the Eastside Boyz" recent hit, "Get Low," Clinton, accompanied by his Parliament Funkadelic, was in peak form, laying down grooves like a preacher speaking at a camp revival. Only, instead of a crowd of repentant sinners, Clinton was preaching to the University's student body—and the students were more than willing to be indoctrinated into the religion of funk.

Clinton and his posse of funk stars may not be the obvious choice for a formal event, and perhaps "it wasn't the best dancing music," as Tague said.

There were certainly more than a few people who found it impossible to share in the Clinton experience due to their attire. Most people seemed more than willing to loosen their ties and take off their uncomfortable high heels, and to get down with their bad selves.

Chapel rings with handbell music

Christopher Richard—The Bucknellian

The Rooke Chapel Ringers held their last performance of the year Sunday at Rooke Chapel. The ringers not only rang the bells, but also used mallets and other percussion instruments to create a wide range of sound.

By David Allen
Senior Writer

Sunday's concert by the Rooke Chapel Ringers was a new experience for many in the audience. Director Douglas Smith asked how many people in the audience had never seen a handbell choir perform before, and quite a few hands went up. Those people received a stunning introduction to this style of music, and all of those in attendance experienced a memorable performance that resonated long after it had ended.

As a member of the Rooke Chapel Congregation, I have always felt privileged to see the ringers perform once a month at services, and also at the Christmas Candlelight Services. At this concert, the men in the group wore tuxedos and the women wore formal black attire instead of their usual robes. Applause was accepted after each song ended, rather than the typical several seconds of awed silence, as the ringers filed back into the pews.

During the concert, the members of the group introduced themselves, and several of them shared stories from the group's tour to senior members' home churches. Smith even invited questions from the audience about handbells.

After nearly two years of seeing them perform regularly, this was the first setting in which I felt any degree of interaction with and overt appreciation for the performance of these very talented, and sometimes unrecognized, musicians.

The ringers began the event encircling the sanctuary, creating a very interesting acoustic spread across the chapel. The piece, "Entrada Doriana," composed by Smith, continued at a moderate pace while they processed from their positions to the front in time with the music, not missing a single step or note.

Gradually, members of the group picked up percussion instruments, such as shakers, claves and guiro, and helped propel the piece into a steady accelerating that continued until the end of the piece.

This was a great introduction to bell choir performance, in which there is a distinct connection between movements by the performers and production of sound. The hand-held bells and chimes the performers use continue to ring until dampened against their bodies or the table.

Unlike with a piano or a wind instrument, the performers do not have all the notes in front of them. They have to coordinate timing with those around, making melodies and arpeggios travel across the ensemble, which requires concentration, accuracy and a strong sense of group performance and dynamics.

"Thaxted—O God Beyond All Praise" featured a melody taken from "Jupiter" from Gustav Holst's suite "The Planets." As a member of the University Orchestra, I played that piece the weekend before, and it was very interesting to hear the changes made to the melody in developing it into a full-length piece for handbells. Changes include a modulation into a minor key and subtle changes in rhythms during the last statement of the tune.

The broad, majestic melody translated extremely well from brass and strings to bells. The ringers exhibited many different playing styles. In addition to ringing the bells in the standard downward stroke, they also used mallets to play the bells as percussion instruments and small, hand-held chimes, which produce a different, more penetrating sound.

The mallet-playing grew quite furious in several pieces, with mallet players driving the tempos with rapid sixteenth notes on the lowest bells.

Smith has been serving as interim director for the ringers while their regular director, University Professor of Music William Payn, is on sabbatical. In addition to their first piece, the Ringers played two other songs by Smith and two by Payn.

"Pinnacle," the first Payn composition they performed, was an astonishing display of technical playing. The opening section is in complex, mixed time signatures, with shifting accents and intricate layering of different melodies played by each "voice" section of the ensemble. This required a great deal of concentration and rhythm counting by the players.

The slower, contrasting middle section gave the ringers and the audience a chance to catch their breaths, before the ringers threw themselves headlong into a recapitulation of the fast opening section and a sudden, dramatic halt at the end of the piece.

The next selection, "Song of Peace," by Arnold Sherman, featured variations of the ancient Latin hymn "Dona Nobis Pacem." The arrangement included dissonant chords in the tune, indicating strife and unrest bringing an end to the peace.

The dissonance recurred thematically throughout the work, establishing unsettling melodies. Finally, with the clashing chords still hanging in the air, the choir shifted into a fully melodic setting of the traditional hymn, indicating resolution and regaining of peace.

Anne Glazer '07, one of the audience members seeing a handbell choir for the first time, enjoyed this piece the most. "I've known the tune since I was three, and it was very interesting not only to hear it performed on handbells, but to hear the variations that the composer added to it," Glazer said.

After presenting Smith with his own Rooke Chapel Ringers mug—every member has one and drinks out of it on the Sundays when the group performs—the choir launched into its signature piece, "Festive Dance."

This is an arrangement of "Farandole" from Bizet's Second Arlesienne Suite, and this fast-paced, energetic setting stayed very true to the original, with the high bells carrying the melody and the lowest bells played by mallets, driving it along.

Smith was so pleased with the group's performance that he was sure that it could play it once again, "faster and better."

The second time through began at such a fast tempo that it very nearly fell apart, but all of the players hung on for a fevered and dramatic conclusion, with Smith dramatically holding out the very last note as he stooped down to take a drink of water.

Darcy Ross '06 enjoyed the second run through of "Festive Dance" the most out of the entire program.

"It was certainly faster [the second time], but I think it was better... it definitely looked like they were having more fun," Ross said. The Rooke Chapel Ringers are an incredibly talented and very unique group of musicians. They reaffirmed Smith's compliments about their passion and energy with each song.

The concert was a great program of holy music performed in a marvelous space, a great introduction for first-time bell choir listeners and an aural and visual delight.

University Chorale concert blends musical styles and periods

By Tyler Mills
Writer

From the 17th-century composer Lloyd Plautch to University student composer Ashi Day '04, the Concert Chorale sang its way through a variety of musical periods and styles in the Weis Center for Performing Arts Saturday night.

Songs were clustered in the program by themes: In Praise of Music, Missa Eclectica, Modern Madrigals, Listening for Love, Folk Songs and Music's Gift to Us.

Most do not usually associate steel drums, French horn or even a string quartet with settings from the Ordinary of the Roman Catholic Mass, but the Missa Eclectica song cluster combined liturgical chant words with new music and instrumentation. In the "Kyrie," the composer, Glenn McClure, joined the Concert Chorale on stage as a guest soloist on the steel drums. The steel drums at times sounded like another voice as it wove in and out of the chorale's harmonies.

"Credo," written by Day, featured chorale members who stepped off the risers to accompany the piece in a string quartet. Dawn Loughlin '07 and Elizabeth Decker '06 (both on violin), Alexis Zackey '04 (viola) and Alexander Keller '07 (cello) mimicked the chorale's sharply enunciated lyrics in their plucked harmonies. Zackey had positive things to say about her general experience in performing with the chorale.

"Since freshman year, I've looked forward to Tuesdays and Thursdays as days I could get together with a group of people who are there because they love to sing as much as I do.... It was an honor to be asked to play a part in one of her [Day's] compositions at our last concert—I couldn't have imagined a better ending to my musical career at Bucknell," Zackey said.

In "Agnus Dei," by Paul Basler, the chorale was joined by Kirsten Hirsens '06 on the French horn and guest performer Rich Miller on the drums. The French horn flowed through the vocal swells. The accompanying drum surrounded the horn and voices like a soft heartbeat.

In the song cluster Listening for Love, the chorale sang "Five Hebrew Love Songs," by Eric Whitacre. Guest violinist Carl Iba, from the Harrisburg Symphony Orchestra, and Zackey soloed with the chorale. The stylistic slides of the violin evoked an intimate stillness along with such lyrics as, "What snow! Like little dreams falling from the sky."

Zackey's solo began with a Hebrew verse followed by a rich, textless melody. Sarah Houck '06 was a vocal soloist for "Weep, O Willow," from the "Folk Songs" cluster. Her sweet, delicate vibrato flowed through the lyrics of the song that donned the persona of a woman who has just lost "the only boy I love."

"How Can I Keep from Singing," also from the Folk Songs cluster, combined the music of an American folk hymn with text written by Bucknell alumnus Robert Lowry (1857). Arranged by Ron Staheli, "How Can I Keep from Singing" involved a solo vocal quartet of Decker, David Lantz '05, David Tomasacci '06 and Kimberly Hallman '04, adding a rich, peaceful texture to the full chorale. Assistant Chapel Organist David Cover was the piano accompanist for most of the songs the chorale sang. The Concert Chorale's conductor, O. David Deitz, praised Cover's musicianship to the audience. "This was Deitz's first performance as the conductor of the Concert Chorale, as he has replaced Professor William Payn, who is on sabbatical, for the 2003-04 academic year."

Early November a hit—even in late April

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Early November brought its unconventional and ironic music to Uptown last weekend. The band performed singles from its third release, "The Room's Too Cold," as well as previous hits. Early November is known for its raw emotional variety, even leaving imperfections on its albums.

Concerts

Late Night: Jay Hansen—Tonight, 11:00, Seventh Street Cafe

Allister and Punchline perform at Uptown—Tomorrow, 9:30 p.m., Uptown

Chapel Choir Concert—Sunday, 7:30 p.m., Rooke Chapel

Composition Recital—Tuesday, 7:30 p.m., Rooke Recital Hall

Courtesy of www.punchlinekids.com

Activities

The Price is Right Gameshow—Tonight, 9:00, Larison Dining Hall

Comedian Steve Byrne—Saturday, 9 p.m., the Bison

Pub Night—Saturday, 9:30 p.m., Uptown

Courtesy of www.psu.edu

Movies

"Love Actually"—Tonight, 10:30, L.C. Forum

"Big Fish"—Tomorrow, 10:30 p.m., Freas-Trout Auditorium (Vaughan Lit.)

"Van Helsing"—This week, the Campus Theatre

Courtesy of movies.com

Courtesy of movies.com

Cinema Center
Solispro - Susquehanna Valley Mall - 374-2040

Play Dates: April 30-May 6, 2004

10yrs (PG-13)	Kiki's Delivery Service (R)
12:40, 2:50, 4:50, 7:10	12:40, 3:30, 6:30, 9:15

Hellboy (PG-13)	Elle Enchanted (PG)
8:30	2:40, 6:15

Girl Next Door (PG-13)	13 Going on 30 (PG)
1:30, 4:40, 9:10	1:15, 3:30, 5:50, 8:10

Fission of the Christ (R)	Walking Tall (R)
12:20, 2:30, 4:20, 6:50, 9	12:20, 2:30, 4:20, 6:50, 9

Man on Fire (R)	Punkin' (R)
12:45, 3:35, 6:30, 9:20	1:35, 4:05, 6:45, 9:30

Prince and Me (PG)	Scorpio 2 (PG)
1:30, 3:20, 5:30, 7:40	12:30, 2:40, 5:10, 7:20

Home Range (PG)	Alamo (PG-13)
12:45, 2:30, 4:30, 6:20	8:40

Matinees before 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday

200 Market St.
Sunbury, PA, 17001
570-286-5671

The Daily Item
BLACK AND WHITE PHOTOGRAPH

IMPERIAL LANES

679 S. Front St.
Milton, PA
570-742-9211

*Parties

*Open Bowling

*Mixers

*Fundraisers

Tuesday & Wednesday 9:30-11:30

College Night

$5-3 Games & Shoe Rental

IN THE EMPLOYEES' BATHROOM
YOU'LL FIND MAGAZINES.
IN THE EXECUTIVE BATHROOM,
A NEWSPAPER.

The Daily Item
BLACK AND WHITE PHOTOGRAPH

The Daily Item

Diversions

Take a drive for the top five— The summer's hottest tours

By CHAD FLOOD
Senior Writer

I cannot remember the last summer I was not excited about what bands were touring and which shows I would see. Although this summer is not shaping up to be too momentous of a touring year (the supposed Led Zeppelin reunion still is not happening), the usual staples are still in place, and any music lover should easily be able to find something to satisfy his or her aural needs. For all your local concert needs, check out www.pollstar.com.

Phish

Phish returns to the road this summer for a short 11-show run, beginning in Brooklyn, N.Y., and finishing up in Camden, N.J. Possessing one of the most dedicated fan bases since the Grateful Dead, Phish never plays the same show twice, constantly changing set-lists and arrangements, and performing lengthy instrumental jams that cannot be replicated in the studio. If you go, be warned: Phish does not play with an opening act and usually goes on stage about one hour after the posted start time. (www.phish.com)

Dave Matthews Band

For more than 10 years, the Dave Matthews Band has not missed a summer of touring, and for good reason. Each year, DMB is in the top five grossing tours, playing more than 50 shows nationwide and selling out any venue in which it performs. Currently, the band is in the studio working on material that has not yet been road tested or released.

"We always write as we go along and then just make a record, so really it's very new," Matthews told VH1. "I'm more excited about this record than anything—even though we have absolutely nothing—so that's good. And that's kind of scary."

Expect to hear a handful of new tracks on the coming tour, which features such openers as Jason Mraz, Galactic, N*E*R*D, and Ben Harper & the Innocent Criminals. (www.dmband.com)

The Dead

After the death of Jerry Garcia in 1995, many thought the Grateful Dead as they knew it would finally live up to its namesake. Not so much. The Dead, as the band now calls itself, is back and as strong as ever, performing a lengthy summer run that begins with a five night stand at the legendary Red Rocks Amphitheatre in Morrison, Colo., in June and runs through late August. While Jerry may not be with the band anymore, rest assured that jam-rock legends Bob Weir, Phil Lesh and the rest of The Dead are alive and well, and are not likely to disappoint. (www.dead.net)

Jimmy Buffett The Caribbean sounds of Jimmy

Buffett have been rocking audiences across the country for more than 30 years. Sure, he may be old, balding and remind you more of your dad than a rock star, but this is not just for your parents. Buffett has consistently performed at the highest level possible, and as he only plays a handful of shows each year, you know that he is giving his all every night. Grab some tickets, a grass skirt and a camera so you can take some embarrassing pictures of the over-40 crowd. And do not forget the margarita mix. (www.margaritaville.com)

going out

Festivals

Perhaps the most successful summer concert event of recent years, the Bonnaroo Music Festival will be returning to Manchester, Tenn., June 11-13 for its third year. This mini-Woodstock will feature many jam bands and a wide variety of visual artists, craftsmen and all things heady.

Artists include The Dead, Trey Anastasio of Phish, Dave Matthews and Friends, Bob Dylan, Soulive, Maroon 5, Robert Randolph & the Family Band and perhaps most notably DJ Danger Mouse, the mastermind behind the Jay-Z and Beatles fusion, "The Grey Album." (www.bonnaroo.com)

For the more alternative crowd, in its ninth year, Lollapalooza will be hitting 20 cities nationwide. Headlining acts for this year's event will include '80s vocalist Morrissey, The String Cheese Incident, Seattle's experimental Sonic Youth, as well as the Flaming Lips and Modest Mouse, whose material has continued to grow in popularity on the college rock scene. (www.lollapalooza.com)

Dave's Double Take

on the best summer hits

By DAVE ALLEN
Senior Writer

This summer-break edition of the Double Take is a little different; I am spotlighting albums from some of my favorite artists, both independent and mainstream, that capture images of the summer and bring back memories of summers past. While three of them were released in the last year, none of them are brand new. If you already have these albums, get them back out and listen. If you do not, I definitely think they are worth purchasing and playing.

Indie Summer

The Shins—"Chutes Too Narrow"

This is the second album from The Shins, an independent pop-rock band from New Mexico, and it is a practically perfect work of modern rock music. Every song is neatly constructed, with distinct verses, choruses and bridges. Strong melodies, lovely vocal harmonies, and musing, descriptive lyrics are found in every song, yet no two songs sound the same.

Though the lyrics are mainly centered on the loss of love and innocence or similarly serious topics, they are often paired with instrumentals that are bright and upbeat. Standout tracks include "So Says I" (the first single, featured on WVBV), "Saint Simon," with great violin and keyboard instrumentals and "Turn a Square," which proves a little tinge of country goes a long way.

New Pornographers—"Electric Version"

If The Shins make you lean into the speakers to hear the light details of their music, then the New Pornographers blow you back against the wall with the dense, concentrated quality of theirs. "Electric Version" is the second album by this Canadian group, and all the tracks are filled with layers of guitars and keyboards and crowned with vocal harmonies by singers Dan Bejar, Carl Newman and Neko Case.

As soon as the weather got nice this spring, I put this album into my Discman. All 13 tracks are sunny, exuberant bursts of pop rock, and although the lyrics of some songs are difficult to understand, they are secondary to the sound of the songs: the crisply harmonized singing and seamless, shining instrumentals. "The Laws Have Changed," "All for Swinging You Around" and the album's title track are all great examples of the New Pornographers' immensely enjoyable music.

Summer Tour Veterans

Less Than Jake—"Anthem"

This is the most recent album from one of my very favorite bands. I first heard Less Than Jake more than five years ago, and saw it perform at the Vans Warped Tour that summer. With that being said, "Anthem" is not its best album; that title goes to its 1999 release, "Hello Rockview," which is also definitely worth picking up.

This album, though, is more summer-oriented. I listened to the song "The Science of Selling Yourself Short" innumerable times last summer: at parties, while driving around, all of the time. It is a throwback to slower, ska/reggae jams, complete with horns, timbale drums and staccato, plucked guitars.

"Anthem" is filled with faster, heavier punk-rock tracks, and both longtime fans and first-time listeners will find a lot to enjoy, but "The Science of Selling Yourself Short" stands out as an essential summer track even now, after the big punk-ska craze of the mid- to late-'90s has faded.

Blink-182—"Enema of the State"

That same summer I saw Less Than Jake perform, blink-182 was also performing on the Warped Tour, shortly after the release of this album. It was also the first summer I had a job, and "Enema of the State" was always playing on breaks between meals at the summer camp dining hall where I worked. Think what you will about the band's gleefully juvenile humor, but this album is undeniably solid and a lot of fun.

The tempos are consistently cranked up, but softer, more heartfelt songs such as "Going Away to College" and "Adam's Song" give this album of immature jokes and high-school caricatures a soft, sentimental heart. The album's last track, "Anthem" (no connection with the Less Than Jake album), is just that: a big, crashing ode to rebelling against your parents and running away from home. The members of blink-182 might have kept a little too in touch with their former adolescent selves in their adult lives, but every so often, it is a time in your life worth revisiting.

Something a little different ...

Radiohead—"OK Computer"

This album is one of my favorites of all time, based on its incredible ingenuity in using so many different instruments and sounds, combining guitar-based alternative rock with elements of electronic music and sweeping, expansive progressive rock.

But it also holds a special attachment to summertime for me: When several of my friends started a band at the end of my sophomore year in high school, one of the covers they performed was "Karma Police" from this album. At the concert they played that summer, they let me sing lead vocals for this song on stage with them. Although I am sure I remember it sounding better than it actually did, the band had every bit of the song's instrumentals nailed, and I did not forget any of the words. The only thing our version did not have was the chaotic, instrumental breakdown at the end. That is definitely the most personal attachment I have with any of these albums, but this album is also the one that stands out most as a modern classic.

Staying in

Photos courtesy of amazon.com